The church that is in their houſe] The word eccleſia, the church, doth not only ſignify the place of aſſembling together, but the perſons of thoſe that uſe to do ſo; that is, all the Chriſtians in any place. So, in the beginning of this Epiſtle, having named "the church which is in Corinth," he proceeds (hegiaſmenois, cletois hagiois, &c.) the ſanctified, the ſaints; that is, all the Chriſtians in that place, which are meant by the word church preceding. And ſo here, the church is all the members of the church of Chriſt, the Chriſtians: And then (oicos) houſe, ſignifying, in like manner, not the walls of the houſe, but the family, the perſons in it, (as when 'tis ſaid of Cornelius, that he was a proſelyte, "with all his houſe," that is, he and all the perſons in his family,) it is evident what is meant by "the church in their houſe;" that is, all the believers of their family. The ſame are called, Rom. xvi. 5. the Church, or Chriſtians, belonging to their family; the prepoſitions en and cata being promiſcuouſly uſed in theſe writings. To this Theophylact farther adds, that by this phraſe is intimated the great piety of the maſters of theſe families, who had made all their houſe Chriſtians, and again their great hoſpitality to ſtrangers: For where (ſaith he) ſuch virtues are, that houſe is a church. (H.) See the notes on Acts ii. 46. and Rom. xvi. 5.

Greet ye one another with an holy kiſs.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 16.

With mine own hand.] St. Paul, writing by an amanuenſis, Rom. xvi. 22. ſtill cloſed his Epiſtle with his own hand; as a token that it came from him, 2 Theſſ. iii. 17.

If any man love not the Lord.] That is, If any man doth either oppoſe Chriſt and his Goſpel, or apoſtatize, and backſlide from his holy profeſſion, and thereby diſcover he had no ſincere love for Chriſt, let him be accurſed till the Lord comes to judgment; and when he comes to judgment, let him without repentance lie under a dreadful, yea, an eternal curſe. Obſerve here, How thoſe who do not ſincerely love our Lord Jeſus, are under the heavieſt and bittereſt of divine curſes. Note, 1. The ground or cauſe of this curſe; the not loving of Jeſus Chriſt:" He doth not ſay, If any man hate Chriſt, or reproach and blaſpheme him, or perſecute and injure him; but if he doth not love him: The bare want of this affection to Chriſt, is enough eternally to ſeparate us from Chriſt. 2. The nature of this curſe; "Let him be anathema, maran-atha." The Apoſtle pronounces the curſe in two languages, Greek and Syriac, to denote both the vehemency of his own ſpirit in ſpeaking, and the certainty of the thing ſpoken; or perhaps to ſhew, that men of all nations and languages, who love not Chriſt, are under a curſe, and that they are deſervedly curſed among all nations: The Greek word, Anathema, ſignifies execrable; the Syriac word, Maran-atha, is a compound of Maran, Lord, and atha, he cometh. Theſe words were uſed anciently in the moſt dreadful ſentence of excommunication; as if they had cited the perſon to the tribunal of Chriſt, at his coming to judge the world, or left him bound under the curſe of that ſentence until the coming of Chriſt. 3. The extent of this curſe, "If any man;" as if he had ſaid, Let him be who he will that loves not Chriſt, Jew or Gentile, bond or free, male or female, rich or poor, young or old, prince or peaſant, king or beggar, who hath opportunities to know Chriſt, and yet doth not love him, let him be accurſed by him to eternal ages; let him be fully ſeparated from the ſociety of Chriſtians here in this world, and from all fellowſhip and communion with Chriſt finally in the world to come. The ſum is this, That thoſe who "love not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," much more thoſe who wilfully hate and oppoſe him and his holy laws, are accurſed perſons in this life, and devoted to deſtruction here: But when our Lord ſhall come to judge the world at the laſt and great day, they ſhall be accurſed more openly and ſolemnly; when they ſhall ſtand before that impartial judge of the world, they ſhall receive from his mouth a final malediction, an irreverſible execration, which ſhall be immediately ſucceeded with the anguiſh and torments of eternity. (B.) That ſuch is the true meaning of anathema, mar an-atha, (tho' queſtion'd by ſome learned men) is critically prov'd, by Dr. Hammond, on this text; to whom we muſt refer the more curious reader. But another ſeeming difficulty is, How, ſuppoſing this a form of excommunication, it can here be appliable to the not loving of Chriſt; which, being a ſin of the heart, ſeems not to be capable of any judge's cognizance, nor conſequently of their cenſure. But it muſt be obſerv'd, that the love of Chriſt ſignifies that perfect love that caſts out fear, and contains in it the confeſſion of Chriſt, adhering and cleaving to him (as to love a maſter, Mat. vi. 24 is, to hold to him, in that verſe) the not loving of Chriſt, is the denying of him in time of trouble; and ſignifies here, him that was tainted with the error of the Gnoſticks, and ſo would not confeſs Chriſt in time of perſecution: And then there is nothing more reaſonable than that the Apoſtle, having written this whole Epiſtle againſt the ſchiſms and vicious practices and hereſies infuſed into the church of Corinth by thoſe men, ſhould conclude with a denunciation of the higheſt degree of excommunication againſt all thoſe who ſhall thus renounce Chriſt, and fall off to theſe "damnable hereſies, denying the Lord that bought them," 2 Pet. ii. 1. (H.) He who loves not the precepts, the Church, and the croſs of Chriſt, may aſſure himſelf, that he does not love his perſon. And, if he who loves not Jeſus Chriſt be anathema, and excommunicate; what ought thoſe to expect, who not only do not love him themſelves, but likewiſe teach and inſtruct others not to do it? The End of the Firſt Epiſtle of St. PAUL to the CORINTHIANS.

ANNOTATIONS
UPON THE
Second Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,
CORINTHIANS.

TO what has been already ſaid, prefatory to all St. Paul's Epiſtles in general, and to his former to the Corinthians in particular, it ſeems needful only to obſerve here,

I. That the place, from whence he wrote this Second Epiſtle to them, ſeems agreed on all hands to have been Philippi, in Macedonia; of which city we ſhall have occaſion to ſay ſomewhat more, when we come to the Epiſtle directed to the Church there.

II. That the time of writing this was not long after the former; probably about a year, as we may conclude from thoſe words, ch. ix. 2. "Achaia was ready a year ago." But he had not given inſtructions, concerning the collection there referr'd to, till the cloſe of his former Epiſtle, ch. xvi. 1. and they could not be in ſuch readineſs, as he here mentions, before he gave thoſe inſtructions. Now, that the former Epiſtle was written early in the foregoing year, appears from his ſaying there, ver. 8 "I will tarry at Epheſus till Pentecoſt:" And it appears, that he "ſtay'd in Aſia" ſome conſiderable time after he had purpoſed to leave Epheſus, and go to Macedonia, Acts xix. 21, 22. So that, his making an apology here, ch. i. 15, &c. for his not wintering at Corinth, as he thought to have done, 1 Cor. xvi. 6. ſhews, that this Epiſtle muſt have been written after winter, and conſequently when a new year was begun. It ſeems therefore to have been written after his ſecond going to Macedonia, mention'd Acts xx. 3. For, 1. It was written after he had been at Troas, and had left that place to return to Macedonia: But that was at his ſecond going thither; as is noted here, on ch. ii. 12. 2. It was written when Timothy was with him; as appears by the inſcription of it, ch. i. 1. But, when he left Epheſus to go into Macedonia, Timothy was not with him; being ſent before him, Acts xix. 22. tho' at his ſecond going through Macedonia, Timothy was with him, ch. xx. 4. 3. He ſpeaks here of ſome Macedonians to come with him, ch. ix. 4. And accordingly, at his ſecond going from Macedonia, "there accompanied him Ariſtarchus and Secundus, of Theſſalonica," the metropolis of Macedonia, Acts xx. 4. And 4. Not only in the poſt-ſcript (which indeed is ſingly of no great authority) but by Theodoret and Oecumenius, 'tis ſaid, this "ſecond Epiſtle was written from Philippi;" where St. Paul was till after the days of unleavened bread," Acts xx. 6. It therefore ſeems to have been ſent from thence, not long before St. Paul's coming himſelf to them; which he here ſpeaks of as inſtant, ch. xii. 14. and xiii. 1. and which he did, (as Dr. Lightfoot ſays) in his journey from Philippi to Troas: For he ſail'd about, by way of Corinth, to make good his promiſe, while the reſt of his company went the neareſt way to Troas, and tarried for him there, Acts xx. 5.

III. That the occaſion of this was the account which he had long waited for, and newly receiv'd from Titus, of the ſucceſs of his former Epiſtle, which had wrought a happy reformation among many of them: Tho' ſome ſeducers there were ſtill, it ſeems; who invidiouſly loaded him with the imputation of levity and inconſtancy, pride and imperiouſneſs, vanity and vain-glory; repreſenting him withal, as contemptible in his perſon, and deſpicable in his miniſtry.

IV. That, as he had thus two ſorts of people to deal with, the reformed and the refractory; ſo he varies his ſtyle, according to the ſubject, with reſpect either to the one or the other. He ſoftens his pen towards the former, and at the ſame time gives it an edge of ſharp diſcipline to the latter; alternately commending and menacing, ſmiling and frowning; ſometimes expreſſing himſelf with the ſweetneſs of a moſt tender-hearted Father, and ſometimes with the jealouſy of a moſt vigilant Paſtor: So that, indeed, he appears not in any other of his Epiſtles to have ſo much play'd the orator, as in this.

V. The parts it conſiſteth of, are, briefly, 1. An affectionate apology for his not yet coming to them, ch. i. 2. A pardon for the inceſtuous perſon, upon his repentance, ch. ii. 3. A juſtification of his miniſtry againſt the calumnies of falſe teachers, ch. iii. iv. v. vi. 4. An exhortation to Chriſtian duties in general, ch. vii. And, in particular, to a liberal contribution to the poor Saints at Jeruſalem, ch. viii, ix. 5. A confutation of his emulous adverſaries; by an enumeration of his manifold trials, and the happy iſſue of them, ch. x, xi, xii. And 6. A denunciation of ſeverity, and the power of his Apoſtleſhip, againſt incorrigible offenders, ch. xiii.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle encourageth them againſt troubles, by the comforts and deliverances, which God had vouchſafed him in all his afflictions; and particularly in Aſia: Profeſſeth his ſincerity in preaching the Goſpel: And declares, that his not coming to them yet, was the effect of kindneſs only.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. PAUL, an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the Saints which are in all Achaia: Grace be to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Bleſſed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort; who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we our ſelves are comforted of God. For as the ſufferings of Chriſt abound in us, ſo our conſolation alſo aboundeth by Chriſt. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the ſame ſufferings, which we alſo ſuffer: Or whether we be comforted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation. And our hope of you is ſtedfaſt, knowing that as ye are partakers of the ſufferings, ſo ſhall ye be alſo of the conſolation.

Paul, an Apoſtle.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 1.

And Timothy our brother.] Dr. Whitby, and Mr. Burkitt, ſuppoſe, that St. Paul places Timothy here with himſelf, calling him brother, only out of compliment, that he might not be deſpiſed for his youth. But 'tis more reaſonable to believe, that he did this out of regard to Timothy's being a brother, of the Epiſcopal order. See the notes on Acts xv. 32.

The Church of God.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 1.

With all the Saints.] The Greek Scholiaſt noteth, that the Apoſtle uſeth not the word (hoſiois) holy, but (hagiois) unearthly; whereby all thoſe, among the Corinthians, who were earthly-minded, and ſought not the things which are above, but the things which are here on earth below, are excluded out of the Apoſtle's ſalutation. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. i. 7. and 1 Cor. i. 1.

Grace be to you, and peace.] See the notes on Rom. i. 7. and 1 Cor. i. 3.

The father of mercies.] Tho' judgments proceed from God, as well as mercies, yet he is not in Scripture any where call'd the father of judgments, as he is here "the father of mercies:" Becauſe mercy and compaſſion ariſeth meerly from himſelf, and he delighteth in it, Mich. vii. 18. but our ſins are the cauſe why he inflicteth any judgments upon us. (Aſſ.) And he is here call'd "the father of mercies," in the plural number, to ſignify, according to the Hebrew way of ſpeaking, the greatneſs and multitude of his mercies: And "the God of all comfort," as being the giver of the Holy Ghoſt, The comforter, whence all our comforts are deriv'd. (W. and B.)

Who comforteth us.] See the notes on Acts xvi. 25. and Rom v. 3. and viii. 35.

The ſufferings of Chriſt.] Ta pathemata tou Chriſtou; The afflictions and calamities which we ſuffer for Chriſt, or Chriſt ſuffereth in us his members. (Aſſ. G. H. W. and B.) God knows, how to proportion the conſolation to the ſufferings. We know not what we loſe, when we pray to be deliver'd out of our afflictions. Let us ſuffer without meaſure, that we may be comforted without meaſure. (Q.) See the notes on Acts ix. 4.

As ye are partakers.] See the notes on Acts xiv 22. and 1 Cor. x. 13.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11. For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble, which came to us in Aſia, that we were preſſed out of meaſure, above ſtrength, inſomuch that we deſpaired even of life: But we had the ſentence of death in our ſelves, that we ſhould not truſt in our ſelves, but in God which raiſeth the dead. Who delivered us from ſo great a death, and doth deliver: In whom we truſt, that he will yet deliver us: Ye alſo helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift beſtowed upon us by the means of many perſons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

Our trouble, which came to us in Aſia] See the notes on Acts xix 23, &c. and 1 Cor. xv. 32.

We had the ſentence of death in our ſelves] Obſerve here, 1. That whatever thoſe preſſures were to which the Apoſtle here refers, the grievouſneſs of them needs no other proof, than that they are ſtiled "a great death;" and that his reſcue out of them is compared to that nobleſt inſtance of Almighty power, by which "God raiſeth the dead:" And ſuch ſurprizing events, it ſeems evident, are ſometimes neceſſary to beget in us juſt notions of God, and of our ſelves. It is an act of kindneſs and mercy in God, to refreſh and awaken our memories, and make us wiſe, tho' at our own expence. And this is never done to better purpoſe, than by ſuch dangers and calamities, as plainly prove an over-ruling providence, by baffling the wiſdom, and chaſtiſing the vanity, of ſelf-conceited men; when they illuſtrate the glory of God, with ſuch evidence, that they cannot but perceive and confeſs the deliverance out of them to be his work. And yet, 2. In ſuch deliverances, God moves ſometimes by very ſlow ſteps. Thus, after St. Paul had eſcaped what he calls "ſo great a death," there were other afflictions, in which he felt the continuance of God's mercy; and more ſtill behind, in which he hoped to find the completion of it; He "hath delivered, and doth deliver, and in him we truſt, that he will yet deliver us." 3. That the ground of this his truſt was, 1. The experience of God's great goodneſs to him heretofore: And, 2. The interceſſions of his fellow-chriſtians in his behalf. But then we are to obſerve, 4. That "for the gift beſtow'd upon us, by the means of many perſons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf." (Stanhope) See his Sermon on this text; and the notes here, on Rom. xv. 30.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. For our rejoicing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity, and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our converſation in the world, and more abundantly to you-wards. For we write none other things unto you, than what ye read or acknowledge, and I truſt ye ſhall acknowledge even to the end. As alſo ye have acknowledged us in part, that we are your rejoicing, even as ye alſo are ours in the day of the Lord Jeſus. And in this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a ſecond benefit: And to paſs by you into Macedonia, and to come again out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on my way toward Judea. When I therefore was thus minded, did I uſe lightneſs? Or the things that I purpoſe, do I purpoſe according to the fleſh, that with me there ſhould be yea, yea, and nay, nay? But as God is true, our word toward you was not yea, and nay. For the Son of God, Jeſus Chriſt, who was preached among you by us, even by me, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea. For all the promiſes of God in him are yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us. Now he which ſtabliſheth us with you, in Chriſt, and hath anointed us, is God: Who hath alſo ſealed us, and given the earneſt of the Spirit in our hearts. Moreover, I call God for a record upon my ſoul, that to ſpare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth. Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy: For by faith ye ſtand.

Our rejoicing is this.] Obſerve here, 1. That, tho' St. Paul did not put confidence and truſt in his ſincerity and Chriſtian grace, yet he did rejoice and holily glory in the evidence of his grace, and in the teſtimony of a ſincere and upright conſcience: "Our rejoicing is this." Learn hence, That an holy glorying and rejoicing in the graces of God, which upon good and ſufficient grounds we find evident in our ſelves, is lawful and allowable: A Chriſtian may and ought to rejoice, not only in the confidence in Chriſt's merits, but alſo in the conſcience of his own ſincerity. 2. The particular grace evidenced, which the Apoſtle took comfort in: His ſincerity, and godly ſimplicity; that is, his uprightneſs both of heart and life, his freedom from guile and hypocriſy. Thence note, That the conſcience of ſincerity is ſuch a crown of rejoicing, as will ſupport a Chriſtian's ſpirit under and againſt the greateſt difficulties which may ariſe in any condition. This ſincerity diſcovers it ſelf in its acting by a right rule, from a right principle, and to a right end; and it ſupports a man's ſpirit in the duty of prayer, under the burden of ſlander and reproach, in the dark night of affliction, in the diſconſolate hour of death, and at the dreadful day of judgment. 3. That it is not a ſingle act of ſincerity, but a conſtant courſe of upright walking, that our Apoſtle rejoiced and took comfort in: "We have had our converſation in the world in all ſimplicity and godly ſincerity." As God doth not judge of our ſtate and condition by a particular action; no more ſhould we, but by the general bent of our reſolutions, and the conſtant courſe and tenor of our converſations. (B.) See the notes on John i. 47. Acts xxiii. 1. xxiv. 16. 1 Cor. i 17. ii. 4, 6, 13. and v. 8.

We write none other.] Obſerve, 1. The Apoſtle having aſſerted his own ſincerity and upright converſation, in the former verſe, he doth in this make his appeal to the conſciences of the Corinthians for his juſtification. It is a good demonſtration of our uprightneſs, when we cannot only appeal to God, as touching our ſincerity, but even to the conſciences of men: For if through prejudice they will not with their mouths vouch our integrity, yet ſecretly with their conſciences they cannot but bear witneſs to it. 2. Having declar'd that he had his teſtimonials not only from his own conſcience, but from theirs alſo, he adds, that he truſted this would hold and continue "even to the end;" that is, to the end both of his and their lives: As if he had ſaid, My converſation hath hitherto been acknowledg'd by you to be ſincere and upright; and I hope, as ye ſhall never ſee it otherwiſe by me, ſo will ye perſevere and continue in your good opinion and right judgment concerning me, to the end of your and my life. (B.)

A ſecond benefit.] To wit, to be confirmed in the faith. (H. and B.) By this it appears, that the Apoſtle had been but once yet among them. (W.) See the notes on Rom. i. 11.

When I therefore was thus minded.] Here our Apoſtle begins to make his apology and defence for himſelf, for changing his purpoſe in coming to Corinth according to promiſe, and to free himſelf from the imputation of levity, inconſtancy, and falſhood, caſt upon him by the falſe Apoſtles, for promiſing to come to Corinth, and not performing it: For they aggravated the matter ſo far, as if he were one that ſaid and unſaid, one that took no care about keeping his word; and thence inferr'd that no regard was to be had to any thing he deliver'd. He that is not to be relied upon (ſay they) in his ordinary promiſes, how can ye depend upon what he ſays to you in his preaching? Hence learn, That lightneſs and inconſtancy is a great ſin and reproach in any, but eſpecially in the miniſters of the Goſpel; who yet are often charg'd with it, when they are in no degree guilty of it. (B.) The meaning of yea, and nay, or of yea, yea, and nay, nay, is diſtinctly this; when we do not agree, or are inconſtant to our ſelves, now yea, and anon nay, in our words or actions. Whence is that old word naucus, for a light or frivolous perſon, from nai ouchi, as it is deduc'd by Feſtus. The difference of this from that in Jam. v. 12. is clear'd by the conſtruction, "Let your yea be yea, and your nay be nay;" that is, let your words and actions accord; ſo that the ſecond yea, and the ſecond nay, is not join'd with the firſt, as here, but as the predicate affirm'd of it, whereas here the two years being all one (and ſo indeed expreſs'd by a ſingle yea, ver. 18.) are the ſubject of the ſpeech, and the two nayes, being all one again, the predicate. To this agrees that proverb of the Jews, The juſt man's yea is yea, and his nay nay. A third expreſſion there is, that of Mat. v. 37, which is in ſound very near this, and yet diſtant from it, "Let your communication be yea, yea, and nay, nay;" that is, let there be no other language but this, or the like, uſed by you; in oppoſition to the more licentious forms of oaths there mention'd. (H.) See the notes on Mat. v. 37.

As God is true.] See the notes on ver. 23.

Our word toward you.] Our word here may be either underſtood of St. Paul's promiſe to come to Corinth, and that he did very ſincerely intend to come unto them; as if he had ſaid, As God is true to his promiſe, ſo has he taught me to be true to mine: Or of his preaching; that the doctrine he taught was not mutable and changeable, but always the ſame. (B.) Or thus, according to Theodoret, that the word, concerning "the ſon of God, preached among you by me, and Silvanus, and Timotheus," was ſtill the ſame, without any variance from one another; we all ſaying the ſame things of him, and confirming them by the like miracles. (W.) See the notes on Acts xv. 32.

All the promiſes of God.] All the promiſes of God made to you are true and certain, through Chriſt the author of the newcovenant, eſtabliſh'd upon better promiſes, to the glory of that God who made them, by us. (W. and B.)

Now he which ſtabliſheth.] In theſe two verſes we have four very great and noble privileges, which the Apoſtle declares God had conferr'd upon the Corinthians; namely, his eſtabliſhing, anointing, and ſealing of them, and giving the earneſt of his Holy Spirit to them. 1. Their eſtabliſhment; "he which eſtabliſhed us with you is God." Learn thence, That a people's eſtabliſhment in the doctrine of the Goſpel, and in the faith of the promiſes, is alone the gracious work of God. We are naturally like reeds ſhaken with every wind; it is the eſtabliſhing grace of God that makes us pillars in the Church. 2. Their anointing, which is from God; the ſanctifying grace of God being often in Scripture compar'd to oil, in regard of its effects: It refreſhes the weary, it healeth the wounded, it comforts the heart, it beautifies the face, it ſtrengthens the limbs. Such internal virtues and excellencies hath the ſanctifying grace of God in the hearts of the people. 3. Their ſealing; "Who hath alſo ſealed us." God's ſealing of his children doth imply his high valuation and eſteem of them: What is ſeal'd is eſteem'd very precious; it implies their ſafety and ſecurity; what is under ſeal, is not in danger of being loſt: Again, Sealing doth imply ſecrecy and privacy; that which is ſeal'd is ſecret and hidden; it is the new name, which none know but he that receiveth it: Finally, Sealing is for confirmation; contracts and bargains among men are confirm'd by hand and ſeal. Thus the graces of the Spirit, which ſanctify us, do alſo witneſs and ſeal to us the aſſurance of God's love and ſpecial favour in Jeſus Chriſt. 4. The fourth privilege here conferr'd by God upon the Corinthians, is "his giving the earneſt of his Spirit in their hearts:" Grace wrought in the heart here is a ſure earneſt of glory hereafter; as there is a great deal of difference between a ſhilling, a ſingle piece of money, and a ſhilling that is an earneſt of a greater ſum. It is joy to find grace in the ſoul, as grace mortifying our corruptions; but it rejoices much more to look upon grace as an earneſt of glory, as the firſt-fruits which inſure the full crop. (B.) If it be ask'd, How ſhall we be aſſur'd that we have receiv'd this earneſt, and that we are ſealed by the Holy Spirit? I anſwer, The only certain way to know this, is the bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit in our lives and converſations: For, if this be wanting, all other rules to judge thereof will be of no uſe. Now, what theſe fruits of the Spirit are, ſee Gal. v. 22, 23. and the notes there. (Fox) The firſt gift of the Spirit, and of life, is a pledge of our whole inheritance; inſomuch, that this anointing, ſealing, and pledging, all ſerve to one and the ſame end. (Aſſ) And that, all theſe expreſſions refer to the ſolemn rite of confirmation, is evident dent, as well from comparing them together, as from the concurring teſtimonies of ſeveral ancient Fathers. (Wheat.) See the notes on Acts x. 38. Rom. iv. 11. v. 5. and viii. 9, 11, 16. 1 Cor. i. 4, &c. and ix. 2. and 1 John ii. 20.

I call God for a record upon my ſoul.] In theſe words, our Apoſtle doth aſſure the Corinthians, in a very ſolemn manner, that it was not any inconſtancy, or carnal reſpect in himſelf, that made him delay his coming to them; but it was purely to ſpare them, as being unwilling to come with his rod among them, and to uſe ſeverity upon them. Here obſerve the Apoſtle's manner of ſpeech, by way of adjuration; "I call God to record upon my ſoul" The words are an aſſertory and execratory oath; wherein God is call'd to witneſs the truth of what he ſaid. Learn hence, That it is lawful for Chriſtians under the Goſpel to ſwear, upon a neceſſary and great occaſion. But what great occaſion was here for St. Paul to do it? Anſ. Very great; the falſe Apoſtles having accus'd him for a vain-glorious and inconſtant man: This accuſation did redound to the diſcredit of his miniſtry, the diſhonour of the Goſpel, the deſtruction of the Church; therefore he ſolemnly proteſts that no inconſtancy or worldly motives did cauſe him to delay his promiſe; but a wiſe and ſpiritual conſideration of their good, a willingneſs to ſpare them, and an unwillingneſs to uſe ſeverity upon them. Hence learn, That the miniſterial power, which God giveth the officers of the Church, ought to be manag'd with much holy prudence, and Chriſtian commiſeration; the end of their power ſhould always be in their mind, which is edification, and not deſtruction. (B.) See the notes on Mat. v. 34. and 1 Cor. iv. 21.

Dominion over your faith.] See the notes on 1 Cor. iii. 5.

CHAP. II.

The Apoſtle, having explain'd the reaſon of his delay to come to them, requires them to reſtore and forgive the penitent: And declares the ſucceſs of his miniſtry in other places.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. BUT I determined this with my ſelf, that I would not come again to you in heavineſs. For if I make you ſorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the ſame which is made ſorry by me? And I wrote this ſame unto you, leſt when I came, I ſhould have ſorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice, having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all. For out of much affliction and anguiſh of heart, I wrote unto you with many tears; not that ye ſhould be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you. But if any have cauſed grief, he hath not grieved me, but in part; that I may not overcharge you all. Sufficient to ſuch a man is this puniſhment, which was inflicted of many. So that contrariwiſe, ye ought rather to forgive him, and comfort him, leſt perhaps ſuch a one ſhould be ſwallowed up with overmuch ſorrow. Wherefore I beſeech you, that ye would confirm your love towards him. For to this end alſo did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive alſo: For if I forgave any thing, to whom I forgave it, for your ſakes forgave I it, in the perſon of Chriſt; leſt Satan ſhould get an advantage of us: For we are not ignorant of his devices.

I determined this with my ſelf.] See the notes on ch. i. 17, &c. and 1 Cor. v. 1, &c.

I wrote unto you with many tears.] As the Apoſtle's zeal for the good of ſouls made him rejoice at their welfare, ver. 2. ſo did it alſo cauſe him to weep for their miſcarriages, Acts xx. 19, 31. (W.)

Grieved me, but in part.] Theophylact, reſolving it the Apoſtle's meaning, to have his charity to the inceſtuous perſon expreſs'd, and to give order for his abſolution, thinks it moſt proper, that, joining them with himſelf in the diſlike and ſorrow, and conſequent infliction of cenſures for the ſin, he might engage them jointly with himſelf in the abſolving the tranſgreſſor; And this (ſaith he) moſt wiſely diſpoſed by him, that they who had ſo lately been commanded by the Apoſtle to avoid him, as a deteſtable perſon, ſhould not now, upon his giving orders for his abſolution, be ſcandalized at him, as inconſtant and mutable. This, ſaith he, is the reaſon, that he takes them in, as partakers with him of the ſorrow and cenſures, that he might have them his willing partners in the abſolution, and joy of that. And ſo this (ſaith he) is the ſenſe of the words, For he hath not, ſaith St. Paul, grieved me alone, but all you in part; that is, a little, or in ſome degree; that I may not ſay, he hath altogether grieved you, leſt I ſhould lay overmuch weight upon him: Or, in plain words, the truth is, he hath grieved you, in like manner as me; but yet that I may not over-burthen him that was guilty of that inceſt, or aggravate the matter againſt him, all that I ſay is, that in part, or in ſome meaſure, ye were grieved by him. This is a very commodious ſenſe, and neceſſarily requires ſome ſmall change of the punctation (tho' the printed text in Theophylact hath not obſerv'd it) partly by including in a parentheſis the latter part of this verſe, partly by putting a comma after overcharge, that ſo you all may connect with in part, thus, "But if any have cauſed grief he hath not grieved me, but in part (that I may not aggravate, or lay weight, on him,) you all." And this is a plain ſenſe, and agrees very well with all that follows, of their joint and chearful proceeding to the abſolution of the inceſtuous. (H.)

Puniſhment, which was inflicted of many.] What is here meant by "the puniſhment which was inflicted under the many," will appear by 1 Cor. v. 4. where, concerning the inceſtuous perſon, and ſuch as he, order is diſtinctly given, that he ſhall be "delivered up to Satan, for the deſtruction of the fleſh," or bringing corporal inflictions upon him, which is certainly the (epitimia) puniſhment here mention'd, and that of their being gathered together, that is, in the preſence of the whole congregation, to add the greater ſolemnity to it: And that is all one with the hypo pleionon here, under, or in, the preſence of the many. Mean while, as there the ſentence was St. Paul's, kekrika, ver. 3. "I have judged as preſent," and ver. 4. "when ye are gathered together, and my ſpirit, with the power of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt", (beſtow'd on the Apoſtle, and rulers of the Church) ſo it muſt be ſuppoſed to be here alſo, tho' the ſolemnity was tranſacted with the company, and in the preſence of the whole congregation. (Idem)

Ye ought rather to forgive him.] Hence it appears, that in notorious crimes, which give great cauſe of ſcandal to the Church and to Chriſtianity, the conſolation of the offender depends not only on his inward grief, and repentance towards God, but alſo on the relaxation of his cenſures by the Church: For, 'tis certain, the Apoſtle is here ſpeaking, not, as Grotius thinks, of the taking off the diſeaſe, which he ſuppoſes Satan had inflicted on the inceſtuous perſon, but of reſtoring him to communion by relaxation of the Church's cenſures. For, 1. The word (epitimia) puniſhment, ver. 6. refers to the canonical cenſures of the Church: And, 2. He commands them not only to forgive, but alſo to "confirm their love towards him;" both which expreſſions ſeem plainly to intimate, that he would have him reſtor'd to communion. (W.)

In the perſon of Chriſt.] That is, In the name, and by the authority of Chriſt. (B.) See the notes on John xx. 23. and 1 Cor. v. 4.

Leſt Satan ſhould get an advantage] Obſerve here, The arguments with which, and the motive by which, he preſſes the Church at Corinth to forgive the inceſtuous perſon, and re-admit him into their ſociety; "leſt Satan get an advantage of us." What advantage? Anſ. An advantage to lead them into ſin thus; by their abuſing that power which God had given them for edification, to the deſtruction of a perſon; by making them guilty of ſpiritual murder, by their over-rigorous proceeding againſt him, by driving him to deſpair, by, tempting him to apoſtacy. Satan ſometimes, by too great ſlackneſs of diſcipline, ſeeks to lull ſinners aſleep in the boſom of the Church; and ſometimes by too great ſeverity endeavours to drive them to deſpair. The force of the Apoſtle's words lies thus, I adviſe you to continue the ſeverity of diſcipline no longer towards this penitent offender, but receive him again into your communion with all tenderneſs and ſpeed, leſt Satan ſhould circumvent you, and over-reach you, and make uſe of your rigor, to your own ruin, by rendring your doctrine hateful, and your diſcipline deteſtable; "for we are not ignorant of his devices," his contrivances, plots, and ſtratagems, laid againſt us. Learn hence, 1. That Satan is a maſter in the art of deceiving ſouls: He is full of cunning methods and devices, to circumvent perſons, and catch them in the net of his deceits. 2. That it concerns all perſons, but eſpecially the miniſters of the Goſpel, to be well acquainted with, and not ignorant of any devices or plots of Satan. Satan has a multitude of devices, by which he undoes, entangles and deceives ſouls; and no Chriſtian ought to be ignorant of them, leſt he be circumvented and undone by them: Many are his devices for drawing us into ſin, for drawing us off from duty, for drawing us into temptation, for drowning us in deſpair: Our wiſdom will be not to diſpute, but to reſiſt; for by reſiſting, our temptations will be fewer, and our ſtrength greater, James iv. 7. "Reſiſt the devil, and he will fly." Where note, That the promiſe of conqueſt is made to reſiſting, not diſputing with Satan; to parly with him, is the way to be overcome by ſin. (B.) See Dr. Cave's, and

Mr. Killingbeck's Sermons on this text; and the notes on Luke xxii. 31.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach Chriſt's goſpel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord, I had no reſt in my ſpirit, becauſe I found not Titus my brother: But taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia. Now thanks be unto God, which always cauſeth us to triumph in Chriſt, and maketh manifeſt the ſavour of his knowledge by us in every place. For we are unto God a ſweet ſavour of Chriſt, in them that are ſaved, and in them that periſh. To the one we are the ſavour of death unto death; and to the other, the ſavour of life unto life: And who is ſufficient for theſe things? For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God: But as of ſincerity, but as of God, in the ſight of God ſpeak we in Chriſt.

A door was opened.] This either ſignifies, 1. The free liberty which he had to preach the Goſpel in thoſe places; the door of his mouth was not ſhut by perſecutors, the enemies and oppoſers of the Goſpel, but the word of the Lord had a free courſe in the labours of its miniſters: Or, 2. This opened door may ſignify and import the great and gracious ſucceſs which God gave the Apoſtle in his work: As God by his providence open'd the Apoſtle's mouth to preach and publiſh the glad tidings of the Goſpel; ſo by his Holy Spirit he open'd the people's hearts to receive and entertain the glad tidings of ſalvation which the Goſpel brought. Acts xvi. 14. the Lord open'd Lydia's heart, that ſhe attended to the words which were ſpoken of Paul. (B.)

Taking my leave of them.] Apotaxamenos autois. The word apotaſſomai ſignifies not barely to take leave of, but to give inſtructions at parting, concerning ſuch things as are to be done afterwards. (Leigh)

Cauſeth us to triumph in Chriſt.] See the notes on Rom. viii. 37. and Mr. Milward's Sermon on this text.

Unto God a ſweet ſavour.] Obſerve here, 1. The title given to the Goſpel, and to the preachers and diſpenſers of it: They are a ſavour; an alluſion probably to the ointment of ſweet perfume, which the High-prieſts under the law were anointed with: The breath of the Goſpel is a ſweet odour or ſmell; and God's faithful miniſters are they that carry it, and blow it abroad, to perfume ſinners that lie ſtinking in their ſins. 2. The contrary effects which the preaching of the Goſpel has upon thoſe that ſit under it; it is the ſavour of life unto ſome, of death unto others: Here it was ſo; the Apoſtle's miniſtry was a ſavour of life to the believing Gentiles, of death to the unbelieving Jews: All men are to be reckon'd in a ſtate of life or death, of periſhing or being ſav'd, according as they do or do not receive the ſavour, and reliſh the doctrine of the Goſpel. But how comes the preaching of the Goſpel to be the ſavour of death unto ſome? Anſwer, Partly through pride, in not enduring to be reprov'd by the Goſpel; partly through prejudice againſt the miniſters of the Goſpel; partly through ſlothfulneſs, neglecting to come under the ſound of the Goſpel; and partly through curſed infidelity, in not believing the meſſage which the Goſpel brings. Thus is the Goſpel, which was ordained for life, the ſavour of death unto death. 3. The ſweet ſupport which God gives his faithful miniſters in the diſcharge of their duty, tho' their doctrine fails of deſir'd ſucceſs; they "are a ſweet ſavour unto God," as well "in them that periſh" as "in them that are ſaved." Tho' Iſrael, their people, be not gather'd, yet ſhall faithful miniſters be glorious: God will reward them according to their labour, not according to the fruit; as the nurſe ſhall be paid for her care and pains, even tho' the child dies at the breaſt. (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 18.

Who is ſufficient for theſe things.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, So great and weighty is the work of preaching the Goſpel to a loſt world, that neither my ſelf, nor any of my fellow-Apoſtles, are ſufficient for it of our ſelves: "Who is ſufficient?" That is, None are ſufficient, without proportionable ſtrength and help from God. To preach the Goſpel as it ought, is a weighty work. If any think otherwiſe, it is either their ignorance or inadvertency. To ſearch into the deep things of God, the deep myſteries of the Goſpel which are unfathomable; to inſtruct the ignorant, to convince the obſtinate, to reſolve the doubting, to reduce the wandring; to know the ſtate of our flock, to viſit the ſick, to ſpeak to them, and pray for them, as perſons upon the confines of eternity! To do all this, and much more, as we ought, is no trivial work, no common performance: And therefore the greateſt men that ever God employ'd in and about this work, have been ready to ſink under the apprehenſion of the inſuperable difficulties that attend it. (B.) Honos and Onus, the honour and the charge, go together Whence it is, that the ſame Hebrew word ſignifieth both honorare and onorare: For whom God advanceth unto honour, them he doth burden with a charge; and on whom he impoſeth a burden, to them he vouchafeth honour. (Downame)

As many, which corrupt the word of God.] All the difficulty here is, what is meant by kapeleuein: Not that there can be any queſtion of the native proper ſignification of that word; (for it certainly ſignifies doing as kapeloi do; and thoſe are like pedling merchants, that buy and ſell to get gain:) But becauſe it is poſſible it may refer to ſome practices which ſuch merchants are vulgarly guilty of, mixing, and daſhing their commodities, and ſo deceiving others, that they may inrich themſelves. But tho' the word may poſſibly by a figure ſignify this; yet the genuine proper notion, being very agreeable to the context, is in all reaſon to be preferred. "We are not (ſaith St. Paul, hos hoi polloi) as the many." This ſure refers to the falſe teachers of his time, and thoſe, we know, were the Gnoſticks, who as they are ſaid to ſerve their belly, to love the world, and to love pleaſures, and ſo generally to deſign themſelves advantages by their profeſſion, and of all things hated the croſs, renounced chriſtianity when it was perſecuted, and brought any dangers or loſſes upon men; ſo they are particularly marked out, 1 Tim. vi. 5. (that chapter where the Gnoſticks are named, ver. 20. and their character particularly ſet down) to be ſuch as deem godlineſs gain, think the Chriſtian profeſſion brings men ſecular advantages of liberty, &c. and ſo cannot be ſo ſingle-hearted, ſo wholly bent to approve themſelves to God, as St. Paul here profeſſeth to be. To this interpretation of the place I am inclined by two paſſages in the Epiſtles of Ignatius, which tho' they are omitted in the Laurentian Copy, are yet conſtantly to be found in others, and if they were put in by any interpolator, they may yet be of good uſe to us in this matter, there being no reaſon to ſuſpect the hand that inſerted them of any ill deſign, nor yet of ignorance either of the Gnoſtick hereſy, or of the uſe of the word. The former place is in the Epiſtle ad Magneſianos, where, ſpeaking of the Gnoſtick judaizers, enemies of the croſs, whoſe God is their belly, minding earthly things, lovers of pleaſures, and not lovers of God, having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power thereof, he adds, merchants of Chriſt, huck-ſtering the word, ſelling Jeſus; going on to other parts of the character of the Gnoſticks, corrupters of women, coveting what belongs to others, greedy lovers of money. The ſecond place is agreeable, in Ep. ad Trall There are ſaith he, ſome vain ſpeakers and impoſtors, not Chriſtians, but merchants of Chriſt, carrying the name of Chriſt for deceit, huck-ſtering the word of the Goſpel: And who theſe are, he ſpecifies in the proceſs of that Epiſtle; Simon the firſt-born of Satan, Menander, Baſilides, the unclean Nicolaitans, (tous pſeudonymous) thoſe that are falſely named; that is, the Gnoſticks, &c. (H.) But againſt this interpretation, Dr. Whitby oppoſeth ſeveral arguments; and obſerves particularly, that the Pſeudonymoi (here cited from St. Ignatius, or his interpolator) muſt be underſtood not of the Gnoſticks, but of the Nicolaitans; who were falſly named after Nicolas the deacon, whereas he was no ſuch perſon as they repreſented him, but free from the doctrines which thoſe Hereticks vented in his name. (W.) But indeed this paſſage may be fairly underſtood to have a more extenſive application, than to either of thoſe Hereticks; ſince the original word is not (polloi) many, as we defectively tranſlate it, but (hoi polloi) The many; that is, the multitude, which always implies a majority. See the notes on Rom. v. 12. and Dr. Bentley's ſermon on this text.

As of ſincerity.] See the notes on 1 Cor. v. 8.

CHAP III.

Againſt the falſe teachers, who charg'd him with vain-glory, the Apoſtle here ſheweth, that the faith and graces of the Corinthians was a ſufficient commendation of his miniſtry; and that the miniſtry of the Goſpel doth far exceed that of the law.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. DO we begin again to commend our ſelves? or need we, as ſome others, epiſtles of commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you? Ye are our epiſtle written in our hearts, known and read of all men: For as much as ye are all manifeſtly declared to be the epiſtle of Chriſt, miniſtred by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of ſtone, but in fleſhly tables of the heart. And ſuch truſt have we through Chriſt to God-ward: Not that we are ſufficient of our ſelves to think any thing as of our ſelves: But our ſufficiency is of God; who alſo hath made us able miniſters of the New Teſtament, not of the letter, but of the ſpirit: For the letter killeth, but the ſpirit giveth life. But if the miniſtration of death written and engraven in ſtones, was glorious, ſo that the children of Iſrael could not ſtedfaſtly behold the face of Moſes, for the glory of his countenance, which glory was to be done away; How ſhall not the miniſtration of the ſpirit be rather glorious? For if the miniſtration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the miniſtration of righteouſneſs exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious, had no glory in this reſpect, by reaſon of the glory that excelleth. For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.

Do we begin again.] The Apoſtle here alludes to theſe parts of his former Epiſtle (viz. chap. ii. iii. iv. and ix.) where he wrote a great deal in his own juſtification, magnifying his own miniſtry, and ſhewing that he was nothing behind the very chief Apoſtles: As if he had ſaid, Need I again, in this epiſtle, as in the former, to commend myſelf, or the effects of my miniſtry, to you &c.? From whence we may learn, 1. That the people ought to be very tender of the reputation of their miniſters, and not eaſily take up a mean or ill opinion of them. 2. That thoſe of our communion, who endeavour to bring their own, or other miniſters into diſrepute with the people, do our church and religion great diſſervice, and mightily hinder the progreſs and effect of the Goſpel among us. And, 3. That the good lives of the people are the beſt teſtimonial or commendation which they can give of their miniſters, when they live anſwerably to the truths of the Goſpel which their miniſters faithfully preach. See theſe doctrines clearly illuſtrated in Dr. Hickes's ſermon on this text.

Epiſtles of commendation.] Syſtatikai epiſtolai, and grammata, in this place are an intimation of an ancient cuſtom in the apoſtolical primitive church, which ordinarily gave their teſtimony to all Chriſtians who travell'd from one place to another, and recommended them to an hoſpitable reception. The original of this cuſtom ſeems to have been taken from the Heathens, who had their teſſeras hoſpitalitatis from one friend to another, which help'd them that brought them to kind entertainment; and Tertullian continues the phraſe conteſſeratio hoſpitalitatis. Many mentions of this cuſtom we find among ancient writers. In Syneſius, I commend to your friendſhip and kindneſs Laurentius, who of a long time hath been my ſcholar: And again, One commends a man to another, when he gives a good teſtimony of him. This was done among Chriſtians, by teſtifying the piety and orthodoxy of any, and the agreement with them, from whom they came, in the faith. And therefore when Fortunius, a Biſhop of the Donatiſts, affirmed and boaſted that their church was the catholick church, St. Auſtin (Ep. 163. ad Eleuſium) convinceth him, by asking him, Whether a Donatiſt could, by his Literæ formatæ, or communicatoriæ, gain a man entertainment or reception in any church that he would name to him? being confident he could not do it. Thus Nazianzen ſaith of Julian, that he imitated many of the Chriſtian rites, all humanity, and charity to them that wanted; that way of it eſpecially, which conſiſted in ſending letters and tokens; with which (ſaith Naxianzen) we uſe to furniſh them that are in want from one nation to anothor. The ſame, ſaith Zozomen, l. v. c. 5. and Nicephorus Calliſtus, l. x. c. xxi. almoſt in the ſame words, The ſame we may find in Lucian, in his Peregrinus. By which alſo will appear the ancient notion of the coinonica grammata; not to ſignify (as Baronius, ad an. 314. and out of him Binius, t. 1. concil. p. 271. and Ferrarius De antiq. Eccleſ. Epiſt. genere, l. i. p. 45. would have them) Epiſtles by which men were teſtified to be in communion with the church of Rome, (which they never did, but when they were written by the Biſhop of that church; and neither then, any more than thoſe that were written by the Biſhop of any other particular church, that ſignified that man's agreement in faith and communion with that particular church;) but only letters commendatory from one place or church to another, to recommend a perſon that would travel hither, and ſo obtain for him an hoſpitable reception, lodging, diet, and all things elſe that are contained in Zozomen, under the word (therapeia) proviſion, or neceſſaries, that they wanted; And this, according to the notion of coinonia, Acts ii. 42. for liberality and beneficence; tho' there is no queſtion but, among other degrees of charitable reception, that of admitting them to their churches and ſacraments was included alſo; proportionably to the forms of their teſtimonies, which (ſaith Mat. Blaſtares) were wont to mention the uprightneſs of the perſons, faith, unprovableneſs of his life, and his degree in the church, if he had any. See Juſtel. in cod. Can. Eccl. Un. p. 132. (H.) See the notes on Acts xviii. 2.

Ye are our epiſtle.] See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 2.

And ſuch truſt have we.] The Apoſtle having with great ſatiſfaction mention'd the marvellous efficacy and ſucceſs which attended the preaching of the Goſpel, ch. i. 14. &c. does here declare his firm belief and expectation of the continuance and increaſe of that efficacy and ſucceſs. But, withal, he declares this confidence to be entirely fix'd upon God, for the ſake and merits of Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 4. That the converſion of men to the true faith is an undertaking, to which the wit and parts, the learning and labour of men, even when beſt accompliſh'd to perſuade, is in no degree equal, ver. 5. And that theſe are events entirely owing to the Spirit of God; partly by his extraordinary operations, enabling the miniſters of the New Teſtament to make the moſt convincing evidence of the truth; and partly by his ordinary and aſſiſting graces, diſpoſing the minds of their hearers to embrace the Goſpel, ſo deliver'd and atteſted. All which he confirms with this further argument for his truſt, That ſuch aſſiſtances of the Holy Spirit, and the ſucceſſes proportionable to them, might be depended upon, in favour, and for the promotion, of the Goſpel; becauſe the promiſe of that ſpirit is a privilege peculiar to the Goſpel, ſuch as no other diſpenſation, not even that of the law of Moſes, ever covenanted for: And upon this head St. Paul enlarges, to ſhew the difference between theſe two diſpenſations, and the juſt pre-eminence of the evangelical above the legal, with regard to this privilege in particular, ver. 6, 7. &c. (Stanh.)

To think any thing, as of our ſelves.] Logizaſthai, to reaſon, or conclude rationally. (Aſs.) That is to ſay, without the illuminations and powerful operations of the Holy Spirit. (W.) See Biſhop Andrews's ſermon on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 16. and John xv. 5.

The letter killeth.] By the letter here is not meant the New Teſtament which is written with letters, but the law of Moſes, in oppoſition to the Goſpel. This (ſays Mr. Limborch) may be called the Letter, becauſe it contains only the firſt rudiments of religion. It did not teach that perfect religion, which Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles deliver'd to the world. Hence, Gal. iii. 24 it is ſtyled "our ſchoolmaſter to bring us unto Chriſt;" it being the office of a ſchoolmaſter to teach children the firſt rudiments of things. This law, or letter, is ſaid to kill; foraſmuch as it condemns to death thoſe who tranſgreſs it, without any promiſe of pardon; for the promiſe of remiſſion of ſins was not of the law, but of grace. The Goſpel is called the Spirit, as being attended with a ſpiritual and quickning power; whereby men dead in ſin are raiſed to a ſpiritual life, and are, as it were, changed into other men: So that they walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. This ſpiritual and quickning power the law was not attended with: And therefore, Hebr. vii. 19. it is ſaid to "make nothing perfect." (Fox) Note here, How falſe the Quakers and others gloſs is upon theſe words: They by the Letter will underſtand the whole written word of God contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament, the law and Goſpel both; and by the Spirit will have to be meant the inward and immediate teachings of the light within them. Others by the letter underſtand the literal and hiſtorical ſenſe of Scripture in general; and by the Spirit giving life, they underſtand the myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe of Scripture: But it is evident, from verſe 3. that by the letter he underſtands the law engraven in ſtone, the law as deliver'd by Moſes with an appearance of the glory of the Lord upon Mount Sinai; and by the Spirit is meant the bleſſed Spirit of Chriſt given to the Apoſtles to enable them to preach the Goſpel, and conferr'd upon all believers that did obediently hear and receive it. (W. and B.) See the notes on Rom. i. 16. ii. 17. iii. 20. iv, 15. vii. 6. and viii. 2.

The miniſtration of death written.] Here, if we obſerve the pointing of the original, and eſpecially the Apoſtle's compariſon between the Letter of the law, and the Spirit of the Goſpel, we ſhall more properly render this paſſage thus; "But if the miniſtration of death (en grammaſin) by the Letter, ingraven in ſtones" &c. the particle en frequently ſignifying the ſame with (dia) by; as is noted on Acts iv. 12. (Maſſey) For the Apoſtle is here contending for the glory and excellency of the Goſpel, ſo far above that of the law, as to repreſent the one perfectly eclipſed by the ſurpaſſing brightneſs of the other. To which purpoſe he ſtiles the law "the Letter," but the Goſpel "the Spirit," ver. 6. He affirms of the law, that it killeth, and is "the miniſtration of death and condemnation;" but of the Goſpel, that it "giveth life," and is "the miniſtration of the Spirit, and of righteouſneſs:" And he infers, that the glory of the latter muſt needs exceed the glory of the former; both on account of its effects, which are more beneficial, and on the account of its duration; for that "is done away," but this remaineth, ver. 7. &c. (Stanh.) Indeed, God's inſtitution ſtamp'd, an excellency upon the Jewiſh worſhip; and the law given them had both an intrinſick glory in it, as it was a revelation of the will of God; and alſo an accidental and adventitious glory, as it was attended with the ſolemnity of thunder and lightning, fire and ſmoke, and a voice like the ſound of a trumpet, at the promulgation of it: Yet (ſays the Apoſtle) compared with the Goſpel, the glory of the law or Jewiſh worſhip "had no glory in it at all, by reaſon of the glory that doth excel;" as the Moon compared with the Sun, is ſo outſhined by it, that its brightneſs is little taken notice of. True indeed, the law was a revelation of God's will, as well as the Goſpel: But with this happy advantage on the Goſpel's ſide; the law was a revelation of God's will, as to duty and as to condemnation, in caſe of non-performance of that duty; but the Goſpel is a revelation of God's will, as to grace, and mercy, as to remiſſion of ſin and eternal life. And again, The law or Jewiſh diſpenſation is vaniſhed; its miniſtration is ceaſed, and all the legal ordinances are aboliſhed; but the Goſpel-ſtate remaineth to the end of the world: It is called "a kingdom which cannot be moved," Heb. xii. 28. therefore the Goſpel-miniſtration, which is eternal, fixed, and binding, muſt needs be more excellent and more glorious than the legal diſpenſation, which was temporary, tranſient and vaniſhing. (B.) And conſequently, to be receiv'd with greater reverence and honour, both to it, and to its miniſters. (Feil) See the notes on Matth. v. 17. and Rom. i. 17. iii. 21. and vii. 9.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Seeing then that we have ſuch hope, we uſe great plainneſs of ſpeech: And not as Moſes, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Iſrael could not ſtedfaſtly look to the end of that which is aboliſhed. But their minds were blinded: For until this day remaineth the ſame vail untaken away, in the reading of the Old Teſtament; which vail is done away in Chriſt. But even unto this day, when Moſes is read, the vail is upon their heart. Nevertheleſs, when it ſhall turn to the Lord, the vail ſhall be taken away. Now the Lord is that Spirit: And where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

We have ſuch hope.] Since we have this confident aſſurance of the dignity of our function, and the ſovereign power of the Goſpel, we do with much freedom and reſolution preach the Goſpel to you. (Hall) Or rather, according to our tranſlation, "we uſe great plainneſs of ſpeech;" not putting a veil before our face, as Moſes did. (W.) See the notes on John vii. 4. and Acts iv. 29.

Put a veil over his face.] Here is another excellency of the Goſpel above the law; That whereas one was veiled under types and ſhadows, the other was deliver'd with great perſpicuity and plainneſs of ſpeech: Which is alſo a confirmation of the perſpicuity of the New Teſtament in all things neceſſary. (W.)

Look to the end.] That is, Either to Chriſt and his Goſpel, as the body veil'd under thoſe types and ſhadows, Col. ii. 17. Or they could not look unto that Chriſt, who is "the end of the law for righteouſneſs," or juſtification, Rom. x. 4. where ſee the notes. (W. and B.) This is undoubtedly the true ſenſe of the words (eis to telos) "to the end" according to the common reading: But if, according to the king's manuſcript, the right reading be (eis to proſopon) to the face, then will the autapodoſis, or ſecond part of the reſemblance, be more perfectly anſwerable to the former, thus, Moſes put a vail over his own face, to ſignify that the Iſraelites would not ſee the face (that is, diſcern clearly the moſt eminent and principal part) of the law, which is now aboliſhed; that is, of the ceremonial law: For certainly the principal part of that was the inward purity and piety ſignified and adumbrated by thoſe ceremonies, and now taught by Chriſt more diſtinctly and plainly; and ſo that covering taken away, ver. 14 only the Jews will not ſee it, but as yet their underſtandings are blinded, as in the beginning of the verſe. (H.) See the notes on ch. iv. 6.

Their minds were blinded.] See the notes on Matth. xiii. 14. John ix. 39. and xii. 40. and Rom. xi. 7.

Done away in Chriſt.] See the notes on Rom. x 4.

When it ſhall turn to the Lord.] The Apoſtle, diſcourſing of "the children of Iſrael, ver. 13. of thoſe to whom belong'd the Old Teſtament," and to whom the law of "Moſes was read," ver. 14, 15. muſt be ſuppoſed to ſpeak here alſo of the ſame perſons: And then, he plainly takes it for granted, that there will come a time, when the Jewiſh nation "ſhall turn to the Lord," or be converted to the Chriſtian faith; and ſo, looking on Chriſt as the end of the law, and being enlightned by his Spirit, ſhall clearly diſcern the ſpiritual ſenſe of the law, and the true meaning of their own prophecies concerning the Meſſiah. Nor is it any objection againſt this expoſition, that the word is epiſtrepſe, in the ſingular number: For, as that anſwers well to Iſrael, or the Jewiſh nation; ſo 'tis a known rule, that in the Hebrew tongue a verb of the ſingular number is join'd to a noun or a participle plural. (W.) See the notes on Rom. xi. 12, 23, 26.

The Lord is that Spirit.] As if he had ſaid, Chriſt is that quickning and life-giving Spirit, who takes away the veil from off our hearts: "And where that Spirit (that all-glorious, and all-powerful Spirit) of the Lord is, there is liberty;" that is, clearneſs, and no more veil; freedom from the yoke of the legal adminiſtration; a liberty and freedom from ſin; a liberty unto righteouſneſs; a freeneſs and readineſs of Spirit to do good; a liberty of addreſs and approach to God; a liberty of ſpeech in prayer to God: And thus the Spirit of the Lord is a free Spirit. (B.)

All with open face.] See the notes on ch. iv. 3. and 1 Cor. xiii. 12. and xv. 49.

CHAP. IV.

The Apoſtle declareth his ſincerity and diligence in preaching the Goſpel: And how the perſecutions he daily endured for ſo doing, did redound to the praiſe of God's power, the benefit of the church in general, and the eternal glory of the preachers in particular.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. THEREFORE ſeeing we have this miniſtry, as we have received mercy, we faint not: But have renounced the hidden things of diſhoneſty, not walking in craftineſs, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifeſtation of the truth, commending our ſelves to every mans conſcience in the ſight of God. But if our Goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt: In whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, who is the image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them. For we preach not our ſelves, but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord; and our ſelves your ſervants for Jeſus ſake. For God who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jeſus Chriſt.

Seeing we have this miniſtry.] See the notes on ch. iii. 4, 12.

We faint not.] See the notes on ver. 8, &c.

Renounced the hidden.] All ſecret underhand dealing, all lurking holes to hide ſhameleſs practices. As we preach the clear and evident truth of the Goſpel, ſo our carriage is open and fair, not hating the light, as they who do evil. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 17. Rom. i. 16. ii. 22. 1 Cor. iii. 12, 16 &c. and iv. 2.

Nor handling the word of God deceitfully.] See the notes on ch. ii. 17.

If our Goſpel be hid.] The Apoſtle having affirm'd, ch. iii. 18. that "we all, with open face, behold the glory of the Lord," he here prevents this objection which might be made againſt him, If you preach the Goſpel with ſuch plainneſs and ſincerity, delivering the naked truth nakedly, how comes it to paſs, that ſo few are enlightned by your preaching, and that the Goſpel is hid to ſo many? He anſwereth, That the fault is not in the preachers, but in themſelves, whoſe eyes Satan hath pluck'd out, or blinded ſo, that they can ſee nothing, tho' it be ever ſo clear and evident in it ſelf. (Aſs.) See the notes on ch. ii. 15. and iii. 13. and 1 Cor. i. 18.

The God of this world.] Obſerve here, 1. The the title given to Satan: He is ſtyl'd "the God of this world;" not properly, but becauſe the honour and homage of a God is challenged by him, and by a multitude of ſinners given to him. He is call'd by our Saviour "the prince of this world;" and by the Apoſtle "the ruler of the darkneſs of this world," becauſe he ruleth over a great part of the world, and they are his ſubjects, or rather his ſlaves. 2. The way and courſe which Satan takes to ſecure his ſubjects obedience to himſelf: He blinds their eyes, that they may never know a better prince, ſee a better way, or underſtand a better ſtate, than he hath drawn them into. Satan blinds the underſtandings of men by the efficacy of divers luſts, which are bred and nouriſhed in their hearts. Now the ſtreamings of ſenſual luſts from a corrupt heart do blind the underſtanding, and beſet the judgment, that the ſinner can neither ſee nor know the excellency of ſpiritual objects. 3. The character of the perſons whom Satan, "the God of this world, hath blinded:" Such as believe not; that is, both ſuch as want the means of faith, and ſuch as enjoy the means, but want the grace of faith: The former is the caſe of the Pagan, the latter of the Chriſtian world. Lord, how many live under the light of the Goſpel, that never had heart to receive it, or will to obey it! How great a part of the chriſtianiz'd world do reject Chriſt; and tho' call'd by his name, yet will not own his authority, or ſubmit to his government! The nobles of the world think themſelves diſhonour'd by ſubmitting their necks to Chriſt's yoke; the ſenſualiſts of the world will not lay down a luſt for him that laid down his life for them; the worldings of the earth prefer their dirt and dunghil before the pearl of great price. O! How few among them that profeſs Chriſtianity, do love our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in ſincerity. 3. The great end and deſign of the devil's agency, in blinding the minds of men with ignorance and error, with paſſion and prejudice; "leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt ſhould ſhine into their hearts," to the ruin of him and his kingdom. As the Sun caſts its beams upon blind men, but they receive not the light in 'em; ſo tho' the light of Chriſt's glorious Goſpel ſhines before the eyes of them whom the God of this world has blinded with hopes and deſires, with the poſſeſſions and enjoyments of this world, yet they receive it not. 5. The glorious title here given to Chriſt; "The image of God;" that is, 1. His ſubſtantial and eſſential image, being God of God, very God of very God: Chriſt, conſider'd with reſpect to his divine nature, is the expreſs image of his father's perſon. 2. Chriſt is his image as mediator, and with reference to the Goſpel, in which he has given us glorious demonſtrations of the power and wiſdom, of the grace and holineſs, of the mercy and goodneſs of God towards us; all which, as in a glaſs are repreſented to us, and preſented before us. In both theſe reſpects Chriſt is call'd, "The image of God." (B.) See the notes on Luke x. 29.

For we preach not ourſelves] In theſe words our Apoſtle farther manifeſts his fidelity and integrity in preaching the Goſpel, by ſhewing that he ſought to advance Chriſt, and not himſelf, in preaching of it. Here note, 1. The duty practis'd by St. Paul: "We preach." How mean and ignoble ſoever this office of preaching is eſteem'd by ſome men, who value not their own, or other mens ſouls, and therefore no wonder that they undervalue the means of making them happy; yet will the faithful miniſters of Chriſt magnify this part of their office; not by pomp and ſtate, nor by ſcorn or ſuperciliouſneſs, as thinking it beneath them to preach, but by an humble and painful attendance upon the miniſtry, which they have receiv'd of the Lord; and will diſpenſe the word with evidence and perſpicuity, with faithfulneſs and ſincerity, with power and authority, with courage and boldneſs, and with exemplarineſs of converſation; not preaching angelical ſermons, and leading diabolical lives. 2. The ſubject-matter of the Apoſtles preaching; "not our ſelves, but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord." But when may perſons be ſaid to preach themſelves? Anſ. When they make themſelves the authors of their own miniſtry, running before they are ſent, and are ſelf-created preachers; when they make themſelves the matter of their preaching, venting their own paſſions, and prejudices, and private opinions, inſtead of the doctrine of Chriſt; and when they make themſelves the end of their preaching, aiming rather at pleaſing others, and profitting themſelves, than at the glory of God, and the good of men's ſouls. But what is it to preach Chriſt? "We preach not our ſelves, but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord." Anſ. When he is the author of our miniſtry, and we receive our miſſion from him; when we make him the object of our preaching; when the ſubject-matter and ſubſtance of it is Jeſus Chriſt, either explicitly or reductively; and when we make him the end of our preaching, deſigning to promote the honour and intereſt of Chriſt by our miniſtry, that his people may be gather'd, his body edified, his Saints perfected, his enemies ſubdued, his Goſpel propagated, and he finally admired in all them that believe. 3. In what capacity the Apoſtle look'd upon himſelf in the church of Chriſt: Not as a Lord, but as a Servant; "Our ſelves your ſervants." There is an honour belonging to Chriſt's miniſters; but verily that honour conſiſts in ſervice which we owe to the Church of Chriſt: Servants we are to the ſouls of men, but not to the humours of men; at the ſame time that we are ſervants to them, we are to rule over them, and they are to obey, and ſubmit unto us as thoſe who watch for their ſouls: Therefore it is added, "ſervants for Jeſus ſake;" that is, ſervants in order to the promoting of his honour, and his church's intereſt. See Dr. Moſs's ſermon on this text; and the notes on 1 Cor. i. 13, 23. and ii. 2.

God, who commanded the light.] Obſerve here, The faithful and humble acknowledgment, which the Apoſtle makes, how himſelf and his Fellow-Apoſtles came to preach Jeſus Chriſt ſo convincingly to others; namely, That Almighty God, who at firſt by his omnipotent word produc'd "light out of darkneſs," by no leſs efficacy and power brought him, a loſt ſinner, out of the darkneſs of Phariſaiſm and ſin, and ſhined into his and their hearts with a glorious light, to the intent that he and they ſhould communicate and impart this divine light of the knowledge of God, which ſhineth in the face of Chriſt, unto others. Learn hence, That miniſters muſt know Chriſt themſelves, before they can make him known to others: Chriſt muſt be reveal'd in them, before he can be revealed by them: He muſt ſhine into their hearts by his Holy Spirit, and give them an experimental acquaintance in their own ſouls, with what they deliver and make known to others. Every truth ought to be the tranſcript of our own experience, and be preach'd firſt to our own hearts, and then to our hearers. For, who can ſavingly enlighten others, that is in the darkneſs of ignorance, or ſin, himſelf? (B.)

In the face of Jeſus Chriſt.] This phraſe (en proſopo Jeſou Chriſtou) and the whole verſe, refers to the ſtory of Moſes, deſiring to ſee the glory of God, Exod. xxxiii. 20. For there God, in his own glorious nature, could not be ſeen, the luſture was ſo great: But with that ſight that was afforded him, tho' but of an angel ſuſtaining the perſon of God, Moſes's face was enlightned, and ſhone, and became glorious; to which the Apoſtle had before referr'd, ch. iii. 7. And ſo here, "the glory of God," that is, the revelation of his moſt divine counſels, for the ſaving of men under the Goſpel, is by God communicated to Chriſt; and by that means he, as he is the ſon of man, and executes this prophetic office upon earth, is much more ſhining and glorious than Moſes's face was: And then we, to whom the Goſpel is now preach'd, look upon this face of his, tho' the Iſraelites could not on Moſes; and are illuminated thereby, and receive the knowledge of theſe counſels of God, whenſoever we look on him. (H.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. But we have this treaſure in earthen veſſels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. We are troubled on every ſide, yet not diſtreſſed; we are perplexed, but not in deſpair; Perſecuted, but not forſaken; caſt down, but not deſtroyed; Always bearing about in the body, the dying of the Lord Jeſus, that the life alſo of Jeſus might be made manifeſt in our body. For we which live, are alway delivered unto death for Jeſus ſake, that the life alſo of Jeſus might be made manifeſt in our mortal fleſh. So then death worketh in us, but life in you. We having the ſame ſpirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I ſpoken: We alſo believe, and therefore ſpeak; Knowing that he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe up us alſo by Jeſus, and ſhall preſent us with you. For all things are for your ſakes, that the abundant grace might, through the thankſgiving of many, redound to the glory of God. For which cauſe we faint not, but though our outward man periſh, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; While we look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen: For the things which are ſeen, are temporal; but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal.

Treaſure in either veſſels.] The Apoſtle here taketh away a ſtumbling-block; to wit, that the Apoſtles were vile, weak, frail, and miſerable men. He declareth, that tho' he, and his fellow-Apoſtles, were, as it were, earthen veſſels of ſmall price, and ſubject to many knocks and falls, yet that there was moſt excellent treaſure of wiſdom and knowledge in them. Some conceive, that the Apoſtle alludeth to glaſs-lanthorns, in which lights are carried; and that he hereby intimateth, that they hid not their light; but that it ſhined through them, as a candle doth through a lanthorn. If we render oſtrakinon, veſſel of ſhell, then the Apoſtle manifeſtly alludeth to precious pearl which is found in ſhells: And the pearl is that rich pearl, mention'd Matth. xiii. 46. which the merchant ſold all he had to buy; as the ſhell, or mother of pearl, are the Apoſtles and Paſtors. (Aſs.) More of the critical ſenſe of this word oſtrakinon may be ſeen in Dr. Hammond. See alſo the notes on Matth. xiii. 44.

The excellency of the power.] Here is the reaſon aſſign'd, why the treaſure of the Goſpel is committed to earthen veſſels, men, rather than to heavenly veſſels, angels, viz. "That the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us:" Becauſe from the weakneſs of man, the inſtrument there redounds great honour to God, the Agent. (B.) See the notes on ch. iii. 5. and 1 Cor. ii. 5.

Troubled on every ſide.] The falſe Apoſtles, and ſome weak Chriſtians, having taken offence at the manifold and great ſufferings which St. Paul, with his fellow-Apoſtles, had met with in the courſe of their miniſtry; in theſe verſes St. Paul ſhews the church at Corinth, that there was no reaſon at all, why any ſhould be offended at his ſufferings, or any cauſe why the falſe Apoſtles ſhould object, that if he had preached the Goſpel ſincerely, Almighty God would never have ſuffered him to be perſecuted and afflicted ſo ſeverely; namely, becauſe all his afflictions were ſo graciouſly moderated, and himſelf ſo powerfully upheld by God, that he ſunk not under the weight and burden of them: "We are troubled (ſays he) on every ſide," but not overwhelmed with our troubles; we are often perplex'd, but not ſo as to deſpair of God's help and ſuccour; we are perſecuted by men, but not forſaken of God; caſt down indeed, but not killed by the fall: So that there is in our ſufferings a reſemblance and repreſentation of the death and ſufferings of Chriſt Jeſus. We bear in our bodies a memorative conformity to our dying Lord, that it may appear how mightily we are ſupported by the quickning power of the Spirit of Chriſt, under all our afflictions. As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Behold and admire in us the Almighty power of Chriſt exerted towards us, in upholding theſe earthen veſſels (our frail bodies) notwithſtanding the many thouſand knocks they have met with, in carrying about that heavenly treaſure, the Holy Goſpel, with which God has intruſted us. Obſerve next, He rejoices in the cauſe of his ſufferings. We are "deliver'd unto death for Jeſus ſake;" for our owning, preaching and practiſing the doctrines of Jeſus: Bleſſed be God we ſuffer not as evil doers, but for well doing; we ſuffer for the ſake of the beſt perſon, and in the beſt cauſe, that ever the world was acquainted with. He adds, We are delivered unto death, "that the life of Jeſus might be made manifeſt in our mortal fleſh;" that is, the infinitely wiſe God ſuffers us to be thus afflicted, that in and by the ſufferings which our mortal fleſh does ſuſtain and undergo, he might make it evidently manifeſt that Chriſt is riſen from the dead, and, as a living head, conveys the neceſſary influences of ſtrength, ſupport and comfort, as to all his members, ſo more particularly to us his miniſters; by which we are enabled, without fainting, to ſuffer the hardeſt things with patience, courage, and conſtancy. Obſerve laſtly, He declares to them the great advantages which they reaped by his afflictions; "death worketh in us, but life in you;" that is, the preaching of the Goſpel expoſeth us to death, but unto you it brings eternal life: Our death is your life, our ſufferings are your advantage, we having the ſame faithful ſpirit which was in the ſaints under the Old Teſtament, and particularly in holy David, Pſalm cxvi. 10. who ſays, "I believed, and therefore ſpake; I was ſore afflicted." Now, as he believed and truſted in God for deliverance out of his many and great troubles, ſo in like manner do we believe and truſt. From the whole, Note, 1. That a perplexed, afflicted, and diſtreſſed condition, was the lot and portion of the members, but eſpecially of the miniſters, of the church, in the firſt and pureſt ages of the church. Chriſt eſpouſed his church to himſelf upon the bed of his croſs; his head begirt with a pillow of thorns, his body drencht in a bath of his own blood: And if the head was crown'd with thorns, it is unſuitable that the feet ſhould tread on roſes. 2. Tho' all Chriſt's followers have drank of the ſame cup with himſelf, yet the dregs of the cup have uſually been put into the hand of the miniſters of the word; "We that live are always delivered unto death:" Moſt of the Apoſtles were, by the rage of tyrants, put to cruel deaths, and offered up a bloody ſacrifice: The calling of miniſters is honourable, but their outward condition is deplorable; their embaſſy is glorious, but their uſage is often grievous: God ſends them forth with renown, the world entertains them with reproach. 3. God doth not bring his people into a ſuffering condition and there leave them; when they ſuffer for him, they are not forſaken by him: The voice of deſpair is not heard in the dark night of their calamity; but God has either the caſtle of providence, or the ark of promiſe; the all-ſufficiency of his power, or the abundance of his grace: Theſe, every of theſe, and all theſe, are for his people's retirement in the greateſt ſtorms and tempeſts: "We are troubled, yet not diſtreſſed; perſecuted, but not forſaken. (B.) See Dr. Hickes's ſermon on this text: and the notes on chap. i. 5, 8. and Acts xiv. 22. Rom. viii. 15, 36. 1 Cor. ii. 3. iv. 9, &c. ix. 24. x. 13. and xv. 31.

Knowing, that he which raiſed.] Here the Apoſtle aſſigns a double reaſon, why he bore his ſufferings with ſuch courage and patience; 1. Drawn from the joyful iſſue of his, and his fellow-Apoſtles, ſufferings; "knowing, that he who raiſed up Jeſus (from the dead) ſhall raiſe us up by Jeſus (from ſufferings, or even from death) and ſhall preſent us, with you," to be eternally glorified together. And, 2. From the advantage which would redound to the church by ſuch ſufferings: "All things (which we ſuffer) are for your ſakes:" If we die, it is to confirm you by our ſufferings: If we be deliver'd, it is for God's glory, and your good, "that the abundant grace might, through the thankſgiving of many, redound to the glory of God." (B.) See the notes on chap. i. 5. Acts ii. 24. Rom. xv. 30. and 1 Cor. iii. 21.

For, our light affliction.] The Apoſtle here goes on with ſtill further reaſons, why his afflictions were not only tolerable, but joyous; viz. 1, Becauſe they are light; in compariſon with the glory expected: And, 2. Becauſe they are ſhort, "but for a moment," compared with eternity. Where the gradation is remarkable, 1. For affliction there is glory: 2. For "light affliction," a "weight of glory:" And, 3. For a "light affliction, which is but for a moment," there is "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." (B.) This paſſage is a conſummate piece of ſublimity; having both grandeur and inexpreſſible elevation in its thought; true emphaſis and magnificence in its language; and the nobleſt numbers and harmony in its contexture or compoſition. (Blackw.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 18, 37.

While we look.] Here the laſt reaſon is aſſigned, why the Apoſtle was kept from fainting in and under the preſſure of the moſt heavy afflictions: He look'd not at preſent but at future things; not at things ſeen, but unſeen; not at things temporal, but eternal. Where obſerve, 1. What it was that the Apoſtle, when on earth, made his main ſcope, his chief aim, grand deſign, and grand end: This is ſignified to us in the original word ſcopounton; which ſignifies to look, as the archer doth at the mark he ſhoots at: They were ſome things which he, his fellow-Apoſtles, and all ſerious Chriſtians with them, look'd at: This is ſpecified, 1. Negatively, "We look not at things ſeen;" at the things of this life, at ſenſible objects, be they bitter or ſweet, be they comforts or croſſes: Temporal things are temporary things; and we mind them not as the men of the world do, who make them their chief and principal aim and ſcope: No, we leave the world to the men of the world; "We look not at things which are ſeen." But, 2. This is ſpecified affirmatively, "We look at the things which are not ſeen;" the things of another life, things which are objects of faith, and not viſible to fleſhly eyes; we look at theſe, we make theſe our aim and ſcope: And the reaſon is ſubjoined, why they made theſe things the matter of their choice, the objects of their deſire and endeavour. This is intimated in the word (for), "for the things which are ſeen are temporal;" that is, all the viſible things of this life, whether comforts or croſſes, whether proſperous or adverſe, health or ſickneſs, liberty or reſtraint, poverty or riches, honour or diſgrace, life or death, they are all (proſcaira) for a while, only for a ſhort ſeaſon, as the word ſignifies; therefore we do not much eye them, we trouble not our heads much about them: They are things of an higher nature we look at, ſuch as neither eye hath ſeen, nor ear heard; and theſe are the durable things; "for the things which are not ſeen are eternal." Learn hence, 1. That temporal things, or "things that are ſeen," do take up the heads and hearts, the minds and thoughts of the men of the world, and are the ſum of their deſires, and the ſubſtance of their endeavours: "We look not at the things which are ſeen;" but there are thoſe that do: We make them not our aim and ſcope; but others look at them, wholly at them, can ſee nothing beyond them, and deſire nothing beſides them. 2. That things unſeen, the things of eternity, and the inviſible encouragements of another world, are the mark and ſcope which every real Chriſtian is aiming at, and contending for: "We look at the things which are not ſeen," and make them our aim and ſcope. 3. That the things not ſeen, or the things of another life and world, are eternal things; that is, ſuch things as admit of no changes and alterations, of no gradations or ſucceſſions, of no decay or conſumption, of no future hopes and expectation, of no mixture or moderation, of no recovery or revocation, of no period or concluſion. And, 4. That which puts the weight upon things not ſeen, which renders them the proper objects of a Chriſtian's aim and choice, which chiefly caſts the ſcale, and makes the things not ſeen to preponderate, is becauſe they are eternal things. This meditation, well digeſted, would work in us an holy indifferency towards all temporal things: It would moderate our eſteem of them; and ſweeten all thoſe troubles and trials, which we meet with in our paſſage through time to eternity. (B.) And hence we may likewiſe note, That it is not only lawful, but even laudable, after the example of the Apoſtles, in our actions and ſufferings, to have reſpect to the recompence of reward; that being, by the wiſdom of the Holy Ghoſt, propounded as our encouragement to do and ſuffer theſe things. (W.)

CHAP. V.

That a well-grounded hope of eternal glory bears up our ſpirits under all the preſſures of human life; and encourageth us to reconcile others alſo in Chriſt to God.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. FOR we know, that if our earthly houſe of this tabernacle were diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we grone earneſtly, deſiring to be clothed upon with our houſe which is from heaven: If ſo be that being clothed, we ſhall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do grone, being burdened: Not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be ſwallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the ſelf ſame thing, is God, who alſo hath given unto us the earneſt of the Spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilſt we are at home in the body, we are abſent from the Lord: (For we walk by faith, not by ſight.) We are confident, I ſay, and willing rather to be abſent from the body, and to be preſent with the Lord. Wherefore we labour, that whether preſent or abſent we may be accepted of him. For we muſt all appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good, or bad.

For, we know.] The particle for here ſhews, that theſe words have a reference to what goes before, and contain a farther account of the comforts which the Apoſtles had, to ſupport them under their manifold troubles and afflictions; viz. That if their bodies, wherein they dwelled, as in moveable tents or tabernacles, ſhould be deſtroyed by the preſſures lying upon them, and if their dangers ſhould end even in death itſelf, it would be a matter of no terror to them, ſince they had a much better abiding-place provided for them by God, a much happier condition than any this world is capable of, out of the reach of all ſublunary dangers, and ſure to be continued to them for ever. (Hall, H. and Mayo) Where note, How elegantly St. Paul, who was a tent-maker, compares our body to a tent (oikia tou skenous;) and that, 1. Becauſe as a tent, or tabernacle, is eaſily raiſed up, and as eaſily taken down and ſpoiled; ſo is our body, by ſickneſs and outward violence, Job iv. 19. 2. A tent is an habitation proper for pilgrims or ſoldiers, which continue not in the ſame place; and ſuch are all Chriſtians, while they live upon earth, ſtrangers and pilgrims, Pſa. xxxix. 12 and ſoldiers fighting under Chriſt's banner, 2 Tim. ii. 3. 3. As a tent is a moveable houſe or habitation; ſo are our bodies, which are now like tents pitched upon the earth, but ſhall be hereafter tranſported into heaven. 4. As tents are foul without, and ſoil'd with wind and weather, but have precious things within; ſo the body and out-ſide of a Chriſtian is but vile and contemptible, but his in-ſide is moſt beautiful and glorious, Pſalm xlv. 13. with ſpecial treaſures of ſpiritual graces, like the tents of Solomon, Cant. i. 5. moſt richly furniſh'd. And, 5. As a tent is deſtroyed, not by the conſuming of the parts, but by taking them aſunder; ſo the death of the body is nothing but the diſſolution of the parts whereof man is compoſed, and taking aſunder the ſoul from the body. (Aſſ.) See Mr. Mayo's ſermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 9. and chap. iv. 7, &c.

In this we groan.] En touto ſtenazomen; Being in this tabernacle we groan. (W.) Like a man labouring under a heavy load or burden. See the notes on Acts xxiv. 16. and Rom viii. 23.

Deſiring to be clothed upon.] That is, If it might be, that in this ſtate of our bodies, we might, without the pain of a diſſolution, "be clothed upon with" the life of glory and immortality. (Hall) See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 51, &c.

If ſo be, that.] If, at leaſt, we ſhould happen to be found, at the coming of Chriſt, clothed with theſe bodies of ours, and not deſpoiled of them, before, by death. (Hall, Aſſ. G. and H.) But it cannot be proved, either from this, or any other, place of St. Paul's Epiſtles, that the Apoſtle himſelf either thought, or taught others to think, that the coming of Chriſt was not then far off; as will appear more fully in the notes on 1 Theſſ. iv. 15. (W.)

Being burdened.] Viz. Both with the burden of ſin, and of manifold heavy croſſes laid upon us. (Aſſ. H. and Bates) See the notes on ver. 2. and chap. iv. 7, &c.

That mortality might.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 53.

The earneſt of the Spirit.] See the notes on chap. i. 21, 22.

Therefore, we are always confident.] That is, by the Holy Spirit, comfortably aſſured of a better ſtate: They who have "the earneſt of the Spirit" may be confident of their future glorious ſtate. Or, we are confident, that is, we are of good courage: fearing neither death nor danger in the way of our duty: "Knowing, that whilſt we are at home in the body, (that is, while ſojourning in the body as pilgrims and ſtrangers) we are abſent from the Lord;" that is, we are detained from the bleſſed ſight and enjoyment of God, and kept out of the poſſeſſion of that happineſs which makes heaven. Here the Apoſtle plainly intimates, that while we remain in the body we are detained from our happineſs; and that aſſoon as we leave the body, we ſhall be admitted to our happineſs. Learn, 1. That a Chriſtian is not in his own proper home whilſt he ſojourneth in the body, and lives in his earthly tabernacle here below: His birth and parentage is from heaven, his treaſure and inheritance in heaven, his kindred, and relations, and beſt friends are there, and there ſhall he longeſt abide. 2. That the true reaſon, why the ſaints count themſelves here not at home, is becauſe they are abſent from the Lord while preſent in the body. (B.) See the notes on John xii. 26.

For we walk by faith.] That is, our condition here in this world is ſuch, that we cannot ſee God face to face, but by faith only: whilſt we are in the body we do not ſee and enjoy, but believe and expect: Faith is the thing in expectation, ſight is the thing in fruition: Faith is a cloudy diſcovery of things at a diſtance, ſight is a clear view and apprehenſion of things that are preſent. Learn, 1. That faith is for earth, and ſight is for heaven. 2. That till we have ſight, it is a great advantage that we have faith. 3. That if we now have faith, we may be well aſſur'd, that e'er long we ſhall have ſight. (B) See Biſhop Beveridge's Sermon on this text; and the notes on John xx. 29. Rom. viii. 25. xiv. 23. and 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

Willing rather to be abſent.] See the notes on Rom. xv. 26.

Wherefore, we labour.] Philotimoumetha. The word ſignifies to labour ambitiouſly; as an ambitious courtier labours for his prince's favour. (B.) See the notes on Rom. xv. 20.

For we muſt all appear.] Theſe words are fully deſcriptive of a future judgment. In which obſerve, 1. The neceſſity of a future judgment; "We muſt," willing or unwilling. 2. The univerſality of this judgment; "We muſt all." 3 The perſon by whom, and before whom, we muſt be judged; Chriſt. 4. The manner of this judgment; "all muſt appear," and be made manifeſt, both perſons and actions. 5. The matter about which we ſhall be judged; "the things done in the body." 6. The end of all this inquiſition; to be puniſhed or rewarded according to our actions. Learn, 1. That there will certainly come a day, when every perſon, that ever lived in this world, ſhall certainly be judged by Jeſus Chriſt; "We muſt all appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt." 2. That every man's judgment and ſentence at the great day ſhall proceed and be pronounced according to what has been done in the fleſh, be it good or bad; "That every one may receive the things done in his body," &c. (B) Where note alſo further, 1. That the original word phanerothenai doth not barely ſignify to appear in perſon, as thoſe do who are cited into court; but it implies to be laid open, or made manifeſt, and to have our whole life ript up, and all our thoughts, words and works, diſcloſed and diſcovered before men and angels, Rom. ii. 6. Rev. ii. 23. and xx. 12. (Aſſ. H. and Fell) For the word being paſſive is improperly render'd actively. (Maſſey) 2. That the word komizetai ſignifies not only to receive, but to receive by way of reward; to carry away the crown or prize; as harpazein and lambanein ſignify to ſnatch, and take off the crown, ſtanding over the goal. (H.) And, 3. That ta dia tou ſomatos, the things by the body, (or, as we render it, "the things done in his body") muſt be relative and anſwerable to the following words (pros ha epraxen) "according to what he hath done;" ta, the things, (without mentioning what things, but only ha epraxen) what he hath done, noting this agreement and proportion betwixt that which he receives, and that which he hath done; which is the clear ſenſe of thoſe other places, wherein God is ſaid to "render to every man according to his works." Some MSS. and printed copies (particularly the Complutenſe edition) inſtead of ta dia tou ſomatis, read it ta idia tou ſomatos, the proper or peculiar things of his body: And this alſo will be very agreeable, viz. Every man ſhall receive that which is proper to him; (either as the body is the ſhop of action, wherein and whereby, as by the inſtrument, every thing is done; or, as to ſoma ſignifies himſelf, by a common Hebraiſm) according to, or by way of retribution for, what he hath done. (H.) And both theſe readings do ſufficiently confute the doctrine of the Roman purgatory, and their prayers for the dead; as teaching us, that men ſhall receive hereafter, not according to the prayers of others for them, when they are out of the body, but according to what they themſelves have "done in the body:" For 'tis ſure, that what the living do, of this kind, for them, after death, they themſelves do not "in the body;" and ſo no account will be had of it in the great day: And, why ſhould they ſuffer ſuch dreadful pains in purgatory before it, who muſt afterwards receive rewards or puniſhments, not according to what they have ſuffer'd there, but according to what they had done in the fleſh? (W.) See Mr. Collier's, and Mr. Oliver's Sermons on this text, and the notes on Acts x. 42. and Rom. ii. 6. and xiv. 10.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perſuade men; but we are made manifeſt unto God, and I truſt alſo are made manifeſt in your conſciences. For we commend not ourſelves again unto you, but give you occaſion to glory on our behalf, that ye may have ſomewhat to anſwer them which glory in appearance, and not in heart. For whether we be beſides ourſelves, it is to God; or whether we be ſober, it is for your cauſe. For the love of Chriſt conſtraineth us, becauſe we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: And that he died for all, that they which live, ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves, but unto him which died for them, and roſe again. Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the fleſh: Yea, though we have known Chriſt after the fleſh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. Therefore if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: Old things are paſt away, behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himſelf by Jeſus Chriſt, and hath given to us the miniſtry of reconciliation; To wit, that God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us; we pray you in Chriſt's ſtead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin; that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him.

We perſuade men.] What peithein, to perſuade, and peculiarly peithein anthropous, to "perſuade men," ſignifies in theſe books, will be ſet down at large in the note on Gal. i. 10. viz. to pacify, to propitiate, to gain upon men, and obtain their appobation either of the cauſe they plead, or of themſelves, whom they deſire to approve to them. And tho' it be a very obvious and commodious ſenſe of theſe words, "knowing the terrors of the Lord we perſuade men," that the conſideration of the judgment to come is a very proper, forcible ſuaſory to amendment of life, &c. yet the circumſtances of the context rather incline it to the other notion of peithein; knowing the judgment to come to be ſo exact that it deſcends to every action that is done, whether good or bad, we apoſtles, who have a weighty task of duty lying on us to win ſouls to Chriſt, are obliged to purſue this work, to gain upon men as much as we can, to approve ourſelves to them in all things, that they may not be ſcandalized by any thing done by us, but chearfully led on with a good opinion of our preaching and our perſons; this being very uſeful toward the Apoſtolical deſign of working good upon men. Agreeably to which it follows, in this ſame verſe, "we are made manifeſt to God, and I truſt alſo to be manifeſted in (or to) your conſciences;" where, "to be manifeſted to, or in, their conſciences," is all one with this notion of perſuading them, that is, approving himſelf to them. And to this matter, that which follows, ver. 12. pertains alſo: And therefore, Theophylact interprets (peithomen anthropous) "we perſuade men," thus, we do all things, that we may not ſcandalize men; and again, we cure or provide againſt, ſcandals, ſuch as may hinder men in their proficiency of the Goſpel. (H.) See Dr. Bryan's Sermon on this text, and the notes on ver. 10.

Commend not ourſelves again.] As if our Apoſtle had ſaid, We commend not our ſelves to you upon your own account, as if there were any need of it, with reſpect to us; but only to give you an occaſion to vindicate us, and to glory to others on our behalf, when need requires, that ye may have wherewith to anſwer the calumnies of the falſe Apoſtles, who gloried much in outward appearance of piety and zeal, but not in purity of heart, and upright intentions. Learn hence, That tho' the miniſters of Chriſt have no itching deſire to exalt themſelves in a way of ſelf-commendation, yet they are ſometimes conſtrained to it in a way of ſelf-vindication: And this is not only lawful, but a duty; becauſe ſcandals caſt upon a good man reach farther than himſelf, they reflect upon others as well as himſelf, yea, they reflect upon God himſelf, therefore to be wiped off and rolled away. (B.) See the notes on ch. iii. 1.

Beſides our ſelves.] The holy Apoſtle was ſometimes ſo zealouſly tranſported and carried forth, in his high actings for Jeſus Chriſt, that the falſe Apoſtles repreſented him as a frantick perſon, crazed, mad, and what not! Be it ſo, ſays the holy man, "it is unto God," in his cauſe, and to propagate his glory, and not my own: Or if I be ſober in my words and actions, it is for your benefit, not my own. Learn hence, That wicked and carnal men account and repreſent the holy ſervants of God as a ſort of madmen. Workings of grace are ſometimes ſo far above reaſon, that they ſeem to be without reaſon: There are ſeveral acts of holineſs, which the profane world eſteem as madneſs; as eminent ſelf-denial, great ſeriouſneſs in religion, their burning zeal, their holy ſingularity, their fervours of devotion, their patience and meekneſs under ſufferings and reproaches. All theſe acts of holineſs repreſent the ſaints as madmen, to carnal men (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. iv. 3, &c.

The love of Chriſt conſtraineth us.] Synechei See the import of this word, in the notes on Luke xii. 50.

If one died for all.] See the notes on Rom. v. 15. and vi. 4, &c.

Henceforth know we no man.] Theſe words probably were ſpoken by the Apoſtle, to rebuke the carnal boaſtings of ſome Jews, who gloried in their having ſeen Chriſt in the fleſh before he died; the Apoſtle directs them to a more ſpiritual knowledge of him, now ſince his reſurrection, as more ſuitable to his glorified ſtate: What tho' ye have eaten and drank in Chriſt's preſence when on earth, all that corporeal familiarity is ceaſed; 'tis his ſpiritual preſence which now ye are to depend upon, and value yourſelves by: For "henceforth know we no man after the fleſh;" we value no man for his outward advantages, for his wiſdom, riches, or learning: "Yea, tho' we have known Chriſt after the fleſh," ſeeing and converſing with him when here on earth, yet muſt we know him ſo, and enjoy him as ſuch, no more: Our carnal affections and relations to him muſt ever ceaſe, now he is exalted into a ſpiritual and glorious condition. Learn hence, 1. That a bare "knowing of Chriſt after the fleſh" ought to ceaſe among Chriſtians. There is a knowledge of Chriſt after the fleſh, ſince his aſcenſion into heaven; namely, by a naked profeſſion of his name, without a conformity to his laws, and by acts of ſenſitive affection: Some by reading the hiſtory of our Saviour's paſſion, others by ſeeing in the ſacramental elements a tragical repreſentation of his crucifixion, do find their human paſſions ſtir and move; but it reſts here, without drawing forth our love to his perſon, and quickning our obedience to his commands; all this is but knowing Chriſt after the fleſh, to no ſpiritual or ſaving purpoſes. 2. That a bare knowledge of Chriſt after the fleſh will do us no good, be of no comfort or advantage to us, as to our eternal ſalvation: It is not a fond affection to his perſon and memory, but obedience to his laws, that Chriſt values. It is obſervable, that an outward ceremonious reſpect to our Saviour's perſon was very little regarded by him, when he was here upon earth; a ſerious attention to his doctrine was infinitely preferr'd by him before all that. Our love to Chriſt is better ſhewn by religious ſervices, than by paſſionate affections. We find, St. John xx. when Mary fell at Chriſt's feet, after he was riſen, and embraced him, when ſhe held him by the feet and worſhipped him, when in an humble and affectionate devotion ſhe lies proſtrate before him, Chriſt forbids it, "Touch me not." He rejects all theſe external teſtimonies of her love, which proceeded only from human affection; but he directed her to a more acceptable ſervice, namely, to run and carry tidings of his reſurrection to his diſconſolate diſciples; "Go to my diſciples, and ſay," &c. From whence I infer, that it is much more acceptable to Chriſt to be about his ſervice, and doing good in our place and ſtation, than performing any offices of human love and reſpect unto his perſon. Seeing then, that this ceremonious reſpect pleaſed Chriſt, neither when on earth, nor now he is in heaven, "Henceforth know we no man after the fleſh; yea, tho' we have known Chriſt after the fleſh, yet henceforth know we him no more." (B.) See the notes on Matt. xii. 50. and John xv. 14. and xx. 17.

If any man be in Chriſt.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, If any one among you pretends to be a Chriſtian indeed, engrafted into Chriſt by baptiſm and regeneration, and is a member of his body, he is by regeneration made a new man; all the faculties of his ſoul are renewed; his principles, affections, and practices, are all new: "Old things are paſſed," or paſſing away daily; the old carnal inclinations of mind are wearing off; the old will is changed; the old life is reformed, and in a word, whatever was old and carnal, is now become new and ſpiritual: "Behold all things are become new;" new affections, new inclinations, new diſpoſitions, a new courſe, and a new converſation: Nothing is new phyſically; he is the ſame perſon, he has the ſame faculties: But all things are new qualitatively; he is renewed in the ſpirit of his mind. Learn hence, 1. That all ſuch as call themſelves the diſciples of Chriſt, and own themſelves to be his followers, are and ought to be new creatures. This implies a real and inward, a thorough and prevailing change both in heart and life; not a civil change, barely from profaneneſs to ſobriety; not a ſudden change, only under ſome great affliction or awakening providence; not a change from one ſect or party of profeſſors to another: But the change of the new creature conſiſts in a new mind, a new will, a new judgment, new affections, a new converſation, not in a new form and profeſſion; the change of the new creature introduces the life of God, and produces the neareſt likeneſs to God. 2. That this new creation, wrought in a man by the word and ſpirit of God, is an indubitable evidence of his intereſt in Chriſt and title to ſalvation; for where the new creature is, there all the ſaving graces of the Spirit are, as a pledge and earneſt of glory and happineſs. (B.) See Biſhop Beveridge's and Dr. Frank's Sermons on this text; and the notes on John iii. 3. and Rom. vi. 3, &c. viii. 1, 9. xi. 17. and xii. 2.

God, who hath reconciled us.] See the notes on chap. iii. 6. Rom. iii. 24, 25. and v. 10.

Ambaſſadors for Chriſt.] Obſerve here, 1. The miniſters office and employment declared: They "are ambaſſadors for Chriſt," ambaſſadors from God to man; and as ambaſſadors they have their miſſion, their commiſſion, from a great prince, about great concerns; they muſt be faithful to their inſtructions, they are inviolable by the law of nations, and their embaſſy muſt be received upon pain of diſpleaſure. Where let us remark the wonderful goodneſs and wiſdom of God, in appointing men of the ſame level with us, and not angels ſuperior to us, to diſpenſe the myſtery of reconciliation to us. As God deals more familiarly with us in this way, for we cannot bear the voice of God, or the ſight of angels; ſo there is more certainty in this way, becauſe miniſters muſt deceive their own ſouls if they deceive us: And herein God magnifies his own power, and lets us know, that the efficacy of the Goſpel is from him the author, and not from man the diſpenſer. 2. The miniſters duty diſcover'd; in God's name, and Chriſt's ſtead, to intreat, beſeech, and perſuade ſinners to become reconciled unto God. Here note, 1. That God and man were once friends. 2. That God and man are now enemies. 3. That man, and not God, firſt made the breach of friendſhip, and occaſioned that unhappy controverſy, which is now depending between God and man. 4. That tho' man was firſt in the breach, yet God is firſt in the office of reconciliation. 5. That therefore it is the higheſt duty and chiefeſt intereſt of man to accept of terms of peace and reconciliation with God 6. That, in order to all this, the great duty incumbent upon the miniſters of the Goſpel, is, with all earneſtneſs, to preſs upon people the doctrine of reconciliation, and to uſe all arguments with them, to perſuade them to become reconciled unto God. (B.) Presbeuomen (which is here tranſlated "we are ambaſſadors") is but one word in the original, and of a precious emphaſis: For this, being a word of action ſignifying the office, denoteth, that theſe officers muſt be men of action. (Leigh) See Mr. Standiſh's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 11. John xx. 21. and 1 Cor. iv. 1, &c.

For he hath made.] Obſerve here, 1. The ſpotleſs innocency of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as Mediator, declared: He "knew no ſin;" that is, practically and experimentally: He knew it not, ſo as to commit it in the leaſt degree; he was a pure, innocent, and ſinleſs perſon; but theoretically and ſpeculatively he did know ſin: He well underſtood its nature, its effects, and fruits; none knew the bitter fruits of ſin ſo well as our bleſſed Saviour. 2. God's ordination of Chriſt with reference unto ſin: "He hath made him to be ſin;" not made him a ſinner, but a ſin-offering, a ſacrifice for ſin: Made, that is, ordained a ſacrifice to expiate ſin, and to bear the puniſhment due to ſinners. 3. The end of this ordination with reſpect to us, "That we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him." Here note, The righteouſneſs of the Mediator is called "the righteouſneſs of God;" becauſe, 1. It was the righteouſneſs of that perſon who was God. 2. Becauſe the only wiſe God found out and appointed it. And, 3. Becauſe it is accepted by God, and the penitent believer, for the ſake of it, look'd upon as righteous and juſtified. Learn hence, 1. That ſin muſt have a ſacrifice. "He hath made him to be ſin;" that is, a ſin-offering, or a ſacrifice to expiate ſin: Under the law the ſacrifice was called ſin, becauſe the ſin of the perſon was laid upon the ſacrifice; there was a ſort of tranſlation of the ſin from the ſinner to the ſacrifice. 2. That Jeſus Chriſt was made a ſacrifice for our ſin. Our guilt was imputed to him, and our puniſhment was borne in him; which made Luther call Chriſt the greateſt ſinner in the world; not that he had any ſin in his nature, or in his life, but becauſe the Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all. 3. That Jeſus Chriſt's being made ſin for us, is the meritorious cauſe and means of our being "made the righteouſneſs of God in him." Surely God may be as juſt in pardoning us, who have no righteouſneſs of our own, as in condemning his own Son, who had no ſin of his own. Have we broken his royal and righteous law? yet Chriſt has kept it, and fulfilled all righteouſneſs. Have we ſinned againſt mercy? yet Chriſt has ſuffered without mercy: And all this, by the ordination and appointment of God the Father, who made his own and only Son "to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him." (B.) See the notes on John viii. 46. Rom. i. 17. v. 19. and viii. 3.

CHAP. VI.

An exhortation to Chriſtians, to lead a life ſuitable to Chriſtianity; and particularly to patience under afflictions and diſgrace.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. WE then, as workers together with him, beſeech you alſo, that ye receive not the grace of God in vain: (For he ſaith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of ſalvation have I ſuccoured thee: Behold, now is the accepted time, behold, now is the day of ſalvation) Giving no offence in any thing, that the miniſtry be not blamed: But in all things approving ourſelves as the miniſters of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, in diſtreſſes, in ſtripes, in impriſonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in faſtings, By pureneſs, by knowledge, by long-ſuffering, by kindneſs, by the Holy Ghoſt, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armour of righteouſneſs on the right hand and on the left, by honour and diſhonour, by evil report and good report; As deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chaſtned, and not killed; as ſorrowful, yet alway rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet poſſeſſing all things.

We then, as workers.] The Apoſtle having, in the cloſe of the foregoing chapter, magnified the mercy of God by Jeſus Chriſt, in appointing him as a ſacrifice for the ſins of mankind, in thus reconciling to himſelf thoſe offenders and rebels, who, but for this condeſcenſion, muſt have periſhed everlaſtingly; he here, in the beginning of this chapter, gives an account, after what manner he, and his fellow-labourers, behaved themſelves in the execution of this ſo important, and ſo honourable an office: In which he hath left every miniſter of Chriſt a model, on which to frame his own; admoniſhing us (who have likewiſe the honour of being "workers together with God") how preſſing and diligent we ought to be in doctrine and exhortation, how blameleſs and exemplary in our lives. (Stanh.) See the notes on 1 Cor. iii. 9.

Beſeech you alſo.] See the notes on chap. v. 20.

Receive not the grace of God in vain.] Here the Apoſtle gives the Corinthians in general a very earneſt exhortation, with a reaſon enforcing it, in the verſe foregoing. The exhortation is, "We beſeech you, that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." Where, by the grace of God, is meant the doctrine of the Goſpel; becauſe it is graciouſly and freely beſtowed upon a people, and becauſe the matter and meſſage which it brings is grace. The law diſcovers God's will, the Goſpel diſcovers his good-will: And by "receiving this grace in vain" is meant the receiving the Goſpel unfruitfully, unprofitably, and ineffectually; when we do not receive it with a due eſtimation, with fervency of affection, with a fiducial application; when it doth not purify the heart, reform the life, and ſave the ſoul: It is not the receiving of the Goſpel into our houſes, into our heads, into our mouths, but into our hearts, that will bring us to heaven. (B.) See the notes on John i. 17.

I have heard thee.] Theſe words are taken from the prophet Iſa. xlix. 8. They are a promiſe, which God the Father made to Chriſt as Mediator, That in the great work of ſaving his church, the Father would accept and ſuccour him as the head of the church; "I have heard thee in an accepted time, in the day of ſalvation". Here note, There is a two-fold day of ſalvation: The one was Chriſt's day, for the purchaſe of ſalvation; the other is our day, for the application. 1. Chriſt had a ſeaſon aſſigned him for the impetration or purchaſe of ſalvation: And he ſet in, and complied with that ſeaſon, and it became an acceptable time with reſpect to him. 2. We have alſo our ſeaſon allotted us by God, for the application of Chriſt and his benefits to our ſouls. "Behold, now is our accepted time, now is our day of ſalvation;" let us prize it highly, and improve it faithfully. 'Tis a day; and that is but a ſhort ſpace of time; 'tis a day, and therefore continually ſpending; and 'tis but a day, and therefore, when once gone, is irrecoverably gone: Our working day is a waſting day; and will be followed with a night, in which none can work, but only lament their folly in not working. (B) The argument drawn from hence is, That when the grace of God is offer'd, we muſt be very diligent to lay hold on, and improve it: And, becauſe God hath certain ſeaſons and periods, which we cannot promiſe ourſelves the return of at pleaſure; therefore it concerns us to make the beſt of the preſent opportunity, which we may know to be ſuch a ſeaſon, but cannot know whether it will be the laſt that God ever intends to afford us. (Stanh.) See Dr. Alleſtree's and Dr. Frank's Sermons on this text, and the notes on Luke iv. 19. and John ix. 4.

Giving no offence] In this and the following verſes, we have the pattern and diſpoſition of a truly Apoſtolical preacher, viz. 1. That his life muſt not contradict his doctrine. 2. That he muſt preach with the authority and boldneſs of St. Paul. 3. That he muſt have much patience, ver. 4. 4. Great vigilance againſt all the rocks which deſtroy chaſtity. 5. His mind filled with the knowledge of ſalvation. 6. Not to be diſcouraged by difficulties. 7. Kindneſs, and gentleneſs, in order to gain ſouls. 8. The Spirit of God, to animate, guide, and protect him. 9. Charity, or love unfeigned, ver. 6. 10. An ardent love of truth, to preach it ſincerely, and diſpenſe it prudently. 11. A confidence of ſucceſs only from the power of God. 12. To make every thing, whether proſperous or adverſe, ſubſervient to the advancement of God's kingdom, ver. 7. 13. To render to God all the honour, taking the diſhonour to himſelf. 14. To uſe the eſteem of men to give credit and reputation to the word of God, and their contempt and calumny to expiate all human and carnal mixtures therewith, ver. 8. 15. To be the ſame in life and death. 16. In the midſt of the greateſt dangers, to hope in him, who afflicts his ſervants to chaſten and not to deſtroy them, ver. 9. 17. To rejoice in afflictions. 18. To look upon poverty, as a ſource of ſpiritual riches for his flock. 19. To depend upon providence, ver. 10. 20. To ſpeak in charity, and with the heart enlarged, ver. 11. And, 21. To purchaſe friendſhip by friendſhip, ver. 12. (Q.) See Mr. Milner's Sermon on this text; and the notes on Luke xvii. 1. Rom. xiv. 13, 21. and 1 Cor. iv. 2. and x. 32.

On the right hand, and on the left.] That is, both in proſperity and adverſity. Where note, That the miniſters of God do approve themſelves, and trial is made of them, as well by the things on the right hand as on the left: A miniſter of Chriſt is tried as well by honour as diſgrace, as well by praiſe as by diſparagement: The good report which we meet with in the world is certainly as great, yea, a more dangerous temptation, than the ill reports we paſs under. 'Tis a great trial to a miniſter to be diſpraiſed and deſpiſed, to have dirt thrown undeſervedly in his face: But verily, it is as great a trial to be praiſed, commended, and applauded, to be lifted up in the thoughts and upon the tongues of men. Solomon has an excellent proverb to this purpoſe, Prov. xxvii. 21. "As the fining-pot for ſilver, and the furnace for gold, ſo is a man to his praiſe;" that is, a man is tried by his praiſe, as really as ſilver is tried in the fining-pot, or gold in the furnace: Whenever a miniſter is praiſed, he is tried; his humility is tried, his ſelf-denial is tried; when he is praiſed by men, he is tried whether he can give the entire praiſe to God: When people cry up ſuch and ſuch a preacher, they put him into the fining-pot; and he that is but droſs, conſumes. Let miniſters remember, there are trials on the right hand, as well as on the left; that paſſing thro' honour, and going thro' good reports, are great trials, as well as paſſing thro' diſhonour and evil reports. God prepare us for both. (B.) As God giveth us bleſſings with both hands, ſo Chriſt gives us armour for both hands, to defend us from Satan, the fleſh, and the world. (Aſſ.) See Biſhop Weſtfield's ſermon on this text.

As deceivers, and yet true.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Verily our life is made up of ſeeming, but not real, contradictions. The wiſe men of the world look upon us "as deceivers," but we are the true diſpenſers of the word of life unto them: We are look'd upon by the world "as unknown," obſcure perſons; but we are "well known" to God and good men, by our doctrine and miracles: We are "as dying perſons daily, by our paſſing thro' ſo many perils, and by being expoſed to continual perſecutions, and yet, ye ſee, we are ſtill alive: And we are ſometimes chaſtned by God, as well as perſecuted by men, but we are "not killed," nor given over unto death: Outwardly we are ſorrowful, but inwardly "always rejoycing" in God, and in the teſtimony of a good conſcience: In worldly goods and outward circumſtances we are very "poor, yet making many (ſpiritually) rich" in grace and good works: We "have nothing" we can call our own, yet in Chriſt all things are ours. Hence obſerve, 1. What has been the lot and portion of the faithful ambaſſadors and miniſters of Chriſt, from the firſt beginning of Chriſtianity; the dirt of a thouſand ſcandals hath been thrown upon their faces, which in the day of Chriſt's appearance will be as crowns upon their heads. 2. That all outward evils are to be received, by the miniſters and members of Chriſt, in the ſame manner, and with the ſame mind, that good things are receiv'd: "Honour and diſhonour, good report and evil report," muſt be entertained with the ſame evenneſs and conſtancy of mind, becauſe God is the ſame in all variety of eſtates: Tho' men change their opinions of us, yet God changes not his judgment concerning us: He loves his miniſters and members when poor, as well as when rich; when the world ſmites us, as well as when it ſmiles upon us: Therefore, if God be the ſame to us at all times, it is our wiſdom and duty to keep the temper of our minds, and to be always the ſame to him, and to our ſelves. Whatever we meet with from the world, we have no reaſon to be diſſatisfied, if our integrity be ſafe. 3. How rich the Apoſtle was without earthly riches, and how abounding in wealth, when he had nothing of worldly treaſure to rejoice in; "Having nothing, he yet poſſeſſed all things." But how? And in what ſenſe? Anſwer, He and they poſſeſſed all things, 1. In Chriſt, by whom they had a title to all things. 2. They had all things in the covenant, favour and grace of God: He hath all things, who hath him that hath all things. 3. They had all things virtually in that contentment of mind which they did enjoy: They poſſeſſed all things in poſſeſſing themſelves, and wanted nothing but what they could deny themſelves. The contented man is only rich; he is not rich, that has much, but he that has enough: That man is poor that covets more. 4. They poſſeſs'd all things eventually: They had the good of all things, when they had not the actual poſſeſſion of all things; their poverty was a bleſſing, and their very wants, in the event, worked for good. 5. They poſſeſs'd all things, in future expectation: They look'd and long'd for heaven in everlaſting happineſs, which would ſwallow up their deſires with fruition; for "he that overcometh, ſhall inherit all things," Rev. xxi. 7. Thus is this apoſtolical paradox unriddled, "As having nothing, and yet poſſeſſing all things." True faith apprehends and enjoys all things in God, which it wanteth in the creature. (B.) All St. Paul's diſcourſe here is wonderful rapid and fervent: It runs into emphatic repetitions, ſurpriſing oppoſitions, and a great variety of the moſt lively and moſt moving figures. Both in this place, and its parallel, ch. xi. St. Paul gives ſuch an account of his labours and ſufferings for the Goſpel, that it raiſes both terror and compaſſion in every Chriſtian mind. What noble amplifications does he uſe? What variety of forcible expreſſions, and marvellous circumſtances, to expreſs the power of Jeſus, working effectually by his meanneſs, and triumphing over the pride, malice, and confederacies of earth and hell, by the humble and deſpiſed doctrine of his croſs. Theſe noble oppoſitions, and beautiful apparent contradictions, repreſent to us the true genius and glorious advantages of the Goſpel, and how far its ſentiments are ſuperior to the maxims of worldly craft and policy. This lofty eloquence in the moſt forcible manner ſhews us the little value of things which men of worldly views alone ſo eagerly court and inceſſantly purſue, if we regard the affirmation and experience of divinely inſpired perſons: And how full of comfort and joyful hopes a Chriſtian is, in his moſt afflicted condition for the ſake of his Saviour; and how bleſſedly aſſured, that the promiſes of the Goſpel are infallibly ſure, as they are infinitely valuable: When wretches, of ungodly paſſions, who have only hope in this life, look upon the troubles that are ſuffer'd for a good conſcience and the love of Jeſus as the moſt frightful evils, and unaccountable folly; and the crown of future glory, and ineſtimable rewards of immortality, as the reveries of a heated fancy, and the vain wiſhes and dreams of ſuperſtition! (Blackw.) See the notes on ch. iv. 2. John vii. 12. Acts v. 41. and 1 Cor. iii. 23.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 17, 18. O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. Ye are not ſtrained in us, but ye are ſtrained in your own bowels. Now for a recompence in the ſame, (I ſpeak as unto my children) be ye alſo enlarged. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: For what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs? And what communion hath light with darkneſs? And what concord hath Chriſt with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth, with an Infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath ſaid, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ſeparate, ſaith the Lord; and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, And I will be a Father unto you, and ye ſhall be my ſons and daughters, ſaith the Lord Almighty.

O ye Corinthians.] Here the Apoſtle, as being carried into an ecſtaſy by his foregoing ſublime diſcourſe, applies to the Corinthians in a fine apoſtrophe, vehement, and full of charity and the tendereſt affection. (Blackw.) The words are very pathetick, and expreſſive of St. Paul's moſt affectionate and ardent love towards them, whom he had been an happy inſtrument to convert unto Chriſtianity. He tells them, "his mouth was opened to them," not to receive, but to beſtow; his mouth was open, to fill them with the treaſures of the Goſpel-knowledge, not to be fill'd by them; and his heart, as well as his mouth, was open to them, and at their ſervice: If therefore they were ſtraitned in affection towards him, who was thus enlarged in heart and mouth, by tongue and pen towards them, it muſt be through miſtakes and miſapprehenſions on their part; therefore, in a way of recompence, he challenges it as juſt and fit, that the ſame reciprocal love be beſtowed upon him their ſpiritual father, as he had manifeſted towards them his beloved children. Learn hence, That there is no ſtronger love, nor more endeared affection, between any relations upon earth, than between ſuch miniſters of Chriſt and their beloved people, whom they have been happily inſtrumental to convert to God. (B.) Where note, 1. The phraſe of opening of the mouth and heart betokeneth a moſt earneſt affection in him who ſpeaketh, as is common with thoſe who are in ſome joy; for joy dilateth the heart, as on the contrary ſorrow contracteth it. (Aſſ.) 2. By bowels he means, according to the Hebrew phraſe, thoſe tender affections which reſt in the heart: As, in Philem. 12. he recommends Oneſimus as "his own bowels;" that is, as one whom he moſt tenderly affected. (Idem) And, 3. By recompence he means not any thing by way of reward from the Corinthians, tho' the Greek word antimiſthia (derived from miſthos) ſeems to import ſo much; but only that, as good children, they ſhould anſwer their father in tender love and affection: And St. Bernard juſtly taxeth thoſe who are bankrupts in love, with ingratitude and hardneſs of heart; where he ſays, Duri eſt animi amorem ſi nolis impendere, nolle rependere. (Idem) See the notes on 1 Cor. ii. 3. and iv. 14.

Be ye not unequally yoked] The Apoſtle cloſeth this chapter with an exhortation to avoid all intimacy with idolaters, either in civil affairs, in marriages, or in religious worſhip, leſt they be drawn into communion with their idolatry; there being no more agreement between a believer and an idolater, than betwixt light and darkneſs, betwixt Chriſt and Satan. (B) The word heterozygein the vulgar renders jugum ducere; which ſeems to have given occaſion to Budæus, and H. Stephanus out of him, to affirm, that heterozygein here is uſed for homozygein, to be in the yoak with another. But this is a miſtake, without any grounds, ſave only the equivocalneſs of the word zygos, which ſignifies a yoak to draw in, as well as a ballance to weigh in. The word heterozygein is doubtleſs to be rendred here, as in Greek authors it ſignifies; among whom a pair of ſcales or ballance, whoſe beam inclines or propends toward one part, is ſtathmos (in oppoſition to heterozygos, equally inclined both ways, or whoſe beam ſtands even) trutina alteri-jugis, heterorrhopes, non iſorrhopes, a ſcale that weighs down one way, ſtands not in the equilibration. So, in Phocylides, Let the ballance ſtand even, not inclined more to one ſide. And ſo the ſenſe of the place will Be, be not more propenſe and inclined toward that hereſy to which your preſent leaders would ſeduce you, then ye are to us the Apoſtles of Chriſt, who love you ſo paſſionately; which is the argument almoſt of the whole chapter. Thus, in Clement's Epiſtle to the ſame Corinthians, we find a phraſe directly parallel to this (hyparchontes aph' hemon,) inclining the other way from us; that is, diſaffected to us. (H) See the notes on ver. 17. and 1 Cor. v. 9. and vii. 39.

What fellowſhip.] See the notes on Rom. viii. 9. 1 Cor. iii. 16. vi. 19. and x. 21.

I will dwell in them] This dwelling implies propriety, familiarity, authority, reſidency, and fixedneſs of abode. (B.) And God dwelleth in, or among us, either becauſe Chriſt is become "God with us," or becauſe the Spirit dwelleth in our hearts by faith. (Aſſ.)

Wherefore, come out.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, go not then to the idols temples, join not with idolaters in communion, to avoid perſecution; but "come out from among them, as an holy people, ſeparated to the Lord, and defile not your ſelves with any unclean thing; and while ye are pure, and cleave to God, he will own you for his "ſons and daughters." Obſerve here, 1. A preſſing exhortation, to make a full ſeparation from unclean perſons and things; particularly from all idolaters, and idolatrous worſhip; "Come out from among them." The words are taken out of Iſa. lii. 11. where the Prophet exhorts the remnant of Iſrael to come fully out of unclean Babylon. Learn hence, That God expects and requires, his Saints ſhould make a ſeparation from all uncleanneſs. but eſpecially from the uncleanneſs of idolatry: God expects a ſeparation from us, from all unclean courſes, from all unclean company, from the preſence and appearance of all uncleanneſs, from communion with idolatrous churches, and from communicating with what is ſinful in the trueſt churches of Chriſt upon earth. 2. A quickning encouragement, to back this exhortation; "I will receive you, and be a father to you." Here is a twofold promiſe, 1. Of reception; "I will receive you." 2. Of adoption; "I will be a father to you:" God will receive them both into his houſe and heart. Learn hence, That Almighty God will, as a father, undoubtedly receive all thoſe into his family and favour, who renounce communion with all impurity: As he is Almighty, he is abundantly able; and as he is a father, he is graciouſly willing, to recompence all the ſervices and ſufferings of his children, for the honour and intereſt of his name and truth. It is ſufficiently known how this text hath been miſapplied, by ſeparists, to very bad purpoſes; 1. To juſtify their ſchiſmatical ſeparation from the beſt and pureſt of the reformed churches, under pretence of finding greater purity among themſelves: Whereas nothing will juſtify a ſeparation from a church, but that which makes a ſeparation between God and that church. If the church's way of worſhip (in their opinion) be faulty, they preſently pronounce it falſe, and they muſt not join in falſe worſhip: Whereas no man offers any worſhip to Almighty God, that is not falſe worſhip, if all that is faulty, be falſe worſhip; if Chriſt doth not diſown his church for that faultineſs, we ought not to deſert her for it. 2. Others would ſeek occaſion, from theſe words, to juſtify their practice, in refuſing to come to the Lord's Table, where ſome vicious perſons are apprehended to be, leſt they ſhould pollute the ordinances, and theſe touch the unclean thing: Whereas the preſence of a bad man at the Sacrament pollutes the ordinance only to himſelf; for "unto the pure, all things are pure;" and who will neglect a certain duty, to eſcape an uncertain danger? True, we muſt not own ſuch worſhip as we know God rejecteth: But as God pardoneth the faulty imperfections of other men's worſhip, and of our own alſo, thus muſt we bear with our own and one another's failings, that are tolerable, ſo far as we cannot cure them. Wo unto us, had Almighty God no more charity for us than we have for one another! A defective worſhip is not a falſe worſhip: Sinful defects in the adminiſtration of ordinances, do not hinder the ſaving effects of ordinances; a wiſe and good man is certainly as great an enemy to ſeparation, as he is to ſuperſtition: Doctrine, crying up purity, to the ruin of unity, reject; for the Goſpel calls for unity, as well as for purity. (B.) See the notes on Acts x. 15. Rom. viii. 17. and 1 Cor. x. 20.

CHAP. VII.

He proceedeth in his exhortation to purity of life; and to bear him the like affection as he beareth toward them. And declareth the comfort he received in his afflictions, by the account which he had of them from Titus.

Ver. 1, 2. HAVING therefore theſe promiſes (dearly beloved) let us cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God. Receive us: We have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man.

Having therefore.] Theſe words are argumentative, and infer the indiſpenſible duty of Chriſtians, to preſerve themſelves untainted from the idolatrous impure world, by the conſideration of the promiſes ſpecified in the precedent chapter; "I will dwell in you, and walk in you, and I will be your God, and ye ſhall be my people," a promiſe which contains the higheſt honour, and moſt perfect felicity, of the reaſonable nature. Now, from hence he infers, that the Chriſtians, "having ſuch promiſes," ſuch helps and aſſiſtances, ſhould cleanſe themſelves from all ſinful pollution, and endeavour after perfection in purity and holineſs. Obſerve here, 1. The title, wherewith the Apoſtle addreſſes himſelf unto them; "dearly beloved." This expreſſes both the truth, and alſo the ſtrength, of his affections towards them: By this appellation he recommends his counſel to their acceptance; for as light opens the mind by clear conviction, ſo love opens the heart by perſwaſive inſinuation. 2. The matter of the addreſs; and that is, to cleanſe our ſelves from all pollution both of ſpirit and fleſh, and the changing of us into the unſpotted image of God's holineſs. The pollution of human nature is intimate and radical, diffuſed through all the faculties of the ſoul, and the members of the body: We are therefore to pray for, and endeavour after, renewing grace, and to be always advancing in holineſs on earth, till we arrive at perfection in heaven. 3. The motive exciting hereunto; namely, the exceeding great and precious promiſes aſſured to us from the mouth of God; "having theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves." This grace has an eminent cauſality and influence in a Chriſtian's ſanctification; it is a powerful reſtraint from ſin both in thought and act, by conſidering that God's pure and flaming eye ſees ſin where ever it is, in order to judgment: An holy fear of God, and an humble fear of our ſelves, will both reſtrain us from ſin, and engage us to obedience. From the whole, Learn, That the promiſes of the Goſpel lay the moſt powerful obligations upon Chriſtians to endeavour after, and ſtrive for the attainment of, pure and perfect holineſs. As the pollution is univerſal, ſo muſt the cleanſing be; and tho' thankful we muſt be for the leaſt meaſure of ſanctifying grace receiv'd, yet not ſatisfied with the greateſt, ſhort of our perfection; "perfecting holineſs in the fear of God." (B.) See Dr. Hammond's ſermon on this text; and the notes on chap. vi. 16, &c.

Filthineſs of the fleſh and ſpirit.] By "filthineſs of the fleſh," he meaneth fornication, gluttony, and drunkenneſs, &c. By "filthineſs of the ſpirit," idolatry, ſuperſtition, ſects, ſchiſms, and factions; which vices he had taxed before: Or elſe, by "filthineſs of the fleſh," the outward acts of ſin committed in and by the body: Gal. v. 19. &c. by "filthineſs of the ſpirit," the inward acts of ſin committed in the ſoul; as impure thoughts, wicked deſires, unſanctified conceptious opinions of God, crafty and malicious projects, deſigns and purpoſes, &c. (Aſſ.)

Perfecting holineſs.] That is, Finiſhing the work of ſanctification, begun in our regeneration. For tho' regeneration, as alſo generation, be done at once; yet ſanctification is wrought in us by degrees, and every good Chriſtian muſt profit in Chriſt's ſchool, and grow continually, as in knowledge, ſo in grace, till we arrive at ſuch perfection as we are capable of in this life, 2 Pet. iii. 18. which (as St. Auguſtine termeth it) is but an imperfect perfection at the moſt; a perfection of parts, but not of degrees. (Idem) See the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 20.

Receive us.] Obſerve here, 1. The duty, which St. Paul exhorts the Corinthians to; namely, to receive him, their Apoſtle, into their kind affections, into the boſom of their love; "receive us;" that is, into your beſt affections. The miniſters of Chriſt are very deſirous of a large ſhare and intereſt in their people's love; well knowing that if they be prejudiced againſt their perſons, they will reap no benefit by their doctrine. 2. The ſolemn proteſtation which the holy Apoſtle makes of his integrity and uprightneſs towards the Corinthians; "We have wronged no man, corrupted no man, defrauded no man;" that is, we have wronged none in their reputation by ſlander, we have corrupted no man's judgment by error and falſe doctrine, we have defrauded no men of any part of their eſtates, either by force or fraud. Learn hence, That the holy ſervants of God, eſpecially the faithful miniſters of Chriſt, may juſtify themſelves, and make ſolemn proteſtations of their own integrity and uprightneſs; eſpecially when they fall under jealouſy and ſuſpicion by the enemies of religion. As it was the continual practice of the falſe Apoſtles to diſcredit St. Paul's miniſtry, and reflect upon his perſon; ſo it was his conſtant care to counterwork them, by a profeſſed vindication of himſelf, and all his actions. (B.) See Dr. Miles Barne's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Acts xx. 33.

Ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. I ſpeak not this to condemn you: For I have ſaid before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you. Great is my boldneſs of ſpeech toward you, great is my glorying of you: I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation. For when we were come into Macedonia, our fleſh had no reſt, but we were troubled on every ſide; without were fightings, within were fears. Nevertheleſs, God that comforteth thoſe that are caſt down, comforted us by the coming of Titus: And not by his coming only, but by the conſolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earneſt deſire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; ſo that I rejoiced the more.

Ye are in our hearts.] See the notes on chap. vi. 11. and John x. 11.

My boldneſs of ſpeech.] See the notes on chap. iii. 12. vi. 11. and John vii. 4.

I am filled with comfort.] The report I have had of your repentance and reformation, upon the receiving my former epiſtle, has filled me with ſuch a weight of joy, as over-ballances all the afflictions and tribulations which I meet with for the Goſpel. (B.) Hyperperiſſeuomai te chara; "I am exceeding joyful:" Or I do over-abound exceedingly in joy; that is, I abound in joy, more than I can poſſibly expreſs. (Leigh) See the notes on Acts v. 41.

Without were fightings.] That is, perſecution, and oppoſition both from Jews, and Gentiles, and falſe teachers. (Hall, and B.)

Within were fears.] Viz. Leſt the falſe Apoſtles ſhould have perverted any of his young converts from the ſimplicity which is in Chriſt: Or, leſt the Corinthians, being tender and weak in the faith, the violence of perſecution and the ſtrength of temptation ſhould cauſe them to apoſtatize from their religion, and backſlide from their holy profeſſion. (Idem) See the notes on Acts xvi. 16, &c. xvii. 5, &c. and xx. 3.

Comforteth thoſe that are caſt down.] Tapeinous. The word here rather ſignifieth lowlineſs in condition than affection: And the meaning of the Apoſtle is, that God comforteth us, when we are very far ſpent with grief, and raiſeth us when we are upon our knees; and relieveth us when we are deſtitute of all other help of comfort. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 4.

Your earneſt deſire.] That is, "your earneſt deſire" to be approved of us, "your mourning" for the juſt cauſe of ſcandal, and your fervent affection towards me. (Hall) Or your affection towards me, grief to offend me, and zeal to vindicate me againſt all calumnies. (Fell)

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. For though I made you ſorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent: For I perceive that the ſame epiſtle made you ſorry, though it were but for a ſeaſon. Now I rejoice, not that ye were made ſorry, but that ye ſorrowed to repentance: For ye were made ſorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. For godly ſorrow worketh repentance to ſalvation not to be repented of: But the ſorrow of the world worketh death. For behold, this ſelf-ſame thing, that ye ſorrowed after a godly ſort, what carefulneſs it wrought in you; yea, what clearing of your ſelves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement deſire; yea, what zeal; yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved your ſelves to be clear in this matter. Wherefore though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cauſe that had done the wrong, nor for his cauſe that ſuffered wrong, but that our care for you in the ſight of God might appear unto you. Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: Yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, becauſe his ſpirit was refreſhed by you all. For if I have boaſted any thing to him of you, I am not aſhamed; but as we ſpake all things to you in truth, even ſo our boaſting which I made before Titus found a truth. And his inward affection is more abundant toward you, whilſt he remembreth the obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling ye received him. I rejoice therefore that I have confidence in you in all things.

Tho' I did repent.] I was ſorry to think, how much ye would be troubled therewith (Hall) Or that I was forced to make you ſo. It ſeems incongruous, that the Apoſtle ſhould repent of what he wrote by the direction of the Holy Ghoſt, and to this very end, that he might ſtir up a godly ſorrow in them. And therefore it ſeems better to render the words (ou metamelomai, ei kai metamelomen) with Grotius and others, I am not ſorry now, tho' I was ſorry when I wrote that epiſtle; doing it "with many tears," chap. ii. 4. Or thus, "I do not repent, though I" ſhould have repented; viz. if it had not found this good effect upon you. (W.)

For a ſeaſon.] The word hora ſignifies a ſeaſon, and any part of time indefinitely; but yet both in Greek and Latin, is oft uſed for a ſmall, or ſhort, ſpace: So Philem. 15. (pros horan) for a ſhort ſpace; and 1 Theſſ. ii. 17. (pros kairon horas) for the ſpace of an hour; that is, for a ſhort ſpace. And ſo here (ei kai pros horan) though but for an hour; that is, for a ſhort ſpace; which being joyned with (elupeſen humas) hath grieved you, in the notion of that phraſe for inflicting the cenſures, 1 Cor. v. 2. denotes the infliction of ſome penance, a ſentence of abſtention for a while, for a ſhort ſpace, (for the bringing forth fruits of repentance) after which it is to be remitted again. This the Nicene fathers expreſs by this ſtyle, For whoſe cenſure the time is determined, and ſeaſon ſet; Zonaras by, The times ſet for the penance of the lapſed, and this is anſwerable to the Nidui among the Jews; a remotion for thirty days. Another ſort of cenſures there was, without determining of the time; in Alcimus, a laſting, irrevocable excommunication, Concil. Turon. 2. c. 20. and Concil. Pariſ. 3. can. 5. but this not abſolutely ſo, but, For ever if they reform not. Hereby it appears, that 'twas not only the inceſtuous perſon, 1 Cor. v. 1. which is here referred to, for he was "delivered up to Satan for the deſtruction of the fleſh," and that is parallel to the durable excommunication, or that which was to continue until reformation; but others, it ſeems, who had been found fault with in that epiſtle, (as he that went to law, chap. vi. and the like) fell under the cenſures, tho' only (pros horan) for a definite time, that they might bring forth fruits of repentance; and accordingly they did, ver. 11. (H.)

Not that ye were made ſorry.] As a good phyſician rejoiceth not in that he hath miniſter'd to his patient a bitter potion, but that he has thereby procured him much eaſe; neither is a chirurgion glad that, by launcing the ſore, he hath put the parts ill-affected to pain, but that, by this pain, he hath healed them: So the Apoſtle doth not rejoice ſimply that he hath made the Corinthians ſorrowful, but that, by this their ſorrow, they gain'd health of their ſouls, and many ſpiritual graces, mention'd in ver. 11. (Aff.)

Godly ſorrow worketh repentance.] Note here, that ſorrow for ſin will be of no advantage, if it be not "godly ſorrow," or a ſorrow (kata Theon) according to God, as it runs in the original. Now, it may be called a ſorrow according to God, when it is a ſorrow wrought in us by the ſpirit of God, in obedience to the command of God, and with an eye to the glory of God; when it has ſin, and not wrath, for its object; ſin, as being a wrong to God, a contempt of his ſovereignty, and a contrariety to his holineſs. Again, it is then a godly ſorrow, when it puts us upon a high prizing of Jeſus Chriſt, who became a ſacrifice for ſin, and prompts us to a cordial and unfeigned forſaking of all ſin; to ſuch a turning from it, as is reſolv'd againſt all returning to it. (B.)

The ſorrow of the world worketh death.] That is, A deſpairing or paſſionate ſorrow for the want or loſs of worldly things, pleaſures, riches, honours, &c. Which is ſinful, diſpleaſing to God, advancing only our deſtruction, and the death of body and ſoul. (Fell)

What carefulneſs it wrought in you.] Here the Apoſtle proves, that the Corinthians ſorrow for the cenſured perſon's ſins was a "godly ſorrow," becauſe it produced ſuch excellent effects and fruits as godly ſorrow is wont to do; ſeven of which he here reckons up, viz. 1. Carefulneſs to amend what was amiſs for time to come; by ſhunning and avoiding all occaſions and temptations that lead to ſin: He that truly repenteth, is careful not to ſin again. 2. Clearing of themſelves, that they did not approve the fact of the inceſtuous perſon, but did inflict the church's cenſures upon him, and ſo put away evil from among them. 3. Indignation againſt ſin; This is found where godly ſorrow is found; the heart riſes, ſwells and boils againſt ſin; we are then "angry and ſin not," when we are angry at ſin, and with ourſelves for ſinning. 4. Fear: A true penitent fears to offend; and that he may not offend, doth nouriſh in himſelf an holy fear of God, and an humble fear of himſelf: There is found with him a fear of reverence, from an awful apprehenſion of the holineſs and majeſty of God; and alſo a fear of diligence and vigilance, watching and warring againſt ſin, that it may not ſet upon us and ſurpriſe us for the time to come. 5. Vehement deſire after a thorough reformation, and to rectify whatever is amiſs; a deſire to be rid of all ſin, and in the mean time a conflicting with it, and groaning under it. 6. Zeal: This is an affection in a true penitent, compounded of love and anger. Be zealous and repent, is Chriſt's own call, Rev. iii. 19. This will make a penitent perſiſt in the exerciſe and expreſſion of his godly ſorrow for ſin, and perſevere in his courſe of mortification, in defiance of all oppoſition made againſt him. And 7. Revenge: This is the reſult of zeal, when our zeal boils into revenge, and puts us upon ſelf caſtigations; not ſo much upon our bodies with whips and ſcourges, as by the abatement of luſt which ſtirreth us, buffeting the fleſh, and bringing it into ſubjection. And this revenge leads the penitent alſo to make ſatisfaction for wrongs done, either by open confeſſion, or ſecret reſtitution; "In all things ye have approved yourſelves to be clear in the matter." As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, By theſe foremention'd acts of yours, the body of you hath ſhewn that ye did not approve of the inceſtuous perſon's ſin, but evidenced, by your ſorrow for it, that ye are clear of it. Learn hence, 1. That there is no way to get clear of the guilt of other mens ſins, but by duly mourning for them. 2. That true repentance for ſin clears us from the guilt of it, both in the ſight of God and man: And if ſo, it is both uncharitable and unchriſtian, to ſtigmatize or reproach any perſon, for the ſin which we either know or believe he hath truly repented of. (B.)

Not for his cauſe.] Not ſo much for any particular man's cauſe, either the offender's, or any other party wronged; but that I might hereby give a proof to you of that exceeding great care that I have of your good in the ſight of God; and that ye might be ſufficiently by this means aſſured of it. (Hall) See the notes on 1 Cor. v. 1. and vi. 1, 8.

How with fear and trembling ye received him.] That is, with what reverence, and awe of his miniſtry. (Hall)

C H A P. VIII.

He exhorteth them to a liberal contribution for the poor ſaints at Jeruſalem, by divers arguments, viz. The forwardneſs of the Macedonians; the example of Chriſt; and the ſpiritual profit which would redound to themſelves thereby: And recommendeth Titus, and others, whom he now ſendeth to them for that purpoſe.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. MOREOVER, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God beſtowed on the churches of Macedonia: How that in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For to their power (I bear record) yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themſelves: Praying us with much intreaty, that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowſhip of the miniſtring to the ſaints. And this they did, not as we hoped, but firſt gave their own ſelves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God. Inſomuch that we deſired Titus, that as he had begun, ſo he would alſo finiſh in you the ſame grace alſo. Therefore as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us; ſee that ye abound in this grace alſo. I ſpeak not by commandment, but by occaſion of the forwardneſs of others, and to prove the ſincerity of your love.

We do you to wit of.] Something here is to be ſupplied from the laſt verſe of the foregoing chapter, thus: "Moreover, brethren, (in this confidence in you) we do you to wit," or we make known unto you, &c. (Fox)

The grace of God.] The word charis, grace, both here, and in ver. 6, 7. ſignifies a gift, liberality or charity; that is, the gift given by the churches of Macedonia to the poor Chriſtians in Judea. The Jews were wont to expreſs the greatneſs and excellency of any thing by adding the word God to it. Thus, Acts vii. 20. the ſtrict rendering of the words would be, "Moſes was fair before God;" that is, exceeding fair. So here, "the grace (that is, charity) of God" ſignifies their great bounty and charity; or it may be ſo ſtiled, becauſe they were excited to it by the giver of this good diſpoſition. As a motive therefore to engage the Corinthians to be liberal, and haſten their charity, the Apoſtle acquaints them with what had been done in this good work by the Chriſtians of Macedonia. (Idem)

The churches of Macedonia.] That is, the churches of Philippi, Theſſalonica, Berea, &c. (Fell)

In a great trial of affliction.] Obſerve here, 1. That the churches within the regions of Macedonia were firſt under great affliction, and then in great poverty themſelves; and yet "the riches of their liberality" are here ſaid to abound. From hence learn, that poverty excuſes not from charity: If we have nothing actually to give, God accepts the inclination of the mind, and a willing deſire: If we have but little to give, God will accept of our mite, and reward us for that little, if given for his ſake. It is not the quantity of the gift, but the good affection of the giver, that God's eye is upon. If we give but a cup of cold water to a diſciple, and as a diſciple, God accepts it, and rewards it, provided we have nothing better to give; for if our charity be not in ſome degree proportionable to what we have, it will not be acceptable, but we ſhall miſs of its reward. (B.) 2. That the Apoſtle here purpoſely commends the poor Macedonians for their liberality, that he might thereby incite the rich Corinthians to give the more liberally out of their abundance. (G.) And, 3. That the word aplotes, here render'd liberality, doth properly ſignify ſimplicity, or ſingleneſs of heart, but by a Metonymy is here and elſewhere put for liberality; becauſe liberality ought to be a pure and ſimple motion of doing good, without being corrupted by ſelf intereſt and hopes of recompence. (Leigh) Not like that of him, who the poet ſays,

Munera magna quidem mittit, ſed mittit in hamo;
Et piſcatorem piſcis amare poteſt?

——— ——— ——— Great preſents ſends;
But ſtill they're baited hooks to ſerve his private ends;
What fiſhes then would take ſuch fiſhers for their friends?

Yea, and beyond their power.] Three things are here recorded, as the glory of the Macedonians charity. 1. It was profuſely liberal, beyond their ability; "To their power, yea, and beyond their power," they were ready. Tho' generally ſpeaking, we are to conſult our own ability and preſent circumſtances in all our charitable diſtributions; yet there may be, and ſometimes are, ſuch emergent occaſions, as may make it a neceſſary duty to adminiſter to others neceſſities far beyond our own ability. 2. Their charity was purely voluntary; "They were willing of themſelves," that is, unſolicited by the Apoſtle, unaſk'd by any other, only prompted to it by the grace of God: They made a collection among themſelves freely and chearfully. 3. Their charity was accompanied with importunity to the Apoſtle to receive and diſtribute it. He was ſo far from intreating them to give, that they intreated him to receive their collection, and to take care for its conveyance to them, and diſtribution among them; "Praying us with much intreaty, that we would receive this their gift, and fellowſhip of miniſtry to the ſaints. (B.) To give to the poor is to put out money at intereſt, upon the ſecurity of God himſelf, and to charge it to his account. And alms is ſacred money, which ought not to be intruſted with any but ſafe and faithful perſons. (Q.) See the notes on Acts xi. 29. and Rom. xv. 26.

Not as we hoped.] The meaning of the Apoſtle in this verſe is hardly to be learnt from our tranſlation of it. He tells the Corinthians, that the Macedonians had, beyond his expectation, at once given themſelves and their goods unto Chriſt, by the will of God. Kai ou kathos elpiſamen, "And not as we hoped;" that is, beyond our expectation: (All' heautous, &c.) Foraſmuch as at once, that is, immediately, or in an inſtant, they "gave their own ſelves to the Lord, and unto us." For, alla, when it denoteth aſſent or approbation, is well known to be uſed in this ſenſe by the beſt authors; and particularly by Plato, almoſt in every page. (Maſſey) Firſt, they gave themſelves, "their own ſelves, to the Lord." To give a man's ſelf to the Lord, is more than to give all his eſtate to him; tho' ſtrictly ſpeaking, it is rather a debt than a gift; for we owe our ſelves to the Lord. And, oh, how infinitely ſhall we gain by this giving! He gains all, who gives his all to God: God will return it with advantage to him. Next, the Macedonians (ſays the Apoſtle) gave themſelves "unto us by the will of God;" that is, they reſigned themſelves up to us, to be employed by us in ſuch ſervices as we thought meet. It ſeems, they were ready to aſſiſt the poor ſaints, as well with their perſons as with their purſes. From the Macedonians giving themſelves firſt to the Lord, and then to the church's ſervice, in all charitable diſtributions, we learn, That he that does not firſt dedicate himſelf, will never dedicate his eſtate to God; but he, that by a deliberate and voluntary dedication, gives himſelf to God, will keep back nothing that he requires from him; yea, he will look upon all that he has, and is, as the Lord's: Not an inch of his time, not a penny in his purſe, but it is to be employed by, and improved for God: He looks upon God as the owner and proprietor of all, and himſelf as the ſteward and diſpenſer only. Oh! let us, in imitation of theſe noble, tho' poor Macedonians, firſt give ourſelves to the Lord, and then we ſhall never with-hold any thing that is ours from him. (B.)

Ye abound in every thing.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 5.

Not by commandment.] As if he had ſaid, I do not lay any imperious command upon you to do this; but I move and ſolicit you to it "on occaſion of the forwardneſs of others." (Hall) The Apoſtle does not command how much they ſhould contribute, and much leſs that they ſhould give all their ſubſtance, and live upon a common ſtock, leaving nothing to themſelves which they could call their own; for where a man has nothing of his own, there is no place for liberality. (W. and B.) The Apoſtle might have laid his command upon them, ſince charity is a duty required of every Chriſtian; who is bound to contribute to the neceſſity of the ſaints, according to his ability: But he rather commendeth this duty to them, than commandeth it, (as Philem. 8, 9.) becauſe the more willing and free our charitable contributions are, the more acceptable to God and man; as the myrrh which ſweateth out of the tree of its own accord is far more precious than that which runneth out after the tree is prick'd or cut. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts ii. 44. and 1 Cor. vii. 6, 12.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that though he was rich, yet for your ſakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich. And herein I give my advice; for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but alſo to be forward a year ago. Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readineſs to will, ſo there may be a performance alſo out of that which ye have. For if there be firſt a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. For I mean not that other men be eaſed, and you burdened: But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a ſupply for their want, that their abundance alſo may be a ſupply for your want, that there may be equality, As it is written, He that had gathered much, had nothing over; and he that had gathered little, had no lack.

Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] Here we have the grand motive, uſed by the Apoſtle, to excite their charity, viz. the example of Chriſt, who impoveriſhed himſelf to enrich us, and emptied himſelf to fill us; and therefore we ſhould be ready to adminiſter unto others: "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," &c. Whence obſerve, 1. A deſcription of Chriſt in his divine nature, as God. He was originally, eſſentially and eternally rich; that is, in his Godhead. All the riches that Chriſt now has in his ſtate of exaltation, he had from all eternity: Before his humiliation with reſpect to his Divine nature, he was rich. 2. A deſcription of Chriſt in his human nature. "He became poor;" that is, in the day of his incarnation, when he aſſumed our fleſh, and was made manifeſt in our nature, he impoveriſhed himſelf; "Tho' he was rich, yet he became poor." 3. The perſons for whoſe ſakes he did thus impoveriſh himſelf: "For our ſakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich." 4. The moving, impelling, or impulſive cauſe of this condeſcenſion in Chriſt; and that was the graciouſneſs of his nature: "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt." 5. The uſe and improvement which the Apoſtle makes of this gracious dignation and condeſcenſion in Jeſus Chriſt; and that was by way of argument, to excite the believing Corinthians to exerciſe their charity towards the poor ſaints which were at Jeruſalem. Learn from hence, That the extenſive charity, and wonderful compaſſion of Chriſt towards us ſinners, has both the force of an argument to excite us to, and alſo the nature of a rule to direct us in, the exerciſe of our charity towards all our fellow-brethren and members of Chriſt; "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," &c. (B.) See Dr. Frank's and Mr. Collier's Sermons on this text; and the notes on chap vi. 10.

I give my advice.] See the notes on ver. 8. and 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

To be forward.] What thelein, to will, ſignifies in this place, will appear by poieſai, to do, precedent: For when to will goes before doing, as Phil. ii. 13. it doth, then it muſt be conceived to denote the reſolving of that which is after done; but when it is ſubſequent to doing, as here, then it cannot belong to that, but to ſome farther action ſtill future, either of the ſame kind with that formerly done, or of any other which is ſpecified. That here it refers to ſome farther degree of liberality, to be ſuperadded to what they had already done, appears by the enſuing exhortation to conſummate the work, ver. 11. and by the mention of prothymia tou thelein, the forwardneſs to will, that is, to reſolve to do more, as they ſhould be able. In which reſpect it is, that chap. ix. 2. St. Paul ſaith, he hath boaſted of them, that they had (apo peruſi, as here, from "a year ago") made a preparation for this new ſupply, for ſo pareſkeuaſtai, hath been prepared, ſignifies, as paſſives are oft' uſed for reciprocals. As for touto humin ſympherei, this is profitable for you, in the former part of this verſe, tho' it may fitly be applied to ſeveral ways of profit, that their liberality would probably bring in unto them, yet it ſeems, by what follows, chap. ix. 3, 4. to refer peculiarly to the reputation of their liberality that Paul had ſo proclaimed; which would render it a reproachful thing to them, if they ſhould not make it good, according to their purpoſe, and his boaſting of them. (H.) The Apoſtle had exhorted them, in his former Epiſtle written "a year ago," to this contribution, 1 Cor. xvi. 2. and they, in obedience to his directions, had begun to lay up in ſtore willingly: Which charity he now exhorts them to conſummate; and this he ſays, to ſhew, that they were not only moved to it by the example of the Macedonians, but rather were examples to them, chap. ix. 2. (W.) See the notes on the texts here refer'd to.

Firſt a willing mind.] See Dr. Hickes's Sermon on this text; and the notes on Luke xxi. 3.

That there may be equality.] He tells them freely, He did not deſign to lay a load upon them to eaſe others, or to make others rich by making themſelves poor; but "that there might be an equality" in ſupplying the wants of one another, that now ye abound, ye may ſupply them; and when they abound, they may ſupply you: Yet mark, We muſt not, by the equality mentioned here, underſtand it ſo, as if the wiſdom of the Divine Providence had ordained levelling, or making all men equal in their portion of the good things of this life: But ſo far Chriſtianity ſeems to require this equality, that we ſhould not ſuffer others to lack the neceſſary comforts of this life, while we abound with them, and can ſpare them, and ſuffer them to ſink in their ſorrows, while we ſwim in fulneſs. Learn hence, There is a debt of mercy and pity, of charity and compaſſion, of relief and ſuccour due to human nature, and payable from one man to another; and ſuch as deny to pay it the diſtreſſed, in the time of their abundance, may juſtly expect it will be denied themſelves in a time of want. To confirm this, the Apoſtle draws an alluſion from the gatherers of Manna in the wilderneſs: Some gathered more, and others leſs; but "he that had gather'd much had nothing over, and he that had gather'd little had no lack." Almighty God would have it, that they which have great riches, ſhould impart of their abundance to them that are in want; otherwiſe Almighty God will ſhrink their heap into ſome equality with them whom they refuſe to relieve. With what meaſure we mete in acts of charity, as well as in acts of juſtice, it ſhall be meaſured to us again. (B.)

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. But thanks be to God, which put the ſame earneſt care into the heart of Titus for you. For indeed he accepted the exhortation, but being more forward of his own accord he went unto you. And we have ſent with him the brother, whoſe praiſe is in the Goſpel, throughout all the churches: (And not that only, but who was alſo choſen of the churches to travel with us with this grace, which is adminiſtred by us to the glory of the ſame Lord, and declaration of your ready mind) Avoiding this, that no man ſhould blame us in this abundance which is adminiſtred by us: Providing for honeſt things, not only in the ſight of the Lord, but alſo in the ſight of men. And we have ſent with them our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which I have in you. Whether any do enquire of Titus, he is my partner and fellow-helper concerning you; or our brethren be enquired of, they are the meſſengers of the churches, and the glory of Chriſt. Wherefore ſhew ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our boaſting on your behalf.

The brother, whoſe praiſe.] Who this brother was is much controverted. Antiquity hath carried it for St. Luke, worthy of praiſe in all churches for the Goſpel he wrote. The authority of which ſeems to reſt upon the words of Origen, the interpolated Ignatius, and St Jerome. And this difficulty lies againſt it, That this brother is ſent before St. Paul to Corinth with Titus; whereas St. Luke went with him to Troas, and from thence to Corinth, Acts xx. 4, &c. To which it may be anſwer'd, That it is not certain, that St. Paul went from Troas to Corinth; but more probable (as is noted in the preface to this epiſtle) that he went from Philippi to Corinth, and ſo to Troas. And thus this perſon, being "choſen of the churches to travel with this" charity, here, ver. 19. might be both ſent before to prepare it, and being return'd to give notice to St. Paul that it was ready, might go back with him to receive it. (W.) Some underſtand this brother to be Barnabas; of which opinion I find Biſhop Hall to be, (and the Aſſembly-men ſeemingly alſo) according to Theodoret: And others (particularly Baronius) underſtand it of Silas: But it is generally underſtood of St. Luke, as before; and interpreted accordingly by Grotius, Hammond, Fell, Cave, Stanhope, Whitby, Burkitt, and Queſnel. See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 3.

Choſen of the churches.] See the notes on Acts vi. 3, &c. xiv. 23. and 1 Cor. xvi. 3.

That no man ſhould blame us.] Note here, 1. The holy wiſdom of this great Apoſtle, in joining ſome other perſons with himſelf, as Titus and Luke, &c. in the diſtribution of this charity: Leſt evil-minded men ſhould ſuſpect him of diſhoneſty, he takes care to cut off all occaſion of ſuſpicion, that he neither kept any part of this large contribution to himſelf, nor diſtributed it unfaithfully unto others; "Avoiding this, that no man ſhould blame us." 2. The reaſon alſo aſſigned by the Apoſtle for this his prudential management; namely, becauſe, as a miniſter and a Chriſtian, he was obliged to provide and take care, that all things be done blameleſly in the ſight of men, as well as faithfully in the ſight of God. The Apoſtle, by this his example, recommends to all miniſters, and private Chriſtians, a prudential foreſight of ſuch ſcandalous imputations as they may be expoſed to by the world, let their ſincerity in their actions be what it will; and to let us ſee how we ought to provide againſt them. Any one of theſe upright perſons alone, either St. Paul alone, Titus alone, or Luke alone, were ſufficient to be entruſted alone with the diſtribution of this charity: But the Apoſtle did not know what a cenſorious world might ſay; and therefore, to cut off all occaſion, and to prevent all ſuſpicion, he wiſely appoints ſeveral perſons to be witneſſes of this action. If there be not in ſome caſes over-much caution, all is too little, and not enough. (B.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 17.

Sent with them our brother.] Some of the ancients, viz. Theodoret and Oecumenius, ſay this was Apollos, who before had doubted of them, and ſo was not diſpoſed to come to them as yet; but now, upon St. Paul's confidence of their readineſs to obey his precepts, was prevailed upon to come. (W.) It was the cuſtom of the Jews, to intruſt three perſons with the diſpoſal of alms. (G.)

Whether any do inquire.] Obſerve here, What pains the Apoſtle takes to anſwer all cavils and objections that might hinder the free collection and regular diſtribution of this charity. Some might pretend, poſſibly, to ſay then (as many amongſt us do now) We know not into whoſe hands this charity-money may fall; we know not whether ever they ſhall be the better for it for whom it was intended: Therefore, ſays St. Paul, If any make that objection, that they do not know Titus, and enquire after him, or his truſtineſs, tell them he is my coadjutor, "my partner and fellow-helper" in converting you to Chriſtianity; and if the other two be enquir'd after, they are our brethren, "the meſſengers of the churches, and the glory of Chriſt;" that is, the inſtruments of his glory: Therefore let theſe meſſengers ſee, and the churches which did depute them, "the proof of your love to me," and to the ſaints, and that I did not boaſt of your liberality in vain. Note here, The high honour which St. Paul puts upon the miniſters of the Goſpel, in calling them "the glory of Chriſt;" that is, the glory of the Goſpel of Chriſt, the glory of the Chriſtian profeſſion, the inſtruments of Chriſt's glory, by whom his honour and glory is greatly promoted; perſons who by their exemplary gloriousneſs did bring much honour and glory to Chriſt. This title, I conceive, ſhews both our dignity and duty: Our dignity, in that Chriſt accounts us his glory when we are found faithful to him; as the faithfulneſs of an ambaſſador redounds to the glory and honour of the prince that ſends him: And it points out our duty to promote the glory of Chriſt, to pray and endeavonr that he would uſe us as inſtruments for the advancement of his glory; that as we glorify him on earth, he may glory in us, and be glorified by us, before his Father in heaven, and we be preſented faultleſs before the preſence of his glory, with exceeding joy. Amen. (B.)

Meſſengers of the churches.] Apoſtoloi, that is, Apoſtles; which word, in its primitive ſenſe, ſignifies no more than meſſengers: And they were ſo called, as being the particular meſſengers of Chriſt. (Brett) See the notes on 1 Cor. iv. 1. and Phil. ii. 25.

C H A P. IX.

Further motives to a liberal and chearful contribution for the poor ſaints at Jeruſalem.

Ver. 1, 2. 3, 4, 5. FOR as touching the miniſtring to the ſaints, it is ſuperfluous for me to write to you. For I know the forwardneſs of your mind, for which I boaſt of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many. Yet have I ſent the brethren, leſt our boaſting of you ſhould be in vain in this behalf; that, as I ſaid, ye may be ready: Leſt haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we ſay not you) ſhould be aſhamed in this confident boaſting. Therefore I thought it neceſſary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up before-hand your bounty, whereof ye had notice before, that the ſame might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetouſneſs.

Miniſtring to the ſaints.] See the notes on chap. viii. 4. Acts xi. 29. Rom. xv. 26. and 1 Cor. xvi, 1, &c.

The forwardneſs of your mind.] Some tell us, that St. Paul preached the Goſpel at Corinth freely, for two reaſons; The firſt of which is, becauſe (ſay they) he obſerved in them ſuch a ſaving temper, as would hinder the progreſs of the Goſpel, if it ſhould prove matter of charge to them. But this cannot be a true account of the matter; 1. Becauſe he doth the ſame at Theſſalonica, the metropolis of Macedonia, "labouring night and day, becauſe he would not be chargeable unto any of them, 1 Theſſ. ii. 9. and

2 Theſſ. iii. 8. and throughout all Aſia, ſaying, " Ye yourſelves know, that theſe hands have miniſtred unto my neceſſities, and to them that were with me," Acts xx. 34. And it ſeems plain, Phil. iv. 15, 16. that " no church communicated" any thing to him, but that of Philippi only. 2. Becauſe he commends the Corinthians here, chap. viii. 11, &c. for their " readineſs, and willing mind;" and mentions the liberality of their contribution, and their unſpeakable gift, with thanks to God, ver. 13, &c. of this chapter, in which he exhorteth them to compleat it. And, 3. Becauſe they contributed to others, who were falſe apoſtles, and ſuffer'd them to take of them, chap. xi. 20. as he inſinuates alſo in theſe words, " If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather?" 1 Cor. ix. 12. Which he ſpeaks (as Chryſoſtom and the Greek ſcholiaſts have obſerved) not of Peter, or the other Apoſtles; for then he would not have ſaid, " Are not we rather" partakers of this power than they? but of ſome falſe apoſtles and corrupters of them; of whom he ſays, " Ye ſuffer, if a man devour you, if a man take of you." And this is alſo a confutation of the ſecond pretended reaſon given for this abſtinence, viz. As if the Apoſtle did this to diſappoint the arts of theſe falſe teachers, who preached the Goſpel freely, and gloried in ſo doing, chap. xi. 12, 13, 20. But the Apoſtle himſelf gives another reaſon of his doing this, both here and elſewhere, viz. " Not becauſe we have not power; but to make ourſelves an enſample unto you to follow us," 2 Theſſ. iii. 9. And again, " I have ſhewed you all things, how that ſo doing ye ought to ſupport the weak; and to remember the words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give than to receive," Acts xx. 35. (W.) See the notes on chap. viii. 10, 24. and the other texts here referr'd to.

Achaia was ready a year ago] Achaia, in the largeſt ſenſe, comprehends Greece, properly ſo called; and ſo it ſeems to ſignify, where St. Paul, according to the Roman acceptation, mentions all " the regions of Achaia," chap. xi. 10. and directs this ſecond epiſtle to " all the ſaints which are in all Achaia," chap. i. 1. Thus, what is Achaia, Acts xix. 21. is (Hellas) Greece, Acts xx. 2. and ſo Mela ſpeaks of it. But Achaia, ſtrictly ſo called, is the northern region of Peloponneſus. (W.) See the notes on chap. viii. 10.

Your zeal hath provoked very many.] The Apoſtle, in this chapter, termeth their bountiful contributions to the ſaints by the name of divers virtues, viz. 1. Zelos, zeal, here, ver. 2. becauſe it proceeded out of fervent love, and ſo much tended to God's glory. 2. Aplotes, ſimplicity, ver. 11. becauſe they did it out of a free mind, and ſingleneſs of heart, without any ſiniſter intention, or expecting any retribution. 3. Charis, grace, ver 8. becauſe it was the gift of God, proceeding from his grace. 4. Eulogia, benediction or bleſſing, ver. 5. becauſe God's bleſſing enables them to it; and the poor ſaints bleſs God for this ſupply of their wants. And, 5 Dikaioſyne, righteouſneſs, ver. 9. either becauſe pious bounty is a part of that righteouſneſs or juſtice in general, which compriſeth all virtues, or becauſe we are not lords of the goods of this life, but ſtewards only; and he is an unjuſt ſteward, who holds that wholly in his own hands, for his own advantage, which by order from his Maſter he ought to diſpenſe to others, for their relief and ſuſtenance. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 5. and 9. chap. viii. 1, 2 Acts v. 17. and Rom. i. 17.

I ſent the brethren.] As confident and fully perſuaded as the Apoſtle was, of the readineſs and willingneſs of mind that was found in the Corinthians towards the charitable contribution, yet he judgeth it moſt expedient and neceſſary to " ſend the brethren" before to them, to get all things ready, the collection finiſhed and over; that ſo, when he himſelf, and the Macedonians, ſhould come to Corinth, he might not be put to the bluſh for them, having made great boaſts of their charity, but finding no deeds: And alſo he deſires their collection may be ready, with reſpect to themſelves; that ſo their beneficence may appear to be their own free bounty, and not a collection difficultly extorted from them, as from covetous men, who give grudgingly and unwillingly. Note here, 1. That it is very lawful for the miniſters of Chriſt to uſe an holy craft, and innocent guile, to draw men to a ſpeedy compliance with their duty; ſometimes by engaging their reputation in it, and ſometimes alluring them by juſt praiſes to the doing of it, as our Apoſtle did here. 2. That the readineſs which St. Paul here preſſes them to, is not the readineſs of the mind, but the readineſs of the action: He was well ſatisfied, that they were ready in their preparation of mind long ago, but he preſſes them to finiſh the collection, of which he had ſo much boaſted to the Macedonians. 3. How the bleſſed Apoſtle did conſult the Corinthians honour and reputation, equally with his own, and was deſirous to prevent reflection upon them, as upon himſelf: He would not have them aſhamed, no more than himſelf, at his coming among them. (B.) See the notes on chap. viii. 11, 17, &c.

In this ſame confident boaſting.] In the ſubſtance, or foundation, of this boaſting. The word hypoſtaſis, in the original, may either ſignify ſuch a ſtayedneſs and ſettledneſs of mind, as cannot be moved with any terror or fear; and ſo it ſheweth the aſſured confidence St. Paul had in them, that they would make good what he had promiſed in their behalf: Or it may ſignify a ground, or a foundation; and ſo the meaning is, that he " ſhould not be aſhamed" of his boaſting to others of their readineſs, becauſe there was a good ground and foundation for it, viz. either the publick faith of the Corinthians, who engaged themſelves to contribute liberally; or ſome preſent pledge which he ſaw thereof; namely, ſome remarkable ſums collected a year before. (Aſſ.)

And not as of covetouſneſs.] Theſe words may carry a double ſenſe; either that the Apoſtle would have them ſpeedily to ſend this collection, as being a free benevolence, and not to ſlack the ſending of it out of covetouſneſs, to make any benefit of the money of the poor ſo long in their hands: Or that it might be ready, as a matter of bounty, that is freely coming from them and chearfully; not as money comes out of the hands of covetous men, that is, hardly, and with much grudging and repining. (Idem)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. But this I ſay, He which ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap alſo ſparingly: and he which ſoweth bountifully, ſhall reap alſo bountifully. Every man according as he purpoſeth in his heart, ſo let him give; not grudgingly, or of neceſſity: for God loveth a chearful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound towards you; that ye always having all ſufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work: (As it is written, He hath diſperſed abroad; he hath given to the poor; his righteouſneſs remaineth for ever. Now he that miniſtreth ſeed to the ſower, both miniſter bread for your food, and multiply your ſeed ſown, and increaſe the fruits of your righteouſneſs) Being enriched in every thing to all bountifulneſs, which cauſeth through us thankſgiving to God. For the adminiſtration of this ſervice not only ſupplieth the wants of the ſaints, but is abundant alſo by many thankſgivings unto God; (Whiles by the experiment of this miniſtration they glorify God for your profeſſed ſubjection unto the Goſpel of Chriſt, and for your liberal diſtribution unto them, and unto all men) And by their prayer for you, which long after you for the exceeding grace of God in you. Thanks be unto God for his unſpeakable gift.

He which ſoweth.] Here the Apoſtle comes to direct the Corinthians, how, and after what manner they ſhould give their alms, ſo as to ſecure a bleſſing; viz. 1. Deliberately; " according as he purpoſeth in his heart;" that is, as he is determined and reſolved within himſelf. When a Chriſtian gives, he muſt take care that it be his own act as much as he can. Some men give what they did never intend, and beſtow what they did never chuſe or deſign to beſtow: Importunity extorts charity from ſome; they give, to get rid of the noiſe, and purchaſe their quiet with their alms; whereas " the liberal man deviſes liberal things," the good man lays-by in ſtore what he intends to beſtow in alms. 2. Freely and bountifully: For " he that ſoweth bountifully, ſhall reap alſo bountifully;" that is, he that giveth liberally to the poor, ſhall be liberally rewarded by God; no wiſe man will pinch his ground of the ſeed. The proportion, or how much every one ſhould give, cannot be determined, becauſe that muſt be meaſured according to the ability of him that giveth, and according to the neceſſity of him that receiveth. 3. Chearfully; " not grudgingly, or of neceſſity; for God loveth a chearful giver." In all thy gifts ſhew a chearful countenance, ſays the wiſe man: Let us give with the ſame chearfulneſs that we ſhould receive, and be as willing to give as the needy are to receive: Nay, it is our duty to ſeek out objects; for ſome of Chriſt's members have as great modeſty as they have neceſſity, and cannot ſpeak for themſelves: And let none think, that this liberality will prejudice their eſtates; no, 'tis a man's luſt that undoes him, and not his charity. (B.) Pliny writes, That it was obſerved among the Romans, that never any good came to a man by offering a beaſt in ſacrifice, (renitentem & trahentem ſe ab aris) which violently drew back from the altar, and could not be brought to it but with much force. And moſt certain it is, that God eſteemeth of no offering of ours, which is not as free as liberal, according to our ability. (Aſſ.) There are three ſorts of alms: Thoſe of hypocrites, who give by conſtraint, and againſt their will; thoſe of imperfect Chriſtians, who give but little, and with backwardneſs; and thoſe of true Chriſtians, who give abundantly, and with joy. God ſuffers thoſe who are, as it were, drawn to him by force; he accepts of thoſe who give themſelves to him voluntarily, tho' with ſome reluctance; but the joy of his heart is for thoſe who give themſelves to him without any reſerve, and with the whole joy of their hearts. (Q.) See the notes on chap. viii. 12.

Or of neceſſity.] Note here, That neceſſity, in ſcripture, ſtands oppoſed, not to coaction, but to the free election of the will. (W.) See the notes on 1 Pet. v. 2.

Able to make all grace abound.] There is no way of rendring Theos dunatos periſſeuſai charin, but by putting periſſeuſai in an active ſenſe, to make abound; as is ordinary in the New Teſtament: The Greek wanting the Hebrew conjugation hiphil, which denotes making to do a thing, and having no way to ſupply it, but by uſing the active voice in that ſenſe; ſo as periſſeuein ſhall not only ſignify neutrally to abound, but alſo to make any man or thing to abound: Of which kind there be innumerable examples. And ſo the making their charity to abound toward them here, that is, God's bleſſing their liberality, ſo that it ſhall enrich, inſtead of impoveriſhing them, will be all one with the "encreaſing the fruits of their righteouſneſs," ver. 10. their righteouſneſs there ſignifying their charity, (as hath been oft ſhewn) and the plenty conſequent to their exerciſes of that virtue, being proportionable to the fruit that comes by ſowing (the hundred-fold encreaſe which Chriſt promiſes, even in this life, to thoſe that forſake, or part with, any thing for his ſake) and accordingly 'tis there join'd with "multiplying their ſeed;" where their acts of charity are figuratively call'd their ſeed, and the bleſſings conſequent thereto the fruits of it. (H.) Here note alſo, 1. That the Greek ſcholiaſt accurately obſerves, that the Apoſtle here mentions only a ſufficiency in temporal bleſſings, but an exuberancy or abounding in ſpiritual: For in temporals we may have too much as well as too little (and therefore Solomon prays for a mediocrity;) but of ſpiritual bleſſings, eſpecially ſuch as appertain to our ſanctification and ſalvation, we cannot have too great a proportion; the more we abound in them, the more happy we are. (Aſſ.) 2. That not only the promiſe, but the power of God, who is good to all, is a motive to expect his grace and favour. (W.) But then, 3. We muſt remember to allow time for it: For almighty God loves to be truſted upon his word; and thoſe who will not give him credit, let them try if they can improve their eſtates better, or put them into ſafer hands. (B.)

His righteouſneſs remaineth for ever.] That is, both in the temporal and eternal reward thereof: "His horn exalted with honour," Pſa. cxii. 9. Himſelf had "in everlaſting remembrance," ver. 6. And "his ſeed bleſſed, and mighty upon earth," ver. 2. Whereas the wicked, and illiberal, ſhall melt away, and his deſire periſh, ver. 10. (Fell) Note, That righteouſneſs is here taken for bounty, as in Hoſ. x. 12. "Sow to yourſelves in righteouſneſs;" and Chriſt is call'd "the Sun of righteouſneſs," Mal. iv. 2. becauſe he freely and bountifully communicates both enlightning and ſanctifying graces, as the Sun doth his light and heat. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 2.

Now he that miniſtreth.] Some look upon theſe words as a prayer; (among whom we find Tremellius, Beza, Hall, Hammond, Fell, Whitby and Maſſey:) But others underſtand them as a promiſe; that as God bleſſeth the increaſe of the earth ſo largely, that it ſufficeth for the nouriſhment of men, and for ſeed to ſow again; ſo, in the like manner, would he ſupply all their wants, and grant them ability to ſupply the wants of others, and plentifully reward them for all the fruits of their righteouſneſs and mercy. (B.) This paſſage ſeems to be improperly pointed, and therefore improperly tranſlated. It plainly refers to Iſa. lv. 10. where the Prophet ſpeaks of God "giving ſeed to the ſower, and bread to the eater;" and theſe two paſſages ſerve to give light into each other. Inſtead therefore of the common reading, with the comma after the word (choregeſai) miniſter, it ſeems to be better placed before it, and rendred thus, "Now he that miniſtreth ſeed to the ſower, and bread to the eater, miniſter and multiply your ſeed ſown." (Maſſey) See the notes on ver. 8.

Subjection unto the Goſpel.] Epi te hypotage tes homologias. The word homologia, in the New Teſtament, ſtill ſignifies the confeſſion of faith, 1 Tim. vi. 12, 13. Hebr. iii. 1. iv. 14. and x. 23. and hypotage, ſubjection to the precepts of that faith. So, the Apoſtle here ſignifies, that men ſeeing, by this charity, "the ſincerity of their love," chap. viii. 8. and of their obedience to the Goſpel, will be induced to glorify God, and own the excellency of that religion which produceth ſuch fruits of righteouſneſs. (W.) See the notes on Matth. v. 16. and Rom. xv. 27.

Thanks be unto God.] Here the Apoſtle concludes his diſcourſe upon this great argument with a doxology, praiſing and bleſſing God for putting it into their hearts, in ſo liberal a manner to relieve the neceſſities of the Saints, by which ſo much glory did redound to God, and ſo much honour to the Chriſtian religion. This he calls, not barely an admirable, but an "unſpeakable gift;" becauſe a gift by which God was ſo much glorified, the Goſpel adorned, the poor Saints ſo much comforted, and they themſelves ſo plentifully rewarded; "Thanks be to God for his unſpeakable gift." But, if the Corinthians charity was an unſpeakable gift, what was the gift of Chriſt? The gift of God to a loſt world, to whom this title of unſpeakable doth beſt agree; who is the author and finiſher of all grace, and particularly of this noble grace of charity in the hearts of his people? For he ſends his Holy Spirit, and pours into their hearts this moſt excellent grace of charity, the very bond of peace, and of all virtues, without which, whoſoever liveth, is counted dead before him. Eternal thanks then be to Chriſt, for this admirable gift of charity, and thanks be to God for the unſpeakable gift of Chriſt. Amen. (B.)

CHAP. X.

The Apoſtle here enters upon a confutation of the falſe teachers, who vilified his perſon and miniſtry; aſſerting the ſpiritual authority with which he is armed againſt all adverſaries; declaring his reſolution to exerciſe it with power at his coming; and taxing thoſe falſe apoſtles, for ſtretching themſelves beyond their meaſure.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. NOW I Paul my ſelf beſeech you, by the meekneſs and gentleneſs of Chriſt, who in preſence am baſe among you, but being abſent am bold toward you. But I beſeech you, that I may not be bold when I am preſent, with that confidence wherewith I think to be bold againſt ſome which think of us, as if we walked according to the fleſh. For though we walk in the fleſh, we do not war after the fleſh: (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of ſtrong holds) Caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt: And having in a readineſs to revenge all diſobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled.

By the meekneſs, and gentleneſs.] Epieikeia is the ordinary word of the philoſopher, taken from him by the lawyers, to ſignify mitigation of exact or ſtrict juſtice, when that is not ſo agreeable to rules of charity; and ſo it notes in general the fit, proper temper, which is to be obſerved in all things. Epieikes, ſaith Heſychius, is that which is fit, decent, due, &c. And according to the diverſity of matter about which it is converſant, ſo it hath ſeveral notions in the New Teſtament. In this place, being ſpoken of Chriſt, and join'd with that meekneſs, which was ſo imitable in him, Matth. xi. 29. it ſignifies gentleneſs, or clemency, as that is oppoſed to ſeverity in puniſhing, which is here expreſs'd by daring, boldneſs, and confidence. But, Phil. iv. 5. to epieikes ſeems to belong to another ſort of gentleneſs; that of the lamb, which before or under the ſhearer is "dumb, and opens not the mouth;" viz. a chearful endurance of all the perſecutions that were upon the Chriſtians at that time. To this the context there inclines, which uſher'd it in with a repeated exhortation, to "rejoice in the Lord always," in adverſity as well as proſperity (and ſo, 1 Theſſ. v. 16.) which being contrary to the joy of the world, moſt fitly denotes that chara kai agalliaſis, Matth. v. 12. ("rejoicing and being exceeding glad;" rejoicing and leaping for joy, and "thinking it all joy," Jam. i. 2.) which is upon their being perſecuted for Chriſt; and ſo likewiſe enforced with a reaſon, agreeable to this matter, for the Lord is at hand, the time of your redemption from your preſſures draws near, Heb. x. 37. And accordingly, 'tis attended, (as Chriſt's inſtructions to the Apoſtles are in this caſe, Matth. x. 19. with meden merimnate, a prohibition of all ſollicitous thoughts, referring the whole matter to prayer, and ſupplication to God. This word is again uſed, Jam. iii. 17. "The wiſdom from above is (epieikes) gentle," which following peaceable, and being attended with other words of that nature, muſt be rendred in order to that, ſo as to ſignify a receding from his own ſtrict right, in order to peace; as eupeithes, that follows immediately, notes an eaſineſs to be perſuaded of that which belongs to the excuſe of another, or mitigating of his fault, as 'tis ſaid of charity, that it "believes all things," 1 Cor. xiii. 17. and accordingly theſe qualities of the wiſdom from above are ſhut up, ver. 18. under the title of "peace to them that love or make peace." So 1 Tim. iii. 3. and Tit. iii. 2. epieikes are joined with amachoi, in both places; and ſo note the contrary to machai, all kind of contentions, and are attended in the latter place with "ſhewing all meekneſs to all men." (H.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 1.

In preſence am baſe.] This he ſpeaks ironically: Not that he was baſe, when he was preſent with them; or as if he carried not himſelf according to the dignity of his place: But, as it were, by way of conceſſion for the preſent; as if he had ſaid, If my "bodily preſence be weak, and my ſpeech contemptible," as the falſe Apoſtles would have you believe; how mean and baſe ſoever they eſteem of me in preſence; yet I deſire you not to provoke me to ſhew what I am, and to exerciſe boldly that power which Chriſt hath given me. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 10. and 1 Cor. ii. 3.

That I may not be bold.] That is, That ye will order the matter, that I may not have cauſe, "when I am preſent," to make uſe of that bold and free ſeverity againſt you, which I purpoſe to uſe againſt envious detractors. (Hall) See the notes on chap. i. 23. and 1 Cor. iv. 19. &c.

We do not war after the fleſh.] Tho' I yet dwell in the body, and conſequently am not free from human infirmities and weakneſſes, yet neither my miniſtry, nor my life, are from fleſhly principles, by fleſhly means, or to fleſhly ends. The beſt and holieſt of men in this life "walk in the fleſh," being cloathed with a mortal body: But they "do not war after the fleſh," not fighting under the banner of corrupt nature. Where note, The Chriſtian life deſcribed: It is a warfare; a life of vigorous oppoſition. The Chriſtian has many enemies to conflict with, and to contend againſt, both outward and inward enemies: In a paſſive ſenſe, he is a man of ſtrife and contention; his hand is againſt every man, and many hands againſt him: He doth not manage a war for the fleſh, but againſt the fleſh; and in the verſe following he tells us with what weapons he managed this war. (B.) See Biſhop Hooper's ſermon on this text.

The weapons of our warfare.] Obſerve here, 1. That, as the life of every Chriſtian is a continual warfare, ſo the miniſters of Chriſt are more eminently men of war: "They fight againſt principalities and powers;" and the devil draws up his full ſtrength to pull down the office of the miniſtry, which is erected for the "pulling down the ſtrong-holds" of him and his kingdom. 2. The weapons, which theſe ſpiritual warriers, the miniſters of the Goſpel, do make uſe of, in their conflict and combat with ſin and Satan; "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but ſpiritual." They are "not carnal," or fleſhly weapons that we uſe, neither fraud nor flattery, nor force; but ſpiritual armour, with which we batter the fortreſſes of ſin and Satan; namely, "the ſword of the Spirit, the word of God," the plain and perſuaſive preaching of the Goſpel, the Holy Spirit; miracles of all ſorts, eminent wiſdom and patience, exemplary zeal and courage in executing and inflicting the cenſures of the church upon the diſobedient. 3. Theſe weapons are called mighty; but "mighty through God;" that is, as quickened by the power and preſence of God's Spirit. Then is our miniſtry mighty, when made mighty through God. The ſpirits of darkneſs cannot be conquered but by ſpiritual weapons. It is as poſſible to make an impreſſion with your finger upon a wall of braſs, as for the beſt ſermon in the world to make an effectual impreſſion upon a Sinner's will, without the co-operation and concurring aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit: The weapons of our warfare are ſpiritual and mighty through God. 'Tis the Spirit that gives them their ſucceſs and efficacy: There is a real ſpiritual power and energetical preſence of Chriſt in his own inſtitutions and appointments. When the ſword of his Spirit is taken into the hand of the Spirit, it works wonders. 4. The great and good execution which theſe ſpiritual weapons do effect and accompliſh, when thus accompany'd with the power of God; they are "mighty to the pulling down of ſtrong-holds." By which ſome do underſtand a particular beloved luſt; a ſpecial ſin, by which Satan keeps and holds poſſeſſion of the ſinner's heart: Others underſtand it more generally, of every thing that oppoſeth, reſiſteth, and hindereth the ſucceſs of the Goſpel; and particularly the ſtubborn will of the ſinner, which is ſo ſtrong an hold, that no power ſhort of an almighty power can influence it to ſurrender; "caſting down imaginations," or reaſonings, and proud conceits; and particularly unbelief, in which ſinners fortify themſelves againſt the conviction of the word, diſdaining to ſubmit themſelves to the abaſing, humble, and ſelf-denying way of the Goſpel. But, behold the glorious conqueſt which the Goſpel of Chriſt obtains over the ſinners thus fortified againſt it; "It caſts down imaginations, and pulls down every ſtrong-hold." Thus the miniſtry of the Goſpel ſpoils Satan of his armour, in which he truſted, by ſhewing the ſinner, that all this can be no defence to his ſoul againſt the wrath of God. 5. The improvement of the victory: The Goſpel doth not only lead away theſe enemies ſpoil'd, but "brings them into captivity" and obedience to it ſelf. O happy and bleſſed conqueſt! Sinners do not only lay down their arms, and fight no more againſt Chriſt, but they repair to his camp, and fight for him, with thoſe reaſonings of theirs which before were employed againſt him. O bleſſed victory, where the conqueror and conquered both triumph together! (B.) See the notes on Rom. xiii. 12. and 1 Cor. i. 19, 26. and ii. 4, &c.

Having in a readineſs.] That is, "Having in a readineſs" that which will "revenge all diſobedience" upon refractory and ſtubborn offenders, (namely, the power of excommunication) and both authority and ability to inflict ſuch corporal puniſhment as he judged fit, by "delivering them unto Satan;" which power he reſolved to make uſe of, when the greater part of them were, by their obedience to his admonitions, reduced to good order again. Where note, That the Apoſtle defers the excommunicating and cenſuring the offenders among them, they being very many, till he had, by exhortation and argument, brought over as many as poſſibly he could unto obedience. There is no place for ſevere remedies, when the diſeaſe has taken and infected the whole church: The offenders in the church, when very many, cannot be eaſily puniſhed; for when great multitudes are concern'd, they are like to draw great multitudes after them. The Apoſtle's practice in this caſe is a good pattern for our imitation; not to be too forward, raſh, and haſty, in denouncing the cenſures of the Church; but to proceed prudently and gradually: Firſt uſing all the fair means and gentle methods, and waiting with all patience for the reducing them to their duty who will be reduced; and then revenging the glory and honour of God, only upon ſuch as will by no means be reclaimed or reduced. (B.) Or this clauſe, "when your obedience is fulfilled," may be underſtood thus, viz. After ye have ſo fulfilled your obedience to our admonitions, that there may no exception be taken at our forbearance of you. (Hall)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? If any man truſt to himſelf, that he is Chriſt's, let him of himſelf think this again, that as he is Chriſt's, even ſo are we Chriſt's. For though I ſhould boaſt ſomewhat more of our authority (which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your deſtruction) I ſhould not be aſhamed: That I may not ſeem as if I would terrify you by letters. For his letters (ſay they) are weighty and powerful, but his bodily preſence is weak, and his ſpeech contemptible. Let ſuch an one think this, that ſuch as we are in word by letters, when we are abſent, ſuch will we be alſo in deed, when we are preſent.

Do ye look on things.] Becauſe the falſe apoſtles had taught the Corinthians to deſpiſe St. Paul, on the account of his mean appearance, he here expoſtulates with them, and deſires to know whether they would judge of men by outward appearance, or by inward worth? As if he had ſaid, Are ye ſo weak as to judge of me by my outward perſon, by my bodily preſence, by the meanneſs of my garb, by the ſmallneſs of my ſtature, by my outward aſpect and countenance? But, if ye will judge of me, and the pretended apoſtles, by miniſterial gifts and authority received from Chriſt, ſurely I have as much to ſhew of theſe, as they can pretend to ſhew; for "in nothing was I behind the very chief Apoſtles." There is no judging of men, much leſs of miniſters, by outward appearances: Much real worth ſometimes lodges within, when nothing but what is deſpicable and contemptible appears without. (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 37.

Boaſt ſomewhat more.] As if he had ſaid, I have not only an equal power and authority with thoſe who deſpiſe me, (viz. the falſe teachers) but I have an authority and power, which they cannot, dare not, will not, pretend to; namely, the power to inflict corporal puniſhments upon obſtinate and contumacious offenders, and delivering them up to Satan; which power, if at any time I make uſe of, it is "for edification, not for deſtruction." (W. and B.) Thoſe puniſhments are deſign'd to preſerve the peace and unity of Chriſt's Church; by caſting out thoſe who corrupt and divide, and inſtead of building, pull down, and (as much as in them lies) tear to pieces this ſpiritual houſe, by ſetting up new ſects and parties among Chriſtians. (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 4. and 1 Cor. iv. 1, 15. and v. 5.

That I may not ſeem.] As if he had ſaid, I will not ſpeak much of this our authority, leſt I ſhould ſeem (as they accuſe me) to ſpeak big in letters, and to terrify you with the threatnings of my power. (Hall)

His bodily preſence is weak.] Our Apoſtle here goes on, vindicating himſelf from the aſperſions and reflections which the falſe teachers caſt upon him. They told the Corinthians, that St. Paul's letters were indeed ſevere and authoritative, terrifying and affrighting; but his perſonal "preſence was weak, and his ſpeech contemptible." Tradition tells us, that Paul (according to his name) was a man of very little ſtature, and his voice anſwerably ſmall; whence, probably, the falſe apoſtles took occaſion to raiſe this report of his preſence and ſpeech. St. Chryſoſtom ſaith, that St. Paul's ſtature was low, his body crooked, his head bald; and when it is added, that "his ſpeech was contemptible," it cannot be underſtood, as if it were ſo for want of eloquence, but it is thought, this refers rather to ſome infirmity, or natural impediment, which the Apoſtle might have in his ſpeech. The gifts of knowledge and learning, of utterance and elocution, as they are diſtinct in their nature, ſo they are ſeparable in their ſubject, and do not always go together; a perſon of the profoundeſt knowledge is not always happy in elocution and utterance. However, in theſe falſe teachers, we ſee the conſtant method and practice of impoſtors and ſeducers; namely, to aſperſe and leſſen all that ſtand in their light. This is an old way of inſinuating into the people. The falſe prophets fear'd they ſhould never reign at Corinth, but by bringing St. Paul into diſ-eſteem with the Corinthians; therefore they ſay, "his letters are weighty, but his bodily preſence weak." But the Apoſtle, ver. 11. gives them to underſtand, that they ſhould find him the ſame both abſent and preſent; and that his deeds then ſhould appear as awful as his words now; that when he came again, he would not ſpare, but puniſh all diſobedience. Note here, that the thing which St. Paul would have his accuſers fear, was, that by the miraculous gift of the Holy Ghoſt given to him, to inflict corporal puniſhments upon diſobedient perſons, they ſhould ſpeed as Elymas did, Acts xiii. 8. who was ſmitten with blindneſs, &c. (B.) See the notes on chap. xi. 6, &c. and 1 Cor. i. 17, and ii. 3, 4.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. For we dare not make ourſelves of the number, or compare ourſelves with ſome that commend themſelves; but they, meaſuring themſelves by themſelves, and comparing themſelves among themſelves, are not wiſe. But we will not boaſt of things without our meaſure, but according to the meaſure of the rule, which God hath diſtributed to us; a meaſure to reach even unto you. For we ſtretch not ourſelves beyond our meaſure, as though we reached not unto you; for we are come as far as to you alſo, in preaching the Goſpel of Chriſt: Not boaſting of things without our meaſure, that is, of other mens labours; but having hope, when your faith is increaſed, that we ſhall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly, To preach the Goſpel in the regions beyond you, and not to boaſt in another man's line, of things made ready to our hand. But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. For not he that commendeth himſelf, is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth.

For we dare not make.] Obſerve here, 1. St. Paul's juſt charge, which he brings in againſt the falſe apoſtles, for their pride and vanity, in commending themſelves, and comparing themſelves with ſuch as were like themſelves; "They, meaſuring themſelves by themſelves, and comparing themſelves among themſelves, are not wiſe." The reaſon why many think themſelves wiſer than they are, is, becauſe they compare themſelves with thoſe that are below themſelves, and not above them, in underſtanding and knowledge. It is an excellent mean to keep us from pride, to conſider, how many are above us in knowledge; that there are thouſands ſo much excelling us in underſtanding, that our knowledge is but ignorance, our ſtrength but weakneſs, our faith but unbelief, our fruitfulneſs but barrenneſs, compared with theirs. 2. As the pride and vanity of the falſe apoſtles, ſo the great modeſty and humility of St. Paul, the true Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt; "But we will not boaſt of things without our meaſure, but according to the meaſure of the rule which God hath diſtributed to us." Where note, The Apoſtle makes his apoſtleſhip, or preaching of the Goſpel, to be, as it were, his ſpiritual exerciſe, or running a race, to which he here alludes; declaring that he kept his province, his ſtage, his compaſs of ground, which God had marked out to him; beyond or out of which line, whoever pretends to run, doth over-extend himſelf, and boaſt without his meaſure. 3. That the Apoſtle's line or meaſure reached as far as Corinth, where Chriſt never had been preached: Thither he came, and there he firſt planted the Chriſtian faith among them; and he takes occaſion from thence, to advance himſelf above the falſe apoſtles. 1. That he could ſhew a commiſſion to preach to the Corinthians; a meaſure by which God had diſtributed the Corinthians to him, as his proper province; which none of them could pretend unto. 2. That, whereas they went out of their line, leaping from one church to another, he went on orderly in the converſion of the churches to the faith, from Judea, through all the interjacent provinces, till he came to Corinth. 3. That, whereas they came to thoſe churches where the Goſpel had been already preached, and ſo could only "boaſt of things made ready to their hands," he preached the Goſpel where Chriſt was not named before. (B. and W.) See the notes on chap. iii. 1. and v. 12. and Rom. xv. 18.

In another man's line.] The allotrios canon is that province which ſomebody elſe hath undertaken; canon denoting the line by which his race was terminated, and allotrios referring to the cuſtom in the ſtadia, that each of the racers had his path, where he was to run, chalk'd out to him, and if one did ſtep over into the other's path, he did (hyperekteinesthai) extend himſelf, or run, over his line. In reference to this, the Apoſtle here ſaith, that he had ſome hope, that he might (megalynesthai eis periſſeian) enlarge his courſe in length, as it were, by running farther than the goal that was firſt ſet him; that is, go farther in preaching the Goſpel, and yet not go over his line, that is, not run over into the other man's path or race, but (kata canona hemon) keep within his own white, or line, which divided his province from other mens on the other ſide of him. (H.) See the notes on Rom xv. 17, &c.

Not he that commendeth himſelf.] Here obſerve, 1. The proneneſs which is in human nature, to admire, applaud, and commend itſelf. Man is a proud piece of fleſh; and a little apprehended excellency in himſelf preſently puffs him up, and he looks big with conceit: 'Tis rare to ſee a man rich in gifts, and poor in ſpirit: poverty of ſpirit is better than all the riches of gifts; yea, it is the trueſt riches of grace. 2. Tho' a man is prone to commend and admire himſelf, yet ſelf-commendation is no juſt praiſe, but rather diſparagement; a ſhameful indication both of pride and folly. He that commendeth himſelf, is not approved either of God or wiſe men: The ſame word, in Hebrew, ſignifies to praiſe ourſelves, and to be fooliſh; becauſe there is no greater evidence of folly, than ſelf-commendation: Yet ſometimes a wiſe man is forced to boaſt of his own performance, rather in a way of ſelf-vindication, than by way of ſelf-commendation. 3. That it is God's approbation, and not our own commendation, which is matter of true praiſe and real honour. When God and conſcience bear witneſs to our ſincerity, we need neither our own, nor others commendation; the open teſtimony of God, and the ſilent applauſe of our own conſcience, is far above all commendations whatſoever. (B.)

CHAP. XI.

The Apoſtle here enters upon a forced commendation of himſelf in his own neceſſary vindication; declaring his equality with the chief Apoſtles; his having preached the Goſpel to them without any charge to them; and his many and great ſufferings on that account.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. WOULD to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly; and indeed bear with me. For I am jealous over you with godly jealouſy; for I have eſpouſed you to one husband, that I may preſent you as a chaſte virgin to Chriſt. But I fear leſt by any means, as the ſerpent beguiled Eve through his ſubtilty, ſo your minds ſhould be corrupted from the ſimplicity that is in Chriſt. For if he that cometh, preacheth another Jeſus whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another ſpirit, which ye have not received, or another goſpel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him. For I ſuppoſe I was not a whit behind the very chief apoſtles. But though I be rude in ſpeech, yet not in knowledge; but we have been throughly made manifeſt among you in all things.

Bear with me a little in my folly.] Obſerve here, 1. That which the Apoſtle calls his folly, is his ſpeaking ſo much in his own commendation and praiſe; becauſe ordinarily ſelf commendation has a very great ſhew of folly in it, tho' not always: As if he had ſaid, "I would ye could bear with me a little," in that, which looks like a fooliſh boaſting in me; namely, my glorying in my performances, in my ſervices and ſufferings, among you; and indeed ye muſt bear with me herein. Where note, That altho' the Apoſtle lay under a neceſſity to commend himſelf, for the vindication of his office, which made him free from folly in this matter; yet, becauſe ſuch as did not know the neceſſity which lay upon St. Paul thus ſpeaking, would be apt to impute folly to him for thus ſpeaking, he therefore himſelf calls it folly firſt, and tells the Corinthians, they did and muſt bear with it. 2. The reaſon aſſign'd, which conſtrain'd the Apoſtle thus to do it; viz. his holy jealouſy for them. He had, by preaching the Goſpel, brought them to know and believe in Chriſt; and ſo, by converting them to the Chriſtian faith, "had eſpouſed them to Chriſt:" He therefore earneſtly deſired,

" that he might preſent them as a chaſte virgin (that is, a ſpotleſs church) to Chriſt." As the Jews ſay, that Moſes eſpouſed Iſrael to God on mount Sinai, when he made them enter into covenant with him there; ſo, ſays the Apoſtle here, by converting you to the Chriſtian faith, " I have eſpouſed you to one husband," even Chriſt. This is his firſt reaſon, why they ſhould hearken to him; viz. 1. The ardent holy love which he bare to them; taking his metaphor from the jealouſy in a conjugal relation, and ſpeaking as a wooer, tho' he did not woo for himſelf, but for Chriſt, ver. 2. 2. The holy fear he had, illuſtrated by a compariſon, viz. That what the ſerpent was to Eve, the ſame he would be to them, if he could, ver. 3. 3. That if their new teachers could bring another Chriſt, a more excellent Goſpel, or confer more excellent gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, they might be heard; but ſince that was impoſſible, therefore they ought to hear him, ver. 4. And, 4. That, as he was not only ſuperior to thoſe falſe teachers, but equal with even " the very chiefeſt Apoſtles," therefore alſo they ought to hear him, ver. 5. (Firmin, W. and B.) Obſerve here alſo, 3. That where the Apoſtle ſays, " I have eſpouſed you to one husband," ver. 2. he gives us to underſtand, That the condition of having God is like to that of a husband; one, and alone, or not at all. (Andr.) For (as we may gather from ver. 4.) the unity of the church and of her miniſtry is the fountain of her excellency. There is but one husband of the church, Jeſus Chriſt; one ſole pledge of his fidelity, his Spirit; and one only contract of his marriage, the Goſpel: Intolerable therefore is the deluſion of hereticks, who, pretending to adhere to the ſame Church, to confeſs one and the ſame Chriſt, to receive one and the ſame Spirit, and to preach one and the ſame Goſpel, introduce a new doctrine, and a new miniſtry; and that by a new kind of way, without miſſion, authority, or miracles. (Q.) 4. That to theſe kind of falſe teachers laſt mentioned, the Apoſtle plainly alludeth, by that phraſe " he that cometh," ver. 4. meaning ſuch as came of themſelves, and were not ſent by God. (Aſſ.) 5. That the corruption of their minds, which he expreſſeth his apprehenſion of, ver. 3. is to be underſtood of the falſe doctrines of the Gnoſticks, and others, the followers of Simon Magus, and their boaſted human eloquence. (H. and Fell) And, 6. That, where our tranſlation makes the Apoſtle ſay, " Ye might well bear with him," ver. 4. as if he did approve of their bearing with ſuch as ſhould come among them, " preaching another Jeſus," &c. we are to obſerve, 1. That he declares his abhorrence of ſuch an action, Gal. i. 8, 9. pronouncing an anathema againſt even " an angel from heaven," that ſhould preſume to do ſo. And, 2. That there is nothing more contrary to the diſcourſe and deſign of the Apoſtle, in this place; who is ſo far from allowing the conduct of the Corinthians in ſuch a caſe, that he only upbraids them with being capable of ſuch impiety and baſeneſs. " But I fear (ſays he) leſt by any means, as the ſerpent beguiled Eve," &c. For if one ſhould come, and " preach another Jeſus," &c. ye would ridiculouſly " bear with him." The Apoſtle tells what they were capable of doing, on ſuch an occaſion; and is ſo far from approving them, as the verſions ſeem to inſinuate, that he ſharply reproaches them for it. (Eſſay, and Fox.) See the notes on ver. 5, 16, and 19. chap. v. 13. and xii. 16. John viii. 44. Rom. vii 4. and 1 Cor. i. 12.

I ſuppoſe, I was not a whit behind.] Obſerve here, 1. The great modeſty of the Apoſtle, in this expreſſion, " I ſuppoſe, I was not a whit behind the very chiefeſt Apoſtles." He might have ſaid, he was equal with them, and in ſome ſenſe ſuperior to them; even the moſt eminent of them, Peter, James, and John. Indeed the apoſtleſhip, as an office, was of equal honour to all the Apoſtles: But, even among them, ſome had more excellent gifts, and greater enlargements, and did more ſignal ſervices than others; for thus one of thoſe ſtars differ'd from another in brightneſs and glory. 2. Before whom it is, that St. Paul thus compares himſelf with the chief Apoſtles: It was not before the true, but the falſe apoſtles, that he makes this modeſt boaſt: He did not contend for the upper-hand with any of the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and ſay, I am not behind any of you, or I am better than any of you; but he only gave check to thoſe falſe apoſtles, who undervalued him, and poured contempt upon him. He who ſaid, at another time, " I am not worthy to be called an Apoſtle," ſays here, " I am not behind the chiefeſt Apoſtles." From whence we learn, That the miniſters of Chriſt may ſtand upon terms of credit with thoſe that vilify their perſons, diſparage their function, and diſcredit that honourable work, which God hath called them unto: Tho' all ambitious contending with others is odious, yet no man ought to betray either the truth of God, or his own integrity, leſt he ſhould be counted contentious: He purchaſes the opinion of an humble and peaceable miniſter too dear, who either pays the faith of God for it, or his own credit; ſomething of reputation being abſolutely neceſſary in a miniſter, to render his labours ſucceſsful. 3. The objection, which the falſe apoſtles (thoſe proud boaſters of their eloquence) made againſt St. Paul, namely, that he was " rude in ſpeech." That the Apoſtle had ſome imperfection in his ſpeech or utterance, is the opinion of many. Others affirm, that he was an eloquent preacher, from Acts xiv. 12. where he is compared to Mercurius for it; but he did not think fit, in his miniſtry, to uſe the Grecian flaunting way of oſtentation thereof; that ſo the power of the Goſpel might not ſeem to be placed in human wiſdom. However, ſays the Apoſtle, " tho' I be rude in ſpeech, yet not in knowledge;" if my language has nothing extraordinary in it, yet ſure nothing can be objected againſt my ſkill in the myſteries of ſalvation. But I need not tell you of this, who have had the proof of it in my miniſtry among yourſelves. Note here, the manner and method of St. Paul's preaching; it was grave and ſerious, pious and ardent, plain and profitable: No doubt, he could have acted the orator in the pulpit, as well as moſt: But he choſe rather to ſpeak cloſe and home to the conſciences of men, in a plain and familiar ſtile, delivering all his Evangelical and Apoſtolical precepts ſo plainly, that the weakeſt capacities might underſtand and receive them. Plain truths, without art or varniſh, may be conveyed with more warmth and vigour to the conſcience, than all the charms of human eloquence from the moſt fluent and popular tongue. (B.) Dr. Whitby has this remark upon this place; This (ſays he) cannot refer to his want of eloquence, or rhetorical artifice, in his compoſitions; for this ſeems equally wanting in the Epiſtles of St. Peter and St. James: It therefore muſt refer to ſome imperfection in his ſpeech, which they (the falſe apoſtles) had not. Now, we agree with this learned gentleman, that none of the Apoſtles regarded rhetorical artifice in their compoſitions; and hope, he will agree with us, that he who cannot ſee true and genuine eloquence in the Apoſtolical writings, is unqualified to be a critic: for, tho' the Doctor has made eloquence and rhetorical artifice equivalent expreſſions, 'tis certain, they are different things, and one may be where the other is not. 'Tis not unuſual in the beſt orators, to conceal or leſſen their own eloquence, in order to inſinuate what they ſay with more force and advantage. Indeed nothing can be more noble and eloquent, than this very chapter, where St. Paul ſpeaks of the rudeneſs of his Speech. (Blackw.) See the preface to the Epiſtle to the Romans; and the notes on chap. iv. 2. v. 11. and x. 10 Acts xvii. 22, &c. 1 Cor. i. 12, 17. ii. 1, 13. and xv. 10.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Have I committed an offence in abaſing my ſelf that ye might be exalted, becauſe I have preached to you the goſpel of God freely? I robbed other churches, taking wages of them to do you ſervice. And when I was preſent with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man; for that which was lacking to me, the brethren which came from Macedonia, ſupplied: And in all things I have kept my ſelf from being burdenſome unto you, and ſo will I keep my ſelf. As the truth of Chriſt is in me, no man ſhall ſtop me of this boaſting in the regions of Achaia. Wherefore? becauſe I love you not? God knoweth. But what I do, that I will do, that I may cut off occaſion from them which deſire occaſion, that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we. For ſuch are falſe apoſtles, deceitful workers, transforming themſelves into the apoſtles of Chriſt. And no marvel; for Satan himſelf is transformed into an angel of light: Therefore it is no great thing if his miniſters alſo be transformed as the miniſters of righteouſneſs; whoſe end ſhall be according to their works.

Have I committed.] Obſerve here, 1. That St. Paul, in his former epiſtle to the Corinthians, abundantly proved the lawfulneſs of his taking maintenance from thoſe to whom he preached the Goſpel: Yet here he tells them, he preached freely to them, without putting them to any charge, tho' at the ſame time he had ſubſiſtence from the brethren of Macedonia. From whence learn, That one church ought to contribute towards the furtherance of the Goſpel in and amongſt other churches. Here the brethren in Macedonia ſupply'd the Apoſtle with maintenance, while he preached to the church of Corinth. 2. The reaſon why St. Paul did preach the Goſpel without receiving any thing for the ſame at Corinth; namely, to " cut off occaſion" from the falſe Apoſtles, who ſought occaſion to traduce and ſlander him, as a poor fellow that preached for bread; and gloried that he preached freely. Where note, That it is very probable, that theſe falſe Apoſtles were ſome rich men, who took no pay of the churches for what they did, but preached, or rather deceived, freely, and would have reproached the Apoſtle, as a mercenary preacher, had he taken any thing. From the whole, learn, 1. That it is agreeable to the mind of Chriſt, that the miniſters and diſpenſers of his Goſpel ſhould be maintained. A maintenance for the miniſtry, is certainly of divine right. 2. That the Apoſtles themſelves did not work, at leaſt, not at all times, for their livelihood, but, generally ſpeaking, did always receive maintenance from the churches, ver. 8. "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them." We do not find the eleven Apoſtles, after the Holy Ghoſt came upon them, wrought afterwards with their hands for their livelihood, but "gave themſelves continually to prayer, and to the miniſtry of the word," Acts vi. 4. 3. That tho' St. Paul did labour with his own hands at Corinth, and refuſed maintenance, for the reaſon before-mentioned, yet his example doth not enjoin us to work for our ſubſiſtence with the labour of our hands, nor forbid us to take maintenance, when the churches we ſerve are able to maintain us. St. Paul tells us, when he wrought with his hands, he had then a power to leave working, 1 Cor. ix. 6. He had a right to a maintenance from the Church at Corinth, tho' upon prudential conſideration he did forbear it; and no law of Chriſt reſtrained him from it. 4. That there have been perſons, all along, from the firſt planting and preaching of the Goſpel, who have ſought occaſion, and taken all occaſions, tho' very unjuſtly, to charge the Miniſters of Chriſt with covetouſneſs, worldly-mindedneſs, and with preaching for filthy lucre ſake. It was St. Paul's own caſe here; and therefore, ſays he, I will glory in this, that at Corinrh, and all Achaia, I have preached freely, to "cut off occaſion from them that deſire occaſion," to charge me with covetouſneſs and wordly-mindedneſs, which he would by no means give them an handle for. And thus it continues to this day: Let a Miniſter be ever ſo laborious in his office, or inoffenſive in his life, if he expects but a moderate part of what is his juſt due, there are thoſe that will cheat him of one half of his right, and then charge him with covetouſneſs for demanding the other. And, 6. The deſcription and character here given by St. Paul of the falſe apoſtles. They "transformed themſelves into the Apoſtles of Chriſt:" That is, they pretend themſelves to be Chriſt's Apoſtles, and act as if they were ſuch indeed; they take up the doctrine of Chriſt, in ſome things which the Holy Apoſtles taught, but it was that they might weaken the eſtimation of the true Apoſtles in the hearts of the Corinthians, and ſet up themſelves there. Theſe falſe apoſtles were Judaizing Chriſtians, who mingled Judaiſm with Chriſtianity, and endeavoured to bring the Corinthians under the bondage of the ceremonial law. Behold here the firſt hereſy, with which the wiſdom of God was pleaſed to exerciſe the Church, even in the Apoſtles days; that no Church, and no age of the Church, might paſs without ſome temptation and trial; they "transform themſelves into the Apoſtles of Chriſt," even as "Satan himſelf is transformed into an angel of light." Then is Satan an angel of light, when he ſuggeſts good for evil ends, and under ſpecious pretences of bringing glory to God, doth tempt perſons to tranſgreſs the will of God. Thus the falſe apoſtles would preach error, with as great zeal and induſtry, as the Apoſtles of Chriſt did preach truth; and uſe their utmoſt arguments, perſuaſions and motives, for embracing of error, which the holy Apoſtles did for the entertainment of truth; ſeeming to do the ſame things that the true miniſters of Chriſt did. It is very poſſible for men to be really Satan's inſtruments, animated and taught by him to do his work, againſt the intereſt of Chriſt and his truth, and yet at the ſame time pretend to excel and go beyond Chriſt's faithful miniſters in preaching truth and holineſs. So that the higheſt pretences to truth, orthodoxy, free-grace, purity, and unity, are no ſufficient evidences of a true miniſtry. Satan and his miniſters, who love to transform themſelves ſometimes into angels of light, may pretend to all theſe, and are, notwithſtanding, the ſworn enemies of Chriſt and his kingdom. (B.) See Mr. Giles Firmin's ſermon againſt the Quakers, 1655, and the notes on Acts xviii. 2. Rom. ix. 1. and 1 Cor. iv. 10. and ix. 6, &c.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. I ſay again, Let no man think me a fool; if otherwiſe, yet as a fool receive me, that I may boaſt my ſelf a little. That which I ſpeak, I ſpeak it not after the Lord, but as it were fooliſhly in this confidence of boaſting. Seeing that many glory after the fleſh, I will glory alſo. For ye ſuffer fools gladly, ſeeing ye your ſelves are wiſe. For ye ſuffer if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himſelf, if a man ſmite you on the face. I ſpeak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak: Howbeit, whereinſoever any is bold (I ſpeak fooliſhly) I am bold alſo. Are they Hebrews? So am I: Are they Iſraelites? So am I: Are they the ſeed of Abraham? So am I: Are they the miniſters of Chriſt? (I ſpeak as a fool) I am more: In labours more abundant, in ſtripes above meaſure, in priſons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty ſtripes ſave one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I ſtoned, thrice I ſuffered ſhipwreck; a night and a day I have been in the deep: In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countreymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderneſs, in perils in the ſea, in perils among falſe brethren; In wearineſs and painfulneſs, in watchings often, in hunger and thirſt, in faſtings often, in cold and nakedneſs: Beſides thoſe things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not? If I muſt needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities. The God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which is bleſſed for evermore, knoweth that I lye not. In Damaſcus the governor, under Aretas the king, kept the city of the Damaſcenes with a garriſon, deſirous to apprehend me: And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and eſcaped his hands.

Let no man think me a fool.] See the notes on ver. 1. and chap. v. 13.

I ſpeak it not after the Lord.] See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 6, 12.

Glory after the Lord.] Note, That by "glorying after the fleſh" is meant glorying in any external privileges and advantages; as that they were "the ſeed of Abraham," &c. Now, the Apoſtle tells the Corinthians plainly, that tho' there is nothing "after the fleſh," which deſerves greatly to be gloried in, yet ſeeing that the falſe apoſtles did pride themſelves in theſe things, he could boaſt of the ſame carnal privileges with them, and "glory after the fleſh" as well as themſelves. (B.) See the notes on ver. 22. and chap. v. 16.

Ye ſuffer fools gladly.] Here the Apoſtle, with ſome ſmartneſs, reflects upon the Corinthians (whom he ironically calls wiſe men!) for ſuffering themſelves to be impoſed upon by their falſe teachers, to be tyranniz'd over, to be ſpung'd upon and exhauſted, to be "brought again into bondage" to Jewiſh ceremonies, to be "ſmitten on the face," that is, to be upbraided to their very faces, for having ſubjected themſelves to ſo mean and weak a perſon as Paul, a Tent-maker. (B.) The people, it ſeems, were there (as they uſually are) credulous, and eaſy enough to be caught with this guile. They readily drank in the prejudices againſt St. Paul; and were grown ſo immoderately fond of their new teachers, that, at the ſame time, they thought the juſt and gentle authority of an Apoſtle a yoke too heavy; the utmoſt vanity and inſolence, the moſt inſatiable pillaging and avarice, the moſt imperious tyranny, and contumelious treatment, went down very contentedly, from the hands of the Intruders. Had this partiality had no farther conſequence, than the leſſening St. Paul's private profit or reputation, he would not have thought it worth while to vindicate his honour ſo ſollicitouſly: But, foreſeeing that ſo undeſerved a preference of the men would certainly bring on a liking of their errors, and ſo endanger the ſouls of as many as ſhould adhere to them, charity to his brethren call'd for juſtice to himſelf; and therefore, for the ſake of thoſe deluded wretches, and to do right to the truth, he found it neceſſary to aſſert his due, and to provoke thoſe bold detractors to a compariſon. (Stanh.) See the notes on chap. x. 10. Rom xvi. 18. and 1 Cor. i. 26. iii. 22. iv. 19. and v. 3.

If a man take of you.] Our tranſlation here is very faint. For, after the loſs of liberty and goods, what elſe remains to be taken? The word lambano has a forenſic ſignification; and ſignifies the ſame as to keep in hold, or to convict. Therefore, the better to preſerve the climax in the Apoſtle's diſcourſe, we ſhould render this paſſage thus, If any one accuſe, or condemn you: Or elſe, with reſpect to the rapacious falſe prophets, by an hendiadys, thus, If any one make a prey of you. (Maſſ.)

Miniſters of Chriſt.] See the notes on 1 Cor. iv. 1.

In labours more.] Note here, That the Apoſtle proves the truth of his miniſtry and apoſtleſhip, not, as elſewhere, from the miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, which accompanied his preaching, but from his ſufferings; which the falſe Apoſtles could not pretend to, and therefore could not glory that they were like unto him in them. (W. and B.) See the notes on chap. iv. 8, &c. and vi. 4

In deaths oft.] That is, in the pangs and ſorrows of death; or in danger of preſent death. (Aſſ.) See the notes on chap i. 10. and iv. 11, and 1 Cor. xv. 31.

Forty ſtripes ſave one.] Of this puniſhment of St. Paul, theſe four things are to be obſerved; 1. That St. Paul, as a Roman, was not to be whipp'd, Ex lege portia; and therefore, Acts xx. 29. when the tribune had commanded him to be beaten thus, underſtanding that he was a Roman, he diſmiſs'd him, and was afraid, ſaith St. Luke, becauſe he had bound him: 2. That he was yet ſubject, as a Jew, to the laws of the Jews, which were yet in force; and ſo was ſubjected to this Jewiſh puniſhment, as a Jew; 3. That he was dealt with as a robuſtious offender, in ſuffering ſo oft the utmoſt extremity of the Jewiſh law, when they that were weak, or which upon any other ſcore had any mitigation, were not uſed ſo ſeverely; according to that of Maimonides (Hil. Sanhedrim c. xvii.) They inflict, ſaith he, no more than forty ſtripes, tho' he be as ſtrong as Sampſon, but if he be weak, then they abate of that number: 4. That that ſum of thirty nine was the ſolemn proportion in the Jewiſh puniſhments, when they were moſt ſeverely inflicted. So, in Joſephus, of one that had accuſed his wife falſly of the loſs of her virginity before marriage, Let him extend himſelf, and receive thirty nine ſtripes. For when the number which might not be exceeded, was by the law defined forty, Deut. xxv. 3. and when the cuſtom was taken up, of executing this puniſhment with a rod of three branches, and ſo giving three ſtrokes at one blow (or, as it is in Maccoth c. iii. Sect. 12. with one twiſted cord, unto which two more were faſtened) every ſtroke conſequently going for three, (as Maimonides affirms, in Sanhedrim c. xvii. ſect. 2.) it was conſequently impoſſible to inflict more ſtripes than thirty nine, unleſs they exceeded to two and forty; and ſo that of thirty nine was the laſt among thoſe that were lawful. See Talmud Babyl. in Maccoth, chap. iii. As for the “beating with rods,” which follows, ver. 25. that differs from this of the ſcourging; the (rhabdoi) rods, being wands or cudgels, a bundle of which was carried before the Roman conſul, and he that carried them call'd rhabdouchos; which makes it probable that this was a Roman ſort of puniſhment, and ſo here differenced from the ſcourging with twiſted cords, which was inflicted by the Jews (See the notes on Luke xxiii. 16.) howſoever ſo much diſtinguiſh'd from the other, as rods and ſcourges differ. (H. W. and B.)

Once was I ſtoned.] See the notes on Acts xiv. 19.

Thrice I ſuffered ſhipwreck.] None of theſe ſhipwrecks are mention'd in The Acts: For that in Acts xxvii. happen'd not till ſome years after the writing this epiſtle. (Fell)

In the deep.] To what paſſage of St. Paul's ſtory this of his “being a day and a night (en to bytho) in the deep” doth belong, cannot be ſhewed out of Scripture. 'Tis not altogether improbable, what Bæda (l. quæſt. qu. iii. tit. viii.) ſaith, out of Theodorus Tarſenſis, that in Cyzicum (which is in the Propontis, a famous city) there is a priſon, which for the depth of it under ground is called (bythos,) the bottom of the ſea, a moſt noiſome filthy priſon; as in Athens there was one called (Barathron) hell, at Syracuſe (Latomia) the mineral, and many like in other places; ſee Suidas in the word Barathron. Into this, as a moſt infamous priſon, St. Paul might well be caſt, paſſing from Troas to that city, tho' St. Luke (who reports not things particularly, ſave when he himſelf was preſent) makes no mention of it. And indeed, whatſoever elſe may be meant by the word Bythos, St. Luke ſeems not to have made mention of this paſſage; there being no reaſon to apply that of Acts xxvii. to it, the epiſtle being written before that time, in the compaſs of the Macedonian progreſs, Acts xx. 1. and if it might be conceived to be written after it, that would more reaſonably be defined to be one of his three ſhipwrecks foregoing here. Theophylact ſpeaks of ſome that interpreted it of a well, called (Bythos) profundity, becauſe of the great depth of it, wherein after his danger at Lyſtra, he hid himſelf. (H.)

In perils among falſe brethren.] In this rhetorical abridgment of the ſufferings and dangers of his life (here enumerated by the Apoſtle) there is a very obſervable gradation. The Apoſtle ſtill riſes in his calamities, and puts this laſt, as the higheſt perfection of his miſery; as that which made the deepeſt impreſſion upon his paſſions, and what he bore with the greateſt reſentment and difficulty. The many ſevere pains and tortures inflicted on his body were nothing to this: Nay, the good nature and mercy of highwaymen and Pagans, and even the devouring boſom of the deep, were to be preferr'd before, and ſooner (it ſeems) to be truſted to, than the more certainly deſtructive, and fallacious, boſom of a treacherous, falſe brother. (Sachev.) See his ſermon at large on this text.

In wearineſs and painfulneſs.] See the notes on ver. 23.

Thoſe things that are without.] The Greek word parektos ſignifies not properly the “things that are without,” but the things that are beſides; and over and above: So that the meaning is, “Beſides thoſe things that” I have now reckon'd with the reſt, “the care of all the churches” lieth upon me. (Aſſ.)

That which cometh upon me.] This tranſlation is very low, and far ſhort of the character of our zealous Apoſtle. The word epiſyſtaſis has a ſtronger emphaſis than is expreſs'd by the word coming; as in Acts xxiv. 12. where it has a tumultuous ſignification: And therefore it might here be better tranſlated, “That which crowdeth upon me daily.” (Maſſ.) 'Tis certain, that this word epiſyſtaſis doth expreſs a mob or multitude, violently and tumultuouſly aſſaulting one, and that too not once only, but with frequent returns. And therefore, becauſe there were innumerable cares with which the Apoſtle was oppreſs'd, he uſeth the word here with a very elegant and beautiful metaphor. (Leigh) Beſides thoſe things which were afflicting to him from without, the care and buſineſs of all the new-planted Churches was daily upon his heart and hand: Beſides all his bodily labours, by journeying and travelling inceſſantly from place to place, his ſolicitous care and thoughtfulneſs of mind, for the proſperity and happineſs of all the Churches of Chriſt, both near and a-far off, was great and preſſing. The holy man felt as much by ſympathy, as he did by ſenſe: Many were the perſonal troubles which he had felt; but more were the Churches troubles of which he had the feeling. (B.) Had St. Peter any where ſaid, that “the care of all the Churches” came daily upon him, how would the Church of Rome have boaſted and triumph'd; and what ſtrange gloſſes, and forced interpretations, ſhould we have had upon this place, to make it ſubſervient to their favourite notion, the Pope's ſupremacy? (Fox) See the notes on Acts xx. 18, &c. and Rom. i. 14.

Who is weak?] See the notes on Rom. xiv. 1, &c. and 1 Cor. viii. 13. and ix. 22.

Which concern mine infirmities.] By infirmities here we are to underſtand ſufferings, reproaches and diſgraces, afflictions and perſecutions, for the ſake of the Goſpel. Where note, That the Apoſtle choſe rather to glory in what Chriſt had enabled him to ſuffer, than what he enabled him to do, for him. He had wrought divers miracles, could ſpeak divers tongues, had done very great and eminent ſervices for Chriſt: But not a word of theſe; becauſe theſe indeed were evidences of the power of God in him, and of the favour of God towards him, but no demonſtrations of any inherent grace or goodneſs in him: Whereas his patient bearing of ſuch long, ſharp, and continual ſufferings for the ſake of the Goſpel, were undeniable proofs of extraordinary meaſures of faith and patience, of holy ſelf-denial and eminent love to God; and conſequently were a truer and greater cauſe of boaſting, than extraordinary gifts, and miraculous operations. (B.)

The God and Father.] See the notes on Rom. ix, i, 5.

Under Aretas the king.] The Gaſſanii reign'd in Syria, ſome ſay 400, others 600 years. Many of them were called Harethi, or Aretæ; which is the name of the king here. See Mr. Pocock's notes on Gregorius Abul Fararius his ſtory of the Arabians, p. 77, 78. (H.) Aretas, having then war with the Romans, probably did this at the requeſt of, and out of compliance with, the Jews; and alſo permitted their Sanhedrin, to queſtion, ſummon, and cenſure any Jews dwelling in his dominions, for any matters of their religion. 'Tis likely alſo, that St. Paul, newly come thither from Arabia, a country then alſo ſubject to this prince, was repreſented to him, or his governor, by the Jews, as a Roman ſpy; which cauſed ſo ſtrict a watch, to have apprehended him. (Fell)

In a basket.] See the notes on Acts ix. 25.

CHAP. XII.

Here the Apoſtle proceeds to mention another kind of glorying, viz. in extraordinary viſions and revelations which he had from God: Yet he rather chuſeth to glory in his infirmities. He promiſeth to come to them again, but with the affection of a father; tho' he fears, he ſhall yet find many offenders among them.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. IT is not expedient for me doubtleſs to glory: I will come to viſions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Chriſt, above fourteen years ago (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth) Such an one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew ſuch a man (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth) How that he was caught up into paradiſe, and heard unſpeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Of ſuch an one will I glory; yet of myſelf I will not glory, but in mine infirmities. For though I would deſire to glory, I ſhall not be a fool; for I will ſay the truth: But now I forbear, leſt any man ſhould think of me above that which he ſeeth me to be, or that he heareth of me. And leſt I ſhould be exalted above meaſure, through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the fleſh, the meſſenger of Satan, to buffet me, leſt I ſhould be exalted above meaſure. For this thing I beſought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me: And he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee; for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Moſt gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon me. Therefore I take pleaſure in infirmities, in reproaches, in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſt's ſake; for when I am weak, then am I ſtrong.

It is not expedient for me.] All the Greek ſcholiaſts own our reading of theſe words, which from the Greek, (kauchaſthai de ou ſympheroi) may be render'd thus; Surely, it profiteth (or it advantageth) not me to glory, for I ſhall "come to viſions:" And then the ſenſe may be ſupplied thus, But it may be ſo to you: For I ſhall "come to viſions and revelations of the Lord;" in which I ſhall give ſuch an evidence of the favour of Chriſt to me, ſuch a teſtimony of my miſſion from heaven, as none of the falſe apoſtles, or deceitful workers, can pretend to. St. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, all agree in this reading. (W.) Some diſtinguiſh viſions from revelations, after this manner; a viſion (ſay they) is when ſomething is ſupernaturally repreſented to the ſight, whereof yet the party knoweth not the meaning and ſignification, like thoſe of Pharaoh and Nebuchadonoſor: A revelation, when ſomething is ſupernaturally repreſented to the ſight, and the meaning and ſignification thereof made known to the party who hath ſuch a viſion, like the viſions of the Prophets. But, becauſe it is not probable, that St. Paul had any viſion, without a revelation from Chriſt withal, what the viſion meant and imported; others, with more probability, diſtinguiſh viſions from revelations, thus, That viſions may be without an ecſtaſy; as, when the women ſaw the Angels at the ſepulchre, they were affrighted, yet not in an ecſtaſy: But revelations, ſuch as St. Paul here ſpeaks of, were apparitions in an ecſtaſy; ſuch as that of St. Peter, Acts x. 17. and that of St. John, Rev. i. 10. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 2.

I knew a man in Chriſt.] Obſerve here, 1. That the perſon here ſpoken of, was doubtleſs himſelf; otherwiſe it had been no cauſe or ground of glorying to him at all: Yet, he ſpeaks in the name of a third perſon. Thence note, That they who know moſt of God, are moſt modeſt when they come to ſpeak of themſelves. 2. The deſcription of the perſon, "A man in Chriſt;" that is, a man acted by the ſpirit of Chriſt, above himſelf: And alſo a deſcription of the place he was caught up into; Paradiſe, the ſeat of the bleſſed. Learn thence, That there is a third heaven, or heavenly Paradiſe, where are the concerns and hopes of holy ſouls: And ſouls are not ſo cloſely tied to the body, but they may, whenever God pleaſes, be rapt up into Paradiſe, or the third heaven. The Apoſtle not being able to tell whether he was "in the body, or out of the body," ſheweth that ſome-how the ſoul was there, tho' he could not declare nor diſcover the manner how. 3. What St. Paul heard, when thus rapt up into Paradiſe; namely, "unſpeakable words," ſuch as cannot be uttered; or, if uttered, cannot be underſtood. Learn thence, That the things of heavenly Paradiſe are to mortal men unſpeakable; there is no human language that hath words fit to reveal that part of heavenly things which God hath ſhut up as ſecret from us. And, 4. St. Paul's great humility, both in concealing, formerly, this extraordinary favour, and now, not without ſome difficulty and diſguiſe, mentioning it, tho', for defence of the Goſpel, in a manner, conſtrained thereunto; contenting himſelf with ſuch a fame as his deportment and outward actions, in ſerving the intereſt of Chriſt, could procure, and no way avoid. (B.) But farther we may obſerve, 5. That what anthropos en Chriſto, "a man in Chriſt," here ſignifies, may poſſibly be gueſs'd by other phraſes of the ſame making: Such is that of St. Luke, Acts xii. 11. where 'tis ſaid of Peter, genomenos en heauto, being in himſelf; that is, having been formerly in a trance, and now returned out of it; and that is called being in himſelf: Such that, Rev. i. 10. egenomen en pneumati, "I was in the ſpirit," that is, I was in a trance or ecſtaſy, and there received a viſion or revelation from God: Such, Mark i. 23. and v. 2. "A man in an unclean ſpirit;" that is, one agitated with a diabolical ſpirit, rapt and carried to do things which of himſelf he would never do. And accordingly here, "a man in Chriſt," may be one that, by the ſpirit of Chriſt, was thus tranſported, received revelations from Chriſt; and therefore, ver. 1. there is mention of "viſions and revelations," of which this is here an inſtance; and ſo, ver. 7. And all the circumſtances of the context incline to this interpretation. And this is the importance of the (ekſtaſis) ecſtaſy (ſee note on Mark iii. 21.) being out of himſelf, tranſported, either by a good or evil ſpirit; when by a good, it ſignifies a prophetick viſion; when by a bad, a kind of madneſs, as in the dæmoniacks, (tho' the word is no where in the New Teſtament uſed of them) and both contrary to the being (en heauto) in himſelf, moved only by that human principle of reaſon, &c. which he hath within him, neither (theophoroumenos, nor daimoniophoroumenos) carried by God, nor the devil. (H. and Fell) 6. That the ſcriptures ſpeak of a threefold heaven; the aerial heaven, in which the fowls flying are called "the fowls of the heaven," Matt. vi. 26. The ſiderial, in which the lights are called "ſtars of heaven," Heb. xi. 12. And the uppermoſt of all, the empyreal, in which the Angels reſiding are called "the Angels of heaven," Matt. xxiv. 36. (G. Aſſ and Fell.) 7. That the Rabbins diſtinguiſh Paradiſe from Heaven, affirming Paradiſe to be the receptacle, or place of abode for ſouls, after the ſeparation from the body, but Heaven the place where, after the day of judgment, the bodies and ſouls of the righteous ſhall everlaſtingly dwell. But neither can any ſuch diſtinction be proved out of ſcripture, nor, if it could, can Paradiſe be ſo taken in this place: For 'tis evident, by comparing ver. 4. with ver. 2. that the ſame place is meant by Paradiſe and Heaven. If there lie any myſtery in the varying of the word, and putting Paradiſe for Heaven, it ſeems to be this, that the Apoſtle, in ver. 4. intimates, that in this rapture, beſides the contemplation of celeſtial myſteries, he felt unſpeakable delight and pleaſure, like to, or exceeding, that which Adam took in the terreſtial paradiſe. (Aſſ. and Fell) 8 That the (arrheta rhemata) "unſpeakable words," ſignify words not utter'd, or not to be utter'd: Either becauſe they tranſcend man's capacity in this life; or elſe, that St. Paul was forbidden to utter them, they being reveal'd to him in particular, to ſtrengthen him againſt all the difficulties he was to encounter withal in his miniſtry, and not for the publick uſe of the Church: For St. Paul hath faithfully reveal'd "the whole counſel of God" to the Church, concerning man's ſalvation, Acts xx. 27. (Aſſ.) And, 9. That ſome think, this rapture happen'd to the Apoſtle at Antioch, Acts xiii. 3. before his firſt miſſion to the occidental Gentiles; when he is ſuppoſed to have had reveal'd to him their converſion, the apoſtaſy of the Jews, the coming of antichriſt; the return at laſt of the Jews, &c. things, which made him cry out, "O ye depth!" &c. Rom. xi. 33. Others think, it happen'd to him at Jeruſalem, after his return out of Arabia, when, he ſays, he had an ecſtaſy in the temple, Acts xxii. 17. Others at Damaſcus, at his firſt converſion, Acts ix. 12. If we read, Gal. ii. 1. "fourteen years after," &c. and ſuppoſe that journey of his to have been to the council at Jeruſalem, Acts xv. then the firſt conjecture is the moſt credible: But, if we read it four years after, as ſome would have it, and which alſo better agrees with the ſtory of St. Paul's life, then the ſecond, or third, is more probable; which ſhews alſo, how long ago he had been called, and acquainted with the ſecrets of God. (Fell) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 43. and Gal. ii. 1.

Of ſuch an one will I glory.] Here the Apoſtle declares, that altho' this foretaſte of the heavenly glory was worthy to be gloried in, and tho' he might boaſt of himſelf as thus exalted; yet, he being purely paſſive in it, and advanced freely by God to it, he choſe rather to aſcribe unto God the entire glory of that, and content himſelf in "glorying in ſuch infirmities," and debaſing ſufferings, as he could ſtrictly call his own, being undergone by him with an invincible courage and conſtancy of mind. However, he aſſures them, that if he had a mind to glory of this rapture and revelation, he might do it without folly or vanity; it being moſt certainly true: But he choſe rather to forbear, leſt he ſhould thereby give occaſion to any to over-value him, and to think more highly of him, than his common behaviour, his ordinary words and actions, gave them reaſon to do. A wiſe and good man is not ambitious of more applauſe or commendation than what his perſonal worth or merits deſervedly challenge; he deſires no man to think or ſpeak of him above that which he appeareth to be; which is always as he really is, being that in reality, which he is in appearance. (B.) See the notes on chap. v. 13. x. 8. xi. 1, 30. and 1 Cor. ii. 3.

And, leſt I ſhould be exalted.] Obſerve here, The great and ſpecial ſin which St. Paul was in danger of, by the abundance of revelations; namely, the ſin of ſpiritual pride. Learn thence, That heavenly revelations may be matter and occaſion of unmeet and ſinful exaltation. Theholieſt Chriſtians, after their moſt heavenly acquaintance, are not out of danger of ſpiritual pride, or being too much exalted: Pride is ſuch a ſin, as the holieſt Saint is not fully ſecured from; no, not when he hath been hearing "unutterable words," and ſeeing the "heavenly Paradiſe" itſelf; no not if he came down from the "third heaven," newly from converſe with angels, yet, bringing an imperfect nature with him, is he not out of danger of this ſin, much leſs is he ſo when he cometh off his knees from prayer, &c. 2. The way and means which the wiſdom of God made uſe of, for preventing St. Paul's falling into this dangerous ſin; and that was, the "giving him a thorn in the fleſh;" a bodily pain, ſay ſome; a bitter perſecution, ſay others; ſomething that was very afflictive to the fleſh, ſay all. Learn hence, That ſpiritual pride is ſo dangerous a ſin, that it is a mercy to be freed from it, even by bodily pain: God ſeeth our danger when we ſee not our own, and will hurt the body, to ſave the ſoul of his deareſt children. Oh! how much better is it that the body ſhould ſmart, than that the ſoul ſhould be over-much exalted! It is an happy "thorn in the fleſh" which lets the peſtilent and corrupt blood of ſpiritual pride out of the ſoul. Lord! Why do we contend and quarrel with thee for every ſickneſs, bodily pain, or afflictive croſs? Can ſin be prevented or killed at too dear a rate? 3. This "thorn in the fleſh" is called "the meſſenger of Satan;" from whence St. Chryſoſtom concluded, that it was ſome evil angel that was permitted and empower'd by God to ſcourge and buffet him. The ſufferings of the beſt and holieſt perſons in the fleſh, may be the buffetings of a meſſenger of Satan, and yet be from God. Satan certainly intendeth our hurt; but God over-rules him as his inſtrument to do us good: It is no proof that a man is not a child of God, becauſe Satan has a permiſſion to torment his fleſh. "The meſſenger of Satan was ſent to buffet me, (ſays St. Paul) leſt I ſhould be exalted." (B.) But, to be ſomewhat more particular, concerning (skolops te ſarki) the "thorn in the fleſh" here mentioned; ſome ſay, skolops properly ſignifieth the head of a barbed arrow; which being once got into the fleſh, cannot be pulled out but with great pain, for it teareth the fleſh round about it: Others ſay, it ſignifieth a ſharp piece of wood, as a pale or ſtake, (upon which offenders were placed, or impaled, by way of cruel puniſhment) or, at leaſt, ſome little ſharp thing, which pricketh one as he goes through thick and buſhy places. (Leigh) But, the main doubt is, what the thing was, to which the Apoſtle here alludeth, in this metaphorical phraſe. Some Divines draw this thorn in the fleſh as far as from Adam's loins, and ſay, it was original concupiſcence; which the Apoſtle calls "a law in his members," Rom. vii. 23. But this conceit is too far fetch'd: For, 1. Original ſin is general to all the regenerate; but St. Paul complains here of ſome ſpecial thing which happened only to himſelf. And, 2. St. Paul knew very well, that original ſin could not poſſibly depart from him, ſo long as he liv'd in this world, Rom. vii. 1. But he prayed earneſtly, that "this thing might depart from him." Other Divines, with moſt of the Latin interpreters, affirm, That this thing, which ſo troubled the Apoſtle, was ſome ſore diſeaſe, or infirmity of his body; as a continual head-ake, or pain in his ſtomach, or the gout, or the ſtone, or ſome ſuch grief, which daily afflicted him. But this is not likely: For, 1. St. Paul does not complain, in any of his Epiſtles, of any diſeaſe or infirmity of his body, beſides this. And, 2. Such a malady would have been a great impediment to him in the preaching of God's word, and planting the Goſpel in all countries; which he could never have done, if he had been continually tormented with any ſuch infirmity of the body. The Greek Fathers, with many modern writers, affirm, That this thing, which St. Paul prayed might depart from him, was his adverſaries in general, as Hymeneus and Philetus, whom Satan ſtirr'd up againſt him with contumelies and perſecutions, to hinder the preaching of the Goſpel: But, eſpecially and particularly, that peſtilent adverſary of his, Alexander the copper-ſmith, of whom he complains, 2 Tim. iv. 14. 'Tis true, indeed, this Alexander was one of Satan's meſſengers; and his reproaches were Satan's buffetings: But he, and the reſt of the adverſaries of the Goſpel, were thorns without his fleſh; but St. Paul complains here of ſome "thorn in his fleſh," ſome internal affliction that came cloſer to him. Other Divines are of opinion, that God did permit ſome evil angel of Satan to vex and torment the body of this bleſſed Apoſtle, as he did permit Satan to vex and torment the body of holy Job; and that this angel of Satan did buffet St. Paul; as one man would buffet another; in like manner as St. Jerome reporteth of himſelf, in his Epiſtle to Euſtochius. But, tho' this ſeems to be the plain literal ſenſe of the words, yet I cannot believe, that St. Paul was thus bodily afflicted by any evil ſpirit by fits: For, then he would never have called it a thorn ſo deeply faſtned in his fleſh: Beſides, if it had been ſo, the moſt heroical ſpirit of this Apoſtle, which was ſo far above all the buffetings of men and devils, would not have complained of ſuch a thing, but rather have gloried in it. All the Romaniſts, both old and new, are not aſhamed to affirm, That this thing, which ſo troubled the Apoſtle, was ſtimulus libidinis, a temptation and provocation of carnal luſt; which Satan ſtirr'd up in the fleſh, and in his fancy, by ſuch means as he knew very well would do it; and againſt which he did "keep his body under," 1 Cor. ix. 27. For (ſay they) if it had been any thing elſe but this, St. Paul would have told us plainly what it had been; but now, it being a thing whereof he was aſhamed, he covered it modeſtly under the metaphor of "a thorn in his fleſh." Thus ſays Bellarmin, (De Monach. l. ii. c. 3. But, 1. Eraſmus rightly calls this impurum interpretamentum, an impure interpretation; and wonders that any learned and honeſt Divine ſhould caſt ſuch filth upon the face of St. Paul, then aged, and very much broken with the labours of his miniſtry, and entertain ſo unworthy a conceit of ſo chaſt and holy an Apoſtle. 2. St. Paul had the gift of chaſtity; ſaying, "I would that all men were even as I myſelf: But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that," 1 Cor. vii. 7. Where was then this raging luſt? But, 3. If the Apoſtle here had been troubled with any ſuch temptation, he knew a very eaſy, and an honeſt, remedy againſt it; even the ſame which he gave to others in the like caſe, marriage. What thing then was this that did ſo trouble him? Why, certainly, in the judgment of the moſt orthodox Divines, who go to the very root of the text, it was ſome terror of Satan, ſome internal and ſpiritual temptation in his ſoul, and a very ſore one, whatſoever it was. When St. Paul ſays, it was "in his fleſh," he means in the outward man, in the unregenerate part of the ſoul, as in Rom. vii. Tho' a continual temptation, or affliction in the conſcience, may alſo be ſaid to be in the fleſh, by way of participation and redundancy, becauſe the fleſh, in ſuch a caſe, becomes pale and wan, and pines away. The beſt conjecture of all is this, That God did permit Satan to preſent always before the conſcience of this Apoſtle, his former blaſphemies, perſecutions, and cruelties againſt Chriſt and his Church, and to ring always in his ears that voice, "Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me?" God's purpoſe herein being to keep St. Paul from ſpiritual pride, with which he might eaſily have ſwollen "through the abundance of the revelations" of the Lord, tho' Satan's policy herein was to weaken and ſhake the Apoſtle's confidence in Chriſt. But (after all) this thorn is hid ſo deep in the fleſh, that I will ſearch after it no farther, but content myſelf with St. Auſtin's (docta ignorantia) learned ignorance, in this; who ingeniouſly confeſſeth, that he knew not particularly what this thing was, which ſo troubled the Apoſtle: But ſure he was, it was ſome ſore temptation, or other affliction; and in this all Divines agree. (Piers) See this Biſhop's Sermons on this text, in the Tower, 1642. and the notes on Gal. iv. 14.

I beſought the Lord thrice.] Note here, 1. The perſon prayed to, "the Lord;" that is, the Lord Jeſus, as appears by the two next verſes, "that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon me." Here is an inſtance of prayer directed to Chriſt; therefore here is an inſtance of Chriſt's divinity: Prayer made to Chriſt at all times, in all places, and for all things, is an evidence of his omniſcience, omnipotence, and omnipreſence; and conſequently of his being truly and eſſentially God. 2. The ſubject-matter of this prayer, and that was, for the Removal of the afflictions, "I prayed, that it might depart from me;" together with the re-iterated frequency of it; "I beſought the Lord thrice." Learn hence, That peace with God doth not make the fleſh inſenſible: A good man may groan under bodily pain, and lawfully pray for the removal of it, yea, be oft in prayer for it; earneſt and frequent prayer is not unſuitable to ſharp affliction: "For this I beſought the Lord thrice." Where mark, St. Paul's conformity to his Saviour, who in his agony prayed thrice, that the cup might paſs, but both of them with profound ſubmiſſion. Note alſo, That the Apoſtle's gift of healing was not to be uſed at their own pleaſure, (then St. Paul might have healed himſelf) but for the confirmation of the Faith, when it pleaſed the Holy Spirit. (W. and B.)

My grace is ſufficient.] Obſerve, 1. In this anſwer that is given to St. Paul's prayer, that the mercy prayed for, is not in kind given in unto him, but promiſed grace and ſtrength, which is better than the mercy he prayed for. Learn thence, That the frequent and earneſt prayers of the moſt holy and eminent Saints, for deliverance from outward troubles, may not be granted in the kind or thing deſired. We are not lords, but beggars; and muſt leave it to God to determine the matter, the manner, the meaſure, the time of our afflictions. 2. That, as in the prayer, ſo in the anſwer, St. Paul was conformed to Chriſt: The one was heard, but not by the paſſing of the cup; the other was heard, but not by the removing the "thorn in the fleſh;" but both were heard by aſſurance and ſupply of divine ſtrength and ſufficient grace to help in time of need; "He ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee." Learn hence, That the grace of Chriſt is ſufficient for his people in all their afflictions; ſufficient for their preſervation, to keep them from falling away from God and godlineſs, by the temptation which always attends affliction; ſufficient for their ſuſtentation, to uphold and ſupport them in and under their heavieſt preſſures and afflictions; and ſufficient to render their afflictions truly advantageous and ſerviceable to them, to make them more holy, humble, heavenly, conformed unto Chriſt, &c. (B.) 3. That tho' this "thorn in the fleſh" was not removed upon the prayer of the Apoſtle, yet was that granted for the ſake of which he deſir'd that it might be removed, viz. that he might preach the Goſpel more effectually, and to the honour of his Lord: And therefore he not only reſts ſatisfied under this infirmity, but even glories in it, on this account, that it tended to demonſtrate "the power of Chriſt," reſiding in him. Thus doth God truly anſwer our requeſts, when he gives, not what we would, but what he ſees to be more for his glory and our good. (W.) He is willing to heal us; but he will do it in his own manner: And therefore we muſt pray much, we muſt put our truſt in him, and entirely reſign ourſelves up to his all-ſufficient grace; which are the proper means to obtain it. (Q.) But, 4. How God did anſwer St. Paul here, whether immediately by himſelf, or mediately by an Angel, whether by viſion or revelation, whether by lively ſpeech or by the ſecret inſpiration of his bleſſed Spirit, St. Paul hath not told us here; and therefore we muſt not be curious to inquire. (Piers)

My ſtrength is made perfect.] This is not to be underſtood, as if our weakneſs added any thing to God's power, or would make his power perfect: But our weakneſs renders God's power more illuſtrious. He delights in, and under our weakneſs, to manifeſt moſt his helping power: As the ſtars never ſhine ſo glorioully, as in the ſharpeſt froſty night; ſo the power of God never appears ſo ſignally and conſpicuouſly, as in and under our weakneſs. More of the power of grace is ſeen in the ſufferings of believers, than ever was ſeen in their proſperity. Beg then, O Chriſtian, more importunately for divine ſtrength, than for the departing of the thorn: Grace is better than eaſe or health; for the one is proper to Saints, the other is common to wicked men and brutes. (B.)

Rather glory in my infirmities.] See the notes on chap. xi. 30.

May reſt upon me.] Episkenoſe. The original word ſignifies to cover, or compaſs me, as a tent doth: whereby men do ſhelter themſelves from the ſcorching heat of the ſun, and other injuries of the air: So the meaning is, "that the power of Chriſt may be my only ſafety and protection. (Trem. Beza, and Aſſ.)

I take pleaſure.] Eudoko. Obſerve here, 1. The high and heroic pitch, to which St. Paul's ſpirit was raiſed; "I take pleaſure in infirmities, in reproaches," &c. Pleaſure is a degree beyond joy. To bear, is the patience of neceſſity; to love to bear, is the patience of virtue; to delight to bear reproach or perſecution for Chriſt, is expreſſive of the higheſt affection towards Chriſt, and the loweſt ſubjection to him. And, 2. The cauſe aſſigned, why the Apoſtle took ſuch pleaſure in his ſufferings and abaſements; "for, when I am weak, then am I ſtrong." The meaning is, That when a Chriſtian is moſt ſenſible of his own weakneſs, and moſt diſtruſtful of his own ſtrength, then "the power of Chriſt reſts upon him," and he experienceth divine ſtrength coming in unto him. (B.) "When I am weak (in myſelf) then am I ſtrong (in Chriſt; or) when I am weak (in the fleſh) then am I ſtrong (in the ſpirit.)" Thus, when he was caſt into priſon, and his "feet made faſt in the ſtocks," he, by his prayer, cauſed the foundations of the priſon to be ſhaken, Acts xvi. 23, &c. When he had ſuffered ſhip-wreck, and was caſt upon a barbarous iſland, and there "a viper faſtned on his hand," inſomuch that the Barbarians looked upon him as loſt, he not only "ſhook off the beaſt into the fire, and felt no harm," but alſo got great favour "of the chief man of the iſland," by curing his ſick father, chap. xxviii. 1, &c. And when he was afterwards brought before Nero, and all forſook him, yet, even there, being a forlorn perſon, he got the better of all his potent adverſaries, and was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. Thus did God, in his greateſt infirmities and diſtreſſes, ſtrengthen and deliver him; ſo that the hiſtory of his life made good that which he here affirmeth of himſelf. (Aſſ.) See the notes on the texts here referr'd to; and on Acts v. 41. and Rom. xv. 26.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. I am become a fool in glorying, ye have compelled me: For I ought to have been commended of you; for in nothing am I behind the very chiefeſt apoſtles, though I be nothing. Truly the ſigns of an apoſtle were wrought among you in all patience, in ſigns, and wonders, and mighty deeds. For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I myſelf was not burdenſome to you? forgive me this wrong. Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdenſome to you; for I ſeek not yours, but you; for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children. And I will very gladly ſpend and be ſpent for you, though the more abundantly I love you the leſs I be loved.

I am become.] See the notes on chap. xi. 1.

I ought to have been commended.] That is, Ye ought to have maintained the authority of my miniſtry, and given a teſtimony to the truth, how innocently I, and my fellow-labourers, carried ourſelves among you. (Aſſ.) Here obſerve, 1. That the people ought to give teſtimony to their miniſter's integrity, and do all that in them lies, to ſupport and maintain the honour of his miniſtry. And, 2. That when the people neglect this neceſſary part of their duty, it is lawful, and not diſcommendable, for the miniſters of Chriſt themſelves, in a modeſt, humble manner, to declare both what they have been, and what they have done. (B.) When this happens to be our caſe, we may then do, as the Apoſtle here doth, purge ourſelves from falſe crimes and ſuſpicions, and maintain our own innocency: Only we muſt be ſure, that our conſcience ſtand clear in the ſight of God, before we endeavour to clear our credit before the faces of men; leſt, by juſtifying ourſelves before them, we contract a new guilt before him, and ſo become indeed worſe than we were, by ſtriving to ſeem better than we are. (Sanderſ.) See the notes on chap. vi. 12.

In nothing am I behind.] See the notes on chap. xi. 5.

Tho' I be nothing.] See the notes on 1 Cor. iv. 9. and xv. 8, 9.

The ſigns of an Apoſtle.] The word ſigns here is not uſed, as afterwards in this verſe, for "wonders and mighty deeds;" but by ſigns he means demonſtrations a ſigno, evident arguments, whereby it might well appear, that he was indeed an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt. (Aſſ.) See the notes on chap. iv. 2. vi. 4. and xi. 6. Rom. xv. 18. and 1 Cor. iv. 1. and ix. 1.

Inferior to other churches.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 5.

Not burdenſome to you.] See the notes on chap. ix. 9.

Forgive me this wrong.] Interpreters generally underſtand this expreſſion to be a ſmart irony: But Monſ. Fleury obſerves, that the Apoſtle here excuſes himſelf ſeriouſly for this one thing, viz. his having inſtructed them without accepting any reward. For the faithful were, at that time, ſo charitable, and grateful to thoſe who inſtructed them, that they were grieved if they did not receive ſomething from them; and were ready to be offended, as thinking it a mark of contempt or diſdain. St. Paul therefore ſhews, that it was not for want of affection, but to give no pretence for glorying, to ſome of the falſe apoſtles, who affected to diſtinguiſh themſelves by taking nothing: And then, ſays he, "I ſeek not yours, but you;" that is, not your goods, but yourſelves. See the notes on chap. xi. 7.

The third time I am ready to come.] Moſt interpreters ſay, That St. Paul had made two reſolutions before, to come to them; for proof of which they cite 1 Cor. xvi. 5. and 2 Cor. i. 16. But both theſe texts ſeem plainly to refer to one and the ſame reſolution; and the laſt to be only an apology for non-performance of the firſt. His meaning therefore may be this; I have once actually been with you, and was ready once more to come, tho' your diſorders, unreform'd, hinder'd the performing that intended journey, 2 Cor. i, 23. and I am now ready "the third time." (W.) See the notes on chap. xiii. 1.

Spend and be ſpent for you.] That is, not only beſtow my pains and my eſtate, but alſo my body, and lay down my life for you. Here the Greek ſcholiaſt noteth ſeven ſteps or degrees in the Apoſtle's love; 1 He might have received maintenance from them, by authority from Chriſt, but yet he would not. 2. He was in want, yet would not be chargeable to them any way to relieve him. 3. He preached conſtantly to them, tho' they allowed him nothing for his pains. 4. He was at great expence with them. 5. He not only gladly beſtowed what he had among them, but was willing to be beſtowed, and to ſacrifice his life for them. 6. All this he doth for ſome who did but coldly affect him. And, 7. Tho' they in no way anſwered him in his love, but as his love ſtill grew hotter to them, theirs grew colder to him, yet he diminiſhed nothing of his love to them, or his care for them. (Aſſ.)

Ver. 16, 17, 18. But, be it ſo, I did not burden you; nevertheleſs being crafty, I caught you with guile. Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I ſent unto you? I deſired Titus, and with him I ſent a brother: did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the ſame ſpirit? walked we not in the ſame ſteps?

Nevertheleſs, being crafty.] Here the Apoſtle anſwers an objection, which, without any juſt cauſe, was made againſt him by ſome. It was ſuggeſted, that tho' he was not burdenſome to the Corinthians himſelf, nor took any thing of them for preaching the Goſpel, yet that he cunningly and craftily ſent others to them, and ſet them at work to take money for him. Now, to wipe off this aſperſion, the Apoſtle appeals to themſelves, whether any perſon he ever ſent to them, received any thing of them for his uſe? Neither Titus, nor Luke, made a gain of them; but with the ſame generoſity and freedom preached the Goſpel, and communicated the riches of grace to their ſouls. When the miniſters of the Goſpel at any time call in the aſſiſtance of others to help them in their work, their care is to employ ſuch, as near as they can judge, who are of the ſame Spirit, and walk in the ſame ſteps with themſelves: St. Paul, Titus, and Luke, all agree together in carrying on a generous deſign for the preaching the Goſpel to the Corinthians freely, and are of the ſame mind and practice in every thing. (B.) See the notes on chap. xi. 9.

Did I make a gain of you?] See the notes on chap. vii. 2. and Acts xx. 33.

I ſent a brother.] See the notes on chap. viii. 18.

Ver. 19, 20, 21. Again, think you that we excuſe our ſelves unto you? We ſpeak before God in Chriſt: But we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying. For I fear, leſt when I come, I ſhall not find you ſuch as I would, and that I ſhall be found unto you ſuch as ye would not: Leſt there be debates, envyings, wrath, ſtrifes, backbitings, whiſperings, ſwellings, tumults: And leſt when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and that I ſhall bewail many which have ſinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanneſs, and fornication, and laſciviouſneſs which they have committed.

Think you, that we excuſe.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Think not, that for any ſiniſter or bye-ends of my own, I excuſe my ſelf ſo often to you; for all I do, is with an eye to your advantage. 'Tis your benefit and reformation I aim at: For verily I fear, whenever I come, I ſhall find thoſe ſins unrepented of, and unhumbled for, by many of you, which will be matter of humiliation, ſorrow and lamentation to me; and that I muſt be neceſſitated, contrary to my inclinations and deſires, to inflict cenſures and corporal puniſhments upon many among you, for the ſchiſms, debates and ſtrifes of ſome; for the uncleanneſs, fornication, and laſciviouſneſs of others. (B.) Whence obſerve, 1. That the Apoſtle calleth the inflicting cenſures upon the Corinthians, the humbling, or abaſing of himſelf: Becauſe, as their proficiency in Chriſt's ſchool, and growth in grace, was a great cauſe of exaltation and glorying to him; ſo their falling into enormous crimes, and continuing in them without repentance, enforcing him to uſe his apoſtolical power in cenſuring them, was a great grief to him, and the occaſion of much dejection of mind. (Aſſ.) 2. That the inflicting cenſures (being, as it were, the pronouncing ſentence of condemnation upon a ſoul) was accompanied with the outward ſigns alſo of ſorrow and mourning. (Fell) 3. That, when the Apoſtle ſpeaks here of many who "had not repented," his meaning was (according as the moſt primitive Church took the word metanoia to denote what we commonly call penance) that they had not openly and ſolemnly humbled themſelves for their crimes in the face of the congregation. (Johnſ.) And, 4. That from hence 'tis evident, againſt Novatian, that the Chriſtian diſpenſation admits ſinners to repentance, tho' they have, after baptiſm, committed great offences, and lapſed into the ſins of the fleſh. (W.) See the notes on chap. v. 12. x. 2, 6. and xiii. 2, 10. and 1 Cor. iv. 21. and v. 2.

The Apoſtle here declares his reſolution, to exert the authority which Chriſt hath given him, without ſparing any of the impenitent: Admoniſheth them, in the mean time, to recollect and reform themſelves; and concludeth with a general exhortation, and a prayer.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. THIS is the third time I am coming to you: In the mouth of two or three witneſſes ſhall every word be eſtabliſhed. I told you before, and foretel you, as if I were preſent the ſecond time, and being abſent, now I write to them which heretofore have ſinned, and to all other, that if I come again, I will not ſpare. Since ye ſeek a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in me, which to you-ward is not weak, but mighty in you. For though he was crucified through weakneſs, yet he liveth by the power of God: For we alſo are weak in him, but we ſhall live with him by the power of God toward you.

This is the third time.] The Apoſtle having, throughout both his epiſtles, blam'd the Corinthians for ſeveral groſs enormities found among them, and hearing there were ſome that had not repented of them, he gives them plainly to underſtand, that he had a full purpoſe to come unto them with his rod of eccleſiaſtical diſcipline and Church cenſures; and would not ſpare a man of them, but execute that power on the impenitent, which Chriſt had given him, by excluding ſuch unreclaimable offenders from Church Communion. Note here, With what wiſdom and caution the holy Apoſtle proceeds, in the executing and afflicting the ſevere cenſures of the Church: He uſes admonitions before he proceeds to the awful ſentence of excommunication; "I told you before, I foretel you now, and being abſent, I write to you, that when I come I will not ſpare." He tells them farther, that they had tempted him hereunto, in that they had required a proof from him, whether Chriſt had owned him as an Apoſtle or not, and would ratify his cenſures by judgments following them. He ſhews that Chriſt had owned him, and manifeſted his power in his miniſtry among them, by converting many of them to the Chriſtian faith, by beſtowing the gifts of his Spirit upon them, and by many ſigns and miracles which he enabled him to do in the midſt of them. When God calls his ſervants to the work of the miniſtry, he leaves not either himſelf or them without witneſs: He bears teſtimony to their ſincerity, by giving them, in ſome degree, the ſeal of their miniſtry, in the converſion or edification of thoſe they are ſent unto; "Since ye ſeek a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in me, to you-ward he is not weak, but is mighty in and among you." Next, the holy Apoſtle draws a parallel, and makes a compariſon between his bleſſed Lord and Maſter and himſelf. As Chriſt, in his ſtate of humiliation, appear'd to be a weak and frail man, by being crucified, but was evidenced to be the great and mighty God, by his riſing from the dead; ſo the Apoſtle, conſidered in himſelf, and in reſpect of his afflictions, appears a weak and contemptible man; but yet they had found, and ſhould farther find, a reſemblance of the power and ſtrength of Chriſt, in his life and miniſtry; and particularly they ſhould find him armed with authority from Chriſt, to execute cenſures upon the contumacious and impenitent. Though the miniſters of Chriſt, like their Maſter, when here on earth, are in a ſtate of weakneſs, poverty and contempt, yet are they cloathed with divine power in the execution of their office, and their miniſtry is a living, powerful, and efficacious miniſtry, in the vigorous effects of it upon the heart of their people; "We are weak in him, but we ſhall live with him by the power of God towards you." (B.) Obſerve alſo farther upon theſe four verſes, 1. That this place diſtinctly refers to the method of diſcipline, preſcribed by Chriſt, Matth. xviii. 15, &c. as appears moſt probable, by the Apoſtle's reciting here theſe very words of that inſtitution, "In the mouth of two or three witneſſes every word ſhall be eſtabliſhed," ver. 1. and, proportionable to that, "I told you before, and foretel you" now again, ver. 2. which notes the firſt and ſecond admonition. And tho' there preceed "This is the third time I am coming to you," yet that refers evidently to this his third reſolution, perſonally to appear among them, chap. xii. 14. having reſolv'd it twice already: And, before that time comes, this ſecond epiſtle is to ſupply the place of a ſecond admonition, as his former had been the firſt. And ſo, the words will be rendred thus, I have foretold, or admoniſh'd you, once in the firſt epiſtle; and do now ſo again the ſecond time: And both theſe "as if I were preſent;" theſe epiſtolary warnings being to have the ſame force with them, as if he were preſent among them. And if this method, anſwerable to the firſt and ſecond admonition inſtituted by Chriſt, did not prevail with them, then he was to proceed to cenſures; and this he declares himſelf reſolv'd to do; "I will not ſpare:" Where the apoſtolical authority which he had over them makes it improper for him to proceed to any third admonition, viz. that of "telling it to the Church." Thus Biſhop Titus is appointed to deal with an Heretick; "after the firſt and ſecond admonition to reject him," Tit. iii. 10. without any third degree intervening, immediately to proceed to cenſures. (H.) 2. That as the Apoſtle would not proceed to ſentence without full evidence, ſo he declares, he ſhall eſteem "two or three witneſſes," ſufficient to convict any offender. (Johnſ.) For St. Paul was far from giving any countenance to general or ſecret accuſations, without proof and witneſſes; knowing, that the peace of the Church depends upon the order and regularity of judgments, and that private informers are publick peſts. (Q.) 3. That where he ſays he "will not ſpare," he threateneth, that he will make uſe of his apoſtolical power; which was very great. For the Apoſtles not only inflicted ſpiritual cenſures, but alſo corporal puniſhments. Thus Paul ſtruck Barjeſus with blindneſs, Acts xiii. 11. as Peter did Ananias and Saphira with death, Acts v. 5, &c. And thoſe who were delivered by them to Satan, ſuffer'd thereby not only in ſoul, being terrified in their conſcience, but were often tormented in body alſo. (Aſſ.) And, 4. That where the Apoſtle ſays, Chriſt "was crucified through weakneſs," St. Hilary (de Trinit. l. 9.) expounds it, through the weakneſs of his fleſh, which was ſubject to all human infirmities, ſin only excepted; or touching the vile form of a ſervant, which he took upon him when he abaſed himſelf. To clear which paſſage, Oecumenius further obſerveth, That the word aſthenia, in St Paul, is taken in a three-fold ſenſe; ſometimes for bodily ſickneſs, as 1 Cor xi. 30. ſometimes for imbecility and wavering in the faith, as Rom. xiv. 1. and ſometimes for outward perſecutions, temptations, and afflictions, as in the foregoing chapter, ver. 9, 10. and ſo he takes it alſo in this place. To infirmities painful, Chriſt in his ſtate of humiliation here upon earth was ſubject, but no way to any infirmities that are ſinful. (Aſſ.) It is evident from Scripture, that tho' Chriſt appear'd to the world as weak, and unable to eſcape his ſufferings, by permitting himſelf to be taken, and carried bound before the High-prieſt and Pilate, and at laſt to be lifted upon the croſs, and there die; yet was he only in appearance then weak: For he permitted not himſelf to be taken, till he had with a word ſtruck them to the ground who came to apprehend him, John xvi. 6. and had declared, that he was able to deliver himſelf out of their hands, Matth. xxvi. 53. (W.) See the notes on chap. i. 23. and x. 3, &c. and Matth. xviii. 16. Rom. i. 4. and vi. 4. and 1 Cor. i. 5, 7. and ix. 2.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Examine your ſelves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own ſelves: Know ye not your own ſelves, how that Jeſus Chriſt is in you, except ye be reprobates? But I truſt that ye ſhal know that we are not reprobates. Now I pray to God, that ye do no evil; not that we ſhould appear approved, but that ye ſhould do that which is honeſt, though we be as reprobates. For we can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth. For we are glad when we are weak, and ye are ſtrong: And this alſo we wiſh, even your perfection. Therefore I write being abſent, leſt being preſent I ſhould uſe ſharpneſs, according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to deſtruction.

Examine your ſelves.] Here the Apoſtle adviſeth the Corinthians, inſtead of inquiring after the proof of Chriſt in him, to examine whether they were in Chriſt themſelves; intimating that ſuch are uſually moſt backward to examine the ſtate of their own ſouls, who are forward to inquire into the ſpiritual ſtate and condition of others; "Ye ſeek a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in me," ſays the Apoſtle; but rather "examine your ſelves, prove your own ſelves:" And this repetition of the command implies the great backwardneſs that is in our nature to perform this duty, as well as the great neceſſity of the duty, and the great diligence and frequency to be uſed in the performing it." (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xi. 28.

Whether ye be in the faith.] He confirms what he had ſaid of God appearing in his miniſtry; and he gathers, from the mutual relation between the people's faith and the miniſters preaching, that they muſt either reverence his apoſtleſhip, upon whoſe doctrine their faith is grounded, or they muſt condemn themſelves of infidelity, and confeſs themſelves not to be of Chriſt's body. (Beza and Aſſ) We are, without doubt, "in the faith," by baptiſm: But does faith live and work in us? This is what we ought to examine in prayer, and to prove by works, in order to know this root by its fruits. (Q.)

Jeſus Chriſt is in you.] That Chriſt's being among them ſignifies the preſence and power of the Goſpel among the Corinthians, or in their Church through St. Paul's apoſtleſhip, may appear, not only by the context, which wholly looks that way, but by that place, Exod. xvii. 7. to which theſe words ſeem to refer; where the tempting contumacious Iſraelites, after all the ſigns and miracles ſhewed among them, do ſtill remain Infidel, and aſk in theſe very words, (ei Theos en hemin) "is the Lord amongſt us or no?" So that the meaning of the Apoſtle's queſtion here is, Many miracles of Chriſt and his Spirit have been wrought among you by me; ſo that if ye do not believe I am an Apoſtle of Chriſt, and ſo that Chriſt is among you, ye are ſure of the number of thoſe Iſraelites, who after ſo many miracles, ſtill required more ſigns; or of the Phariſees, who did the ſame, Mar. viii. 11. Which being put in form of a queſtion, Diſcern ye not that Chriſt Jeſus is among you? The anſwer is in the next words, ei me ti ara adokimoi eſte; which cannot be more diſtinctly and literally rendred than thus, Ei me ti (referring to the epiginoskete precedent) if ye do not, that is, if ye do not diſcern it, in ſome degree, ara adokimoi eſte, doubtleſs ye are reprobates, ſenſleſs, obdurate perſons, moſt impious, and uncapable of faith, or any thing that is good. (H. and W.)

Except ye be reprobates.] The word (adokimoi) here tranſlated reprobates, in this and the two following verſes, has no relation to any eternal decree of God's, appointing men to remedileſs and everlaſting deſtruction. Such notions ariſe from wrong apprehenſions of the divine perfections, and ſome difficult and miſtaken places of Scripture. For, if any are everlaſtingly miſerable, it is the abuſe of the freedom God has given them, and their own evil doings, which make them ſo. The Greek word ſignifies untried, unproved, or without proof; the metaphor being taken from the trial of Silver, and other metal, whether they are ſtandard or not. (W. and Fox) See the notes on Rom. ii. 18. and 1 Cor. ix. 27.

We can do nothing againſt the truth.] Sincere Chriſtians in general, and the miniſters of Chriſt in particular, cannot, dare not, will not, "do any thing againſt the truth, but for the truth:" They cannot, that is, they may not; they are reſtrain'd by an outward command from God, which is truth it ſelf: They cannot, that is, they will not; there is a reſtraint of an inward principle; neither the conviction of their underſtandings, the clearneſs of their judgments, nor the holineſs of their hearts, will ſuffer them to oppoſe the truth: And again, they cannot attempt it; or, if they did, they can never effect it; they cannot do it ſafely, they cannot do it ſucceſsfully. "We can do nothing againſt the truth," either in a way of diſcouragement, or of diſparagement, but all our endeavours are "for the truth;" we embrace it in our judgments, we hide it in our hearts, and practiſe it in our lives: Whatever talent God intruſts any of his miniſters with, whether of parts, power, or eſtate, it is an opportunity put into their hands of doing ſervice for the truth; and as ſuch, to be accepted and improved. (B.) Authority ought to be ſerviceable only to the truth. The condition of a perſon in authority, whether eccleſiaſtical or ſecular, is much to be lamented, when his conduct cauſes it to be ſaid, that, either through ignorance, or obſtinacy, or evil counſel, he ſeems to be able to do nothing, but againſt the truth, and againſt good men. The charity, or love of God towards his Church is the ſource of authority; and it ought to be the end, the motive, the rule, and meaſure thereof. (Q.) Tho' it be a true axiom, that the truth is ſtrong, and cannot be ſubverted; yet it ſeems, the Apoſtle here underſtandeth not ſo much truth of doctrine, as truth of life, ſincerity and true piety. For he threatneth to uſe his apoſtolical power in puniſhing; which that they might eſcape, he prayeth to God, ver. 7. "that they might do no evil:" Which he bindeth with this reaſon, "for we can do nothing againſt the truth;" that is, If ye be innocent, and walk in the truth, ye need not fear any Anathema, or Church-cenſures: For the power which the Lord hath given us, is for the ſupporting of the Church, and not deſtroying it, to uphold and maintain innocency and righteouſneſs, true religion and virtue, and to ſuppreſs the contrary. (Aſſ.)

Glad when we are weak.] See the notes on chap. xi. 30. xii. 5, 9, 10. and 1 Cor. ii. 3. iv. 10.

Even your perfection.] Katartiſis. By this word the Apoſtle's meaning is, that whereas the members of the Church were all, as it were, diſlocated, and out of joint, they ſhould now again be join'd together in love, and ſhould endeavour to make perfect what was amiſs among them, either in faith or manners. (Leigh) See the notes on ver. 11.

Therefore I write.] Obſerve here, With what tenderneſs the Apoſtle treats theſe offenders: He tells them, the ſharpneſs and ſeverity in his letters, (if they accounted it ſuch) was on a kind deſign, to prevent ſharpneſs and ſeverity in his dealings with them, when he came among them; yet withal, he aſſures them, that if matters ſhould come to an extremity, that he muſt be forced to exerciſe his apoſtolical power, in cutting the contumacious off from the Church's communion, he would exerciſe it with a tender regard to their good, not their hurt; for their edification, and not willingly to their deſtruction. Learn we, from the Apoſtle's practice, to execute the cenſures of the Church with great tenderneſs and affection, with great pity and compaſſion, with extraordinary dread and caution; not with raſhneſs and indiſcretion, or upon every light and trivial occaſion, but like a tender-hearted father, with a rod in our hand, and tears in our eyes. (B.) See the notes on ver. 2. chap. i. 23. x. 2, 8. and 1 Cor. iv. 21.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14. Finally, brethren, farewel: Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace ſhall be with you. Greet one another with an holy kiſs. All the ſaints ſalute you. The grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghoſt, be with you all. Amen.

¶ The ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians was written from Philippi, a city of Macedonia, by Titus and Lucas.

Finally, brethren, farewel.] Here our Apoſtle ſhuts up his epiſtle with a pathetical option and affectionate wiſh of all perfection, conſolation, concord and communion, to his beloved Corinthians. Where note, 1. What a fervent and unfeigned love there is, in all the faithful miniſters of Chriſt, to the people committed to their charge; and how deſirous they are, when they are taking their leave of them, to leave God with them; "The God of love and peace ſhall be with you." Now, God's being with a people, implies and imports theſe things; namely, the heart of God with them, the help of God with them, and the preſence of God with them; and that they ſhall ſhortly be with God. 2. What are the particular graces, and bleſſings, which the Apoſtle wiſhes his beloved Corinthians: He doth not wiſh them earthly honours, worldly riches, ſenſual pleaſures; but perfection of grace, ſpiritual conſolation, mutual love, ſweet communion with God, unanimity and concord among themſelves: Sanctifying gifts and ſaving graces are the beſt legacies that can be left by the miniſters of God unto their people. "Be perfect," be knit together; let the ſchiſms and breaches which have been among you be healed: "Be of good comfort," rejoice in and under all your ſufferings for Chriſt, and the profeſſion of his holy religion: "Be of one mind;" of the ſame judgment, if poſſible, in all things; or if otherwiſe, let not difference in judgment cauſe diſunion in affection; if in ſome leſſer things your heads be different, yet let your hearts be one. "Live in peace;" for the Lord's ſake, live no longer in diviſion and ſtrife, in contention and wrath; let me hear no more of thoſe debates, envyings, backbitings, whiſperings, and ſwellings, which I have reproved you for: But eſpecially live in peace with your teachers and ſpiritual guides; cauſe not them to complain to God of you, nor groan to God againſt you, for your factious preferring one miniſter before another; one crying, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos. Thus doing, "the God of love and peace ſhall be with you:" That is, he who is the author and injoyner of love and peace will be with you, and dwell among you with his gracious and favourable preſence. (B.) See more particularly the notes here following; and the ſeveral ſermons of Biſhop Wake, Mr. Downame, and Mr. Hole, on this text, at large.

Finally.] The word loipon is expounded either to mean, 1. Laſtly; And ſo indeed it may be taken here; as if St. Paul, in the cloſe of his epiſtle, had ſaid, Laſtly, or to conclude. Or, 2. For what remaineth: In which latter ſenſe it is interpreted by Oecumenius; As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, After I have thus performed my duty, in admoniſhing and threatning you, it now remains, that ye alſo do your duty, in obeying that doctrine which I have deliver'd you. (Down.)

Brethren.] It was well noted by St. Jerome, againſt Helvidius, That brethren, In Scripture, are ſo named, 1. Ab utero, from the womb, or birth; as Cain and Abel, Gen. iv. 9. 2. A conſanguinitate, from kindred; as Abraham and Lot, Gen. xiii. 8. 3. A patria, from their country; as St. Paul commonly calls the Jews brethren, becauſe they were his countreymen; And, 4. A profeſſione, from their profeſſion of the ſame religion; in which ſenſe the word is uſed here: Whereby we are taught, to hold none ſo near and dear unto us, as thoſe who profeſs the true religion. We are indeed to love, and do good to all; we muſt love our brethren, our kindred, our country; and all theſe by the laws of God and nature: But yet, more "eſpecially, thoſe who are of the houſhold of faith," Gal. vi. 10. See the notes there. (Idem)

Farewel.] Chairete (the original word here) ſignifies ſalvete, valete, and gaudete. 1. Salvete, God ſave you; a word of greeting or ſalutation at meeting; as the Angel addreſſes Mary, with Chaire, Luke i. 28. But that is not here meant; becauſe the Apoſtle was not now coming to them, but taking his leave of them. Therefore, it is here to be underſtood, as it ſignifies, 2. Valete, farewel. Yet Junius and Tremellius, and the Greek interpreters in general, do expound it, 3. Gaudete, rejoice; which ſeems to contradict the former, becauſe at a farewel-taking we do not uſe to rejoice, but to mourn: Yet, if we conſider it rightly, we ſhall find, that they ſignify the ſame thing: For when I ſay, Fare you well, what elſe do I ſay, but rejoice, I wiſh you well, or (according to our Engliſh phraſe) Sit ye merry; whereby we are taught to pray for the welfare of our brethren. (Idem) For the word includes in it not only a friendly ſalutation, but an affectionate wiſh too; a wiſh of all the happineſs, which an Apoſtle could deſire for his Church; or, in St. Paul's own more tender alluſion, 1 Cor. iv. 15. a father for his children. (Wake)

Be perfect.] Katartizeſthe. The proper original notion of the word katartizein, is to compact, or knit together, either members in a body, or parts in a building. Thus it is applied to a building, Exod. xv. 17. to walls, Ezra iv. 15, 16. to a body, Pſa. xl. 6. From whence it doth more largely ſignify to prepare, or make ready; in the ſame ſenſe as builders do fit one part to another, and make it ready for uſe: And ſo again, to corroborate and ſtrengthen; as that which is well compacted and knit together is made ſtrong by that means: And laſtly, to perfect; as the building of an houſe is the perfecting of it; eſpecially in the paſſive voice, becauſe that which is compacted and built is perfected and compleated by that means. Anſwerable to theſe ſeveral notions is the Gloſſary of Heſychius, katartiſai (not, as it is corruptly read, katartyſai) to prepare, to perfect, to ſtrengthen or corroborate. In the New Teſtament the word is variouſly uſed; but ſo as will by the circumſtances of the context be applicable to one or more of theſe three notions. Matth. iv. 21. and Mark i. 19. it is applied to the mending of the fiſhers nets; knitting them together, and ſo either ſtrengthning, or preparing them for uſe. Matt. xxi. 16. katertiſo ainon (in reference to the childrens Hoſannahs, or teſtimonies of Chriſt) thou haſt out of their mouths compacted, or made up, or made ready, a ſong of praiſe, or confeſſion, or teſtimony. Luke vi. 40. Every ſervant ſhall be katertiſmenos) made up, perfected, fitted for his crown, after the ſame manner as his maſter Chriſt is. So, 1 Theſſ. iii. 10. (katartiſai hyſteremata) to make up, or perfect, or repair, defects; and Heb. xiii. 21. (katartiſai hymas) perfect you, build you up: And ſo perhaps, ver. 9. of this chapter, (ton hymon katartiſin) I pray for your being perfect in all goodneſs; as ver. 7. I "beſeech God that ye do no evil:" So, Rom. ix. 22. Veſſels of wrath (katertiſmena) formed, or framed, or made fit: So, Heb. x. 5. out of the Septuagint of the Pſalm, (ſoma katertiſo moi) a body thou haſt framed me; and Heb. xi. 3. by faith we conceive (katertiſthai tous aionas) that the ages of the world were framed, that is, the world created. But, beſides all theſe places, one ſort more there is, wherein, by reaſon of the affinity between the Church of Chriſt, and a building or body, the word hath a peculiar ſignification to compact Chriſtian people (the ſtones in the building, or the members in the body of the church) together into a ſociety, where they may live, and publickly ſerve God together: And that, either 1. By firſt forming thoſe ſocieties; uniting men in the profeſſion of the ſame truths, and performance of the ſame ſervices: Or, 2. By recovering or reſtoring any that hath been broken off from the Church by any fault, or criminous commiſſion; eſpecially if he have been for that cauſe cut off by the governours of the Church, that is, caſt out by eccleſiaſtical cenſures: Or, 3. By reducing him that hath voluntarily broken himſelf off by ſchiſin, &c. Or, 4. By God's reſtoring peace and tranquillity to the Church, that they may thus freely meet together. In the firſt ſenſe we have it, Eph. iv. 12. where he ſpeaks of the ſeveral offices ordained in the Church; and the firſt end which he aſſigns of ſo doing, is (pros ton katartiſmon toon hagioon) for the compacting of the Saints; that is, for the holding the body of the Church together to frequent publick aſſemblies, &c. In the ſecond ſenſe 'tis clearly uſed, Gal. vi. 1. where the ſpiritual, or governours of the church, are adviſed to indulgence and tenderneſs, not too much ſharpneſs or ſeverity towards offenders, or lapſed perſons; and accordingly are appointed (katartizein) to "reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs;" that is, either by mild reprehenſion, and exhortation, to recover him to a ſenſe and reformation of his fault, without proceeding to any ſharper courſe; or elſe, in caſe of greater ſeverity, to be ſoon mollified again towards him, to take off the cenſures of the Church from him: Which there appears not only by the evidence of the words themſelves, but by the ſubſequent precept of "bearing one anothers burthens," ver. 2. as that may be explained by a parallel place in Ignatius's Epiſtle to Polycarpus; where he bids him, as a Biſhop, take care of the unity, (that is, the katartiſmos here, the keeping whole Chriſt's body, the Church) bear all, and ſuffer, or bear with all in love. And ſo perhaps, in this chapter, katartiſis, ver. 9. may be the reſtoring of the laps'd offenders, upon their ſincerity of reformation; or rather the continuing them in the communion of the church, without need of having the cenſures inflicted upon them: For ſo it follows, as the conſequent of his praying for their katartiſis; for which cauſe, "I write theſe things being abſent," that being preſent I may not (apotomos cresthai) deal ſharply, or uſe exciſion; where katartiſis, making up, reſtoring, or keeping whole, may very fitly be rendred, as oppoſite to (apotomia) exciſion, the word ſet to denote the cenſures. Thus, Hippodamus the Pythagorean, in his book de Republ. preſcribing ſociety, or meeting together of old and young, in order to preſervation of peace, and moderating all ſorts of affections, adds, Becauſe young men need to be taught ſobriety, or moderation, and to have their exceſſes corrected and allayed; katartyſios, correction, ſaith the interpreter, in Stobæus, p. 250. but that ſure not by way of puniſhment, for (phratriai and ſyſſitia) the friendly meetings and feaſts were no places of judicature, nor inſtituted to any ſuch like deſign; but by way of exhortation or friendly advice, the elder to the younger, who might have ſuch an authority with them katartynein (which is alſo one with katartizein) to ſettle, or accompliſh them, bring them to a ſtayedneſs and ſtability of temper. In the third ſenſe 'tis uſed, 1 Cor. i. 10. where (ete katartiſmenoi) their being knit, or compacted "together, in the ſame mind," or opinion, is ſet oppoſite to having ſchiſms among them, and contentions, ver. 11. and ſo here (katartizeſthe) be ye knit together, is preparative to their being of the ſame mind, and having peace among them. In the fourth or laſt ſenſe it ſeems to be taken, 1 Pet. v. 10. where he prays to God for the diſperſed Jew-Chriſtians, that after that ſhort time of ſufferings, God will (autos katartiſai hymas) himſelf, If by his ſpecial providence, take care for them, and reſtore them halcyonian days of peace, to ſerve him in the publick aſſemblies. Thus St. Ignatius (in his epiſtle to the Smyrnæans, making a motion to them to ſend a congratulation into Syria, that they had a fair ſunſhine in reſpect of the ſervice of God) doth thus expreſs it, Becauſe they have peace, and have received their own magnitude, and their own body is reſtored to them; where the idion megethos, and the ſomation, are the body of the church meeting together in aſſemblies, which is there ſaid (apocathiſtasthai) to be reſtored, as here (katartizesthai) to be repaired, or made up, that is, reſtored to them. (H.) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 10.

Be of good comfort.] Parakaleisthe. As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Notwithſtanding ye have been faulty in many kinds, and have been therefore threatned and chaſtiſed divers and ſundry ways, yet comfort yourſelves in the mercies of God: For, tho' ye be "troubled on every ſide, yet ye are not diſtreſſed;" tho' perplexed, yet "not in deſpair;" tho' perſecuted, yet "not forſaken;" tho' "caſt down, not deſtroy'd," chap. iv. 8, &c. (where ſee the notes:) Therefore "be of good comfort." (Down.) That is, Be not any longer troubled at my reproofs, but rejoice with me, "that I have confidence in you in all things, chap. vii. 16. and that "ye have approved yourſelves to be clear in this matter," for which I had written to you, ver. 11. But there is, beſides this, another ſenſe, in which this expreſſion very well may, and I think ought, alſo to be underſtood: And that is, that they ſhould encourage, and exhort one another, in the diſcharge of their duty; but eſpecially as to what concern'd the cloſing of theſe diviſions which had been unhappily raiſed among them. And if we thus put the two ſignifications of the word together, the full meaning will be, That they ſhould not be diſcourag'd at the conſideration of thoſe diſorders which had unhappily fallen out among them; but ſhould exhort one another, to endeavour all they could to correct what was amiſs; and then "be of good comfort," and not doubt, but God would bleſs their endeavours, and remove thoſe ſcandals, and make up thoſe diviſions, which had cauſed ſo much grief and trouble to them. (Wake)

Be of one mind.] Obſerve, How aptly the things here recommended, in the end of this epiſtle, do agree with thoſe recommended in the beginning of the former. There our Apoſtle had largely and earneſtly beſought the Corinthians to "ſpeak the ſame thing," to have "no diviſions among them," and to "be perfectly joined together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment," 1 Cor. i. 10. and here he repeats it in fewer words, "Be of one mind; live in peace;" which are two diſtinct things, and ſo to be handled. To "be of one mind" is to be underſtood in matters of faith, or thoſe things which concern religion; but to "live in peace" is oppoſed to diſcord and diſſention: For ſome who are of the ſame mind in matters of religion, yet are together by the ears for other things. (Down.) The one reſpects the church, in which he wills them to be all "of one mind;" the other the ſtate, in which he exhorts them to "live in peace:" Both which he enforces, with a promiſe of the divine bleſſing and preſence, in the following words, "and the God of love and peace ſhall be with you." Now this great duty of unanimity chiefly reſpects the church; in which the Apoſtle would have all the members of it to "be of one mind;" that is, to be of the ſame judgment and opinion in the great and weighty matters of religion, to think and ſpeak the ſame things, and to agree together in the worſhip and ſervice of our Maker. Indeed, as for the common and ordinary affairs of human life, we are allow'd to have different ſentiments, but in matters of religion, ſuch as the worſhip of God, the doctrine, diſcipline and communion of the church, wherein the publick peace, as well as our own private welfare are ſo much concern'd, we are required to agree, and "ſpeak the ſame thing;" for theſe being preſcribed by divine authority, for the order and good government of the church of Chriſt, we are quietly to reſt in them, and therein to be like-minded. Nor is this (as ſome would have it thought) either impoſſible, or unneceſſary. For, 1. That it is both poſſible, and practicable, for all Chriſtians to "be of one mind," in the great and weighty affairs of religion, appears evidently, 1. From the example of the firſt Chriſtians; who were all "of one heart, and of one ſoul, or mind," Acts iv. 32. 2. From the Apoſtle's ſharp reprehenſion of all perſons in all places where he found it otherwiſe; And, 3. From the ſtrict cautions againſt diviſions, and the many earneſt exhortations to unity, throughout the Holy Scriptures. And, 2. That it is alſo neceſſary for all good Chriſtians to be ſo, is evident from the ſame Scripture-arguments. (Hole) See the notes on John xvii. 21. Rom. xii. 3. and xv. 5. and 1 Cor. i. 10, &c.

Live in peace.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 18.

The God of love and peace.] As the words ſtand here connected, they may very well be taken ſo as to imply, that the happy conſequence of Chriſtians "being perfect, of good comfort, and of one mind, and living in peace," would be, that "the God of love and peace ſhould be with them." (Boulter) See the notes on Rom. xv. 33.

With an holy kiſs.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 16.

The grace of our Lord.] Here are the higheſt bleſſings and benefits wiſhed, and prayed for, in the behalf of the Corinthians, which they could poſſibly be made partakers of; namely, all that love which doth or can flow from the Father; all that grace which was purchaſed by the Son; and all that fellowſhip and communion with, and communication from, the Holy Spirit, which might render them meet for the ſervice of Chriſt on earth, and for the full fruition, and final enjoyment of him in Heaven. Obſerve here, A full text for the Holy Trinity: The name of the three Perſons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, is here diſtinctly mentioned; as in the commiſſion for, and in the form of, baptiſm, Matth. xxviii. 19. Here the Apoſtle calls the Father God, the Son Lord, and the Spirit the Holy Ghoſt; and as he attributes love to the Father, and grace to the Son, ſo fellowſhip to the Holy Ghoſt; ſo that we have no reaſon to doubt of the perſonality of either, or any of them. But when we conſider how many at this day, with impudence and impunity, deny the divinity of the ſecond, and the perſonality of the third perſon, in the Bleſſed Trinity, we have reaſon to pray, as our church has taught us, for our eſtabliſhment, in the collect for Trinity-Sunday;

ALmighty and everlaſting God, who haſt given unto us thy ſervants grace, by the confeſſion of a true faith, to acknowledge the eternal Trinity, and in the power of the divine majeſty, to worſhip the Unity; we beſeech thee that thou would'ſt keep us ſtedfaſt in this faith, and evermore defend us from all adverſities, who liveſt and reigneſt one God, world without end. Amen. (B.)

The End of the Second Epiſtle of St. PAUL to the CORINTHIANS.

CRITICAL

ANNOTATIONS

Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,

GALATIANS.

TO ſay ſomewhat, prefatory to this Epiſtle, as we have already done of the foregoing, we ſhall only obſerve,

I. That Galatia (otherwiſe call'd Gallo-græcia) is a province of the Leſſer Aſia, deriving its name from the Gauls; who after their great wars in Europe, ſeated themſelves in theſe parts under the conduct of their captain Leonorius. It was bounded on the Weſt by Phrygia; on the Eaſt by Cappadocia, and the river Halys; on the North by Paphlagonia; and on the South by Lycaonia. Its chief cities were Ancyra, Tavium, and Peſſinuntum; whence Grotius ſaith, St. Paul writing "unto the churches of Galatia," chap. i. 2. wrote to theſe. They (and eſpecially thoſe of Peſſinuntum) were addicted to the worſhip of the mother of the gods; and therefore St. Paul ſays, They "knew not God," chap. iv. 8. Callimachus, in his hymns, and Hilary, who was himſelf a Gaul, repreſent them as a very fooliſh people; and the Apoſtle alſo ſaith, "O fooliſh Galatians, who hath bewitched you?" chap. iii. 1. No wonder therefore, that they were, generally by the Græcians, accounted not ſo ingenious and quick-witted as themſelves, or even as many of the Aſiaticks indeed were.

II. That St. Paul, not long after the great council at Jeruſalem, paſſing through this region (amongſt others) planted the Goſpel here, Acts xvi. 6. where he was receiv'd and entertain'd by them with ſuch kindneſs and veneration, as if he had been an Angel immediately ſent from Heaven, Gal. iv. 14, 15. and ſome time after that, made another viſitation, ſtrengthning and confirming the new converts there, Acts xviii. 23. Nevertheleſs it was not long after his departure, before he had notice, that corrupt opinions had got in among them, concerning the neceſſary obſervation of the Law of Moſes; and that certain falſe brethren were crept into this church, who, in order to undermine the doctrine he had preach'd there, made it their buſineſs to vilify his perſon; ſpeaking ſlightly of him, as an Apoſtle only at the ſecond hand, not to be compared with Peter, James, and John, &c. whom they magnified, as having familiarly converſed with Chriſt in the fleſh, and been immediately deputed by him, and now favourers of this their doctrine. In this Epiſtle therefore he reproves them with ſome neceſſary ſmartneſs and ſeverity, for their being ſo ſoon led out of the right way which he had taught them, and ſuffering themſelves to be ſo eaſily impoſed upon by thoſe crafty ſeducers: He vindicates the honour of his apoſtleſhip, as having received his commiſſion and doctrine by immediate revelation from Chriſt, chap. i. 1. and therein being no way inferior to the very chief Apoſtles: He largely refutes thoſe Judaical opinions with which they were tainted; aſſerts the liberty of the Goſpel from the bondage of the law; and in the concluſion inſtructs them in the rules and duties of a good life.

III. That the preciſe time of writing this Epiſtle, and conſequently alſo the place from whence it was written, cannot eaſily be determined. It is generally thought to have been about the ſame time with that to the Romans; or rather ſomewhat before it: And that it was written even before thoſe to the Corinthians alſo, may be fairly concluded from 1 Cor. xvi. 1. We cannot therefore poſſibly believe the note, which is added by way of ſubſcription or poſtſcript to it, that it was "written from Rome;" becauſe we know, that St. Paul's Epiſtle to the Romans (as we have obſerv'd in the preface to it) was written before he had ever been at that city. However that be, it can be no diminution of the authority of the Epiſtle itſelf, ſince thoſe ſubſcriptions are no part of the ſacred text, but added by ſome later and unknown hand.

IV. That the parts it conſiſts of are principally, 1. Hiſtorical, concerning himſelf and the courſe of his miniſtry, chap. i. and ii. to ver. 16. 2. Doctrinal, concerning juſtification by faith, and the abolition of the Jewiſh rites and ceremonies, chap. ii. 16. to chap. v. 14. And, 3. Moral, wherein he exhorteth the Galatians to ſeveral Chriſtian duties; viz. Mutual love and charity, chap. v. 14. The works of the Spirit, in oppoſition to thoſe of the fleſh, ver. 16, &c. Mildneſs in cenſuring one another, chap. vi. 1. Bearing one anothers burdens, ver. 2. Bounty to their teachers, ver. 6. Perſeverance in good works, ver. 9. and univerſal beneficence, ver. 10. Aſſuring them withal of his ſincere affection for them; as a mark of which he had written this whole Epiſtle "with his own hand," ver. 11.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle aſſerteth his Divine authority: Expreſſeth his wonder at their ſudden perverſion: Accurſeth thoſe who preach any other Goſpel; And declareth his own converſion; and how he behaved both before and after it.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. PAUL an Apoſtle (not of men, neither by man, but by Jeſus Chriſt, and God the Father, who raiſed him from the dead) And all the brethren which are with me, unto the churches of Galatia: Grace be to you, and peace from God the Father; and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Who gave himſelf for our ſins, that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world, according to the will of God and our Father: To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Paul, an Apoſtle.] Tho' St. Paul was very modeſt in ſetting forth his authority as an Apoſtle; yet, becauſe it had been call'd in queſtion among the Galatians, he aſſerts it here to the full.

Not of men, neither by man.] That is, Not of mens election, neither by man's inſtruction. As if he had ſaid, I neither preach any doctrine deviſed or taught me by man, neither receiv'd I my authority or calling from man to preach the Goſpel: Neither from the whole college of the Apoſtles, as Matthias did, Acts , 13, &c. nor of ſome or any of them. From whence we learn. that the impoſition of hands upon him at Antioch, was not an election or conſecration of him to the apoſtleſhip. (Fell, H. and B.) See the notes on Acts ix. 1, &c. and xiii. 1.

By Jeſus Chriſt.] Jeſus Chriſt, no doubt, is man; but as he is God alſo, and head of the church, he is in this reſpect exempted out of the ordinary number of men. The Apoſtle's meaning is, That no meer man whatſoever was the author, means, or inſtrument of his calling to be an Apoſtle; and therefore it was not only lawful, but altogether divine, and equal to that of the reſt of the Apoſtles. (Aſſ.) But behold the peculiar prerogative of St. Paul above the reſt of the Apoſtles, in this particular: They were called by Chriſt in the day of his humiliation, when he was here upon earth in the fleſh; but he was called by Chriſt after his reſurrection; yea, in his higheſt ſtate of exaltation, when ſitting at his Father's right hand in Heaven: And as his call was thus very extraordinary, ſo his gifts were anſwerable to his call; the Goſpel which he preached, he received by inward and immediate revelation, which made him much excel all the other Apoſtles. (B.) The creation of church governors is attributed to the Holy Ghoſt, Acts xx. 23. to Chriſt, Eph. iv. 11. and to God the Father, 1 Cor. xii. 28. but in diverſe reſpects, ver. 4, 5, 6. (Fell) See the notes on John xx. 28. and the other texts here referr'd to.

Raiſed him from the dead.] Of Chriſt ſo raiſed St. Paul was choſen, Acts ix. 15. and therefore a witneſs of his reſurrection, ver. 27. chap. xxii. 14. and xxvi. 16. as well as the other Apoſtles, chap. i. 22. and x. 41. (Fell) See the notes on Acts ii. 24, and the other texts here referr'd to: And for a full confutation of the abſurd Eraſtian ſcheme, which puts all this in the power of Kings, ſee an excellent diſcourſe, intitled, The independency of the Church upon the ſtate, as to its pure ſpiritual powers; by Tho. Brett, L. L. D. 1717

The brethren which are with me.] The word (adelphoi) brethren, doth often ſignify no more than believers, or Chriſtians in general; but here, being join'd with St. Paul in the writing the epiſtle, "all the brethren which are with me," ſeems to denote thoſe who accompanied him in his travels, and aſſiſted him in preaching the Goſpel; ſuch as Timothy and Clemens, and the reſt; who are call'd his fellow-labourers. Thus alſo the ſame phraſe, "the brethren which are with me," Phil. iv. 21. ſeems to ſignify, being diſtinguiſh'd from "all the Saints" there, ver. 22. (H. and W.) See the notes on Acts xv. 32. 1 Cor. i. 1. and 2 Cor. xiii. 11.

Unto the churches of Galatia.] Obſerve here, 1. The generality of the perſons to whom this epiſtle is directed; not to a ſingle perſon, nor to a particular church, but unto all the churches in the province of Galatia. There were ſeveral Chriſtian congregations, called Churches, in that country; and all of them being leavened, or in danger of being ſour'd with Judaiſm, that is, of ſuperadding the ceremonial law of Moſes to the Goſpel of Chriſt, the Apoſtle and the brethren with him, direct this epiſtle, not to any ſingle church in that province, but to them all in general, being equally concerned, "All the brethren with me, unto the churches of Galatia." 2. How the Apoſtle doth not ſay here, as elſewhere, To the Saints of God which are in Galatia; or, To them that are ſanctified by God the Father; but barely ſays, "To the churches of Galatia;" thereby declaring his holy indignation againſt the Galatians, as unworthy of thoſe gracious appellations, becauſe they had ſadly corrupted the doctrine of the Goſpel, begun in the Spirit, and ended in the fleſh; firſt owning Chriſt and the liberty of the Goſpel, and afterwards pleading for the bondage of the ceremonial law. Yet note laſtly, as corrupt as theſe churches of Galatia were, our Apoſtle owns and acknowledges them to be true churches: They retained the eſſentials of Chriſtianity, and were not guilty either of idolatry, or a total apoſtacy; therefore tho' ſtained with divers corruptions, both in doctrine and manners, which he ſharply rebukes and reproves them for, yet he doth not deny them the name of churches. (B.)

Grace be to you, and peace.] Theſe words are both a Chriſtian ſalutation, and an apoſtolical benediction: As they are a ſalutation, they expreſs a wiſh and deſire, of the beſt bleſſings towards, and on the behalf of, them they ſaluted. From whence we may learn, That religion doth not aboliſh and deſtroy, but ſpiritualize, and improve civility, humanity, and common courteſy. The Heathens wiſhed health to their ſaluted friends; the Jews, peace; but the Chriſtians, "grace and peace." Again, The words may be underſtood as an apoſtolical and miniſterial bleſſing. The Apoſtles were the patriarchs of the church of the New Teſtament: And as a ſpiritual Father, St. Paul here bleſſes his children; wiſhing them firſt grace, then peace. Peace without grace, is no peace: There can be no peace with the Creator, no ſanctified peace with the creatures, except through Jeſus Chriſt we are firſt made partakers of the gracious love and favours of Almighty God. Accordingly ſays the Apoſtle here, "grace be to you, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt." Where note, That grace and peace may be ſaid to be from the Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, theſe two ways; 1. Efficiently, as the authors and cauſes of both: God the Father is the author of all grace, as he did decree it; and Chriſt, as he did purchaſe it.

2. Objectively; that is, this grace and love in God the Father, and this peace and ſatisfaction that is in Jeſus Chriſt, the more they are by faith apprehended by us, the more are they encreaſed in us, and upon us. Learn from the whole, That the holieſt and beſt of Chriſtians here on earth, ſtand in manifeſt need of fuller ſupplies, and farther additions, both of grace and peace, to be daily communicated to them, and enjoyed by them; "Grace be to you, and peace." (Idem) See the notes on Rom. i. 7. and 1 Cor. i. 3.

Who gave himſelf.] That is, Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt gave himſelf unto death, for the remiſſion of our ſins, "that he might deliver us from this evil world;" namely, to ſeparate or bring us off from the evil cuſtoms and practices of the wicked men in the world, and engage us to live a life of ſtrict holineſs, according to the will and command of God our Father. Here note, 1. The prieſtly office of Chriſt declared and aſſerted; he "gave himſelf for our ſins;" that is, an expiatory ſacrifice for our ſins. So deadly was the guilt of ſin, ſo exact the juſtice of God, and ſo unalterable his faithfulneſs, in executing the judgment which was denounced againſt ſinners, that there was no hope for guilty ſinners pardon, without ſatisfaction given to the injured juſtice of God, for ſin; and nothing leſs would ſatisfy than the blood of God; that is, the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, who is eſſentially, truly, and really God. 2. A farther end and deſign, which Chriſt had, in giving himſelf for us; namely, to deliver us from the rage of our luſts, as well as from the wrath of God; to ſanctify our natures for us, and to mortify our corruptions in us; to redeem us from our vain converſation, and "deliver us from this preſent evil world;" not totally to remove us out of the world, but morally to oblige us to abandon the wicked courſes, the ſinful practices, of the evil men of the world. Bleſſed be God, that Jeſus Chriſt did not only purchaſe pardon and remiſſion, but holineſs and ſanctification alſo, for his ranſomed and redeemed ones, and is as willing to free us from the dominion, as from the danger of our ſins. 3. As the final cauſe of Chriſt's death, deliverance from God's wrath, and ſin's rage; ſo the efficient cauſe of his death, the will of his Father; He gave himſelf for us, "according to the will of God;" that is, according to the purpoſe and appointment of God. Chriſt, as mediator, was the Father's ſervant; and whatever he did in the work of mediation for us, was by the appointment, and with the ſpecial approbation, of God the Father. Eternal thanks be given, that the Son's purchaſe was the Father's pleaſure. 4. The comfortable relation in which God now ſtands unto us, ſince Chriſt gave himſelf for us; namely, that of a Father; "according to the will of God and our Father;" that is, who is now our Father. Learn hence, That ſatisfaction being given by Chriſt to provoked juſtice for our ſins, God, who was before a conſuming fire and a ſin-puniſhing judge, is become our gracious and reconciled Father; our Father by adoption, who before was our Father only by creation. (B.) See the notes on Rom. iv. 25.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9. I marvel that ye are ſo ſoon removed from him that called you into the grace of Chriſt, unto another Goſpel: Which is not another; but there be ſome that trouble you, and would pervert the Goſpel of Chriſt. But though we, or an Angel from Heaven preach any other Goſpel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accurſed. As we ſaid before, ſo ſay I now again, If any man preach any other Goſpel unto you, than that ye have received, let him be accurſed.

I marvel, that.] As if he had ſaid, From your former zeal, I expected greater ſtedfaſtneſs; and therefore I now marvel at the contrary. (Fell)

So ſoon removed.] Obſerve here, 1. The heavy charge, which St. Paul brings in againſt the falſe apoſtles, or Judaizing teachers: They "perverted the Goſpel" which St. Paul preached, and taught a new Goſpel of their own; yet not abſolutely ſo, but by compounding and mingling the Goſpel with the ceremonial Law, and by making circumciſion and other things, neceſſary to ſalvation, which our Saviour never made ſo: This the Apoſtle calls "another Goſpel." Whence learn, 1. That it is no new or ſtrange thing, to hear of new goſpels, of true goſpel perverters, and of falſe goſpel teachers. We find ſuch in the primitive and pureſt churches, planted even by the Apoſtles themſelves; no wonder they are found in our days, who are fallen into the very dregs of time and error together. 2. That the addition of any thing to the Chriſtian Religion, as neceſſary to be believ'd and practis'd in order to ſalvation, is a "perverting the Goſpel of Chriſt, and preaching another Goſpel." Theſe Galatians did not renounce Chriſtianity, and go over to another religion; but they received circumciſion, and the obſervation of the law of Moſes, as an eſſential part of the Chriſtian Religion, and as a condition of eternal ſalvation: Whereas the death of Chriſt having put an end to the Jewiſh diſpenſation, there was neither then, nor now, any obligation upon Chriſtians to obſerve the law of Moſes; and conſequently, the addition of any thing to the Chriſtian Doctrine, neceſſary to be believ'd and practis'd in order to ſalvation, is preaching another Goſpel, and a manifeſt perverting the Goſpel of Chriſt. 3. That there is no authority in the Chriſtian church, in any, or in all, the guides of it, to impoſe upon Chriſtians any thing, as of neceſſity to ſalvation, which the Goſpel has not made neceſſary: The Apoſtles themſelves had no authority to add any thing to the Goſpel; much leſs can any that come after them pretend to it. Chriſt commanded them, Matth. xxviii. to "teach all nations, to obſerve all things whatſoever he commanded them;" and had the Apoſtles themſelves added any points of faith and practice, not given them in charge by Chriſt himſelf, they had fallen under that curſe themſelves, which here they denounced againſt all falſe teachers. Obſerve, 2. The artifice which theſe falſe teachers uſed to draw the Galatians into theſe new errors; and that was haſtily and ſuddenly to avow and own them before the world; "I marvel that ye are ſo ſoon remov'd." Seducers are for clapping up an haſty match between the mind and error, and preſs the ſeduced to quick reſolutions; an haſty diſpatch being their great advantage, before they conſult their ſpiritual guides, or weigh matters in the ballance of impartial judgments. 3. The true cauſe from which the Galatians fall into error did proceed: They truſted themſelves with themſelves; they truſted to the cleanneſs of their own unaſſiſted eyes, and to the ſtrength of their own reaſon and judgment, without conſulting their ſpiritual guide: Had not theſe Galatians a Paul to conſult with, before they gave their conſent to falſe teachers? Or if he was at a diſtance from them, about the work of the Lord in remote places, could not they have written to him, or adviſed with others, beſides him? Woe to him that is alone, when aſſaulted by ſeducers! (B.) Obſerve here further, 4. That the Apoſtle uſeth the word (metatitheſthe) removed, in the paſſive voice, to caſt the fault upon the falſe apoſtles; and in the preſent tenſe, to intimate, that it was not already done, but only now in doing. (Beza, and Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts xv. 1, 24. and 2 Cor. xi. 4.

Tho' we, or an angel.] Obſerve here, 1. How our Apoſtle ſuppoſes an impoſſibility; only for the confirmation of what he had before affirmed. He doth not ſuppoſe it poſſible, for an Angel in Heaven, or an Apoſtle upon earth, to contradict the doctrine of the Goſpel which he had delivered; to preach any thing contrary to it, or beſides it, or different from it, making that neceſſary to be believ'd and practis'd, which Chriſt and his Apoſtles never made neceſſary. Learn hence, That the written word of God, without unwritten traditions, contains in it all things neceſſary to ſalvation; and whatever doctrines are propounded to the church, not only contrary to, but differing from it, or beſides the written word, are curſed doctrines. 2. The terrible Anathema which the Apoſtle denounces againſt thoſe, whoever they ſhall be, be it an Apoſtle on earth, or an angel from Heaven, that ſhould thus "pervert the Goſpel of Chriſt," by making any thing neceſſary to be believ'd or practis'd, in order to ſalvation, which Chriſt has not made neceſſary, "Let him be accurſed." Let the church of Rome in general, and the council of Trent in particular, dread the efficacy of this curſe, who have added ſo many new articles to the Chriſtian Faith, and enforced them as neceſſary to be believ'd by all Chriſtians; inſomuch that they pronounce, that no ſalvation can be obtained without the belief of them, and denounce their Anathema's againſt us who cannot believe them: But as their "curſe cauſeleſs ſhall not come," ſo we believe that their propounding terms of ſalvation, no-where deliver'd by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, do bring themſelves under the Apoſtle's Anathema here in this text; for if the new articles of the church of Rome be neceſſary to ſalvation, then what Chriſt and his Apoſtles delivered was not ſufficient to ſalvation before; and thus the pride of man exalts it ſelf above the wiſdom of God. 3. How the Apoſtle expreſſes his aſſurance in this matter; and to ſhew that he did not ſpeak raſhly, and in an heat, but upon due conſideration, he repeats again, ver. 9. "As we ſaid before, ſo ſay I now again, if any man preach otherwiſe, let him be accurſed." Note here, How poſitive and peremptory the Apoſtle is in this matter: And doubtleſs this one Anathema of his, is more dreadful than all the Bruta Fulmina, the freakiſh Anathema's of a church, which, in a manifeſt affront to the authority of St. Paul, has preſumed to add ſo many new articles to the Chriſtian Religion, for which there is not the leaſt ground or warrant, either from the Holy Scriptures, or any of the ancient Creeds. 4. How the Apoſtle puts himſelf into the number; If I, or any man, or any angel, preach otherwiſe, let him be accurſed. As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Not only the falſe Apoſtles are to be rejected, but I my ſelf deſerve to be anathematiz'd, and accounted an execrable perſon, ſhould I "preach any other doctrine" to you, "than what ye have received" from Chriſt by me; nay, ſhould any Angel from Heaven attempt it, he ought to be deteſted for it. Learn, That no Angel in Heaven, no perſon or church upon earth, have power to make new articles of Faith, or to impoſe any thing upon our belief or practice, that is, either againſt or beſides the written word, or any ways inconſiſtent with it, or contrary unto it. (B.) See the notes on Rom. ix. 3. 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c. xvi. 22. and 2 Cor. xi. 14.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. For I do now perſwade men, or God? Or do I ſeek to pleaſe men? For if I yet pleaſed men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt. But I certify you, brethren, that the goſpel which was preached of me, is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. For ye have heard of my converſation in time paſt, in the Jews religion, how that beyond meaſure I perſecuted the church of God, and waſted it: And profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers. But when it pleaſed God, who ſeparated me from my mothers womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with fleſh and blood: Neither went I up to Jeruſalem, to them which were Apoſtles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again to Damaſcus. Then after three years I went up to Jeruſalem, to ſee Peter, and abode with him fifteen days. But other of the Apoſtles ſaw I none, ſave James the Lord's brother. Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lye not. Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia; And was unknown by face unto the churches of Judea, which were in Chriſt: But they heard only, That he which perſecuted us in times paſt, now preacheth the faith which once he deſtroyed. And they glorified God in me.

Perſuade men, or God.] What (peithein anthropous, and Theon) to perſuade men and God ſignifies, muſt be taken from the like phraſe in the Old Teſtament, 1 Sam. xxiv. 7. where the Greek hath it, David perſuaded his men with words; where we read, "David ſtay'd his ſervants with theſe words." The men that were with David were very eager to have him take the advantage againſt Saul, and kill him, ver. 4. and were ready to riſe up againſt him to kill him, ver. 7. and David's ſpeech to them took them off from this bloody purpoſe; and that is expreſs'd by (epeiſe) perſuading, appeaſing, pacifying them. Thus is it the office of a rhetor, or advocate, (peithein) to perſuade, that is, to appeaſe the judge, to the client whoſe cauſe is pleaded; to propitiate him. So, Matth. xxviii. 14. If the governour hear of it, that is, of the ſoldiers being ſo negligent, as to let Chriſt be ſtoln out of the grave which they were ſet to watch, (peiſomen auton) "we will perſuade him;" that is, appeaſe him, obtain his pardon for you; and, as it follows, (humas amerimnous peieſomen) we will free you from all ſollicitude of ſecuring your ſelves from that heavy puniſhment that, by the Roman laws martial, was due to the watch-man that fell aſleep: By which it is clear, that peithein is to propitiate, or gain ones favour, to appeaſe wrath, or puniſhment, to avert diſpleaſure: And ſo it is here, to "perſwade men;" that is, to ſay, or teach thoſe doctrines which will avert the diſpleaſure of the perſecuting Jews, which the Gnoſtick teachers did; and to "perſwade God" is to endeavour to ſay and preach that which may avert God's wrath, be acceptable to him, obtain and ſecure his favour. And this is, in the next words, explained by areskein, "to pleaſe men," as that is contrary to, and unreconcileable with, the ſervice, or approving himſelf to God. (H.) But this word (peithein) may alſo ſignify to obey. For ſo it is uſed by St. Paul himſelf here, chap. iii. 1. v. 7. Rom. ii. 8. and Heb. xiii. 17. and elſewhere; as alſo by St. Luke, Acts v. 36. and St. James chap. iii. 3. as well as by the beſt Heathen Authors, when they write on moral ſubjects; as namely, Plato, Socrates, Plutarch, Arrian, and Zeno. So then the import of theſe words may be this; Do I, in preaching the Goſpel, act in obedience to men, who every where perſecute me, and oppoſe me for it; or in obedience to that God, who call'd me to be an Apoſtle of the Gentiles? ver. 15, 16. And this ſenſe is confirmed by the verſe following. (W.)

Or do I ſeek to pleaſe men?] Here St. Paul declares, that in his miniſtry, he did not aim at pleaſing men, but Chriſt: For ſhould he "yet pleaſe men," now being an Apoſtle, as he did in times paſt, when he was a Phariſee, he "ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt." The miniſters of Chriſt muſt not be men-pleaſers: They muſt not pleaſe men, either by flattery or falſhood; nor accommodate their doctrines to the humour and diſpoſitions of men. Pleaſing of God is our great buſineſs; Let us mind that: Man-pleaſing is endleſs and needleſs, any farther than for their good and the Goſpel's gain. Accordingly, the Apoſtle tells us elſewhere, that he was "made all things to all men, that he might by all means ſave ſome," 1 Cor. ix. 22. Not to make a preſent gain of them, but that they might be eternal gainers by him. It was not to exalt himſelf, that he ſought, in and by his miniſtry to pleaſe all men; but that Chriſt might be exalted in the hearts and lives of his hearers; and thus, in imitation of him, let us ſeek to pleaſe all men, only "for their good to edification," (B.) There is no contrariety at all between theſe: This ſeeming contrariety rather yieldeth excellent inſtruction to us, how to behave ourſelves, in this matter of pleaſing: viz. Not to pleaſe men, be they ever ſo many or great, out of flatneſs of Spirit, So as, for the pleaſing of them, either, 1. To neglect any part of our duty towards Chriſt; or, 2. To go againſt our own conſciences, by doing any diſhoneſt or unlawful thing; or, 3. To do them harm, whom we would pleaſe, by confirming them in their errors, flattering them in their ſins, humouring them in their peeviſhneſs, or but even cheriſhing them in their weakneſs; for weakneſs, tho' it may be borne with, yet it muſt not be cheriſh'd. Thus did not St. Paul, thus ſhould not we, ſeek to pleaſe any man. But, by yielding to their infirmities for a time, in hope to win them, Rom. xv. 1. by patiently expecting their converſion, or ſtrengthning, 1 Theſſ. v. 14. by "reſtoring them in the Spirit of meekneſs," when they had fallen, Gal. vi. 1. by forbearing all ſcornful, jeering, provoking, or exaſperating language and behaviour toward them, Gal. v. 26. but rather in meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves, 2 Tim. ii. 25. Thus did he, and thus ſhould we, ſeek to "pleaſe all men," for their profit, and for their good, Rom. xv. 2. and 1 Cor. x. 33. for this is charity. (Sanderſ.) See Mr. Rich. Barker's ſermon on this text, 1707. and the notes on the ſeveral texts here referr'd to.

Not after man.] See the notes on ver. 1. and 1 Cor. xv. 3.

My converſation in time paſt.] Here the Apoſtle offers ſeveral arguments, to ſatisfy the Galatians, that both his commiſſion to preach the Goſpel, and alſo the Goſpel which he preached to them, were not from man, but from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. The firſt of which as a convictive evidence of it, was his bitter enmity againſt the Chriſtian Religion, and his mighty zeal for the Jewiſh religion, in which he was educated: All which he mentions, as a thing publickly known; leaving them to infer from thence, that ſo great and ſudden a change could not be the effect of human perſwaſion, but divine revelation; "In time paſt I perſecuted the church of God, and waſted it:" Where note, That altho' our Apoſtle did not ſhun to make an open confeſſion of his wicked life before his converſion, that he might thereby make evident, that his converſion was immediately from God; yet he makes an open confeſſion only of his open ſins, ſuch as they had "heard in time paſt," without diſcovering his ſecret ſins, which had been kept from the knowledge of the world; the divulging whereof would but have multiply'd ſcandals and ſtumbling-blocks unto others. To confeſs our ſecret ſins to God, is ſafe; to confeſs our open ſins to the world, is ſufficient. Obſerve farther, The commendable proficiency which St. Paul made in the Jewiſh religion, wherein he was inſtructed and educated; "I profited in the Jews religion above many my equals." He was alſo a zealous maintainer of the Jewiſh cuſtoms, and unwritten traditions, "being more exceeding zealous of the traditions of my Fathers." From St. Paul's example we may infer, That it is a ſpecial duty incumbent upon all perſons, to make religion the matter of their choice; and having eſpous'd it, to be the more ſerious and zealous in it; to labour to advance and grow, both in the knowledge and practice of it; and that to a degree of eminency, excelling and outſtripping others. (B.) See the notes on Acts viii. 3. ix. 1. and xxii. 3.

God who ſeparated me.] Here we have a ſecond argument to prove that both his miſſion and doctrine were received by extraordinary revelation from Chriſt himſelf, and not from man, viz. That immediately upon his converſion and call to the miniſtry, he ſet about the work, without conſulting, and much leſs receiving inſtructions from, "them who were Apoſtles before him," or any other perſon living: And that he went directly from Damaſcus into Arabia, where he preach'd the Goſpel; and from thence "return'd again to Damaſcus," the place of his converſion. (B.) Where obſerve, 1. That the word aphorizein, to ſeparate, in this place ſignifies in the ſame manner as Acts xiii. 2. (ſpoken of this Apoſtle) a conſecration to the apoſtolical office; only with this difference, that there it is ſpoken of, as inſtantly to be performed by the miniſtry of men, here only in the deſignation or decree of God, which is therefore ſaid to be from the womb, to denote the no-contribution made by him toward this decree, of giving him a commiſſion to be an Apoſtle, or the no-merit conſider'd in him by God, when he deſign'd him to this office. This farther includes a purpoſe of God, to call him from Heaven, in the midſt of his madneſs againſt Chriſtians, (which mercy of God to him was founded in his doing it ignorantly, 1 Tim. i. 13.) and his foreſight that he would immediately convert upon that call; which two being firſt ſuppoſed, in God's eternal purpoſe and preſcience, it muſt needs follow to be an act of his unmerited free choice from all eternity, that God purpoſed to make uſe of him for the converting of others, who had himſelf been wonderfully changed from ſo profeſs'd an enmity to the faith, to ſo perfect an obedience to it. But this being a deſignation only to the dignity of the apoſtolical office, (as Jeremy, chap. i. 5. and John Baptiſt, and others appear to have been deſigned to the prophetick) can with no reaſon be ſo applyed as to infer any irreſpective decree or deſtination of his perſon to Heaven and bliſs; that being laid-up for him as "a crown of righteouſneſs," a reward of the "finiſhing his courſe" and perſeverance, 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. (H.) And, 2. That St. Luke ſays nothing in The Acts, concerning this journey of St. Paul into Arabia; becauſe he himſelf was not yet with him. (W.) See the notes on chap. ii. 2. Rom. i. 1. and 1 Cor. iv. 6.

After three years.] A third argument to prove that he did not receive his miniſtry and doctrine from man, is, That it was three years after his converſion, before he ſaw any of the Apoſtles; and then only Peter and James at Jeruſalem, with whom he abode fifteen days and no more: But the ſhortneſs of his ſtay there is an evidence, that he went not up to Jeruſalem to learn the Goſpel from them; and much leſs to pay homage to St. Peter as the prince of the Apoſtles. For, St. Paul often affirms in his epiſtles, that he was not inferior to St. Peter, nor came behind the chiefeſt of the Apoſtles; Therefore it could be no more than only a familiar and friendly viſit of one miniſter of Chriſt to another, in token of mutual conſent and agreement to the ſame truth preach'd by both. (B.) See the notes on Acts ix. 26.

Before God, I lie not.] See the notes on Matth. v. 34. and Rom. ix. 1.

Unknown by face.] This is a fourth argument to prove, that St. Paul's miſſion and doctrine was not from men; That he was ſo far from learning the Chriſtian religion from the Chriſtians of Judæa, that he "was unknown by face" unto them. They had heard of him indeed, as one who perſecuted the Chriſtians in times paſt, but was now become a preacher of Chriſtianity; but they had never ſeen him. (B.) All this while (ſays he) I was not ſo much as known "to the churches of Judæa" which had receiv'd the faith; that is, to the other churches there, beſides that of Jeruſalem, mention'd in ver. 18. And this he ſays, to prove what he had affirmed, ver. 11, 12. viz. how far he was from receiving inſtructions from any other but Chriſt himſelf. (H.) And how falſly it was alledg'd of him by the falſe apoſtles, that in Judæa he had taught the neceſſity of obſerving the Jewiſh rites. (G.)

The faith which once he deſtroyed.] Obſerve here, St. Paul, before his converſion, is ſaid to "deſtroy the faith," becauſe he intended, and endeavour'd to deſtroy it, tho' he could not actually effect and accompliſh it. Sins intended by a determinate reſolution, are, in God's account, as if they were acted. (B.)

Glorified God in me.] That is, they glorified Chriſt who ſpake in me: Or, they glorified God for; bleſſing his name for my converſion; Or, as the Greek ſcholiaſt, they praiſed God in me; not this or that teacher, but God himſelf, who alone was my teacher. (Aſſ.) Where, we may obſerve, That this teſtimony of the Jewiſh Chriſtians was a confirmation of the Apoſtle's doctrine: For, if they could have found any juſt exceptions againſt it, they would not have glorified God for his preaching it. (W.)

He explaineth the reaſon of his ſecoud journey to Jeruſalem; and why Titus was not circumciſed: Declares St. Peter's prevarication, and his rebuking him for it: And enlargeth upon the doctrine of juſtification by faith.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. THEN fourteen years after, I went up again to Jeruſalem, with Barnabas, and took Titus with me alſo. And I went up by revelation, and communicated unto them that goſpel which I preach among the Gentiles, but privately to them which were of reputation, leſt by any means I ſhould run, or had run in vain. But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumciſed: And that becauſe of falſe brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to ſpy out our liberty, which we have in Chriſt Jeſus, that they might bring us into bondage: To whom we gave place by ſubjection, no not for an hour; that the truth of the goſpel might continue with you. But of theſe, who ſeemed to be ſomewhat (whatſoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no mans perſon) for they who ſeemed to be ſomewhat, in conference added nothing to me. But contrariwiſe, when they ſaw that the goſpel of the uncircumciſion was committed unto me, as the goſpel of the circumciſion was unto Peter; (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apoſtleſhip of the circumciſion, the ſame was mighty in me towards the Gentiles) And when James, Cephas, and John, who ſeemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hand of fellowſhip; that we ſhould go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumciſion: Only they would that we ſhould remember the poor; the ſame which I alſo was forward to do.

Fourteen years after.] What dia dekateſſaron eton here ſignifies, is by learned men made a matter of ſome queſtion. The time to which St. Paul refers, muſt be that of his going (with Barnabas here mentioned) from Antioch to Jeruſalem, on the queſtion here diſcourſed of, about the neceſſity of the Gentile Chriſtians being circumciſed; that ſo, firſt it may connect with the ſpaces mention'd chap. i. 18, 21. ſo as the word (palin) again ſeems to import, to denote the next time of his going to Jeruſalem after that mention'd ver. 18. and 2. ſo as to denote a time wherein Peter may be ſuppoſed ſtill to reſide at Jeruſalem, and wherein Titus may be ſuppoſed to be with St. Paul as a neophytus, and a companion, (and ſo in danger of being preſſed to be circumciſed) not yet employ'd, or ſent out by him on any ſervice in the churches. Now this is thought ſo unlikely to be fourteen years after the ſpace laſt mention'd chap. i. 21. (his going to Syria and Cilicia Acts ix. 30.) that it hath been thought probable, that (as in numeral letters it oft happens) fourteen ſhould be here ſet inſtead of four. For which emendation ſeeing there appears not any ground in the ancient manuſcripts, it will ſurely be more reaſonably to obſerve, 1. That dia doth not diſtinctly ſignify after (as meta chap. i. 18. had done) but by, or about, that is, near that ſpace, though not preciſely fourteen years: 2. That (epeita) afterward, or then, refers not to that which was mention'd immediately before, his paſſing thro' Syria and Cilicia, ſo as to affirm this to have been fourteen years after that; no, nor to the former epocha's, either his going up to Jeruſalem, ver. 18. or departing into Arabia, ver. 17. but to that great epocha, ſo conſiderable to him, the time of his converſion, which immediately ſucceeding the death of St. Stephen, may reaſonably be placed in the firſt year after Chriſt's aſſumption, A. D. 34 From whence to the time of that council, which is ordinarily placed A. D. 47. it was about thirteen or fourteen years. And then there will be no more need of an emendation, than there is authority for the imagining any. (H.)

I went up by revelation.] A revelation made to the Apoſtle himſelf, to comply with the determination of the church of Antioch, ſaith Dr. Hammond; a revelation made to the prophets of the church of Antioch to ſend them, ſaith Dr. Lightfoot; which I do not gainſay. But the Apoſtle doth not ſay, he went up, (dia apocalypſin) by revelation, but (cata apocalypſin) according to revelation. Now, he had ſaid before, he received not his doctrine or Goſpel by men, or of men, "but by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt," chap. i. 12. and here he may be ſuppoſed to add, that in his journey he acted ſuitably to the revelation, which conſtituted him the Apoſtle of the Gentiles. (W.) Bleſſed be God, that although we cannot expect immediate direction and information from God now, as the Saints of old had, before the canon of the Scripture was compleated, yet we have the written word of God to be "a light to our feet, and a lamp upon our paths," to direct and guide us in all our enterprizes; and we ought to regulate all our actions according to it, and to judge of the lawfulneſs, and expediency of our undertakings by it. (B.) See the notes on Acts xiii. 2. and xv. 2.

Communicated unto them.] Obſerve here, 1. The end and intent of St. Paul, in this preſent going up to Jeruſalem, and appearing before St. Peter there, was not to acknowledge St. Peter's ſupremacy over him, or to appeal to him as the infallible judge in matters of religion: But it was, in a friendly and brotherly manner, to acquaint St. Peter, and the reſt of the Apoſtles, with the doctrine preached by him; that their concurring approbation being given to it, the mouth of his adverſaries, the falſe apoſtles, might be ſtopped, who accuſed him for preaching contrary to what the reſt of the Apoſtles both believed and practiſed. (B. For, ſurely, that doctrine which he receiv'd by immediate revelation from Jeſus Chriſt, and God the Father, needed no farther confirmation from the authority of men. (W.) 2. That tho' this may ſeem contrary to what our Apoſtle himſelf had ſaid, that he "conferred not with fleſh and blood," chap. i. 16. yet the reconciliation is eaſy. For there he denied, that he conſulted with any man living, viz. whether he were rightly inſtructed in the Goſpel, or whether he ought to preach it; for of this he neither did nor could make any queſtion: But here he affirms, that he communicated to the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem; not to learn any thing from them, for that he expreſly denies, ver. 6. but to receive a teſtimony from them, of his conſent with them in the doctrine which he had already preach'd in Arabia and Syria. (Aſſ.) And, 3. That the word anethemen, which we here tranſlate communicated, coming from anatithemi, ſignifieth to expound or declare any thing to another, in a friendly and familiar manner, which in ſtrictneſs we are not obliged to declare to him. (Leigh) And thus it is uſed, Acts xxv. 14. where "Feſtus declared Paul's cauſe unto king Agrippa," at a viſit of civility, tho' there was no obligation of duty upon him ſo to do.

Privately, to them which were of reputation] Obſerve here, 1. With what prudence and holy caution the bleſſed Apoſtle proceeded in this matter: He imparted his ſentiments, and communicated his doctrine to the reſt of the Apoſtles, ſuch as were of greateſt reputation; leſt if there ſhould be any oppoſition made to his doctrine, he ſhould hereafter run, or had run in vain. Nothing more obſtructs the ſucceſs and efficacy of the Goſpel, than differences of judgment, and ſtrife and debate about thoſe differences, among the moſt eminent preachers of it. Hence it was that St. Paul endeavoured to get the joint conſent of the moſt eminent Apoſtles to the doctrine delivered by him; leſt, by the calumnies of his adverſaries, his preaching ſhould have been render'd unſucceſsful, and he ſhould hereafter run, and labour in vain. (B.) 2. That, for the notion of dokountes here, and of (dokountes einai ti) "thoſe who ſeemed to be ſomewhat," ver. 6. it muſt be obſerv'd, That it ſignifies not their own opinion of themſelves, or their aſſuming any great authority over others, (as of Simon Magus it is ſaid that he gave out, (einai tina heauton megan) "that himſelf was ſome great one," Acts viii 9.) but that they were ſo in the reputation and eſteem of others; and that the great opinion, which at that time all Chriſtians had of them, above the reſt, was what moved St. Paul to go up and addreſs himſelf particularly to them. This is fitly expreſs'd by hoi dokountes, (as from that verb comes the noun doxa, reputation or glory) thoſe who are in eſteem in an eminent manner; and more ſo by (dokountes einai ti) thoſe who are eſteemed, "to be ſomewhat;" that is, ſomething above other their fellow-Apoſtles: Not ſeemed, as that is equivocal, either to ſeeming falſely, bare ſeeming, ſeeming in their own eyes; but ſeeming ſo in truth, and to the generality of the beſt and wiſeſt Chriſtians. In proportion to this (ouden moi diapherei) "it maketh no matter to me," ver. 6. is far from any thing of ſcorn or deſpiſing in St. Paul, that ſpeaks it: It is a ſolemn form only of inſiſting on his own commiſſion from Chriſt; which could no way be prejudiced by the real excellency of their perſons, how great ſoever they were: "God, who accepts no perſons," and attends not to perſonal excellencies, may give his commiſſion to the meaneſt and unworthieſt, as well as to thoſe which are really of the greateſt eminence. All this paſſage therefore is rather an expreſſion of great reverence to Peter, &c. than of ſcorn: Only for his miſſion and revelations, St. Paul hath them from Chriſt, not from any man. (H.) And 3. That by the metaphor of running, he ſetteth forth his alacrity, earneſtneſs, and diligence; like to theirs who prove maſteries, and run in a race for a rich prize. Now, in thoſe who run in a race two things are conſiderable; their labour and ſwiftneſs in running, and the end for which they run, viz. the gaining the prize, which if they miſs, they "run in vain." This prize the Apoſtle accounted the fruit of his preaching; which had been little or none among the Jews, who were zealous of the Moſaical rites, if by his communicating with the chief Apoſtles he had not taken away that rub which was caſt into his way, viz. that his preaching and practice was different from theirs. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. xviii. 17. 1 Cor. ix. 24. and xi. 16.

But neither Titus.] Obſerve here, 1. The inſtance and evidence which St. Paul brings of the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, agreeing with him both in their doctrine and in their practice: And that was Titus; who, being a Gentile, born a Greek, and now a preacher of the Goſpel, and never circumciſed, the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem would no more compel him to be circumciſed, than St. Paul had done, but receive him into fellowſhip with them, tho' he was an uncircumciſed Greek. This was a plain evidence, that they did not judge circumciſion, at that time, to be a part of God's commanded worſhip: For then they would have compelled Titus to it; that is, conſtrained him, by the force of eccleſiaſtical cenſures, to become circumciſed, had they thought circumciſion neceſſary to the Gentiles. 2. The reaſon aſſigned why the Apoſtle would not circumciſe Titus, tho' he had before circumciſed Timothy; namely, becauſe ſome falſe brethren, crept in, would have taken advantage from it, to bring perſons into bondage to the law of ceremonies, and plead conformity to circumciſion as an obliged duty. Learn hence, that although the ceremonial law was certainly aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt, yet Almighty God, partly with reſpect to it as his own ordinance, and partly in condeſcenſion to the weakneſs of the Jews, was pleaſed to tolerate the obſervation of ſome part of it, and particularly circumciſion, as an indifferent action, tho' not as a part of religion, for ſome time; the ceremonial rites being dead, they were to be decently, not over-haſtily buried. 3. The Apoſtle's undaunted courage, and heroick reſolution in this matter: He would, notwithſtanding the falſe apoſtles importunity, never yield ſubjection, or ſubmiſſion to, or compliance with, their commands, in the leaſt meaſure, by conſenting to circumciſe Titus; that ſo the truth and liberty of the Goſpel might continue ſincere and unſhaken. Learn hence, That an outward act of compliance muſt not be conſented to, which in ſome caſes might be complied with, when by making it neceſſary, we turn Chriſtian liberty into ſervitude and bondage, when things in their own nature indifferent, are urged and enforced as neceſſary; in that caſe, the practice of a thing indifferent is to be abſtained from. Thus here, when falſe brethren urged the circumciſion of Titus, as an evidence of St. Paul's receding from the doctrine of Chriſtian liberty, he would not obey them, nor conſent unto them: "To whom we gave place, no not for an hour;" that is, we refuſed to uſe the circumciſion, tho' but that once, becauſe we would not give the adverſaries the leaſt advantage againſt us, or againſt the truth delivered and defended by us. (B.) What (ouk enankasthe) "was not compell'd" ſignifies here, is a matter of ſome difficulty; which being explained will make the next verſe perſpicuous, which otherwiſe ſeems not intelligible. That ſome pretended Chriſtians looked very jealouſly on St. Paul, as one averſe from the Moſaical law, is ſufficiently known. Theſe, when Paul came to Jeruſalem, laid it to his charge, that he preached to the Gentiles that were not circumciſed, converſed freely with them, and Titus, being a Græcian, and at that time with him, they ſpecified to be one of them, and him they would have conſtrained to be circumciſed. But, ſaith St. Paul, ouc enankasthe, though he were ſuch as was pretended, and though this were thus preſſed by them, and though I was by this means likely to aliene the Jews minds from the Goſpel, as it was preach'd by me, (this being an act of confeſſion that I was guilty of what was laid to my charge) and ſo matter of ſome ſcandal to the Jews of Jeruſalem; yet I that was willing to yield at ſometimes, to avoid the ſcandal of the Jews, to perform ſome ceremonies of the law, Acts xxi. 26. and ſo circumciſe Timothy, was reſolved not to do it now, becauſe, if I did, it muſt appear that thoſe falſe brethren, pretended Chriſtians, had overcome me at Jeruſalem, and that the church there judg'd on their ſide againſt me, and ſo that Titus had been by order of the church or councel of Jeruſalem forced to be circumciſed: Which thing muſt needs have been matter of ſo much greater ſcandal and diſcouragement to the Gentiles, in aliening their minds from the Chriſtian faith, and that ſcandal have been more conſiderable to the hindrance of the progreſs of the Goſpel, which was to be hoped for more plentifully among the Gentiles than the Jews, that I was very reſolute, and took ſpecial care that Titus ſhould not be circumciſed. And this, ver. 3. "becauſe of the falſe brethren," that came in to watch what I would do, and to carry it againſt me in the councel at Jeruſalem, which is expreſſed by (catadouloſon) bringing under, in the end of the verſe. By theſe Paul reſolved he would not be worſted, and therefore, though at other times he was content to comply (pros horan) for ſome ſhort time, yet now he would not do ſo, that the truth of the Goſpel might abide toward you;" that is, that the Galatians, that is, Gentile Chriſtians, might not be ſcandalized at this compliance, which is before meant by "leſt I ſhould have run in vain;" ver. 2. that is, leſt I ſhould diſcourage and loſe the Gentiles, which I had brought to the faith: As on the other ſide, he went and gave an account at Jeruſalem to the eminent perſons there, of his preaching the Goſpel to the uncircumciſed Gentiles, and the reaſons of it, leſt he ſhould now ſcandalize the Jews that were Chriſtians, and aliene them (at Jeruſalem and elſewhere) from hearkning to him. Added nothing to me.] What is the full meaning of (ouden emoi proſanethento) "they added nothing to me," is, I think, exactly ſet down by St. Chryſoſtome; They oppoſed me not, but conſpired and accorded with me; They added no more to me than I knew before; When they had knowledge of my affairs, they neither added nor altered any thing in my courſe: And this, as a farther explication of what went before, that they gave no appointment for the circumciſing of Titus, that went along with Paul, and never had been circumciſed. And ſo, in proportion to this ſenſe, follows this notion (alla tounantion) "but contrariwiſe;" not that they were taught by Paul, for they needed not that, but that they were ſo far from blaming, or altering any thing in his practice, that they not only approved, but commended his whole courſe. (H.)

When they ſaw.] That is, "James, Cephas and John." See the notes on ver. 9.

Goſpel of the uncircumciſion.] St. Paul had commiſſion to preach to the Gentiles who were uncircumciſed, as St. Peter had to the Jews; Yet not ſo reſtricted, but that St. Peter might, and did, preach to the Gentiles occaſionally, and St. Paul to the Jews. But as Peter was chiefly ſent to preach to the Jews, and Paul to the Gentiles; ſo it pleaſed God to bleſs their labours accordingly. (G. Aſſ. Fell, and B.) See the notes on chap. i. 16. Acts ix. 15. xiii. 2, 46. xv. 2. and xxii. 21.

James, Cephas and John.] Obſerve, 1. That James is here named before Peter and John, probably becauſe he was Biſhop of Jeruſalem, where the council was then held. And, 2. That tho' John is not mention'd by St. Luke as preſent, yet it appears hence manifeſtly that he was there. (Fell, H. W. and B.) See the notes on Acts xv. 6, 13, 19.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14. But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withſtood him to the face, becauſe he was to be blamed, For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles: But when they were come, he withdrew, and ſeparated himſelf, fearing them which were of the circumciſion. And the other Jews diſſembled likewiſe with him; inſomuch that Barnabas alſo was carried away with their diſſimulation. But when I ſaw that they walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the goſpel, I ſaid unto Peter before them all, if thou being a Jew, liveſt after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compelleſt thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

I withſtood him to the face.] Obſerve here, 1. St. Peter's offence. He declined from the doctrine taught by himſelf, concerning the abrogation of circumciſion, and the ceremonial law. He had formerly convers'd freely with the Chriſtian Gentiles without ſcruple; making no objection againſt them becauſe they were not circumciſed: But at Antioch he withdrew himſelf from the Chriſtian Gentiles, refuſing to eat with them, becauſe they were not circumciſed; as if for want of circumciſion, they had been unclean, and altogether unfit to be convers'd with. This was his fault; whereby it appears that St. Peter himſelf was not infallible, whatever his pretended ſucceſſors, the Biſhops of Rome, are ſuppoſed to be. Hence learn, How certainly and ſuddenly the holieſt and beſt of men will run into ſin and error, if a ſpecial aſſiſtance from the Holy Spirit doth not uphold them, and preſerve them. 2. St. Paul's rebuke: He "withſtood him to the face;" that is, rebuked him publickly, becauſe he was blame-worthy; and not ſecretly behind his back: Such as ſin openly, muſt be rebuked and reproved openly. Here note, how little St. Paul dream'd of St. Peter's ſupremacy: If ſo, he had been more modeſt, than thus to reprove him to his face. Learn hence, That, as no bands of friendſhip muſt keep the miniſters of God from reproving ſin and vice, ſo, when they find the fault to be notorious, they muſt reprove it wherever they find it, with much boldneſs and reſolution. St. Paul here, in reproving St. Peter, withſtood him: It is, in the original, a military word, ſignifying to ſtand againſt; either by force of arms, as among ſoldiers, or by dint of argument, as among diſputants: It is a word of defiance, and ſignifies an oppoſition hand to hand, face to face, foot to foot, not yielding an hair's breadth to the adverſary. Yet withal, as St. Paul's courage, ſo his candour appear'd, in reproving St. Peter to his face; and not reproaching him, as ſome, behind his back. And behold, this great Apoſtle St. Peter ſubmits to his reprover; neither juſtifying his action, nor reflecting upon St. Paul: He replieth not again. (B.) St. Peter's fault was not an error in doctrine; for he knew very well, that the obſervation of the ceremonial law was not now neceſſary; and ſo himſelf declared, Acts xv. 7. Immediately alſo before that, he had been inform'd by a viſion, that the Gentiles were not unclean, which was the great reaſon why the Jews avoided their converſation; and he had eaten and converſed with Cornelius, Acts x. Nor was it doing a thing in itſelf unlawful; for St. Paul had upon occaſion circumciſed Timothy, and practiſed legal purifications: Neither had the Apoſtles, Acts xv. 19. prohibited the Jews the uſe of their ceremonies. But it was the doing a lawful thing unſeaſonably; in an undue or unfitting place and time; becauſe, by ſo doing it, he gave occaſion of ſcandal to the Gentiles; that is, made them doubt, whether they alſo were not oblig'd to obſerve the law; as certain perſons (perhaps Cerinthus) endeavour'd to perſwade ſome of them: Which dangerous hereſy St. Peter ſhould by all means have oppoſed, rather than by any compliance have any way countenanced. This is by St. Paul called fear, ver. 12. diſſimulation, 13. and "walking not uprightly," ver. 14. (Fell, and Cave) Some interpreters (and particularly St. Jerome) underſtand St. Paul here not to have withſtood St. Peter, in earneſt, but only cata proſopon, which they expound to be in outward appearance or ſhew. But St. Auguſtin more truly inſiſted, that St. Paul reproved him ſeriouſly and in earneſt; for otherwiſe he could not truly have ſaid that he withſtood, or reſiſted, or oppoſed him (as the original word antiſtenai plainly imports, Matth. v. 39. and Rom. xiii. 2.) neither could he have charg'd St. Peter (as he does) with fear, diſſimulation, and walking not uprightly, for which "he was to be blamed." (Biſhop Alley, and Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts xi. 3. and xv. 35. and thoſe here next following.

Barnabas alſo.] Obſerve here, That fatal influence of St. Peter's compliance. It drew others into the like guilt: "The other Jews diſſembled likewiſe with him; inſomuch that Barnabas alſo was carried away with their diſſimulation." (B.)

Why compelleſt thou?] Obſerve here, That in Scripture he is ſaid to compel, not only who doth violently force, but who, being of authority, doth provoke by his example. (W. and B.) See the notes on Luke xiv. 23.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. We who are Jews by nature, and not ſinners of the Gentiles; Knowing that a man is not juſtified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt: Even we have believed in Jeſus Chriſt; that we might be juſtified by the faith of Chriſt, and not by the works of the law: For by the works of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified. But if while we ſeek to be juſtified by Chriſt, we ourſelves alſo are found ſinners, is therefore Chriſt the miniſter of ſin? God forbid. For if I build again the things which I deſtroyed, I make my ſelf a tranſgreſſor. For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God. I am crucified with Chriſt: Neverthelefs I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: And the life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me. I do not fruſtrate the grace of God: For if righteouſneſs come by the law, then Chriſt is dead in vain.

We who are Jews.] St. Paul having vindicated his own authority as an Apoſtle, comes here to vindicate his doctrine, viz. the evangelical doctrine of juſtification by faith in Chriſt, which he had formerly preached to the Galatians, and which in his abſence the falſe apoſtles had endeavour'd to ſubvert and overthrow, urging the ſtrict obſervation of the ceremonial law, as neceſſary to juſtification and ſalvation. Our Apoſtle therefore, to ſtrike at the root of this dangerous error, excludes all works of our own from having any influence upon our juſtification. Now, this he proveth, 1. Becauſe they that were Jews by birth, and ſo federally the whole people of God, found it neceſſary to renounce the works of the law in point of juſtification, and to ſeek righteouſneſs only through faith in Chriſt, as well as the profane idolatrous ſinners of the Gentiles, who were ſtrangers to the covenant of God; "For by the works of the law ſhall no fleſh (neither Jew nor Gentile) be juſtified;" that is, acquitted from the guilt of ſin, and diſcharged from obnoxiouſneſs to the wrath of God. Now, no obedience of ours can obtain in this, becauſe of the great imperfection which cleaves to it, and becauſe God will have all boaſting excluded; Eph. ii. 8. "By grace ye are ſaved, through faith; not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt;" but that he that glorieth, ſhould glory in the Lord.

Obſerve here, That the doctrine of juſtification by faith, and not by works, was very early oppoſed by Satan and falſe teachers: It being a fundamental article of our Chriſtian faith, our comfort ſtands or falls with it; no wonder then it is ſtrenuouſly oppoſed. (B.) See the notes on Acts xv. 10, 11. and Rom. iii. 27.

Knowing, that a man is not juſtified.] See the notes on Rom. i. 17. iii. 20, 22. iv. 4. and viii. 3.

If while we ſeek.] Theſe words are generally look'd upon as an objection, which the adverſaries of the doctrine of juſtification by faith have been always ready to make againſt it; namely, that if perſons be not juſtified by their obedience to the law, then they may live as they liſt, in the breach and violation of the law, and freely indulge themſelves in ſin, and conſequently make "Chriſt the miniſter of ſin," as if he had relax'd the duty. The Apoſtle rejects this inference and deduction with the greateſt abhorrency and deteſtation, ſaying, "God forbid!" Hence note, That it is no new prejudice, though a very unjuſt one, againſt the doctrine of juſtification by faith alone, and not by works, that it opens a door to licentiouſneſs, and makes "Chriſt the miniſter of ſin." Obſerve farther, a ſecond objection here ſuggeſted: Some might pretend that he built up by his practice, what he had deſtroyed. No, ſays the Apoſtle, I have, together with the doctrine of free juſtification, preached to you, and preſs'd upon you, the duty of mortification, as of indiſpenſible neceſſity to be practiſed by you: Should therefore my preaching or my practice be otherwiſe than it has been, I ſhould build again what I have deſtroyed, and deſtroy what I have already builded; and thus by encouraging ſin, and diſcouraging holineſs and obedience, I ſhould be a tranſgreſſor againſt the law of righteouſneſs. Learn hence, That the doctrine of juſtification by faith alone cannot be rightly preached, except the duty of mortification of ſin be urged and enforced with it; for the ſame faith that depends upon Chriſt for pardon of ſin, doth look up unto him for power and ſtrength to vanquiſh and ſubdue ſin; if we do not the latter, Chriſt will never do the former. (B.) See the notes on Rom. vi. 1. and vii. 7.

For I through the law am dead.] Here the Apoſtle ſhews, that believers are ſo far from being juſtified by the law, that they are "dead to the law," ſo as to put no confidence in their obedience to it for juſtification; particularly, 1. They are dead to the law; that is, they are delivered from the rigorous exactneſs of the law: Perfect, perſonal, and perpetual obedience, is the duty which the law exacts at the believer's hand; and he has performed it, though not in himſelf, yet in the perſon of Chriſt his ſurety, who yielded as abſolute and compleat obedience to the law, as it could require or demand. 2. The law is dead to believers, and they to that, in regard to the condemnatory curſe and ſentence of the law: "Chriſt hath redeemed them from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for them," ch. iii. 13. True, the believer's violation of the royal and righteous law of God, in the ſmalleſt meaſure and degree, doth in its own nature deſerve the curſe and condemnatory ſentence: But Chriſt has diſcharged him from obnoxiouſneſs to the curſe, by being made a curſe. 3. The law is dead to believers, as to its authority, to juſtify and ſave them: This is what the law cannot do, being made weak through the fleſh; tho', properly ſpeaking, the law is not weak to us, but we are weak to that: The law has not loſt its authority to command, but we our ability to obey; it is as impoſſible for a fallen ſinner to keep the law of God perfectly, as it is for a lame cripple to run a race ſwiftly. Yet, 4. Believers are not dead, but alive to the law, as a rule of life and holy living: The law binds the believer (in Chriſt's hand) as ſtrictly to endeavour obedience to it, as it did Adam in innocency. But here is the believer's privilege, That God the Father, upon the ſcore of the covenant of grace, which the blood of Chriſt has ratify'd and confirm'd, doth graciouſly accept the faithful endeavours of his children, inſtead of perfect performances, which obedience the law-covenant did rigorouſly exact and require. Thus may every believer ſay, with the Apoſtle, "I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God;" namely, a life of righteouſneſs and true holineſs. (B.) See the notes on Rom. vi. 2, 11. and vii. 4, 6.

I am crucified with Chriſt.] Several things are here obſervable, viz. St. Paul's ſpiritual death declared, and his ſpiritual life deſcribed, together with the author and inſtrument of it. Obſerve, 1. St. Paul's ſpiritual death; "I am crucified with Chriſt;" that is, with Chriſt I am dead to the law, in the manner mentioned in the foregoing verſe, dead to ſin, and dead to the world. Learn hence, That all true believers are crucified with Chriſt Jeſus; or, That all juſtified perſons have fellowſhip with Chriſt in his death: They have fellowſhip with him, 1. In the merit and value of his death; they are ranſomed by it, as a price paid down to the juſtice of God for them. 2. In the virtue and efficacy of his death; which doth not only merit for us, but mortifies ſin in us; "our old man is crucified," that is, the power of ſin is ſubdued in us. 3. A juſtified perſon hath fellowſhip with Chriſt, in the likeneſs and ſimilitude of his death; and that is a crucifixion: As Chriſt died a painful, ſhameful, lingering and accurſed death for him, ſo doth ſin die painfully, ſhamefully, and gradually in him; "They that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh with its affections and luſts," ch. v. 24. Obſerve, 2. St. Paul's ſpiritual life deſcribed; "I live; yet not I, but Chriſt in me." Learn hence, That a crucified Chriſtian is a living Chriſtian; "I am crucified, nevertheleſs I live;" a life of juſtification and ſanctification at preſent, in hope of, and as an earneſt for, a life of glorification to come. Yet obſerve, 3. How the Apoſtle corrects, or rather explains himſelf, after what kind, and in what manner he lives; he denies himſelf to be the author and root of his own life, and declares Chriſt to be both; "I live; yet not I, but Chriſt in me." Chriſt is both the author and efficient cauſe, the exemplary cauſe of the Chriſtian's life; a living Chriſtian lives not himſelf, but Chriſt lives in him. Obſerve, 4. As the author of the Chriſtian's ſpiritual life, Chriſt; ſo the inſtrument of it, and that is faith: "The life which I live in the faith; that is, the ſpiritual life which I live as a Chriſtian here in the world, I live by faith in the Son of God;" my life of juſtification is by faith in his blood; my life of ſanctification and conſolation is through faith, in and by influences derived from his holy Spirit. Obſerve, 5. How the Apoſtle appropriates to himſelf in particular, what Chriſt had done for all believers in general; "he loved me, and gave himſelf for me." Where note, Tho' a firm perſwaſion, and a full aſſurance of Chriſt's ſpecial love to ourſelves, and his dying for us in particular, is not of the eſſence and being of juſtifying and ſaving faith, yet it is attainable without an extraordinary revelation; and as ſuch, every ſincere Chriſtian ought to aim at it, to labour and endeavour after it. CHAP. III.

He expoſtulates with them, for being ſeduced from the liberty of the Goſpel, and reſting in the law; ſhews that believers are juſtified, and bleſſed with faithful Abraham; and proves it by ſeveral arguments.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. O Fooliſh Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye ſhould not obey the truth, before whoſe eyes Jeſus Chriſt hath been evidently ſet forth, crucified among you? This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye ſo fooliſh? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the fleſh? Have ye ſuffered ſo many things in vain? If it be yet in vain. He therefore that miniſtreth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doth he it by the works of the law; or by the hearing of faith? Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteouſneſs. Know ye therefore, that they which are of faith, the ſame are the children of Abraham. And the ſcripture foreſeeing that God would juſtify the heathen through faith, preached before the Goſpel unto Abraham, ſaying, In thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed. So then they which be of faith are bleſſed with faithful Abraham.

That ye ſhould not obey the truth.] Obſerve here, 1. The fault charg'd upon the churches of Galatia, for which the Apoſtle calls them fooliſh and bewitched, viz. Their defection from the truth, into a very great error; namely, their holding of circumciſion, and the obſervation of the ceremonial Law, as neceſſary to ſalvation; which was a making of the croſs of Chriſt of no effect, and a virtual denial of his being come in the fleſh. 2. The high and heinous aggravation of this fault in the Galatians, "before whoſe eyes Jeſus Chriſt had been evidently ſet forth, crucified among them;" that is, Chriſt, and their freedom by him, from the bondage of the ceremonial Law, had been preached to them; and his death and ſufferings, with the great end and deſign of them, as plainly laid before them, as if Chriſt himſelf had been crucified in the midſt of them. And, 3. The brand and infamy which our Apoſtle ſets upon theſe Judaizing doctors, heretical and falſe teachers: He calls them ſpiritual ſorcerers, and their doctrines ſpiritual witchcraft: "O Galatians, who hath bewitched you?" Becauſe, 1. As ſorcerers, by deluding the ſenſes, make perſons apprehend they ſee what they ſee not; ſo hereticks, by caſting a miſt of ſeeming reaſon before the underſtanding, do delude it, and make the deluded perſon believe that to be truth, which indeed is not. 2. As ſorcerers, in what they do, are aſſiſted beyond the reach of their own ability and ſkill, by the help of Satan; ſo heretical ſpirits are often, by Satan's concurrence with them, more than ordinarily aſſiſted by him, in drawing multitudes after them; "O fooliſh Galatians, who hath bewitched you?" (B) Obſerve alſo, 4. The terms here uſed, viz. 1. Anoetoi, fooliſh; Whereby the Apoſtle does not contradict our Saviour's precept, Matth. v. 22. becauſe he doth not call them thus, raſhly, and without a cauſe, ſaith Theophylact, nor out of anger, and ill-will to them; but from an ardent deſire to make them ſenſible of their folly. (W.) And beſides moros is a term of reviling, but anoetos is only a term of reproof, and not of reviling. (Leigh) 2. The word (ebaskane) bewitched, is borrow'd from the ſuppoſed practice of witches and ſorcerers, who, being aſſiſted by the devil, uſe to caſt a miſt before the eyes of the people, to dazzle their ſight, and make things appear unto them which in truth they do not ſee: Therefore, to look on Chriſt crucified is a remedy for this deluſion, preſcribed in the next words. (Idem) 3. The word (peithesthai) here rendred to obey, among the Greeks, ſignifies either to be perſuaded, or appeaſed, or to obey: In the former ſenſe it has ſometimes the accuſative caſe with it, but in the latter only the dative; as here, te aletheia. (Idem) But 4. The phraſe (en hymin eſtauromenos) "crucified among you," will require another reading. For that it ſhould be here ſaid to the Galatians, that Chriſt Jeſus was crucified among them, is not well to be imagined: Neither is there any reaſon to underſtand the words ſo; which are otherwiſe interpretable, either by removing the comma after proegraphe, or by ſetting it after hymin, thus; to whom Jeſus Chriſt, having been crucified, hath been ſet forth among you, before your eyes; that is, with evidence and conviction. Another way of conſtruction might alſo be pitch'd on, by joining hois and en hymin, (as 1 Pet. ii. 24. whoſe ſtripes of him, that is, by whoſe ſtripes) among whom, that is, you: But that which removes all difficulty is, that the king's MS. leaves out (en hymin) among you; and then the ſenſe will be obvious, and the conſtruction clear, (hois kat opthalmous Jeſos Chriſtos proegraphe) to whom before your eyes (that is, evidently) Chriſt Jeſus hath been ſet forth, or expoſed to publick view, (ſo prographesthai ſignifies Jude 4.) eſtauromenos, having been crucified; that is made known and evidenced in his ſufferings, whereby he took away the partition betwixt Jew and Gentile, aboliſhed the ceremonies of the Moſaical Law; and ſo alſo, in the power of his reſurrection, the conſequent of theſe his ſufferings. (H.) See Mr. Battie's ſermon on this text, 1679. and the notes on chap. i. 10. Luke xxiv. 25. 2 Cor. v. 11. and Jude 4.

Received ye the Spirit.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, I appeal to your own experience: Ye have received the Spirit your ſelves, ſome of you for ſanctification, others for miraculous operations: Now I would know by what means ye received it? Was it by hearing the law of Moſes preached? Ye cannot ſay it; for ye were Heathens, and without the written law: It muſt then be by hearing of the Goſpel, the doctrine of faith, which I preached to you. Here we have a truth expreſſed, and a truth imply'd: The truth expreſſed is this, that the hearing of the Goſpel, faithfully preached, is the inſtrumental means by which perſons receive the Holy Spirit in the ſanctifying gifts and graces of it, to enable them to live an holy and ſpiritual life, "Received ye not the Spirit by the hearing of faith?" Yes, ye did. The truth implied is this, That a people ſhould take great heed, that they never undervalue, much leſs deſpiſe and vilify, that miniſtry, or that doctrine, which God at firſt bleſſed for their converſion. How many are there in England at this day, who diſown that Church, deſpiſe that miniſtry, which God bleſſed to their converſion, if ever they were converted? Sad it is, yet very certain, that like vipers they gnaw out the bowels of her who ſuckled them at her breaſt. (B.) See the notes on Acts ii. 38. and Rom. iii. 27.

Having begun in the Spirit.] Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle calls the doctrine of the Goſpel, Spirit; Becauſe by hearing the Goſpel preached, they had received both the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. The law, with all its rites and ceremonies, he calls fleſh; becauſe they were now weak, and being but temporary inſtitutions, were aboliſhed by the coming of Chriſt and the Goſpel. 2. How the Apoſtle endeavours to convince the Galatians of the folly and abſurdity of hoping to perfect that in the fleſh, which they had begun in the Spirit: "Are ye ſo fooliſh?" As if he had ſaid, That, having at your entrance into Chriſtianity begun an holy life, by and according to the Holy Spirit conferr'd upon you, now ye ſhould think to be more "perfect by the fleſh," by the external commandments and obſervances of the law: How unreaſonable is it, to ſuppoſe that your juſtification ſhould be begun by a more noble, and perfected by a leſs noble cauſe? (B.)

Have ye ſuffered?] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, To what purpoſe have ye ſuffer'd ſo many perſecutions from the Jews, for the cauſe of Chriſtianity? All which ſufferings will be in vain, if, after all, ye bring your ſelves under the bondage of the Jewiſh yoke: For theſe might have been eſcaped, had ye own'd the neceſſity of circumciſion, and other legal obſervances. But I hope ye will recollect your ſelves, and perſevere in your firſt profeſſion, without which all your former labours, your paſt and preſent ſufferings, will avail you nothing: Intimating, that all the good actions we have done, and all the hard things which we have ſuffered, will be altogether in vain unto us, if we do not perſevere in well-doing, and patient ſuffering unto the end. "Have ye ſuffered ſo many things in vain? If it be in vain." Note here, 1. That it has been, from the beginning, the lot and portion of ſuch as profeſs Chriſtianity, to ſuffer many things in the defence of it. 2. That it is very poſſible for ſome of thoſe who have made an early and long profeſſion of Chriſtianity, yea, and ſuffered hard things for it, after all, to make a foul defection and apoſtacy from it. 3. That all ſuch ſufferings have been, are, and will be in vain, and return to no joyful account, if the perſons ſuffering do afterward apoſtatize from, and turn their backs upon the truths of God, formerly embraced and maintained by them. (Idem)

He therefore that miniſtreth.] See the notes on 2 Cor. iii. 8.

The children of Abraham.] Hence we learn, That ſuch as ſeek juſtification by faith, as Abraham did, "are the children of Abraham," as the Gentiles were: That is, the children of his faith; a far greater privilege than what the Jews gloried in, namely, that they were the children of his fleſh. As the pious Jews under the Old Teſtament, ſo are Chriſtians now under the New Teſtament, juſtified alike. Were they juſtified freely? So are we. Are we juſtified fully? So are they. Was righteouſneſs neceſſary for them to be cloathed with, in order to their acceptance with God? The ſame is neceſſary for us alſo. Was faith imputed by God to them for righteouſneſs? So ſhall it be to us alſo. (B.) See the notes on Luke xix. 9. John viii. 33. and Rom. iv. 1, &c.

Preached before the Goſpel.] The firſt promiſe of redemption by Chriſt was preſently after the curſe, in general terms, that a perſon ſhould come, who ſhould break the head (that is, the power, malice, and works) of the devil, with the conſequents of them; one of which was the curſe. To Abraham was promiſed, that this ſeed, by whom this ſalvation was to be introduced, ſhould proceed from his loins, through Iſaac: In which promiſe he not only believed, but exceedingly rejoiced; to which our Lord ſeems to refer, John viii. 56. And by this Goſpel-faith (believing in the bleſſed ſeed to come, and hoping through him to obtain forgiveneſs of ſins and juſtification) was Abraham, and with him all the righteous perſons under the Old Teſtament, juſtified; nor was any juſtified by any other means whatſoever, Acts iv. 12. So that "all nations" comprehends both Jews and Gentiles; all, both before and under the law, as well as under the Goſpel: Yea, and even Abraham himſelf; for the Apoſtle ſaith here, they are bleſſed with him; that is, after the ſame manner with him. (Fell) But as for this phraſe (proevengeliſato to Abraam) "preached before the Goſpel unto Abraham," we ought at leaſt to render it preached before this Goſpel, (or rather, theſe good tidings) viz. "In thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed:" For thus the word evangeliſamenos is rendred, 1 Theſſ. iii. 6. and in many other places. (Maſſey) See the notes on ver. 17. and Acts iii. 25.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe: For it is written, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But that no man is juſtified by the law in the ſight of God, it is evident: For, The juſt ſhall live by faith. And the law is not of faith: But, The man that doeth them ſhall live in them. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us: For it is written, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree; That the bleſſing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jeſus Chriſt; that we might receive the promiſe of the Spirit through faith.

As are of the works of the law.] They who "are of the works of the law;" that is, they who ſtand upon the works of the law for their juſtification; or, who value their righteouſneſs by the performance of the law, are accurſed: Therefore, they are bleſſed who are of faith, that is, they who have righteouſneſs by faith. (Aſſ.) The argument runs thus; Our obſervance of the law, when at the beſt, is but imperfect: But every imperfect performance lays us "under the curſe;" Therefore no performance of ours can juſtify us. They who cannot fulfil the law, can never be juſtified by the law: But no fallen man can perfectly fulfil the law; Therefore none can be juſtified by the law. (B.)

That no man is juſtified.] That is, No ſinner can be juſtified before God by the works of the law, tho' before men he may. The argument is taken from Heb. ii. 4. "The juſt ſhall live by faith;" that is, ſhall live his ſpiritual life by faith, and his life of juſtification and ſanctification alſo; the life of his righteouſneſs before God, of his holineſs before men, and of glory with God in Heaven, being all by faith. The Apoſtle adds, "The law is not of faith;" that is, the law ſays nothing of faith in a mediator; nor promiſes life to any perſon, ſave only to him who, by a ſinleſs obedience, performs exactly what it preſcribes; but the voice of the law is, do, or die. Learn hence, 1. The law and faith, that is, the law and the Goſpel, are not contrary to each other, but are mutually ſubſervient one to another in many things: As thus, when the law makes known ſin, the Goſpel holds forth the remedy for ſin; the law diſcovers our need of Chriſt, the Goſpel makes an offer and gracious tender of Jeſus Chriſt; the law makes known to us our entire duty, the Goſpel furniſhes us with ſtrength and ability to perform that duty. 2. That though the law and faith, (that is, the Goſpel, which is the doctrine of faith) be not contrary to each other, yet in point of juſtification they are mutually inconſiſtent one with another: So that if juſtification be by the works of the law, it cannot be had by faith; if it be had by faith, it cannot be attained by the works of the law: There can be no mixture of law and Goſpel, of faith and works, in this matter. (B.) The law promiſeth life to all who keep it; and therefore, if it be kept, it juſtifieth and giveth life: But the Goſpel, attributing righteouſneſs and life to faith, taketh it from the law, ſince faith juſtifieth by imputation of another's righteouſneſs, but the law by the performance of the work in our own perſon. (Aſſ.) And, leſt ſome might ſay, that bleſſedneſs was by both the law and faith (as theſe Hereticks did) or from either of them, the Apoſtle therefore wholly excludes the law. (Fell) By the law he means here the commandments given on Mount Sinai, among which there is no mention of faith. (G.) See the notes on ch. ii. 16. and Rom. i. 17. iii. 20. iv. 4. and x. 5.

Chriſt hath redeemed us.] The buſineſs of the Apoſtle here, being to ſhew that "Chriſt hath redeemed us (ek tes kataras) from the curſe of the law, by being made a curſe for us," that is, by ſuffering that death, which by the law was counted execrable; to prove this, it was ſufficient to ſhew, that, by being "hanged on a tree," Chriſt ſuffer'd that puniſhment, which by the law was ſtiled execrable. (W.) When all were obnoxious to the curſe of the law, (ſaith Theodoret) he undertook that death which by the law was accurſed, to free us from the curſe. To reſtrain theſe words, "Chriſt redeemed us," &c. to the Jews only, is in effect to ſay, Chriſt ſuffer'd only for the Jews. The Gentiles were not indeed ſubject to the particular maledictions contain'd in the law of Moſes, becauſe that law was not given to them, but only to the Jews: But they were ſubject to that death which was the general puniſhment threatned to the violaters of the law, and was the curſe denounc'd againſt Adam and his ſeed. And ſince it was by virtue of Chriſt's hanging on the croſs, that the bleſſing of Abraham came upon the Gentiles, he muſt have been thus made a curſe for them alſo, and not for the Jews only. (W.) Here the Apoſtle prevents an objection, How can they be bleſſed whom the law pronounceth accurſed? Becauſe Chriſt ſuſtained the curſe which the law laid upon us, that we might be quit from it. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 8. Rom. viii. 3. and 2 Cor. v. 21.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. Brethren, I ſpeak after the manner of men; Though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man diſannulleth, or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made. He ſaith not, And to ſeeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt. And this I ſay, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Chriſt, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot diſannul, that it ſhould make the promiſe of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promiſe: But God gave it to Abraham by promiſe. Wherefore then ſerveth the law? It was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions, till the ſeed ſhould come, to whom the promiſe was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one; but God is one. Is the law then againſt the promiſes of God? God forbid: For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteouſneſs ſhould have been by the law. But the ſcripture hath concluded all under ſin, that the promiſe by faith of Jeſus Chriſt might be given to them that believe. But before faith came, we were kept under the law, ſhut up unto the faith, which ſhould afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our ſchool-maſter to bring us unto Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a ſchool-maſter. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Chriſt, have put on Chriſt. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: For ye are all one in Chriſt Jeſus. And if ye be Chriſt's, then are ye Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe.

I ſpeak after the manner.] Obſerve here, 1. An argument drawn from contracts among men, to prove the fixedneſs and ſtability of the covenant made by God: If one man makes a covenant with another, ſigns it, ſeals it, and delivers it before witneſſes, it becomes irrevocable and irreverſible; much more then muſt the covenant of grace and mercy, made with us by God, be perpetual and immutable, ſince it is a covenant eſtabliſhed by oath; and when God ſwears, he cannot repent. 2. The Apoſtle proves, That the covenant of God can never fail, in regard of the wiſdom and unvariableneſs of him that made it; ſo it can never expire for want of parties that have intereſt in it, and advantage by it, for want of Seed to whom it is made; for as long as Chriſt hath a church and members upon earth, ſo long ſhall the promiſe be of force; not only "to Abraham, but to his ſeed, were the promiſes made: Not to ſeeds, as of many; but as of one; to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt:" Where, by One, we underſtand One myſtically, and in the aggregate; not only perſonally and individually: And by Chriſt, the whole church, conſiſting of head and members; Believing Gentiles as well as Jews. 3. That the Apoſtle having confirmed the truth of his doctrine, by arguments in the foregoing part of the chapter, comes now, in the latter part of it, to anſwer objections which ſome might be ready to make againſt his doctrine. The firſt we have, ver. 17. "This I ſay, that the covenant which was confirmed before of God in Chriſt, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot diſannul." The objection lies thus: Some might ſay, when two laws are made, whereof the one is expreſly contradictory to the other, the latter doth, in common preſumption, abrogate and diſannul the former: But here we find, that "four hundred and thirty years after," the promiſe made to Abraham, there was a law publiſhed extremely contrary to that promiſe, a law without mercy and compaſſion, a law both impoſſible and inexorable, a law which can neither be obeyed nor endured, a law which denounces a terrible and ſevere curſe to the tranſgreſſors and breakers of it; therefore it ſhould ſeem as if ſome cauſe had happen'd, to make God repent and revoke his former covenant-promiſe made to Abraham. To obviate this objection, our Apoſtle ſhews, 1. What the purpoſe of the covenant-promiſe to Abraham was; namely, to give life and ſalvation by grace and promiſe. 2. What the purpoſe of the latter covenant by Moſes was not; namely, to give the ſame life by working, ſince in thoſe reſpects there would be a contradiction and inconſiſtency in the covenants, and ſo by conſequence inſtability and unfaithfulneſs in him that made them: And therefore that which the Apoſtle here drives at, is this, That the coming of the law hath not voided the promiſe, and that the law is not of force towards the ſeed to whom the promiſe is made, in any ſuch ſenſe as carries contradiction to, or implies abrogation of the promiſe before made; from whence it follows, if it be not to ſtand in contradiction to, it muſt ſtand in ſubordination to the Goſpel, and ſo tend to evangelical purpoſes. Learn hence, 1. That altho' God might have dealt with mankind as an abſolute lord and ſovereign, yet he doth not govern them barely by a law, but by a covenant which has promiſes and threatnings annex'd. 2. That after the covenant of works, made with man before the fall, was broken by Adam, God was pleaſed to enter into a covenant of grace with fallen man, to deliver him out of an eſtate of ſin and miſery, and to bring him into a ſtate of ſalvation by a redeemer. 3. That tho' the former and latter covenant did differ in ſome conſiderable circumſtances, yet they are one and the ſame in ſubſtance, and do fully agree in all the eſſential parts of both. 4. That God's intent, in giving the law, and urging exact obedience to it, under the penalty of the curſe, was not to take us off from ſeeking righteouſneſs and life only by the promiſe, but to encourage us to ſeek it; for, ſays the Apoſtle here, “The law could not diſannul the covenant made with Abraham, nor make the promiſe of no effect.” (B.) See more in the notes following.

The promiſes made.] There were divers promiſes made to Abraham: But the chief, and perfection of all, to which all the reſt tended, was that one, of the bleſſed Seed. Theſe promiſes were, 1. That God would give him a ſon, by his wife Sarah, in their old age. 2. That by that ſon he ſhould have numerous iſſue. 3. That that iſſue ſhould become a nation, having laws, government, &c. of its own: And, 4. Poſſeſs all that land wherein himſelf dwelled. 5. That he would ſettle his covenant, that is, his church, in that family and nation. And, 6. That in one perſon of that his poſterity, and in him alone, all nations, both of his poſterity and others, ſhould be bleſſed; that is, That the bleſſing ſhould be introduced, which ſhould aboliſh the curſe brought upon all nations by Adam. (Fell)

Not And to Seeds, as of many.] Abraham had Seeds by Hagar and Keturah; but ſuch as were carnal and natural, and accordingly had worldly and carnal promiſes and proviſions: But the promiſe of bleſſing was to his ſeed in Iſaac, as to Iſaac's ſeed in Jacob; therefore Iſaac and Jacob themſelves were not that ſeed: Nor yet Moſes, who was only a lawgiver to the poſterity of Abraham, when, according to the third promiſe (herein before mention'd) they became a nation, and took poſſeſſion of the promiſed land: But no bleſſing did he beſtow upon other nations, but rather the contrary. That ſeed then muſt be the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; none beſides pretending to it: For whoſe birth both Zachariah and Simeon praiſed God, as for the enlightner and bleſſer of the Gentiles, according to the prophecies: Who, at his leaving the world, commanded the great bleſſing of adoption into Chriſt's Church to be beſtow'd upon “all nations,” Matth. xxviii. 19. That this Seed is but one perſon, and not the Jewiſh nation, is clear, becauſe Seed is often ſo taken; as 1 Sam. ii. 20. Gen. iv. 25. and eſpecially in Gen. iii. 15. to which the promiſe refers: Where, of the ſeed of the woman, it is ſaid, He ſhall break the ſerpent's head. But if through the Jewiſh nation this bleſſing is given, then certainly by their law: But neither were other nations obliged to obſerve it, nor did they receive thoſe favours from God which were the occaſion of giving it. Beſides, the law was given to make a diſtinction betwixt the Jews and all other nations: And the Jewiſh nation itſelf, as well as all others, was to be bleſſed in and through this ſeed. Therefore they were not the ſeed through which others were bleſſed. (Idem, Aſſ. H. and W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xii. 12.

Confirmed before of God, in Chriſt.] The bleſſing of all nations through Chriſt was firſt given to Abraham by promiſe, Gen. xii. 2. but afterwards renew'd many times: As, by oath, Gen. xxii. 16, 17. but more particularly, when God actually fulfill'd one part of his promiſe, Gen. xvii. 2, 4. by ſolemnly ſettling his covenant (that is, his Church of believers in the bleſſed ſeed) in Abraham and his family; the ſeal and ſacrament whereof was circumciſion, ver. 10. Which being the covenant of faith, the law could not either alter or diſannul it; eſpecially after a preſcription of “four hundred and thirty years.” Nor can an after-covenant evacuate ſo ſolemn a promiſe made by God; firſt, upon his bare word, Gen. xii. next, by covenant, ſeal'd to by Abraham himſelf, in accepting circumciſion, Gen. xvii. and laſtly, by God's moſt ſolemn oath, Gen. xxii. 16. (Fell) See the notes on Acts vii. 6. and Rom. iv. 13, 14.

For if the inheritance.] See the notes on ch. iv. 1. and Rom. iv. 14. viii. 17.

Wherefore then ſerveth.] Here an objection is moved, Some might be ready to ſay, If the law, that is, works done in obedience to the law, do not juſtify, then the law given by Moſes upon Mount Sinai is in vain, and to no purpoſe; for why was the law given, enjoining ſo many duties, promiſing life to the obedient, and threatning wrath and a curſe to the diſobedient, if the inheritance come not by the law? The Apoſtle anſwers, That one great end for which the law was given, was to diſcover ſin, and a ſinner's undone condition by reaſon of ſin, and to lead him to ſeek out for a remedy: “The law was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions;” that is, to make tranſgreſſion appear, to diſcover the pollutions of mens hearts and natures, and make them ſenſible of the condemnation they are under: “The law was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions, till the ſeed ſhould come;” that is, Chriſt and his Church. Where note, That the legal diſpenſations were not to continue always in the church, but only till the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; at whoſe death the partition-wall was broke down, and the Gentiles called into the fellowſhip of the church, as well as the Jews. Obſerve farther, The glorious and amazing manner in which the law was given upon Mount Sinai, in thunder and lightning, by the miniſtry of angels, in ſuch a terrible manner, that there was no acceſs for ſinful man to God, but to Moſes, a mediator, ſtanding betwixt God and them; who in that action was a type of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the only mediator between God and us. As Moſes was a typical, national, and repreſentative mediator, ſtanding between the Lord and that people of the Jews, ſo Chriſt was a ſubſtantial and univerſal mediator between God and mankind. Where note, That the law was publiſhed in mercy and pacification, not in fury and revenge; for had the Lord intended death in the publiſhing of the law, he would not have proclaimed it “in the hand of a mediator,” but of an executioner. He adds, That “a mediator is not a mediator of one;” that is, of one party, but of diſagreeing parties: God and man were once friends; they were one, and needed no mediator; But God, and man, by ſin, fell at variance, and now need a mediator: The very notion of a mediator doth ſuppoſe, that men, by ſin, are at odds with God; and that God, by grace, is willing to be one with man. However, tho' “a mediator is not a mediator of one, yet God is one;” that is, tho' there be two covenants, and two mediators, yet God is one and the ſame in both covenants: He carries on one and the ſame purpoſe and intention, both in the law, and in the Goſpel; namely, a benevolence and good-will towards, and an hearty deſire and reconciliation with mankind. (B.) See the notes on ch. iv. 3. John i. 17. and xv. 22. Acts iii. 22. and vii. 38, 53. Rom. iii. 20. iv. 15. v. 13, 20. vii. 7, &c. and viii. 15. and 2 Cor. iii. 9.

Is the law then againſt.] Another objection is here made by the Apoſtle: The Jew might poſſibly ſay, that the law given by Moſes, was “againſt the promiſe of God” made to Abraham. The Apoſtle anſwers, No; The law is not contrary, but ſubſervient to the promiſe; for the law was not given on Mount Sinai, to afford life and juſtification by obedience to it (ſeeing it could not by a fallen creature be ever perfectly kept) but to convince of ſin, and to condemn for ſin; and that Men, deſpairing of ſalvation in and of themſelves, might ſpeedily betake themſelves to Chriſt for it: For God, in the Scripture, hath concluded, that is, declared, all men to be under ſin, and under the curſe due to ſin; that renouncing all confidence in themſelves, they ſhould, by faith, have recourſe to the only mediator for righteouſneſs and life, for juſtification and ſalvation. Learn hence, 1. That God, in the publication of the law by Moſes on Mount Sinai, had none but merciful and evangelical intentions. 2. That the publication of the law by Moſes, was not “againſt the promiſe of God” made to Abraham, but they both had the ſame merciful deſign and gracious intention. Suppoſe a prince ſhould proclaim a pardon to all traytors, if they would come in and plead it; and after this, ſhould ſend forth an officer to attach and arraign them, to threaten and condemn them: Is the prince contrary to himſelf? Hath he repented of his mercy? No, ſure: But he is unwilling to loſe the glory of his mercy, and moſt deſirous to have the honour of it acknowledg'd; and therefore he bringeth theſe criminals into extremities, that when their guilt is made evident, they may acknowledge the juſtice of the law that would condemn them, and the great mercy of the prince in offering a pardon to them. The caſe is alike between God and us; firſt to Abraham, and in him to us. God made a promiſe of mercy and bleſſedneſs, even to all that would plead an intereſt in it, for remiſſion of ſins, and acceptance with God: But the world grew ſecure, and, tho' ſin was in them, and death reign'd over them, they regarded not their miſerable condition; being without a law to evidence ſin and death unto their conſciences, they ſaw no neceſſity of pleading the promiſe of pardon. Hereupon Almighty God publiſhes by Moſes a ſevere and terrible law; a law which fill'd the air with thunder, and the mount with fire, inſomuch that Moſes, the mediator, did exceedingly fear and quake; Yet in all this, God did but purſue his firſt purpoſe of mercy, and take a courſe to make his Goſpel accounted worthy of all acceptation; that men being by this law rouz'd from their ſecurity, and made ſenſible of the curſe they lie under, might run from Sinai unto Sion, from Moſes to Chriſt, and by faith plead that pardon and remiſſion, which in Chriſt was promiſed, when God told Abraham, that “in his ſeed ſhould all the families of the earth be bleſſed.” (B.) See the notes on ver. 8. Rom. i. 17. iii. 9, 20. and iv. 14. and 2 Cor. iii. 6, &c.

But, before faith come.] That is, before Chriſt came, and the doctrine of faith was preached, “we were kept (in bondage) under the law.” The ceremonial law was a very great bondage: Their frequent going up to Jeruſalem at their feſtivals was burdenſome, their ceremonies were many, inconvenient and chargeable; their laws for uncleanneſs and purifications rendred them unconverſable one with another: Yet was the law very uſeful to the Jews, that ſo they might be prepared by it to receive the doctrine of Chriſt and ſalvation, by faith in him. Hence it is that he calleth the law their “School-maſter to bring them unto Chriſt:” The ſchool-maſter exerciſes authority over minors only, not over grown perſons; he teaches only rudiments and firſt principles for beginners, not ſuch things as require mature judgment and perfect age. Such was the law, in compariſon of the Goſpel, and Moſes with reſpect to Chriſt. Moſes and the law, is a rigid and ſevere ſchool-maſter, who by whips and threats require an hard leſſon of their ſcholars, whether able to learn it or not: But Chriſt and the Goſpel, is a mild and gentle teacher, who by ſweet and good rewards, invite their ſcholars to their duty, and guide and help them to do what of themſelves they cannot do; by which means they love both their maſter and their leſſon, and rejoice when he is neareſt to them, to direct them in their ſtudies. As the law is "our ſchool-maſter to bring us to Chriſt," ſo Chriſt is our great prophet that leads us to God. Note farther, That tho' the law was a good ſchool-maſter to the Jews in their infancy and minority, yet it has no authority over Chriſtians now grown up to maturity: The Goſpel-church, that is, both believing Jews and Gentiles, being like a ſon come to age, believing in Chriſt already come, are no longer to be treated as children, under the diſcipline of the law as a ſchool-maſter; for they are now under the Evangelical, not Moſaical, diſpenſation of the covenant of grace: "After that faith is come;" that is, Chriſt the object of faith manifeſted, and the Goſpel, the doctrine of faith revealed, "we are no longer under a ſchool-maſter." (B.) Note here alſo, That the word (ephrouroumetha) kept, which is here uſed metaphorically, to expreſs our condition "under the law," is a military term, borrow'd from ſoldiers, and ſignifies properly to keep, as a town is kept from enemies with a garriſon: And ſo the other (ſynkekleiſmenoi) ſhut up, is a like metaphor, alluding to the being kept, as cloſe priſoners, lock'd up together in a dungeon. (Leigh) Thus, the Apoſtle having ſaid, in the foregoing verſe, that "the Scripture (ſynecleiſen) hath concluded, (or ſhut up) all (both Jew and Gentile) under ſin," it ſeems moſt reaſonable, ſo to interpret the word here: Tho' it may be ſpoken of the Jews, who only were under the law, and, by virtue of the peculiar obſervations it required, were an incloſed people, ſeparated from communion with all other nations, till the Meſſiah, the great object of their faith, ſhould be reveal'd. (W.) See the notes on ver. 2, &c. and ch. iv. 1, 21, &c. Acts xiii. 38. and xv. 10. Rom. x. 4. and 2 Cor. iii. 6, 13.

Ye are all the children.] Obſerve here, 1. A glorious Goſpel-privilege diſcovered; namely, adoption: "Ye are the children of God." The church of God, under the New Teſtament, is in a ſpecial ſtate of ſonſhip and adoption; to whom the privileges and immunities of ſons and heirs, grown up to maturity, do belong 2. The univerſality of this privilege; "Ye are all children of God;" that is, all, both Jews and Gentiles; all, both weak and ſtrong believers. Subſtantial relations do not recipere magis & minus: He that is a father in reality, cannot be more a father to one child than to another; the young one in the cradle may call the parent father, as well as he that is grown to man's eſtate; "Ye are all the children of God." 3. The inſtrumental cauſe of this bleſſed privilege; "Faith in Chriſt Jeſus." Chriſt inveſts every believer, weak as well as ſtrong, in this glorious privilege of adoption, faith in Chriſt to come, did entitle believers, under the Old Teſtament, to the dignity of ſons and daughters; and faith in Chriſt now already come, doth add ſome peculiar dignity of ſonſhip to believers, under the New Teſtament: They with us, and we with them, are "all the children of God, through faith in Chriſt Jeſus:" Chriſt of a ſon became a ſervant, that we of ſlaves might become ſons. (B.) But hence (ſays the Antipædobaptiſt) it appears, that infants cannot be made the ſons of God by baptiſm, becauſe we are all made the ſons of God "by faith in Chriſt Jeſus;" but infants have no faith. To which we anſwer, They might as well argue thus; "By grace ye are ſaved, through faith," Eph. ii. 8. But infants have no faith; therefore they cannot be ſaved! Or thus; "He that believeth not, ſhall be damned," Mark xvi. 16. But no infants do believe; Therefore all infants ſhall be damned! The Apoſtle plainly ſpeaks here of perſons converted from Heatheniſm to Chriſtianity, who were therefore baptized being adult perſons; as he doth in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, and our Lord in the Goſpel of St. Mark: This place can therefore, with no more reaſon, be applied to the caſe of infants, than thoſe other places cited from that Goſpel and Epiſtle. (W.) See the notes on Acts ii. 38. and Rom. viii. 15.

Baptized into Chriſt.] What the Apoſtle had aſſerted in the foregoing verſe, he proves in this; viz. That all believers "are the children of God, by faith in Jeſus Chriſt," becauſe they are "baptized into Chriſt, and have put on Chriſt:" That is, they are admitted into the Chriſtian church by baptiſm; they profeſs Chriſt's holy religion; and, if they live as they profeſs, they "put on Chriſt;" that is, they are made partakers of his ſpirit, and do copy forth the excellencies of his life. (B.) To "put on Chriſt" is not, as putting on a new ſuit of cloaths fitted to the body, but as metal caſt into a mold, receiving the figure from it. (Fell, Fox, and B.) See Mr. T. Newhouſe's Sermon on this text, 1614. and the notes on Rom. xiii. 14.

Neither Jew nor Greek.] See the notes on Acts x. 35. and 1 Cor. vii. 19. and xii. 13.

All one in Chriſt Jeſus.] See the notes on John xvii. 21.

Heirs according to the promiſe.] See the notes on ver. 16, 26. and Rom. ix. 7. And whoever is curious to conſider Monſieur Le Clerc's notes on this chapter, may ſee them fully and fairly confuted by Dr. Whitby.

CHAP. IV.

The Apoſtle proceeds in his former argument, to explain the freedom of Chriſtians from the bondage of the law, by the familiar inſtances, of an infant under guardians, a ſervant under maſters, and of a pupil under tutors: He expoſtulates with them concerning their lapſe; and ſhews, that Chriſtians are the children of Abraham, not by Hagar the bond-woman, but by Sarah the free-woman.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. NOW I ſay, that the heir as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a ſervant, though he be lord of all; but is under tutors and governors, until the time appointed of the father. Even ſo we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world: But when the fulneſs of the time was come, God ſent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of ſons. And becauſe ye are ſons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a ſervant, but a ſon; and if a ſon, then an heir of God through Chriſt.

Now, I ſay.] The Apoſtle, in theſe words, compares the church of God, under the Old Teſtament, to an infant, or child in its nonage; partly, with reſpect to their weakneſs in underſtanding, and want of the means of knowledge, comparatively to what we enjoy; and partly, with reſpect to the diſcipline they were under from their rigid ſchool-maſter, the ceremonial law. Now, ſays the Apoſtle, as a child, tho' he be heir to, and owner of, all his father's inheritance, yet ſo long as he is under age, he "differeth nothing from a ſervant," in point of ſubjection, but is under the management of tutors and directors: In like manner, the church, when in its infant ſtate, under the Old Teſtament, was kept in bondage and ſubjection, under the rigid adminiſtration, and rigorous exaction of the law, and tyed almoſt to a numberleſs number of ceremonial obſervances, by which it pleaſed Almighty God to inſtruct the former ages of the church. Learn hence, That the Jewiſh church, in its infant ſtate, was obliged to learn and practiſe the elements of a religion chiefly conſiſting in viſible and bodily performances of the ceremonial law; which were but rudiments, in reſpect of that heavenly doctrine, concerning ſpiritual life, which the Goſpel now reveals, and clearly makes known unto us; "When we were children, we were in bondage under the elements of the world" (B.) And here we may obſerve alſo, 1. That the Apoſtle allows and maintains the church of God to have been all along one and the ſame: And therefore the Jewiſh and the Chriſtian church, when oppoſed to each other, are to be look'd upon, not as two collective bodies, perfectly diſtinct, but as one body under different ſtates and capacities; as is evident from this inſtance of an heir; who is one and the ſame perſon, tho' in different circumſtances, when he is a minor, and when he is of full age. 2. That theſe diſpenſations are to be underſtood, not as contrary, but only introductory, the one to the other; as is evident here, from the deſcription of "the elements of the world," as a bondage for children; that is, a diſcipline fitted to the imperfection of beginners, and conſequently to ceaſe in courſe, when the condition of the parties ſhould render them capable of more perfect methods of inſtruction: And the ſame is alſo the meaning of that paſſage of the foregoing chapter, ver. 24, 25. where the law is call'd "our ſchool-maſter to bring us unto Chriſt." (Stanh.) And, 3. That the Jewiſh rites are here call'd "the elements of the world," becauſe they were, for matter, moſtly the ſame which had obtain'd in the world; only they were directed to a better object and a better end. Maimonides (in his More-nevochim) acknowledges, that the ceremonial law was given for the extirpation of idolatry. For (ſays he) when God ſent Moſes to redeem his people out of Egypt, it was the uſual cuſtom of the world; and the worſhip in which all nations were bred up, to build temples in honour of the ſun, moon and ſtars, and to offer divers kinds of animals to them, and to have prieſts appointed for that end: Therefore God, knowing it is beyond the ſtrength of human nature, inſtantly to quit what it hath been long accuſtom'd to, and powerfully inclin'd to, would not command, that all that worſhip ſhould be aboliſh'd, and himſelf only be worſhipp'd in ſpirit; but that He only ſhould be the object of this outward worſhip, that theſe temples and altars ſhould be built to Him alone, theſe ſacrifices offer'd to Him only, and theſe Prieſts conſecrated only to His ſervice.

vice. The like is ſaid, by Cedrenus, of their feſtivals, ſeparations, purgations, oblations, decimations, That God injoin'd them, that, being employ'd in doing theſe things to the true God, they might abſtain from idolatry. And thus, (ſays Dr. Spenſer) were they kept, or guarded, under the diſcipline of the law, and ſhut up from the idolatrous cuſtoms of the Heathen world, by the ſtrictneſs of theſe legal obſervances, and the penalties denounc'd againſt the violaters of them. And it is well known, that all the ancient fathers were of opinion, that God gave the Jews only the Decalogue, till they had made the golden Calf; and that afterwards he laid this yoke of ceremonies upon them to reſtrain them from idolatry. (W.) See the notes on ch. iii. 19, 23. and Rom. v. 20.

But when the fulneſs] That is, " When the fulneſs of time was come," which God the Father had appointed, for the finiſhing of the legal diſpenſation, and for the aboliſhing the ceremonial rites, " God ſent forth" from himſelf the Son of himſelf, his only begotten Son, " made (that is, born) of a woman, made under (and obedient to) the law, (ſubjecting himſelf both to its precepts and its curſe) to redeem them who were under the law, (and diſcharge them from the curſe and malediction of it) that we (believers, we the members of the Chriſtian church) might receive the adoption of ſons," without any obſervance of circumciſion, or other ceremonial rites. Obſerve here, 1. That Chriſt was God's Son, " his own Son," the Son of himſelf, as the original calls him, Rom. viii. 3. " His Son ;" not barely in regard of his miraculous conception, or of his ſanctification and miſſion, or of his reſurrection and exaltation, or of that endeared affection which the Father bare unto him ; but in regard of his eſſence and nature, as begotten by him : " His Son," by eternal and ineffable generation ; being for nature co-eſſential, for dignity co-equal, and for duration co-eternal with the Father. 2. That Chriſt, God's own Son, was ſent forth by God the Father ; " God ſent forth his Son." This ſending of the Son doth 1. Preſuppoſe his pre-exiſtence before his incarnation ; for if he had not had a being, he could not have been ſent : It ſuppoſes alſo his perſonality, that he was a Perſon ; not an operation or manifeſtation ; only, for that could not be ſent : And that he was a Perſon really diſtinct from the Father ; for how elſe could one ſend the other ? 2. God's ſending of Chriſt, doth imply his ordaining, conſtituting, and appointing Chriſt from all eternity to come into the world ; alſo, his fitting and qualifying of him from his incarnation ; and his authorizing and commiſſionating of Chriſt to take our nature upon him, and in that nature, to do and ſuffer for us, as our pattern, and as our ſurety. Obſerve, 3. That Chriſt, God's own Son, ſent forth by God the Father, was " made of a woman," did really aſſume and take upon him our fleſh, and was made manifeſt in our nature : It was not an indigeſted unſhapen maſs, or lump of fleſh, that Chriſt aſſumed, but that fleſh was organized and formed into a perfect body, having the ſame parts, members, lineaments, and proportions which ours have : St. Paul calls it, Coloſ. i. 22. " The body of his fleſh ;" a body, to ſhew the organization of it, and a body of fleſh, to ſhew the reality of it. 4. That the ſeaſon in which Chriſt was ſent forth, was not in the beginning of time, nor at the end of time, but " in the fulneſs of time." He came not in the beginning of time ; to excite his peoples affections and longing deſires for his coming, and to teach them to prize him the more when come : He ſtaid not till the end of time, leſt the faith of his church and people ſhould have fail'd : The Patriarchs believed in Chriſt to come, the Apoſtles believed in Chriſt then preſent among them, and we believe in Chriſt as come, and gone again to heaven. Thus, in all differences of time paſt, preſent, and to come, faith had, has, and will have, its ſuitable work, and proper employment. 5. That the great end of God, in ſending Chriſt unto us, and the gracious deſign of Chriſt in his undertaking for us, was our redemption from the bondage and curſe of the law, and our adoption into the number of God's children ; " To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of ſons." (B.) How many myſteries, how many prodigies, how many inſtructions are there in theſe verſes, which comprehend the whole of religion ! 1. The eternal myſtery of the moſt holy Trinity ; Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, ver. 4, 6. 2. The eternal generation of the word, by his Father, of whom he is the Son before he is ſent by him, ver. 4. 3. The proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and the Son : For he proceeds both from the Father who ſends him, and from the Son of whom he is the Spirit becauſe he proceeds from him, ver. 6. 4. The temporal miſſion of the Son of God, for the redemption of men, ver. 4, 5. 5. The temporal miſſion of the Holy Spirit, for their ſanctification, ver. 6. 6. The Son of God is ſent into the world ; which is the firſt degree of his humiliation, ver. 4. 7. He is made man ; which is the ſecond. 8. He aſſumes a body, not created immediately of God, like Adam, but deriv'd from a woman, in the way of birth and of infancy ; which is the third. 9. He takes upon him the form and condition of a ſervant, under the grievous and mortifying yoke of the law ; which is the fourth. 10. He makes himſelf the ſacrifice and ranſom for the ſlaves of ſin ; which is the fifth. 11. He takes into fellowſhip with himſelf theſe ſlaves and ſervants, and communicates to them the divine filiation ; which is the ſixth degree, ver. 5. 12. He opens his heart, and gives his Holy Spirit to his enemies ; which is the ſeventh, ver. 6. And, 13. He ſhares his eternal inheritance among thoſe who were his murderers ; which is the eighth degree of his humiliation, ver. 7. (Q.) See Mr. Sam. Garey's Sermon, 1614. and Biſhop Burnet's, 1696. both on this text ; and ſome further particulars in the notes here following.

The fulneſs of the time.] The coming of Chriſt in the fleſh is called " the fulneſs of the time," 1. For the " fulneſs of grace" received by his coming. 2. Becauſe Chriſt is the fulfilling of the promiſes of God ; as being in him " yea and amen," 2 Cor. i. 20. 3. Becauſe the law and the Prophets are fulfill'd in him. And, 4. Becauſe the times of Chriſt's coming are " the ends of the world," 1 Cor. x. 11. And it was fit he ſhould come ſo late, (as Aquinas ſays) 1. Becauſe Chriſt is the Lord ; and therefore it was meet that there ſhould be long preparation, and expectation of ſo puiſſant a perſon. 2. Becauſe Chriſt is the grand phyſician of the world ; and therefore requiſite, that all ſinners, his patients, ſhould thoroughly feel their ſickneſs, before he came to viſit and redeem them. And of this fulneſs of the time there were many prefiguring typical repreſentations, and prophetical predictions. (Garey) Agreeable to which we may add, That from the Jews queſtions to John the Baptiſt, John i. 19. the character and ſpeech of Simeon and Anna, Luke ii. 25, 38. as well as Joſeph of Arimathæa, Mark xv. 43. 'tis evident in Scripture, that in thoſe very times, many religious perſons were in expectation of the Meſſiah. (Andr.) Yea, and even Suetonius and Tacitus (both Heathen hiſtorians) aſſure us, the appearance of ſome great perſon was generally expected about that time. (Fox) See the notes on John i. 16. and Rom. x. 4.

Made of a woman.] Not begotten, as other men ; but made by the Holy Ghoſt, out of the fleſh and blood of the Virgin Mary, without the concurrence of man. The word (gyne) woman alſo is here taken, as often elſewhere in Scripture, for the ſex only : And generally, a maid who is marriageable, is by the Greeks termed Gyne, and by the Romans Mulier ; as we learn both from Procopius, and the Civil Lawyers. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John i. 14. and Rom. i. 3.

Made under the law.] Chriſt, having " taken upon him the form of a ſervant, and been made in the likeneſs of men," Phil. ii. 7. made himſelf ſubject to the entire obſervation and ſatisfaction of the whole law. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. iii. 13.

To redeem them.] See the notes on ch. iii. 13. Luke xvii. 9. Acts xv. 10. and Rom. x. 4.

The adoption of ſons.] See the notes on ch. iii. 26. John i. 12. and 2 Cor. vi. 18.

Becauſe ye are ſons.] Here the Apoſtle ſhews, that we are in ſuch ſort free and ſet at liberty, that in the mean ſeaſon we muſt be govern'd by the Spirit of Chriſt, which reigneth in our hearts, and teacheth us the true ſervice of the Father; but this is not to ſerve, but rather to enjoy true liberty, as becometh ſons and heirs. The Holy Ghoſt is both of the Father and the Son : But the peculiar reaſon, why he is here call'd " the Spirit of his Son" is, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt ſealeth up our adoption in Chriſt, and giveth us a full aſſurance of it. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John xiv. 16. and Rom. viii. 15.

Wherefore thou art.] See the notes on ch. iii. 29. and Rom. viii. 16.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11. Howbeit, then when ye knew not God, ye did ſervice unto them which by nature are no gods. But now after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye deſire again to be in bondage ? Ye obſerve days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, leſt I have beſtowed upon you labour in vain.

When ye knew not God] See the notes on Rom. i. 21, &c. and 1 Cor. vi. 11.

Ye did ſervice unto them.] The Jews ſerv'd the true God, tho' in a ſervile manner ; but ye ſerved falſe (that is, no) gods ; ſuch as your own imaginations created, and after a ſlaviſh manner alſo. (Fell) By the word edouleuſate here we learn, how frivolous is the diſtinction of the Papiſts, viz. That Latria is indeed ſervice proper to God, but Dulia is ſuch worſhip as may be paid to Saints and Angels : For, ſince Saints and Angels " by nature are no Gods," the giving Dulia to them muſt be the thing condemn'd here in the Heathens ; that being only this, that they did (douleuein) give (Dulia) " ſervice unto them which by nature are no Gods." (W.) See the notes on Rom. i. 25. 1 Cor. vi. 11. viii. 5. and xii. 2.

Known of God.] See the notes on John x. 14, 27. and xiv. 17. and 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

Weak and beggarly elements.] The carnal rites of the Moſaical law are ſo call'd here, being conſider'd apart by themſelves without Chriſt: And for the Galatians to fall back from Chriſt to theſe ceremonies, was nothing elſe but to caſt away riches, and follow beggary. (Aſſ) This argument has the more force againſt the Galatians, who having never been under the law, yet deſired to enter into that bondage, which is to go backward in religion; or to return to thoſe principles which they had already paſs'd over. (Fell, W. and B.) See the notes on ver. 3.

Ye obſerve days.] St. Paul here gives inſtances to the Galatians, wherein it did appear that they brought themſelves under an unneceſſary bondage to the rites of the ceremonial law: He tells them plainly, that they kept the ceremonial ſabbaths, feaſts and faſts, as if that law was obligatory, and ſtill binding: "Ye obſerve days, (that is the Jewiſh ſabbath-days, and new moons;) and months, (as the feaſt of the firſt month, and of the ſeventh month;) and times, (that is, the times of their ſolemn feſtivals for going up to Jeruſalem, as the Paſſover, Pentecoſt, and Feaſt of Tabernacles;) and years;" as the ſabbatical years, and years of jubilee. This, ſays the Apoſtle, makes me "afraid of you," that I have preached the Goſpel, and the doctrine of free juſtification, in vain to you; becauſe ye leave the doctrine I taught you, and put your confidence in obſerving thoſe legal ceremonial rites. Learn hence, 1. That the work of the miniſtry is a laborious work; "I have beſtowed upon you labour," ſays St. Paul. A miniſter's life is not a life of eaſe, but of much toil and pains; a labouring unto faintneſs and wearineſs, as the word here uſed doth import and ſignify. 2. That the moſt laborious miniſters and lively preachers may ſometimes ſee ſo little fruit of their labours and endeavours, that they may have juſt cauſe to fear that few are ſavingly converted by their miniſtry: St. Paul here was afraid, "leſt he had laboured in vain" among the Galatians. 3. That, in order to the ſucceſs of our miniſtry, we muſt not content ourſelves with a reproof of ſin in general, but muſt deſcend to particulars, and give inſtances of thoſe ſeveral and diſtinct ſins which our people are guilty of, and ought to fall under our reproof for. Thus the Apoſtle here gives particular inſtances of the ſins formerly reproved, in their "obſerving days, and months, and times, and years." Generals, we ſay, do not affect, but particular reproofs are more piercing, and more convincing: When we ſay to the ſinner, as Nathan to David, "Thou art the man;" this, if any thing, will ſtick cloſe to the conſcience. (B.) Note here, That St. Jerom, in his Commentary upon this place, ſhews by divers reaſons, That the obſervation of Chriſtian Holidays, &c. comes not within this reprehenſion. (Fell) See the notes on ch. ii. 2.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Brethren, I beſeech you, be as I am; for I am as ye are: Ye have not injured me at all. Ye know how through infirmity of the fleſh I preached the goſpel unto you at the firſt. And my temptation which was in my fleſh, ye deſpiſed not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Chriſt Jeſus. Where is then the bleſſedneſs ye ſpake of? For I bear you record, that if it had been poſſible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me. Am I therefore become your enemy, becauſe I tell you the truth? They zealouſly affect you, but not well; yea, they would exclude you, that ye might affect them. But it is good to be zealouſly affected always in a good thing, and not only when I am preſent with you. My little children, of whom I travail in birth again, until Chriſt be formed in you, I deſire to be preſent with you now, and to change my voice, for I ſtand in doubt of you.

Brethren, I beſeech.] Obſerve here, The holy wiſdom of our Apoſtle, in tempering his former reproofs with great mildneſs and gentleneſs; "I beſeech you, brethren." He well knew, that theſe Galatians were alienated in their affections from him; and fearing leſt from his preſent ſeverity and ſharpneſs towards them, they ſhould apprehend that he was alienated from them alſo, he thus lovingly beſpeaks them; I pray you, be affected towards me, as I ſtand affected towards you: Count me not "your enemy becauſe I tell you the truth;" for I am the ſame to you that ever I was; my love is not alienated from you, for any wrong or injury done to me by you: For, alas! it is yourſelves, and not me, that ye injure, by bringing yourſelves into this bondage to the ceremonial law, to the loſs of your Chriſtian liberty; "Be as I am; for I am as ye are; Ye have not injured me at all." Learn from St. Paul's example, That, tho' the miniſters of Chriſt, may, and ſometimes muſt uſe ſeverity and ſharpneſs in the rebukes and reproofs which they give for ſin, yet muſt they temper ſeverity with gentleneſs; and inſinuations of kindneſs and affection muſt be mingled with rebukes; as looking not ſo much at what their ſin deſerveth, as what is moſt convenient for bringing them to repentance. 2. That when the miniſters of God, from a true zeal for the glory of God, do rebuke ſin, and reprove ſinners, the people are too apt to apprehend that our zeal flows from a private ſpirit of revenge, as if we had ſome particular diſpleaſure againſt their perſons, for ſome perſonal injury done unto ourſelves; all which groundleſs ſuſpicions it is our duty to wipe off: So doth our Apoſtle here; "Ye have not injured me at all," ſays he. (B.) Or it may be underſtood, as if he had ſaid, "Be as I am;" that is, Take me for an example, who was once as zealous for thoſe legal rites as ye are now; but now I count them, and all things elſe, but as dung, in compariſon of the excellent knowledge of Chriſt. (Aſſ.) But this interpretation does not ſeem to cohere ſo well as the former, with the following words, "Ye have not injured me at all." (W.) See the notes on Acts xxii. 3, &c. xxvi. 9, &c. and Phil. iii 8.

Through infirmity of the fleſh.] Not only afflictions from without, but weakneſſes and imperfections alſo of my perſon. (Fell) See the notes on 1 Cor. ii. 3. and 2 Cor. x. 10. xi. 29, 30. and xii. 5, 9, 10.

And my temptation.] See the notes on Acts xx. 19. and 1 Cor. x. 12.

But received me.] See the notes on John xiii. 20.

Where is then the bleſſedneſs?] What is become of the great applauſe, which ye gave me at my firſt preaching, counting your ſelves moſt happy in me your Apoſtle? Or, what talk was there abroad in the world, how happy ye thought yourſelves, and bleſſed the time God ſent me among you? (Aſſ.) The primitive and beſt Chriſtians had very awful and venerable opinions both of their Clergy and their office. They thought nothing too good, or too dear, for thoſe who took care of their ſouls, and fed them with the bread of Heaven. To the everlaſting reproach of theſe later ages, how ſincerely, how paſſionately, did they love their Prieſts? Out of that ſlender ſtock, which perſecution had left, out of the ſhipwracks of their waſted fortunes, how chearfully, how liberally, did they contribute to their maintenance? What exceeding veneration did they pay to their perſons? With what incredible ſubmiſſion did they undergo the moſt ſevere diſcipline and penances? Who knows not the memorable caſe of the emperor Theodoſius and St. Ambroſe? If there be not now the ſame reſpect ſhewn to them, the reaſon is plain: For, ſince religion itſelf hath ſo much decay'd in its eſteem and authority; ſince the prophane and ſchiſmatical humours of the age have taught the people to deſpiſe both Church-men and Church-cenſures; ſince God himſelf is affronted, and his moſt ſacred inſtitutions ridiculed, what wonder if his Prieſts partake in the misfortune? But, if it ſhall ever pleaſe God to reſtore the primitive ſpirit of piety to the world; if the vanities of this corrupt age ſhall ever be decocted; if Atheiſm and Fanaticiſm ſhall ever be effectually thrown out of the Church, the love and reverence of the Clergy will return. (Killingb.)

Become your enemy.] Since all men naturally deſire the truth, and love it, how comes it to paſs, that any man ſhould be hated for ſpeaking the truth? Becauſe (ſaith St. Auguſtine) All men love the truth, when that truth concerneth not themſelves; they love truth ſhining, but not convincing; they love the truth when ſhe diſcovers herſelf, not when ſhe diſcovers them. Hence is that proverb true, Obſequium amicos, veritas odium parit; (Flattery gains friends, and truth enemies;) as the beams of the ſun, which refreſh and clear a ſound eye, offend a ſore eye. (Aſſ.) See Mr. D. Jones's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 5.

They zealouſly affect you.] They, that is, the falſe Apoſtles, pretend great love to you, and a zealous affection for you; "but not well," not upon honeſt and juſt grounds. There is often an ill cauſe, which is to be condemned and avoided: Zeal is a mixt affection of love and anger, working into a fervency of mind; in defending what we judge to be true and good, and in oppoſing what we judge to be falſe and bad; "They zealouſly affect you, but not well." Nothing is more common, and conſequently more dangerous, than for heretical teachers to pretend great zeal for the glory of God, and great love and affection to the people of God, whilſt they are about to perſuade them to embrace their pernicious errors and damnable hereſies. He adds, "Yea, they would exclude you, that ye might affect them:" Exclude you, that is, from the liberty and privileges of the Goſpel, ſay ſome; from depending upon me, or any faithful paſtor, ſay others; they would ingratiate themſelves, that they may engroſs you, and ye may affect them only. The old practice has ever been among ſeducers, firſt to alienate the peoples minds from their own teachers, and next get themſelves look'd upon as alone, and only worthy to have room in the peoples hearts and affections; "They would exclude you (from us, and us from you, only) that ye might affect them." (B.)

But it is good] Note here, That altho' there is a zeal in a bad cauſe, which is to be condemned and avoided, yet there is a zeal in a juſt and righteous cauſe, which is laudable and worthy to be practiſed: When it is a zeal guided by religion, governed by prudence, attended with perſeverance; when "in a good thing" we are affected, "zealouſly affected," and "zealouſly affected always." This the Apoſtle deſires that the Galatians ſhould be, and that as well when he was abſent from them, as when he was "preſent with them." (Idem.) See the notes on Acts v. 17. and Rom. x 2. And in order to the getting a right notion of the nature and cauſes and compoſition, the ſigns and characters, the bounds or limits and degrees, the extremes and excurſions, the hindrances and impediments, the corruptions and remedies, together with proper and neceſſary cautions relating to the exerciſe and object of this good zeal here recommended, I beg leave to refer my reader to Dr. Sprat's Sermon on this text, 1678. and Mr. Fred. Cornewall's, 1710.

My little children.] Obſerve here, 1. The endearing title which the Apoſtle gives to the apoſtatizing Galatians; "My little children." He calls them children, becauſe converted to Chriſtianity, by preaching of the Goſpel; and being thus regenerate and born again, they were to be as children, innocent and inoffenſive: He calls them little children, to denote the tenderneſs of their growth in Chriſtianity, the ſmallneſs of their proficiency in religion; they were not come to that conſiſtency in grace, to that maturity in goodneſs, to that perfection in knowledge, which he did deſire: Farther, he calls them his little children, to denote that ſpiritual relation which was between them; he having been the undoubted inſtrument of their converſion, and ſo was their ſpiritual Father; and alſo to denote that endearedneſs of affection which he bare unto them, and that tender care and concern which he had for them. 2. The holy vehemency of the Apoſtle's deſire; and how earneſtly he longed after them, in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt. He compares himſelf to a mother in travel, until he ſhould ſee Chriſt form'd in their hearts and lives. (B.) See the notes on Rom. x. 1.

I deſire to be preſent.] Our Apoſtle, as a farther teſtimony of his endeared affection towards the Galatians, declares here his earneſt deſire to have been with them, and ſet them face to face; that ſo, being more fully acquainted with their caſe, he might know how to ſuit his diſcourſes to them, and might have more cauſe of rejoicing with, than complaining of them. (B.)

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. Tell me, ye that deſire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written, that Abraham had two ſons; the one by a bond-maid, the other by a free-woman. But he who was of the bond-woman, was born after the fleſh: But he of the free-woman was by promiſe. Which things are an allegory; for theſe are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendreth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and anſwereth to Jeruſalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jeruſalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all. For it is written, Rejoice thou barren that beareſt not; break forth and cry, thou that travaileſt not: For the deſolate hath many more children than ſhe which hath an husband. Now we, brethren, as Iſaac was, are the children of promiſe. But as then he that was born after the fleſh, perſecuted him that was born after the ſpirit, even ſo it is now. Nevertheleſs, what ſaith the ſcripture? Caſt out the bond-woman and her ſon: For the ſon of the bond-woman ſhall not be heir with the ſon of the free-woman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free.

Do ye not hear the law?] That is, the myſtery contain'd under the letter of the law. (G.) The Apoſtle here goes on, to propound an argument drawn from the writings of Moſes himſelf; and therefore ſuch, as ought to weigh with them, whoſe intemperate zeal for the law, deliver'd by Moſes, prov'd them to hold His authority in the higheſt veneration: As if he had ſaid, Ye that are ſo zealous for the law, will do well at leaſt to attend to the arguments which even the law furniſhes, for the point I am debating. (Stanh.)

Abraham had two ſons.] Here the Apoſtle takes notice of two ſons born to that Patriaach, as emblems of the Law and the Goſpel: And, by ſome circumſtances relating to them, applied to theſe two covenants, he forms his reaſoning, and confutes the vain pretences of the Moſaical inſtitution being ſtill obligatory, and the Goſpel-terms being either inferior to it, or inſufficient for ſalvation without it. 1. The different condition of their reſpective mothers: The one a bond-woman, the other a free-woman; from whence follows the like difference in their children. For, ſince it is a known maxim in law, that the children can have no quality deſcending to them, but ſuch as the parent had, and all that were born of ſervants in the family, the maſter had, by ſuch birth, the ſame title to, and dominion over, as he had to their parents by contract; it follows, that the ſon of this bond-woman muſt be no better than a ſervant. On the other hand, the free-woman, being the maſter's wife, and miſtreſs of the family, her ſon muſt in conformity be born in a ſtate of liberty; ſuch as gives him a title to the prerogatives of the firſt-born, and the inheritance of his father's fortunes, excluſive of all ſons (tho' born before in time) begotten of any other woman: The bond-man born muſt be content with the treatment, the wages, the proviſions ſuitable to his ſtation; but the heir may depend upon all the tenderneſs, the affection, the liberal education, the free acceſs, the encouraging proſpects and reverſions, due to the quality and ſucceſſion he is born to. (Idem.) See the application of this in the notes following.

Born after the fleſh.] In the production of Iſhmael there was only the ſame common providence, which concurs with, and gives ſucceſs to, natural cauſes, in ordinary generations: But in that of Iſaac every thing was miraculous. For a mother dead to all theſe purpoſes, Rom. iv. 19. and a father "as good as dead," Heb. xi. 12. to become fruitful, was an effect altogether above, and out of the power of, nature: This argued an immediate operation of omnipotence; and 'tis urged as a noble inſtance of faith, to believe the promiſe of God. And Iſaac is therefore call'd the child of promiſe, becauſe foretold as the choſen ſeed, and given in a manner ſo wonderful, that nothing leſs than the power and truth of God could have juſtified the hopes of him in perſons ſo diſabled. Thus, in proportion, they, whom theſe ſons repreſent, do likewiſe differ from each other. (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 28. ch. iii. 16. John viii. 39. and Rom. iv. 19.

Which things are an allegory.] An allegory is a figure of ſpeech, whereby one thing is expreſs'd, and another intended. Thus Hagar and Sarah repreſented "the two covenants." Hagar, the bond-woman, whoſe name ſignifies a rock, repreſented the covenant of the law deliver'd "from the mount Sinai, which gendered," that is, ſubjected thoſe who were under it, to bondage to that law; and this "anſwered to Jeruſalem," or the Jewiſh church properly ſpeaking: But Sarah, the free-woman, was a figure of, and repreſented, the ſecond covenant, or the Goſpel-ſtate, call'd, ver. 26. the "Jeruſalem which is above." Such allegories as the Scriptures explain, we ought to receive: But we ſhould take care, how we entertain ſuch allegorical interpretations as are not plainly warranted by the Holy Scriptures, whether deviſed by ourſelves, or by others. We ſhould be particularly careful, that an opinion built on an allegorical ſenſe be not contrary to other plain Scriptures: And however obvious ſuch a ſenſe may be to us, we ought not to impoſe it on others, as an undoubted ſenſe of Scripture. If the Apoſtle had not here unfolded the hidden meaning of the hiſtory of theſe two women, it had probably been a ſecret ſtill. The ſame may be ſaid of the Braſen Serpent's being a type of our Lord's being lifted up on the Croſs; of the Paſchal Lamb, and of Jonah's being types of our Saviour. While we keep to the plain and obvious ſenſe of Scripture we are ſafe; but there may be danger in departing from it. (Fox) Where the analogy of faith is preſerv'd, a prudent uſe of this kind is allowable, in the way of exhortation, or moral reflection: But in the way of argument, for eſtabliſhing any point of doctrine, it is requiſite we keep cloſe to the plain and natural ſenſe of the text, and not wantonly ſport it, in ambiguous niceties, and affected alluſions. (Stanh.) See the notes on Matth. xxvi. 26. John iii. 14. and 1 Cor. x. 1, &c.

Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia.] That is, ſhe repreſents it, 1. In her name: For Hagar, in the Arabian language, ſignifies a rock; as mount Sinai is called. 2. By her flight; ſhe flying twice into Arabia from her miſtreſs into the wilderneſs of Shur, called by the Chaldee Chagra. And, 3. By her ſtation; for there dwelt the poſterity of Iſhmael, call'd from her name Hagarens, as the oriental writers witneſs. (W.)

Anſwereth to Jeruſalem.] Syſtoichei is by Theophylact interpreted (geitniazei, haptetai,) bordereth upon; mount Sinai being not far from Jeruſalem: But, as he acknowledgeth alſo, it ſignifies originally to walk along with; and being metaphorically uſed of things compared one to another, it ſignifies to be parallel, anſwerable, or proportionable to another: And accordingly here, in the compariſon begun ver. 22. Hagar is made parallel to Jeruſalem, the then preſent ſtate of the Jews: And the parallel conſiſted in two things; 1. That as the people of the Hagarenes bound themſelves to circumciſion, and the obſervation of the Moſaical law in many particulars, ſo the preſent Judaizers did; and 2. That as, in this reſpect, theſe Hagarens were juſt as their mother had been, in a ſervile eſtate, ſo theſe Judaizers kept themſelves, and all their diſciples, in a meer ſervile condition, oppoſite to the liberty of the Goſpel. Of the Hagarens or Iſmaelites being circumciſed, Joſephus gives clear teſtimony, l. i. c. 12. (H.) This parallel, or order of oppoſition, may be ſuppoſed to ſtand thus.

Now the Apoſtle placeth Sinai and Jeruſalem, in the ſame file, under bondage; as being, 1. Both of the ſame intention: As mount Sinai was the place where the law took its beginning; ſo Jeruſalem was the metropolis of the worſhip according to that law. 2. Both choſen by God: Sinai, " the mount of God," 1 Kings xix. 8. Jeruſalem, the city where " he put his name," 1 Kings xi. 36. " the holy city," Matth. iv. 5. and the temple there alſo built upon a mountain; in the one was the tabernacle, in the other the temple. And, 3. Both in bondage: Sinai inhabited by the iſſue of bond-men, Jeruſalem ſubject to the Romans; by whom alſo e're long the city was to be deſtroy'd, and all the inhabitants made captives and ſlaves; when their ſenſible and carnal worſhip, according to the law, was to be aboliſh'd, according to Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10. and our Saviour's, John iv. 21. the law, worſhip, church, and nation, all determining together. The Jews ſtood much upon their freedom, as coming from Iſaac, John viii. 33. which our Apoſtle here confutes; and intimates, what he proſecutes more copiouſly, Heb. viii. 9. the excellency of the Chriſtian ſervice, prieſthood, and ſanctuary, above thoſe of the Jews. (Fell)

For it is written.] The Apoſtle ſeems to have taken this whole allegory from that place, Iſa. liv. 1. " Sing, O barren," &c. The church having now born, out of all nations, many more ſpiritual children to faithful Abraham, through Chriſt and his heavenly promiſes, than the law did according to the carnal commandment, Rev. vii. 9. Literally the prophet ſeems to promiſe a reflouriſhing eſtate to Jeruſalem and Judea, after its deſtruction by the Chaldeans and Babylonians. (Idem.)

As Iſaac was.] Such as depend upon the law, like Iſhmael born by natural means, expected pardon of their ſins, and the ſalvation of their ſouls, by works of their own performance: But we, who, as Iſaac was, are the children of promiſe," aſcribe theſe bleſſings to a higher hand, acknowledge our own impotence and deadneſs, and thankfully adore the truth, the power, and goodneſs of God, who " not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but according to his mercy (in Jeſus Chriſt) hath ſaved us," Tit. iii. 5. by methods aſtoniſhing and ſupernatural, by the death of his own beloved ſon, by the renewing of his own bleſſed ſpirit, and by faith in the merits of another. (Stanh.) See the notes on Rom. ix. 8.

Perſecuted him.] Obſerve here, 1. The root and riſe of Iſhmael's perſecuting malice diſcovered, and from whence it proceeded; and that was an inward antipathy to the work of grace in Iſaac. Thoſe great differences in divine heraldry, and of being born after the fleſh, and after the ſpirit," evidently diſcover where the quarrel lay, and whence it aroſe; it was the ſpiritualneſs of Iſaac that exaſperated Iſhmael's rage: Iſaac " was born after the ſpirit;" and doubtleſs he ſhewed ſome fruits of the ſpirit, which Iſhmael could not reliſh, and therefore did deride and mock him. 2. What was the perſecution of the tongue, in deriſions and cruel mockings: Moſes tells us, in the book of Geneſis, the manner how, and the weapon with which: Iſhmael did not lift up his hand againſt Iſaac, as Cain did againſt Abel, but his tongue only; yet St. Paul calls it here perſecution: Mocking and ſcoffing either at the word, ways, or people of God, is a ſin of unſpeakable prophaneneſs, a blaſpheming of Chriſt, and a perſecution of his members. " He that was born after the fleſh, perſecuted him that was born after the ſpirit." 3. That this perſecution of the tongue, at leaſt, is that which the children and church of God have met with in all former, and muſt expect, to meet with in future ages; as it was then, ſays the Apoſtle, " even ſo it is now:" Afflictions are the donatives of the Goſpel, and perſecution is the church's patrimony; " To us it is given on the behalf of Chriſt, not only to believe on him, but to ſuffer," Phil. i. 29. 4. From Iſhmael's being brother to Iſaac, and yet his bitter perſecutor, that the soreſt trials and ſharpeſt perſecutions, which the Saints endure, are very often from the neareſt relations, who are tyed to them by the ſtrongeſt obligations either of kindred or acquaintance: Bittereſt things are ſometimes endured from the hands of thoſe from whom better things might juſtly have been expected: Chriſt foretold all this, " The brother ſhall betray the brother to death, and the father the ſon." Cain is dead, but the ſpirit of Cain yet lives; They that ſcoff, would bite, and make their teeth meet, had they power to uſe their cheekbone: " He that is born after the fleſh," will perſecute thoſe of his own fleſh and family that are " born after the ſpirit;" as it was then, we may go on to ſay, " even ſo it is now." (B) This miſbehaviour of the Egyptian woman's ſon ſeems to have been a prelude to the long oppreſſion the Iſraelites afterwards underwent in Egypt. (Ainſw.) Whatever the inſolence was, it ſeems to have been offer'd, in envy, at the keeping of the feaſt for Iſaac's weaning, Gen. xxi. 8, 9. (Munſt.) Grotius ſuppoſes this mocking to have been a deriſion of Iſaac's piety and religious deportment: Vatablus, of his childhood or juniority: And ſome underſtand it of an immodeſt and vicious behaviour; Others again, that Iſhmael jeſted on the name of Iſaac, and made it a matter of merriment; for ſo the word is uſed, Gen. xix. 14. (Patr.) See moreover Cartwright's remarks upon the various expoſitions of this place. Cajetan, conceiving Iſhmael's years and diſcretion did not ſeem ſo well to ſuit with his acting ſuch a puerile part, ſuppoſes he ſet on others, who were nearer upon an equality of age with Iſaac, to abuſe and inſult him. (Parker)

Caſt out the bond-woman.] The Apoſtle goes on in explaining and applying this typical hiſtory of Iſhmael and Iſaac; and tells us, that the caſting out of Iſhmael, the ſon of Hagar the bond-woman, did typify the excluſion of the law from a partnerſhip with the Goſpel, in the juſtification of a ſinner before God. As Iſhmael was caſt out of Abraham's family, and none but Iſaac muſt inherit; ſo they, that depend upon the law for juſtification, ſhall be caſt out of the church of God, and never attain the heavenly inheritance: But they who do depend upon the promiſe of God, and expect to be juſtified by faith, without legal performances, and they only, ſhall be heirs of grace and mercy. The doctrine of juſtification by the works of the law, when it is not only doctrinally maintained, but practically purſued and walked in, doth exclude perſons from having any part or ſhare in the kingdom of heaven. So much was typified and prefigured by the ſon of the bond-woman's being caſt out, and not allowed to be heir with the ſon of the free-woman. (B.) The explication of this depends on the Jewiſh matrimonial laws, or the nature of concubinate; viz. When a ſervant, or a Gentile woman, was taken by a Jew to be (his wife ſhe was not to be by law, but) his concubine, upon agreement firſt made concerning her dowry. For ſuch a perſon as this is among them improperly called a wife, tho' far from any ill character of a whore, or any unlawful copulation, any further than will be affirmed of poligamy; which yet we know was allowed among the Jews, and practiſed by the Patriarchs. Now, the ſons of theſe concubines were excluded from ſucceſſion to the inheritance; and inſtead thereof the father gave them gifts or portions (and that was agreed upon by pact with the wife at firſt) Gen. xxv. 6. Thus was Jephtha ejected from the inheritance by his brethren, becauſe his mother was " a ſtrange woman," Judg. xi. 2. Agreeable to this is that cuſtom of matrimonium morgengabicum, in ſome countries, as Denmark, &c. at this day; where the ſecond wife, and her children that ſhall come from her, are not taken in to a right to the huſband's eſtate, ſhe to have any part of it for her jointure, or they for their inheritance, but only ſome gifts or portions aſſigned them by compact, which are called morgengab, or marriage-gift, with which they are to content themſelves, without any part of the inheritance. (H.)

So then, brethren.] Here the Apoſtle draws a concluſion from the foregoing diſcourſe, thus; As Sarah caſt out Hagar and Iſhmael, ſo muſt the children of the New Jeruſalem caſt out the law, and all the legal rites, henceforth to be obſerved no more, either alone without Chriſt, or in conjunction with Chriſt. And as the church of the Gentiles was not typified in Hagar, but in Sarah, ſo we Chriſtian Gentiles are not obliged to Judaical obſervances, but freed entirely by Chriſt from them, and juſtified by Goſpel-grace without them. The concluſion and ſum of all is this, to bring off the Galatians from ſeeking juſtification by the works of the law, and to apprehend themſelves no longer in bondage to circumciſion, and the Moſaick rites, but to ſtand faſt in the liberty wherewith Chriſt had made them free; which introduces that excellent diſcourſe to this purpoſe, which we find contained in the next chapter. (B.) See the notes on ch. v. 1.

CHAP. V.

He exhorteth them to ſtand faſt in the liberty of the Goſpel; and not to ſuffer themſelves to be entangled again with the bondage of the ceremonial law. Love is the fulfilling of the law. The works of the fleſh, and the fruits of the ſpirit, oppoſite: We ought to walk in the ſpirit.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. STAND faſt therefore in the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made us free, and be not intangled again with the yoke of bondage. Behold, I Paul ſay unto you, that if ye be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing. For I teſtify again to every man that is circumciſed, that he is a debtor to do the whole law. Chriſt is become of no effect unto you, whoſoever of you are juſtified by the law; ye are fallen from grace. For we through the ſpirit wait for the hope of righteouſneſs by faith. For in Jeſus Chriſt, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but faith which worketh by love.

Stand faſt therefore.] Some read this verſe (and that not improperly) join'd to the foregoing chapter, thus; "We are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free, with the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made us free; Stand faſt therefore, &c." This liberty conſiſts, 1. In being freed from the curſe of the law; or, in not being obliged, under pain of eternal death, to fulfil all the law: And, 2. From the burdenſome and ſlaviſh ceremonies of it, (Fell) Stekete; "Stand faſt therefore;" like unto good ſoldiers, who keep their poſt, and quit no ground: For ſo the word ſignifies; being a metaphor taken from ſoldiers, who ſtand upon guard, or watch, or in the ranks wherein they are placed. (Leigh) See Dr. Butler's Sermon on this text, 1678. and the notes on ch. iii. 10. and iv. 4. John viii. 32, 36. Acts xv. 1, &c. Rom. xiv. 23. and 1 Cor. xvi. 13.

Be not intangled again.] Enecheſthe; held, or kept in with; tyed, or faſten'd to, as it were, with cords and ropes: A compariſon taken from oxen; which have the yoke bound faſt to their horns or neck, thereby to force, ſubdue, and keep them in. (Aſſ.) As if he had ſaid, Ye are now in a ſtate of liberty and freedom, which Chriſt hath purchaſed for you: Have a care of ſuch nets and ſnares, ſuch artifices and cunning devices, as are laid and prepar'd to deprive you of it; have a care of their fair pretences. But how comes the Apoſtle to diſſuade the Galatians from "being intangled again with the yoke of bondage," who never had the law of Moſes deliver'd to them, and ſo had never before been circumciſed? Whatever others anſwer, I think there will be no great difficulty in the caſe, if, inſtead of the yoke, we read a yoke; which the original will bear as well as the other: And then the ſenſe is this, Ye have, by the preaching of Chriſt crucified among you, been freed from one yoke, that of idol-worſhip; do not run your necks into another, of circumciſion. (Butl.) See the notes on ch. ii. 3. and Acts xv. 10.

Behold, I Paul.] See the notes on ch. i. 1.

If ye be circumciſed.] That is, "If ye be circumciſed," out of this perſuaſion, to be juſtified thereby, "Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing;" for juſtification by faith, and juſtification by the works of the law, cannot ſtand together. He inſtanceth particularly in circumciſion, becauſe it was the ground of all the ſervice of the law, and chiefly urged by the falſe Apoſtles. 'Tis true, circumciſion, in another place, is call'd "the ſeal of the righteouſneſs of the faith:" But here we muſt have conſideration of the circumſtances of time; for now baptiſm had come in the place of circumciſion: And moreover, St. Paul reaſoneth according to the opinion that his oppoſites (the falſe teachers) had of it; who made it a matter of ſalvation, and neceſſary means of juſtification. (Aſſ.) Embracing circumciſion after Chriſt's coming, is virtually, to deny and diſown that he is come, and in effect, to renounce and diſown him; becauſe at his coming the promiſe was fulfill'd, and circumciſion of its own nature ceaſed. (B.) For ſince Chriſt's death is abundantly ſufficient to attain its ends, whoever takes in another, plainly renounces that, and reſts upon that of his own chuſing. (Cave) See Dr. Kellet's Sermon on this text, 1627. and the notes on Acts xv. 1. xvi. 3. and Rom. iv. 11.

A debtor to do the whole law.] He who urges the neceſſity of circumciſion, is a debtor to the law, 1. In regard of duty; becauſe he who thinks himſelf bound to keep one part of the ceremonial law, circumciſion, doth thereby oblige himſelf to keep the whole ceremonial law, yea, and the whole moral law too, without deficiency; and that under the penalty of condemnation. And, 2. In point of penalty; becauſe he is not able to keep any part of it perfectly. Whence we may infer, 1. Our obligations to Chriſt, who, as our ſurety, paid our debt of duty, by fulfilling all righteouſneſs, and our debt of penalty, by ſuffering the puniſhment due to tranſgreſſors. 2. That as he who is circumciſed is bound to keep the whole law; ſo he who is baptized is obliged to obey all the commands of the Goſpel; to make conſcience of the duties of both tables, as an argument of his ſincerity, and as an ornament to his profeſſion. (B.) See the notes on ch. iii. 10.

Become of no effect unto you.] Katergethete ſignifieth (according to the notion of argos, whence 'tis compounded) fruſtration, annullation, evacuation, abolition; and ſo 'tis applied to the law, (nomos catargeitai) the law is annulled. In a ſenſe not far from thence 'tis uſed, Rom. vii. 2. when 'tis ſaid, that "the husband being dead, the wife is diſcharged from the law of the husband;" that is, receives no benefit from, nor owes any obedience or obſervance to the matrimonial contract. So here (catergethete apo tou Chriſtou) ye are diſcharged from Chriſt, as when a ſervant is from the maſter, or as a wife from the husband, diſcharged from the advantages as well as burthens; Ye receive no benefit or virtue from Chriſt; or the ſecond covenant (all one with Chriſt) "ſhall profit you nothing," ver. 2. and exepeſate, in the end of this verſe, "ye have fallen from," diſclaimed all right or title to the Goſpel, or ſecond covenant, that of grace. (H.) Whoſoever of you are juſtified by the law;" that is, whoſoever ſeek and endeavour to be ſo juſtified; for in reality none can in that manner be juſtified. (B.) See the notes on Rom. iii. 20. and ix. 30, &c. and 2 Cor. vi. 1.

Through the ſpirit.] See the notes on Rom. v. 1, &c. and 2 Cor. i. 22. and v. 5.

Faith which worketh by love.] Energoumene. 'Tis not amiſs in this place to ſet down the particular notion of energeiſthai in the New Teſtament. And to that purpoſe, the firſt thing to be obſerved, will be, that there is no kind of neceſſity or reaſon to render it in an active ſenſe, but rather in a paſſive, throughout theſe books. So Rom. vii. 5. "the motions of ſin" were wrought, or conſummate, or perfected, "in our members;" that is, the motions and inclinations were brought to act and habit. So, 2 Cor. i. 6. Salvation which is perfected, or conſummate, by patient enduring. So, 2 Cor. iv. 12. Death is wrought in us; as it appears by the context, "We are delivered to death," ver. 11. So, Epheſ. iii. 20. According to the power which is wrought in, or among, you; parallel to Col. i. 29. According to the force, or act, or virtue which is wrought in me. So, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. The word of God, which is wrought in you, preached unto you, and obtained its end, (or perfection) to which it was deſigned, among you believers. So, 2 Theſſ. ii. 7. The myſtery of iniquity is made, or wrought; or (as in the preſent tenſe) is in fieri, agitur, ſaith Caſtellio, agreeably to that of Heſychius, (Energeitai, cataskeuazetai) is prepared to enter, to diſcloſe it ſelf to the world. And ſo here (piſtis di agapes energoumene) faith perfected by charity: So the Syriac reads it; and ſo Tertullian, Perficitur per charitatem fides, (contra Marcion. l v.) directly parallel to that of St. James, ch. ii. 22. Faith is made perfect by works, as an habit by the effects or fruits. To which purpoſe it is obſervable, that in Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. l. iv. Agape teleioutai, and di agapen teleſthen, and energoumenon, are put as phraſes of the ſame importance. There is one only place behind, where this word is uſed; that of Jam. v. 16. of the righteous man's prayer, deeſis dicaiou energoumene; of which what is the direct importance will not perhaps be eaſily reſolved, but yet there is little reaſon to doubt but that it is in the paſſive ſignification alſo. To which purpoſe it will be obſervable, that one other notion of the word there is, which is ordinary among eccleſiaſtical writers, for one that hath received afflation from ſome ſpirit, evil or good. Thus (among many other examples) in the author of the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy, when there are repelled from the ſacrament catechoumenoi, energoumenoi, &c. there, (ſaith Maximus the Scholiaſt) energoumenoi, are they that are acted by unclean ſpirits. Why it ſhould not be taken alſo in a good ſenſe, for thoſe that are acted by good ſpirits, or the ſpirit of God, there is no reaſon imaginable, from the nature of the word; only 'tis true the moſt frequent uſe is of thoſe that are poſſeſſed by the devil. But yet, in the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. xii. 6, 10. energemata is uſed of the chariſmata, or extraordinary gifts of the ſpirit of God: And ſo ſaith Phavorinus; of which the gift of healing, and doing that only by praying and anointing, being one, in thoſe times, 'tis poſſible enough that deeſis energoumene may be that prayer of him that hath that gift of healing; and conſequently that which is thus formed by afflation of the ſpirit (for that the word belongs not only to perſons ſo acted by any ſpirit, but to actions that are ſo produced, appears by the uſe of the word in Juſtin Martyr, in Dial. cum Tryph. p. 87. where ſpeaking of magicians, he ſaith, they were carried captive by the devil to all wicked diabolical actions) which is here accordingly joined with the gift of healing, and therefore called (euche piſteos) ver. 15. "the prayer of faith," viz. of that faith which is mentioned 1 Cor. xii. 9. which enabled them to work cures, to recover the ſick, as there it follows, or which availeth much, that is miraculouſly, or as much as Elias's prayer for rain or fair weather did, in the next words. To that which hath been thus looſly ſaid of this word, may be added, by way of appendage, the words of Heſychius, in his Gloſſary, he energoumene, hai me argai, eiſaccuomene, teloumene. In which 'tis clear (as in the greateſt part of that book) that there is ſome corruption in the copy, I ſuppoſe from ſome decays in the MS. from whence it was printed. 'Tis poſſible, there might be ſome Lacuna in the parchment, which might take away part of the words in the midſt of this; which he that printed it was fain to repair by conjecture, and therein might miſtake. And then, this other form of words I ſhall only propoſe (inſtead of that which we now read in the printed book) He energoumene daimonoſa, catechomene, teloumene or teleioumene; ſuppoſing that the word daimonoſa and catechomene were ſo either blotted or eaten out, that there remained nothing of them but thus much ——— aim

——— omene. If this conjecture be not too wide, then this Gloſſary will clearly afford the ſeveral notions of this word energoumene in the latitude, viz. that it ſignify two things among ſacred authors; firſt daimonoſa, as Pachymerius rendred it, (and catechomene, which is all one) a perſon poſſeſſed with the devil, or that had ſome afflation; and ſecondly, teloumene, or teleioumene, wrought, or conſummate. One thing only more will be obſervable, in this verſe here to the Galatians, that by comparing it with other parallel places, ch. vi. 15. 1 Cor. vii. 19. it appears that faith conſummate by charity, is all one with "the new creature," in one place; and "the keeping of the commandments of God," in the other; as indeed charity is the fulfilling the whole law, of all the moral law, together with the ſuperſtructions of Chriſt. Agreeable to which is that of Marcus Eremita, Every grace is given in baptiſm, but 'tis perfected by performing of the commandments. (H.) See the notes on ver. 14. John vi. 29. xvii. 3. and 1 Cor. vii. 19.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Ye did run well, who did hinder you, that ye ſhould not obey the truth? This perſwaſion cometh not of him that calleth you. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. I have confidence in you through the Lord, that ye will be none otherwiſe minded: But he that troubleth you, ſhall bear his judgment, whoſoever he be. And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumciſion, why do I yet ſuffer perſecution? Then is the offence of the croſs ceaſed. I would they were even cut off which trouble you. For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only uſe not liberty for an occaſion to the fleſh, but by love ſerve one another. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not conſumed one of another.

Ye did run well.] That is, Ye were in the right way, and made ſo good a progreſs, that ye out-ſtripp'd many: And had ye not been ſtopp'd and hinder'd, ye would have obtain'd the prize; which is eternal life. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24.

This perſuaſion.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, This Judaizing opinion and practice of yours, this perſuaſion of the neceſſity of your being circumciſed, and obeying the law of Moſes, this new doctrine, ſo contrary to the ſpirit of the Goſpel, and the deſign of Chriſtianity, was never taught you either by God, or myſelf, or any other faithful miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, who firſt converted you to the faith; but it is a meer deluſion of Satan, and his emiſſaries the falſe Apoſtles: And do not think this a ſmall matter; let not circumciſion ſeem a little thing to you; and let not theſe Judaizing teachers be diſregarded by you as inconſiderable, becauſe they are few in number; for they are like to leaven; and ye know very well that "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump;" intimating, That a few falſe teachers, and a little of error and falſe doctrine, crept into the church of Chriſt, may do unſpeakable miſchief, by ſpeedy infection of the whole church, as a little leaven (to which error is compar'd) leaveneth the whole lump. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 6. and 1 Cor. v. 6.

I have confidence.] Obſerve here, 1. The Apoſtle's holy confidence, grounded upon charity, that "through the Lord," that is, through the Lord's aſſiſting his endeavours, and through the Lord's bleſſing upon their ſerious conſideration of what he had written to them, they would be reclaimed from their errors, and brought to be of the ſame mind with himſelf. Where note, How the holy and zealous Apoſtle was divided betwixt hope and fear concerning theſe men; he feared the worſt of theſe Galatians, and yet hopes the beſt; "I have confidence in you through the Lord." It is a fault in the miniſters of the Goſpel, when they deſpair of men too ſoon, when they ceaſe or ſlacken their endeavours for their peoples good, looking upon them as reſolutely bent upon, and judicially given up unto, all evil. Tho' our Apoſtle here had not a confidence of faith, or full perſuaſion, yet he had a confidence of charity, which cauſed him to hope that they would be like-minded with himſelf; "I have confidence in you through the Lord, that ye will be no otherwiſe minded." Obſerve, 2. With what a holy caution, as well as Chriſtian prudence and charity, our Apoſtle applies himſelf unto them; declaring, that tho' he hoped they might be reclaimed from their error, yet leſt they ſhould conclude their error not to be very dangerous, he ſhews them his juſt indignation againſt it, by denouncing deſerv'd puniſhments againſt thoſe that ſeduced them into it: "He that troubleth you, ſhall bear his own judgment," his condemnation due to him in hell, without repentance; which is ſuppoſed in all threatnings, tho' it is not always expreſs'd, yet it is to be underſtood. 3. The univerſality of the threatning; "He ſhall bear his own judgment, whoſoever he be:" Let him be who he will, or what he will; who he will for abilities and parts, what he will for power or reputation; whoever he is, or whatſoever he be, he ſhall bear his judgment. Such is the exact juſtice of God, and ſuch his impartiality in the exerciſe of it, that he will ſuffer no impenitent tranſgreſſor to eſcape his indignation, whoever he is, without reſpect to perſons. (B.) By the phraſe here (ho' taraſſon) "he that troubleth you," there ſeems to be meant ſome one perſon chiefly, who endeavour'd to ſeduce them: Who (as ſome ſay) was Cerinthus, who liv'd in the Apoſtles times, in and about Antiochia, and taught very many hereſies like the Gnoſticks: Particularly, That Chriſt was mere man; That circumciſion was ſtill of force; That the reſurrection was to be in this world, and to begin at Jeruſalem (which perhaps our Apoſtle taxeth, ch. iv. 25.) where the Saints were to live a thouſand years in all voluptuouſneſs and ſenſuality; after which manner himſelf alſo is noted to have lived. And this might give occaſion to the Apoſtle, to write ſo ſharply againſt thoſe ſins here, and ch. vi. 13. to take notice, That even theſe falſe doctors did not live religiouſly according to the law itſelf. See Ireneus, Euſebius, and eſpecially Epiphanus. (Fell) See the notes on ch. i. 7. Acts xv. 1. 2 Cor. ii. 3. viii. 22. and x. 6.

Why do I yet ſuffer?] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 17, &c. and xv. 30.

I would they were even cut off.] Apocoptesthai here, and in the canons of the ancient councils, eccoptesthai, kathaireisthai, aphorizeſthai, are all expreſſions of excommunication of the higheſt degree, anſwerable to the ſhamatha among the Jews, and conſequently here (ophelon kai apocopſontai) "I would they were cut off," is an expreſſion of a menace or threatning of excommunication; an apoſtolical denunciation, that they that do not mend this ſeditious, ſchiſmatical humour, ſhall be cut off: Or if ophelon be but a wiſh, it is then becauſe he diſcerned ſo much of the obſtinacy of the evil humour, that he thought this would not be likely to cure, but exaſperate it; or becauſe he ſaw his authority contemn'd among them. As for that other notion of apocoptesthai, which St. Hierome and others ſeem to refer to, in relation to the matter of theſe mens diſturbance, viz. that about circumciſion, which they would impoſe upon all Chriſtians, (Si putant hoc prodeſſe; non ſolum circumcidantur, ſed etiam abſcindantur) 'tis ſomewhat too light to be affixed to the words of the Apoſtle. (H. and W.) See the notes on ch. i. 7, &c. 1 Cor. v. 2, &c. And Dr. Thomas Baily's ſermon on this text.

Uſe not liberty.] Our Apoſtle having finiſhed the former part of the chapter, which contains an exhortation to ſtand faſt in that liberty which Chriſt had purchaſed for them; he now enters upon the ſecond part of it; namely, to caution them againſt abuſing of their Chriſtian liberty, and by no means to apprehend or ſuppoſe, as if they were thereby freed from all obligation to ſerve God or man, in the duties particularly required of them: "Brethren! (Says he,) ye are called into liberty;" that is, to the enjoyment of evangelical liberty, which conſiſts in a freedom from the obligation of the ceremonial law, and the curſe of the moral law; uſe it then ſo as not to abuſe it: Uſe it neither to ſin nor ſcandal; not to ſin, to allow yourſelves the leaſt liberty in indulging any carnal luſt, or ſinful affection, nor yet to ſcandalize the weak, who at preſent ſcruple the forſaking of circumciſion, and the reſt of the ceremonial rites; "uſe not your liberty for an occaſion to the fleſh, in love ſerve one another:" Learn hence, 1. That our liberty, and freedom, purchaſed for us by Chriſt, doth not diſſolve any tie or obligation which we lie under, either to God or man; the yoke of the duty is very conſiſtent with our Chriſtian liberty. 2. That one of the great occaſions of the ſins we commit in the courſe of our lives, is the too free uſe of our Chriſtian liberty: The uſing our liberty to the utmoſt pitch and extent of that which we call lawful, is the occaſion of our running into that which is certainly ſinful. Religion moſt certainly allows us all reaſonable liberty in the gratification of our natural appetites and paſſions; but all exceſſes and immoderate liberties are forbidden by religion. And accordingly, one good rule, for ſecuring ourſelves from falling into ſin, in the uſing our Chriſtian liberty, is this; That in matters of duty, we ſhould rather do too much than too little; but in matters of indifferency, we ſhould rather take too little of our liberty than too much. For inſtance, Prayer and alms-giving are indiſpenſible duties; but how oft we ſhould pray, and how much we ſhould give, is not poſitively declared: In this caſe, to pray very frequently, and to give alms very liberally and largely is our wiſdom and duty; no damage will come by doing too much, but both damage and danger will accrue by doing too little. And, 3. That it is not ſufficient, in order to the right uſe of our Chriſtian liberty, that we do not from thence take occaſion to ſin ourſelves; but we ought to take care leſt by any indiſcreet uſe of our own liberty we give offence, and miniſter occaſion of ſin and ſtumbling unto others. This truth is implied in the ſecond injunction, "By love ſerve one another." (B.) See the notes on John viii. 36. and xiii. 34. and 1 Cor. ix. 1, &c. And Archbiſhop Sharpe's ſermon on this text.

Love thy neighbour.] See the notes on Matth. vii. 12. John xiii. 34. and Rom. xiii. 8, 10.

Bite and devour.] The Apoſtle, to enforce the foregoing exhortation to mutual love, urges here the dangerous effects, which their animoſities and ſtrife, their controverſies and contentions, would moſt certainly produce: By biting one another, ſays he, ye will deſtroy and conſume one another. Where it deſerves a ſerious remark, That St. Paul compares the enmities and animoſities which were among them, on the ſcore of their differences in religion, to the biting, rending, and devouring of the wild beaſts; and gives them timely notice of the fatal conſequences that will follow thereupon, viz. a total devaſtation and inevitable conſumption of the whole church. It is a true ſaying, That there is no ſuch bitter hatred among men, as on the ſcore of religion. As the zeal of the Jews would not ſuffer an uncircumciſed perſon to live among them; ſo probably, theſe zealous Judaizers in Galatia would not ſuffer thoſe who had caſt off legal obſervances to live quietly and peaceably by them. (B.) See the notes on Acts xv. 1, &c. and 39. and 1 Cor. i. 11.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. This I ſay then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye ſhall not fulfil the luſt of the fleſh. For the fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the fleſh: And theſe are contrary the one to the other; ſo that ye cannot do the things that ye would. But if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law. Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe, Adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, ſtrife, ſeditions, hereſies, envyings, murders, drunkenneſs, revellings, and ſuch like: Of the which I tell you before, as I have alſo told you in time paſt, that they which do ſuch things, ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, faith, meekneſs, temperance: Againſt ſuch there is no law. And they that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts. If we live in the Spirit, let us alſo walk in the Spirit. Let us not be deſirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

This I ſay then, walk.] The advice I give, for avoiding the abuſe of your Chriſtian liberty, and the ſtrife and uncharitableneſs, mention'd juſt before, is, That ye would behave yourſelves as men who make the Goſpel their rule, and are guided by the Spirit of God; which will prevent your being enſlav'd by the luſts of the fleſh. Where obſerve, 1. The juſt extent and meaning of thoſe expreſſions here, "walking in the Spirit," ver. 16. and being "led by the Spirit," ver. 18. There are few words in Scripture of larger and more ambiguous ſignification, than this of Spirit. Sometimes it ſignifies an intelligent and immaterial ſubſtance at large, as in that propoſition, "God is a Spirit," John iv. 24. Sometimes it is the underſtanding part of the humane mind, diſtinguiſh'd not only from the body, but from that ſeat of the affections, which philoſophers are wont to call the ſenſitive ſoul; as in 1 Cor. ii. 11. and 1 Theſſ. v. 23. Sometimes it denotes the third Perſon in the bleſſed Trinity; as when we read of the Spirit being grieved, tempted, ſent, &c. Sometimes it is put for the gifts and graces of that Spirit, whether ordinary or extraordinary, as 1 Cor. xii. 1, &c. And ſometimes again it imports the Goſpel of Chriſt; as 2 Cor. iii. 6. Now, in this place it muſt needs be taken in one of the three ſenſes laſt mention'd: And in any of them it will anſwer the Apoſtle's purpoſe; as is manifeſt, by his oppoſing it to the fleſh and the law. From whence we may infer, That leading a life of purity and virtue, in oppoſition to our brutiſh and carnal luſts, and a Law of carnal ordinances; living by faith and grace, in opppoſition to works, and any confidence in moral duties perform'd by reaſon and natural ſtrength; governing ourſelves by the word of Chriſt, and following the directions and holy motions of his good Spirit within us, (however expreſs'd variouſly) do mean and come all to the ſame thing at laſt: That he, who does one of them, does the other; and that having the Spirit, living after the Spirit, walking in the Spirit, and being led by the Spirit, include them all, in which ſoever of the forenam'd meanings the word Spirit be uſed or interpreted. For evidence whereof, no other argument is needful, than St. Paul's catalogue of virtues here, which he ſo poſitively affirms to be "the fruit of the Spirit," ver. 22. and that long black roll of vices, which he denominates "the works of the fleſh," ver. 10. and the crucifying of which he gives in, as a certain mark of being Chriſt's, ver. 24. And, 2. The encouragement for "walking in the Spirit;" but eſpecially the ground and foundation of it, which we have here, in ver. 16 17. The encouragement itſelf is, that by "walking in the Spirit, we ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the fleſh;" that is, we ſhall, by our obedience to the Goſpel, and by the power of that grace, which always accompanies the true and practical belief of it, be reſcued from the tyranny of our luſts, and not comply with their ſeducements and wicked ſuggeſtions. But how can we be ſure, that ſuch walking will be attended with ſo happy an effect? Why, even from hence, "For (ſays he, that is, Becauſe) the fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the fleſh; and theſe are contrary the one to the other, ſo that ye cannot do the things that ye would:" The true meaning whereof muſt certainly be, That, as Chriſtians, who ſtill continue to be men, do carry about them a corrupt principle, inclining them one way; ſo have they, by virtue of their being Chriſtians, a ſupernatural and divine principle drawing them another way; So that, if the former conſtantly diſpoſes them to evil, the latter as conſtantly diſpoſes to good: The conſequence of which different diſpoſitions is, "that they cannot do the things that they would:" (Not that the regenerate man is unable to perform that good, which the Spirit moves him to deſire and endeavour the performance of; but) he that is led by, and walks in the Spirit, cannot conſent to do thoſe evil things which the fleſhly principles incline him to; For, in ſo doing, he breaks that Goſpel-covenant which hath ſolemnly renounced thoſe works of the fleſh; he ceaſes to be led by the Spirit, the moment he fulfils any of thoſe wicked luſts. For this is the neceſſary conſequence of the mutual contrariety, taken notice of here between theſe two principles. And he is aſſiſted and ſtrengthned by the grace and Spirit of God; which being a principle more powerful than that of corrupt nature, enables him to reſiſt and overcome all the ſuggeſtions and allurements of its adverſe principle. In a word, As he, who is left to the powers of nature, cannot do the good, which his own reaſon, or the law in his mind, tells him is fit to be done, becauſe deſtitute of that Spirit which is the cauſe of all the good we do; ſo he, who is conducted by the Spirit, cannot comply with the law in his members, which is the cauſe of all that evil we do. The former is the caſe of perſons under the law, ver. 18. repreſented at large, in Rom. vii. The latter is the privilege of perſons led by the Spirit, aſſign'd here as a reaſon for their "not fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh:" And the difficulty men have uſually been entangled in concerning this matter, ariſes from a miſtake of the Apoſtle's meaning and deſign; by ſuppoſing him to ſpeak of the ſame perſons in both places; than which nothing can be more foreign, both from the context of each paſſage, and from the reaſon and truth of the caſe. (Stanh.) See the notes on Rom. vi. 12, &c. vii. 5, 15, &c. viii. 4, &c. xiii. 14. 1 Cor. xii. 1. 2 Cor. iii. 6. and the ſeveral notes here following.

Ye cannot do.] The Greek (me poiete) ſhould not be rendred ye cannot do, but ye do not; that is, ye do not do the things which the fleſh dictates, becauſe the Spirit ſtriving againſt the fleſh is ſtronger than the fleſh, and gets the victory. (Fox)

The works of the fleſh.] Among theſe ſome are reckon'd here, which ſeem to conſiſt in the errors and evil diſpoſitions of the mind; ſuch as hereſy, malice, envy, &c. But the propriety of this denomination may very well be juſtified, by conſidering, that even theſe are effects of the ſame cauſe, a wicked and worldly principle; and that the ends men propoſe to themſelves by indulging them, are gratifications of the outward man, by ſome pleaſures or advantages, peculiar to the preſent ſtate, and of a ſenſual nature. Mean while, when theſe works of the fleſh are ſaid to be manifeſt, we may fairly underſtand it, that the malignity of their nature and conſequences evidences itſelf to the reaſon of every thinking man; and that nothing but corruption, and prejudice, and paſſion, could blind our judgment, or ever reconcile us to the practice and indulgence of vices ſo pernicious and deteſtable. (Stanh.) See the notes on Matth. v. 27. Rom. xiii. 13. 1 Cor. iii. 3. and vi. 9. And for a more particular definition of theſe ſeveral ſins (if there be occaſion) conſult Dr. Whitby and Mr. Burkitt at large.

The fruit of the Spirit.] Obſerve here, 1. That the Apoſtle ſaith not the works of the Spirit, as before, the works of the fleſh, but the fruit of the Spirit; to teach us, that good works are not only the effects of God's Spirit, but alſo that they are acceptable and pleaſing unto him, like moſt ſweet and wholeſome fruits. (Aſſ.) 2. That "the works of the fleſh" are ſpoken of, as many; but "the fruit of the Spirit" is ſpoken of, as one; many works, but one fruit. There is ſuch a connexion and concatenation of graces, that altho' they are diſtinct in their natures, yet are they inſeparable in their ſubject. (B.) See the notes on John xv, 2, 8.

Joy.] By (Chara) joy here, I do not underſtand that joy, or peace of conſcience, which is the reward of duty, but a joy which is itſelf a duty, and a duty reſpecting our neighbour, becauſe it is placed among thoſe virtues which reſpect our neighbour, as love, peace, &c. The joy therefore here meant is probably that which a man takes in the joy and happineſs of others; that virtue whereby a man endeavours to cauſe joy to others, by gratifying and pleaſing them in all lawful and reaſonable things, for their good, and to their edification. See Biſhop Bull's Engliſh works, p. 886. I the rather mention this, becauſe ſome ſincere and good Chriſtians, underſtanding hereby that joy and peace of conſcience which is the reward of duty, and not finding it in themſelves, may be fill'd with groundleſs and perplexing fears of their ſtate and condition. For, queſtionleſs, a Chriſtian may be in a good ſtate, and yet not feel that ſenſible joy, which God was pleaſed to afford, eſpecially in the beginnings of converſion. The mind may be clouded with melancholy, which with other particular circumſtances, may interrupt that ſenſible joy; but, this notwithſtanding, ſuch a perſon may be ſerving God acceptably. (Fox) See the notes on John xv. 2, 8. and 1 Cor. xiii. 7.

Deſirous of vain-glory.] Theodoret here obſerves, That even thoſe who ſtood firm in the faith, and ſo enjoy'd their ſpiritual gifts, might be apt to contemn and glory over the weak on that account; and others might envy their gifts: Which ſhews the ſeaſonableneſs of this exhortation; and connects theſe words with the beginning of the following chapter; where the Apoſtle condemns them who had high thoughts of themſelves, and, on that account, were apt to over-look and neglect their fallen brother. (W.)

CHAP. VI.

The Apoſtle here exhorts them to the practice of ſeveral important duties, in order to a holy life, which was ſo neceſſary to evidence the truth of their converſion to Chriſtianity; and concludes with a ſolemn proteſtation of his affection to them.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. BRethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are ſpiritual, reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs; conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted. Bear ye one anothers burdens, and ſo fulfil the law of Chriſt. For if a man think himſelf to be ſomething, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himſelf. But let every man prove his own work, and then ſhall he have rejoicing in himſelf alone, and not in another. For every man ſhall bear his own burden.

If any man be overtaken.] The firſt exhortation here given, is, how they ſhould carry themſelves one towards another, on ſuppoſition of their ſcandalous falling either into error, or into ſin; namely, not with rigour and ſeverity, but with mildneſs and lenity; "If a man be overtaken in a fault," &c. Here note, 1. An evil ſuppoſed; namely, that the wiſeſt, and holieſt, and the beſt of men may be overtaken in a fault, and ſurprized by a temptation: "If a man be overtaken;" implying that any man may be ſo: That ſin, or that miſery, which befals ſome men, may befal others, any others, yea, all others; for all are partakers of the ſame frail nature, ſubject to the working of the ſame corruption, and liable to the danger of the ſame temptation. 2. The duty directed to, with relation to theſe perſons, who trip and fall either into ſin, or into error: Reſtore him, ſet him right, put him in joint again; a metaphor taken from bone-ſetters, who place diſlocated bones, and ſet broken ones, with great tenderneſs: Thoſe three things, which we ſay are neceſſary in a bone-ſetter, are abſolutely needful in a reprover; namely, an eagle's eye, to diſcern where the fault lies; a lion's heart, to deal faithfully and freely with the faults; and a lady's hand, to uſe them gently and tenderly. 3. The perſons particularly named, who are and ought to manage this duty of brotherly reproof: "Ye which are ſpiritual;" ye that are the governours of the church, ſay ſome; ye that are endowed with ſpiritual gifts, ſay others; the Prophets among you, who perform all ſpiritual offices for you, let them rebuke offenders Others, by ſpiritual, underſtand ſuch as had received larger meaſures of the gifts and graces of the ſpirit, than others; "Let ſuch as are ſtrong, bear with the infirmities of the weak." 4. The manner how this duty of fraternal correption, or brotherly reproof, is, and ought to be managed; namely, with patience and meekneſs, not with ſeverity and roughneſs; "Ye which are ſpiritual, reſtore him in the ſpirit of meekneſs:" If the reproofs ye give others, be imbittered with your own paſſions, they will ſpit them out of their mouths, yea, ſpit them back upon your very faces. 5. The argument to excite to all this, namely, the conſideration of our own perſonal frailty, and great liableneſs to fall into temptation ourſelves; "conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted:" Who knows what a feather the ſtrongeſt Saint and ſtouteſt Chriſtian may prove in the wind of temptation? Therefore "let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall," and exerciſe great candour and Chriſtian tenderneſs towards them that are fallen before him. Hodie mihi, cras tibi. From the whole, Learn, 1. That fraternal correption, or brotherly reproof, is a great duty which Chriſtians mutually owe to one another, when they either run into error, or fall into ſin. "If a man be overtaken, reſtore him." 2. That altho' it be the duty of private Chriſtians to admoniſh and reprove one another, as being members one of another, yet thoſe that are ſpiritual, Chriſt's miniſters, the guides of the church, the ſtewards of the houſhold, ought in ſpecial to look upon it as their obliged duty to reprove and rebuke with all long-ſuffering and gentleneſs 3. That rigour and ſeverity, expreſs'd towards the failings and eſcapes of others, will rather exaſperate than reclaim them: We muſt deal as gently with a fallen brother, as with a broken bone; if we do not temper our reproofs with meekneſs, they will certainly prove ſucceſsleſs. 4. That the holieſt Saint and moſt ſpiritual man here on earth, is within the reach of temptation, and may poſſibly fall himſelf; therefore we ought to treat a fallen brother with great tenderneſs and regard. (B.) Here we may ſee the duties of a Chriſtian, in the caſe of his neighbour's fall; 1. To excuſe him, in part at leaſt, if he can, by aſcribing his fall to ſurprize, or ignorance, or to the violence of the temptation. 2. To inſtruct, and reſtore him; ſetting before his eyes his duty in the plaineſt manner. 3. To have abundance of meekneſs and compaſſion. 4. To conſider, and humble himſelf, as being capable of doing all the evil which is done by any other. 5. To fear for himſelf, and to watch, either againſt the ſame temptation, or againſt that which leads to bitterneſs, pride, forgetfulneſs of himſelf, and to other defects which commonly proceed from the ſight of our neighbour's faults, ver. 1. 6. To bear even the ſins of his neighbour; in ſuffering them with patience; in willingly forgiving them; in imploring mercy for him; in encouraging him to repentance, and in performing it together with him. 7. To do it with regard to Jeſus Chriſt, in his name, in his ſpirit, out of obedience to his new commandment, in union with, and in imitation of, his charity, and by the impulſe thereof, ver. 2. 8. To undeceive himſelf, by conſidering the failings of others, and to lay aſide that too good opinion of himſelf which every man is too apt to entertain, ver. 3. 9. To conſider, that there are defects in us which have need to be borne by others. 10. To examine ourſelves, not by comparing ourſelves with our neighbour who does not obſerve the law of God, but by enquiring how we ourſelves obſerve it. For, 11. The example of others may ſerve to condemn us in the ſight of God, but it can never juſtify us, ver. 4. And, 12. The proper way to render the burden of our own ſins light at the laſt day, is to lighten and bear the burden of others at preſent, ver. 5. The ſinner is generally quick, eager, and curious, to know the life of his neighbour; but ſlow, backward and blind, to obſerve, condemn and amend his own. (Q.) See the notes on Rom. xiv. 1. and xv. 1. and the other particular notes here following.

Ye which are ſpiritual.] What is meant by (hoi pneumaticoi) ſpiritual here, may appear by what hath been ſaid of the word (pneuma) ſpirit, Luke ix. 55. which ſignifies not only the ſpirit of God, whereby men are reformed, and the deeds of the fleſh (in the precedent chapter) mortified; but alſo (chariſmata) the powers and gifts, which were beſtowed on men in the church, in order to miniſterial functions or offices there. And that (pneumaticoi) ſpiritual are here thus to be underſtood, in proportion to, and by analogy with, theſe, may be gueſs'd by the ſeverals which here follow: 1. The (pneuma praotetos) ſpirit of meekneſs, which theſe ſpiritual men are to uſe. This clearly belongs to the power of the keys, veſted in the governours of the Church; and is therefore ſet oppoſite to (rhabdos) the rod, 1 Cor. iv. 21. whereas "coming with the rod," evidently ſignifies proceeding to diſcipline, to cenſures of excommunication, ſo coming in the ſpirit of meekneſs, and (en praoteti paideuon) diſciplining in meekneſs, 2 Tim. ii. 25. is admoniſhing thoſe meekly that have offended, (and to whom that method of fraternal reprehenſion is firſt neceſſary) as perhaps alſo admitting to repentance and abſolution thoſe that have reformed upon the infliction of the cenſures. And accordingly, this ſpirit of meekneſs here is this milder part of the apoſtolical office, which is to precede the more ſevere; and to prevent it, if it be poſſible: 1. Admonitions and reprehenſion, which if they prevail, there is no need of proceeding any farther; and 2. An eaſy admiſſion to penitence, (in caſe the cenſures have paſs'd upon him) without proceeding to any higher degree of cenſures, as in caſe of obſtinacy might be ſeaſonable. To this ſecond the word catartizein may incline, which we render reſtore, but ſignifies properly to put in joint any member of a body which is diſlocated, and ſo it fitly belongs to the reſtoring an excommunicate perſon to the ſociety and peace of the Church; but yet not only ſo, but ſignifies alſo to recover the offender to a ſenſe and reformation, be it by admonition, reprehenſion, or any ſuch milder means (ſee note on 2 Cor. xiii. 11.) and the doing of this being proper to the governours of the Church, it follows, that theſe be here meant by the ſpiritual. (H.) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 10. and ii. 15.

Leſt thou alſo be tempted.] Peiraſthes; Leſt thou fall by temptation: For to ſtand firm againſt temptation, when it aſſaults us, is not a proper conſideration to engage us to pity thoſe who fall by it. This is the import of the word, when we are taught to pray, that we enter not into temptation, Matth. vi. 13. as alſo 1 Cor. vii. 5. 1 Theſſ. iii. 5. and James i. 14. (W.)

Bear ye one another's burdens.] This is a general precept, and requires us to ſympathize with our brethren in all their ſorrows and ſufferings, and to bear a part with them under the load and burden of oppreſſive wants and neceſſities; particularly, bearing with the weakneſſes and infirmities of our brethren, ſeems here to be recommended to our care and practice in this apoſtolical injunction, "Bear ye one anothers burdens." The encouragement to which duty follows, "and ſo fulfill the law of Chriſt;" that is, the law of love, the moral law, which enjoins us to love our neighbour as ourſelves. But why is this called "the law of Chriſt," when it was long before Chriſt, yea, before Moſes, and as old as Adam himſelf; being part of the law of nature, which was written in Adam's heart before there was any written bible? I anſwer, The law of love, is very properly called the law of Chriſt; becauſe he revived it, reſcued it, recommended and enforced it, frequently urged it upon his followers, and exemplified it in his own life and converſation, therefore called "a new commandment;" and, his commandment; "this is my commandment," &c. "A new commandment I give you, that ye love one another," John xiii. 34. Learn hence, 1. That to have our ear, our heart, and our hand open to our brethren in diſtreſs, is a neceſſary Chriſtian duty: Our ear open to their mournful complaints, our heart open to ſympathize with, and mourn over them, our hand open to the relief of their neceſſities and wants. This is a burden which the law of Chriſt has laid upon us; "Bear ye one anothers burdens." 2. To bear a part of our brethrens burdens, with a compaſſionate heart, and helping hand, is a "fulfilling of the law of Chriſt," becauſe, much love, which is the fulfilling of the law, goes out, and is acted in the bearing of it; "So fulfill the law of Chriſt." (B.) See the notes on John xiii. 34. and xv. 12. Rom. xv. 1. and 1 Cor. xiii. 7.

Prove his own work.] That is, Let him approve his actions to God, and his own conſcience; and then he may take comfort ſimply in himſelf, that he is a good man, and not in this only, that he is better than others. (W.) Obſerve here, 1. How the Apoſtle ſtrikes at the root of the ſin of pride and ſelf-conceit; namely, the comparing themſelves with thoſe who are worſe than themſelves, which is very apt to ſtir up pride and arrogancy, &c. to cure which, he directs them to compare themſelves with thoſe who are better than themſelves, and to try and prove their own works by the rule of the word of God, and not by the example and practice of others; and ſo ſhall they find matter of rejoicing in themſelves, in the teſtimony of God, and the ſilent applauſe of their own conſciences, without borrowing matter of rejoicing from the failings and infirmities of other perſons. 2. The argument or motive uſed by the Apoſtle to enforce upon every man the duty of trying his own work, rather than to be prying into the infirmities of others: Becauſe when he cometh to judgment, "every man muſt bear his own burden," or give an account of himſelf and his own actions to God, who will then abſolve or condemn men, not as they have done better or worſe than others, but as they ſhall be then found in themſelves, abſolutely conſider'd. It is a great error, for any man to meaſure himſelf by the meaſures of other men, either by their perfections or their imperfections: To conclude our eſtate ſafe, becauſe we are not ſo bad as others, or unſafe, becauſe we have not attain'd to the perfections of others, is alike dangerous. God will not proceed by this rule; neither ſhould we: Every man that appears before him "ſhall bear his own burden," and anſwer for his own ſins: For the righteous God, in the great judgment, will call no man to account for the ſins of others, unleſs he has ſome way been acceſſary to them. (B.) St. Jerome here noteth, That the Apoſtle in theſe words obſcurely intimateth, That while we live in this world, we may be help'd by the counſels, good advice, and prayers one of another; but after this life we muſt ſtand or fall to ourſelves, and no others can ſtand us in ſtead by their prayers or otherwiſe. Which tho' it be a truth, and maketh much againſt the Popiſh invocation of Saints, and prayers for the dead; yet it ſeems not to be the natural interpretation of this text; but rather that of St. Auguſtine (de conſen. Evang. l. ii. c. 30.) where, reconciling the ſeeming contradiction between this fifth verſe and the ſecond, he ſays, The word burden is taken in a different ſenſe; and ſo the words in the original are different: For, in ver. 2. it is baros, ſignifying the burden of ſins and infirmities, wherewith our brother is aggriev'd; but here, ver. 5. it is phortion, meaning the burden of the puniſhment of every man's own ſin. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke xviii. 11. Rom. i. 28. ii. 18. and xiv. 18. 1 Cor. iii. 8. and xi. 28.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth, in all good things. Be not deceived; God is not mocked: For whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap. For he that ſoweth to his fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption: But he that ſoweth to the ſpirit, ſhall of the ſpirit reap life everlaſting. And let us not be weary in well-doing: For in due ſeaſon we ſhall reap, if we faint not. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men; eſpecially unto them who are of the houſhold of faith.

Let him that is taught.] St. Paul, in this paſſage, appears to uſe very ſignificant ſpeeches for his purpoſe, to ſhew, what a neceſſary duty lieth upon the Laity, to render back a good return of temporals unto the miniſters of the Goſpel. 1. By the word (koinoneito) communicate, he intimates (as St. Chryſoſtome tells us) that there muſt be (antidoſis) a viciſſitude and intercourſe, a flux and reflux of heavenly and earthly things, between the Prieſt and the Pariſh. Juſtice itſelf challengeth thus much, for men to expreſs their due thankfulneſs toward their teachers, by bountiful recompencing of their paſtoral labours with abundant ſupplies of all conveniences. 2. He uſeth the word catechein; which may be taken for the delivering of any doctrine, by the organ of the voice, to inſtruct others in the myſteries of the Chriſtian religion. The Apoſtle therefore, in this place, appears to put a plain difference between the labouring and the lazy miniſter, between the diligent bee and the idle drone, between the induſtrious treader out of the corn and the voluptuous eater up of it. There muſt be ratio dati & accepti (ſaith Arboreus) a true reckoning on both ſides; the paſtor muſt piouſly employ his talent, and the pariſhioner muſt profitably reply in his element; the Miniſter muſt perform his part, and the Auditor muſt do his duty; the ſower muſt reap, and the receiver muſt return a crop with increaſe. 3. We meet with the manner of communication ſubjoin'd (en paſin agathois) "in all good things:" Not in a few, but in all; love, reverence, and maintenance, as St. Athanaſius noteth; expreſſing all liberality towards them, as St. Chryſoſtome obſerveth: And theſe they may very well fulfill (as theſe Fathers affirm) as receiving much more than they can return. (Meene) See Mr. Rob. Griffith's Sermon on this text, 1716. and the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 7, &c.

Be not deceived.] Here the Apoſtle offers ſeveral arguments to conſideration, for exciting them to the fore-mention'd duty of liberality and Chriſtian beneficence in general, and to the miniſters of God's word in particular. And, 1. He argues from God's omniſciency; who takes notice of all the petty and pitiful pretences, pleas, and excuſes, which men make, why they cannot be ſo kind as they would be to the miniſters and members of Jeſus Chriſt. Alas! Their own wants are many, (but it is their luſts which make them ſo!) their burdens are great upon them, and they muſt provide and take care for themſelves: But, ſays the Apoſtle, Tho' ye may with theſe lying pretences cheat yourſelves, and mock your Miniſters and poor neighbours, yet "God is not (will not, cannot be) mocked:" There is no juggling with God, nor deceiving his eye: Man never deceives himſelf ſo much, as when he thinks to deceive God in the leaſt: Man may be mock'd and deceiv'd by man; but God can never be mock'd by man. 2. St. Paul compares charity and Chriſtian bounty to ſeed ſown; and aſſures us, that the crop we reap ſhall be anſwerable, both in quality and kind, in meaſure and degree, to the ſeed we now ſow; "Whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap." Learn, That every man's harveſt hereafter ſhall be according to his ſeed time here. The actions of this life are as ſeed ſown for the life to come: If the husbandman ſow tares, he muſt not expect to reap wheat. 3. How the Apoſtle doth amplify in particular what he had before aſſerted in general; viz. That ſuch as the ſeed is, ſuch will the harveſt be: "He that ſoweth to his fleſh," that is plainly he who ſpends his ſubſtance upon his luſts, ſeeking no more than the gratification of his ſenſual deſires, "ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption;" that is, periſhing ſatisfaction only at preſent, and eternal perdition afterwards: "But he that ſoweth to the ſpirit" (that is, who improves his eſtate for God, for the ſupport of his Goſpel, for the ſuſtenance of his members) "ſhall of the ſpirit reap life everlaſting." The ſpirit of him who raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, will alſo raiſe us up at the great day, and reward our preſent parting with the things of this world which we cannot keep, with eternal life which we ſhall never loſe. (B.) See Mr. John Hales's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ch. v. 19, &c. Luke xvi. 25. Rom. ii. 6. 1 Cor. vi. 9. and 2 Cor. ix. 6.

Not be weary in well-doing.] The holy Apoſtle, in theſe words, exhorts the Galatians, and in them all Chriſtians, to the practice of one of the moſt important parts and duties of the Chriſtian religion; namely, that of doing good one to another: And he doth not barely excite us to the duty, but he exhorts us alſo to an unwearied diligence in the doing of it, according to our ability and opportunity. In the exhortation before us, Obſerve, 1. The grand comprehenſive duty we are exhorted to, well-doing; and an unwearied diligence therein. This comprehends all thoſe ways and means whereby we may be beneficial and uſeful one to another, both to ſoul and body, in ſpiritual and temporal good things, and promote both the preſent comfort and future happineſs of each other. 2. The extent and latitude of the duty, with reſpect to its objects, which is all mankind; "Let us do good unto all." The Galatians were in danger of Judaizing in their practice, as well as in their doctrines; that is, of loving none but themſelves and their own countrymen: For the Jews were grown ſo ſour and churliſh in their temper, that they would not do the leaſt office of kindneſs to any that was not of their own nation: Therefore St Paul here exhorts them to extend their charity univerſally to all and every one that is of the ſame nature with themſelves. 3. The ſpecial and particular objects of our charity; "the houſhold of faith:" Do good to all, but eſpecially to them. By the houſhold of faith, as appears by the context, ver. 6. are primarily meant the miniſters of God, the teachers of his word: Theſe are God's domeſtick ſervants; Wherever there has been a people, there has been a religion profeſs'd, ſuch as it was; wherever there has been a religion profeſs'd, there have been perſons conſecrated and ſet apart to attend the ſervice of that religion, and maintenance provided for thoſe attendants: It was ſo by God's appointment under the law, and by Chriſt's under the Goſpel, 1 Cor ix. 14. But farther, by the houſhold of faith, we are to underſtand the whole collective body of believing Chriſtians, all the members of Chriſt's myſtical body; ſuch are very dear to God, and ought to be ſo to us. 4. The ſubjects of this duty, or whom it doth eminently concern; all Chriſtians; "As we have opportunity, let us do good;" that is, every one of us: For verily, there is no condition in the world ſo mean and deſpicable, but it yields perſons an opportunity one way or other of doing good; if not by their purſe, yet at leaſt by their prayers, and by their example. 5. The frequency of the duty; "As we have opportunity;" that is, as often as the occaſions of doing good are preſented to us, and as ability for doing good is found with us. Some men defer doing good till they come to die, till they come to make their will; that unwilling will in which they give God a ſmall pittance of his own, becauſe they can keep it no longer; they will repent when they are dying, and be charitable after they are dead. Good God! How unwilling are men to part with either their money or their ſins, as long as they can keep them! But verily a death-bed charity may be as unavailable as a death-bed repentance. The rule is, "As we have opportunity;" that is, as often as an opportunity is offer'd; let us decline no opportunity, by getting out of the way (with ſome) when a work of charity preſents itſelf unto us. 6. The meaſure of this duty; as we have ability, "Let us do good unto all;" that is, proportionably to what God hath given us, let us be willing to give to others: God could eaſily level the world, and give every man alike, but he is pleaſed to give ſome more than others, on purpoſe to try their graces; the charity and bounty of the rich, the faith and patience of the poor: And verily an eſtate above what ſufficeth our occaſions and neceſſities, is no farther a bleſſing to us, than as it puts an opportunity into our hands of doing more good than others. 7 An unwearied perſeverance of doing good required at our hands; "Let us not be weary in well-doing:" Tho' we have done much good, there is room for more; new objects will appear, new occaſions will ariſe, new opportunities will preſent themſelves unto us. Let us never think we can do enough, much leſs too much, good: The beſt of beings are moſt unwearied in well-doing: God, Chriſt, the holy Angels, are never weary of this bleſſed work; let us never be weary in imitating them in that which is their higheſt and their chiefeſt excellency and perfection. 8. The argument and encouragement to the chearful diſcharge of this duty: "In due ſeaſon we ſhall reap, if we faint not;" that is, ſooner or later, either in this world, or in the next, or in both, we ſhall certainly receive the reward of well-doing. We ſhall reap, but what? The bleſſing of God upon all we have, are, and do; the benefit and bleſſing of their prayers to whom we extend our charity; the higheſt pleaſure and ſatisfaction in our own minds of doing good, with which no ſenſual pleaſure can be compared. The reflexion upon any good we have done, is a perpetual ſpring of peace and pleaſure to us; the thoughts of it lie even and eaſy in our minds, and the remembrance of it refreſhes the ſoul with a ſtrange kind of delight and joy. But, Lord! What tongue can utter, or what heart conceive, that vaſt and unſpeakable reward, which an unwearied diligence in well-doing will meet with in the other world! It will plead for us at the day of judgment, and procure at the hands of a merciful God, for the rich merits of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, a glorious recompence at the reſurrection of the juſt; and proportionable to the degrees of our charity, will be the diſpenſations of this reward. From the whole learn, 1. That great are the obligations which all Chriſtians do lie under of doing good one to another, according to their abilities and opportunities. And, 2. That great is the reward of well-doing; which Chriſtians may eye as a motive to an unwearied diligence, and unfainting perſeverance in well doing. (B.) See the reſpective Sermons of Archbiſhop Wake, Archbiſhop Lindſay, Biſhop Stillingfleet, and Dr. Clagett, on this text; and the notes on Luke xiv. 14. and xviii. 1, &c. John ix. 4. Rom. xv. 1, &c. and 1 Tim. vi. 17.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Ye ſee how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand. As many as deſire to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh, they conſtrain you to be circumciſed; only leſt they ſhould ſuffer perſecution for the croſs of Chriſt. For neither they themſelves who are circumciſed keep the law; but deſire to have you circumciſed, that they may glory in your fleſh. But God forbid that I ſhould glory, ſave in the croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. For in Chriſt Jeſus neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but a new creature. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Iſrael of God. From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jeſus. Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit. Amen.

¶ Unto the Galatians, written from Rome.

Ye ſee how large a letter.] 'Tis very probable, that St. Paul ordinarily did only dictate, and ſome other perſons wrote, his Epiſtles; as that to the Romans written by Tertius, Rom xvi. 22. Sometimes he only wrote the ſalutation, and ſubſcribed the Epiſtle, with his own hand; as 1 Cor. xvi. 21. But here he tells the Galatians, that he wrote this whole Epiſtle to them "with his own hand." (B.) Whereas the Epiſtles to the Corinthians are by the learned ſuppoſed to have been written, the former by the hand of Soſthenes, and the latter by that of Timothy. (Aſſ.) Yet there is a great diſpute among the criticks, whether the words (pelikois grammaſin egrapſa) which we tranſlate "how large a letter I have written," are properly to be referr'd to this whole Epiſtle, or only to that part of it which follows from hence to the end of it; or whether it is at all to be underſtood of the Epiſtle itſelf, or of the Letter or Character in which ſome more remarkable ſentences of it were written by way of diſtinction. The learned D. Heinſius ſeems to conclude, after St. Jerome and others, That this whole Epiſtle was not written by the Apoſtle's own hand; but only ſome of the moſt material paſſages of it (as what here follows, "As many as deſire," &c. ver. 12.) in a larger character than the reſt, or what we call Capital Letters, to make the ſtronger impreſſion upon their memories. Theophylact, who thinks the whole Epiſtle to have been penn'd by St. Paul himſelf, ſuppoſes the pelika grammata to denote not the length or magnitude, but the inaccuracy of the letters only, as if St. Paul had not been well skill'd in writing the Greek Character; to which conjecture Dr. Whitby ſeems alſo to incline, as Grotius does to the former. But Dr. Hammond's judgment is this, That granting, as we have reaſon, this to be the right notion of the ſingle words; yet there is no neceſſity either this ſhould be thus applied to the illneſs of the character, or enlarged to the writing the whole Epiſtle with his own hand. That is not ſo much as intimated in any other place, or in any ancient record, and this one place cannot conclude it: For pelicois notes the ſort or kind of the hand indefinitely, not defining what it was, ſave only that it was ſuch as was known to be his. For ſo, 2 Theſſ. iii. 17. the writing the ſalutation (ſome few words in the cloſe) with his own hand, was, ſaith he, (ſemeion en paſe epiſtole) "the token in every Epiſtle," that by which it was known to be his. And ſo, if here it be ſuppoſed, that the whole Epiſtle were written by an amanuenſis, as far as to this verſe, and then the pen taken into the Apoſtle's own hand, and uſed by him to the end of the Epiſtle, he may well begin thus, (Idete pelicois grammaſin egrapſa) Ye ſee and know with what kind of letters I have written; Ye know the character, that it is "my own hand," under which it is that I teſtify all that is before written in the Epiſtle; particularly that which is in anſwer to the calumny againſt me, as if I preached circumciſion, &c. in other places, which I have aſſured you, and demonſtrated by my perſecutions from the Jews, that I do not: And to this purpoſe I here add again, under "my own hand," a character of your ſeducers, ver. 12, 13. and the profeſſion of my own opinion and practice, ver. 16, 18. and again an evidence of my doctrine and practice from my ſufferings, ver. 17. And thus the whole difficulty is ſufficiently explicated, without imagining any more. Or if (egrapſa) "I have written" be thought to conclude, that he had written that which went before, and ſo the whole Epiſtle; I anſwer, that it is poſſible he might, but not neceſſarily to be concluded by that form of the word; becauſe if we ſtill reſtrain it to theſe laſt verſes, this will have perfect truth in it: For when he ſaith, (Idete) Ye ſee, he muſt needs refer to that point of time wherein his Epiſtle ſhould be received and read by the Galatians; and then 'tis certain that (egrapſa) "I have written" will be as true of the laſt verſes, as of the former part of the Epiſtle: And ſo that difficulty is removed alſo. (H.) See the notes on Rom. xvi. 22. and 1 Cor. xvi. 21.

As many as deſire.] Here our Apoſtle returns to the deſcription which he had before given of the falſe Apoſtles; who, tho' they urged the neceſſity of circumciſion, yet it was not with any ſincerity of intention: It was, 1. "To make a fair ſhew in the fleſh;" that is, to make a fair outward ſhew of religion, an high pretence to holineſs, by obſerving circumciſion, and the other abrogated rites of the ceremonial law: And, 2. This pretended zeal of theirs proceeded from puſillanimity and fear, "leſt they ſhould ſuffer perſecution" from the Jews, for preaching the doctrine of the Goſpel, called here "the Croſs of Chriſt," becauſe it treats of a crucified Chriſt. Now the fury of theſe perſecutors was abated towards thoſe that preached up circumciſion, but enraged abundantly againſt thoſe who preached circumciſion down. Obſerve here, How well the Apoſtle makes good his charge againſt theſe falſe apoſtles, the Judaizing doctors, that they urged the neceſſity of circumciſion inſincerely, and for baſe ends; namely, becauſe they made no conſcience to "keep the law themſelves," but could diſpenſe with circumciſion well enough, if they were among their friends, but pleaded for it when in fear of their perſecuting enemies: Thus they "became all things to all men;" but it was to ſave themſelves. And, laſtly, he aſſures them, that they urged circumciſion upon them, "that they may glory in their fleſh;" that is, might pride themſelves that they were become their converts, by being circumciſed at their perſwaſion; and be able to boaſt of the multitudes of their proſelytes, who received circumciſion at their inſtigation, and carried it as a mark of their inſtruction. Learn hence, 1. That deſigning hypocrites do conſtantly pretend high to religion, but they evermore ſeek themſelves, under a pretence of acting for God and his glory; They that "conſtrain you to be circumciſed, make a fair ſhew in the fleſh" 2. That tho' it is our duty to eſchew perſecution, when we can fairly avoid it, yet we muſt not part with the leaſt jot of truth, or eſpouſe the ſmalleſt error, to avoid the ſharpeſt perſecution; They "conſtrain you to be circumciſed, leſt they ſhould ſuffer perſecution." 3. That men who talk loud of religion, and pretend high to it, who preach it to and preſs it upon others, but do not conſcientiouſly practice it themſelves, it is an evident demonſtration that they are men of corrupt minds, of profligate conſciences, that do not believe themſelves; for he only believes what he ſays, that lives as he doth believe; "Neither they themſelves who are circumciſed, (ſays the Apoſtle) keep the law." 4. That there is nothing which falſe teachers and erroneous ſeducers do ſo much glory of, magnify themſelves by, and pride themſelves in, as in the number of their proſelytes and converts; which they look upon as ſo many trophies of their victory, and ſpeaking-proofs of their unparallel'd abilities; "They conſtrain men to be circumciſed, that they might glory in their fleſh." (B.) And, 5. That when a man has taken ſome falſe ſtep, or entered into any irregular engagement, he is apt to endeavour to engage others in the ſame, that he may hide his fault by their examples, and plead it as merit with thoſe whom he either fears, or deſires to pleaſe. Thus the vanity of having diſciples and followers is a ſource of many evils in the church. (Q.) But here we may note alſo, by the way, That (as the learned Hammond obſerves) there is no neceſſity to underſtand the original words here, ver. 13. as if thoſe Gnoſticks were themſelves either circumciſed, or kept the law; but rather ſo, as that the particle (oude) neither, may affect the whole period: Thus therefore I would chuſe to render it, "For neither they themſelves are circumciſed, nor keep the law;" which appear'd evidently to be the practice of the Gnoſticks? (Maſſey) See the notes on ch. ii. 3. iv. 29. and v. 11. Matth. xxiii. 3, 23. and 1 Cor. i. 23.

That I ſhould glory.] Having ſhewn what it was that the falſe apoſtles gloried in, he next ſhews what it was that he himſelf gloried in, namely, in the Croſs of Chriſt; that is, in his preaching Chriſt crucified, and the neceſſity of faith in him who died as a ſacrifice upon the Croſs. The Croſs of Chriſt is taken three ways in Scripture; materially, metaphorically, and metonymically: The material Croſs of Chriſt, is that which he died upon at Jeruſalem: This the church of Rome glories in greatly; but not the Apoſtle. The metaphorical Croſs of Chriſt, is afflictions, Luke, ix. 23. "Let him take up the Croſs;" that is, ſubmit to any affliction: God oft-times ſanctifies this Croſs, for the crucifying the hearts of his people to the world: But the Croſs of Chriſt is taken metonymically for the Goſpel, the doctrine of the Goſpel, or of him that died upon the Croſs. Now Chriſtianity, or the doctrine of the Goſpel, crucifies us to the world: 1. By diſcovering to us the great vanity and emptineſs of the world, and all the periſhing ſatisfactions of it: 2. By propounding ſuch arguments to crucify the world, as were never heard of from all the philoſophers and wiſe men that ever lived in the world; namely, arguments taken from the glory of God, from the death of Chriſt, from the dignity of the ſoul, &c. Learn hence, That ſuch a Chriſtian as doth experimentally find his heart and affections daily more and more crucified to the world, by the Croſs of Chriſt, has unſpeakable cauſe, and reaſon ſufficient for ſpiritual glorying and rejoycing. Queſt. Wherein conſiſts not our crucifixion to the world? Anſ. It conſiſts not in a vile eſteem of the world, as uſeleſs or hurtful; or in caſting off all care and concern for the things of the world, as ſinful and unneceſſary; nor is every degree of deſire after, love unto, or delight in, the things of the world, inconſiſtent with our being crucified to it; nor doth it conſiſt in, or oblige us to, the withdrawing ourſelves from all ſociety and converſation with the men of the world: But poſitively, crucifixion to the world, conſiſts in a crucified judgment and opinion of the world; in crucifying our love and affections to the world, our hopes and expectations from the world, our care and concern for the world; our delight in, and our endeavours after, the world. Queſtion, How doth a Chriſtian's being crucified to the world, afford him cauſe for unſpeakable rejoicings? Anſwer, Thus; We may, and ought to glory in the bleſſed effect and fruit of Chriſt's death, in re-inſtamping the image of God upon the ſoul, in the certain tokens of the love of God: We may glory in the death of Chriſt's enemy, and our ſoul's enemy; in that wherein God is glorified, and that which is the earneſt of our own glorification. Now crucifixion to the world, by the Croſs of Chriſt, is this, all this; and therefore warrantably to be boaſted of, and gloried in. (B.) See Biſhop Beveridge's, and Mr. Cremer's ſermons, and Dean Stanhope's Comment, on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 20. iii. 3. and v. 24. Matth. v. 29. John x. 15. xiv. 16. and xvii. 16. A new creature.] See the notes on ch. v. 6. 1 Cor. vii. 19. and 2 Cor. v. 19.

Walk according to this rule.] See the notes on ch. iii. 9, 29. and v. 16. Rom. iv. 12. and ix. 6.

Let no man trouble me.] The Apoſtle having thus fully declared the mind of God, in the matter controverted betwixt himſelf and the falſe apoſtles, touching the neceſſity of circumciſion; he now makes uſe of his apoſtolick authority, and charges his adverſaries to give him no farther trouble or diſturbance, either by gainſaying his doctrine, or detracting from his authority; becauſe "he bare in his body the marks of (his ſufferings for) Chriſt Jeſus;" namely, the ſtripes and wounds which he patiently received for the name of Chriſt, and his holy religion, 2 Cor. xi. 23. Learn hence, That whatever hard meaſure we meet with for the ſake of Chriſt, what wounds and marks we receive for profeſſing faith in him, and perſevering in obedience to him, he will own them for his own, and give us leave to look upon them as his own, yea, to call them his own, as our Apoſtle did here; "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jeſus." (B.) See the notes on 2 Cor. iv. 10. and xi. 23, &c.

The grace of our Lord.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 20, 24. and 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

Be with your Spirit.] From this prayer of the Apoſtle, it ſeemeth, the ancient church, in her Liturgy, took that reſpond, mention'd by St. Chryſoſtome (in his Comment upon Matth. x.) Whence alſo, in Our Liturgy, tranſcribed for the moſt part out of the ancient Liturgies of the church, after the Creed, the Miniſter ſaith, The Lord be with you; and the people anſwer, And with thy Spirit. (Aſſ.) Which I take notice of here, the rather, becauſe it is a conceſſion made by an Aſſembly of divines (in their Annotations on this text) who, notwithſtanding this their declar'd ſenſe of the authority of Our Liturgy, cauſed it to be aboliſh'd, and procur'd an unauthorized Directory of their own deviſing to be ſubſtituted in its place.

The End of the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Galatians.

ANNOTATIONS

Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,

EPHESIANS.

BY way of Preface to this Epiſtle, it may be neceſſary to obſerve,

I. That the city of Epheſus was the metropolis of the proconſular Aſia, (or Aſia Minor) ſituated upon the river Layſter, and famous for the temple of Diana, one of the ſtatelieſt ſtructures in the world: But for nothing ſo juſtly celebrated among Chriſtians, as for the Church there planted by St. Paul. This Apoſtle, in his paſſage from Corinth towards Jeruſalem, (ſuppoſed to be about A. D. 51.) made ſome ſhort ſtay at Epheſus; where "he entred into the Synagogue, and reaſoned with the Jews," (who were then numerous there) Acts xviii. 19. And finding ſome of them deſirous to hear him longer, preaching the Goſpel, tho' he could not tarry at that time long enough to make many converts, he left Aquila and Priſcilla with them; promiſing at his departure to "return again to them," ver. 21. To theſe ſoon after came Apollos, ver. 24. by whoſe joint labours a conſiderable progreſs was made in the propagation of the Chriſtian Religion, which St. Paul had begun to preach among them. Accordingly, at his return, "he found certain diſciples there," whom he inſtructed more perfectly, and confirm'd in the Faith, ch. xix. 1, &c. And tho' he met with no ſmall oppoſition both from the unbelieving Jews, and Gentiles alſo (by their inſtigation) he nevertheleſs continued there, "about two years, diſputing daily in the ſchool of one Tyrannus;" ſo that all they who dwelt in Aſia heard the word of the Lord Jeſus; and the truth of his preaching was ratified by the ſanction of ſo many and great miracles, that "the word of God grew and prevail'd mightily," ver 9, &c. Neither did St. Paul depart again from Epheſus, till he had firſt taken care to conſtitute Timothy Biſhop of that ſee, to preſide over the church which the Apoſtle had ſo happily planted there, ch. xx. 1. and 1 Tim. i, 3. And, many years after this, it became the ſeat, or uſual reſidence, of St. John the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt; and was one of the Seven Churches of Aſia, mention'd in the Revelation, ch. ii. being probably the principal ſeat of the Eccleſiaſtical Government ſettled there for that whole province, Acts xx. 17, 28. On which account this Epiſtle is not to be underſtood as addreſs'd only to the Epheſians, properly ſo call'd, but to all the Chriſtians under the juriſdiction of that metropolitan ſee.

II. That there were very early found among them certain who "taught other doctrines," againſt whoſe poiſon Timothy and the other governors of the church in thoſe parts, were ſtrictly charged to keep a careful watch over the flock, 1 Tim. i. 3. the Apoſtle having foretold them, that "after his departure grievous wolves would enter in among them, not ſparing the flock; and that alſo of their ownſelves would men ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away the diſciples after them," Acts xx. 28, &c. Which former caution he now enforceth, in this Epiſtle; which he writes, partly to confirm, and advance towards perfection, thoſe who hitherto ſtood firm in the profeſſion and unity of the doctrine which he had preach'd; partly to arm them againſt ſuch falſe teachers, as, under a ſhew of deep knowledge, endeavour'd to draw them from the purity of the Chriſtian Religion; and partly alſo to improve them in the duties of a holy life, agreeable to their profeſſion. Thus,

III. The ſubject of this whole Epiſtle is, 1. Doctrinal; wherein the Apoſtle diſcourſeth profoundly of the aſtoniſhing myſteries of our redemption and ſalvation, and the incorporating the Jews and Gentiles into the Church, as one body, ch. i, ii, iii. And, 2. Practical; wherein he inciteth them to ſhew forth good works, as the badges of their Chriſtian profeſſion: And theſe, 1. In reſpect of their general calling as Chriſtians, ch. iv, &c. 2. With regard to their reſpective relations; as Huſbands and Wives, ch. v. 22, &c. Fathers and Children, ch. vi. 1, &c. Maſters and Servants, ver. 5, &c. And,

IV. That this Epiſtle was written from Rome, and ſent by Tychicus, as is noted in the Poſtſcript to it, is not diſputed. But as to the preciſe time of it, there is ſome doubt, whether it was written A. D. 58. or about four or five years later; which chronological nicety I leave to the criticks to determine. 'Tis certain however, That it was written ſometime while St. Paul was a priſoner; as is evident from ch. iii. 1. iv. 1. and vi. 20.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle teſtifies his thankfulneſs to God on their account: Treateth of election and adoption by grace, as the fountain of ſalvation: And prays that they may attain a full knowledge of this myſtery.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 PAUL, an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the will of God, to the Saints which are at Epheſus, and to the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus: Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly places in Chriſt: According as he hath choſen us in him, before the foundation of the world, that we ſhould be holy, and without blame before him in love: Having predeſtinated us unto the adoption of children by Jeſus Chriſt to himſelf, according to the good pleaſure of his will, to the praiſe of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved: In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wiſdom and prudence, having made known unto us the myſtery of his will, according to his good pleaſure, which he hath purpoſed in himſelf: That, in the diſpenſation of the fulneſs of times, he might gather together in one all things in Chriſt, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him: In whom alſo we have obtained an inheritance, being predeſtinated according to the purpoſe of him who worketh all things after the counſel of his own will: That we ſhould be to the praiſe of his glory, who firſt truſted in Chriſt. In whom ye alſo truſted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the goſpel of your ſalvation: In whom alſo, after that ye believed, ye were ſealed with that holy ſpirit of promiſe, which is the earneſt of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchaſed poſſeſſion, unto the praiſe of his glory.

Paul, an Apoſtle.] See the notes on Rom. i. 1. 1 Cor. i. 1. and Gal. i. 1.

To the Saints.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 1. and 2 Cor. i. 1.

At Epheſus.] See the Preface to this Epiſtle.

Grace be to you.] This grace is given by the communication of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and the Son, to the Church; which is the reaſon that the Holy Ghoſt is not mention'd in theſe ſalutations. (W.) See the notes on Rom. i. 7. and 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

Bleſſed be the God.] See the notes on John xx. 17. 1 Cor. i. 4. and 2 Cor. i. 3.

Spiritual bleſſings in heavenly places.] Or rather, ſpiritual benediction in the things which belong to heaven, through Chriſt. (H.) The adjective epourania, here uſed without any ſubſtantive expreſs'd, is rendred heavenly places; and our tranſlators have on the margin varied the reading, to heavenly things: But the learned Mr. Johnſon interprets it heavenly inſtitutions; not doubting but every impartial reader will own that word, or ſome other of a like ſignification, to be neceſſary to expreſs the full meaning of this expreſſion: And he who conſiders, that our Saviour did ſo familiarly ſtile his Church the kingdom of heaven, cannot think it ſtrange, that one of his Apoſtles ſhould call the ſacraments and ſervices of this Church, and the whole ſyſtem of its doctrine, worſhip, and government, the heavenly inſtitutions.

Hath choſen us in him.] What is the notion of (exelexato) choſen, in this and all other places, will be noted at large hereafter, on 1 Pet. ii. 6. In the mean time, all that is here to be inquir'd into is, what is meant by (en auto exelexato) God's chuſing us in Chriſt. And that will beſt be diſcerned by comparing it with the phraſe (eulogeſas en Chriſto,) bleſſing us in Chriſt, ver. 3. For that the bleſſing and the electing belong to the ſame matter, appears by (cathos) according as; a term of proportion or ſimilitude, in the front of this verſe; which makes the connexion betwixt them thus, That God hath bleſſed us in Chriſt, according as he hath choſen us in Chriſt; that is, that his actual, preſent, bleſſing them, at that point of time, was correſpondent to what God had decreed "before the foundation of the world." Now, what the bleſſing there ſpoken of is, appears in general by the addition of (pneumatike, and en tois epouraniois) a ſpiritual bleſſing, or bleſſing in things which belong unto heaven; and again by the predeſtination (in order of nature precedent to it) which is ſpecified to be (eis huiotheſian) to adoption; and laſtly, by what is here added, (einai hemas hagious kai amomous,) for us to be, or that we ſhould be, holy, and unblemiſh'd before him in love: All which ſpecify the matter of the election here ſpoken of to be the ſame as of his bleſſing of us, viz. our holy blameleſs converſation, ſuch as becomes ſons of God, a ſpiritual, Chriſtian obedience in all manner of piety and charity; ſuch as Chriſt came to plant in the world, and in which reſpect he is ſaid "to bleſs us, in turning every one from his iniquities," Acts iii. 26. and ſo 'tis here diſtinctly added, ch. ii. 10. that good works are the things to which God hath before prepared (that is, elected) us, "that we ſhould walk in them." This then being the general matter of the election here ſpoken of, (not ſalvation, or bliſs in another world, but) holineſs, or piety here, is yet farther determined, or limited, by (en auto, or en Chriſto) in him, or in Chriſt; ſpecifying Chriſt to be the means of bringing all, particularly the Gentiles, to this holy life, from all eternity predetermin'd by God to do ſo; as in that place of the Acts, God ſent him thus to bleſs us. And this Chriſt hath done, by revealing God's will, both in the precepts which contain this holy and blameleſs life in them, and by his promiſes, which ſo ſtrongly and powerfully invite and oblige, and by his terrors, or threats, which engage us to the performance of his precepts: And ſo again by the miracles, &c. which ſignify him to be ſent by God; but eſpecially by his death and reſurrection: The firſt to teſtify the truth of what he preach'd, and withal to expiate for our ſins, and ſtrike, and ſeal in his blood, a covenant of mercy with all, Gentiles as well as Jews, of pardon or forgiving ſins, upon condition of reformation and amendment, and of giving ſtrength and grace to perform what God now under this covenant requires of us (without which, as we ſhould have had no encouragement to amend, ſo we had been utterly unable to have performed that work of reformation;) and the ſecond to confirm from heaven, that he died an innocent perſon, in the teſtimony of that truth thus owned by his Father, and by enſtating him in that power and dominion at God's right hand, to enſtate on him alſo the power of actual giving that grace to Gentiles as well as Jews, which by his death he purchaſed for all. This then is the plain meaning of God's electing in Chriſt, &c. God's free, undeſerved mercy, in decreeing to beſtow Chriſt upon all, as the means (of all other moſt effectual) to engage and bring men to holineſs and purity of life; that is, by what Chriſt hath done and ſuffered, for Gentiles as well as Jews, to call and bring home ſinners of all ſorts to repentance. And this farther appears, ver. 9, 10. where "the myſtery of his will according to his own good pleaſure" (which is all one with his election here) is ſpecified to be (anakephalaioſaſthai) the gathering all things, that is, Jews and Gentiles, together in Chriſt; that is, making Chriſt the means of calling and bringing in the moſt idolatrous Gentiles, as well as Jews, to receive the faith, and obey the commands of God in Chriſt. And this is the ſubject of a great part of this enſuing Epiſtle. All which, as it makes the vocation of the Gentiles as well as Jews to be the matter wherein God's election here is terminated, (and is very far from denoting any irreſpective decree of beſtowing eternal ſalvation on ſome few, which includes the abſolute rejection or dereliction of all others) ſo it no way infers their faith or repentance to be irreſiſtibly wrought in them by this decree of election, or by the means determined therein; but only that God hath in Chriſt pitch'd on moſt wiſe, moſt powerful, moſt efficacious means, of calling and melting even the Gentiles, the worſt of men, which he likewiſe foreſaw would be effectual on many by the power of his grace, tho' many others, through their own obſtinacy, would contemn, and not make uſe of it. (H.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 29. and xii. 1. and 1 Cor. i. 8.

Having predeſtinated us.] See the notes on ver. 4. Luke xii. 32. John i. 12, 16. iii. 35. and x. 17. Acts iv. 28. Rom. viii. 15, 23, 28. ix. 11. and xi. 6. and 1 Cor. ii. 7.

In whom we have redemption] The word redemption ſignifies a recovering to the true poſſeſſor, that which was fallen into the power of another; by paying a ranſom for it; as is done when ſlaves are freed from bondage. By our voluntary ſubmitting to the enemy we became his ſlaves, ſold under ſin, till Chriſt, by the power and merits of his death, obtain'd remiſſion of our ſins, and conſequently our liberty, and then ſo ingratiated us with the Father, that he took us for his children. (Fell) See the notes on Rom. iii. 24. and ix. 23.

Wiſdom and prudence] Sophia kai phroneſis. The meaning is, perfect and ſound wiſdom. Wiſdom principally reſpects contemplation, and prudence action. Wiſdom is a virtue of the mind, whereby we know celeſtial myſteries; prudence is that whereby we wiſely order the affairs of our life, and regulate our Chriſtian converſation: And by all wiſdom here (as in Col. i. 9.) is underſtood either all kind of wiſdom, or all ſaving wiſdom. (Aſſ.) Some underſtand this of the ſpiritual gifts of wiſdom and prudence: But tho' ſophia be reckon'd among ſpiritual gifts, I do not find that phroneſis is ſo. Moreover, he hath thus "abounded towards us in all wiſdom and prudence (ſays the Apoſtle) having made known unto us the myſtery of his will;" which leads to the other expoſition, that refers this to "the manifold wiſdom of God," ſhew'd in contriving this diſpenſation, ch. iii. 10. and his prudence in executing the counſel of his will by this means; viz. by ſending his ſon to be our Saviour. (W.) See a full demonſtration, as well of the manifold wiſdom, as of the rich grace and favour, of God to us, in this diſpenſation, againſt the objections of the Socinians and Deiſts, in Dr. Whitby's Annotations at large upon this text. See alſo the notes on ver. 4. John xv. 15. Rom. xvi. 25. and 1 Cor. ii. 8.

Purpoſed in himſelf.] Note here, That the words are not en heauto, but en auto; and therefore ſhould not have been rendred in himſelf, but in him; that is in Chriſt, as the context plainly ſhews. (W.)

In the diſpenſation.] The Greek word oikonomia ſignifies ſuch a diſpenſation as houſe-keepers uſe, in the governing their houſe and family, ordering and diſpoſing their proviſions, and every thing elſe, in a fit time, and a convenient manner. Thus hath God ordain'd and ſettled in his houſe (the Church) even from the beginning of the world, certain times in which, the manner according to which, and the perſons by whom all things are to be perform'd. (Aſſ.) And the other word anakephalaioſaſthai, to gather together, may be conſider'd either, 1. As it is taken properly, ſignifying to make the foot of an account. We call it the foot, becauſe we write it below, at the foot: But they of old wrote theirs above, at the top, or over the head, and ſo call'd it (kephalaion) the ſum in the top. 2 As it is extended, to ſignify the ſhort recapitulation of a long chapter, the compendium of a book, or of ſome diſcourſe; that is, the ſum of it. And, 3. As it is derived, it comes from kephalaion, and that from kephale, ſignifying a head; and ſo is beſt expreſs'd by the word recapitulate, to reduce all under a head. Cameron approves of the firſt interpretation here, but diſlikes the ſecond, viz. that it ſhould be a metaphor taken from oratory; becauſe he thinks it not convenient, that the Apoſtle ſhould borrow ſpeeches from Greek orators and ſophiſters to expreſs ſo great a matter; and beſides, he thinks the ſimilitude not grave enough for the Apoſtle, nor familiar and plain enough for the people: Yet others follow this ſignification, and interpret the place thus, All things concerning mankind, which from the beginning of the world were ſet forth by ſhadows and figures, are in Chriſt ſummarily recapitulated and fulfill'd. Biſhop Andrews ſays, All the three interpretations of it may be taken here; Chriſt being, 1. The ſum of our account. 2. The ſhutting up of our diſcourſe. And, 3. The head of the body myſtical, whereto this gathering (here mention'd) is. And Zanchius, tho' he admits of the other, yet prefers the laſt interpretation; viz. To reduce and unite all under one head. (Leigh) See the notes on ver. 4. and Gal. iv. 4, 30.

Being predeſtinated.] See the notes on ver. 4. and Rom. viii. 28.

After the counſel of his own will.] This is not to be underſtood properly: For counſel is a thing that, in ſtrict propriety of ſpeech, cannot be attributed unto God; for "who hath been his counſellor?" Rom. xi. 34. Counſel importeth always ſome debate with one's ſelf or others; ſome deliberation what is beſt to do, or not to do, and how to do it; and conſequently muſt ſuppoſe ſome impotency or defect, either in reſpect of knowledge, or action, or both. He that knoweth perfectly, at the firſt thought of a thing, what is fit to be done, and is aſſur'd that nothing can hinder him from doing the ſame, needeth not either to aſk or take counſel about it: God therefore, whoſe both wiſdom and power is infinite, hath not any need or uſe of counſel. The truth is, the name of counſel is too low to beſtow upon Almighty God's eternal purpoſes, if we knew a better: But the Scriptures, fitted to our capacity, ſpeak of the things of God in ſuch language, and under ſuch notions, as beſt agree with our weak conceptions, but far below the dignity and majeſty of the things themſelves. (Sanderſ.) See the notes on Rom. xi. 34. and 1 Cor. ii. 16.

Sealed with that holy ſpirit.] This text is ſuppoſed to refer to St. Paul's action at Epheſus; where he confirmed thoſe diſciples who were before inſtructed and baptized, Acts xix. 6. (Stanh. and Wheatly) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 49. John vi. 27. and 2 Cor. i. 22.

The earneſt of our inheritance.] The word arrhabon is not originally Greek, but Syriac; Gnerabon, from gnarab, to make a bargain, as it ſignifies, Gen. xxxviii. 17. a pledge, or firſt part of a payment, which is an aſſurance, or ſecurity, that the reſt of the whole price ſhall not fail to follow. This is it which in Engliſh is peculiarly called the earneſt; that which confirms and aſſures the bargain. And ſo the ſpirit and gifts thereof, after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, poured out, not only upon Jews, but Gentiles, is the pledge or earneſt paid by God; the firſt part of the price which he hath agreed to give, for the bringing in, and redeeming the Gentiles out of the hands of Satan and ſin, to be the ſervants of the living God: Thoſe many other graces and rich treaſures, conſequent to that gift, pardon of ſin, increaſe of grace, and at laſt ſalvation it ſelf, being the reſidue of the price, and here called (cleronomia hemon) our portion, or that which we receive in the bargain, in this great purchaſe of God's, his work of redeeming of ſouls. (H.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 16. and 1 Cor. i. 22.

Redemption of the purchaſed poſſeſſion.] What peripoieſis, here rendred the purchaſed poſſeſſion, properly ſignifies, will be ſeen more particularly in the notes on Heb. x. 39. and 1 Pet. ii. 9. Here it muſt be taken, not for the action of acquiring or poſſeſſing, but the perſons that are ſo acquired; all one with a people for a poſſeſſion, or (which is all one) "a peculiar people," Tit. ii. 14. that is, a Church of pure Chriſtian livers, which are here ſaid to be "to the praiſe of his glory;" as in the place of St. Peter, "That they may ſhew forth the power, or virtues, of him that hath called them out of darkneſs into his marvellous light." As for (apolytroſis) ranſoming or redeeming, that is uſed ſometimes for temporal deliverance; redeeming, or reſcuing, the body out of perſecutions and calamities, Rom. viii. 23. But here for ſpiritual deliverance from the power of reigning ſin, as Tit. ii. 14. "redeeming from all iniquity," reſcuing from all wicked life. And ſo, apolytroſis peripoieſeos is no more than that which is mentioned of Chriſt, Luke i. 74. delivering men from their ſpiritual enemies, ranſoming them from theſe ſervile habits of ſin wherein they lived, "that they may ſerve him in holineſs," &c. Hereby may alſo appear what is meant by the (hemera apolytroſeos) "day of redemption," ch. iv. 30. that redemption which had here been mentioned, the redeeming them out of their courſe of ſin, to the ſervice of God (every one that is redeemed being his goods, poſſeſſion, ſervant, that bought him) and ſo the ſealing them by the ſpirit to the day of redemption there, is perfectly agreeable to the ſealing them here, by the ſame ſpirit, ver. 13. to this redemption of God's peculiar people, God's ſending his ſpirit and the gifts thereof among the Gentiles (which was done at the firſt preaching the Goſpel to them) being the marking them out as God's purchaſe, ſuch as are to be ſervants of his, and being ſo, ſhall be accompliſh'd and crown'd by him. (H.) See the notes on ver. 7. and Luke xxi. 28.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. Whereſore I alſo, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jeſus, and love unto all the ſaints, ceaſe not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Father of glory, may give unto you the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: The eyes of your underſtanding being enlightned; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the ſaints, and what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power; which he wrought in Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead, and ſet him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but alſo in that which is to come: And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulneſs of him that filleth all in all.

After I heard of your faith.] From this text ſome infer, that St. Paul could not write this to the Church of Epheſus, where he had been about three years, and had converted many to the faith throughout moſt part of Aſia, and therefore could not need to hear of their faith. To this it is anſwer'd, 1. By Dr. Hammond, That the Greek word akouein (as well as the Hebrew alſo) ſignifies not only to hear, but to know and underſtand; and therefore ſhould be rendred here, knowing, or having known your faith. And indeed the word bears this ſenſe undoubtedly, 1 Cor. xiv. 2. as well as in Gen. xi. 7. and xlii. 23. and elſewhere. But, 2. I anſwer, That this Epiſtle being writ not only to the metropolis of Epheſus, but "to the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus" in general, and more eſpecially to thoſe of the Leſſer Aſia, among whom many might have been converted by Apollos, and others; St. Paul might have only heard of that, he preaching only at Epheſus. And 3. From his Epiſtles to Timothy it appears, that a dangerous, and almoſt epidemical apoſtacy from the purity of the chriſtian faith happen'd among the Jewiſh converts in Aſia, which verified St. Paul's prediction concerning them, Acts xx. 29, 30. and made it proper for him, after ſeveral years abſence, to give thanks to God for the ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith, which he had heard of in the reſt. (W.)

Give thanks for you.] Obſerve here, 1. How enlarged St. Paul's heart was in thankfulneſs to God for the ſalvation of others, as well as unwearied in his endeavours in order to their ſalvation. This will be one great exerciſe of our grace in heaven; namely, thankfulneſs to God for the ſalvation of others, as well as our own: And verily, it ought to be a mighty argument, to move the heart of any one to work out his own ſalvation, when he ſees another, be it his Miniſter, his parent, his maſter, or his neighbour, ſo ſollicitous for it, and taking ſuch care of it. 2. That the duties of prayer and praiſe, of ſupplication and thankſgiving, ought to accompany one another. We are never to pray for freſh mercies, either for ourſelves or others, without giving thanks to God for former Mercies. Beſides, there is no ſuch effectual way of begging, as thankſgiving: He that is ſpiritually thankful for what he has received, engages God to confer upon him the mercies which he wanteth. Add to this, that holy thankfulneſs is an evidence of true grace in us: Need and want will make us beggars, but grace only, thankſgivers. (B.) See the notes on ver. 3. and Rom. i. 8. &c.

The God of our Lord.] See the notes on John xx. 17.

In the knowledge of him.] En epignoſei autou; To the acknowledgment of him. [H.] See the notes on 1 Cor. ii. 7. and xii. 8.

The eyes of your underſtanding.] Our Apoſtle proceeds in this verſe, and to the end of the chapter, in a very affectionate and fervent prayer, on the behalf of the Epheſians; namely, that the bleſſed Spirit of God, the author of all divine illumination, would farther open the eyes of their underſtanding, formerly ſhut up in heatheniſh blindneſs and darkneſs, that ſo they might know, 1. "What is the hope of his calling;" that is, what high and glorious hopes he had called them unto: For hope here is taken for the object of hope, or the great and good things hoped for; and it is ſaid to be the hope of their calling, becauſe at their converſion from heatheniſm to chriſtianity, they were entitled to, and called to the expectation of theſe great and good things, which were the object of hope. Where note, The Epheſians deplorable ſtate before converſion; they were without hope: And the happy exchange of their condition, by embracing chriſtianity; they were begotten to a lively hope of glorious things, which before they were wholly ignorant of, and ſtrangers to. As a ſinner's miſery lies not in what he feels, but what he fears; ſo a chriſtian's happineſs conſiſts not in what he has in hand, but in what he has in hope; "That ye may know what is the hope of his calling." 2. "What is the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the ſaints;" that is, ſay ſome, what an exceeding glorious thing it is to be a chriſtian! or, what an exceeding glory redounds to God, by his people, which are his inheritance, ſay others! but moſt underſtand the words as a deſcription of heaven, which is here called an inheritance, a rich inheritance, a glorious inheritance, in or among the ſaints; that is, the ſaints in heaven, who hold that in poſſeſſion, which the ſaints on earth have in hope and expectation. Learn hence, That heaven is the ſaints inheritance. An inheritance is an eſtate that belongs to children. 'Tis an undeſerved poſſeſſion, and 'tis a ſure and certain poſſeſſion. Here note, That Almighty God is ſaid in ſcripture to make heaven as ſure to his ſaints, by all ſorts of ways, as a man can make an inheritance ſure to his child. 'Tis theirs by promiſe; 'tis theirs by purchaſe; 'tis theirs by gift; 'tis theirs by bequeſt; it is given by will to them, St. Luke xxii. 29. Can any thing be ſurer, or more ways made ſecure to any people, than this inheritance of heaven is to the holy ſervants of God? But farther, the Apoſtle calls it "the riches of the glory of his inheritance;" that is, a very rich and exceeding glorious inheritance; ſuch abundant riches, and tranſcendent glory are found in it, as overwhelm the mind of man who enters upon the contemplation of it. And, 3. "What is the exceeding greatneſs of his power" &c. That is, the greatneſs of that divine power, which God had exerted, firſt, in their converſion; next, in carrying on that work ſtep by ſtep, in ſpite of all oppoſition; then in giving them the extraordinary gifts of his Spirit, as miracles, tongues, and prophecy; alſo the ſanctifying graces of the Spirit, as knowledge, faith, hope, love, joy, and patience, to enable them to go on in ſuffering for Chriſt to the uttermoſt; and laſtly, that power which God will farther exert towards them as believers, in raiſing up their dead bodies, to enter upon that glorious inheritance which God by promiſe inſured to them; and which power (he aſſures them) would bear ſome likeneſs to, and correſpondence with, that omnipotent power which God put forth, in raiſing Chriſt from the dead, and advancing him to the heavenly glory, where he is Lord of all. (B.) See the notes on Acts ii. 24. and xxvi. 18.

All principality and power.] The Angels are call'd by ſuch names, Rom. viii. 38. Eph. vi. 12 Col. i. 16. and 1 Pet. iii 22. But what orders, offices, or dignities, are diſtinctly ſignified by them, 'tis neither neceſſary, nor perhaps ſafe, to determine. The Apoſtle ſeems here to ſpeak directly againſt thoſe firſt hereticks (whom divers of the ancienteſt fathers of the church confuted) who brought in a great number of portentous names, and made our Saviour as one of them. Perhaps they continued ſome notions from their former curious arts, Acts xix. 19. (Fell) See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 24, 25.

Every name that is named.] That is, Above every thing, whatſoever it be; or above all perſons, be they of ever ſuch power or excellency. Honourable and famous men are called men of name; and the name of the Lord is often taken in ſcripture for the Lord himſelf. The Apoſtle's meaning is, That Chriſt, even as man, is exalted not only above all ſtates and potentates upon earth, but alſo all Angels and Archangels in heaven. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts i. 15.

Head over all things] Chriſt is ſaid to be head of the church in three reſpects eſpecially; 1. In that he is above the church, and ruleth it, as the head guideth the body. 2. Becauſe he conveyeth life into it, as the head doth to the members. And. 3. Becauſe he provideth for it, as the head doth for the members, and participates in the ſame nature with it, as the head doth with the members. (Aſſ.)

Which is his body] See the notes on 1 Cor. xii. 12.

Filleth all in all.] See the notes on John i. 16. and 1 Cor. xv. 27

CHAP. II.

The Apoſtle, comparing what we were by nature, with what we were by grace, declares that we are made for good works; and that, being brought near by Chriſt, we ſhould not live as ſtrangers and foreigners in times paſt, but as citizens with the ſaints, and the family of God.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 ,7, 8, 9, 10. AND you hath he quickned, who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, wherein in time paſt ye walked according to the courſe of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the ſpirit that now worketh in the children of diſobedience. Among whom alſo we all had our converſation in times paſt, in the luſts of our fleſh, fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in ſins, hath quickned us together with Chriſt (by grace ye are ſaved) and hath raiſed us up together, and made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus: That in the ages to come he might ſhew the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindneſs towards us, through Chriſt Jeſus. For by grace are ye ſaved, through faith: And that not of yourſelves; it is the gift of God: Not of works leſt any man ſhould boaſt: For we are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we ſhould walk in them.

You hath he quickned.] Obſerve here, 1. The deplorable condition which the Epheſians were in by nature, and all perſons with them, before their converſion from ſin to God. It is a ſpiritual death; the natural and unregenerate man is a dead man, ſpiritually dead in ſin: Our Apoſtle doth not ſay they were in a dying, but a dead condition; not half dead, but altogether dead. But how ſo? not dead as to natural actions, they can eat and drink; not as to rational actions, they can reaſon and diſcourſe; not as to civil actions, they can buy and ſell, bargain and trade: Nor is the natural man dead to moral actions; he can pray, read, and hear the word, meditate upon it, and diſcourſe of it; if he pleaſe, he can hearken to the voice of God's judgments, conſider and call his own ways to remembrance: But as to ſpiritual acts, to be ſpiritually performed, here he is dead, 'till quickned by a vital act of the holy Spirit, whoſe office it is to enlighten blind eyes, and whoſe delight it is to quicken and enliven dead ſouls. But what doth this ſtate of ſpiritual death imply? Anſ. It doth ſuppoſe and imply a ſtate of ſeparation from God, inſenſibility of that diſmal ſtate, an impotency and inability to recover ourſelves out of that condition, and our loathſomneſs and offenſiveneſs to almighty God, whilſt we continue in it. In ſhort, every unregenerate man, is a dead man, in a double ſenſe: He is, 1. Legally dead, being under the condemnatory ſentence of the law; as we call a man under a legal ſentence of death, a dead man. 2. Spiritually dead, as being deſtitute of a principle of ſpiritual life, a quickning principle to enable the ſoul to perform ſpiritual operations. Thus before regeneration are we dead, in oppoſition to juſtification; and dead, in oppoſition to ſanctification alſo; amd the fatal inſtrument by which our ſouls die, is here diſcovered, dead in or by treſpaſſes and ſins. This is the ſword that kills ſouls, and cuts them off from God; you hath he quickned, being dead in treſpaſſes and ſins. Obſerve, 2. The choice and ſingular privilege and favour vouchſafed to the Epheſians, in and under the power of ſpiritual death: They were quickned; that is, made ſpiritually alive, by the quickning and life-giving power of the Spirit of God. A regenerate man is a living man; he lives a life of juſtification, which conſiſts in pardon of ſin: A condemned man's pardon is his life. And he lives a life of ſanctification; having received from the Holy Spirit a vital principle of Grace in all the powers and faculties of the ſoul: Juſtification reconciles God to us, ſanctification reconciles us to God; juſtification takes away the legal enmity, ſanctification the natural enmity, between God and us. Here note, That the perſon who is ſpiritually quickned, is univerſally quickned; there is not a faculty in the ſoul but is ſpiritually dead, and therefore not a faculty but muſt be ſpiritually quickned: As there is an univerſal pollution in every faculty, ſo muſt there be an univerſal renovation; for no ſpiritual duty can be performed without it, no ſpiritual privilege can be enjoyed without it; and we can never be ſaved hereafter, if not ſpiritually quickned here: But if quickned aright, we live a divine life, the life (in ſome meaſure) which God himſelf lives; and this muſt needs be an excellent life and a pleaſant life here on earth, and ſhall be an everlaſting life with Chriſt in heaven: "Whoſoever liveth and believeth in me, ſhall never die." Obſerve, 3. The perſon quickning, deſcribed; "you hath he quickned;" that is, God the father, who chap. i. 17. is ſaid to have given them the "ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge of him:" Man, in his natural ſtate conſider'd, is unable of himſelf to quicken himſelf; he doth not ſo much as deſire the quickning grace of God, 'till God gives the grace of deſire. Alaſs! the underſtanding is naturally ſo blind, the heart ſo hard, and the will ſo ſtout and ſtubborn, that none but a divine power can enlighten the one, and efficaciouſly incline the other: 'Tis a change of ſtone into fleſh, of a dead ſinner into a living Saint. A change from nature to grace requires much more of divine power, than a change from grace to glory. To ſee a creature naturally filthy, now to delight in purity; to ſee a ſinner that by nature drinks in iniquity like water, now thirſting after righteouſneſs; to ſee a man that loathed the holy law, and holy ways of God, now longing to walk in them, and to come as to an exact conformity to God in them; theſe acts are above nature, contrary to nature, and conſequently the God of Grace is the author of them; "you hath he quickned." See the notes on Rom. vi. 2, 11. and Dr. J. Preſton's ſermons on this text.

In time paſt ye walked.] The Apoſtle having ſhew'd them their former ſtate without Chriſt, that they were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, ver. 1. here he proceeds to prove that they were ſo dead, becauſe they walked in ſin: And that they walked in ſin he proves, becauſe they had among them ſome falſe guides, which he reckons up, viz. 1. The world, "ye walked according to the courſe of this world." 2. The Devil; "according to the prince of the power of the air." 3. The luſts of the fleſh; "among whom alſo we all had our converſation, in times paſt, in the luſts of our fleſh" &c. (Preſt.) Where we may obſerve, 1. That by "walking according to the courſe of this world," is meant, their living after the common courſe and faſhion of worldlings, who think of no other world than the preſent. (Aſſ.) 2. For that phraſe of "the prince of the power of the air," we are to underſtand, That it was the opinion both of Jews and Heathens, that the air was full of ſpirits, called Dæmons; and that there was a prince over them, who was call'd the governor of the world, that is, of the darkneſs of it, ch. vi. 12. which evil ſpirit is here ſaid (energein) inwardly to "work in the children of diſobedience;" and elſewhere, to lead, or "take them captive at his will," 2 Tim. ii. 26. and their converſion is ſtiled a recovery of them "from the power of Satan," Acts xxvi. 18. And hence we may rationally conclude, that the good ſpirit doth alſo inwardly work in pious perſons, enabling them both to will and to do; it being unreaſonable to conceive, that the evil ſpirit ſhould have more power over thoſe wicked men in whom he dwells, than the good ſpirit hath in thoſe pious perſons, in whoſe hearts he is ſaid to dwell. (W.) And, 3. That, as to "the luſts of the fleſh," the Apoſtle is ſuppoſed to ſet forth the condition of the Jews by nature, as he had before done that of the Gentiles; declaring, that even they had their converſation among the number of diſobedient perſons, and were no leſs obſtinately rebellious againſt God, than the diſobedient Gentiles; following the motions of their corrupt luſts and vile affections: Nay, he affirms roundly, concerning himſelf, and all the Jews without exception, that, as to their way and courſe whilſt unregenerate, they did whatſoever their corrupt minds willed, liked, and inclined to; and, as to their ſtate, "were by nature the children of wrath, even as others;" that is, even as much as the deſpiſed Gentiles were. (B) See the notes on John iii. 6. xii. 31. and xvii. 12. Rom. v. 12, 14. and vii. 7. and 1 Cor. ii. 12. and vi. 11.

Rich in mercy.] See the notes on Rom. ii. 4.

By grace are ye ſaved.] See the notes on ver. 8.

And hath raiſed us.] The Apoſtle here inſtances in two branches of that ſalvation, which he had in the foregoing verſe affirmed to be of grace; namely, that of our reſurrection and glorification; both which are yet to come, and yet they are ſpoken of as already paſt: When the Father raiſed and glorified Chriſt, all believers were raiſed and glorified in him; for in his reſurrection and glorification he did ſuſtain the quality of a publick perſon, repreſenting his whole Church, as their head and husband; and accordingly believers are and may be ſaid to be raiſed already, and glorified already, not in their own perſons, but in Chriſt their head: The Apoſtle ſays, God has raiſed us up, and has made us ſit together; not, he ſhall raiſe us, and will make us ſit; to denote the dependency which our reſurrection and glorification has upon Chriſt's, as the effects depend upon the cauſe, and alſo the undoubted certainty that they ſhall come to paſs; Chriſt's reſurrection and glorification being a pledge of ours. Learn hence, 1. That Chriſt roſe from the dead, and aſcended up into heaven, not as a private perſon, but as the common head and parent, root and repreſentative of his Church and people; ſo that what he has done, they may be ſaid to have done; they roſe in him, and are ſet down in heaven in him; and bleſſed be God for the well-grounded hopes, that as we now ſit together in Chriſt, ſo e'er long, we ſhall for ever ſit together with Chriſt. 2. That Jeſus Chriſt is the cauſe of our reſurrection and glorification; he is the efficient cauſe, the meritorious cauſe, and exemplary cauſe of our reſurrection and glorification. 3. From the phraſe here uſed of ſitting, and of ſitting together in Chriſt, that believers ſhall certainly partake of the ſame kingly ſtate and dignity, of the ſame honour and glory, of the ſame delight and pleaſure, of the ſame reſt and tranquility, ſtate and dignity, of the ſame ſafety and ſecurity with Chriſt in heaven; "hath made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus." (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 3. Rom. vi. 5. and 1 Cor. xv. 20.

He might ſhew.] Theſe words are expreſſive of the final cauſe or ſpecial end of that ſalvation which God propounded in his gracious workings upon the hearts of theſe Epheſians; namely, that in all preſent and ſucceeding ages, to the end of the world, he might give a convincing proof and example of "the exceeding riches of his grace," for the encouragement of the greateſt ſinners to hope for mercy in and through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Learn hence, That the inſtances and examples of God's mercy, grace and goodneſs, love and kindneſs towards loſt ſinners, in one age, are and ought to be an encouragement to future generations to hope in the ſame mercy, to draw nigh to the ſame fountain of rich grace, for pardon of ſin, and ſalvation by Chriſt. (B.) The original word (endeixetai) here uſed, is of greater force than our tranſlation expreſſeth; ſignifying, "that he might ſhew" it forth by demonſtrative evidence, as it were by a ſpecimen or example, that ſo the world might ſee, admire, and applaud the bounty of his grace. (Leigh) See the notes on Rom. ii. 4.

By grace are ye ſaved, through faith.] Chriſt is the meritorious, grace the efficient, and faith the inſtrumental, cauſe of our juſtification and ſalvation. Grace and faith ſtand one with another; to which two theſe are contrary, To be ſaved by ourſelves, or our works. And, becauſe it might be objected, that faith is our work, and conſequently, that if we are juſtified by faith, we are juſtified by works, the Apoſtle immediately adds, That tho' this faith be in us, yet it is "not of ourſelves;" that is, not from the power of nature, but meerly "the gift of God." (Aſſ.) For, 1. We could never have comprehended the Goſpel, the means of our ſalvation, nor walked according to it, had not our Lord Chriſt firſt revealed it. 2. Nor did we contribute any thing toward his coming; nor did our former life and holineſs deſerve that he ſhould be ſent to us. Neither, 3. When ſent to us, that God ſhould give us grace to receive and believe on him. So that, 4. The cauſes of our ſalvation are grace on God's part, and faith on ours; yet faith alſo is his gift. (Fell) See the notes on Acts xv. 11. Rom. iv. 2, 16, &c. v. 2. x. 14, &c. and xi. 6. and Gal. iii. 26.

We are his workmanſhip.] Our Apoſtle having, in the foregoing verſes, aſſerted the whole of our ſalvation to be of grace, and not of works; leſt by magnifying of grace he ſhould ſeem wholly to ſet aſide good works, and the neceſſity of a holy life, he declares in this verſe, that Chriſtians are ordained to them, created and prepared for them; and conſequently they are effects flowing from grace, tho' not cauſes producing grace; "We are his workmanſhip:" 1. In our natural capacity, as men. 2. In our civil capacity; as ſuch or ſuch men, high or low, rich or poor. 3. In our ſpiritual capacity, as Saints; this is intended here: Believers are God's workmanſhip, as ſuch, by ſupernatural renovation and ſpiritual regeneration; they are not only once made, as other perſons, but they are new made, as Saints; not by receiving new faculties, but new qualities; for grace is not a ſubſtantial, but a qualitive change. Lord, as we are all thy workmanſhip by natural creation, let us be ſo by gracious renovation likewiſe! "Created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works." Obſerve here, 1. The manner of this workmanſhip, created: This denotes two things: 1. That in their new making, they were intended to good works: This was God's mind and meaning, in fore-ordaining that they "ſhould walk in them." 2. That in their new making they were fitted and prepared for good works, therefore did they receive a new nature from God, new principles, new affections, new diſpoſitions and inclinations, on purpoſe to fit them for an holy life, fruitful in good works. Here note, That as good works are antecedently neceſſary to ſalvation, ſo renewing grace is abſolutely neceſſary to good works; therefore before there can be a good work, there muſt be a good workman, and that good workman muſt be God's workmanſhip, created a-new through the power of God. Obſerve 2. The meritorious cauſe of this ſpiritual workmanſhip; and that is Chriſt Jeſus: "We are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus;" that is, through the intervening mediation of Chriſt Jeſus. The life which we lead in this new-created ſtate, namely, a life of holineſs, is purchaſed by his death, produced by his ſpirit; all ſpiritual life comes from God, through Chriſt, as a Mediator; he is a quickening head and life-giving ſpirit; 1 John iv. 9. "God ſent his Son, that we might live by him;" Chriſt is firſt our ranſom, and then the fountain of life unto our ſouls; "created in Chriſt Jeſus." Obſerve, 3. The final cauſe of this divine workmanſhip, and that is "to good works;" all thoſe who are new creatures are created unto good works, ſo that a holy life is the neceſſary fruit of their new creation. (B.) See the notes on John iii. 20. and iv. 2. and 1 Cor. i. 30.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Wherefore remember that ye being in time paſſed Gentiles in the fleſh, who are called uncircumciſion by that which is called the circumciſion in the fleſh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Chriſt, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe, having no hope, and without God in the world: But now in Chriſt Jeſus, ye who ſometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Chriſt. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having aboliſhed in his fleſh the enmity, even the law of commandments, contained in ordinances, for to make in himſelf, of twain, one new man, ſo making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the croſs, having ſlain the enmity thereby: And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have an acceſs by one ſpirit unto the Father.

Wherefore remember.] Here the Apoſtle calls upon them to remember their former condition before converſion, and their obligations to God, for bringing them out of that miſerable and deplorable ſtate. Believers remembring the ſins they were guilty of, and the miſery they were expoſed to in their unregenerate ſtate, may many ways be of ſingular advantage to them, and be ſpiritually improv'd by them; thus, 1. To excite us to magnify the greatneſs of God's love, and to admire the freeneſs and riches of his grace. 2. To inflame our love to Jeſus Chriſt; as Mary loved much, when ſhe remembred that much was forgiven her. 3. To increaſe our godly ſorrow for ſin; according to that of Ezek. xxxvi. 31. "Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall loath yourſelves in your own ſight for your iniquities, and for your abominations." 4. To quicken us up to greater zeal and induſtry for God: As it was the remembrance of what he was before his converſion that fired St. Paul with holy zeal, ſo that he labour'd more abundantly than all the other Apoſtles. And, 5. To keep up our hearts in hopes of, prayers for, and endeavours after, the converſion of others, tho' very bad at preſent; for what they are, we once were, and what we now are, they may alſo be. (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 11.

Without Chriſt.] That is, without the knowledge of Chriſt; without any relation to him, or intereſt in him; without union and communion with him; without any communications of life and light, of grace and holineſs, of joy and comfort, of pardon and protection, receiv'd from him. They did not diſcern any excellency, nor taſte any ſweetneſs, in Chriſt; and conſequently had no love to him, no longings after him, no delight or ſatisfaction in him. (B.)

Being aliens from the commen-wealth of Iſrael.] That is, No members of Chriſt's Church, either viſible or inviſible: They did not ſo much as profeſs to be a people that ſtood in any relation to God: They were unchurched Gentiles; for only "in Jury was God known, and his name great in Iſrael," Pſa. lxxvi. 1. (Idem.) See the notes on Rom. ix. 4, 8.

Strangers from the covenant of promiſe.] See the notes on Gal. iii. 14.

Having no hope.] That is, They had not the grace of hope, nor the means of hope: They were without hopes of redemption, without hopes of pardon and reconciliation; and conſequently without any well-grounded hope of eternal life and ſalvation. Such as are without Chriſt, muſt be without hope: Such as are without faith, muſt needs be without Chriſt; and ſuch as are without the promiſe muſt neceſſarily be without faith; for the promiſe is the ground of faith, and faith is the ground of hope. (B.)

Without God in the world.] That is, Without the knowledge of the true God; without worſhipping of him as God; without any affiance or truſt in him; without performing any obedience to him: Not that the Epheſians, and other Heathens, lived without all ſenſe of a Deity (for they worſhipped falſe gods abundantly;) but they lived without any ſenſe, or ſenſible apprehenſion, of the majeſty and holineſs of the true God; which is to live "without God in the world." Thus the Apoſtle calls all the Gentiles, not only the barbarous and ſavage, but the beſt poliſh'd and civiliz'd nations, (Atheoi) Atheiſts, becauſe they wanted the right knowledge of God, by and through a Mediator; there is no knowing God acceptably, except we know him in Chriſt, and approach unto him by Chriſt. (Idem.) See the notes on Rom. i. 25. and Gal. iv. 8.

But now, in Chriſt Jeſus.] The Apoſtle having ſet before the Epheſians the black and dark part of their lives, before their converſion to Chriſtianity, in the foregoing verſe; comes here in this, to acquaint them with the bleſſed change which was made in their ſtate, and by whom. Now, ſays he, in, or by, Chriſt Jeſus, "ye who ſometimes were far off," namely, from Chriſt, his Church, his covenant, from ſaving hope, and from God himſelf, are made as nigh as the Jews, and have as much right to expect the aforeſaid benefits as they; the blood of Chriſt having purchaſed them for you, and ſeal'd them to you: Where note, 1. That perſons who are moſt remote, and at the fartheſt diſtance from God, are ſometimes unexpectedly brought home unto him; "Ye who were far off, are made nigh." 2. That it is owing to the blood of Chriſt, to his death and ſufferings, that any ſoul is brought into a ſtate of nearneſs unto God, and finds acceptance with him; "Ye are made nigh by the blood of Chriſt." (B.) Thoſe Jews who had no ceremonial defilement to be purged away, and who had made an attonement for their known ſins, were admitted to come near to God, as being holy: They had a freedom of acceſs to God in his tabernacle and temple; whence they are ſtiled the people that "draw nigh unto God," Lev. x. 3. and God is ſaid to be a God near to them, both by relation, as having own'd them as his children and family, and entred into covenant to be their God; and alſo by his more eſpecial preſence with them: For, the Schechinah, or glorious preſence, dwelt among them in the holy place. Now, all theſe privileges (ſaith the Apoſtle) are equally conferr'd upon the Gentiles; who are now "made nigh to God," ver. 13. "have acceſs to him," ver. 18. are "fellow-citizens with the Saints, and of the houſhold of God," ver. 19. the Schechinah dwells in them, as in a temple, and they are made "an habitation of God through the ſpirit," ver. 21, 22. (W.) See the notes on John x. 16. Acts ii. 39. and Gal. iii. 29.

He is our peace.] That is, 1. He is the mediator of our peace, the great peace-maker betwixt God and man. 2. "He is our peace;" that is, The purchaſer of our peace. 3. "He is our peace;" that is, The eſtabliſher of our peace. All which is to be underſtood, not only of peace betwixt God and man, but alſo betwixt man and man; "who hath made both one;" that is, both Jews and Gentiles one church. Here note, That there was a very great and deep-rooted enmity betwixt Jews and Gentiles, until Chriſt purchaſed their peace and reconciliation. The Jews derided, ſcorn'd, and hated the Gentiles, as unclean, compared them to dogs and ſwine: The Gentiles reproached the Jews for circumciſing their fleſh, eſteem'd them, of all nations, the worſt, and would hold their noſe at the Jews when they met them, and cry, O fœtentes Judæi! O ye ſtinking Jews! and turn away their eyes from them. Learn from hence then, That the uniting of both Jew and Gentile into one church, was one bleſſed effect and ſweet fruit of the purchaſe of Chriſt's blood; Chriſt's offering of himſelf was intended as a ſacrifice for enmities between man and man, as well as for enmities between God and man: "He is our peace; who hath made both one." Obſerve next, what Chriſt hath done in order to his making peace between Jew and Gentile, 1. He has aboliſhed the ceremonial law, called here a partition-wall, between the Jews and the Gentiles, in alluſion, no doubt, to that wall of Solomon's temple, which ſeparated the court of the Jews from that of the Gentiles, that they could neither come at, nor look at one another: So that this partition-wall being ſaid to be broken down, intimates to us, that Jew and Gentile, who before had two manner of religions, the one in and under a covenant with God, the other afar off, and without God, yet now by Chriſt are both adopted into the ſame church, partakers of the ſame covenants, incorporated into the ſame faith, entitled to the ſame glory. 2. Chriſt has aboliſhed the enmity and perpetual ſtrife which was occaſioned between Jew and Gentile, on the account of the obſervation of the ceremonial law, and the ordinances thereunto belonging: He has aboliſhed the enmity; that is, the ceremonial law, which made the enmity between them. The ceremonial law was the cauſe and continuer of that enmity which was betwixt Jew and Gentile: This is called, "the law of commandments contained in ordinances;" becauſe Almighty God did actually ſeparate the Jews from all the world, by giving them ordinances and commandments, judicial and ceremonial laws, containing many viſible and external obſervances, which forbade them to communicate with the Gentile world. Now Chriſt being come in the fleſh, all thoſe obſervations ceaſed, and thoſe legal ordinances vaniſh'd away: All nations became bleſſed in Chriſt, and Jews and Gentiles became one church, both alike the people of God, both admitted equally into covenant, and both alike bleſſed. Here note, That the moral law, ſummarily compriſed and comprehended in the ten commandments, was no part of the partition-wall between Jew and Gentile, nor did the death of Chriſt abrogate this law, nor is it at all aboliſhed; but it was the law of ceremonies only, which the ſufferings and death of Chriſt put an end unto; for when he died, they all vaniſhed; as the ſhadow diſappears, when the ſubſtance is come. (B.) See the notes on John iii. 3. x. 16. xvi. 33. and xvii. 21. 2 Cor. v. 17. and Gal. vi. 15.

Reconcile both unto God.] The Apoſtle had declar'd, in the foregoing verſes, that one end of Chriſt's death was to make peace between Jew and Gentile; where he aſſures us, that a ſecond end of it was to make peace between God and man, "that he might reconcile both" Jew and Gentile, thus united, unto an offended God: And this he did by the ſacrifice of himſelf upon the croſs, whereby he did deſtroy that enmity which was betwixt God and man, by undergoing the puniſhment of ſin, which was the cauſe of that enmity. (B.) See the notes on Rom. v. 10. vi. 6. viii. 3. and 2 Cor. v. 17.

Came, and preached peace.] Obſerve here, 1. That Chriſt having purchaſed peace, he "came and preached peace" to both Jews and Gentiles; to the Gentiles, ſaid here to be afar off, and to the Jews that were nigh: But how did Chriſt preach to the Gentiles? Where do we read that he ever did ſo? Anſwer, Tho' he did not in his own perſon preach peace to the Gentiles, yet he gave commiſſion to the Apoſtles to preach to them, Mat. xxviii. and they and their ſucceſſors, purſuant to ſuch commiſſion, did preach peace unto them, even to them that "were afar off, and them that are nigh." Learn hence, That when the Miniſters of Chriſt do come in his name, and by a commiſſion received from him, to preach peace, and offer terms of reconciliation unto loſt ſinners, it is all one as if Chriſt himſelf did come and preach; he expects the ſame readineſs from them in receiving the meſſage, as if it were delivered to them from his own mouth; and will treat the deſpiſers of his Miniſters, and the contemners of their meſſage, as if the affront were offered immediately to his own perſon. 2. The Apoſtle's argument to prove, that the Gentiles, as well as the Jews, were effectually called, by the preaching of the Goſpel, to partake of peace and reconciliation with God; becauſe they had both equal acceſs and liberty to approach unto God in all holy duties, as unto a father, by the manuduction of the ſpirit; through him, that is, through Jeſus Chriſt, we, both Jews and Gentiles, have acceſs, that is, liberty of approach by one and the ſame ſpirit unto the Father. Learn hence, That through Jeſus Chriſt, all believers, of what denomination ſoever, have acceſs to God by the ſpirit of grace. Queſt. What doth this acceſs to the Father denote? Anſw. It ſuppoſes a preceding diſtance between God and us; both a natural and moral diſtance, as creatures, and as ſinners: It denotes a propinquity and nearneſs unto God, in oppoſition to this diſtance, and that our approach to God is free and voluntary, friendly and complacential, peculiar and privilegious, fruitful and advantagious. Queſt. 2. In what reſpect have believers acceſs to God as to a Father? Anſw. In this life they have acceſs to the Father's heart and love, to the Father's ear and audience, to the Father's care and protection, to his providing care, to his guiding and counſelling care, to his comforting and ſupporting care, but eſpecially to his ſanctifying care. Queſt. 3. Through whom have we this acceſs to God? Anſw. Through Jeſus Chriſt, through his mediation and manuduction, we have acceſs to God's heart, to God's ear, to his fatherly care on earth, and to his gracious preſence in heaven. Queſt. 4. What influence gives the holy ſpirit unto this acceſs unto the Father? Anſw. It is by his influence that they are at firſt brought home to the Father; he prepares them for this acceſs unto the Father; he ſtirs up holy affections, and enkindles holy deſires in them after God, and helps them to make an holy, fruitful, and advantageous improvement, of all their acceſſes unto God. (B.) See the notes on John xvi. 33. Acts ii. 39. Rom. v. 2. and viii. 15.

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22. Now therefore ye are no more ſtrangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God; and are built upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief corner-ſtone; in whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: In whom you alſo are builded together for an habitation of God through the ſpirit.

No more ſtrangers.] Our Apoſtle began this chapter, with ſetting before the Epheſians the horror and dread of their Heatheniſh ſtate before converted to Chriſtianity; here he cloſes the chapter with an account of that glorious and bleſſed ſtate which the Chriſtian religion, embraced by them, had tranſlated them into; "Now ye are no more ſtrangers, but fellow-citizens," &c. Where obſerve, 1. Their preſent happy condition is ſet forth both negatively and poſitively: Negatively, by ſhewing what they were not, neither ſtrangers nor foreigners, but freemen and fellow-citizens, &c. Where it muſt be remembred, that all the nations of the world, except the Jews, were called ſtrangers to the God of Iſrael; but the Jews were called Propinqui, his neighbours, or nearones: But, ſays the Apoſtle, there is no ſuch difference; for the believing Gentiles are equally admitted with the believing Jews to the privilege of the New Jeruſalem, and are fellow-citizens, with one another; they are no longer aliens from the common-wealth of Iſrael, but freemen. 2. The Apoſtle ſets forth their happy condition poſitively, under a threefold ſimilitude; namely, that of a city, that of an houſhold or family, and that of an edifice or building. 1. Our Apoſtle compares the Chriſtian church (of which the Epheſians now were members) to a city; and ſhews, that themſelves, as believing Gentiles, had a right to all the privileges and immunities of that city, as well as the Jews, who accounted themſelves the only free-members of it; "Ye are fellow-citizens with the Saints;" that is, the Patriarchs and Prophets, and all other members of the church of the Jews, ye are free denizens, burgeſſes, and enfranchiſed citizens with the reſt of that holy ſociety, ye are all members of the holy catholick church. 2. Our Apoſtle compares the Chriſtian church to an houſhold or family; "Ye are fellow-citizens with the Saints, and of the houſhold of God." Now, this metaphor intimates a greater degree of nearneſs to, and communion with the church, than what the former metaphor did imply, there being a ſtraiter tye of familiarity and friendſhip between the members of a family, than between the members of a city. Whence we learn, That the church of Chriſt under the Goſpel is God's great houſhold or family, in a peculiar manner admitted to an intimate communion with him, in a ſpecial way provided and cared for by him, and every ſincere Chriſtian becomes a member of this bleſſed family, and enjoys all the privileges thereof. 3. St. Paul proceeds yet farther, and compares the church of Chriſt to an edifice or ſtately building, Ye "are built upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets," &c. Now this ſimilitude holds forth unto us ſtill, a farther degree of nearneſs to, and communion with God and his church, than the former: What can be more cloſely united, and more ſtrictly join'd together, than ſtones in a building? And our Apoſtle calling the church an holy temple, ſeems to allude to Solomon's temple, which was a type of the Chriſtian church, as the tabernacle was of the Jewiſh church; the tabernacle was ambulatory and changeable, made of decaying and corruptible materials, and ſo fitly typified the Jewiſh diſpenſation, which was temporary and tranſient; the temple was made of durable and rich materials, and thereby a proper type of the Chriſtian church, which is called "a kingdom that cannot be ſhaken." But obſerve further, how our Apoſtle doth deſcribe this ſtately edifice, this ſpiritual building, the Chriſtian church, theſe ſeveral ways; 1. By its foundation which it ſtands upon; namely, "the Apoſtles and Prophets;" that is, upon the doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles; not upon their perſons, Chriſt himſelf being the perſonal foundation and chief corner-ſtone. Learn, that tho' Chriſt himſelf be the builder of, and the chief corner-ſtone in his Church, yet he employs his Miniſters now, as he did the Prophets and Apoſtles of old, to lay the foundation, and carry on the ſuperſtructure, and no one Apoſtle had a privilege in this above another; and therefore for the Pope, as St. Peter's ſucceſſor, to ſtyle himſelf the foundation of the Catholick Church, is an impudent preſumption; for no more is here ſaid of Peter, than is ſaid of all the Apoſtles and Prophets. 2. The Church, as a ſpiritual building or temple, is here deſcribed by the unity and compactneſs of its parts; "In whom all the building, fitly framed together," that is, all the members of the Church, are by faith firmly join'd to Chriſt as the foundation, and to one another by love, and their unity is both their ſtrength and their beauty. 3. This building is deſcribed by its growth and perpetual increaſe; "It groweth unto an holy temple." The Church groweth two ways; by an addition of new and particular converts, and by an addition of new graces in every particular convert: Where remark, How this ſpiritual edifice, the Church of Chriſt, differs from all other buildings; both the whole of it, and all the individual parts of it, are endued with life, a life flowing from Chriſt the foundation, a life far from a ſtate of perfection: All a Chriſtian's life and ſpiritual growth flow from his union and communion with Chriſt; "in him all the building groweth." 4. This building, namely, the Chriſtian Church, conſiſting both of Jews and Gentiles, is here deſcribed by the end and deſign of Chriſt in erecting this growing edifice; namely, to be an holy temple unto God, wherein now, (as in the material temple of old) he may manifeſt his gracious preſence, and be perpetually worſhipped, glorified and ſerved: The whole Church, or collective body of believers jointly, and each believer ſeverally and apart, are a ſpiritual and holy temple unto the Lord, in and by whom all ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe are offered up, and all duties of new and ſincere obedience acceptably perform'd. CHAP. III.

The ſalvation of the Gentiles revealed to St. Paul; and he appointed to preach it. He exhorts them, not to faint at his tribulation; and prayeth to God to ſtrengthen them.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. FOR this cauſe, I Paul, the priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt for you Gentiles; if ye have heard of the diſpenſation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward: How that by revelation he made known unto me the myſtery (as I wrote afore in few words, whereby when ye read ye may underſtand my knowledge in the myſtery of Chriſt) which in other ages was not made known unto the ſons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy Apoſtles and Prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles ſhould be fellow-heirs, and of the ſame body, and partakers of his promiſe in Chriſt, by the Goſpel: Whereof I was made a miniſter, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power. Unto me, who am leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, is this grace given, that I ſhould preach among the Gentiles the unſearchable riches of Chriſt; and to make all men ſee, what is the fellowſhip of the myſtery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jeſus Chriſt: To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wiſdom of God, according to the eternal purpoſe which he purpoſed in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord: In whom we have boldneſs and acceſs with confidence by the faith of him. Wherefore I deſire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory.

For this cauſe.] That is, For preaching the Goſpel to the Gentiles in general; and particularly, for aſſerting, that the privileges of juſtification and ſalvation by Chriſt belonged equally to the believing Gentiles, as well as to the Jews, tho' they were not circumciſed: "For this cauſe" I was perſecuted, and impriſon'd, by the Jews, and conſtrain'd to appeal unto Cæſar, and was brought in bonds to Rome, where I now am. (Aſſ. Fell, W. and B.) For 'tis plain, this was one of the Epiſtles which St. Paul wrote during his two years abode there, mention'd Acts xxviii. 30. (G.) See the Preface to the Romans; and the notes on Acts xxii. 22, &c. xxv. 11. xxvi. 17, &c. and xxviii. 20, 30.

The priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt.] He was at once Chriſt's priſoner, the Jews priſoner, the Romans priſoner, and the Gentiles priſoner: Chriſt's priſoner, as ſuffering for his goſpel; the Jews priſoner, as ſuffering by their accuſation; the Romans priſoner, as ſuffering by their ſentence; and the Gentiles priſoner, as ſuffering for his labours in order to their ſalvation. (B.) See the notes on ver. 13. and ch. iv. 1.

If ye have heard.] Eige ecouſate. Hence ſome raiſe an objection againſt this Epiſtle being written by St. Paul; that among the Epheſians with whom he had ſo long converſed, there could be no doubt, whether they had "heard of the diſpenſation of the grace of God which was given him towards them." But this is no objection to them who will conſider, 1. That this Epiſtle was not written to the Epheſians only, but alſo to all "the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus," ch. i. 1. many of whom had never ſeen his face, nor heard his voice. 2. That he ſpeaks here particularly of the manner of his receiving this diſpenſation; viz. by immediate revelation from Chriſt Jeſus: Of which the Galatians, among whom he had alſo preached, were nevertheleſs ignorant; and therefore, in his Epiſtle to them, he ſaith of this. "I certify you," Gal. i. 11, 12. confirming his aſſertion with an oath, ver. 20. And, 3. That the particle eige is not here a particle of doubting, but of affirmation; and is to be rendred (as Theophylact doth, epeide) ſince: And ſo it is frequently uſed, by Philo, and other authors. (W) Or, 4. That the word acouo ſignifies to know, as well as to hear: And ſo it may be rendred here (Eige ecouſate) If indeed ye have known &c. (H.) See the notes on ch. i. 15.

The diſpenſation of the grace of God.] That is, The Goſpel, which God had commiſſion'd him to declare and diſpenſe to them. (B.) See the notes on Acts ix. 15. and xiii. 2. 1 Cor. iv. 1. Gal. i. 16. and ii. 7, 8.

By revelation.] See the notes on Acts xxii. 17. &c. and xxvi. 17. Gal. i. 1. and ii. 2.

The myſtery.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 25.

As I wrote afore.] Viz. In the two foregoing chapters. (G.) Some refer this more particularly to ch. ii. 19. others to ch. i. 9. (Fell)

Not made known.] That is, not ſo plainly and clearly; not ſo diſtinctly and particularly, as it is now. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on ch. i. 9. and ii. 19, 20. Matth. xiii. 11. John xvi. 13. and 1 Cor. iv. 1.

That the Gentiles] See the notes on ch. i. 13. ii. 14. &c. Acts ii. 17. x. 35. Gal. iii. 14. and 28.

Made a miniſter.] See the notes on ch. i. 19. Rom. i. 5. and xv. 16. 1 Cor. iii. 5. and iv. 1.

Leſs than the leaſt.] Obſerve St. Paul's profound modeſty, whenever he ſpeaks only of himſelf, and not of his office. (G.) But, with reſpect to his office, he is careful, in moſt of his Epiſtles, to aſſert his authority; becauſe upon that the faith was embraced: And he refers his calling, immediately to the grace of God; which 1. Converted him from a perſecutor. 2. Reveal'd the myſtery of the Goſpel unto him. 3. Call'd him to the Apoſtleſhip, eſpecially of the Gentiles. And, 4. Accompanied his miniſtry with great power and efficacy. (Fell.) See the notes on ver. 3, 4. ch. i. 7, and 9. John i. 3. Acts ix. 15. Rom. ii. 4. and xvi. 25. 1 Cor. ii. 7. and xv. 9. 2 Cor. v. 17. and xii. 11. Gal. i. 16. and ii. 8.

Principalities and powers.] That is, the bleſſed Angels. And that the myſtery of the Goſpel was not fully underſtood by the holy Angels, till diſcover'd by our Lord, appears 1 Tim. iii. 16. and 1 Pet. i. 12. Whence alſo (the Angels being ſaid to "deſire to look into" it) it appears, that this is ſpoken of good Angels. And tho' God did reveal theſe myſteries to the Prophets by his Angels; yet it follows not, that they perfectly underſtood any more than the ſubſtance, and ſo much as was revealed; the complete knowledge being reſerv'd till the times of the fulfilling. (Fell) See the notes on ch. i. 21. Rom. xi. 33. and 1 Cor. ii. 7.

Faint not at my tribulations.] Here the Apoſtle exhorts them, not to be ſhaken in the conſtancy of their belief, nor diſcouraged in the practice of thoſe chriſtian truths, which he, when preſent, had taught among them. A temptation very incident to weak minds, when the doctrine they had embraced lyes under perſecution; and then the perſons from whom it was receiv'd, by falling under public diſcountenance, come to make ſo different a figure, as that of St. Paul in bonds at Rome, by the inſtigation and prevailing malice of the Jews, was from the ſame St. Paul, baffling the Jews, and working miracles at Epheſus. Againſt this temptation, which diſpoſes men, from the calamities or diſgraces of a teacher, to abate of their eſteem for the man, and the matter taught by him, and ſo to ſeek pretences for ſecuring themſelves, in caſe the danger ſhould come nearer home, he fortifies them, by declaring, that his tribulations were for them, and matter of glory to them. (Stanh.) See the notes on ver. 1. Acts xiv. 22. 2 Cor. i. 6. and iv. 8. and Gal. vi. 9.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. For this cauſe I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, That he would grant you according to the riches of his glory, to be ſtrengthened with might, by his Spirit in the inner man; That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all ſaints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Chriſt, which paſſeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullneſs of God. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, Unto him be glory in the Church by Chriſt Jeſus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

Whole family in heaven.] Patria is the ſame word, which the Septuagint alſo uſeth, to ſignify a tribe or family; whence the princes, or chiefs, of a nation, tribe, or family were call'd (patrias archai) patriarchs. (Fell) It is frequent with the Jews, to mention the Angels, as "the family in heaven;" and men, eſpecially thoſe who are in covenant with God, as his family on earth. Thus, they ſay, God does nothing without firſt conſulting with his family above; that is, with the Angels: And that he who addicts himſelf to the ſtudy of the divine law, for the ſake of the law, conciliates to himſelf peace with the family above, and with the family below; that is, with Angels in heaven, and men on earth. (W.) See the notes on ch. i. 19.

The riches of his glory.] See the notes on Rom. ii. 4. and ix. 23.

Strengthned with might.] See the notes on ch. i. 19. and Rom. xvi. 25.

That Chriſt may dwell.] This phraſe of "dwelling in us" imports a very cloſe and intimate union between Chriſt and believers: He dwells in them ſubjectively and effectively by his gracious influences, by his powerful aſſiſtances, and by his quickning impreſſions. (B.)

Being rooted and grounded.] That is, having ſo fervent a love of God, as (like a tree that is ſet deep, and hath taken ſtrong hold, or a houſe, whoſe foundation is broad and firm and well wrought) is not to be ſhaken by the moſt violent ſtorms of adverſity and perſecution. And that the firmneſs here mention'd may be effectually attained, he prays, that they "may be able to comprehend" the vaſt dimenſions of God's love to them. (Stanh.) This paſſage is equally to be admir'd for the ſublimity of its ſenſe, and the beauty and variety of its charming figures and excellencies of language. Alluſion is made to the things of nature and art; (errhizomenoi kai tetheliomenoi) "rooted and grounded." Then, by a bold and beautiful metaphor, the dimenſions of material ſubſtances are rais'd above their native ſignification, and ennobled by being applied to the myſteries of religion. The goodneſs of God, in his dear Son Jeſus, has its breadth, extending to all mankind; its length, reaching to all ages; its depth, and height, raiſing mankind from the loweſt abyſs of miſery and deſpair to the higheſt eminencies of happineſs and glory. Where 'tis remarkable, that tho' the dimenſions of bodies are but three, the ſacred author adds a fourth, height, whereby he more emphatically expreſſes the greatneſs. the majeſty, the abſolute and entire perfection, and the immenſe charity of that wonderful work of our redemption; or, in the better words of the inſpired writer, "the unſearchable riches of the love of Chriſt:" The knowledge of which paſſeth all other knowledge, both in its own immenſe greatneſs, and the grand concern mankind has in it; and can never be ſo perfectly known by created underſtandings, as that they ſhall either fully comprehend, or duly value, ſuch an adorable myſtery and infinite bleſſing. (Blackw.) Many wits run riot in their geometrical and moral diſcourſes upon theſe dimenſions. Some conceive, that the Apoſtle alludeth to the dimenſions of the Croſs; and by height underſtand the wiſdom of Chriſt, by depth his humility, by length his longanimity, and by breadth his charity: Others place the breadth in the extent of charity, the length in perſeverance, the height in the hope of celeſtial rewards, and the depth in the unſearchable judgments of God, Rom. xi. 33. with diverſe more conceits. But, it is certain, the ſpeech is figurative, cloathed with a metaphor taken from geometricians; who, if they will perfectly know any building or ſtructure, exactly meaſure it according to all theſe dimenſions: And hereby the Apoſtle would have us labour as exactly, to meaſure the ſpiritual Temple of God, as the Prophets were exact, in deſcribing the dimenſions of the material Temple, Ezek. xl. 5. &c. that ſo they may underſtand how perfect it is in every part. (Aſſ.) But whereas he declares "the love of Chriſt" to be ſuch as "paſſeth knowledge," and yet, at the ſame time, begs that they may know it; the ſeeming inconſiſtency of theſe expreſſions may be accounted for, either, 1. That this is the moſt excellent ſubject that the thought can dwell upon; and more worthy their ſtduy, than any other ſort of knowledge whatſoever: Or, 2. That this is a ſubject too large and lofty for humane powers to know; and can only be known by the ſupernatural illuminations of God's own Spirit: Or elſe, 3. That (as the word know is ſometimes applied to the affections, and not to the underſtanding only) a deep, affectionate, and thankful ſenſe of a mercy, which mortal men cannot conceive the full value and extent of, may inflame them with ſo fervent a love in return, as ſhall eſteem nothing too much to be done or ſuffer'd for the ſervice of him who hath ſo wonderfully loved them: A love, which ſhould put them upon aſpiring to the very higheſt pitch of piety and virtue and grace, that any mortal men are capable of coming up to; and ſo, of being "filled with all the fulneſs of God." (Stanh.) See the notes on ch. i. 23. Matth vii. 23. Rom. xi. 33. and 1 Cor. ii. 15.

Now, unto him that is able.] Obſerve here, 1. How our Apoſtle cloſes his prayer with thankſgiving and praiſe; intimating to us, that praiſe ſhould ever conclude that work which prayer began, and that ſpiritual bleſſings principally deſerve our praiſes. 2. The title which St. Paul's faith fixed upon, in his approaches to God in prayer and praiſe; and that is, his omnipotence, or almighty power. In all our addreſſes to God, it is our duty to have ſuch apprehenſions, and uſe ſuch expreſſions concerning him, as may moſt ſtrengthen our faith. He "is able (faith the Apoſtle) to do exceeding abundantly, above all that we can ask or think." Note here, The comprehenſive fulneſs of this expreſſion: He is able to do for us, to do abundantly for us; to do exceeding abundantly for us, above what we ask; yea, to do exceeding abundantly for us, above what we can think, as well as ask. Oh! how narrow, ſhort, and poor are our prayers, compared with the power of God! 'Tis much that the tongue can ask; 'tis more that the mind can think; But the Lord is able to do for us, not only above what we can ask, but abundantly above what we can think. Lord, what an everlaſting ſpring of comfort is this! what encouragement doth it adminiſter to thy people! what encouragement to prayer! what encouragement in prayer! they pray to him who is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that they can ask or think. 3. That it is not God's abſolute power, that St. Paul bottoms his faith in prayer upon, (for God can do many things that he never will do,) but it is his operative, promiſed, and formerly experienc'd power, "according to the power that worketh in us;" that is, according to that infinite and almighty power which God had exerted and put forth in their firſt converſion; this power was, and is a main prop for confidence in prayer. Learn hence, That the experience we have had of God's gracious power in working in us, by converting and quickning grace, may and ought to confirm our faith, that he will do exceeding abundantly for us, above what we can expect, yea, above what we can ask or think, when we are upon our knees in prayer before him. 4. The concluding doxology; "To him be glory in the Church by Chriſt Jeſus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen." Where note, 1. The divine praiſe given to Almighty God, namely, that of glory; "to him be glory." Glory is the fountain of all excellency in the creatures; they all ſhine with beams borrowed from God's excellencies, as ſtars ſhine with the light they receive, from the body of the Sun: Almighty God is that infinitely glorious being, in whom all the excellencies and perfections of the creatures are eminently and tranſcendently found. 2. The Perſons giving this glory unto God; the Church, "To him be glory in the Church." True, it is the duty of all reaſonable creatures to ſet forth God's glory; but only the Church (holy and gracious perſons alone) can perform it in an active and acceptable manner. 3. The perſon through whom this duty becomes acceptable unto God, thro' Chriſt Jeſus; "to him be glory in the Church by Chriſt Jeſus." The duty of praiſe and thankſgiving, is what we owe to God for receiv'd favours; and indeed is all we have to pay him: But neither this, nor any other duty, can find acceptance with God, but by and thro' the mediation of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. 4. The duration and continuance of this duty of thankſgiving, "throughout all ages, world without end:" As God ſhall never want glory from his Church, ſo there ſhall always be a Church to the end of the world, to give glory unto God, againſt which the gates of hell ſhall never prevail. Note, laſtly, In this divine doxology, after what manner and with what affection this praiſe is given, intimated in the word Amen; "world without end, Amen." This Amen, 1. Is a note of aſſent; and as ſuch uſed by the Jews and Chriſtians in all Ages, at the end of their prayers, to teſtify that they aſſented and agreed to what was put up to God in their name, and on their behalf. It importeth earneſt deſire. Hence Jeremiah, chap. xxviii. 6. ſaid Amen to the prophecy of Hananiah, concerning the return of the captives to their land; to ſhew how earneſtly he deſired that it might be ſo. 3. It imports ſtedfaſt faith that the thing we pray for, ſhall be, granted; and accordingly in teſtimony of our deſire and aſſurance to be heard, we ſay, Amen. ſo be it; ſo let it be; ſo let it be O Lord, for ever.

CHAP. IV.

The Apoſtle exhorteth them to ſeveral chriſtian duties, becoming their profeſſion: And particularly to unity.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, I Therefore the priſoner of the Lord, beſeech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowlineſs and meekneſs, with long-ſuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptiſm, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.

I therefore, the priſoner.] The illative particle (therefore) directs us to look back to ch. iii. 1. of which verſe the beginning of this is only a repetition, or recollection; all that comes between being a digreſſion, in a long parentheſis, relating to the Apoſtle's office, by commiſſion from God, wherein he ſtood more particularly related to the Gentiles. But here he reſumes his diſcourſe, by way of exhortation. (H. Bryan, and Lukin) In which we may obſerve the character, which St. Paul chuſeth to recommend himſelf by, and to enforce his following exhortation; "I, the priſoner of the Lord." And this he does, 1. Becauſe he looks upon this character not as matter of diſgrace, but as the greateſt, the higheſt honour. 2. Herein he gives an inſtance of his being conform'd to the captain of our ſalvation; of his being made partaker of the ſufferings of Chriſt. 3. Herein he ſhews his reſemblance to the noble army of Martyrs, the early ſufferers before the incarnation. 4. Hereby he gives an evidence of his fellowſhip alſo with the ſuffering Saints and Martyrs, ſince the incarnation and crucifixion of Chriſt. 5. 'Tis a preſumption, if not a demonſtration, of the truth of that doctrine which he taught and deliver'd. And, 6. Becauſe ſuffering is the touchſtone of virtue, and the trial of ſincerity. (Bryan) See Dr. Bryan's Sermon on this text, 1692. and the notes on ch. iii. 1. Acts v. 41. and ix. 16.

Walk worthy of the vocation.] Tho' all men ought to walk worthy of their ſpecial calling, that is, ſo as it becometh men of ſuch a calling; as namely, Magiſtrates as becometh their place of authority, and Miniſters as becometh their ſacred function: Yet the following verſes ſhew, that (cleſis) the vocation, or calling, here meaneth the general calling of the faithful; viz. to be holy as our God is holy, 1 Pet i. 15, 16. and that as we are called to the knowledge of the Goſpel, ſo we ſhould walk according to the preſcript of the Goſpel. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 20. Phil. i. 20. and 1 Pet. i. 15, 16.

With all lowlineſs.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 10. 1. Cor. xiii. 4. &c. 2 Cor. ii. 10. and Gal. v. 22.

Endeavouring to keep.] Spoudazontes; labouring your utmoſt, to preſerve that unity in the Church, which is kept in the body; by being animated by the ſame ſpirit, and by being join'd one member friendly and peaceably to another, as it were, by ſinews &c. that is, unity of charity, as the Spirit, and of outward communion, as the ſinews, to knit you all together into a peaceable Church, loving and living peaceably one with another. (H.) The Apoſtle uſes two words, and both of 'em of ſingular care for unity: For he doth not ſimply ſay, keep it, nor ſimply endeavour it, but ſtudy and endeavour to keep it; becauſe no man can keep that is not careful, and no man will endeavour that is not ſtudious. (Laud.) And this ſhews, that the Apoſtle did not think the being and continuing in the unity of the Church an arbitrary or indifferent thing, which might be kept or broken at pleaſure, according as our humour, fancy, or intereſt leads us; but a matter of duty and neceſſity, and an eſſential part of Chriſtianity: And therefore his exhortations to this duty are addreſt with a peculiar warmth and earneſtneſs, and urg'd and enforc'd with the moſt weighty motives. (H Nelſ.) See Archbp. Laud's, and Mr. H. Nelſon's ſermons on this text; and the notes on John x. 16 and xix. 23. Acts iv. 32. Rom. xv. 5. 1 Cor. i. 10. and Phil. ii. 1.

There is one Body.] The Apoſtle having exhorted the Epheſians to a ſtrict unity and concord among themſelves, proceeds here to enforce his exhortation with ſeveral arguments; of which there are no fewer than ſeven ſumm'd up together in theſe three verſes 1. That "there is one body;" that is, one univerſal Church, whereof we are all members. 2. "One Spirit," by which we are all animated and enliven'd; and therefore ought to "keep the unity of the Spirit." 3. "One hope" of eternal life, by which we are all excited. 4. "One Lord," Jeſus Chriſt, the Head of his Church, the Saviour of the Body, whom we all profeſs to ſerve and obey. 5. "One faith;" that is, either one grace of faith whereby we believe, or one doctrine of faith which is to be believed. 6. "One baptiſm;" that is, one door by which we all enter into the Church. And, 7. "One God and father of all;" from whom we all expect one and the ſame ſalvation. This then is the ſum of the Apoſtle's argument; ſeeing ye are all members of one body, partakers of one Spirit, expectants of one Hope, having one Lord and common Saviour, one Faith and belief, one and the ſame Baptiſm, and one and the ſame God and Father in Chriſt, be one among yourſelves, and "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." From the whole therefore learn, That ſo many are the obligations, ſo ſtrong the bonds and ties, which lie upon all the members of the Church to be at unity among themſelves, of one judgment, and of one heart, that Chriſt looks upon ſuch as violate theſe bonds, and culpably divide and ſeparate themſelves from communion with their brethren, as no longer members of his body, but as having rent and torn themſelves from it. (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 16. Matth. xxviii 19. John x. 16. xiii. 13. and xiv. 16, 17. Rom. viii. 9. &c. xi. 36. and xii. 5, 10. 1 Cor. viii. 6 and xii. 12, 13. 2 Cor. iii. 17. Gal. iii 27. and iv. 6.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. But unto every one of us is given grace according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. Wherefore he ſaith, When he aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he aſcended, what is it but that he alſo deſcended firſt into the lower parts of the earth? He that deſcended is the ſame alſo that aſcended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things) And he gave ſome, Apoſtles: And ſome, Prophets: And ſome, Evangeliſts: And ſome, paſtors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the miniſtry, for the edifying of the body of Chriſt: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the ſon of God, unto a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt: That we henceforth be no more children toſſed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the ſleight of men, and cunning craftineſs, whereby they lie in wait to deceive: But ſpeaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things which is the head, even Chriſt: From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint ſupplieth, according to the effectual working in the meaſure of every part, maketh increaſe of the body, unto the edifying of it ſelf in love.

But unto every one of us] The foregoing verſes had given a deſcription of that myſtical union in the Chriſtian Church, which St. Paul makes uſe of, as an argument for enforcing " the unity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace :" And here he proceeds to ſhew, what means and aſſiſtances our Lord has left us, for the eſtabliſhment and preſervation of this union; what ends he had in ordaining, and what we ſhould conſtantly propoſe to ourſelves in uſing, thoſe means and aſſiſtances. (Stanh.) But, leſt the different kinds and meaſures of gifts, which they might behold in the ſeveral degrees of Miniſters, ſhould break this union, and move ſome to pride, others to envy, and ſo make diſſenſion among them, he gives a clear account of this diverſity; which doth not make them divers bodies, but diſtinguiſhes one body into ſeveral members. All Chriſtians have ſome gifts; but the ſort and degree depends on the free will of the giver. For " unto every one of us," eſpecially ſuch as are in the miniſtries of the Church, " is given" ſome kind of grace, ſome ſhare of theſe gifts; but the proportion is " according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt ;" who being the donor, and there being no merit in the receivers, ought to be at liberty to give more or leſs, as ſeems fit to him, with reſpect to the perſons, ſtation, or capacity: So that, if we contend about this, we muſt quarrel with the beſtower, not with the receivers of thoſe gifts. (Comb.) And moreover, ſince every one has his ſeveral graces from God, and no one has all; if one has that grace which another wants, and if one wants that grace which another has, it ſhews, that we want the help of one another, and therefore ought to love one another. (B.) See the notes on ver. 11. Rom. xii. 3, 6. and 1 Cor. xii. 1, &c.

Wherefore he ſaith.] That Chriſt is the diſtributer of theſe gifts, is here prov'd, by a prophecy of David, Pſal. lxviii. 18. who foreſaw our Saviour's reſurrection and aſcenſion, long before they came to paſs. " Wherefore he ſaith" by the ſpirit, That as princes, on the day of their triumph, are wont to ſcatter large donatives among their people; ſo Chriſt, " when he aſcended up on high," and return'd back to heaven, like a victorious general, led in chains Satan and Death, which had brought mankind into captivity; theſe being now by him taken captive. And he receiv'd, as a reward from his Father, a power to diſtribute variety of the Holy Spirit's operations, " and gave" theſe different gifts, which he had ſo receiv'd, " unto men" of all ranks; but eſpecially to thoſe whom he had choſen, to ſerve in the various offices of his church. No doubt, but David, who long ſince foretold this, did foreſee all our Saviour's acts. He knew him to be very God, and that he came originally from heaven. Now, when 'tis ſaid " that he aſcended" to heaven again, " what is it, but" a plain indication " that he alſo had deſcended firſt," both into the Virgin's womb at his incarnation, (for man is ſaid to be formed in " the lower parts of the earth," Pſa. cxxxix. 15.) and, as the Fathers expound it, into hell, which is generally deſcribed as being far under the earth; whither he went down as a conqueror into Satan's empire of darkneſs, " and having ſpoiled principalities and powers," Col. ii. 15. openly triumph'd over them, and then aſcended both with " the keys of hell and of death," Rev. i. 18. which myſteries, no doubt, the Spirit had reveal'd to holy David. For " he that deſcended is the ſame" Lord Jeſus Chriſt, " who alſo aſcended up," after he had completed our redemption, to his kingdom of glory, which is " far above all" thoſe viſible heavens, wherein the ſun, moon, and ſtars are placed. And then he re-aſſumed his original dignity, and was repleniſh'd with all thoſe gifts and graces that his Church needed; not for his own ſake, but " that he (out of his overflowing fulneſs) might fill all things" that were defective in his Church, and eſpecially that he might ſupply the various orders of Miniſters therein, with gifts ſuitable to their ſeveral ſtations. (Comb.) See the notes on ver. 13. John iii. 13. and xii. 31. Acts ii. 33. and xxvi. 18. Rom. xiv. 9. and 1 Cor. xii. 1, &c.

And he gave ſome, Apoſtles.] See Dr. Bradford's Sermon, 1707. and Dr. N. Marſhall's 1719. both on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 20. Luke vi. 13. John xx. 21. Acts i. 2, 8, 25. Rom. xvi. 7. 1 Cor. xii. 10, 28. and 2 Cor. viii. 23.

And ſome, Prophets] See the notes on Acts xiii. 1. and 1 Cor. xii. 28.

And ſome, Evangeliſts.] Sent out by the Apoſtles; ſome to plant, and others to water Churches already planted, without being fixed to any particular place. (B.) And theſe might be of any of the three orders; either Deacons, as Philip was, Acts viii 12. and xxi. 8. or Biſhops, as Timothy was, 2 Tim. iv. 5. or of the middle order between both, as theſe here ſeem to have been. See Dr. Hammond at large upon this text; and the notes on John xx. 21. and Acts viii. 4.

Paſtors and Teachers.] See the notes on Acts xiii. 1. and xx. 28. Rom. xii. 7. and 1 Cor. xii. 28.

For the perfecting.] Hence we may learn, 1. That it is Chriſt's ſpecial prerogative, as head of the Church, to inſtitute and appoint ſuch offices and officers in his Church, as to his own wiſdom ſeems meet for the edification and government of it. 2. That the great end and deſign of Chriſt, in inſtituting ſuch variety of offices and officers in his Church, was, his Church's unity, that by all miniſterial helps and endeavours, his members might be compacted and knit together, and made one entire body, by the increaſe of ſanctity, concord, and unity. " He gave ſome Apoſtles, &c. for the perfecting of the Saints, (not for converting of ſinners only) and for the edifying of the body of Chriſt." (B.) Or rather, For the fitting out holy perſons to the work of the miniſtry, to the edifying of the body of Chriſt. The variation, from pros to eis, in the original, may well be allowed to intimate ſome little diverſity of ſenſe and meaning: And indeed, to mention, in the firſt place, " the perfecting of the Saints," and, after that, " the work of the Miniſtry," which, in the reaſon and order of things, was before the other; and then again at laſt, " the edifying of the body of Chriſt," ſeems not quite ſo juſt, nor ſo coherent a way of ſpeaking, as it would be to ſay, That a ſett of extraordinary officers was at firſt appointed, for the occaſions of the Chriſtian Church; that ſome of theſe were, in due time, to fit out other holy perſons for the ſtanding work of the Miniſtry; and that all together were to be employ'd in " edifying the body of Chriſt." (Marſhall) See the notes on Rom. xii. 5. and 2 Cor. xiii. 9, 11.

Till we all come.] Here the Apoſtle declares how long the work of the Miniſtry, appointed by Chriſt for his Church's edification and advantage, was to continue; namely, to the end of the world, to the day of judgment, " till all come, (by means of the ſame faith in Chriſt, and knowledge of him,) unto a perfect man, and unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt;" that is, till the Church, which is Chriſt's myſtical body, ſhall be compleat and perfect, and attain its full ſtature from infancy to full manhood. Learn hence, 1. That the Church of Chriſt here on earth, is labouring for, and endeavouring after, perfection in grace and knowledge, to come unto a perfect man, and to attain to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt. 2. That the Miniſtry of the word, is an ordinance of Chriſt's own appointment, to continue to the end of the world, in order to that purpoſe and deſign. 3. That none of the moſt eminent Saints on earth (the moſt knowing and pious Miniſters of the Goſpel not excepted) are above ordinances, above the miniſtry of the word, above receiving benefit and advantage by the plain and practical preaching of it: Even St. Paul here puts himſelf in, and reckons himſelf among the number of thoſe who ſtood in need of the Miniſtry of God's word, to bring him to a perfect man, and to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; he ſays not, till ye, but till we all come unto a perfect man. Such people then as think themſelves above ordinances, are above God himſelf; none need ordinances ſo much, as thoſe that want them leaſt: And ſuch hearers as turn their backs upon the preaching of the word, becauſe they know more than the Miniſter can teach them, and can better inſtruct the preacher, than be inſtructed by him, betray their own ignorance both of the intent and end of the miniſtry of the word, and alſo of the ſtate of their own hearts; for if their underſtandings want no light, do their affections need no warmth? Have ye no graces to be perfected, no corruptions to be weaken'd, no good reſolutions to be ſtrengthen'd? If your knowledge be imperfect, as ſure it is, do not your affections want a freſh excitement? Admit the deſpiſed preacher cannot be your inſtructor, yet ſure he may be your remembrancer, and excite you to that duty which ye know already perhaps better than ye practiſe it. (B.) It may, and indeed it has been, very often, and very maliciouſly objected (tho' never, I think, ſo often or ſo maliciouſly, as in the profligate age wherein we live) that ſuch orders and offices are now ſuperfluous, when the Secular powers are Chriſtian, and the book of Life in every hand; ſo that the civil magiſtrate ſuffices to govern us, and that All of common induſtry and underſtanding are abundantly qualified to teach themſelves. But, to this the Anſwer is plain and eaſy, and, to men of probity and fair argument, would not fail to be ſatisfactory too; viz. That the ſocieties, in which theſe governments are exerciſed, are different; the civil is a particular ſtate or country; the ſpiritual, a Church diffuſed, whereſoever Chriſtians happen to be, throughout the whole world: That the powers they claim and exerciſe are alſo different: Different in their original; For the civil was given by God to men, and is regulated by the municipal laws and cuſtoms of each nation; whereas the ſpiritual was given by God to Chriſt (whom he thus made the "head over all things to the Church," ch. i. 22.) conferr'd by Chriſt on his Apoſtles; deriv'd down by them to their ſucceſſors; and, in all its eſſential parts, the ſame all the Chriſtian world over: They are alſo different in their object, The one extending to the lives, liberties, and ſecular intereſts, the other to the minds and conſciences, of its ſubjects: They are, laſtly, different in their ends too; The one aiming at the ſafety and welfare of their bodies and eſtates in this preſent world; the other, at the ſalvation of their ſouls in that which is to come. The plain conſequences of all which remarks, I take to be, That neither of theſe powers can be qualified to diſcharge the buſineſs of the other: That they are ſo perfectly diſtinct as to have nothing of danger to apprehend from each other; That they are ſo contriv'd, as never, in their own nature, mutually to interfere; That they never actually did, never can, interfere in their exerciſe, except when one of theſe powers is abuſed, and ſtretch'd beyond its due and proper limits; And laſtly, That this ſpiritual government, being inſtituted by Chriſt himſelf, cannot be abrogated, ought not to be chang'd, by any authority leſs ſacred, any declaration leſs poſitive and expreſs, than That by which it was firſt eſtabliſh'd. This (we have reaſon to believe) would not be wanting, were ſuch authority, in His judgment, miſchievous or unneceſſary: But for any man to pronounce it ſo, without any ſuch ſignification from its author, is certainly moſt impudent ſacrilege, and even raging impiety. (Stanh.) The converſion of a nation to Chriſtianity does not at all alter the caſe. The Church is ſtill a diſtinct, tho' not a ſeparate Society, from the Chriſtian nation. It has its proper officers, and they their proper work; which appertains not to the civil magiſtrate, but is ſtill peculiar to them as it was before. (Bradf.) See the notes on ch. iii. 19. Acts v. 29. and Rom. xi. 12.

Be no more children.] St. Paul in theſe words, declares one ſpecial end for which the Miniſtry of the word was inſtituted and appointed; namely, to preſerve from error and ſeduction, to prevent inſtability of mind, and unſettledneſs of judgment, and to confirm perſons in fundamental truths; "that we henceforth be no more children, toſſed to and fro," &c. Obſerve here, 1. The name which St. Paul gives to unſtable perſons, and unſettled profeſſors: He calls them children; not in regard of age, but in reſpect of knowledge and underſtanding; children, is a word that denotes imperfection and weakneſs, inſtability and ungroundedneſs in knowledge. 2. How the unſteadineſs of theſe profeſſors is expreſs'd by a double metaphor; the former drawn from a wave in the ſea, they are "toſſed to and fro;" the latter drawn from a light cloud hovering in the air, "carried about" from place to place; neither wave nor cloud have any conſiſtency, but are both moving, if the leaſt wind be ſtirring. 3. The cauſe of this inſtability; "every wind of doctrine;" profeſſors that have no ſolid principles, every wind of doctrine has power over, to drive them to and fro, every teacher can caſt them into what mould he pleaſes, and blow them, like glaſſes, into this or that ſhape, at the pleaſure of his breath: But why "wind of doctrine?" Becauſe there is no ſolidity in it, but being wind in the preacher, it breeds but wind in the hearer, becauſe of its variety and novelty, and becauſe of its prevalency over unſtaid men. How ſuddenly, ſometimes, is a family, a town, yea, a whole country, leavened with a particular error? 4. The character of thoſe impoſtors and ſeducers that do thus "unſettle and unhinge men;" they uſe ſleight; a metaphor taken from gameſters, who with art and ſleight of hand can cog the dice, and win the game. Seducers cheat with falſe doctrines, as gameſters do with falſe dice: "Cunning craftineſs;" the word ſignifies the ſubtlety and deep policy of the old Serpent; implying, that ſeducers are old and cunning gameſters, ſkilful to deceive; "they lie in wait to deceive;" the word ſignifies an ambuſhment, or ſtratagem of war, implying, that all ſeducers ſleight and craftineſs is to this very end and purpoſe, that they may entrap and catch men within the ambuſh of their impoſtures. From the whole learn, That ſeducers and falſe teachers are crafts-maſters of ſleight and ſubtlety, and ſtratagems of deceit; they have artifices, ways and methods to take men unawares, and to make merchandiſe of the people; they wreſt and wrack the Scriptures to make them ſpeak what they pleaſe, not what the Holy Ghoſt intended: If all this art fails, their laſt device is, to recommend their doctrines upon ſome private pretended revelation, and uncommon impulſe of the Holy Spirit; by all which methods they lie in wait to deceive. (B.) Obſerve farther, With what nervous eloquence, and ſelect variety of expreſſions, the great Apoſtle here deſcribes the weakneſs of thoſe unſteddy Chriſtians, who are deluded by juggling deceivers; and ſets off the villainy and enſnaring ſleights of thoſe ſubtil impoſtors. He calls them (nepioi) infants, unſteddy and trifling; compares them to ſhips without ballaſt, toſſed by the waves, and the ſport of winds: Then the villainy of heretical deceivers is expreſs'd in a manner inimitable; in ſuch ſtrong words as will not bear a full and cloſe tranſlation. Our Engliſh tranſlators have done the firſt part well; but have fail'd and ſunk in the latter. It may be paraphras'd to this purpoſe; That we may no longer be infants, toſſed with waves, and whirl'd about with every wind of doctrine, by the cheating ſlight of men, by craft and doubling, according to the artifice and ſubtil methods of impoſture. (Blackw.) And whereas the Papiſts argue from hence for an infallible guide, the reader may find a full confutation of that in Dr. Whitby's Comment on this text. See the notes on Matth. xi. 7. and xxiv. 4. 1 Cor. iii. 1. and xiv. 20.

Speaking the truth in love.] That is, Cleaving to the truth of Chriſt's doctrine, and living in love with one another, ye may grow up in Chriſt, by making progreſs in all Chriſtian graces; being united to him, as members to the head. (B.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 5. 1 Cor. xii. 12, 27. and Gal. ii. 5.

Joined together, and compacted.] Synarmologoumenon ſignifies the fit and apt correſpondency of one part to another, ch. ii. 21. but ſymbibazomenon is the faſtening and cementing them together, as by pins, &c. when ſo fitted. He purſues his metaphor of building; whoſe parts are firſt ſquared, hewed, and fitted; and afterwards faſtened, tenanted, cemented, and join'd together in their true places. And his meaning is, That the Spirit of Chriſt (the head of this body) by the officers (gifts) thereof, every one performing his duty, in his rank and office, according to the proportion of the influence of the ſpirit and gifts receiv'd, firmly uniteth and faſteneth together all the members and parts of the Church: Preſerving them firſt from diſſolution by ſchiſms and factions; and then augmenting the whole body, both in the ſanctity of the preſent, and addition of new, members. He calleth the officers joints, becauſe they are the uniting of the whole Church: As the ſeveral congregations of Laity are join'd under their reſpective Paſtors and Prieſts; and the Prieſts in their Biſhop, &c. The Apoſtle purſues this metaphor in bodies of all ſorts; vegetables, as trees; animals, as men; artificial, as houſes; politick, as corporations: And herein the officers (gifts) are repreſented, both, 1. As fitting them for unition: 2. As joints and cement, uniting all the members ſo fitted: And, 3. As nerves and veſſels, communicating life, motion, and ſpirit, to all the parts. (Fell) See the notes on ch. ii. 21. John xv. 1, &c. and Rom. xii. 5. And as to the phyſical objections againſt this paſſage, the reader may ſee them conſider'd at large by Dr. Hammond.

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. This I ſay therefore and teſtify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk in the vanity of their mind, having the underſtanding darkned, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, becauſe of the blindneſs of their hearts: Who being paſt feeling, have given themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs. But ye have not ſo learned Chriſt; if ſo be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jeſus: That ye put off concerning the former converſation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful luſts; and be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind: And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs. Wherefore putting away lying, ſpeak every man truth with his neighbour: For we are members one of another. Be ye angry, and ſin not: Let not the ſun go down upon your wrath: Neither give place to the devil. Let him that ſtole, ſteal no more: But rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are ſealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterneſs and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-ſpeaking be put away from you, with all malice. And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven you.

This I ſay therefore.] The Apoſtle, having finiſh'd his general exhortation to love and unity amongſt all Chriſtians, comes here to preſs the practice of particular duties: And firſt, To take ſpecial care, that, being now converted Chriſtians, they walk no more like ignorant and unconverted Heathens; "Henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk." And next, he gives particular inſtances how, and after what manner, the Gentiles, in the black night of Paganiſm, did walk; "In the vanity of their minds," &c. (B.) See the notes on ver. i. ch. ii. 12. Matth. xiii. 14. Acts xxvi. 17, 18. Rom. i. 21. and 1 Cor. vi. 11.

Not ſo learned Chriſt.] That is, The doctrine of Chriſt in the Goſpel; which does not allow us to imitate the Heathens practices.

The old man.] See the notes on ch. ii. 10. Rom. vi. 6. xii. 2. and xiii. 14. and 2 Cor. v. 17.

Putting away lying.] Here the Apoſtle deſcends to ſome particulars permitted by the Heathens, but by no means allowable to the Chriſtians. The firſt whereof is lying; which, in ſome caſes, the philoſophers made no ſcruple to excuſe, nay even to approve. But the Apoſtle here urges the duty of ſpeaking truth; as a duty reſulting from our union into one myſtical body: In which there ought to be no manner of fraud practiſed; as experience proves, that never any is between the members of the natural body. The deſign of ſpeech is to communicate our thoughts, and to profit one another; not to diſguiſe them, and ſo by deceiving to hurt one another. Againſt this deſign all manner of falſhood ſeems to make: And where that is attended with malice and miſchievous intent, I ſhould rather chuſe to call this a complicated crime, than to ſay that untruth without it is no crime at all. It will not follow, that a man ſhall be obliged to ſpeak all truths that may do hurt: But neither will it follow, becauſe ſome truths may be innocently and profitably conceal'd, that therefore we are at liberty to ſpeak things which are untrue. For whatever particular convenience may perſuade in ſome extraordinary caſes; ſurely, an obſtinate ſilence is more becoming a Chriſtian's ſincerity and charity, than ſuch impoſtures as tend to that general inconvenience of deſtroying the ſecurity and mutual confidence which ought always to be among men whoſe common intereſt always is the ſame. The examples produced out of ſcripture, in vindication of all thoſe which are uſually ſtiled officious lies, cannot be of any conſiderable weight; becauſe they are only related as hiſtorical facts, but no where recommended as a pattern for our imitation. And thoſe lies which are term'd ironical, and made a matter of jeſt or ſport, ſeem to be diverſions much beneath the character of a grave and good man. They may adminiſter a little mirth to the perſon uſing them: But it is ſufficient condemnation to this ſort of entertainment, that thoſe parties generally think themſelves deſpiſed and ill uſed, who diſcover that they have been impoſed upon by them. (Stanh.) See this point diſcuſs'd at large in Bp. Prideaux's Lecture De Mendacio.

Be ye angry, and ſin not.] That this, conſider'd in itſelf, and upon all occaſions whatſoever, is unlawful, neither the moſt rigid philoſophers, nor the ſevereſt Chriſtians have, I think, ever been able to prove. It is one of the paſſions implanted in us by nature. The firſt motions of it ſeem to be mechanical and neceſſary: The haſtineſs or ſlowneſs to it depends in great meaſure upon the temper of the body, and the animal ſpirits. Thus far it is not ſubject to the power of our own will, or to the corrections of reaſon and religion. This alſo is a paſſion (like all the reſt of thoſe ſtiled ſimple and natural ones) capable of ſerving excellent purpoſes, when manag'd with ſobriety and diſcretion; For there is a tameneſs of ſpirit, which deſerves cenſure and reproof; and in ſome caſes, we even do well to be angry. For admitting anger, according to the received notion of it, to proceed upon a deſire of obtaining ſatisfaction for ſome injury done or conceived to be done, to us, or to thoſe we love; the honour of God, the reverence due to the laws, the love of virtue, the protection of good men, may make this not only innocent, but neceſſary and commendable. For inſtance; when the name of God, his word, and truth, things which ought to be moſt ſacred, are boldly violated and impiouſly trampled upon; no good Chriſtian can, none in a public character may, ſee this done without indignation; nor is oblig'd to ſuffer the offenders to paſs off unrebuked for their wickedneſs and folly. Thus Moſes his "anger waxed hot" at the molten Calf, Exod. xxxii. 19. And our bleſſed Saviour himſelf look'd upon the Phariſees "with anger," Mark iii. 5. And as theſe occaſions, where the glory of God, and the good of others, are concern'd, juſtify ſome reſentments of this kind: So St. Paul here ſeems to imply, that they may be warrantable alſo with regard to private injuries and affronts; provided always, that due care be taken, to reſtrain their exceſſes, and to conquer and compoſe them in time. The manner of this exhortation does plainly argue, That however, upon ſome occaſions, and in ſome degrees, anger may be lawful; yet, the juſteſt anger cannot be excuſed, when it continues long. For tho' the firſt motions of our paſſion may not be under our check and juriſdiction; tho' we deſire, and grieve, and reſent, as naturally and unavoidably as we hunger or thirſt: Yet, when that firſt guſt is over, the governing part of the ſoul may and ought to interpoſe its powers, and by a timely and prudent care quell the rebellious diſturber of our peace: Lay the ſtorm we may and muſt, tho' we could not prevent the blowing of the wind, nor the ſwelling of the waves when it did blow. No Heathen Maſters of morality do ever mention the peeviſh without blame: But for the ſullen and moroſe, who feed upon the bitter morſel, and turn it into gall, no terms of reproach were ever thought too hard; much leſs will Chriſtianity endure the harbouring and cheriſhing of any evil thoughts. If theſe intrude, we muſt immediately caſt them out, compoſe our ſpirits, and return to a peaceable and kind diſpoſition. Silent grudges, and ſecret contrivances of revenge, and quarrels perpetuated, or induſtriouſly prolong'd, can never be conſiſtent with the obedience of that Maſter, who hath ſo ſolemnly enjoin'd all his ſervants to forgive, and to love their enemies, Matth. v. 44. No man can nouriſh a laſting anger, without living in open defiance to the duty of charity: And, ſince no other perſon's breach of his duty can bear me out in the breach of mine, and an exceſs may be committed (the worſt exceſs indeed) in the duration, as well as in the degree, of a paſſion; 'tis certain, that every one who continues in a ſtate of enmity and wrath, commits a fault, which the higheſt provocations cannot juſtify; and expoſes his ſalvation to infinite hazard and danger. For, we ought by all means to take notice of thoſe very ſignificant words, added as an enforcement of the Apoſtle's exhortation, "neither give place to the devil." As to the "not letting the ſun go down upon their wrath," it was a precept even of Heathen Philoſophers; obſerved moſt ſtrictly by the ſcholars of Pythagoras in particular; who, after any quarrel, conſtantly ſhook hands, and profeſs'd hearty reconciliation,, at the ſetting of the ſun. This therefore was an uſage very proper to remind thoſe of, who had been converted from Paganiſm; becauſe referring to a duty, which the wiſeſt and beſt among themſelves, even when not yet Chriſtians, thought of indiſpenſable obligation. But now the Apoſtle adds a weightier enforcement; that of the ill conſequences, certain to attend the neglect of it. For the devil, as a tempter, works upon us by our paſſions: The exceſſes of theſe, in what kind ſoever, are the only handle he can lay hold on us by; and he, who is continually upon the watch for our deſtruction, will be ſure to ſlip no advantage we give him. But a greater can in no caſe be given him, than by the continuance of our anger; whereby we give place to, or make room in ourſelves for the devil. (Stanh.) See Mr. Collier's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Matth. v. 22, 44. Mark iii. 5. Acts xv. 39. Rom. xii. 19. and 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c.

Steal no more.] This exhortation was needful, becauſe in many nations it was not counted a ſin to ſteal, ſaith Sex. Empyricus; nor were they much aſhamed at it when it was objected to them, ſaith Bardeſanes. (W.) See the notes on Mark x. 19. Luke iii. 13. and Rom. xii. 6. &c.

No corrupt communication.] See the notes on ch. v. 4. and Matth. xii. 35.

Grieve not the Holy Spirit.] As being angry, ver. 26. is opening the door, and expoſing ourſelves, by taking away our watch and guard, to the temptations of the Devil, ver. 27. ſo here, "corrupt communication" is "grieving the Holy Spirit;" that is, contradicting and oppoſing its ſanctity, by unclean, ſcurrilous, and obſcene diſcourſe. To "grieve the Holy Spirit, is, 1. To offend him, and cauſe him to depart or withdraw his inſpirations and aſſiſtance: 2. To grieve and ſcandalize other ſpiritual perſons: And, 3. To grieve the Spirit in them. (Fell) If we compare this verſe and the former, we ſhall ſee, that unholy, corrupt, lewd, and filthy diſcourſe deprives the guilty of the ſacred influences of the Holy Spirit; which as they are the earneſt of our future happineſs, ſo are they the pledges of our pardon and acceptance. What a mighty argument is this, to prevail with Chriſtians to abſtain from all ſuch diſcourſe, which is an infallible token of a debauch'd and corrupt mind: And what an afflicting thought muſt it be to all who love God and their neighbour, to conſider how common ſuch diſcourſe and communication is, among vaſt numbers who ſay they are Chriſtians. (Fox) For the more critical ſenſe of this phraſe, ſee Dr. Hammond on this text. See alſo the notes on ch. i. 13. John vi. 27. and 2 Cor. i. 21.

All bitterneſs, and wrath.] Our Apoſtle had, in the former verſe, exhorted them, not to "grieve the Holy Spirit of God;" he here acquaints them with the particular ſins which would afflict and grieve him; viz. Bitterneſs; that is, a ſecret grudge and a ſmother'd diſpleaſure againſt our brother: Wrath; or an impetuous fierceneſs of ſpirit, upon ſome real or apprehended injury: Anger; or an eager deſire of revenge: Clamour; that is, loud threatnings, or reviling language: Evil ſpeaking, either of others, or to others: And malice, or a rooted enmity; which is the rage of the Devil, and renders a man as like the Devil, as any ſin on this ſide hell. And then, as a proper remedy againſt all thoſe ſins, he exhorts to mutual "kindneſs one to another," tender heartedneſs, and forgiveneſs; and all this according to the example of God himſelf, who "for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven us." (B.) See the notes on ver. 2. Matth. vi. 14. and Mark xi. 25.

CHAP. V.

After general exhortations to mutual love, purity, circumſpection and ſobriety, the Apoſtle deſcendeth to the particular duties between husbands and Wives.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. BE ye therefore followers of God, as dear children; And walk in love, as Chriſt alſo hath loved us, and hath given himſelf for us, an offering and a ſacrifice to God for a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour. But fornication, and all uncleanneſs, or covetouſneſs, let it not be once named amongſt you, as becometh ſaints: Neither filthineſs, nor fooliſh talking, nor jeſting, which are not convenient: But rather giving of thanks. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean perſon, nor covetous man who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Chriſt, and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words: For becauſe of theſe things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience. Be not ye therefore partakers with them. For ye were ſometimes darkneſs, but now are ye light in the Lord Walk as children of light; (For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodneſs, and righteouſneſs, and truth) proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them. For it is a ſhame even to ſpeak of thoſe things which are done of them in ſecret. But all things that are reproved, are made manifeſt by the light: For whatſoever doth make manifeſt is light. Wherefore he ſaith, Awake thou that ſleepeſt, and ariſe from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give thee light.

Followers of God.] See the notes on ch. iv. 32. Matth. v. 48. Luke vi. 36. John viii. 39. xiii. 34. and xv. 12. Rom, iv. 25. Gal. ii. 20. and iv. 1. &c.

An offering and a ſacrifice.] The difference of (proſphora) offering and (thuſia) ſacrifice, is ordinarily obſervable: See Heb. x. where inſtead of thuſia and proſphora, "ſacrifice and offering," ver. 5. is holokautoma, kai peri hamartias, ": Burnt-offering and ſacrifice for ſin," ver. 6. Where, as (thuſia) ſacrifice is certainly expreſs'd by holocautoma, the bodies of beaſts wholly burnt upon the altar (of which therefore no part came to the Prieſt, Heb. xiii. 11.) ſo the (proſphora) oblation is the meat-offering, the flour, and oyl. Lev. ii. 2. of which part was burnt with fire, and the remnant was Aaron's and his ſons, ver. 3. And as of the former of theſe, when it was offered by Noah, Gen. viii. 20. it is ſaid, that "the Lord ſmelled a ſweet ſavour," ver. 21. and that as a token that his wrath was pacified, as it there follows, "The Lord ſaid in his heart, I will not again curſe the ground any more," &c. So Lev. ii. 2. the other is ſaid to be "an offering made by fire, a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord." And accordingly here, to the mention of offering and ſacrifice, meat offering and burnt-offering, is added (eis oſmen euodias) for a ſmell of ſweet ſavour; which notes the death of Chriſt, which is expreſſed by it, to be a means appointed by God for the averting his wrath from us, for the appeaſing and reconciling him to us, as thoſe ſacrifices were wont to do; and an engagement to us to live ſuch lives as may be acceptable to God, contrary to the noiſome luſts. ver. 3. (H.) There were two altars in the Temple, the brazen for bloody ſacrifices, and the golden for the offering of incenſe. The former was a type of Chriſt's bloody offering upon the Croſs; the latter, of his interceſſion for us. In regard of both, the Apoſtle here ſaith, that Chriſt gave himſelf both for "an offering and a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, to God for us." (Aſſ.) Whereby his meaning is, not only that it was a true and proper ſacrifice, but that it was eſteem'd and receiv'd as ſuch by God the Father. (Johnſ.) See the notes on Acts x. 4. 2 Cor. ii. 15. and v. 21. Gal. i. 4. and ii. 20.

But fornication.] See the notes on Acts xv. 29. and 1 Cor. v. 1. and 6. 18.

Or covetouſneſs.] See the notes on ver. 5. Luke xii. 15. and Rom. i. 29.

Neither filthineſs.] The Apoſtle having utterly exterminated fornication and all uncleanneſs in practice, proceeds here to paſs the ſame ſentence upon "filthineſs, and fooliſh talking, and jeſting;" as things alſo diſagreeable to the character of Chriſtians. A caution highly reaſonable and neceſſary; if we conſider, 1. The uſe of ſpeech in general; viz. The ſetting forth of God's honour, the inſtruction of our brethren, and promoting their virtue. 2. The miſchiefs which follow upon the abuſe of ſpeech; not only ſuch as it draws upon the guilty perſon himſelf, but ſuch as fall upon thoſe with whom we keep company. And theſe indeed are infinite; for, with the ſame eaſe are both good and evil notions convey'd; but by no means both with the ſame efficacy and ſucceſs: The good have a natural corruption to work againſt, and many prejudices to diſlodge; but the evil find us diſpoſed and ready to their hand. And, 3. That this guilt and danger hath ſome degrees of aggravation, peculiar to the caſe now under debate. St. Paul, who, in other inſtances, adviſes us to ſtand our ground againſt temptations, and fight it out manfully, hath counſell'd his ſon Timothy, to flee from youthful luſts, 2. Tim. ii. 22. becauſe the enemy in this attack is favour'd by ſo ſtrong a party within, that the ſafeſt courſe is to ſave ourſelves; not by a formal repulſe, but by giving him a diverſion. Maimonides makes it an intimation, how hateful obſcenity is to God, that in the language taught his own people, there are no words expreſſing either thoſe parts, or the uſes ſerv'd by them, which modeſty labours to conceal from common ſight; but all theſe things are ſignified by figurative and transferr'd ſenſes, of words, which literally have a ſound perfectly inoffenſive: And the heathen Orator (Cic. de offic. l. i.) hath expoſed ſome philoſophers, who took upon them to vindicate the promiſcuous uſe of all words, and confined turpitude and indecency to things and actions only. And, can there be a greater reproach upon us, than that we ſhould not diſcern, by the brighteſt revelation, what a Heathen did by the mere light of reaſon? That he ſhould judge ſo nicely the decorum proper for the character of a man, and we ſo little regard what becomes that of a Chriſtian? Surely our precepts of the ſtricteſt chaſtity, which oblige even to purity of thought, the example of our Lord and maſter, and our diſcoveries of a future and immortal ſtate, where even the moſt innocent appetites of this kind ſhall ceaſe, ought to convince us, that the ſtricteſt rules of modeſty ſhould be our meaſure; and that our words and actions ſhould all carry ſuch an air of innocence and gravity, as may not only keep us from giving offence, but procure to us and our profeſſion reſpect and veneration from all with whom we converſe. This, I ſuppoſe, will be allow'd, by all perſons of morality and tolerable underſtanding, ſo far as theſe two words, "filthineſs and fooliſh talking" are concern'd; which may ſeem to denote ſuch coarſe ribaldry, and barefaced lewdneſs, as few are capable of hearing patiently: But for the third, of jeſting, there may be ſome doubt; the rather, becauſe this is thought ſo requiſite to ſeaſon our converſation with mirth. For clearing this point, let us obſerve, 1. That the word here carries a particular and reſtrained ſenſe; ſuch as the company we find it in ſufficiently determines. And thus it makes no difference from the former, as to the ſubſtance of the things ſpoken, but purely as to the manner of ſpeaking them. And then I think it very evident, that this is at leaſt as much to be declined, as either of the other: For our diſcourſe is criminal, not according to the ſound words ſtrike upon the ear, but according to the images they awaken in our minds. When therefore the matter and deſign is obſcene, the more artful the diſguiſe is, the more miſchief it does: It inſinuates laſciviouſneſs with more confidence and ſecurity, fixes upon the memory by the uncommonneſs of its wit, engages the fancy by being dreſs'd up cleaner in ambiguities, and puts us off our guard by ceaſing to give manifeſt offence. But, 2. If we take this word, jeſting, in its general importance, it may be, and often is, ſo order'd, as to be by no means unlawful, or any way unbecoming a Chriſtian. To ſuppoſe men oblig'd always to be upon the ſerious and diſmal, were to charge Chriſtianity with the hardſhip of bereaving them of one of the moſt valuable comforts of life. To admit laughter one's ſelf, or to provoke it in our brethren, is not below the character of the graveſt: And men may very innocently be as facetious as they pleaſe; provided the ſubject they chuſe be fit, the deſign harmleſs, the time ſeaſonable, the meaſure moderate; that they remember, jeſting may be good diverſion, but cannot be good buſineſs; and that nothing is truly wit, or ought to pleaſe, which would entertain us to the prejudice of God or our neighbour, of religion or juſtice, of modeſty or good manners. (Stanh.) Eutrapelia is generally taken for facetiouſneſs, and a pleaſant turn of wit. St. Paul uſes it for that licentiouſneſs of ſpeech which treſpaſſeth againſt religion and good manners; which no man uſes, or admires, but who has an unſound judgment and vicious taſte. The Oriental verſions render it well, by ſcurrility, and ſcoffing abuſive words: And, in Pindar, Ergon kai epos eutrapelon, is an action and word of ſcurrility and lewdneſs; and that noble writer had piety to be ſenſible of the crime, and a genius to find a word proper to expreſs it. (H. W.) and Blackw.) See the notes on Matth. xii. 35. and 1 Cor. xv. 34.

Giving of thanks.] Euchariſtia ſignifies ordinarily thankſgiving; and that, belonging eſpecially to God, may be meant here by it, tho' no mention of God be added to it: And ſo the context may well bear, Let there be no unclean ſcurrilous jeſts uſed among you, "but rather giving of thanks;" that is, Let the Chriſtian's way of mirth be far from that of obſcene wit; the recounting the mercies of God in Chriſt, will far better become a Chriſtian. But yet, it may be obſerv'd, what notion there is of Charis (of which this word is compounded) ſeveral times in the Epiſtles, for piety, and Chriſtian virtue in general, ch. iv. 29. Col. iii. 16. and iv. 6. And ſo perhaps, Euchariſtia may ſignify in this place, gracious, pious, religious diſcourſe in general, being ſet oppoſite to the filthy, obſcene diſcourſe preceding, and not to be reſtrain'd to one ſpecies of it, recounting the mercies of God. (H.)

Covetous man, who is an idolater.] Every man (as ſaith Jerome upon Amos) makes thoſe vices his God to which he wholly giveth himſelf; and whoſoever giveth any part of the worſhip due unto God, either with his body or his ſoul, to any creature, is an Idolater. The politician idolizeth his brain; the heretick, his fantaſtical opinion; the glutton, his belly; the wanton, his miſtreſs; the ambitious, his honour; the covetous, his money: To whom the name of an Idolater, in a peculiar manner, belongeth; 1. In reſpect of the object common to him and an idolater properly ſo taken: The Idols of the Heathen (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) are gold and ſilver; and ſo are thoſe of the covetous man; the one (as Paulinus obſerves) worſhipping the image of his Gods of gold and ſilver in the Church, the other that of the prince ſtampt upon his coin in his cheſt. 2. In reſpect of the acts common to them both: For an Idolater feareth his Gods; and ſo doth the covetous his Gold, not daring to diſpoſe of it for his neceſſary uſe: As the Idolater putteth his truſt and confidence in his Gods; ſo doth the covetous man in his goods: As the Idolater conceiveth, that he holdeth his life from his Gods; ſo the covetous man believeth, that his "life conſiſteth in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth," Luke xii. 15. And laſtly, as the Idolater ſetteth his heart and affections, and placeth his happineſs in his Idol-Gods; ſo the covetous man ſets his heart upon his gold and ſilver, and holdeth them for his chiefeſt good and higheſt felicity. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. vi 24.

Inheritance in the kingdom.] See the notes on Mark x. 24. 1 Cor. vi. 9. &c. and Gal. v. 19. &c.

Let no man deceive you.] Medeis humas apatato; Let no man ſeduce you, or lead you out of the right way. The word ſignifies not ſimply to ſeduce one from the truth, but to miſlead him with an appearance of truth. (Leigh.) See the notes on ch. ii. 2. Luke xxi. 8. Rom. i. 18. and 1 Cor. iii. 18. and vi. 13. &c.

Ye were ſometime darkneſs.] See the notes on ch. i. 18. and ii. 11. Matth. v. 16. John i. 5. iii. 19. and xii. 36. Rom. xiii. 12. and 2 Cor. iii. 18.

The fruit of the Spirit.] Many Greek copies, and all the Latin, and the Syriac, inſtead of (tou pneumatos) the Spirit, read it here (tou photos) the light, with which ye are enlightned: And ſo doth St. Jerome; taking no notice of the other reading. (W.) See the notes on Gal. v. 22.

What is acceptable.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 2.

Have no fellowſhip.] By "having no fellowſhip with" ſuch works, I preſume a great deal more to be meant, than not living in the habit, or under the power, of them; nay, or even than not complying with the temptations to them, and not committing them in our own perſons: Such as may declare our diſlike and abhorrence of them; particularly, 1. The keeping aloof off from, and, as much as our affairs will permit, ſhunning the converſation of ſcandalous wicked men: And this, for the diſcountenancing of vice, ſhaming them into better manners, and making them ſenſible, that the giving open ſcandal, by a profligate life, is an injury and affront to good men, which every one is concern'd to reſent. 2. When the perſons of ill men cannot, or ought not to be declined, yet that we be ſure to order matters ſo, that it may plainly appear, their wickedneſs hath no part of our favour and approbation; and that they themſelves, if this were removed, would be yet more dear and valuable in our eſteem. Where circumſtances will bear it, reproof, friendly admonition, or authoritative rebukes, are highly expedient: Where they will not, we muſt have recourſe to a forbidding look, a ſilence marking ſorrow or diſpleaſure, withdrawing from the company, or ſome ſuch teſtimony of being ill at eaſe, as a wiſe and good man will find always at hand, and chuſe, as a pious, but diſcreet, zeal ſhall direct. But, 3. There is one ſort of reproof, which no circumſtances can put out of our power, and which the Apoſtle ſeems to have had chiefly in view; viz. the diſclaiming all "fellowſhip with the works of darkneſs," by the light of a good example: For a bad example is never ſo effectually expoſed, nor the deformity and odiouſneſs of it ſo manifeſtly detected, as when ſet in oppoſition to, and illuſtrated by, a good one. Now, this reproof, as it is a duty indiſpenſible in the perſon giving, ſo is it unexceptionable, and can create no reſentment in the perſons on whom it falls; and the leſs, becauſe it is not particularly directed to this or that man, but general, and intended for all who need it. And, 4. As the moſt undeniable evidence, that the good man "hath no fellowſhip with the works of darkneſs," he will abſtain very carefully, not only from every thing that is poſitively and directly ſinful, but from all appearances of, and approaches to evil. (Stanh.) See the notes on Matth. xviii. 17. Rom. i. 32. vi. 21. and xiii. 12. and 1 Cor. v. 9.

Manifeſt by the light.] See the notes referr'd to, on ver. 8, and 14.

Awake thou that ſleepeſt.] Foraſmuch as all men are to give an account of all their works, at the dreadful tribunal of God, they are all call'd and ſummon'd by his word, to make ready their accounts, and prepare for the great Audit-day, and to awake from their ſleep and death of ſin, to be enlightned by the light of the Goſpel, and to walk anſwerably to that light. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 18. and ii. 1. Luke xv. 24. John i. 9. v. 25. and xi. 43. Rom. vi. 4. and xiii. 11. and 1 Cor xv. 34.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. See then that ye walk circumſpectly, not as fools, but as wiſe, redeeming the time, becauſe the days are evil. Wherefore be ye not unwiſe, but underſtanding what the will of the Lord is. And be not drunk with wine, wherein is exceſs; but be filled with the Spirit: Speaking to yourſelves in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, ſinging and making melody in your heart to the Lord, giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; ſubmitting your ſelves one to another in the fear of God.

That ye walk circumſpectly.] In regard therefore, that the difference is ſo great between the religion ye have left, and that which ye have now embrac'd; let your behaviour be wiſe and cautious, temper'd between an eaſy compliance with temptations, and an unſeaſonable vehemence in your carriage. The wiſdom, or circumſpection, requir'd by St. Paul in this place, tho' it may very well be underſtood of Chriſtian prudence in its utmoſt extent, is yet, by very eminent interpreters, preſum'd to bear a more eſpecial regard to that inſtance of it here mention'd: And that evil of the days, brought as an argument to enforce it, to mean that ſort of dangers and temptations more particularly, which the enemies and perſecutors of the Chriſtian faith, and their readineſs to take all advantages of any imprudence and want of conduct in the profeſſors of it, did at that time expoſe the Epheſians to. In this ſenſe the advice here given is of the ſame importance with that to the Coloſſians, ch. iv. 5. "Walk in wiſdom toward them that are without;" and with our Lord's direction to his diſciples, Matth. x. 16. (Stanh.) And here, we may farther obſerve, 1. That the particle pos generally, in the New Teſtament, is not to be rendred that, but how; eſpecially when it follows the verb blepete. Thus, Luke viii. 18. (Blepete pos akouete) "Take heed how ye hear: And, 1 Cor. iii. 10. (Blepeto pos epoikodomei) "Take heed how he buildeth thereupon." And ſo 'tis here, to modifie the accurate walking; and accordingly, 'tis anſwer'd with (hos) as; that they, behave themſelves warily between the two dangers of being corrupted on the one ſide, and devour'd on the other: In the firſt, not (hos aſophi) as fools, eaſy, and ſeducible people; in the ſecond, (hos ſophoi) as wiſe, and prudent men, who can manage their affairs to the beſt advantage, and not run hazards to no advantage. (H.) 2. That (exagorazeſthai ton cairon,) though it have a ſenſe very unlike the Engliſh words "redeeming the time," yet cannot well be literally rendred otherwiſe, than either ſo, or buying out, or gaining the time. Theodotion uſeth it in the active, exagorazontes kairon, Dan. ii. 8. by that rendring the Chaldee. And there the Vulgar have, redemitis tempus, and we, gaining, or buying the ſeaſon, referring particularly to the delays that they ſought to make thereby to ſave themſelves from danger. The full meaning of the phraſe in that place is, to uſe caution, and cunning, and dexterity, whether by delays, or any other means, for the ſaving of themſelves from that danger that was threatned them, ver. 5. And it ſeems to be a proverbial ſpeech, which the uſe had made to ſignifie more than the very literal of the words imported; and you may find it uſed in authors in the ſame or like words: As in Plutarch, St Chryſoſtome, and Nazianzen. And proportionably 'tis ſo here, to uſe all prudent artificial devices, to preſerve them from the evil times then preſent, times of high corruption, and ſo of danger to their ſouls; wherein the carnal heathen ſenſualities (to which they had ſuch temptation, and which were uſed in their myſteries and devotions) were very frequent among them, and againſt which the warning is very particular, in the former part of this chapter, ver. 6. &c. and to which he returns again, as far as concerns drunkenneſs (the expreſſion of the Heathens devotion in ſome of their worſhips, the Bacchanalia) ver. 8. And that 'tis this wiſdom and dexterity which is here primarily meant, in reſpect of thoſe ſpiritual dangers, the ſnares that were near their ſouls, may be conjectured by the verſe immediately following, where (dia tuto) for this cauſe, for this evilneſs of the days, they are adviſed not to be (aphrones) fools, as, ver. 16. (me hos aſophoi) not as fools, and (meketi nepioi) no longer children, or fools, ch. iv. 14. but underſtanding (ſunientes,) noting that prudence, (ſuneſis,) that we ſpeak of, "what the will of the Lord is," that is, how contrary Chriſtianity is to thoſe heathen courſes, which now by the cheats of the Gnoſticks are put off and commended to them, ver. 6. as things that are abſolutely indifferent. Beſides this, it may be applied alſo to that other prudence for avoiding of perſecutions, as thoſe are expreſſed by evil days, Gen. xlvii. 9. and Pſal. xlix. 5. not to throw ourſelves upon dangers unſeaſonably, where there is no probable advantage in our proſpect, but to ſpeak and exhort, when 'tis likely to proſper, and at other times to refrain: And this may properly be ſtyled gaining the time, watching opportunities; and when interpoſing would prove gainleſs, then to hold the peace, and expect ſome fitter ſeaſon. (H. Aſſ. Fell, W. and B.) See the notes on Matth. x. 16. John viii. 49, 59. ix. 4. xi. 9. and xii. 35. Rom. xii. 2, 11. and Gal. vi. 10.

Drunk with wine, wherein is exceſs.] Lycurgus, for the abuſe, took away all the uſe of wine among the Lacedemonians, and commanded all the vines to be pluckt up by the roots: And the Mahometans, for a like reaſon, forbid any of their ſect to drink wine under pain of death; affirming, that there lurks a Devil under every grape. But the Apoſtle is ſo far from ſimply condemning all uſe of wine, that he enjoins Timothy to "uſe a little wine for his ſtomach's ſake," 1 Tim. v. 23. And, in this very place, he doth not forbid the Epheſians to drink wine, but to be "drunk with wine, wherein is exceſs;" that is, all kind of riot, join'd with all manner of filthineſs and uncleanneſs. (Aſſ.) As for the critical import of the word (aſotia) exceſs, See Dr. Hammond, and Dr. Whitby, upon this text. See alſo the notes on Luke xv. 13. and xxi. 34. Acts ii. 15. and Rom. xiii. 13.

Speaking to your ſelves.] The difference of theſe three (pſalmoi, hymnoi, odai,) pſalms, hymns, ſongs, muſt be fetch'd from the Jews, who have three ſorts of canticles; firſt, a conciſe verſe; which is here called (pſalmos,) a pſalm; ſecondly, praiſe, celebration, depredicating of any thing, which is here (hymnos,) hymn; thirdly, canticum or cantio, whence is canticum canticorum, the ſong of ſongs, and to this anſwers here the odai, and the word pneumatikai, added to it, ſpiritual or chriſtian, is both in oppoſition to the eua Bakche, and the like drunken, ſenſual ſongs and ovations in their Bacchanalia, and Perhaps in reſpect of the chariſma then among them, as of praying, ſo of ſinging alſo, by that extraordinary gift of the Spirit, 1 Cor. xiv. 26. (H.) See the notes on Matth. xxvi. 30. Acts xvi. 25. and Col. iii. 16.

Giving thanks always.] The reaſonableneſs of doing this may appear, whether we conſider our duty, or our intereſt: Our duty, as it is an act of juſtice, and of religion; and our intereſt, as it contributes to our pleaſure, and to our profit. (Stanh.) We are to "give thanks for all things;" that is, 1. For all providences, whether proſperous or adverſe; for ſickneſs as well as health, God intending our good by both: And, 2. For all mercies; for ſparing mercy, preventing mercy, recovering mercy, for common benefits, for peculiar and diſtinguiſhing favours, for mercies receiv'd, for mercies expected, for what we have in hand, and what we have in hope. And all this we are to do always, "to God the father, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt." (B.)

Submitting your ſelves.] Paying all duties natural, civil, and eccleſiaſtical, "in the fear of God," and for Chriſt's ſake. See the notes on the texts here next following.

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. Wives, ſubmit your ſelves unto your own huſbands, as unto the Lord. For the huſband is the head of the wife, even as Chriſt is the head of the church: And he is the Saviour of the body. Therefore as the Church is ſubject unto Chriſt, ſo let the wives be to their own huſbands, in every thing. Huſbands, love your wives, even as Chriſt alſo loved the Church, and gave himſelf for it: That he might ſanctify and cleanſe it with the waſhing of water, by the word, that he might preſent it to himſelf, a glorious Church, not having ſpot, or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; but that it ſhould be holy and without blemiſh. So ought men to love their wives, as their own bodies: He that loveth his wife, loveth himſelf. For no man ever yet hated his own fleſh; but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it, even as the Lord the Church: For we are members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones. For this cauſe ſhall a man leave his father and mother, and ſhall be joyned unto his wife, and they two ſhall be one fleſh. This is a great myſtery: But I ſpeak between Chriſt and the Church. Neverthеleſs, let every one of you in particular ſo love his wife even as himſelf; and the wife ſee that ſhe reverence her huſband.

Wives ſubmit your ſelves.] Note here, 1. That the Apoſtle begins with the wife's duty firſt, before the huſband's; probably, becauſe her duty of intire ſubjection is the moſt difficult duty; and that which being conſcientiouſly diſcharg'd is a compelling motive to the huſband to ſet about his duty in like manner, 2. The particular and ſpecial duty, to which the wife is exhorted to; and that is ſubmiſſion. (B.) There is no difference in the duties, nor conſequently in the terms of the covenant, between the man and his wife, except that the woman is oblig'd to obey and ſerve her huſband: Nor is this a difference of our own deviſing, but is expreſly order'd by God himſelf; who, in thoſe places of Scripture, where he enjoins huſbands to love their wives, commands the wives to be ſubject and obedient to their huſbands. The rules alſo of ſociety make it neceſſary: For, equality, ſaith St. Chryſoſtome, breeds contention; and one of the two muſt be ſuperior, or elſe both would ſtrive perpetually for the dominion. Wherefore the laws of God, and the wiſdom of all nations, hath given the ſuperiority to the huſband. Among the Romans the wife was obliged by law to be ſubject to her huſband, and to call him Lord; But then, they had a peculiar magiſtrate to take care that the men did not abuſe this power, but that they ſhould rule over their wives with gentleneſs and tenderneſs. Wherefore women may and ought to pay all that obedience which the Goſpel requires of them: Nor have they any reaſon (eſpecially with us) to complain; becauſe there is really no ſlavery in obedience, which ſprings from love, and is paid in reſpect to the nobler ſex, and in requital for that protection which the weaker ſex both needs and enjoys in the ſtate of matrimony. So that it is not only an impious contempt of divine authority, but egregious pride and folly, for any woman to refuſe, either to promiſe or to pay this obedience, which is her chief advantage, if ſhe hath wiſdom to underſtand, or skill to manage it right. (Wheatly) See the notes on ch. i. 22. and iv. 15. Rom. xii. 5. and 1 Cor. vii. 2. &c. xi. 3. &c. xii. 27. and xiv. 34.

Huſbands, love your wives.] Here the Apoſtle recommends the duty of huſbands towards their wives: "Love your wives;" that is, with a ſpecial, peculiar, conjugal love, ſuch as none other muſt ſhare in. This duty includes a very affectionate regard to her, cohabitation with her, contentment and ſatisfaction in her alone, a patient bearing with her weakneſſes, a prudential hiding of her infirmities, a providing a ſupply of her wants ſuitable to her rank, a readineſs to inſtruct and direct her, a willingneſs to pray for her and with her; and wherever true conjugal love is found, all theſe duties will be performed. (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 5.

Gave himſelf for it.] See the notes on Rom. iv 25. and Gal. i. 4.

Sanctifie and cleanſe it.] By Chriſt's blood ſhed upon the croſs, and repreſented by the water of baptiſm: For 'tis Chriſt's blood, which "cleanſeth us from all ſin," 1 John i. 7. By "the word" here he either underſtandeth the ſacramental words uſed in baptiſm, or the promiſe of free juſtification and ſanctification in Chriſt receiv'd by faith. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John iii. 3. and xvii. 17.

Not having ſpot or wrinkle.] By ſpot we may underſtand the deformity of any ſinful work; by wrinkle, any duplicity, folding, or inſincerity in the intention: Or, by ſpot, greater ſins which defile the conſcience and ſtain the reputation; by wrinkle leſſer ſins, and thoſe of infirmity, which are ſome blemiſh to our ſpiritual beauty. But then, there is a queſtion, whether the Apoſtle ſpeaks of preſenting the Church to God in this world, or in the world to come in celeſtial glory. The anſwer is, That there is a double perfection, purity, and beauty of the Church; 1. Abſolute, without any "ſpot or wrinkle;" and that is not to be found in any of the ſons of men, while they are clothed with this body of death: And, if we ſpeak of that beauty and purity, the Church is ſaid to be pure, and to have no ſpot or wrinkle; not becauſe ſhe is ſo at preſent, but becauſe ſhe is prepar'd to be ſo hereafter. And, 2. A purity and perfection according to the ſtate of this preſent life; which conſiſteth in this, that all ſins are avoided, or repented of, and in Chriſt forgiven, and his righteouſneſs imputed: And in this ſenſe the Church is now, preſently, pure and undefiled, and yet not free from all ſinful imperfection. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 4. and 1 Cor. i. 8.

As their own bodies.] Happy is that marriage, where the husband and wife have always before their eyes theſe three motives of conjugal love, founded upon three ſorts of union; union of body, union of heart by natural love, and that holy myſterious union in Chriſt, which ought to be betwixt married perſons. The wife ought to apply herſelf to perfect her ſubmiſſion, to ſanctify her dependence, and to ſignalize her fidelity: The husband ought to provide for her wants, without encouraging profuſeneſs; to watch over her conduct, without giving her vexation; to keep her in ſubjection without conſtraint; to love her, without jealouſy; to oblige her, without flattery; to honour her, without making her proud; and to be hers entirely, without becoming her ſlave. (Q.)

Nouriſheth and cheriſheth.] Ectrephei kai thalpei. Theſe two words, "nouriſh and cheriſh," comprize under them a careful providing of all things needful for a man's body. To nouriſh is properly to feed; to ckeriſh is to keep warm: The former of which is done by food, the latter by apparel. (Leigh.) See the notes on ch. vi. 4.

Members of his body.] See the notes on ch. ii. 19. Rom. xii. 5. and 1 Cor. vi. 15. and xii. 27.

Shall a man leave.] See the notes on Mark x. 7. &c. and 1 Cor. vi. 16.

This is a great myſtery.] Not that of the bodily marriage, but that of the ſpiritual, betwixt Chriſt and his Church, as the Apoſtle here declareth himſelf: And this union he calls a myſtery, by reaſon that the ſame can no way be apprehended by any natural man, nor be ſearch'd out by any underſtanding whatſoever, but is acknowledg'd by faith, that Chriſt is our head and bridegroom, and we his ſpiritual bride and members, whereby all Chriſt's benefits, requiſite to our ſalvation, are beſtow'd upon us by Chriſt our bridegroom, as a dowry, and communicated to us from Chriſt as our head, as life in the natural body is convey'd to all the members from the head. (Aſſ.) This union the Apoſtle hath much inſiſted upon in this Epiſtle; under the ſeveral metaphors of head and members, tree and branches, ſtones and chief corner-ſtone in a building, and here of a husband and wife. (Fell)

Nevertheleſs, let every one of you.] All the duties of marriage are reducible to conjugal unity and love: A love which is tender and pure, vigilant and laborious, in the husband; humble and obedient, prudent and reſpectful, in the wife. One Jeſus Chriſt, one husband; one church, one wife: One ſpirit, and one heart, in the husband and in the wife, by the conformity of thoughts and will, as there is but one ſpirit and one heart in Chriſt and in the Church, which does all in both. (Q.)

See that ſhe reverence her husband.] This duty of reverence is made up of eſteem, love, and fear. The wife that reverences her husband, eſteems him, and dares not think meanly of him: Her eſteem of him provokes her love unto him; and her love of him is accompanied with an ingenuous fear to offend and grieve him: And the wife expreſſes this reverence in her deſires, by a reſpectful demeanour towards him, in her ſpeeches to him when with her, and of him when abſent from her; always mentioning him with reſpect and honour in her actions, by complying with his deſires, by following his directions, by hearkening to his reproofs, and by her chearful and reſpectful behaviour towards him at all times, and in all places, as well at home, as abroad before the world. (B.)

CHAP. VI.

The duty of children to their parents, and parents to their children: Of ſervants to their maſters, and maſters to their ſervants. And the chriſtian's armour againſt his ſpiritual enemies.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. CHildren, obey your parents in the Lord: For this is right. Honour thy father and mother (which is the firſt commandment with promiſe) that it may be well with thee, and thou mayſt live long on the earth. And ye, fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: But bring them up in the nurture, and admonition of the Lord.

Children.] Ta tekna. The word is here uſed in the plural number; and, according to the notation of it, ſignifieth ſuch as are begotten and born; and, being of the neuter gender, doth include both ſexes, males and females, ſons and daughters: Children of all ſorts, of what ſex, of what age, of what degree ſoever they be. (Leigh)

Obey your parents in the Lord.] Hypakouete. The word ſignifieth with all humble ſubmiſſion to hearken; and implieth both reverence and obedience: It importeth both a reſpectful attention in receiving the commands of a ſuperior, and a chearful obedience in the execution of them; (Idem) "In the Lord" may be underſtood, either, 1. "Parents in the Lord," that is to ſay, godly parents: But this cannot be the Apoſtle's meaning here, becauſe all parents as parents are to be obey'd. 2. In, that is for the Lord; becauſe he hath commanded it. Or, 3. As to the extent of it; in all things which are conſiſtent with the commands of God. (Aſſ. Fell and W.) See the notes on Matth. xv. 4. and Col. iii. 20. And as to the obedience of Children, in the particular caſe of marriage, ſee Bp. Hall's caſes of conſcience, Decade iv. Caſe 4.

The firſt commandment with promiſe.] That is, with a ſpecial promiſe: For that which is annex'd to the ſecond commandment is rather a general aſſertion, than a ſpecial promiſe. (W.) Every commandment has both a promiſe and a threatning implied in it, and annex'd to it; but this "is the firſt commandment with a promiſe" expreſs'd. (B.)

Provoke not your children to wrath.] That is, be not too ſevere towards them, abuſe not your parental power over them, provoke them not, nor imbitter their ſpirits againſt you, by denying them what is convenient for them, by inveighing with bitter words againſt them, by unjuſt, unſeaſonable, or immoderate correction of them. (Idem) The Greek word parorgizete is a compound, not to be fully expreſs'd by any one Engliſh word. The beſt and neareſt is, to exaſperate. It ſignifies an extremity in the uſe of authority; even too much auſterity and ſeverity, whereby children are provoked to wrath. (Gouge) See the notes on ch. iv. 26. Matth. xv. 4. and Col. iii. 21.

Bring them up in the nurture.] Ectrephete properly ſignifies to feed or nouriſh with all needful things. (Leigh) See Mr. Mart. Strong's ſermon on this text, and the notes on ch. v. 29.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Servants, be obedient to them that are your maſters according to the fleſh, with fear and trembling, in ſingleneſs of your heart, as unto Chriſt: Not with eye-ſervice, as men pleaſers, but as the ſervants of Chriſt, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing ſervice, as to the Lord, and not to men: Knowing that whatſoever good thing any man doth, the ſame ſhall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free. And ye, maſters, do the ſame things unto them, forbearing threatning: Knowing that your maſter alſo is in heaven, neither is there reſpect of perſons with him.

Servants, be obedient.] The duties of a chriſtian ſervant are, 1. Reſpect; and that not only outward, but inward and ſincere. 2. Fear; not ſo much of being blamed and puniſh'd, as of being wanting to his duty, and of offending his maſter. 3. Doing whatever belongs to his maſter's ſervice faithfully, and having his intereſt at heart. 4 Obedience, in ſingleneſs of heart, rejecting all thoſe internal contradictions, and thoſe malicious and rebellious reflections of wicked ſervants. 5. "With good will" and affection, looking upon his maſter as a friend, whom one would ſerve by choice and inclination, not as a ſtranger or an enemy whom one would obey only by force. 6. Having reſpect in him either to the grace, or to the authority and perſon of Jeſus Chriſt 7. Not barely doing that which is ſufficient to pleaſe man whom he ſees, but that likewiſe which will ſatisfie God whom he cannot ſee. 8. Propoſing to himſelf, as the end and motive of his obedience, the glory of the ſupreme Lord and maſter, more than the ſervice of his earthly maſter. 9. Loving his ſtate and condition, becauſe it is the will and appointment of God. 10. Looking upon himſelf as a ſervant of Chriſt, who has a right to imploy him in his body after what manner he pleaſes, having redeem'd him with his blood. 11. Labouring with ſuch a diſpoſition of mind, as is worthy of Jeſus Chriſt whom he ſerves. And, 12. Encouraging himſelf under his pains and labour, by reflecting, That all are equal in the ſight of God; that to him the ſervant is as dear as his maſter; that he conſiders only the work, and not the condition of the workman; that nothing which a man has done for the ſake of God ſhall go without a reward; and that this reward is God himſelf. (Q.) The obedience and faithfulneſs of ſervants to their maſters is by St. Paul here, and in the epiſtle to the Coloſſians, ſettled upon the firmeſt foundation, and deliver'd in ſtrong and ſubſtantial words, which fill and entertain the ear with the eaſineſs and vigour of the compoſition, and convey to the mind a clear and noble idea of the duty deſcrib'd. Servants obey your maſters; not with eye-ſervice, as men-pleaſers. Don't ſerve them only when under their eye, and in fear of their diſpleaſure; but out of a principle, that will alleviate the trouble of your condition, and raiſe the merit of your ſervices; ſincerity of heart and conſcience of duty, and obedience to the ſovereign Lord of all, and the moſt wiſe and gracious diſpoſer of yourſelves and all your affairs. There is a more natural and clean coalition in the compound words in the Greek, than in any other language. Our tranſlation, tho' ſtrong and good, yet ſinks much below the great original. The celebrated Grotius here makes a faint and low compliment, when he ſays, Paul has ſometimes words elegantly compounded. Had the excellent writer ſaid, St. Paul has often words very elagantly compounded and nobly ſignificant, it would have been but juſtice to the Apoſtle, and no diſparagement to the skill and ſagacity of the critick. (Blackw.) See the notes on ver. 1. Luke xvii. 7. Acts x. 35. Rom. ii. 11. 2 Cor. v. 10. and vii. 15.

And ye maſters do the ſame.] Not the ſame things for kind, but for the manner of doing them: That is, in obedience to the ſame command of God, with an eye to the ſame glory of God, with the ſame ſingleneſs of heart, and with the ſame love and good will. (B.) Knowing, 1. That we, with reſpect to God, are ſervants, and that as we mete to our ſervants, he will mete to us. 2. That his compaſſion and readineſs to forgive our treſpaſſes, ſhould make us alſo ready to remit the treſpaſſes of our ſervants. And, 3. That the relation of ſervants doth not make God leſs ready to ſhew kindneſs to them, and own them as his children, and therefore ſhould not induce us to deſpiſe and deal ſeverely with them. (W.) See the notes on Acts x. 34. and Rom. ii. 11.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Finally, my brethren, be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to ſtand againſt the wiles of the devil. For we wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt principalities, againſt powers, againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſs in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withſtand in the evil day, and having done all, to ſtand. Stand therefore, having your loyns girt about with truth, and having on the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs; and your feet ſhod with the preparation of the goſpel of peace; above all, taking the ſhield of faith, wherewith ye ſhall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of ſalvation, and the ſword of the ſpirit, which is the word of God: Praying always with all prayer and ſupplication in the ſpirit, and watching thereunto with all perſeverance, and ſupplication, for all ſaints; and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the myſtery of the Goſpel: For which I am an ambaſſador in bonds: That therein I may ſpeak boldly, as I ought to ſpeak. But that ye alſo may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus a beloved brother and faithful miniſter in the Lord, ſhall make known to you all things: Whom I have ſent to you for the ſame purpoſe, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts. Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith from God the father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in ſincerity. Amen.

¶ Written from Rome unto the Epheſians, by Tychicus.

Finally.] See the notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 11.

Be ſtrong in the Lord.] The Apoſtle had made his earneſt prayer to God, ch. iii. 16. "that he would grant them, according to the riches of his glory, to be ſtrengthned with might by his Spirit, in the inner man," that ſo they might be able to perform all their Chriſtian duty, which follows in the enſuing part of the Epiſtle, till we come to this text: In which he puts them in mind, that it was not ſufficient to receive ſtrength from heaven in their inner man; but they muſt alſo be ſtrong, or ſtrengthen themſelves, not indeed in themſelves, but "in the Lord," in that heavenly ſtrength which our bleſſed Saviour gives us, "and in the power of his might," wherewith he will always aſſiſt our weakneſs. (Patrick) See Mr. H. Lawrence's ſerm. 1646. and Dr. Patrick's 1680. both on this text; and the notes on ver. 13. &c. ch. iii. 16. and 1 Cor. xvi. 13.

Put on the whole armour of God.] The Apoſtle, who could beſt explain his own mind in the foregoing exhortation, immediately adds this injunction, "Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to ſtand againſt the wiles of the Devil." It was not enough, it ſeems, barely to confide in the invincible ſtrength of the Lord Jeſus; but they muſt put their own hand to the work, and prepare themſelves for the encounter, and valiantly, when occaſion ſerves, enter into it and ſuſtain it. For oppoſition we muſt expect, as the Apoſtle ſhews, ver. 12. and great oppoſition, from very powerful, very ſubtle, very induſtrious, and likewiſe inviſible enemies. This we are apt to make an argument, why we cannot hold out, but ſhould deſpair of being able to do our duty. But the Apoſtle, quite contrary, makes it an argument, why we ſhould be ſtrong, and reſolv'd, and watchful, and ready arm'd againſt all temptations, and "able to ſtand;" becauſe we have to do with ſuch potent and crafty enemies, who are ſo much above us, "in high places," from whence they can more eaſily aſſault us. This he repeats again, ver. 13. "Wherefore, take unto you the whole armour of God:" That is, becauſe ye have ſo many, ſo great, and ſo dangerous enemies to conflict withal, "take unto you" (that is, to put on) that divine armour which God himſelf furniſhes you withal, and let no part of it be wanting, but be entirely at all times cover'd with it, that ſo "ye may be able to withſtand (or to reſiſt with conſtancy and patience) in the evil day," or the time when ye muſt endure many calamities for Chriſt's ſake; "and having done all, to ſtand;" that is, having compleated your reſiſtance, by an unyielding reſolution to conſent to nothing againſt your duty, ye may remain as conquerors over all thoſe enemies that aſſault you. "Stand therefore," ver. 14. he repeats it a third time, the more to imprint their duty in their mind, and to excite and encourage them unto it. He would not have them doubt of getting the better, but be confident they ſhould be able to withſtand all manner of oppoſition; provided they put on entirely that compleat armour, which he was about to recommend to them from God himſelf. Without that, their confidence even in Chriſt, and his mighty power, would not keep them in ſafety; but they were to truſt in him, imploying thoſe weapons which he had given them for their defence and ſecurity; an account of which we have in the verſes following. (Patr.) See the notes on ch. iv. 16. Rom. xiii. 12. and 2 Cor. x. 4. and the particular notes here next ſubjoin'd.

The whole armour of God.] See the notes on ver. 13.

The wiles of the Devil.] Methodeia, being deriv'd from meta and hodos, ſignifies properly a way-laying, circumvention, or going about, as thoſe do who ſeek after their prey. And the Apoſtle may ſeem to allude to Job i. 7. where the Lord demanding of Satan, from whence he came? Satan anſwer'd, "from going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it." And ſo methodeuein here in St. Paul, and peripateuein in St. Peter, 1 Pet. v. 8. are much the ſame. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. iv. 14. and 2 Cor. ii. 11.

Not againſt fleſh and blood.] That is, not only againſt them. See the notes on John xii. 44.

Againſt principalities, againſt powers.] The Apoſtle doth here give theſe titles to the Devil and his Angels, not as if they were ſet and ordain'd of God to be true princes and Governors: But that they do ſtill, by force and ſtratagems, uſurp that power over this corrupt and wicked world, which the good Angels have from God; and that, by the juſt judgment of God, it is permitted them for a time, to uſe that power to the puniſhment of the wicked, and the exerciſe of the godly. (Aſſ.) Theſe great titles of principalities, powers, princes or rulers, is all that remains to theſe miſerable ſpirits of their former grandeur. The ſame happens to the Great ones of this world after their death, if they ſuffer themſelves to be intoxicated with their greatneſs, and abuſe their power during their life. (Q) See the notes on ch. iii 10. John xii. 31. and 2 Cor. iv. 4.

The rulers of the darkneſs of this world.] That is, of the ſtate of ignorance, ſin, death, and confuſion, which reigneth in this world (Aſſ.)

Spiritual wickedneſs in high places.] What epourania ſignifies here will be ſoon diſcerned, 1. By remembring that the ſeveral regions of the air, and all above the globe of the earth, is in Hebrew ſtiled Shamin and in the Greek of theſe books, (ouranoi) heavens, and ſo epourania will ſignifie thoſe places, the ſeveral regions of the air: 2. That the Syriac reading for (pneumatika) ſpiritual parts (pneumata) ſpirits, and the phraſe ſpirits of wickedneſs, readily ſignifying wicked ſpirits, and thoſe oft uſed to denote devils; the ſpirits of wickedneſs, in heavenly places will be no more than the powers of the air under their archon, or prince, ch. ii. 2. that is, devils under Beelzebub the prince of Devils. Theſe are here diſtinguiſh'd from the worldly rulers of the darkneſs of this age. Noting ſeveral ſorts of devils; either in reſpect of their manſions, (ſaith Ignatius ad Epheſ.) aerial, or earthy ſpirits; or elſe of the inclinations which they ſuggeſt. The earthy devils ſuggeſting groſſer carnal appetites, filthineſs of the fleſh, &c. the aerial pride, vain-glory, malice, &c. the filthineſs of the ſpirit. And the Gnoſtick hereticks by power of ſorcery ſeducing men to both ſorts of theſe filthineſſes, all fleſhly abominable luſts, and all malice and rancour againſt the orthodox Chriſtians, it is here truly ſaid, that they were to contend with both ſorts of evil ſpirits, terreſtrial and aerial: the terreſtrial that ruled among the heathen dark parts of the age, and the aerial, wicked ſpirits. (H.)

Take unto you the whole armour of God.] Panoplia tou Theou, "The whole armour of God," here, and in ver 10, 11. which makes us "ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," conſiſts of ſuch things, as either are in us, as truth, faith, righteouſneſs, peace, the hopes of ſalvation; or are to be uſed by us, as prayer, and attendance on the word of God; and not in any immediate influx of the power of God without the uſe of theſe. Yea, this is here ſtiled "the whole armour of God;" nothing more being requiſite to make us come off victors in this combat: So that, in theſe things doth conſiſt "the power of his might," or by theſe it is certainly to be obtain'd. (W.) See the notes on Rom. xiii. 12. and 2 Cor. x. 4.

Withſtand in the evil day.] That is, In the day of trial and perſecution. (W.) See the notes on ch. v. 19.

Loins girt about with truth.] The ſoldiers of old time had broad and ſtrong girdles, or belts, made of durable ſtuff, be ſet with many iron and braſs plates, whereby the weaker parts of the body, that is, the loins and upper part of the belly, were arm'd. Girding faſtneth the body, and ſtrengthens it, and is uſually in ſcripture taken for an expreſſion and ſign of ſtrength and vigour; as Iſa. v. 27. and xxii. 21. By truth ſome underſtand Chriſt himſelf, who is, "the way, the truth, and the life," John xiv. 6. whom all who are baptiz'd into Chriſt do put on, Gal. iii. 27. Others the truth of doctrine, oppoſed to errors and hereſies: Others, ſincerity and uprightneſs, oppoſed to hypocriſy; which is the truth of our life and actions. And this virtue indeed makes a man firm and ſteady in all his actions; whereas nothing makes a man more weak, and fickle, and fainthearted in ſtrong trials, than hypocriſy and falſhood. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke xii. 35.

The breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs.] By this breaſt-plate, which is the only fence for the heart, he underſtandeth a good conſcience; which is not only, as the Greek ſcholiaſt termeth it (cheiton ſidera) an impenitrable coat of mail; but, as the Latin poet ſtileth it, (murus aheneus) a brazen wall. (Aſſ.) Nothing more daunts all oppoſers, or ſtrikes ſuch a terror into our enemies; who are in dread of thoſe alone, who fear nothing but to loſe their integrity. If this be the ſole thing we reſolve to preſerve, and on no terms part withal, we ſhall have this advantage alſo by it, that we ſhall the more clearly diſcern what is the ſureſt way to ſafety in dangerous times, if it may be had together with innocence. Whereas they who bend every way, and ſail with every wind, where they think their worldly intereſt lies, are always blinded ſo much by that, as never to ſee the rocks upon which they run, and are ſplit at laſt. (Patrick.) See the notes on Rom. x. 10. and xiii. 12. and 2 Cor. vi. 7.

Feet ſhod with the preparation.] The account how Goliah was dreſs'd for the field takes notice, that "he had greaves of braſs upon his legs," 1. Sam. xvii. 6. And nothing is more uſual in the poets and hiſtorians, than a mention of boots, as one part of the ſoldier's equipment: A neceſſary part, no doubt, to defend the feet and legs in their marches, from the heat and roughneſs of the ways; eſpecially, from thoſe ſharp ſtakes, which were driven into the ground to gall, or other obſtructions laid to ſtop, the enemy in his paſſage. Of theſe the Jews in particular are ſaid to make uſe, on the approach of Holofernes and his army. And the original word, there tranſlated impediments, being the very ſame, which we ſo often find rendred by (ſcandala) offences, in the New Teſtament, may do us ſome ſervice, towards a right underſtanding of the defence here provided againſt the dangers of this kind. (See the notes on Luke xvii. 1.) "The Goſpel of peace" may be ſo called, either, 1. Becauſe it is a ſure and ſolemn declaration of peace to ſinners reconciled to God by Jeſus Chriſt; or, 2. Becauſe it lays upon all its profeſſors indiſpenſable obligations to peace with all mankind. And, in both ſenſes, this is properly call'd the preparation, or readineſs, of the Goſpel of peace; becauſe it prepares men for any conflicts they ſhall meet with, and arms them againſt all obſtructions thrown in their way on purpoſe to ſtop or retard their Chriſtian courſe. (Stanh.) For, thoſe who are well prepar'd, by frequent and profound meditations upon the Goſpel, which is the doctrine of our peace with God, are provided (as it were) with ſuch ſhoes, buſkins, or boots, that they may freely paſs, and cruſh all impediments in the world, and finiſh the courſe of their heavenly calling, without any lett or offence. (Aſſ.)

The ſhield of faith.] Epi paſin; "Above all," we muſt take this ſhield; either, 1. As being above all in our account and eſteem; as if he had ſaid, Whatſoever other defenſive armour ye want, do not want this. Or, 2. Over all, to cover and defend all other armour: For this "ſhield of faith" indeed covers and ſhelters the weakneſs and imperfections of all other graces, and beſt defendeth them and us againſt all the aſſaults of Satan. (Idem) As another ſhield, being dext'rouſly manag'd, and oppos'd to the blow whereſoever directed, is a guard and cover to the whole man. (Stanh.)

The helmet of ſalvation.] Or (as this Apoſtle elſewhere explains himſelf) "the hope of ſalvation," 1 Theſſ. v. 8. that is, a due ſenſe of the ineſtimable prize promis'd to them who conquer, and an aſſured expectation of obtaining it, provided we ſtrive lawfully. The contemplation of which is very fitly compar'd to a helmet; that defence, which guards our principal and moſt vital part, the ſeat of our underſtanding, and the ſource of our animal powers. For, where this hope prevails, it will effectually ſecure us againſt all attempts upon our life, made by ſuggeſtions to ſin; whoſe force and danger chiefly conſiſt in ſuch motives as are in no degree comparable to thoſe advantages which muſt be forfeited and loſt by any wicked compliances. (Idem)

The ſword of the Spirit.] The former pieces of armour were defenſive, but this is both an offenſive and defenſive weapon; "which is the word of God." But, Q. 1. Why is it compar'd to a ſword? Anſw. In regard both of its neceſſity and excellency: The ſword was ever eſteem'd a moſt neceſſary and uſeful part of the ſoldier's furniture; of ſuch uſefulneſs, neceſſity, and excellency is the word of God, by which the Chriſtian doth defend himſelf, and offend his enemies. But, Q. 2. Why is it call'd "the ſword of the Spirit?" Becauſe the Spirit was the author of it, the Spirit of God is the interpreter of it, and it is the Spirit that gives the word its efficacy and power in the ſoul; the word of God contain'd in the Scriptures is the ſword by which the Spirit of God enables his ſaints to overcome and vanquiſh all his enemies. (B.) This was the weapon which our Saviour himſelf made uſe of, in his perſonal conflict with the Devil, Matth. iv. 4. &c. retorting Scripture upon the Tempter; the authority of God in oppoſition to the wicked ſuggeſtions of Satan; the word of God, in its plain and natural ſenſe, to the word of the ſame God abuſed and miſapplied. (Stanh.) See the notes on John v. 39. and 2 Cor. x. 4.

Praying always.] See the notes on Luke xviii. 1. and 1 Cor. x. 13.

Watching thereunto.] See the notes on Matth. xxiv. 42. and 1 Cor. xvi. 13.

And for me.] The Apoſtle here requeſts their prayers, that he, being looſed from his bonds may again have an opportunity of preaching the Goſpel; and alſo that he may do it publickly and plainly, meta parrheſias, with due confidence and boldneſs. (W.) See the notes on John vii. 4. and Rom. xv. 30.

Ambaſſador in bonds.] See the notes on ch. iii. 1. Acts xxviii. 20. and 2 Cor. v. 20.

Love our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in ſincerity.] That is, Not only with a ſincere love, uncorrupted by the oppoſite love of any luſt forbidden by him, but with a conſtant and perpetual love, which no temptation can abate, or cauſe to ceaſe, or wax cold: Or (according to Mr. Lock) without the mixture of thoſe legal obſervances, by which the enemy (ſaith St. Paul) phthare, corrupts the minds of Chriſtians from the ſimplicity of the Goſpel, 2 Cor. xi. 3. (W.)

The End of the Epiſtle of St. PAUL to the EPHESIANS.

ANNOTATIONS

Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,

PHILIPPIANS.

THAT Philippi was a principal city of Macedonia, and a ſamous Roman colony, has been obſerv'd already, in the notes on Acts xvi. 12. At firſt it is ſaid to have been call'd Crenides, from the multitude of ſprings near it; and now Chryxopolis (or rather Chryſopolis) from the gold-mines thereabouts.

Hither was St. Paul ſent by a viſion, to preach the Goſpel; where "he was ſhamefully entreated," as himſelf expreſſes it, 1 Theſſ. ii. 2. the particulars of which are related by St Luke, Acts xvi. Notwithſtanding all which, two conſiderable families, beſides divers other perſons, were happily converted, during the ſhort time of the Apoſtle's abode here. And theſe ſeem to have made great proficiency in religion; becauſe the Apoſtle calls them "his joy and crown," ch. iv. 1. and every where commends them, as being much aſſiſted by their liberality, 2 Cor. xi. 9. yea, by theirs only, of all the Churches of his planting, Phil. iv. 15.

Among the many other proofs of their benevolence towards him, no ſooner did they hear of his impriſonment at Rome, and conſequently of his being in neceſſity and ſtreights there, but they immediately rais'd a liberal contribution for the ſupply of his wants; which was carefully convey'd to him by the hand of Epaphroditus, their Biſhop: Who, being detain'd ſome time at Rome, by a "ſickneſs nigh unto death," ch. ii. 27. no ſooner was reſtor'd to health, but he haſten'd his return to his flock, who were "full of heavineſs" for him, ver. 26. And by him did St. Paul ſend this affectionate Epiſtle to them; whereof

The ſubject is made up of, 1. Gratulations, for their zeal, love, knowledge, and fruits of righteouſneſs; and eſpecially for their liberality to him; at which he rejoiced, not ſo much for the benefit it was to himſelf, as for the proof it gave of God's grace abounding in them; ch. i. to ver. 12. and ch. iv. 10. &c. 2. Conſolations againſt the ſcandal of the croſs; ſhewing, that all the ſufferings of good Chriſtians redound to the furtherance of the Goſpel, as well as to their own unſpeakable comfort, and everlaſting reward, ch. i. 12. to ver. 27. And, 3. Exhortations to concord, humility, patience, perſeverance, mortification, heavenly-mindedneſs, and all other Chriſtian virtues, ch. i. 27. to ch. iv. 10.

That this Epiſtle was written from Rome, during St. Paul's firſt impriſonment there, and while Timothy was with him, there is no room to doubt; and that too, probably, as Bp. Fell and Dr. Hammond place it, about A. D. 59. tho' Du-Pin and Dr Whitby, and ſome others, place it about three years later; which controverſy I leave to the criticks.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle teſtifieth his thankfulneſs toward God, and his love toward them, for the fruits of their faith, and fellowſhip in his ſufferings; praying for their further improvement: Shews them what furtherance the Goſpel had receiv'd by his troubles; and how ready he was to glorifie Chriſt, either by his life or death; exhorting them to unity, and Chriſtian fortitude under all trials.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. PAUL, and Timotheus, the ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt, to all the ſaints in Chriſt Jeſus, which are at Philippi, with the biſhops and deacons: Grace be unto you, and peace from God our father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, (always in every prayer of mine for you all, making requeſt with joy) for your fellowſhip in the Goſpel from the firſt day until now; being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you, will perform it until the day of Jeſus Chriſt: Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, becauſe I have you in my heart, in as much as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the Goſpel, ye all are partakers of my grace. For God is my record, how greatly I long after you all, in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt. And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge, and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be ſincere, and without offence till the day of Chriſt; being filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, which are by Jeſus Chriſt unto the glory and praiſe of God.

Paul and Timotheus.] See the notes on Acts xv. 32. and Rom. i. 1.

To all the ſaints.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 2.

With the Biſhops and Deacons.] Theſe words have afforded an occaſion of great controverſy among learned men. Some underſtand the Epiſcopoi to be Biſhops properly ſo call'd; and, becauſe more than one Biſhop was not acknowledg'd in any Church at one and the ſame time, they therefore conclude, that Philippi was a Metropolitical Church; having other epiſcopal cities under its juriſdiction, to whoſe Biſhops this Epiſtle was directed. Others inſiſt, that Philippi was not a Metropolitical city, and conſequently could have no more than one Biſhop at once; and that their Biſhop, Epaphroditus, being then at Rome, the Epiſcopoi here mention'd muſt be underſtood of the clergy of the ſecond order (whom we now commonly diſtinguiſh under the ſtile of prieſts or presbyters) as the (Diaconoi) deacons, are thoſe of the third. Of the former opinion we find men of no leſs character, than Sancroft, Archbp. of Canterbury, and De Marca, Archbp. of Paris; Bps. Pearſon, Fell, and Beveridge; and, of all theſe, not the leaſt learned, Dr. Hammond: Of the latter opinion, Dr. Cave, Dr. Whitby, and the famous Du-pin. It will not therefore become me to take upon myſelf to determine the queſtion between ſuch eminent diſputants. But, to give the reader ſome light into it (at leaſt ſo far as may ſuffice to the explaining the text here before us) I ſhall recommend to his obſervation, ſome ſhort heads of what is more largely collected together by Dr. Brett, in his Account of Church government, chap. 13. viz. That the Apoſtles, who were commiſſion'd to diſciple all nations, not having time to ſtay long in any one place, generally had recourſe to the principal cities of the reſpective provinces into which they diſpers'd themſelves; where having preach'd the Goſpel, and made a number of converts, they ſeverally pitch'd upon ſome eminent perſon, whom they conſecrated to the epiſcopal office, and fix'd in ſuch city, where there was the greateſt reſort of people, and conſequently the beſt proſpect of increaſe to the Church: And the Biſhop thus fix'd was authoriz'd, not only to preſide over that particular flock, but alſo to conſecrate other Biſhops, and to fix them in other cities of the province, ſo ſoon as the propagation of the Goſpel there ſhould make it neceſſary. That this cauſed thoſe other Biſhops to have frequent recourſe to him for advice in their weighty affairs, (as particularly for the ordaining a new Biſhop, either upon the death of another, or where the number of converted cities increas'd) which procur'd a deference and reſpect to be paid to him on all occaſions. That whenever thoſe neighbouring Biſhops aſſembled together (as it was frequently neceſſary) for the common intereſt of the Church, ſuch aſſemblies, or ſynods, were generally held in the principal city; and conſequently it was reaſonable, that the Biſhop of that city, within whoſe juriſdiction they were, ſhould have the right-hand of fellowſhip in his own Church; whence the reſpective Biſhops of ſuch principal cities obtain'd a precedency, and preſidence over the reſt, for the better preſervation of order and decency among them; and conſequently authority to ſummon and convene the reſt, on any emergent occaſion which ſhould require their concurrence. And that ſuch principal city in every province, being commonly call'd the Metropolis, or Mother-city, the Biſhop thereof, who at firſt was only call'd the Primate, or Biſhop of the principal city, came afterwards to be call'd the Metropolitan; and his power increas'd, by degrees, to what we now ſee it. From all which I preſume, we may fairly conclude, 1. That tho' all the Biſhops conſtituted by the Apoſtles were of equal authority, as Biſhops; yet the Biſhop of the principal city in every province was diſtinguiſh'd by ſome preheminence above the reſt; as is evident in the particular provinces of Timothy and Titus. 2. That tho' Metropolitans, ſo call'd, do not appear to have been of Apoſtolical inſtitution, yet they were very early in the primitive Church; as is evident from the Great Council of Nice, Can. 6. where their privileges are call'd ancient cuſtoms. 3. That it does not appear, that the Bp. of Philippi had any other Biſhops under his juriſdiction, at leaſt ſo early as the time of St. Paul's Epiſtle to that Church. And therefore, 4. That the Epiſcopi in this text ought not to be underſtood of Biſhops properly ſo call'd; but of the ſecond order, between the Biſhop and Deacons, viz. Presbyters: For 'tis agreed on all hands, that the names of Biſhop and Presbyter, were promiſcuouſly uſed in the earlieſt ages; thoſe whom we now call Biſhops being then commonly call'd Apoſtles, and thoſe whom we now call Prieſts or Presbyters, then call'd Biſhops, tho' there was the ſame ſuperiority of the one order above the other as we have now. See the notes on Acts xvi. 12 and 2 Cor. iv. 2.

Grace be unto you, and peace.] See the notes on Rom. i. 7. and 1 Cor. i. 3.

I thank my God.] See the notes on Rom. i. 8. 1 Cor. i. 4. and Eph. i. 16.

Your fellowſhip in the Goſpel.] Viz. That by our miniſtry ye have been brought to the communion and fellowſhip of the profeſſion of the Goſpel, and have ſo continued from the firſt day that ye heard of it, even till now. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 13.

Being confident of this very thing.] This the Apoſtle ſpeaks, not out of any opinion of the election of all the Philippians to eternal life, or of the certainty of their perſeverance to the end, by virtue of that election: For why then doth he exhort them to "work out their own ſalvation with fear and trembling," ch. ii. 12. To "ſtand faſt in the Lord," ch. iv. 1. And to "hold forth the word of life, that he might rejoice in the day of Chriſt, that he had not run in vain, neither labour'd in vain" among them? ch. ii. 16. He ſpeaks this therefore from a judgment of charity; conjecturing (ſaith Theophylact) from what was paſt, what they would be for the future; becauſe, ſaith he, it ſeems juſt or fit for me to conceive this good hope of you, by reaſon of that great affection ye retain to me, and your patience in enduring the like afflictions. Now, he who only gives theſe reaſons of his confidence, gives us juſt reaſons to conceive, that he knew nothing of the neceſſity of their perſeverance by virtue of any abſolute election to ſalvation. (W.)

Partakers of my grace.] That the word charis, which ſignifies any favour or mercy of God, ſhould here peculiarly be uſed for the ſufferings which had befaln St. Paul in the diſcharge of his office, will not appear ſtrange; if it be conſidered, how often this ſtate of ſuffering is mention'd by Chriſt, and by St Paul, St. Peter, and St. James, as an eminent mercy of God to them who are thus honour'd by him, and accordingly that it is to be look'd on as matter of all joy (in their account) whenſoever it befalls any. 2. If it be compared with ver. 29. where the Philippians ſuffering for Chriſt, as eminently as their believing in him, is mention'd as that which (echaristhe humin) was granted them by way of grace, or mercy, or ſpecial favour of God. As for that which is affirm'd in both theſe verſes, that this Church of Philippi was thus perſecuted for Chriſtianity, and ſo participated with him in his bonds or ſufferings, tho' it be not mention'd in the ſtory of the Acts, yet it is in itſelf eaſy to be believed, (and by theſe teſtimonies put beyond all queſtion) the Jewiſh unbelievers every where ſtirring up the Roman magiſtrates to perſecute the believers in their provinces. (H.) See the notes on Acts v. 41. and ix. 16. and Eph. iii. 1.

In the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt.] Here St. Paul calls God to witneſs, that he vehemently loves the Philippians "in the bowels Jeſus Chriſt;" that is, with the moſt affectionate tenderneſs and chriſtian charity. But, could any words, in any language, repreſent that love and goodneſs with ſuch energy and power as theſe; which affect both ſoul and body, and pierce into our inmoſt conſtitution; which raiſe the tendereſt ſentiments of human nature, and heighten them by the ſtrongeſt and moſt ſacred endearments of Chriſtianity! But, 'tis in vain to beſtow words upon any perſon to convince him of the excellence of this divine paſſage, who does not feel the force and pathos of it. (Blackw.) See the notes on 2 Cor. vi. 12.

Abound yet more and more.] See the notes on John xiii. 34. Acts xxiv. 16. and 1 Cor. x. 32.

Approve things that are excellent.] The words in the original, dokimazein'ta diapheronta, may bear a double conſtruction; either, I pray God, "that your love may abound" in all knowledge and judgment, ſenſibly to diſcern the difference between the truth of God, and vain fancies of men, or between earthly traſh and heavenly treaſure: Or, I pray God, your love may abound in all knowledge and judgment, whereby ye may approve of, and rightly value, the excellent myſteries of ſalvation. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. ii. 18. and xii. 2. and Gal. v. 22. and vi. 4.

Sincere and without offence.] Sincere in your deportment toward God, and inoffenſive in your behaviour toward men. (W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 8.

Filled with the fruits.] See the notes on John xv. 4, 8. Rom. xv. 13. and 1 Cor. x. 31.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. But I would ye ſhould underſtand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me, have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Goſpel: So that my bonds in Chriſt are manifeſt in all the palace, and in all other places; and many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to ſpeak the word without fear. Some indeed preach Chriſt even of envy and ſtrife; and ſome alſo of good will. The one preach Chriſt of contention, not ſincerely, ſuppoſing to add affliction to my bonds: But the other of love, knowing that I am ſet for the defence of the Goſpel. What then? notwithſtanding every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Chriſt is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice. For I know that this ſhall turn to my ſalvation, through your prayer, and the ſupply of the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, according to my earneſt expectation, and my hope, that in nothing I ſhall be aſhamed, but that with all boldneſs, as always, ſo now alſo, Chriſt ſhall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death. For to me to live is Chriſt, and to die is gain. But if I live in the fleſh, this is the fruit of my labour: Yet what I ſhall chooſe, I wot not. For I am in a ſtrait betwixt two, having a deſire to depart, and to be with Chriſt; which is far better: Nevertheleſs, to abide in the fleſh is more needful for you. And, having this confidence, I know that I ſhall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance and joy of faith: That your rejoycing may be more abundant in Jeſus Chriſt for me, by my coming to you again.

Rather unto the furtherance] Here the Apoſtle prevents the offence that might be taken at his perſecution, whereby divers took occaſion to diſgrace his Apoſtleſhip: To whom he anſwers, That God had bleſſed his impriſonment in ſuch wiſe, that he is by that means become more famous, and the doctrine of the Goſpel is by this occaſion further ſpread, tho' not with like affection in all men. (Aſſ.) For thereby, 1. His impriſonment for the Goſpel was manifeſtly taken notice of in Nero's court, and elſewhere in the city; ſo that people, inquiring into the cauſe of his ſufferings, found, that it was not any miſdemeanor, but only his preaching and practiſing the doctrine of Chriſtianity: And, 2. Many of the other Miniſters of Chriſt, hearing of his conſtancy under ſufferings, were both encourag'd to ſhake off fear, and emboldened to preach Chriſt with greater reſolution. (B.) But it is to be noted, That praitorion (which our tranſlation calls the palace) does both in the Greek and Latin, ſignifie the common-hall, or court, where judgment uſed to be had; the Prætor being a Roman officer in their judicatures. And ſo it ſurely ſignifies here, that St. Paul's being impriſon'd, and brought before the Judges, was a means to make Chriſtianity known to the bench and the whole court: As one of his Judges had before told him, Acts xxvi. 28. that he had "almoſt perſwaded him to be a Chriſtian." (H.) Of ſo great importance it is, that a perſon of reputation and authority in the Church, whoſe conduct is much obſerv'd, ſhould not draw back and retreat in the defence of truth; ſince to the firmneſs, courage, and fidelity of one ſingle perſon, God frequently annexes that of ſo many others. Note alſo, That St. Paul does not glory, that his eloquence and talents are celebrated in the court, but that his humiliations and ſufferings are manifeſt there. When God intends to make thoſe known who are his faithful ſervants, he makes even their greateſt enemies contribute to that deſign: Let us therefore do our duty and leave God to act; and let us follow his guidance and direction. (Q.)

Preach Chriſt even of envy and ſtrife.] For explication of this and the following verſes, let it be noted in the general, That they who "preached Chriſt (ex eritheias) out of contention," did not preach Chriſt, or his Goſpel, in truth, and out of love to it, but only in pretence, or upon this occaſion, from ſtrife and envy againſt St. Paul; being griev'd that he had free liberty of preaching Chriſt to all who came to him, Acts xxviii. 30. and alſo, as not acknowledging that St. Paul was ſet up, or by God appointed, for the defence and propagation of the Goſpel. Whence it appears, that they could not be perſons who did only contend with St. Paul for the glory of being the moſt diligent and ſucceſsful promoters of the Goſpel; or, as ſuch, envying the Apoſtle's glory, ſet up for themſelves, boaſting as if they were the only publiſhers of the Goſpel. But yet, 'tis difficult to aſſign the perſons here intended by St. Paul. Oecumenius and Theophylact ſay, they were the unbelieving Jews, who, by divulging every where about Rome, what the doctrine of Chriſtianity was which St. Paul preached, how oppoſite it was to the Roman Gods and their worſhip, what tumults it had caus'd, how many it had turn'd from their old religion to the faith of Chriſt, and who he was in whom the Chriſtians did believe; thought to enrage the Emperor againſt St. Paul, the great promoter of this doctrine. And in this, ſay they, St. Paul might rejoice, as giving occaſion to others to inquire into the Chriſtian faith, and ſo to embrace it; for (ſaith Tertullian) when they once know it, they ceaſe to hate it. But, ſuch cannot be ſaid to preach Chriſt, without an intolerable Catachreſis; nor can St. Paul be ſuppos'd to rejoice in ſuch a repreſentation of the Chriſtian faith as they made. Others therefore ſay, with a greater likelihood, theſe were the Judaizing Chriſtians, who together with the Goſpel, taught the obſervation of the Law: For, from theſe aroſe ſtrife and diſſenſions, 1 Cor. i. 11. and iii. 3. zeal, animoſities, and contentions, 2 Cor. xii. 20. and that on account of this Apoſtle; whom they would ſcarce own as an Apoſtle of Chriſt, ch. vii. 2. but rather look'd upon as one who "walk'd according to the fleſh," ch. x. 2. and would therefore have excluded him from the Churches, Gal. iv. 17. And yet, at their preaching Chriſt, tho' not ſincerely, the Apoſtle may be ſuppos'd to rejoice; becauſe he knew, the time was near, when the hay and ſtubble they built on the foundation ſhould be reveal'd, and the deſtruction of the Temple, and city of Jeruſalem, would ſufficiently confute their vain additions to the faith. (W.) But the joy the Apoſtle here profeſſes to take in Chriſt being preach'd, however, "whether in pretence or in truth," is to me a ſufficient intimation, that, how blameworthy ſoever the deſign of ſuch preachers might be, who thus "ſuppoſed to add affliction to his bonds," yet the matter by them deliver'd was orthodox: For ſurely, no conſideration could have render'd the propagating falſe and dangerous doctrines, tho' mingled and ſet off with plain and profitable truths, a juſt occaſion of joy to ſo judicious and zealous an Apoſtle: And eſpecially, if we conſider the different treatment he gave thoſe adverſaries, who ſet up as teachers in the Church of Corinth, 1 Cor. iii. 12. &c. iv. 17. &c. and 2 Cor. iv. 1. &c. (Stanh.) See the notes on the ſeveral texts here referr'd to; as alſo on 1 Cor. ix. 17.

Shall turn to my ſalvation.] As Joſeph ſaid to his brethren, Gen. l. 20. "As for you, ye thought evil againſt me, but God meant it unto good:" So the Apoſtle here comforts himſelf with this, that whatſoever miſchief his adverſaries intended againſt him, God would ſo order all things, that even the perſecution which was rais'd againſt him, ſhould turn to the furtherance of his ſalvation, and to the increaſe of his joy here, and glory hereafter. (Aſſ.)

My earneſt expectation.] See the notes on Rom. viii. 19.

In nothing I ſhall be aſhamed] See the notes on Rom. v. 5.

Chriſt ſhall be magnified.] For if I live in the body, the power of Chriſt will be magnified, in delivering me out of ſo great danger: But if I be put to death for his ſake, that power will be magnified, which enables me ſo chearfully to die for the faith, as I am ready to do. (W.)

For me to live.] If I live, Chriſt ſhall be the ſcope of my life, and the end of my living; I reſolve to live to his ſervice: If I die, death will be a real gain and advantage to me; intimating, advantagious. (B.) See the notes on Acts xx. 24. and xxi. 13. Rom. vi. 11. and Gal. ii. 20.

This is the fruit of my labour.] Viz. The converſion and gaining of more ſouls to God and Chriſt. (B.)

I am in a ſtrait betwixt two.] Synechomai ec ton duo; I am perplex'd and doubtful, betwixt theſe two deſires and wiſhes; there being very forcible and weighty arguments on either ſide. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke xii. 50. and xix. 43. John xii. 26. and Acts xviii. 5.

A deſire to depart.] Eis to analyſai; to be diſſolv'd, or looſed; to return to my own proper home. The original word ſignifies either to be reſolved, namely, into my firſt principles, as the Philoſophers ſpeak; or diſſolved, whereby the Apoſtle intimateth, that death is no deſtruction, but only a diſſolution, or taking aſunder the parts of which we are compoſed; that is, a ſeparation of the ſoul from the body. The word ſignifies alſo to change our abode or dwelling, that is, to depart this life, by a metaphor taken from thoſe who quit their Inns, to further their travel homewards; or from ſuch as, being ready to go to ſea, and to ſet ſail for another country, untie and looſen the cables, whereby the ſhip lay faſtned and bound at ſhore. It ſignifies alſo, to be releas'd, and ſet at large, and at liberty: And it is very probable, that the Apoſtle in this phraſe, analyſai, had a reference both to his bonds, and to his death: And his meaning is, I deſire to be diſcharg'd and releas'd, as out of a common goal, ſo alſo out of the priſon of my body, that I may preſently be with Chriſt, my Saviour, in heaven, in reſt and bliſs. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Cor. v. 6. &c.

Having this confidence, I know.] Touto pepoithos oida is ſomewhat an obſcure phraſe, and may be beſt explain'd by two conſiderations; 1. That pepoithos ſignifies hoping with ſome confidence, anſwerable to the Hebrew, which is ordinarily render'd (elpis) hope; but, 2 Kings xviii. 20. (pepoitheſis) perſuaſion, or confidence. So here, ver. 6. pepoithos auto touto, hoping confidently, or "being confident of this very thing." So, 2 Cor. i. that which is expreſs'd by elpizo, I hope, or truſt, is taute te pepoitheſei, "in this confidence," or perſuaſion, ver. 15. Then for the phraſe, pepoithos oida, it is in ordinary conſtruction all one with oida me pepoithenai, I know that I hope, or am perſuaded, or of this I am ſure, (for ſo oida touto is ordinarily uſed) that I hope, or am perſuaded. And this is very agreeable to the matter in hand; where, to comfort them in their ſadneſs for his afflictions, he minds them, that, in order to their good, he foreſees it very probable, that he may be permitted to live; and tho' he knows not by any certain revelation, whether he ſhall or no, yet this he knows, that he hopes, and, conſidering God's diſpenſations of providence, is verily perſuaded (which alſo includes his deſire) of it. (H.) See the notes on 2 Cor. v. 11. and Gal. i. 10.

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30. Only let your converſation be as it becometh the Goſpel of Chriſt: That whether I come and ſee you, or elſe be abſent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye ſtand faſt in one ſpirit, with one mind, ſtriving together for the faith of the Goſpel; and in nothing terrified by your adverſaries: which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of ſalvation, and that of God. For unto you it is given in the behalf of Chriſt, not only to believe on him, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake; having the ſame conflict which ye ſaw in me, and now hear to be in me.

Only let your converſation.] The Apoſtle here exhorts them, firſt of all, to unity and concord; That, being knit together with common bonds, they continue, through the ſtrength of faith, to bear all adverſity, in ſuch ſort, that they do nothing unworthy the profeſſion of the Goſpel. (Aſſ.) A Goſpel profeſſion requires and calls for a Goſpel converſation. As the Goſpel is a Goſpel of truth and faithfulneſs, of ſincerity and plainneſs; ſo our converſation ſhould be ſincere and upright, without deceit or fraud: As the Goſpel is a Goſpel of peace, ſo a Chriſtian converſation is a quiet, calm, and peaceable converſation: As the Goſpel is a Goſpel of love and mercy, of grace and goodneſs, a love unfeigned being the badge and cognizance of Chriſt's diſciples, the mark or brand of Chriſt's ſheep; ſo a Goſpel-converſation is an amicable, loving, and charitable converſation. And as the Goſpel of Chriſt is a Goſpel of meekneſs and humility, of holineſs and purity; ſo a Chriſtian converſation muſt be a meek, humble, holy, pure, and ſpotleſs converſation. Saints by profeſſion ſhould be ſaints indeed; and there is a comelineſs in a Goſpel converſation, both as to the inward and outward man. We muſt walk "as becometh the Goſpel of Chriſt;" that is, anſwerable to the precepts and commands of the Goſpel, to the promiſes and encouragements of the Goſpel, to the helps and ſupplies of grace which the Goſpel affords, to that grand pattern of holineſs which the Goſpel ſets before us, and to that high and glorious hope which the Goſpel raiſes us up to the joyful expectation of. (B.) The original word politeueſthe, is a metaphor taken from citizens, who live and converſe together according to the laws and conſtitutions of their own incorporated ſociety. (G.) See the notes on ch. iii. 20. Eph. ii. 19. and iv. 1. and the ſeveral ſermons of Dr. Duport, 1660. Dr. Fuller, 1703. Bp. Dawes, 1704. and Bp. Greene, 1723. all on the text now before us.

Stand faſt in one Spirit.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 10, 11. and Gal. v. 1.

Striving together.] Synathlountes; wreſtling together, as for the maſtery, or for a crown. (Leigh) Not ſtriving againſt, or contending with, one another, as the manner of too many is; but ſtriving together, as brethren and friends, united together in one common cauſe, and one common intereſt, againſt the common enemy.

In nothing terrified] We ought not to be diſheartned, but rather encourag'd, by the perſecutions, which the enemies of the Goſpel threaten and raiſe againſt us; ſince they are certain witneſſes and evidences from God himſelf, both of our ſalvation, and of their deſtruction. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts xiv. 22. and Rom. viii. 17.

Unto you it is given.] Here he encourages them, not to be diſturb'd, or daunted, at the malicious proſecutions of the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt, by a reaſon which is ſtrongly concluſive upon the Chriſtian ſcheme, but fails upon the Pagan; which is expreſs'd in a ſtrong Pleonaſmus, becauſe for Chriſt to you is given, not only to believe on him, but to ſuffer for him. Given is not fully expreſſive of the original word (echariſthe) which is the free grace and favour is beſtow'd. God does not only permit, or order by his general providence, but he confers upon you peculiar kindneſs and mercy; does you unſpeakable honour, by admitting you to ſuffer for his Son's bleſſed name and cauſe. (Blackw.) To believe, and to ſuffer, conſtitute the whole Chriſtian life; and both are the work of grace in us. The grace of ſuffering is more excellent than that of faith: One leads to the other, and is the principle thereof. Faith in Chriſt makes a Chriſtian: Suffering for his ſake makes a martyr; that is, a Chriſtian of the firſt rank and order. (Q.) See the notes on Acts v. 41. and Gal. vi. 14. And Dr. Biſbie's ſermon on this text, 1681.

Which ye ſaw in me.] Viz. When I was with you, Acts xvi. 19. &c. (Aſſ.) Actions are the proofs of words: For men believe what they ſee done, far more readily, than what they only hear ſaid. (Q.)

CHAP. II.

He exhorteth them to unity; and to humility, after the example of Chriſt: To proceed in the way of ſalvation, that they may be an example to the world, and a comfort to him: And commendeth Timothy and Epaphroditus.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. IF there be therefore any conſolation in Chriſt, if any comfort of love, if any fellowſhip of the ſpirit, if any bowels and mercies; fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the ſame love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through ſtrife, or vain-glory, but in lowlineſs of mind let each eſteem other better than themſelves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man alſo on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was alſo in Chriſt Jeſus: Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made himſelf of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a ſervant, and was made in the likeneſs of men: And being found in faſhion as a man, he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs. Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue ſhould confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

If there be therefore.] The Apoſtle here begins with a moſt vehement exhortation, to unity and Chriſtian love, by way of rhetorical adjuration: As if he ſhould ſay, As ever ye look to receive any comfort in Chriſt, or reap benefit by his love, and the communion between you and the Saints of God, "fulfil ye my joy," by keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of love. (Aſſ.) For tho' his joy was great for their conſtancy, yet was it not complete, till he knew of their unity among themſelves. (Fell) See the notes on ch. i. 27. John xvii. 11. Rom. xv. 5. 1 Cor. i. 10 and xii. 4. 2 Cor. vi 12, 13. and xiii. 11, 14.

Let nothing be done through ſtrife.] See the notes on ch. i. 15, 16.

Eſteem other better.] This refers not to judgment, it not being in our own power always thus to eſteem of others; but to practice: As if he ſhould have ſaid, Be as ready to aſſiſt and help others, as if ye were their ſubjects and inferiors: So the example of Chriſt requires, and ſo the precept runs, That he who is the greateſt ſhould be a ſervant to others. (W.) See the notes on Luke xiv. 10. and Rom. xii. 10.

Look not every man on his own.] That is, on his own private advantage only, or chiefly; but take care of the things which tend to the advantage of others: Not but that a Chriſtian may and ought to look at his own things, but not wholly. Our regard muſt extend further than ourſelves and our own things: We muſt look on the things of others alſo: We muſt be as juſt and true to another's reputation as to our own, and regard both the honour and profit of our neighbour as well as our own. And where Chriſtians are of this publick ſpirit and temper, it contributes very much towards the preſerving and maintaining of unity and peace among them. (B.) The original word ſcopeite properly ſignifies to look on them with a diligent eye, as a ſhooter does at the mark he aims at. (Aſſ. and Leigh) See the notes on Rom. xiv. 1. and 1 Cor. xiii. 5.

Which was alſo in Chriſt Jeſus.] That our bleſſed Saviour was not only with God before he aſſumed humane nature, but was really God, St. Paul tells us; "Let this mind be in you, which was alſo in Chriſt Jeſus; who, being in the form of God, (ouc harpagmon hegeſato) did not arrogate to himſelf to be equal with God;" that is, he made no oſtentation of his divinity. For, this I take to be the true meaning of that phraſe; both becauſe it is ſo uſed by Plutarch, and becauſe it makes the ſenſe much more eaſy and current, thus; "Who, being in the form of God, did not aſſume an equality with God:" That is, he did not appear in the glory of his divinity, which was hid under a veil of humane fleſh and infirmity; but he emptied himſelf, "and took upon him the form of a ſervant, and was made in the likeneſs of men; and being found in faſhion as a man, (or in habit of a man) he became obedient unto death," &c. So that, if his "being made in the likeneſs and faſhion of a man" does ſignify that he was really man by his incarnation, then ſurely his "being in the form of God," when he took upon him the faſhion and likeneſs of men, and the form of a ſervant, or ſlave, muſt in all reaſon ſignify that he was really God before he became man. For which reaſon the ſame Apoſtle did not doubt to ſay, that "God was manifeſted in the fleſh," 1 Tim. iii. 16. (Tillotſ. and Fox) See Dr. Barrow's Sermon on this text; and the ſeveral notes on John i. 1, 14. v. 18. vi. 38, x. 18. xiii. 3, &c. and 15. xiv. 9. and xvii. 5. Rom. i. 3. viii. 3. and xv. 3. 2 Cor. v. 21. and viii. 9. and Gal. iii. 13. and iv. 4. And whoever is curious in point of criticiſm, may find matter abundant in Hammond, and Whitby, on this paſſage.

And given him a name.] See the notes on John v. 23. xiii. 13. and xvii. 1, &c. Acts ii. 36. Rom. xiv. 11. 1 Cor. xv. 25. Eph. i. 22.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my preſence only, but now much more in my abſence, work out your own ſalvation with fear and trembling: For it is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleaſure. Do all things without murmurings, and diſputings; that ye may be blameleſs, and harmleſs, the ſons of God, without rebuke, in the mids of a crooked and perverſe generation, among whom ye ſhine as lights in the world: Holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Chriſt, that I have not run in vain, neither laboured in vain. Yea, and if I be offered upon the ſacrifice and ſervice of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all. For the ſame cauſe alſo do ye joy, and rejoice with me.

Work out your own ſalvation.] That is, Employ all your abilities and endeavours, to approve and practiſe all the means, which God hath appointed for the accompliſhment of your ſalvation. Finiſh your ſanctification in the fear of God. "Fear and trembling" are not here oppoſed to ſpiritual confidence, but to carnal ſecurity; and imply no more than a holy reverence, humility and carefulneſs, as Pſa. ii. 11. and Heb. xii. 28. Fear we may, and muſt, out of the conſideration of our own infirmity; yet always truſt and be confident in God, who worketh in us, both to will and to do," ver. 13. and by whoſe power we are "kept through faith unto ſalvation," 1 Pet. i. 5. (Aſſ.) The word (ho energon) that worketh, being joined with (en hymin) in you on one ſide, and with (hyper tes eudokias) of his good pleaſure, on the other ſide, muſt in reaſon be ſo interpreted, as ſhall be moſt directly anſwerable to the exhortation given to them, ver. 12. of "working out their own ſalvation with fear and trembling." To which it will be conſequent, that as this which is done by God is done of his own free mercy, without any merit of ours which may claim it from him, and therefore requires not only our humility, but our diligence, and caution, and ſolicitude, and fear of diſpleaſing ſo gracious a father, who may, if he be provoked by our unworthineſs, withdraw it from us; ſo it is not to be conceived to be wrought by God in ſuch an irreſiſtible manner, as that it ſhall be impoſſible for thoſe in whom God thus works to contradict or reſiſt his working: For if it were ſo, there could be no place for the exhortation to do that, which could not be otherwiſe, to "work out their own ſalvation," &c. To work then in us the (to thelein kai to energein) willing and the acting, or oderating, is the giving us that ſtrength, working in us thoſe abilities, which are required to our willing, or working, as neceſſary to prepare and aſſiſt us to do either. So (God's chariſmata and energemata, gifts and operations, being all one) dounai latreuein, to give to ſerve him, Luke i. 74. ſignifies his affording that grace which enables us to ſerve him, not which forceth or neceſſitateth us to do ſo. The king's MS. here adds the word dynamei, by his power, which as it agrees well with this ſenſe, ſo hath it a farther energy in it, to encourage our diligence, which is wont to be diſheartned by the difficulty and impoſſibility of the task. Be we never ſo weak and inſufficient of our ſelves, God hath all-ſufficient ſtrength, and by that ſtrength of his he "worketh in us the willing and the doing:" And ſo, if we be not wanting to our ſelves, but work, and "work out our own ſalvation with all diligence," we ſhall have no reaſon to complain of want of ſtrength; we are able to do what he requires of us, (dia tou endynamountos) "through him that ſtrengthneth us," ch. iv. 13. (H. W. and Fox) See Biſhop Beveridge's Sermon on this text; and the notes on Rom. xi. 20. 1 Cor. xv. 58. and 2 Cor. vii. 1, 15.

Without murmurings and diſputings.] That is, ſay the Greek Commentators, without murmuring under your ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt; ch. i. 20. or doubtings, or reaſonings, whether ye ſhould continue ſtedfaſt in the faith or not. (W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. x. 10.

If I be offered.] Behold here how St. Paul, the under-ſhepherd, imitates Chriſt, that great and good ſhepherd, in his readineſs to lay down his life for the ſheep; not for their reconciliation, but for their confirmation: If, ſays he, it ſhall pleaſe God that I be, by martyrdom, "offered upon the ſacrifice and ſervice of your faith," that is, to eſtabliſh you in the faith which I have taught you, and to confirm and ſeal the truth of it with my blood, I will rejoice therein for your ſakes, and I deſire you to "rejoice with me," and to bleſs God for me in ſo doing. Note here, The emphaſis and the elegancy of the Apoſtle's words, "If I be offered up;" a manifeſt alluſion to the Jewiſh ſacrifices, in which there was wine to be poured out, as a libation, upon the ſacrifice, and then offer'd up to God. Thus, ſays he, if my blood like wine be poured forth, whilſt I am employed by the preaching of the Goſpel to render you Gentiles an acceptable ſacrifice, and a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour unto God, I ſhould rejoice even thus to die in your ſervice, and for the confirmation of your faith. Hence learn, 1. That life itſelf is not, and will not be thought, too dear, or accounted by the miniſters of Chriſt too much to lay down in the ſervice of their people's ſouls, and for the confirmation of their faith. 2. That the miniſters of Chriſt ſhould not preach any thing to their people, but what they dare ſeal and confirm the truth of with their very blood, if God calls them thereunto: St. Paul had before preach'd the doctrine of the Goſpel to the Philippians, and now he ſtood ready to ſeal it with his blood. (B.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 1.

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. But I truſt in the Lord Jeſus, to ſend Timotheus ſhortly unto you, that I alſo may be of good comfort, when I know your ſtate. For I have no man like-minded, who will naturally care for your ſtate. For all ſeek their own, not the things which are Jeſus Chriſt's. But ye know the proof of him, that as a ſon with the father, he hath ſerved with me in the goſpel. Him therefore I hope to ſend preſently, ſo ſoon as I ſhall ſee how it will go with me. But I truſt in the Lord, that I alſo my ſelf ſhall come ſhortly. Yet I ſuppoſed it neceſſary to ſend to you Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-ſoldier, but your meſſenger, and he that miniſtred to my wants. For he longed after you all, and was full of heavineſs, becauſe that ye had heard that he had been ſick. For indeed he was ſick nigh unto death: But God had mercy on him; and not on him only, but on me alſo, leſt I ſhould have ſorrow upon ſorrow. I ſent him therefore the more carefully, that when ye ſee him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the leſs ſorrowful. Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladneſs, and hold ſuch in reputation: Becauſe for the work of Chriſt he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life to ſupply your lack of ſervice toward me.

No man like-minded.] Iſopſychon. The notion of iſopſychos, among Greek authors, is clearly all one with (iſos eme pſyche) equal to my ſoul, a ſecond-ſelf, moſt dear to me; ſuch as Patroclus was to Achilles in Homer, whom (ſaith he) I love (iſon eme kephale) equal to my head, or life. Thus alſo the Greek interpreters of Pſa. lv. 13. render it anthrope iſophyche, which our laſt tranſlation renders "a man mine equal;" or, as it is on the margin, a man according to my rank. This therefore, in all reaſon, is to be the meaning of it here alſo: Not to expreſs what care Timothy had of the Philippians, (for that is ſaid in the next words;) but how dearly valued he was by Paul; ſo that, when he came to them, they ſhould look upon him as another Paul. (H.)

All ſeek their own.] Not all abſolutely, but the greateſt part; for even here he excepteth Timothy and Epaphroditus. His meaning therefore is, that it is a vice incident to moſt men, to prefer their own profit and wordly ends, before the glory of Chriſt. (Aſſ.) See Mr. Edw. Symonds's ſermon on this text; and the notes on 1 Cor. x. 24, 33. and xiii. 5.

But, I truſt.] Pepoitha The word ſignifies an aſſured confidence; and is ſeldom, or never uſed, but when the thing followeth which thus is truſted. (Leigh) See the notes on chap. i. 25. and 2 Cor. v. 11.

Epaphroditus, my brother.] See the preface to this epiſtle.

Your meſſenger] Tertullian, in præſcript. ſays, That St. Paul inſtituted an epiſcopal ſee at Philippi; and Chryſoſtome, Jerome, and Theodoret, and others, name Epaphroditus to be the firſt Biſhop. And the epithets here given him by the Apoſtle (of "his brother, and companion in labour, and fellow-ſoldier") do ſeem both to confirm this, and that he is alſo meant, ch. iv. 3. by the title of "true yoke-fellow." So that here apoſtolos ſeems to ſignify, not a meſſenger of the Church of Philippi, (which is mention'd in the next words,) but their Biſhop and paſtor; even as Archippus, who in Philem. 2. is call'd "his fellow-ſoldier," is, in Col. iv. 17. ſaid to "have receiv'd that miniſtry from the Lord; which by the ancients is ſaid to be the office of Biſhop. (Fell) See the notes on ch. i. 1. Rom. i. 1 and 2 Cor. viii. 23.

He longed after you all.] See the notes on ch. i. 8.

God had mercy on him.] Here we find, that Epaphroditus was not recover'd by the gift of healing, then frequent in the Church; that gift being not exerciſed, by them to whom it was imparted, at their own pleaſure, but as God was pleaſed, by a ſpecial inſtinct, and a ſtrong faith, to incite them to the exerciſe of it. Theſe gifts being therefore given for the ſake of unbelievers, to convince them of the truth of the Chriſtian faith, God thought not fit that it ſhould be ordinarily exercis'd upon believers, leſt it ſhould be look'd upon, not as a gift, but as the effect of art or skill, or a thing done among them as a confederacy. (W.)

Hold ſuch in reputation.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 18. and Gal. vi. 6.

For the work of Chriſt.] By "the work of Chriſt" he means his labour in preaching; or his watching, or pains-taking in miniſtring to Paul's neceſſity; calling it "the work of Chriſt," to viſit Chriſt being poor, and in bonds, in the perſon of Paul, Matth. xxv. 36, &c. (Aſſ.)

To ſupply your lack of ſervice toward me.] This is not to be underſtood as if he charg'd them with any want of ſervice, or affection, to him, (See ch. iv. 10.) but that Epaphroditus did this, being preſent with him, to ſupply that ſervice, which they, being abſent, were not in a capacity to perform. (W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 17.

CHAP. III.

He cautions them againſt ſeducing teachers: Declares, that tho' he had no more than they, to glory in, concerning the Law; yet he counts it all as nothing in reſpect of Chriſt: And that he aims at greater perfection; in which he exhorts them to follow his example, avoiding the ways of carnal profeſſors.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. FINALLY, my brethren, rejoyce in the Lord. To write the ſame things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is ſafe. Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the conciſion. For we are the circumciſion, which worſhip God in the ſpirit, and rejoyce in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the fleſh: Though I might alſo have confidence in the fleſh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might truſt in the fleſh, I more: Circumciſed the eighth day; of the ſtock of Iſrael, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Phariſee; Concerning zeal, perſecuting the church; touching the righteouſneſs which is in the law, blameleſs. But what things were gain to me, thoſe I counted loſs for Chriſt. Yea doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord: For whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt, And be found in him, not having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith: That I may know him, and the power of his reſurrection, and the fellowſhip of his ſufferings, being made conformable unto his death; If by any means I might attain unto the reſurrection of the dead: Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: But I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which alſo I am apprehended of Chriſt Jeſus. Brethren, I count not my ſelf to have apprehended; But this one thing I do, forgetting thoſe things which are behind, and reaching forth unto thoſe things which are before, I preſs toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus.

Rejoice in the Lord.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 12.

To write the ſame things.] That is, Not the ſame things which I wrote before, but the ſame things which I preach'd to you before, and which ye often heard by word of mouth from me before; tho' I inculcate and preſs the ſame truths upon you by my writing, which I have done by my preaching, it is neither grievous nor burthenſome to me, nor unneceſſary or unprofitable for you. Learn hence, That we have here St Paul's judgment againſt oral tradition, which the Church of Rome prefers before the written word: But ſo did not St. Paul; knowing, that what is deliver'd by word of mouth might ſoon ſlip out of memory, but what is written remaineth. (B.)

Beware of dogs.] It is the obſervation of the fathers, that the name of dogs was anciently given to the Gentiles, as being without the covenant, according to theſe words of Chriſt, "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to caſt it to dogs," Matth. xv. 26. But with the things the names alſo were now chang'd, they being now without the covenant, and the believing Gentiles admitted to it; and therefore they are call'd the children, but the Jews dogs. And 'tis well noted by Dr. Lightfoot, that our Lord uſed this language, not to expreſs his own ſentiment of the Gentiles, but in compliance with the common language of the Jews, who proverbially ſaid, The Gentiles are likened to dogs, whereas we are God's peculiar people, even his ſons and daughters. Where alſo he obſerves, That even the Talmudiſts ſay of the generation in which the Meſſiah ſhould come, That the ſynagogues ſhould become ſtews, and the faces of that generation ſhould be as dogs. (W.) See the notes on Gal. v. 15.

Beware of evil workers] For they labour only to pull down God's building, and to deſtroy the Church of Chriſt. He ſtiles them "deceitful workers," 2 Cor. xi. 13. Not ſpeaking of the Gnoſticks, as ſome imagine, but of the Jews; for ſo it follows, ver. 22. " Are they Hebrews? So am I! Are they Iſraelites? So am I." (W.) See the notes on 2 Cor. xi. 13.

Beware of the conciſion.] Catatomen. The Apoſtle calls them ſo, not becauſe they made cuttings in the fleſh, after the manner of the ſuperſtitious Gentiles, but becauſe, by urging circumciſion, they made a rent and conciſion in the Church. The prepoſition cata, in compoſition, here (as in divers other words) is taken in the worſer ſenſe, to diſgrace and diſparage the circumciſion they ſo much boaſted of; which was now no more a ſeal of God's covenant, but a meer cutting of the fleſh, with an inciſion alſo, and wounding of the conſcience. (Aſſ.) Thus, as thoſe who deſtroy baptiſm, by denying it to infants, and rebaptizing them, are call'd Catabaptiſts; ſo theſe who divided the Church, by urging carnal circumciſion, are here call'd Catatome, the conciſion. (Leigh) See the notes on Acts xv. 1. Rom. iii. 30. Gal. ii. 3. and v. 2.

We are the circumciſion.] In oppoſition to the conciſion beforementioned, he ſays, " We are the circumciſion:" We who are the true orthodox believers, are the true circumciſion, the true children of Abraham, who actually perform that to which circumciſion was deſign'd to engage his poſterity; and they who pretend thus to be Jews and Chriſtians, but are not, are (catatome) the conciſion, more truly than (peritome) the circumciſion. (H.) See the notes on John iv. 23. Rom. ii. 29. and iv. 11. and 2 Cor. iii. 6.

Confidence in the fleſh.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Let no man think, that I undervalue the Jewiſh privileges, for any want of them. No Judaizing teacher can pretend to more, nor to ſo many of them as my ſelf: So that, were this a ground of confidence, I could vie with any one of them, in carnal privileges, Jewiſh prerogatives, and outward performances; yea, I could boaſt of as much ſelf-righteouſneſs as the beſt of them, and beyond them all. (B.) See the notes on 2 Cor. xi. 18.

Circumciſed the eighth day] See the notes on John vii. 22.

Of the ſtock of Iſrael.] This is properly added, by way of diſtinction; becauſe the Iſhmaelites and the Idumeans alſo were circumciſed. (G.) See the notes on 2 Cor. xi. 22.

An Hebrew of the Hebrews.] That is, Not a proſelyte, but a native Hebrew, born of Hebrew parents, without any mixture of Gentiles in his lineage. (Aſſ.)

Concerning zeal, perſecuting.] See the notes on John xvi. 2. Acts viii. 1. ix. 1. and xxii. 4. and Gal. i. 13.

And be found in him.] See the notes on John xv. 2. Rom. i. 17. iii. 21. iv. 2. and x. 5. and Gal. ii. 16.

And the power of his reſurrection.] By way of explication of what he had ſaid before, the Apoſtle here ſubjoins, " That I may know him, and the power of his reſurrection." As if he had ſaid, This is the righteouſneſs that I aſpire after, " that I may know Chriſt," not only by a notional belief of his doctrines, or profeſſion of his religion, but by a ſpiritual experimental knowledge of him, ſuch a knowledge as transforms me into his ſpirit and temper: And that I may know " the power of his reſurrection;" that is, that I may experience in my ſelf all the good effects that his reſurrection has a power to work in me; that I may feel the virtue and efficacy of it, in my daily dying to ſin, and riſing again to a new, holy, and heavenly life. This is that righteouſneſs I long for, and in compariſon of which I account all things in the world but as loſs, and as dung. (Sharpe) See that Archbiſhop's Sermon on this text.

I might attain.] In theſe verſes he makes a continual alluſion to the race run in the Olympian games, where he who ran was ſtill (emproſthen ekteinomenos) upon the ſtretch, and preſſing forwards, without looking back to thoſe whom he had left behind; and purſuing the goal, that, coming firſt to it, he might catch hold of the prize, and ſo be crown'd with it. And two things are here noted by the Fathers, worthy of our obſervation; 1. That if this great Apoſtle, who had ſuffer'd ſo many things, and was " in deaths often," and who had " labour'd ſo abundantly," was not yet confident of a bleſſed reſurrection, but only ſtriving, if ſo be he might attain unto it; ſuch as we are muſt have leſs ground of confidence. And, 2. What continual diligence and labour this purſuit requires: For, ye know (ſaith Chryſoſtome) with what great ſtretch the purſuer runs: He looks upon no man; he throws out of the way every thing that might hinder him; he employs his body, eye, ſtrength, ſoul, and mind, upon the work, looking to nothing elſe, but only to the prize. (W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24. And for the critical import of the ſeveral phraſes here uſed, ſee Dr. Hammond on this place at large.

Either were already perfect.] See the notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 10.

That I may apprehend.] See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24, &c. and xiii. 12.

The prize of the high calling.] The judges of the race were wont to ſit in a high place, and from thence, by a cryer, to call the ſeveral runners by name: And to this the Apoſtle here alludes, in mentioning God's calling from heaven to us by Chriſt Jeſus. (G.) See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24, &c.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: And if in any thing ye be otherwiſe minded, God ſhall reveal even this unto you. Nevertheleſs, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the ſame rule, let us mind the ſame thing. Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk ſo, as ye have us for an enſample. (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt: Whoſe end is deſtruction, whoſe god is their belly; and whoſe glory is in their ſhame, who mind earthly things.) For our converſation is in heaven, from whence alſo we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: Who ſhall change our vile body, that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to ſubdue all things unto himſelf.

As many as be perfect.] That is, grown Chriſtians, inſtructed thoroughly in their Chriſtian duty; who, compar'd with others, may be call'd perfect. (B.)

Be thus minded.] Viz. As I am; Namely, to believe the circumciſion of the fleſh aboliſh'd; and that no confidence is to be placed in any righteouſneſs of our own, but in the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith only. And if any, ſeduced by the Judaizing teachers, be " otherwiſe minded," and think that the ceremonial law is not abrogated, nor the practice of circumciſion aboliſh'd, God, in his due time, will ſhew them their error, and convince them, that none of thoſe things are now neceſſary for the obtaining his favour. (Idem) See the notes on Gal v. 10.

Whereto we have already attained.] That phthanein is an agoniſtical word, and ſignifies to be foremoſt in the race, has been ſhewn already (in the notes on Rom. ix. 30.) And ſo eis ho ephthaſamen here will ſignify, Inaſmuch as we are got before other men in the race; that is, have attain'd ſome degree of ſpiritual proficiency. That canon alſo, in the ſtadia, ſignifies the white line which mark'd out the path wherein they were to run, has been ſhewn (in the notes on 2 Cor. x. 13.) And ſo auto ſtoichein canoni here is, to go or run by the ſame line, in that path, never ſtepping over, or out of it, leſt they loſe all: And thus are they moſt concerned to do, that are before other men; and if they have but this one care, are not likely to miſcarry by any thing elſe. That which is moſt contradictory to this in our Chriſtian race, is, dividing into factions and ſides; peace, unity, and charity being the white within which they are commanded to walk; and therefore it follows that they ſhould (to auto phronein) " mind the ſame thing," live in unity and amity, run all the ſame way to the ſame end, and be ſymmimetai, ver. 17. all fellow-followers of the Apoſtle. (H.) Here the Apoſtle ſuppoſes, 1. The neceſſity of one fix'd and certain rule, notwithſtanding the different attainments among Chriſtians; " Nevertheleſs, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the ſame rule." And, 2. The duty and obligation which lies upon the beſt Chriſtians to obſerve it. He does not ſpeak to the ignorant and unthinking multitude, but to the very beſt Chriſtians, to thoſe who had got the ſtart of others, that they would be an example of peace and unity to their brethren. All the queſtion is, What the Apoſtle means by this rule; whether only a rule of charity and mutual forbearance, with a liberty of different practice; or ſuch a rule which limits and determines the manner of practice? It cannot be the former, becauſe that is the caſe the Apoſtle had ſpoken to juſt before; " if in any thing ye be otherwiſe-minded:" Therefore now ſubjoining this, with reſpect to thoſe who had gone beyond them, he doth imply ſuch an agreement and uniformity of practice, as doth lie in obſerving the ſame ſtanding rule. For the Apoſtles did not leave all perſons to act as they judg'd fit, but did make rules determining their practice, and obliging them to uniformity therein. Therefore, " let us walk by the ſame rule, and mind the ſame thing:" Let us ſtudy the unity and peace, and thereby the honour and ſafety of our Church. While we keep to one rule, all people know what it is to be of our Church: If men ſet up their own fancies above the rule, they charge it with imperfection; if they do not obey the rule, they make themſelves wiſer than thoſe who made it. It hath not been either the doctrine or rules of our Church, which have ever given advantage to the enemies of it; but the indiſcretion of ſome in going beyond them, and the inconſtancy of others in not holding to them. (Stillingfl.) See Biſhop Stillingfleet's Sermon on this text; and the ſeveral notes on ch. i. 27. and ii. 1. John xvii. 11, 23. Rom. ix. 30. and xv. 5. 1 Cor. vii. 17. ix. 24. and xi. 34. 2 Cor x. 12, &c. and Gal. v. 11. and vi. 16.

Be followers together of me.] By propounding his own practice to theſe Philippians, as a pattern for their imitation, the Apoſtle hath at once intimated to us the duty, both of all who are entruſted with the miniſtry of the Goſpel to ſet, and of all who live under their miniſtry to follow, ſuch examples, as may expreſs and adorn the Chriſtian religion: The mighty uſefulneſs and happy influence whereof have been already intimated, in the notes on Eph. v. 11. The great neceſſity of ſuch examples, and of a careful conformity to them, is here, in the next place, urg'd from the multitudes of thoſe who brought a ſcandal upon, and acted manifeſtly againſt, the intereſts of the Chriſtian religion. This teaches men to depend upon the death of Jeſus, as the only ſufficient and meritorious cauſe of ſalvation; and preſcribes faith in him, as the means and condition of attaining the benefits purchaſed by that death. But ſeveral who had embraced the Goſpel, retained an intemperate and unſeaſonable zeal for the Moſaic inſtitution; and, holding the obſervance of thoſe rites ſtill neceſſary, repreſented the death of Chriſt as a partial and imperfect cauſe of ſalvation. This was a derogation, which, from whatever principle it proceeded, might very juſtly denominate the aſſertors of it "enemies of the croſs of Chriſt" But it had this yet higher aggravation, of being a time-ſerving principle, taken up for eaſe and convenience, to procure favour with the Jews, and prevent any perſecutions from that quarter. Not only ſo; but the advancers of it were as averſe to any mortification of their corrupt appetites, as they could be to bodily ſufferings for the truth: They would neither die for it, nor live up to it; profit and pleaſure, fleſh and ſenſe, had the whole of their thoughts and affections. And this was a temper and converſation, ſo contrary to that purity, that abſtractedneſs from the world, that ſeeking the whole of their happineſs in a future ſtate, to which both the example and the doctrine of our bleſſed Saviour oblige all his diſciples, that they might well be called enemies to Chriſt, who refuſe thus to follow him; and to that croſs, which, in either of the ſenſes juſt now mention'd, they would not be prevail'd upon to take up and follow him, Luke ix. 23. The circumſtances of religion are indeed very different now, from what they were then: But can it be ſaid, that the lives of its profeſſors are ſo? Do not multitudes of them, who call themſelves Chriſtians, betray the like ſenſual and worldly mind in the preſent age?" Do they not employ the chief of their care in making proviſion for all the ſoftneſſes of luxury and luſt; and, by a moſt diſſolute, and even filthy, converſation, make "their belly their God, and glory in their ſhame?" Do they not lay out their love and their deſires, their time and their pains, in the advantages and delights of this preſent mortal ſtate; and, by a wretched negligence and ſtupidity, ſet up their reſt, and place their happineſs on this ſide the grave, without any ſigns of regard to thoſe hopes and promiſes which teach them to expect and ſeek it in a future and diſtant ſtate? Is not this, in the ſtricteſt ſenſe of the Apoſtle's words, to "mind earthly things," while in truth they mind no other but theſe? If then that prepoſterous and abſurd behaviour drew tears from St. Paul, how can we ſee, and not moſt heartily bewail, the ſcandal brought upon the beſt of doctrines; the monſtrous inconſiſtence between the diſpoſition of ſuch believers, and the true ſpirit of that Goſpel, pretended to be made the rule of their faith and manners? How ſhall we bear to reflect upon the unſpeakable danger and miſery of infinite ſouls, "whoſe end muſt be deſtruction," in deſpight of all the methods of grace deſigned to ſave them from it? This is an occaſion, which calls for our compaſſion, more than any ſufferings, in perſon or in fortune, which extend to this life only. And ſuch, with regard to our own preſervation, ought to engage our care, not to be led away by the examples of thoſe many, who live in contradiction to the Goſpel; but to frame our temper and behaviour upon the model of thoſe few and better men, who have rightly conſidered the obligations they are under, and the privileges they are entitled to, and do demean themſelves accordingly. (Stanh.) With what cutting ſeverity and becoming zeal does the great Apoſtle here inveigh againſt the profligate lewdneſs and infatuation of deceivers, who renounced Chriſt and all morality! And tho' juſtice, and a regard to the honour of the Goſpel, and the ſecurity of Chriſtians yet uncorrupted engaged this faithful champion of the croſs to treat theſe wretches with ſuch ſharpneſs, and to foretell their miſerable end, to excite them (if poſſible) to a ſpeedy repentance, and to warn Chriſtians from adhering to ſuch blind guides, and walking with them in the road of damnation; yet, what tenderneſs and bowels of compaſſion are mixed with his juſt indignation and denunciations of wrath! The Apoſtle here, like an upright and compaſſionate judge, when he is obliged to pronounce the fatal ſentence againſt an incorrigible offender, yet does it with reluctance; with ſorrow in his heart, and tears in his eyes. (Blackw.) See Dr. Alleſtree's Sermon on this text; and the ſeveral notes on ch. ii. 4. Rom. vi. 21. and xvi. 17. 1 Cor. iv. 16. and xi. 1 2 Cor. iv. 18. and xi 15. Gal. vi. 12. and Eph. v. 11.

Our converſation is in heaven.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, As ye love your ſouls, follow not thoſe falſe teachers afore deſcribed, for they are citizens of this world; but imitate and follow us who are citizens of heaven, where our head is, where our heart is, where our happineſs is: It is true, we live here below, but we belong to the corporation and ſociety above; our citizenſhip is in heaven; for we have an high eſteem of that happineſs, and our chief concern is to make ſure of it, and we pleaſe and delight our ſelves with the joyful expectation of it, and we live anſwerably to our expectation; as we hope hereafter to live like the angels in glory, ſo we now endeavour to live like the angels in holineſs. Learn hence, All the faithful, both miniſters and people, have a right to heaven, as to their city; they are therefore with their hearts and affections to be daily aſpiring after it, and live in hopes of getting, e're long, the full poſſeſſion of it. (B.) The word (politeuma) here tranſlated converſation, being deriv'd from (politai) citizens, is literally citizenſhip, and denotes a municipium; which is the ſtate and condition of thoſe who, dwelling out of the city, have yet the jus civitatis, the privileges of the city belonging to them. Thus (ſaith Cicero,) All ſuch have two countries, one of nature, the other of law, after the example of Cato, who, being born at Tuſculum, was receiv'd into the ſociety of the people of Rome: And Tacitus ſays, They became municipes, ſo ſoon as they were receiv'd into the privileges of the city. But yet theſe differ'd from thoſe who were inhabitants of the city, ſo that thoſe alone might be choſen to offices in it. This alſo is the politeia, Acts xxii. 28 (by which Heſychius expounds politeuma) the privilege of being a freeman of Rome, belonging to one who dwelt in Judæa; and that bought by the chief captain there, but by birth belonging to St. Paul. And thus is the Chriſtian here on earth, a "fellow-citizen with the Saints," Eph. ii. 19. not a ſtranger, or foreigner, but a freeman, or municeps of heaven; tho' while he dwells here, he is in an inferior condition to the Saints who are in heaven, who alone are capable of reigning with God. CHAP. IV.

He concludes with general exhortations, and acknowledgments of their ſeaſonable liberality to him; and ſhuts up all, as uſual, with prayer and ſalutations.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. THerefore, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, ſo ſtand faſt in the Lord, my dearly beloved. I beſeech Euodias, and beſeech Syntiche, that they be of the ſame mind in the Lord. And I intreat thee alſo, true yoke-fellow, help thoſe women which laboured with me in the Goſpel, with Clement alſo, and with other my fellow-labourers, whoſe names are in the book of life. Rejoyce in the Lord alway: and again I ſay, Rejoyce. Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Be careful for nothing: But in every thing by prayer and ſupplication with thankſgiving, let your requeſts be made known unto God. And the peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding, ſhall keep your hearts and minds through Chriſt Jeſus. Finally, brethren, whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are honeſt, whatſoever things are juſt, whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, whatſoever things are of good report; if there be any vertue, and if there be any praiſe, think on theſe things. Thoſe things which ye have both learned and received, and heard and ſeen in me, do: And the God of peace ſhall be with you.

Stand faſt in the Lord] See the notes on ch. i. 27. 1 Cor. xv. 58. and Gal. v. 1.

Of the ſame mind in the Lord] See the notes on ch. i. 27. ii. 2. and iii. 16.

True yoke-fellow.] This ſeems to be the ſame with him whom he calls his brother, fellow-labourer, fellow-ſoldier, and the Apoſtle or Biſhop of the Philippians, ch. ii 25. viz. Epaphroditus: For, all theſe expreſſions are metaphors of the ſame thing; labouring together in preaching and governing the Church at Philippi. The conjecture from hence, that St. Paul was married, and writes here to his wife, ſeems to be without ground; the woman here ſpoken of being probably Euodias and Syntyche. (Fell) 'Tis certain, however, that the adjective here uſed is (gneſie) of the maſculine gender, not (gneſia) of the feminine; ſo that the true yoke-fellow here addreſs'd to, cannot be underſtood of any woman whatſoever. (W.) But whereas Dr. Whitby objects, that 'tis unlikely the Apoſtle ſhould mean Epaphroditus, becauſe he was not then at Philippi, but with him at Rome; it ſeems to me more unlikely, that St. Paul ſhould ſingle out any one of the inferior Clergy, under this diſtinguiſhing title of his true yoke-fellow, to "help thoſe women" who are here recommended to his care; eſpecially when their Biſhop was to be among them at Philippi, at the opening and reading the Epiſtle, tho' he was at Rome at the time of the Apoſtle's writing it; and therefore this addreſs may fairly be underſtood to be made to him, by way of Apoſtrophe.

Thoſe women which laboured with me.] Not which preach'd the Goſpel with St. Paul, but who took pains to miniſter unto him, and were partakers of the combats and difficulties which he ſuffered from the enemies of the Goſpel. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 5.

Whoſe names are in the book of life.] The book of life refers to the cuſtom of well-order'd cities, which kept regiſters, containing all the names of the citizens; out of which, as apoſtates and fugitives, and infamous perſons, were raſed (and agreeably there is mention of blotting out of names out of God's book, Rev. iii. 5.) ſo they that did continue obedient, orderly citizens, their names were ſtill continued in. Accordingly, life, ſignifying ſpiritual life here, (the ſtate of grace and favour of God, the inchoation of that future eternal life) the book of this life is the regiſter of all ſincere Chriſtians, (as the book of the living in the Pſalmiſt is the number of men that live in this world) from which they are expung'd who ceaſe to continue ſuch. (This is expreſſed in another like phraſe, Rev. iii. 12. I will write on him the name of the city of my God, and New Jeruſalem.) And as this was ordinary in cities, ſo was it every where in armies; into which, whoſoever entered, he had his name taken, and put into the muſter-roll. And thus the life of every Chriſtian, but eſpecially of thoſe that labour in the word and doctrine, being a warfare, the phraſe is ordinarily uſed, in all authors, of all Chriſtians. Thus in Cyril, the writing of their names, and (which is all one) the calling to the militia, are uſed to ſet down the ſtate of a Chriſtian; as alſo thoſe other expreſſions of the lamps, for fetching of the bridegroom, and deſire of the heavenly citizenſhip, the good purpoſe, and the conſequent hope. And as of all Chriſtians, ſo in a more eminent manner of the Apoſtles and their fellow-labourers here, 'tis affirmed, that their names were written in the book of life; in the knowledge and judgment of God, ſaith Theophylact, (or elſe, that from thence God had already adjudged life to them, as when it is ſaid, he that believeth not is condemned already, and ſo inſcribed in the book of death,) either as actual ſoldiers in the Chriſtian camp or Church (as the Apoſtles called themſelves) or as thoſe that had right to that ſuperior heavenly citizenſhip, to which all labourers had title; and conſequently all theſe fellow-labourers of St. Paul: Which at that preſent was perfectly true of them, tho' afterward Demas, one of them, Col. iv. 14. Philem. 24. forſook the employment, 2 Tim. iv. 10. And as of cities and armies, ſo in families, the phraſe and cuſtom is us'd; to which that of Ulyſſes in Homer refers,

> ——— His name was in Jupiter's court;

That is, he was born of a goddeſs. (H.) This phraſe doth not ſignify the abſolute election of any to eternal life, but only their preſent right to that inheritance, by virtue of the obedience of faith. (W.) The Clement here mention'd ſeems to be a Philippian: Yet many ancients take him to have been Clemens Romanus; without any ground but the name, which was a very common name. Clemens Romanus muſt have been but a young man at this time. The moſt that Irenæus ſays of him is, that he had ſeen, and heard, and converſed with Paul and Peter, before their death, and that many, in Clement's time, were living, who could remember the Apoſtles. But, this Clement had been St. Paul's fellow-labourer (at Philippi, I ſuppoſe) ten or twelve years before this time. (Wall)

Rejoice in the Lord alway.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 12. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. and Gal. v. 22.

Let your moderation.] Here we are to conſider, 1. The duty itſelf: And, 2. The reaſon enforcing it. In the former we may obſerve, 1. The nature of the thing, moderation. The original word (epieikes) ſeems primarily to import ſuch a candid temper, as diſpoſes men to an equitable proceeding, in caſes for which the law hath not made ſufficient proviſion: Not ſtretching things to their utmoſt rigour on the one hand; nor a ſupine remiſſneſs on the other; but receding from our right, where it is fit, and treating others with all that gentleneſs and juſt forbearance, which we, in their caſe, would think it reaſonable to find. 2. That this moderation ſhould be known; that is, Not to reſt only in the inward diſpoſition, but to be manifeſted in all our actions; and that, in ſo eminent a degree, that it might ſerve for a particular character to diſtinguiſh Chriſtians by. And, 3. That this ſhould extend to all occaſions, and all manner of perſons. For, to behave amicably and meekly to thoſe who are of the ſame opinion, engag'd in the ſame intereſt, and ready to do the ſame by us in return, is no great matter: But, to preſerve this evenneſs and ſweetneſs of temper to ſuch as differ in judgment, or uſe us ill; to return equity for injuſtice, gentleneſs for oppreſſion and hardſhip; to put the moſt favourable conſtruction upon the actions of thoſe who make it their buſineſs to provoke and perſecute us (as the Philippians here are exhorted to deal by their enemies, without exception, whether ignorant idolatrous Gentiles, or perverſe contentious Jews;) this is a noble conqueſt over our paſſions; ſuch as demonſtrates the mighty power of that religion, which could have ſo commanding an influence upon humane nature, when touch'd in the tendereſt part: And nature hath need of ſome very ſtrong motive, to check and controul thoſe reſentments, which injuries and ill treatment are apt to ſtir in our breaſts. And ſuch is that which follows, in the next words, as, 2. The reaſon enforcing this duty; "The Lord is at hand." By which ſome underſtand, that God is always preſent with us, a ſtrict obſerver of our actions; and therefore we ſhould be exceeding careful to behave ourſelves as men ſenſible, that his eye is always upon them; a ready help in our trouble, and an irreſiſtible avenger of our wrongs, whenever he ſees fit to reſcue us from ſuffering, or to call them to account by whom we ſuffer unjuſtly. But others, more agreeably (as I preſume) to the Apoſtle's intent, interpret this of Chriſt's coming to judgment; the time of which ſeems then to be believ'd not very far off. And if we conſider that particular judgment, which each of us undergoes at the day of death, (which determines that ſtate of our accounts wherein the general judgment will be ſure to find us;) in this ſenſe 'tis evident, to a demonſtration, that "the Lord is at hand," and his coming cannot be at any great diſtance from any man whatſoever. The ſum, then, of this matter, is, that the conſideration of a future judgment, and the near, as well as ſure, proſpect that Chriſtians have of it, is a good argument, why they ſhould not only bear afflictions and injuries with patience, not only ſupport and delight themſelves in the comforts of a good God, and a good conſcience, as the foregoing verſe directs; but (which is an attainment ſomewhat higher ſtill) why they ſhould behave themſelves with great temper, and all imaginable equity, even toward thoſe men who are the inſtruments and next cauſes of their ſufferings. (Stanh.) See the ſeveral Sermons of Biſhop Wilkins, Dr. Frank, Dr. Brett, Mr. J. Evans, and Mr. E. Kelſall, on this text; and the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 29.

Be careful for nothing.] As if he had ſaid, Acquaint God with your grief, whatever it is that troubleth you; and with your deſires, what it is ye would have: Commend all to his good pleaſure and wiſdom, by your humble and hearty prayers; and then take no further anxious care about it: Your heavenly Father will take care of it; who knows, better than ye do, what is fitteſt to be done in it. (Sanderſ.) Enough it is for us, in all things, by ſupplications and prayers for what we want, and thankſgivings for what we have, to "let our requeſts be made known unto him;" and then to "be careful for nothing" any farther, but to caſt all our care and our burthen upon him: And doubtleſs, he will not ſuffer us to lie and periſh, but will take us up, take care of us, and nouriſh us. (Idem) See Mr. Collier's Sermon on this text; and the notes on Matth. vi. 25, &c. Luke xii. 22. and xxii. 42. and Eph. v. 4, 20. and vi. 18.

The peace of God.] That by peace is meant the ſtudy of preſerving peace among men, appears, Gal. v. 22. where (eirene) peace is ſet among "the fruits of the ſpirit;" where conſequently it muſt not be that good of peace, which is a felicity, but no virtue, (no effect or fruit of God's ſanctifying ſpirit) but the peaceable-mindedneſs, deſire and purſuit of peace, called in other places (diokein eirenen) purſuing peace, and (eireneuein) having peace, Rom. xii. 18. Accordingly "the peace of God," Col. iii. 15. is (not God's peace or reconciliation toward us, but) that peaceableneſs which God hath commanded and bequeathed to us. And accordingly there it follows (eis en eclethete) "to which ye are called," which determines it to be a duty of ours. And then 'tis not improbable, but this may be the notion of (eirene tou Theou) "the peace of God," or, as the king's MS. reads, (Chriſtou) of Chriſt, in this place alſo. That the Apoſtle is exhorting them to peace and unity, is apparent, ch. iii. where the dogs that rend, the evil workers that defile, the conciſion, that (under pretence of kindneſs to the Moſaical law) cut and tear all to pieces, and are to be look'd to, and avoided in that Church, are certainly the Gnoſtick Hereticks, ver. 2. Againſt theſe he ſets himſelf in the remainder of that chapter, and concludes ver. 15. "As many therefore as are perfect, let us be of this mind; and if in any thing ye be otherwiſe minded," that is, if in any particular there be any difference of opinion in any among you, "God ſhall reveal even this unto you:" That is, there is no reaſon that ſuch a difference ſhould breed any diviſion, deſtroy that unity and peace which is to be preſerved among you; for, tho' at preſent ye do not, yet upon your prayers to God, and applying your ſelves to the uſe of this means, no doubt ye ſhall receive inſtructions from him by the Apoſtles, &c. in all that is neceſſary for you: But, or, In the mean time as far as we are advanced, ſome before other, let not that hinder our unity and peace, let us (all, both thoſe that are foremoſt, and thoſe that are not ſo forward) "walk by the ſame rule, and mind the ſame thing," ver. 16. All for peace and unity ſtill; and ſo on to the end, in advice to adhere to thoſe that continue in the doctrine he had taught them, and avoid all Hereticks. And then begins this chapter, "Wherefore my brethren, &c. ſo ſtand in the Lord;" that is, according to theſe former directions, ſtand, in oppoſition to apoſtatizing, or falling off, and ſo ſtand, preſerve this peace, all this while exhorted to, and ver. 12. I beſeech, or exhort, Euodias and Syntyches (to auto phronein en Kyrio) to mind the ſame thing in the Lord; that is, to preſerve this peace of God, to live in the unity of the Goſpel. And then the exhortation, ver. 4, 5, 6. belonging to that great Chriſtian duty of conſtancy, and rejoicing in prayer to God, inſtead of ſolicitude (here, as Matth. x. 19. ſeaſonably forbidden) in reſpect of the preſent preſſures, (and all this enforced with the mention of the near approach of Chriſt's coming to deſtroy the perſecutors, and reſcue the faithful) is directly deſigned to fortify them againſt the Gnoſtick compliances, and ſo is not alien from this matter. After all which, follows this; that if they take this courſe preſcribed, this peace of God by Chriſt commanded, and to which the Apoſtle had all this while ſo ſolicitouſly exhorted them, would guard and fortify their hearts (the principles of action and practice) and (noemata) their underſtandings, which were the parts ſubject to errors, in Chriſt Jeſus, and preſerve them in the right way againſt all the errors and temptations of thoſe times. The only remaining difficulty is, what is meant by this epithet, added to the peace of God, (hyperechouſa panta noun) that ſurpaſſeth all underſtanding; which will alſo be intelligible by what hath been premiſed. For as they that did ti heteros phronein, ch. ii. 15. that is, differed ſomewhat in opinion from others, were obliged, ver. 16. not to diſturb the peace of the Church for that, but to expect till God ſhould farther reveal or inſtruct them, (which concludes, that peace was more excellent and valuable than that exact knowledge or underſtanding of all things, which might be revealed, and much more than the pretended knowledge and underſtanding of the Gnoſticks) ſo it is moſt fitly here ſaid, that this love and care of preſerving that peace, preſcribed by God and Chriſt, is to be preferred before any underſtanding that either ſome were thought to want, or others to abound in. As for the ordinary notion which is had of this phraſe, for quiet and ſerenity of mind, as a ſpecial mercy of God, tho' that may be thought agreeable enough to the not caring, &c. ver. 6. yet 1. It will be hard to find any place where that is the notion of the peace of God (tho' of peace and reſt it is.) As for that of my peace, John xiv. 27. and then, 2. Tho' the no-ſolicitude do here come as an attendant on the precedent rejoicing in afflictions (and that a ſeaſonable means to keep from breaking the unity of the Church, and joining with the heretical Gnoſticks) yet 'tis not neceſſary that this concluding form, "The peace of God," &c. ſhould be reſtrained to this laſt particular of no-ſolicitude, which came in but incidentally, but may rather be applied to the grand matter of the Epiſtle, that of preſerving of peace in the Church. (H.) See Dr. Hickes's Sermon on this text; and the notes on John xiv. 27. and xvi. 33.

Whatſoever things are true.] Here we have a very comprehenſive precept deſcribing the duties of all Chriſtians; "Whatſoever things are true;" Truth is the principal character of our profeſſion, and is to be expreſſed in our words and actions: "Whatſoever things are honeſt," venerable or grave; that is, anſwer the dignity of our high calling, and agree with the gravity and comelineſs of the Chriſtian profeſſion: "Whatſoever things are juſt," according to divine and human laws: "Whatſoever things are pure" and chaſte; intimating, that we muſt preſerve the heart, the hand, the tongue, the eye from all impurity: "Whatſoever things are lovely, and of good report;" as eaſineſs to pardon, readineſs to oblige, compaſſion to the afflicted, liberality to the diſtreſſed, ſweetneſs of converſation, without gall and bitterneſs, theſe are of univerſal eſteem with mankind, and ſoften the moſt ſavage tempers and diſpoſitions. Note here, 1. That there are things naturally honeſt, juſt, and lovely in their own nature, and praiſe-worthy in themſelves, which do raiſe and refine the human nature; and without a command, their goodneſs is a ſtrong obligation to obſerve them. 2. That Chriſtianity doth adopt morality, or precepts of good life and manners, into its frame and conſtitution, and it is indeed an integral part of the Chriſtian religion; not that any moral precepts, tho' ever ſo good, can raiſe a ſoul from the death of ſin to a life of holineſs, without faith in Chriſt, and aſſiſtance from his ſpirit; but the morality which the Scriptures teach us, is founded, not barely upon principles of reaſon, but divine revelation, and obliges us to the practice of moral duties, in obedience to Chriſt's command, in conformity to his example, in the ſtrength of his aſſiſtance, and with an eye to his glory. (B.)

Heard, and ſeen in me.] See the notes on ch. iii. 17. and 1 Cor. xi. 1.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the laſt your care of me hath flouriſhed again, wherein ye were alſo careful, but ye lacked opportunity. Not that I ſpeak in reſpect of want: For I have learned in whatſoever ſtate I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abaſed, and I know how to abound: Every where, and in all things I am inſtructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to ſuffer need. I can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me. Notwithſtanding, ye have well done, that ye did communicate with my affliction. Now ye Philippians know alſo, that in the beginning of the Goſpel, when I departed from Macedonia, no Church communicated with me, as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only. For even in Theſſalonica ye ſent once and again unto my neceſſity. Not becauſe I deſire a gift: But I deſire fruit that may abound to your account. But I have all, and abound: I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were ſent from you, an odour of a ſweet ſmell, a ſacrifice acceptable, wellpleaſing to God. But my God ſhall ſupply all your need, according to his riches in glory, by Chriſt Jeſus. Now unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen. Salute every ſaint in Chriſt Jeſus. The brethren which are with me greet you. All the ſaints ſalute you, chiefly they that are of Ceſars houſhold. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

¶ It was written to the Philippians from Rome, by Epaphroditus.

Hath flouriſhed again.] Or revived. The word anethalete is a metaphor taken from plants, which are dead in the winter, but revive and flouriſh in the ſpring. Whence it ſhould ſeem, that their care for the Apoſtle had been intermitted for a ſeaſon, but now put forth (as it were) again, as flowers do in the ſpring. (Aſſ.) Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, and Theophylact, ſay, the Philippians had wanted ability; tho' Oecumenius and Phavorinus impute it to their want of opportunity, as our tranſlation does. (W.) But eph' ho kai ephroneite, which we tranſlate "wherein ye were alſo careful," ſhould rather be render'd, for whom indeed ye had been careful; for the Apoſtle ſpeaks here of himſelf. (Maſſey)

Therewith to be content.] Obſerve here, 1. The viciſſitude, and great uncertainty, of St. Paul's outward condition: At one time he abounds, at another time he is abaſed; at one time he is full, at another in want; Teaching us, that the deareſt of God's children, in regard to their outward condition, are ſubject to variety of changes. 2. The general leſſon, which he had learn'd, with reference to this variety of conditions; that is, the leſſon of contentment; "I have learned, in whatſoever ſtate I am, therewith to be content." 3. The particular leſſons learnt by him; "both how to be abaſed, and how to abound:" Both very hard leſſons, indeed; but of the two, perhaps, it is harder to know how to abound, than how to be abaſed. Quere 1. When may a man be ſaid to "know how to abound?" Anſ. When he ſets a due value, and a right eſteem, upon the things of the world, and neither prizeth them too high, nor too low; when he ſo uſes his abundance, as to avoid the temptations which do accompany that abundance; when he is willing to part with his abundance at the call and command of God; and, in a word, when he attends more to the duties of his proſperous eſtate, than to the ſenſual pleaſures and ſatisfaction of it. Quere 2. What is it to "know how to be abaſed?" Anſ. Not to be diſcouraged, or to ſuffer the ſpirit to ſink or faint in the day of adverſity; to be not only humble by affliction, but humble under it; to ſuffer what God inflicts, without impatience or complaint, without ſourneſs of ſpirit or diſcontent: to believe firmly that whatever we meet with, is from the hand of a father; that whatever we part with, is but a periſhing creature; that God is able to reſtore all our loſt comfort with advantage to us, and will do it, if it be good for us, either in kind or equivalency. Queſt. 3. How doth it appear, harder to know how to abound, than how to be abaſed? Thus; There are more and harder duties, required of thoſe that abound, than of them that want. There are more and ſtronger temptations, which attend thoſe in abundance, than them that want. Hence it is that God gives ſo many ſolemn charges and commands to thoſe that abound, to take heed to themſelves, more than to thoſe that are in want. See Deut. vi. 12. In a word, I do not remember one inſtance, in all the Scripture, of a full or proſperous condition, which was ever ſo much as the remote occaſion of a ſinner's converſion unto God; but I find in Scripture that an afflicted condition has been bleſs'd to many for this end, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12. Hoſ. v. 15. Job xxiii. 15. (B.) See Biſhop Sanderſon's Sermons on this text; and the notes on Matth. vi. 25. Acts xx. 33. 1 Cor. iv. 11. and 2 Cor. xi. 27.

Do all things through Chriſt.] Obſerve here, The ſchool in which St. Paul learned this great leſſon, to "know how to be abaſed, and how to abound, and to be thoroughly content in every condition; it was not at Gamaliel's feet, but Chriſt's feet: "I can do all things through Chriſt ſtrengthning me:" Chriſt was both his tutor and his ſtrengthner; he taught him his leſſon, and enabled him to practiſe it. See here, 1. That a real Chriſtian is able to "do all things;" all things that concern a Chriſtian; all things that belong to the glory of God and his ſoul's ſalvation; all things, not in a legal, but evangelical ſenſe; not all things, nor indeed any thing with a ſinleſs perfection; but all things in reſpect of his love to the whole law, in reſpect of his purpoſe and reſolution, in reſpect of his deſire and endeavours. Again, "I can do all things;" Underſtand it in an active ſenſe, I can deny my ſelf, believe in a withdrawing God, conquer the world, ſubdue unmortified corruption, and live a life of evangelical perfection: Take it alſo in a paſſive ſenſe, I can ſuffer all things, I can bear Chriſt's croſs, wear his yoke, endure any thing for him, or from him, when call'd forth to ſuffer. 2. That as a Chriſtian can do all things, ſo his ability to do all things lies not in himſelf, but in Chriſt. A believer receives an active power from Chriſt, to enable him to do whatever he requires to do; ability to ſubdue corruption, to conquer temptation, to bear affliction, and to glorify God in every condition; all this is from Chriſt; and the ſincere Chriſtian may ſay with this eminent Saint, "I can do all things through Chriſt that ſtrengthens me." (B.) The original word (iſchuo) ſignifieth not ſo properly "I can do all things," as I am able for all things; namely, thoſe things he mentioned before, which were rather paſſions than actions; as to be abaſed, and to ſuffer need, &c. (Aſſ.) See Mr. W. Sciater's Sermon on this text; and the notes on John xv. 5. 1 Cor. x. 13. and 3 Cor. xii. 8, 9.

An odour of a ſweet ſmell.] Irenæus ſeems to ſuppoſe, that what St. Paul received was ſome conſiderable part of what the people had offered at the altar. And, the truth is, when St. Paul ſpeaks of bringing alms and oblations from other churches to his countrymen at Jeruſalem, Acts xxiv. 17. we cannot in reaſon underſtand him otherwiſe, than ſpeaking of the oblations made at the Euchariſt for this purpoſe; for there is no proof, that ſending the Euchariſt ſymbols themſelves did yet prevail. (Johnſ.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 1. and Eph. v. 3.

My God ſhall ſupply.] See the notes on Matth. vi. 36. Rom. ii. 4. and 2 Cor. ix. 8.

The brethren.] See the notes on Gal. i. 3.

Of Cæſar's houſhold.] This Cæſar was Nero; in whoſe palace St. Paul's bonds were made manifeſt, ch. i. 13. And God gave ſuch bleſſing to his preaching and ſufferings, that he made ſome converts there, who afterwards proved martyrs; namely, Evellius and Torpetes, if, at leaſt, we may believe the Roman martyrology. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 13.

The End of the Epiſtle of St. PAUL to the PHILIPPIANS.

CRITICAL

ANNOTATIONS

Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the Apostle,

TO THE COLOSSIANS.

CONCERNING this Epiſtle, it may be proper to advertiſe the reader,

i. That Coloſſæ (or Coloſſis) was a city of Pacatiana, or Phrygia major, built upon the river Lycus, near the place according to Herodotus) where it begins to run under-ground; as it does for five furlongs, before it riſes again, and ſlides into Meander. It was ſituated at an equal diſtance between Laodicea and Hierapolis; and periſh'd, together with them, by an earthquake, which happen'd (according to Euſebius) in the tenth year of Nero; that is, but a few years after the writing this Epiſtle: And, being afterwards rebuilt, it was call'd Chonæ; as it is ſaid to be to this day. It had been much fam'd in hiſtory, from the coming of Xerxes thither, in his great expedition againſt Greece: But its greateſt honour was its receiving the Goſpel of Chriſt ſo early; tho' by whoſe preaching it is a matter of ſome queſtion. Theodoret confeſſes, that moſt of the ancient Scholiaſts were of opinion, that St. Paul had not yet ſeen the place when he wrote this Epiſtle to the Church there: But he ſays, this doth not follow (but rather the contrary) from the words commonly cited to ſupport their argument; as he interprets them, ch. ii. 1. which we ſhall conſider in the proper place. The received opinion is, That the Coloſſians had firſt heard the Goſpel preach'd by Epaphras, ch. i. 7. a diſciple of St. Paul, whom he had ſent thither for that purpoſe, and who was now his fellow-priſoner at Rome, Philem. 23.

ii. That the Apoſtle, having been inform'd by Epaphras of the ſucceſs of his miniſtry among them, and of the agreeableneſs of their actions to the faith, ſends this Epiſtle of conſolation to ſtrengthen and confirm them: But hearing alſo, that in the abſence of Epaphras, the Coloſſians were in danger to be ſeduced by divers falſe and heretical teachers, (probably Cerinthus, or ſome of his followers, or the diſciples of Simon Magus, afterwards call'd Gnoſticks) whoſe hereſy was a compound of Jewiſh and Heathen ſuperſtitions, he intermixes proper cautions againſt them.

iii. That the ſubject of the whole is a collection of godly inſtructions, tending, 1. To the confirmation of the Chriſtian faith in the Deity and kingdom of Chriſt, and his triumph over principalities and powers, and our redemption, regeneration, and juſtification by him, ch. i. ii. And, 2. To the regulating a godly life and converſation, by performing ſuch duties as are required of all thoſe who embrace the Goſpel of Chriſt; as well. 1 Abſolutely, and in general; ſuch as mortifying the luſts of the fleſh, ſpeaking truth, avoiding ſcandal, and doing works of mercy and charity, ch. iii. to ver. 18. and ch. iv. 2, &c. And, 2. Relatively, and in particular; ſuch as are requir'd of huſbands and wives, ch. iii. ver. 18. parents and children, ver. 20. maſters and ſervants, ver. 22, &c. And,

iv. That as the tenor and ſubject of this Epiſtle (and often the very expreſſions of it) are much the ſame with that to the Epheſians, we may thence conclude it to have been written about the ſame time with that, or very ſoon after.

CHAP. I.

After the uſual ſalutation, the Apoſtle thanketh God for their faith; confirmeth the doctrine of Epaphras; prays for their further increaſe in grace; deſcribes the true Chriſt; encourages them to receive Chriſt Jeſus; and recommendeth his own miniſtry.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. PAUL, an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother, to the ſaints and faithful brethren in Chriſt, which are at Coloſſe: Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. We give thanks to God, and the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, praying always for you, ſince we heard of your faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and of the love which ye have to all the ſaints; for the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the Goſpel: Which is come unto you, as it is in all the world, and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth alſo in you, ſince the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth. As ye alſo learned of Epaphras our dear fellow-ſervant, who is for you a faithful miniſter of Chriſt; who alſo declared unto us your love in the ſpirit.

Timotheus, our brother.] See the notes on Acts xv. 32. and xvi. 1. and 2 Cor. i. 1.

To the ſaints.] See the notes on 2 Cor. i. 1.

Grace be unto you.] See the notes on John xiv. 27. Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 1 and Gal. i. 3.

We give thanks.] See the notes on Rom. i. 8. and Eph. i. 16.

To God, and the Father of our Lord.] As the Hebrew vau hath oft the import of (id eſt) that is, in the Old Teſtament, (See Noldius, p. 280. 27.) ſo has the Greek kai; as Matth. xxi. 5. "Behold, thy king cometh, ſitting upon an aſs, (kai polon) that is, a colt, the fole of an aſs." And frequently it ſignifies (nempe) to wit: As, in Deut. iii. 25. "That goodly mountain, (vah Lebanon) to wit, Lebanon." So alſo, Judg. vi. 25. and elſewhere. So again, John x. 33. "For blaſphemy, (kai hoti), to wit, becauſe that thou, being a man, makeſt thy ſelf God." So, Rom. xv 6. "Glorify God (kai patera) to wit, even, or who is, the Father." And ſo again, 1 Cor. xv. 24. Gal. i. 4. and elſewhere. As therefore God, who is the God of Iſrael, was the characteriſtic of the true God to the Jewiſh nation; ſo "God, who is the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," is the characteriſtic of the ſame God to the Chriſtians; who worſhip him under that title; as being "the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt," and in him our Father, we being the ſons of God through faith in him, and deriving all our bleſſings from the Father through him. (W.)

Since we heard of your faith.] See the notes on ch. ii. 1. and Eph. i. 15.

The hope which is laid up for you.] Apokeimene importeth, 1. A deſignation of that which is laid up, to ſome peculiar perſon: And, 2. A reſervation, and ſafe keeping of it, to the uſe of thoſe it is deſign'd for. The Apoſtle here alludes to Fathers, who lay up treaſures for their children to poſſeſs hereafter. (Leigh) See the notes on Rom. viii. 24.

In all the world.] This is to be underſtood, by an uſual hyperbole, of the moſt noted parts of the world, from which the reſt might hear of it: And ſo it is alſo, Ezra i. 2. Jer. xxv. 26, 29. Acts ii. 5. and elſewhere. (W.) See the notes on Acts ii. 5. and Rom. x. 18.

Bringeth forth fruit.] Here, and in many other places, the words corn and fruit do ſignify proſelytes, or converts. (Johnſ.) See the notes on John xv. 16.

Learned of Epaphras.] See the Preface to this Epiſtle; and the notes on ch. ii. 1. and Acts xv. 32.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. For this cauſe we alſo, ſince the day we heard it, do not ceaſe to pray for you, and to deſire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wiſdom and ſpiritual underſtanding: That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleaſing, being fruitful in every good work, and increaſing in the knowledge of God; ſtrengthned with all might according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long-ſuffering with joyfulneſs; giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light: Who hath delivered us from the power of darkneſs, and hath tranſlated us into the kingdom of his dear ſon: In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveneſs of ſins. Who is the image of the inviſible God, the firſt-born of every creature: For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, viſible and inviſible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: All things were created by him, and for him: And he is before all things, and by him all things conſiſt. And he is the head of the body, the Church: Who is the beginning, the firſt-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell; and (having made peace through the blood of his croſs) by him to reconcile all things unto himſelf, by him, I ſay, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.

Since the day we heard], See the notes on ch. ii. 1.

That ye might be filled.] Here are ſeveral divine graces requiſite; 1. To know perfectly our way, and what the will of God requires of us, ver. 9. 2. To go to God in a way which is worthy of him; worſhipping and ſerving him agreeably to his nature, in ſpirit and in truth; and doing every thing upon a principle of love, and by a ſpirit of religion. 3. To apply our ſelves, not to that good which is moſt profitable to us, but to that which honours God, and is moſt pleaſing to him. 4 Not on ſome occaſions only, but in all things. 5. Not to have only barren and fruitleſs deſires, but to employ our life in real works and effects. 6. In all ſorts of works; not ſtopping at any, but keeping our ſelves in a readineſs to perform "every good work." 7. To feed continually on the word of God, that we may "increaſe in the knowledge of him," and be more and more enflamed with the love of his truth, ver. 10. 8. To rely ſolely upon the Almighty power of God; which can be meaſured only by the infinite greatneſs of his glory. 9. To be ready to ſuffer all things, without reſerve, exception, or intermiſſion. 10. Never to think that we have ſufficiently either hoped, or laboured, or ſuffered, or expected God's appointed time. 11. Nothing of all this is worthy of God, if it be not accompanied with peace and joy of heart; which may ſhew, that God is inſtead of all things to it, ver. 11. And, 12. To carry always in our heart an inexhauſtible ſtock of gratitude towards God, for the gift he has given us of Jeſus Chriſt by the incarnation, of the faith thereof which has been given us, and of the glory to which we are called in him. It is "the inheritance of ſaints:" Let us therefore earneſtly endeavour to become ſuch, if we aſpire after it, ver. 12. (Q.) See the notes on John xvii. 3. Rom. xii. 2. 1 Cor. i. 5. Eph. i. 8, 16. and v. 7. Phil. i. 9. and the other notes here next following.

Walk worthy of the Lord.] See the notes on Eph. iv. 1. and Phil. i. 27.

Patience, and long-ſuffering, with joyfulneſs.] The Apoſtle prays, that they may be perfect Chriſtians, in all the parts and benefits of it; the underſtanding perfected by knowledge and wiſdom; the affections and outward man by holineſs, piety, and all other virtues: And theſe ſo powerfully, that they may be able to reſiſt all perſecutions. Patience ſeems to reſpect the difficulty, and long-ſuffering the duration, of afflictions. (Fell) See the notes on Acts v. 41. Rom. v. 3. and Phil. i. 9.

Inheritance of the ſaints in light.] Here note, 1. A deſcription of heaven, or the bleſſed ſtate of good men in another world; 'tis an inheritance, the inheritance of ſaints, and an inheritance in light. 1. 'Tis an inheritance: Now that is a poſſeſſion only proper to children; Hereditas filiis debetur, non ſervis. 'Tis an unmerited and undeſerved poſſeſſion; and 'tis the beſt donative that a father has to give unto his children: Particularly, this inheritance of heaven which God gives to all, and yet to every one of his children, is the freeſt inheritance, the ſureſt, the moſt ſatisfying, the moſt delightful, and the moſt durable inheritance. 2. Heaven; 'tis the inheritance of ſaints, or of holy perſons only, ſuch as are really holy, univerſally holy, perſeveringly holy; to them, and only to them, does it belong; 'tis purchaſed for them, 'tis promiſed to them, 'tis given to them, they have already the firſt-fruits of it in the ſpirit's inhabitation, which is given to them as an earneſt of heaven; it is prepared for them, and they are prepared for that; and it ſhall be finally adjudged to them at the great and laſt day. 3. 'Tis an inheritance in light, that is, an inheritance with God; an inheritance in joy, an inheritance in glory, and a common inheritance for all the Saints: As the light of the ſun is a common bleſſing to all that have eyes to ſee it, and every perſon in a room has the benefit of the light of the candle, as if he enjoyed it by himſelf alone; ſo is the inheritance of heaven; it is full and entirely enjoyed by all the Saints, as if there were but one to poſſeſs and enjoy it. Note, 2. The qualification of the perſons who may upon good grounds expect to be made partakers of this glorious inheritance when they die; namely, ſuch, and only ſuch, as by the aſſiſtance of God's grace, and the concurrence of their own care and endeavours, are made meet, that is, fit, prepared and ready for this inheritance while they live. Our perſons muſt be juſtified by the blood of Chriſt, our natures renewed by the grace and ſpirit of Chriſt, and our lives daily more and more conformed to the doctrine and example of Chriſt, or we can never partake of this inheritance; without likeneſs to God, we can have no expectation of living with him. 3. The duty belonging to, and expected from them whom the Father has made meet for his glorious inheritance; and that is, the duty of eternal thankſgiving; "giving thanks to the Father, who has made us meet." As none ſhall enjoy this inheritance but ſuch as are made meet for it; ſo thoſe, all thoſe, who are made meet for it, muſt aſcribe their meetneſs unto God, and give him thanks for it. 'Tis a ſpiritual bleſſing, 'tis a tranſcendent favour, 'tis a diſcriminating favour, 'tis an everlaſting favour; eternity will be too ſhort to ſpend in the adminiſtration of it, and in gratulations for it: Let ſuch of us as are intereſted in it, now begin the work upon earth, of giving thanks to the Father, for "making us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light." (B.) See Biſhop Beveridge's Sermon on this text; and the notes on Acts xxvi. 18. Rom. viii. 17. and Eph. i. 11.

The power of darkneſs.] See the notes on Luke xxii. 53. John viii. 34. Acts xxvi. 17. Rom. xii 2. and xiii. 12. and Eph. ii. 2. and vi. 12.

Redemption through his blood.] See the notes on Acts xx. 28. Rom. iii. 24. and Eph. i. 7.

The image of the inviſible God.] This, and the three following verſes, are uſually, and moſt properly, underſtood of the Godhead of the Son, and of his eternal generation. And thus he is called Image; becauſe he, perfectly, and without diſſimilitude or diverſity, (the conſummation of likeneſs) is one with the Father, and the firſt, or only, begotten before all creatures. But he may alſo be call'd the image of the Father in his humane nature, Heb. i. 3. The Father being, both in his own nature, and to us, inviſible, Exod. xxxiii. 20. John i. 18. 1 Tim. vi. 16. Not appearing in any viſible ſhape, and his actions but obſcurely ſhadow'd in the Old Teſtament: And, ſince our happineſs conſiſts in being like unto him, it was neceſſary, that we ſhould have a more perfect and clear deſcription of him; which was effected by his only-begotten ſon's incarnation; to the end that, by imitating him, we might alſo become conformable to the Father, John xiv. 7, &c. 1 Tim. iii. 16. and thereby be made his ſons. Thus is our Lord ſaid to be the firſt-born of the creation; as Gen. xlix. 3. Reuben is call'd his father's might, &c. that is, in whom dwelt all fulneſs, perfection, and pre-eminence, whereof any creature was capable; or, as the firſt-born, under the law of nature, (and the Prieſts which came in their ſtead, in the law of Moſes) were kings, prieſts, and above their brethren, both in honour, power and portion. (Fell) To the Arians, who objected, That if God the Father was inviſible, and Chriſt was perfectly and eſſentially his image, then Chriſt muſt have been inviſible too, and that Chriſt had declar'd, that the Jews had neither known him nor his father; Phæbadius anſwers, thus; 'Tis true (ſays he) here are two unknown; but then theſe two ſtand together here in the ſame circumſtances; as is plain from what our Lord ſays elſewhere, Had they known me, they would have known my Father; becauſe, by the individuality of their nature, the one cannot be known, or unknown, without the other, Cont. Arian. col. 283. Thus Jacob could not ſee the Divine Majeſty it ſelf, and live; but he ſaw him by that viſible appearance to which God had join'd himſelf, Eucer. Lugd. quæſt. in Gen. xxxii. 30. (Park. Bibl. Bibl. on Gen. xxxii. 28.) As to the Socinian notion of this text, ſee Dr. Whitby at large upon it. See alſo the notes on John i. 2, 18. and xiv. 9. Rom. viii. 29. and 2 Cor. iv. 4. and the note here next following.

The firſt-born of every creature.] Jeſus Chriſt being here call'd prototocos paſes ctiſeos, the Socinians boldly aſſert, that our Saviour is only a creature; And does not our tranſlation ſeem to countenance that error? But, if a due regard was had to that famous paſſage, John i. 15. (protos mou en) which is properly there tranſlated "He was before me," this text ſhould be here rendred born before all creation; that is, exiſting from eternity. For protos doth not only ſignify firſt, but former, or before: As, John xv. 18. and 1 John iv. 19. and it retains the ſame ſignification alſo, in compoſition. We ought, therefore, either to receive this interpretation of it here, or elſe to read the word (prototocos) with its accent on the laſt ſyllable but one, the bringer forth, that is, creator of all creation; which is no way inconſiſtent with truth, or the analogy of faith. (Maſſey) See Hammond and Whitby on this place; and the notes on ver. 18. John i. 15. and Rom. viii. 29.

By him were all things created.] This cannot, without great wreſting, be underſtood of any other than the creation of the world, when "by the word of the Lord the heavens were made," Pſa. xxxiii. 6. and John i. 3. as the wiſdom and power of God, Gen. xlix. 3. becauſe the cauſing of all things is applied to him: (He the efficient, and the end of all, the end alſo proving him to be the creator, becauſe he made all things for himſelf, John i. 3. and Heb. i. 2.) and alſo becauſe here is a recapitulation of all creatures; and angels cannot be ſaid to be created in the new creation, whereof he ſpeaks diſtinctly, ver. 18. But the angelical nature, omitted by Moſes, is here expreſs'd; becauſe the deceivers ſeem'd to advance that above our Saviour, at leaſt to be exempt from his power. Again, by this it appears, againſt thoſe Hereticks, 1. That our Lord was not an angel, but above them, becauſe he created them. 2. That he was no creature (all thoſe being made by him) and therefore eſſentially God. And, 3. Therefore in glory and power above all things, Pſa. lxxxix. 27. (Fell) Theſe ſeveral titles of "thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers," here rehearſed, may poſſibly be no more but the expreſſions of ſeveral degrees of dignity among men. So (thronoi) thrones may denote kings, or monarchs, and princes; (kyriotetes) dominions, or lordſhips, may be the reguli, the honours (whether of dukes or earls) next under princes; archai, the præfects of provinces and cities; and exouſiai, inferior magiſtrates; and if ſo, then may they be here ſet down to denote all ſorts and conditions of men in the Gentile world, by the chief dignities among them here on earth. But becauſe they may alſo ſignify the ſeveral degrees of angels, and becauſe there is alſo mention of (horata kai aorata) "viſible and inviſible," and the angels may moſt probably be contained by the latter of them, as this lower world of men by the former, and becauſe it is the creation that is here referred to, and the creating of the angels, as well as men, &c. belongs truly to Chriſt as God; therefore it will be moſt reaſonable in this place to interpret it, in the greater extent, to comprehend angels and men too, the higheſt and moſt eminent of both ſorts, thereby to ſet out the eternal dignity and power of Chriſt, who is creator of all, and conſequently before the moſt principal angels, which were created before men. (H.) See Dr. Whitby, alſo, on this text; and the notes on John i. 3. Acts xvii. 28. Eph. i. 21. and vi. 12.

By him all things conſiſt.] Another argument, that our Saviour is God, becauſe, as by him (the word of God) "all things were created," ſo do they continue and ſubſiſt by him; that is, by the ſame Word, which is providence, the perpetual act of God alone. (Fell) See the notes on John i. 3. and xvii. 5. and 1 Cor. viii. 6.

The head of the body.] See the notes on John v. 28. x. 18. and xvii. 1, &c. Acts ii. 24. Rom. vi. 4, &c. viii. 17, 29. and xiv. 9, &c. 1 Cor. xi. 3. and xv. 20. Eph. i. 22. and iv. 15.

In him ſhould all fulneſs dwell.] See the notes on John i. 16. and iii. 34. and Eph. iv 10.

By him to reconcile.] Apocatallaxai. This word, ſay Heſychius, Suidas, and Phavorinus, ſignifies (philopoieſai) to make friends, or to reduce perſons to their former amity. This, by the fathers, is thus explain'd, That while men continued in obedience to God, angels and men were in a perfect friendſhip; but when men became diſobedient to their ſovereign Lord, the angels became averſe to them, becauſe their Lord was diſhonour'd by them: But God being reconciled to us by the death of his ſon, they alſo became friends and miniſtring ſpirits to us; and we became of the ſame Church and body with them, under the ſame head Chriſt Jeſus, Heb. xii. 22. and ſo all things in heaven and earth were gathered into one Chriſt, Eph. i. 10. (W.) See a more large and critical explication of this verſe in Dr. Hammond; ſee, alſo, the notes on John xvi. 33. Rom. v. 10. and x. 19. 2 Cor. v. 18. Eph. i. 10. and ii. 14.

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. And you that were ſome time alienated, and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled, in the body of his fleſh through death, to preſent you holy and unblameable, and unreproveable in his ſight: If ye continue in the faith grounded and ſettled, and be not moved away from the hope of the Goſpel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a miniſter. Who now rejoice in my ſufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh, for his bodies ſake, which is the church: Whereof I am made a miniſter, according to the diſpenſation of God, which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God; even the myſtery which hath been hid from ages, and from generations, but now is made manifeſt to his ſaints: To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this myſtery among the Gentiles; which is Chriſt in you, the hope of glory: Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wiſdom; that we may preſent every man perfect in Chriſt Jeſus: Whereunto I alſo labour, ſtriving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily.

Sometime alienated, and enemies.] See the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 11. 2 Cor. v. 18. Eph. ii. 1, 12. iv. 18. and v. 8.

In your mind.] Dianoia; that is, in all the chief powers of the ſoul; viz. reaſon, will, and affection, (Leigh)

The body of his fleſh.] The fleſh is here added, either to diſtinguiſh his natural body from his myſtical body, of which he ſpake, ver. 18. or to teach us, that his humane body was not a phantaſtical, but a true ſubſtantial body. (Aſſ.)

Preſent you holy, and unblameable.] Paraſteſai. The verb (pariſtemi) is judicial, borrowed from courts of judgment, where men are ſet before a judge to be tried and examined: And the Apoſtle's meaning is, that they may be "holy, and unblameable, and unreproveable," in the ſight of Chriſt, before his great tribunal. (Leigh) See the notes on Rom. xii. 1. 1 Cor. i. 8. and Eph. i. 4.

If ye continue in the faith.] Hence it follows, That thoſe who have true faith and juſt ground of hope, may yet fall away from them. (W.) See the notes on John xv. 6. Rom. x. 18. Eph. ii. 21. and iii. 17,

Preached to every creature.] En paſe te ctiſei; To all the creation; that is, to all mankind under heaven. (Wall)

Rejoice in my ſufferings.] See the notes on Acts v. 41. 2 Cor. i. 5. iv. 10. and vii. 4.

Fill up that which is behind of the afflictions.] This is not to be underſtood of Chriſt's ſufferings for our ſins, as if there ſhould be ſomething wanting for our redemption; for that is perfect and compleat in all parts thereof, and nothing wanting, ver. 20. Heb. x. 14. 1 John i. 7, &c. 2 John ii. 2. But it is to be underſtood of the ſufferings of Chriſt's members for his ſake, 2 Cor. i. 5. and Heb. xi. 26. For we muſt conceive of Chriſt and his Church, as of one body and perſon, whoſe afflictions are limited by the providence of God. Now, Chriſt, the Head, having ſuffer'd already, it remaineth now that the Church, and every member thereof, do ſuffer their ſhare likewiſe, in their turn, according to his example, albeit to different ends; inaſmuch as the ſufferings of Chriſt are the price of our redemption, whereas thoſe of the faithful are nothing elſe but exerciſes, and trials of their faith and patience. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts ix. 16. and Eph. i. 23.

To fulfil the word of God.] Pleroſai ton logon, "to fulfil the word," is a phraſe which we meet with, 1 Mac. ii. 55. ſpoken of Joſhua, that "for fulfilling the word he was made a judge in Iſrael;" where, as the word ſignifies the will and pleaſure of God revealed to him, ſo (pleroſai) to fulfil it, is to perform it in a very eminent manner. But in this place, ho logos, being by the context confined to another notion, the preaching or publiſhing the Goſpel of Chriſt peculiarly, (pleroun ton logon Theou) "to fulfil the word of God," will be, to fulfil that preaching; that is, to proceed as far in the preaching of it, as, by all his diligence and care, by himſelf and others, he could do, and ſo belongs to the preaching it to theſe Coloſſians, to whom, being out of his way, he yet had ſent Epaphras, ver. 7. Thus we have a like phraſe, Rom. xv. 19. (pleroſai to evangelion tou Chriſtou) to fill up the preaching, or Goſpel, of Chriſt; that is, to preach it from city to city, from Jeruſalem as far as to Illyricum. (H.) Whom we preach.] The ſum of this Apoſtle's preaching was, 1. To bring all, to whom he preach'd, but eſpecially the Gentiles, to repent and forſake their falſe religion and wicked lives. 2. To teach them the wiſdom of God, in the grounds of Chriſtian religion. And, 3. To advance them to perfection both in knowledge and holineſs. CHAP. II.

He proceeds, in exhorting them to be conſtant; to beware of vain philoſophy, and traditions; ſuch as worſhipping of Angels, and the ceremonies of the law, which are aboliſh'd in Chriſt.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. FOR I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not ſeen my face in the fleſh: That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding, to the acknowledgment of the myſtery of God, and of the Father, and of Chriſt; in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge. And this I ſay, leſt any man ſhould beguile you with enticing words. For though I be abſent in the fleſh, yet am I with you in the ſpirit, joying and beholding your order, and the ſtedfaſtneſs of your faith in Chriſt. As ye have therefore received Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, ſo walk ye in him: Rooted and built up in him, and ſtabliſhed in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thankſgiving.

What great conflict I have.] See the notes on 2 Cor. xi. 23, &c. and Phil. i. 30.

For them at Laodicea.] See the notes on ch. iv. 16.

Have not ſeen my face.] This text is much inſiſted on, as a proof that St. Paul had never (yet at leaſt) been among the Coloſſians in perſon: And yet Theodoret (as is intimated in the Preface) is of another opinion, reading the words here thus, Not for you only, and for them of Laodicea, but alſo for them who "have not ſeen my face in the fleſh." But, the connective particle, being not (alla, or alla kai) but alſo, but only (kai) and, ſeems to favour our tranſlation, as well as the common opinion of the Ancients. And whereas he adds, that the Apoſtle went from Phrygia (of which Coloſſe was the metropolis) from whence he concludes that he muſt have preach'd there; this will not follow: Since, the firſt time, he only went through Phrygia, en paſſant, Acts xvi. 6. and, the ſecond time, ch. xviii. 23. he only ſtay'd to confirm the brethren, whom he found already converted; but that he came to Coloſſe, is not ſaid. In ſhort, the arguments offered to prove that he had not then ſeen them, ſeem ſtronger; as appears, not only from this text, but from other expreſſions in this ſame Epiſtle: As, ch. i. 4. where he intimates, that he had only "heard of their faith in Chriſt Jeſus;" and ver. 7. that they had learn'd it, not from him, but from Epaphras, whom he ſtiles, to them "a faithful miniſter of Chriſt." (W.)

Knit together in love.] See the notes on John xiii. 34. Eph. i. 17. and iv. 16.

To the acknowledgment.] See the notes on ch. i. 9 John xvii. 3. 1 Cor. ii. 2. and Phil. iii. 8.

In whom are hid.] En ho. Some make theſe words relate to the myſtery, mention'd in the foregoing verſe. But it ſeems rather to reſpect the perſon of Chriſt, as Mediator; the knowledge of whom (ſaith the Apoſtle) hath an excellency beyond all other knowledge, Phil. iii. 8. For in this chapter alſo, ver. 11. (en ho perietmethete) "in whom ye are circumciſed," and ver. 12. (en ho ſynegerthete) in whom "ye are riſen," plainly relate to Chriſt's perſon, and his performances as Mediator; and the whole following chapter ſpeaks of him, and of the benefits which we have receiv'd (en auto) by him. The Apoſtle alſo doth apply this to him, by ſaying, ver. 6. "As ye have received Chriſt Jeſus, the Lord, ſo walk ye in him," and by warning us againſt the deceit of vain philoſophy, ver. 8, 9. becauſe "in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily." But yet ſeeing theſe hid treaſures of Chriſt's wiſdom are reveal'd to us by his Goſpel only, and thence alone we obtain all our knowledge of him as Mediator, and of all the offices he ſuſtains, as ſuch, there ſeems to be no great difference betwixt referring this to his perſon, and referring it to his doctrine. (W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 24.

Leſt any man ſhould beguile you.] Note here, 1. How exceedingly deſirous the Apoſtle was, that the Coloſſians might continue ſound in the Chriſtian faith, and be preſerved out of the hands of falſe teachers, who by falſe arguments, and enſnaring perſuaſions, ſought to beguile them. In matters of religion we are in greater danger from the ſubtle ſeducer, than we are from the fiery perſecutor; ſophiſtical arguments, and inſinuating perſuaſions, captivate thoſe perſons whom violence could never have brought over to their party; therefore is our Apoſtle ſo earneſt with the Coloſſians, that none ſhould "beguile them with enticing words." 2. How our Apoſtle gives another reaſon of this his ſolicitous care for them; namely, his fervent affection towards them, notwithſtanding his great diſtance from them; for tho', not in body, yet in mind, he was preſent with them; and having received from Epaphras an account of the good order and government of their Church, and the ſtedfaſtneſs of their faith in Chriſt, the notices thereof were matter of exceeding joy and rejoicing to him. Learn hence, That a Church's ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith of Chriſt, and unity among themſelves in Goſpel-order, doth render a Church a joyful object to all beholders; and particularly to the miniſters and ambaſſadors of Chriſt, who greatly rejoice therein. (B.) See the notes on ver. 18. Rom. xvi. 18. 1 Cor. ii. 1, &c. v. 3. and xiv. 40. and Eph. v. 6.

As ye have therefore received.] As ye have received the doctrine of Chriſt, ſo perſevere ye in it, and live according to it: Or, As ye have received Chriſt by faith, ſo walk ye in him, who is the way to eternal life. (Aſſ.) Be like trees, well and deeply rooted in him, or, like a houſe, firmly built upon him, as the only ſure and abiding foundation. (B.) See Biſhop Trimnell's, and Dr H. Lambe's Sermons on this text; and the notes on ver. 19. ch. i. 23. 1 Cor. iii. 9, 10. and xv. 58. 2 Cor. v. 7. Eph. ii. 20. iii. 17. and iv. 14.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Beware leſt any man ſpoil you through philoſophy, and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Chriſt: For in him dwelleth all fulneſs of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power. In whom alſo ye are circumciſed with the circumciſion made without hands, in putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh, by the circumciſion of Chriſt: Buried with him in baptiſm, wherein alſo ye are riſen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raiſed him from the dead. And you, being dead in your ſins, and the uncircumciſion of your fleſh, hath he quickned together with him, having forgiven you all treſpaſſes, blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances, that was againſt us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his croſs: And having ſpoiled principalities and powers, he made a ſhew of them openly, triumphing over them in it.

Beware, leſt any man ſpoil you] Chriſtianity was, in its very beginning, oppoſed by the Jews and Heathen wiſemen, Acts xvii. 17, &c. and xix. 9. each upon their own grounds. The philoſophers, according to their ſects, ſome by ſophiſms, and ſubtile fallacious diſputation; others by propoſing their own empty and ineffectual ſort of felicity; others by ſuggeſting untrue principles of natural knowledge. The Apoſtle condemns all that are oppoſite to Chriſtianity; 1. Becauſe vain and empty deceits; promiſing, but not giving, happineſs. 2. Becauſe not according to reaſon, but to the tradition of their founders, Zeno, Epicurus, &c. And, 3 Becauſe not advancing beyond the knowledge of things ſenſible, nor farther than the rudiments of them. The deceivers, ſeeing the default of their doctrines, ſet up great pretences of deep knowledge; called therefore Gnoſticks. Some interpret theſe things to be meant of Moſes's law; as the ſucceeding diſcourſe ſeems to be: But it is very probable, the ſame Hereticks taught both; as Cerinthus, &c. (Fell) See the notes on Matth. xxiv. 4. Rom. xvi. 17. and Gal. v. 10. and the other notes here next following.

Spoil you.] That is, carry you away for a ſpoil, or a prey; namely, from Chriſt and his truth, to other doctrines, or means of ſalvation, without Chriſt. The word ſylagogon is a compariſon taken from ſuch thieves, or pyrates, as do not only take and carry away the goods of thoſe they rob, but their perſons alſo. to make them their own, or other men's ſlaves. (Aſſ.)

Through philoſophy.] Note here, That it is not philoſophy, as ſuch, which St. Paul warns them againſt: For, true and ſound philoſophy is the improver of our reaſon, the guide of our faculties, and teaches us the true knowledge of God and ourſelves, and is no hindrance, but a great help, to religion: But it was the philoſophy of the Greeks, at that day, which is here condemn'd, becauſe it was vain and empty, fallacious and deceitful. (B.) Thoſe philoſophers having propounded divers matters in their vain ſpeculations; meaſuring heavenly myſteries by their natural reaſon. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. i. 21.

The tradition of men.] See the notes on Matth. xv. 2. and Mark ii. 2.

The rudiments of the world.] That is, Thoſe imperfect ways of piety and virtue, which either the Jews or Gentiles adhered to before Chriſt, or before their receiving the faith of Chriſt: And ſo it muſt ſignify here, the Gentile doctrines eſpecially, noted by philoſophy in this verſe, and the "worſhipping of angels," ver 18. but withal, the Jewiſh abſtinences and obſervations, ver. 14, 16. (H.) See the notes on Gal. iv. 3, 9.

The fulneſs of the Godhead bodily.] Somaticos may denote, not corporiety, but eſſence; as in ver. 11. "the body of the ſins of the fleſh;" that is, the ſins of the fleſh: Or elſe it may be taken in oppoſition to ſhadows or dark reſemblances, God's will being in Chriſt (not in ſhadows, as among the Jews, but) plainly and ſubſtantially revealed, for the practice of inward purity, and not for the obſervation of thoſe ſhadows thereof which had been among the Jews. And thus the ſeventeenth verſe ſeems to interpret it, the ſabbath, &c. tho' they were, as commemorations inſtituted for the Jews, by ſtrength of that inſtitution to be obſerved by them, yet had they alſo a farther aſpect, to ſomewhat under the New Teſtament, and as ſuch, are ſaid to be "a ſhadow of things to come, the body (or reality) whereof is of Chriſt;" where the Chriſtian doctrine is affirmed to be that ſubſtantial divinity of which that which was under the law was a ſhadow. But this cannot well be otherwiſe applied to "the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelling in Chriſt" (which is the primary ſenſe, in which that other is contained, of the manifeſtation of divine knowledge in the Goſpel) but as the word ſhadow is a general word to ſignify any image, eſpecially a dark or imperfect one. Thus every body naturally caſts its ſhadow, which, as it is the dark image of the body, viz. of ſome lineaments of it, ſo is it far from the ſubſtance of it. Thus the ghoſts, that is, the ſpecies or images of men, but not their bodies, are call'd their (umbræ) ſhadows. And according to this notion of the word ſhadow, I ſuppoſe the word bodily may here be interpreted in oppoſition to it, that as on the earth here below, the ſun caſts its beams, and ſo dwells here in, or by its beams, or irradiations, but the body of the ſun is in heaven, and ſo, tho' here be ſome light below, yet there only the fulneſs of light is; ſo here God was in Moſes and the Prophets (and in other wiſe, holy men, to whom he revealed his will) in ſome degree, in ſome rays, beams, images of his perfections; and more than ſo, God is ſaid to dwell in his Saints (which differs from being in them, only by permanence or continuance) but ſtill he is or dwells in them, only in thoſe images of him, ſhadows, or rays, not as the ſun doth in the heaven, where the body of it is, in a fulneſs, ſo as he cannot be more in any other; but in Chriſt he dwells in fulneſs, ſo as nothing could be added to it; and ſo in him bodily, that is, as the ſun dwells in the firmament, where the body of it is. The whole divine nature is not only in part, but fully, without abſence of any part of it, in Chriſt, and that not by a ſpecies, or ſhadow, or image only, but really and ſubſtantially: And ſo conſequently (which is the thing which is here deſign'd to be prov'd by it) the will of God muſt be ſuppoſed to be ſo reveal'd in Chriſt, or by Chriſt, that there can be no need of addition from the Heathen philoſophy, or from the Jewiſh law, which the Gnoſticks would needs have added to it. (H.) Well, therefore, might the Apoſtle add, ver. 10. "ye are complete in him," wanting no requiſite to ſalvation: Ye need not go to the philoſophers for knowledge, for in Chriſt ye have complete wiſdom; he is above all Pagan philoſophers; nay, he is "the head of all principality and power;" that is, above the higheſt angel in heaven. Here obſerve, That it was the opinion of the Paganiſh, as it is now of the Popiſh, part of mankind, That Almighty God was too high to be immediately approach'd; and therefore they applied themſelves to angels, as mediators betwixt God and them: But the Apoſtle acquaints them, that the angel-mediatorſhip is vain, ſince Chriſt is alſo their head and Lord. (B.) To whom we have both immediate addreſs, and promiſe of acceptance. (Fell) See the notes on ch. i. 16. John i. 16. and Eph. i. 21, 23.

Ye are circumciſed.] See the notes on Rom. iv. 11. Gal. v. 2. Eph. ii. 11. and Phil. iii. 3.

Buried with him in baptiſm.] See the notes on Rom. vi. 4. and Gal. iii. 27.

Riſen with him.] See the notes on Acts ii. 24. and Eph. i. 19.

Being dead in your ſins.] The Apoſtle uſeth the expreſſion "dead to ſin," when ſin hath no more life, motion, or power in us; but "dead in ſin," when we have no life, motion, or inclination to grace. (Fell) See the notes on John v. 25. and Eph. ii. 1, &c.

Blotting out the hand-writing.] This is an alluſion to a practice among men, who cancel bills and bonds, and all obligations, wherein they ſtood bound, when once the debt is ſatisfied. Now (ſays the Apoſtle) your debt of ſin is paid to the juſtice of God, by the death of Chriſt; and ſeeing the obligation is cancelled, it would be madneſs and impiety to renew it again, as thoſe do who plead for circumciſion, and practiſe the legal ceremonies. Note here, There was an obligation upon every man to undergo the curſe of the law; for violating the commands of the law, there was an hand-writing againſt us. The obligation muſt be cancelled before the condemning power of the law can be aboliſhed, and ſin pardoned: None but Chriſt could cancel this obligation; and not he neither, without paying the full ſum payable from us: Chriſt when hanging on the croſs, did "nail this hand-writing to his croſs," which ſhall never be produced in judgment againſt the penitent believer: But this obligation remains upon the file uncancelled, with reſpect to all ſinners who live and die in their ſins, and they ſhall always lie in priſon, ever ſatisfying, but never able fully to ſatisfy this obligation. Yea, Chriſt hath not only by his death cancelled this hand-writing, and nailed it to his croſs, but has vanquiſhed and triumphed over all our ſpiritual enemies; Satan, and all the powers of hell, are led as ſo many pinion'd captives before the triumphant chariot of his croſs, making them a ſpectacle, ſcorn, and ſhame, in the eyes of God, angels, and men; "having ſpoiled principalities and powers, he made a ſhew of them openly," &c. (B.) In fewer words, The law was as the writ, or the obligation; the uſe of the ceremonies was the ratification and acknowledgment of the debt; and the blood of Chriſt. was the payment thereof, whereupon the obligation was cance'lld (Aſſ.) Three manner of ways the Apoſtle here expreſſeth of evacuating a bond; 1. Cancelling, or blotting it out: 2. Taking it away, that it ſhould never be produced, or forth-coming: And, 3. Tearing, or rending it, with the nails of his croſs; ſhewing thereby, that Chriſt had undertaken and ſuffer'd the penalty and condemnation due to the forfeiters of that bond. (Fell) See the notes on ch. i. 13. Luke xi. 22. John xii. 31. Rom. vi. 14. vii. 4. viii. 29. and xvi. 20. 1 Cor. xv. 55. Gal. iii. 13. Eph. ii. 15. and iv. 8.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. Let no man therefore judge you in meat or drink, or in reſpect of an holy-day, or of the new-moon, or of the ſabbath-days: Which are a ſhadow of things to come; but the body is of Chriſt. Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary humility, and worſhipping of angels, intruding into thoſe things which he hath not ſeen, vainly puft up by his fleſhly mind; and not holding the head, from which all the body by joynts and bands having nouriſhment miniſtred, and knit together, increaſeth with the increaſe of God. Wherefore if ye be dead with Chriſt from the rudiments of the world; why, as though living in the world, are ye ſubject to ordinances, (touch not, taſte not, handle not: Which all are to periſh with the uſing) after the commandments and doctrines of men? Which things have indeed a ſhew of wiſdom in will-worſhip and humility, and neglecting of the body, not in any honour to the ſatisfying of the fleſh.

Let no man therefore judge you.] Here we have an inference, or concluſion, drawn by our Apoſtle from the foregoing argument; that ſeeing the ceremonial law was now aboliſhed, therefore none ſhould take upon them to judge, or condemn, another for not obſerving any of the legal ceremonies; either thoſe that related to meats, that is, the difference to be obſerved in meats; or the other relating to the difference to be obſerved in days. Here note, That the days obſerved among the Jews, were of three ſorts; Anniverſary, which returned every year, called here an holy day; Lunary, which returned every month, the firſt day of every new-moon; Weekly, which returned every week, and on the ſeventh day of the week: All which are abrogated; even the Jewiſh ſabbath; and the Lord's Day, ſubſtituted in its place, 1 Cor. xvi. 2. Obſerve here, 1. That there is both a ſinful, and lawful, abſtinence from ſome meats: That abſtinence is ſinful, when men abſtain from ſome meats, upon pretence of holineſs and conſcience; as if ſome meats were unclean, or leſs holy in their own nature than others, 1 Tim. iv. 4. or as if, ſimply, abſtinence at any time were a thing acceptable to God in itſelf, without reſpect had to the end for which it is ſometimes required. But there is a threefold abſtinence from meats, which is lawful; political, enjoined by the magiſtrate for civil ends; medicinal, preſcribed by the phyſician for health's preſervation; eccleſiaſtical, when God by his providence, and the voice of his Church, calls the people to faſting. 2. The reaſon alledged by the Apoſtle, why Chriſtians ſhould not judge one another, with reſpect to meats and drinks, times and ſeaſons; namely, Becauſe thoſe legal ceremonies were but dark "ſhadows of things to come;" but the body and ſubſtance repreſented by thoſe ſhadows, is Chriſt come in the fleſh: And conſequently, to obſerve theſe ceremonies, and regard theſe ſhadows, under the Goſpel, is, in effect, to ſay, That Chriſt the body is not yet come. Here note, 1. The title given to the ceremonial-worſhip. It is ſtiled a ſhadow, becauſe it was a dark and imperfect repreſentation of the truth: What is a ſhadow, but the coming of a thick body between us and the ſun? The legal ceremonies were interpoſed between Chriſt, the true light, and us, and ſo caſts a ſhadow of him. 2. The title given to Chriſt with reſpect to the ſhadows of the ceremonial law. He is the body and ſubſtance of them: Now, as the ſhadow vaniſhes when the ſubſtance is come, ſo theſe ceremonial ordinances were to ceaſe upon the coming of Chriſt; and to obſerve them now, under the Goſpel, is, in effect, to ſay, that Chriſt is not yet come in the fleſh. 3. That the Jewiſh ſabbath was a ceremonial ordinance, and part of that "hand-writing of ordinances" which was to be blotted out by Chriſt, and conſequently the Chriſtian is not obliged to obſerve it. As the diſtinction of meats and drinks, and the obſervation of the new moons, was confeſſedly ceremonial; ſo was alſo the Jewiſh ſabbath, which, with the reſt, was equally cancelled by Chriſt, as a part of the "hand-writing of ordinances;" ſo that to obſerve the Jewiſh ſabbath, or to condemn the Chriſtian for not obſerving it, is as much a denial that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, as to obſerve circumciſion, or any other part of the ceremonial law. (B.) The abſtinences of the ſynagogue are abrogated, as being parts of the ceremonial law; but without prejudice, either to the authority of the Church, which can enjoin the like; or to Chriſtian charity, which may inſpire a man to obſerve them; or to the juſtice of God, which can command them; or to the neceſſity of reſtraining concupiſcence, which may require them. How great is the blindneſs of Hereticks, in confounding the feſtivals and obſervances, which the law appointed, and Chriſt has aboliſh'd, with thoſe which his religion inſpires, which his Church enjoins, and which do not terminate in a criminal, ſuperſtitious, and Judaical idleneſs, but in holy, religious, and Chriſtian occupations! (Q.) See the notes on Rom. xiv. 2, 17. 1 Cor. xvi. 2. and Gal. iv. 10. And for a larger critique on this paſſage, the curious may have recourſe to Hammond and Whitby.

Let no man beguile you.] Our Apoſtle, having warned the Coloſſians againſt the errors of the Judaizing teachers, comes next to warn them againſt the practice of the Paganizing Chriſtians; who were directed by their guides to "worſhip the angels;" covering their error with a plauſible ſhew of humility, pretending it was preſumptuous to go to God immediately, without the mediation of thoſe excellent creatures: But this the Apoſtle tells them was a bold "intruding into things" they knew nothing of, God having neither revealed nor taught any ſuch thing; and argued, that they were "vainly puffed up" with the fooliſh imaginations of their own "fleſhly minds." Next he ſhews, that theſe angel-worſhippers do not acknowledge Chriſt for the head of the Church, while they apply themſelves to angels as mediators; whereas he alone diſcharges the office of the head, compleatly giving life and growth to his whole Church, and to every member thereof; which members, being furniſhed with ſpiritual life from him, and knit to him, and one another, "by the joints and bands" of charity and other graces, grow and increaſe with ſuch an increaſe of holineſs as is from God, and tends to his glory. Note here, 1. That the nature of man is extremely prone to idolatry and falſe worſhip. 2. That it is as really idolatry to worſhip an angel, as it is to worſhip a woman; for divine worſhip is only due to a divine perſon. 3. That it is a renouncing of Chriſt, to make uſe of angels, or any other mediator beſides Chriſt, unto the Father, "not holding the head." It was a notion, that early, and indeed univerſally, poſſeſſed the mind of mankind, that God was not to be immediately approach'd to by ſinful men, but that their prayers were to be preſented by certain mediators and interceſſors, who were to procure for them the favour of God, and the acceptance of their prayers: Hence they worſhipped angels, and the ſouls departed of their heroes; whom they canonized, and tranſlated into the number of their inferior gods, by whom they addreſſed their ſupplications to their ſuperior gods. With this notion Almighty God was pleaſed to comply ſo far, as, under the Jewiſh inſtitution, to appoint Moſes a mediator betwixt him and them; and now under the Chriſtian diſpenſation, to appoint Jeſus Chriſt to be the only mediator betwixt God and man. 4. That it is uſual for idolaters, and falſe worſhippers, to cover themſelves with a more than ordinary ſhew of humility; "Let none beguile you in a voluntary humility." True it is, that all duties of worſhip ought to be voluntary, as voluntary is oppoſed to conſtrained; but they muſt not be voluntary, as voluntary is oppoſed to inſtituted or appointed: God doth no more approve of that worſhip we give him according to our will, than he doth approve of our neglect of that which is according to his own will: But man, vain man, likes any way of worſhipping God which is of his own framing, much better than that which is of God's own appointing. (B.) The church of Rome doth teach, That the angels are to be worſhipp'd, invok'd, and pray'd unto, as they do willingly undertake the care of our eternal ſalvation. (Catech. Rom. par. iii. c. ii. n. 8, 9, 10.) And ſo they have Litanies and prayers compoſed for this purpoſe. We alſo do honour the holy angels, as they are God's miniſters, and are "ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation," Heb. i. 14. But, to worſhip, or pray to them, we dare not; as it is what they themſelves do refuſe and abhor, Rev. xix. 10. and the Scripture itſelf doth here expreſly condemn. Theodoret, upon this text, ſays, The practice of worſhipping angels obtain'd a long time in Phrygia and Piſidia; and was therefore forbid, by the Synod of Laodicea, Can. 35. and he adds, that, in his time, oratories of St. Michael were there to be ſeen. But (ſays he) this is ſo far from humility, that it is, in truth, an inſolence: For it is founded upon a preſumption of knowing that which they neither do, nor can, underſtand; and while they would be wiſe above what is written, do effectually overthrow that which is written, by "not holding the head," and forſaking the only Mediator betwixt God and man, Chriſt Jeſus. If ye be dead with Chriſt.] See the notes on Rom. vi. 2. vii. 4, &c. and Gal. ii. 19.

The rudiments of the world.] See the notes on ver. 8, 16, &c. Rom. vii. 6. and Gal. iv. 3, 9.

Subject to ordinances.] Dogmatizeſthe. The original word ſignifies to make rules and conſtitutions concerning theſe things. Thus, concerning the obſervation of the feaſt of the dedication of the Temple, purg'd from defilement, (Edogmatiſan meta coinou proſtagmatos) "they ordain'd by a common ſtatute and decree," 2 Macc. x. 8. So, when Judas had ſlain Nicanor, (edogmatiſan) "they ordained all, with a common decree, in no caſe to let that day paſs without ſolemnity," ch. xv. 36. So alſo Eſth. iii. 9. and 1 Eſdr. vi. 34. And ſo it may be rendred here, Why, as living yet in conformity to the world, are ye ſubject to the decrees and conſtitutions about them? Such as theſe which here follow, Touch not.] Me hapſe.] This may refer either to what is mention'd by St. Paul, 1 Cor. vii. 1. as the aphoriſm of ſome philoſophers, "It is good for a man (me hapteſthai) not to touch a woman:" Or it may refer to things ſuffocated, or dead of themſelves, or offer'd to idols; which, as Clemens of Alexandria ſays, the Jews were not allow'd to touch.

Taſte not.] Mede geuſe. This, doubtleſs, refers to meats and drinks: Either fleſh and wine, which ſome of the philoſophers, particularly the Pythagoreans, would not taſte of.

Handle not.] Mede thiges. Meaning any thing which may pollute you by touching it, or by its having been offer'd to idols. (W.) Theſe are the ſpeeches of ſuperſtitious men, which St. Paul here inſerteth; ſhewing thereby, that ſuperſtition grows from one degree to another. For, firſt, they forbid to touch, that is, to eat or drink; then to taſte; and laſtly, to handle at all; for that the ſpeech is here only of ſuch things wherewith the body is fed, appears by the two next following verſes. Or, becauſe touch not, and handle not, ſeem little to differ, or not at all; it may be underſtood, as ſaid to one touch not; to another taſte not; and to a third handle not, ſuch or ſuch meats. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. xv. 9, 17. Acts xv. 29. Rom. vi. 2, 7. 1 Cor. vii. 1. and Gal. iv 3.

A ſhew of wiſdom in will-worſhip.] Worſhip of God, humility, &c. are really wiſdom; but having only "a ſhew of wiſdom" when done (thelontes) ver. 18. that is, affected by men, and preſcribed by them, without any authority from God, as the only worſhip of God. So that thelon ſeems to have an influence upon every one of theſe. Beſides, theſe were not entire faſts, but abſtinence from certain meats, becauſe unclean. (Fell) As to the true import of the word (ethelothreskeia) will-worſhip, ſee the large and learned criticiſm of Dr. Hammond.

C H A P. III.

He exhorts to heavenly-mindedneſs, and mortification; to charity, humility, and divers other Chriſtian duties.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. IF ye then be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek thoſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Chriſt in God. When Chriſt who is our life, ſhall appear, then ſhall ye alſo appear with him in glory. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanneſs, inordinate affection, evil concupiſcence, and covetouſneſs, which is idolatry: For which things ſake the wrath of God cometh on the children of diſobedience. In the which ye alſo walked ſometime, when ye lived in them. But now ye alſo put off all theſe; anger, wrath, malice, blaſphemy, filthy communication, out of your mouth. Lye not one to another, ſeeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him. Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumciſion nor uncircumciſion, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Chriſt is all, and in all.

Riſen with Chriſt.] The Apoſtle began, ch. ii. 11, 12. to ſpeak of baptiſm and our engagements in it; which are, according to the parts of it, 1. Dying to a carnal life (the conſequences whereof he deduceth in that chapter:) 2. Riſing to a ſpiritual life, which he now proſecutes in this. "If ye be riſen with Chriſt," continue with him; that is, to be like to him, in regarding only the concerns of heaven and eternal life. (Fell) See Biſhop Andrews's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 12. Rom. vi. 5. Eph. ii. 6. and Phil. iii. 20.

Seek thoſe things which are above.] Theſe phraſes (ta ano zeteite) "ſeek thoſe things which are above," ver. 1. and (ta ano phroneite) "ſet your affections on things above," ver. 2. ſeem to import, 1. That we ſhould have them fix'd on our ſpirits, and familiarly occurring to our thoughts, by frequent meditations and ſerious reflections on them. 3. That we ſhould have our wills inclined to them, and our affections poſſeſs'd with fervent love, and paſſionate deſires of them. And, 4. That we ſhould employ our faculties and members in purſuit of them, with diligence and conſtancy. (W.) By "the things which are above," the Apoſtle means everlaſting happineſs and glory, whereof Chriſt hath taken poſſeſſion for us in heaven, together with all ſpiritual gifts requiſite for ſalvation, which Chriſt, at the right hand of his Father, doth impart and diſtribute to his Church, Eph. iv. 8. (Aſſ.) And the motives to this are, 1. That the things below are unſuitable, the things above ſuitable: 2. Theſe below empty and deceiving, the other full and ſatisfying: Nay, there is more happineſs in the ſeeking heaven, than in the enjoying earth: 3. That theſe are uncertain to be attained, the other certain, if ſought for: 4. Theſe mix'd with troubles, the other pure comforts: And, 5. Theſe tranſient and fading, the other perpetual and everlaſting. (Bever.) See the notes on Luke xxiv. 51. and Acts ii. 24. and vii. 55.

Where Chriſt ſitteth.] See the notes on Acts ii. 24. iii. 21. and vii. 55. Eph. i. 20. and iv. 8.

Ye are dead.] That is, dead to the world, dead to the fleſh, dead to all the vain and ſinful motions and deſires thereof. (Aſſ.) Therefore, be not over-eager in the purſuit of the things here below. (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 11, 20. Rom. vi. 2. and Gal. ii. 20.

Your life is hid with Chriſt.] Your true life, which conſiſts in fruition of God, and which ye ſhall live for ever with him, "is hid with Chriſt," who is now remov'd from your ſight, and plac'd at "the right hand of God;" for "it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be," 1 John iii. 2. (W.) See the notes on ch. i. 26. and ii. 3. John iii. 8. 1 Cor. ii. 7. and Eph. iii. 9.

When Chriſt, who is our life.] That is, when Chriſt, who is the author, and purchaſer, and preſerver of our life, ſhall appear, to judge the world at the great day, then ſhall all believers, who have received ſpiritual life from him, be ſharers in glory with him. Here note, 1. That Jeſus Chriſt, by whom believers live a life of grace, and from whom they expect a life of glory, ſhall certainly appear; yea, and have a very glorious appearing: He ſhall be glorious in his perſon, glorious in his attendants, glorious in his authority, &c. 2. That when Chriſt appears in glory to judge the world, then it is that all believers ſhall enjoy a full glorification with him. 3. That the faith of approaching glory, at Chriſt's ſecond appearance, is a ſtrong argument to take off our affections from things below, and place them on things above. St. Paul's argument is, to preſs the Coloſſians to "ſet their affections on things above," becauſe Chriſt is above; and when he appears, they ſhall "appear with him in glory." (B.) Hence alſo we may learn, that Chriſtians are not to expect to reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years; becauſe they are not to mind, or ſeek, the things upon earth, but only thoſe "above, where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand of God;" whereas, were this life on earth a bleſſing and reward which God had promiſed to them for their ſufferings, they might mind it, and ſet their affections on it. (W.) See the notes on John xi. 25. and xiv. 6. Rom. v. 10. 1 Cor. vi. 14. and xv. 43. Gal. ii. 20. and Phil. iii. 21.

Mortify therefore your members.] Note here, 1. That altho' the Apoſtle told them, in the third verſe, that they were "dead to ſin," yet here, in the fifth verſe, he bids them mortify ſin; intimating, that the work of mortification, at the beſt, is but imperfect, and muſt be carried on daily and progreſſively: They were mortified but in part; "Mortify therefore," &c. 2. What it is they are called upon to mortify; "their members upon earth:"

Where, by members, we are to underſtand all the luſts and corruptions of our hearts and natures, all the relicks and remains of ſin unſubdued and unpurged out of the ſoul: He inſtances in "fornication, uncleanneſs, inordinate affections and deſires, and covetouſneſs," which loveth the world above God, and is therefore no better than idolatry. But why are theſe called members, and members upon earth? Anſ. They are called members, in alluſion to what St. Paul had called ſin before, ch. ii. ver. 11. namely, a body of ſin; therefore he calls particular luſts, members of that body; and alſo becauſe they require and call for the members of the body, as inſtruments to bring them into act: Likewiſe, becauſe theſe luſts are naturally as dear to men as their bodily members; they can as ſoon part with a right hand, or a right eye, as with a boſom and beloved luſt. They are alſo called "members upon the earth," becauſe they are converſant about earthly things; becauſe they will cleave to us as long as we live upon earth: And to intimate, that none of theſe muſt be carried to heaven with us, but be mortified on the earth. But what is it to mortify theſe members? Anſw. To mortify ſin, is to deny our conſent to the ſollicitations of ſin; to ſuppreſs the firſt motions of ſin; to enervate the power and activity of ſin. Learn hence, 1. That in the holieſt and beſt of God's children and ſervants, there are relicks and remains of ſin to be daily mortified, and gradually ſubdued. 2. That after God has brought a perſon into a ſtate of grace, it is his duty, and ought to be his endeavour, daily to mortify ſin, and all the remains of unſubdued corruption A caution; Take heed of concluding, that ſin is mortified, becauſe it is reſtrained, becauſe the acts of ſin are intermitted, becauſe ſome particular ſins are ſubdued: Is all ſin hated of thee, loathed and left by thee? 'Tis more to loath a ſin, than it is to leave a ſin: Sin may be left, and yet beloved; but no man can loath a ſin, and love it at the ſame time. (W. and B.) This precept follows both upon our dying, and riſing again in baptiſm; but ſeems chiefly directed againſt the Hereticks, who, pretending abſtinences and mortifications, yet liv'd in all filthy and abominable luſts: The Apoſtle therefore forbids theſe abſolutely; and conſequently approveth ſuch mortifications as conduce to that end. (Fell) See the notes on ch. ii. 11. Rom. vi. 6, 13. and viii. 13. Eph. iv. 22. and v. 5. and the other notes here next following.

Fornication.] See the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 13, 18. and Eph. v. 3.

Inordinate affection.] The word pathos, in the original, ſignifieth ſome kind of uncleanneſs, in which men are rather paſſive than active; ſuch as the Apoſtle intimateth, Rom. i. 26. (Aſſ.)

Evil concupiſcence.] That is, Deliberate fleſhly luſtings, indulged, and not reſtrain'd by us. (W.)

Covetouſneſs, which is idolatry.] Covetouſneſs is a ſin, which, above others, a Chriſtian ſhould ſet himſelf againſt, and endeavour to mortify and ſubdue; it having a ſort of idolatry in it, drawing our love, our truſt, our fear, our joy from God, and placing the ſupremacy of our affection in and upon the creatures. True, the covetous man does not believe his money to be God; but by his inordinate loving of it, and fiducial truſting in it, he is as truly guilty of idolatry, as if he bowed his knee unto it; for God more regards the internal acts of the mind, than he doth the external acts of the body. In like manner, the Papiſts do not believe the Saints and Angels to be Gods: But by praying to them, and truſting in them for relief and help, they give them the inward worſhip of the ſoul, and conſequently they are as guilty of idolatry, as if they did believe them to be God. (W. and B.) But Dr. Wall thinks the word pleonexia here properly denotes ſome ſort, or ſome degree of uncleanneſs, too foul for the Apoſtle to name in any plainer word, which thoſe people in Phrygia were guilty of. See the notes on Luke xii. 15. Rom. i. 29. and Eph. v. 5.

The wrath of God cometh.] See the notes on Rom. i. 18. and Eph. ii. 2.

Ye alſo walked ſometime.] Living ſignifies the habit, walking the acts, of ſin, Gal. v. 25. (Fell) See the notes on Rom. vii. 5. and 1 Cor. vi. 11.

Ye alſo put off all theſe.] When ye were Heathens, ye liv'd in all thoſe monſtrous and abominable ſins of whoredom and abominable luſts: But now ye ſhould not only forſake thoſe, but many other faults, which tho' not ſo bad as the other, yet are to be put off by good Chriſtians. (Wall) See the notes on Eph. iv. 22, 25, 31. and Phil. ii. 12. and the other notes here next following.

Anger, wrath, malice.] Anger is the ſudden motion or riſing of paſſion; wrath is anger advanc'd to a height; and malice is anger accompanied with deſires of revenge, a rooted diſpleaſure. As jealouſy is the rage of a man; ſo malice is the rage of the devil. (B.) See the notes on Rom. i. 29. and Eph. iv. 31.

Blaſphemy.] Blaſphemy here does not mean blaſphemy againſt God (which would be as bad, or worſe than any of thoſe Heathen ſins) but reviling, and reproachful language to men. (Wall) See the notes on Matth. ix. 3. Rom. iii. 8. 1 Cor. iv. 13. and Eph. iv. 31.

Filthy communication.] See the notes on Eph. v. 4.

Lie not one to another.] See the notes on Eph. iv. 22. But N. B. That in the reference there, it ſhould be Archbiſhop Abbot's (inſtead of Biſhop Prideaux's) Lecture de Mendacio.

Put off the old man.] See the notes on Rom. vi. 6. and Eph. iv. 22.

Renewed in knowledge.] What eis epignoſin ſignifies here, is ſomewhat uncertain. If the prepoſition eis be taken for an Hebraiſm, for (en) in or by, then it denotes the means of working our renovation, the knowledge of the Goſpel, in which our pattern is ſet, according to which we are to form our lives for the future; and this is generally expreſſed by epignoſis aletheias, the acknowledgment of the truth, 1 Tim. ii. 4. Tit. i. 1. Heb. x. 26. But it is poſſible, alſo, that eis being taken in the proper notion of it, epignoſis may be ſet in oppoſition, or by way of ſuperaddition, to (gnoſis) knowledge, which the Gnoſticks boaſted of, and from whence they had their name, and with it joined all vicious corrupt practices: Whereupon he requires his Coloſſians to forſake thoſe ſins, and to be renewed to that which the Gnoſticks have not attained to, (eis epignoſin) to acknowledgment, or diſcerning, that is, the experimental, practical knowledge of God's goodneſs to us in regenerating (which is more than the firſt creating) us after his own image, to live according to the divine pattern which he hath ſet us. (H.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 2. and xiii. 14. Eph. ii. 10, 15. and Phil. ii. 12.

Neither Greek nor Jew.] From theſe words Epiphanius noteth four ſects or ſorts of religion, which one after another bore ſway in the world: From Adam to the flood, Barbariſm; from the flood to Abraham, Scythiſm; and after that, Helleniſm, and Judaiſm: But, whether St. Paul had reference unto theſe, it is uncertain. His plain meaning is, That if we ſpeak of renovation and ſalvation in Chriſt, there is no reſpect of perſons at all, Acts x. 34. for every man is accepted according to that meaſure of grace, by which Chriſt dwells and worketh in him, Gal. iii. 28. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts x. 34. Rom. i. 14. and x. 12. 1 Cor. xii. 13. Gal. iii. 28. and v. 6.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Put on therefore (as the elect of God, holy and beloved) bowels of mercies, kindneſs, humbleneſs of mind, meekneſs, long-ſuffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel againſt any: Even as Chriſt forgave you, ſo alſo do ye. And above all theſe things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectneſs. And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which alſo ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you richly in all wiſdom; teaching and admoniſhing one another in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, ſinging with grace in your hearts to the Lord. And whatſoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jeſus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

Put on therefore.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 5, 10, 18, &c. and xiii 8.

As the elect of God.] The Apoſtle ſpeaks not here of any abſolute election of ſome particular perſons to eternal life, but of their being choſen out of the Heathen world to be his Church and People, is evident, becauſe he ſpeaks to the Church in general: And yet to theſe Elect he promiſeth the bleſſings of Chriſtianity only "if they continued in the faith, grounded and ſettled, and were not moved away from the hope of the Goſpel," ch. i. 23. expreſſing his care and fear, ch. ii. 2, 4, 18. leſt they ſhould be deceiv'd, and robb'd of their reward. (W.)

Bowels of mercies.] By this phraſe of "putting on bowels," the Apoſtle means only, That it is nothing to perform external good works, unleſs they have their root and principle in charity; which is the heart, and as it were the bowels of the new man: And that men vainly flatter themſelves with having this heart, and theſe bowels, if they do not ſhew them outwardly, by exerciſing mercy, humbleneſs of mind, meekneſs, and long-ſuffering, towards their neighbours. (Q.) See the notes on Gal. v. 22. Eph. iv. 2, 32. and Phil. ii. 1.

Put on charity.] See the notes on ch. i. 20. and ii. 2. John xiii. 34. and xvii. 21. Rom. xiii. 10. xiv. 1, 15, 19. and xv. 1. 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c. Gal. v. 15. Eph. iv. 4, 15. and Phil. ii. 1.

The bond of perfectneſs.] The meaning is, That charity is the moſt perfect bond of union among Chriſtians: It knitteth together all the ſcatter'd members of the Church, and makes their gifts and graces ſubſervient to the good of one another; ſo that the Church is thereby made a compleat entire body, which was lame without it. (B.) See the notes on Rom. xiii. 8. 1 Cor. i. 10. and Eph. iv. 3.

Let the peace of God rule.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Let that peace which God has given you within, and calleth you to exerciſe without, govern your lives, and direct you in all your actions towards men; and live in continual thankfulneſs to God. Here note, That the original word, to rule in the heart, ſignifies to umpire, or to act the part of an umpire, in appeaſing ſtrife. Now this peace, 1. Inwardly, huſhes and ſtills all in the ſoul: When tumultuous affections are up, and in an hurry, when anger, hatred, and revenge, begin to ariſe in the ſoul, this calms and compoſes all. 2. Outwardly, peace of conſcience produces peaceableneſs of converſation; where the peace of God rules in the heart, it diſpoſes to peaceableneſs in the life. Now this conſiſts in theſe things; namely, in an unwillingneſs to provoke others, in an unaptneſs to be provoked by others, in a readineſs to be reconciled when provoked, and in a forwardneſs to reconcile others that are at variance. (B.) See the notes on John xvi. 33. Rom. xii. 4. and xiv. 17. Eph. iv. 4. and Phil. iv. 7.

Called in one body.] See the notes on Eph. i. 23. and v. 30.

Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 20. and ii. 6.

Teaching and admoniſhing.] Our tranſlation ſuppoſes a barbariſm here. But, turn it thus, "Let the word of Chriſt dwell in you richly in all wiſdom; teach and admoniſh one another," &c. and every thing is clear and regular. (Blackw.)

In pſalms, and hymns.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 26. and Eph. v. 19. and Mr. Eſtwick's Sermon on this text.

Whatſoever ye do.] See the notes on 1 Cor. x. 31. and Eph. v. 20.

Ver. 18, 19. Wives, ſubmit your ſelves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord. Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter againſt them.

Wives, ſubmit your ſelves.] See the notes on Eph. v. 22.

As it is fit in the Lord.] That is, in all lawful things; and in obedience to the Lord's commands, and not in any thing contrary to his will. Thus obeying, the woman's ſubjection is ſervice done to Chriſt; which may comfort her, in caſe of any unkind returns from her husband to her. (B.)

Husbands, love your wives.] They who ſacrificed to Juno Nuptialis, (ſaith Plutarch) did ſeparate the gall from the ſacrifice, and throw it away; ſignifying, that there ſhould be no bitterneſs, or wrath, betwixt thoſe who were married. (W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 3. and Eph. v. 25.

Ver. 20, 21. Children, obey your parents in all things: For this is well-pleaſing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, leſt they be diſcouraged.

Children, obey your parents.] See the notes on Matth. xv. 4. and Eph. vi. 1, &c.

In all things.] That is, In all lawful things, and in all indifferent things: In every thing that is not ſinful; tho' to the child it may ſeem unneceſſary, or unreaſonable, yet the parent's command is to be obey'd. (B.)

Fathers, provoke not.] See the notes on Eph. vi. 4.

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25. Servants, obey in all things your maſters according to the fleſh; not with eye-ſervice, as men-pleaſers, but in ſingleneſs of heart, fearing God: And whatſoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; knowing that of the Lord ye ſhall receive the reward of the inheritance: For ye ſerve the Lord Chriſt. But he that doth wrong, ſhall receive for the wrong which he hath done: And there is no reſpect of perſons.

Servants, obey in all things.] That is, in all things warrantable for the maſters to command, and the ſervants to perform. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 20. and Eph. vi. 5, &c.

The reward of the inheritance.] He calls it a reward, becauſe he ſpeaks of ſervants: But he addeth "of the inheritance;" becauſe, if they faithfully ſerve their maſters, or rather the Lord Chriſt in them, the time ſhall come when they ſhall be made ſons, and partakers of the heavenly inheritance. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 22.

No reſpect of perſons.] See the notes on Acts x. 34. and Rom. ii. 11.

CHAP. IV.

Farther exhortations to ſeveral duties: And the whole concluded with ſalutations as uſual.

Ver. 1. MAſters, give unto your ſervants that which is juſt and equal, knowing that ye alſo have a maſter in heaven.

Maſters, give unto your ſervants.] See the notes on Eph. vi. 9.

Juſt and equal.] Tho' there be a great inequality between maſters and ſervants, in reſpect of their outward and civil condition; yet there is an equality in reſpect of their ſpiritual, having both one maſter: And thus much the Heathens ſaw by the light of nature. Or, it is "juſt and equal" for maſters to do their office to ſervants, as well as for ſervants to do their duty to them. (Aſſ.)

Ver. 2, 3, 4. Continue in prayer, and watch in the ſame with thankſgiving; withal, praying alſo for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to ſpeak the myſtery of Chriſt, for which I am alſo in bonds: That I may make it manifeſt, as I ought to ſpeak.

Continue in prayer.] Let us remember, that we are no other than beggers when we addreſs ourſelves to God in prayer; and that even prayer itſelf is an alms which we receive from him: And then we ſhall eaſily conceive, that it ought to have theſe qualities; 1. Aſſiduity, importunity, continuance, earneſtneſs, perſeverance. 2. Diligence, application, attention, reverence, preſence of God, watchfulneſs. 3. Humility, ſenſe of our own unworthineſs, religious fear, abaſement of heart, gratitude. Let us perſevere, becauſe God would have us importune him. Let us watch, becauſe God has his proper ſeaſons of beſtowing light, grace, and mercy, and of bleſſing us with liberal and ſalutary viſitations. Let us be full of gratitude and thankfulneſs, becauſe this opens the hand of mercy to give, and the heart of the poor to receive. (Q.) See the notes on Luke xviii. 1. and 1 Cor. xvi. 13.

Praying alſo for us.] See the notes on Rom. xv. 30. and Eph. vi. 19.

A door of utterance.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 9. and 2 Cor. ii. 12.

The myſtery of Chriſt.] See the notes on ch. i. 26. ii. 2. Rom. xvi. 25. 1 Cor. iv. 1. and Eph. vi. 19.

I am alſo in bonds.] See the notes on Eph. iii. 1. iv. 1. and vi. 20.

Ver. 5, 6. Walk in wiſdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time. Let your ſpeech be alway with grace, ſeaſoned with ſalt, that ye may know how ye ought to anſwer every man.

Walk in wiſdom.] That is, Adviſedly and circumſpectly; ſo that ye neither learn any evil by converſing with "them that are without," nor give them any offence at all by your carriage. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. v. 12. x. 32. and Eph. v. 15.

With grace, ſeaſoned with ſalt.] Direction is here given to all Chriſtians, for the right government of the tongue, and well-ordering of the ſpeech; that it be not corrupt and rotten, filthy or frothy, vain and unprofitable, but mild and courteous, ſavoury and gracious, wiſe and diſcreet. Note here, 1. That we are not left at random, in our ordinary diſcourſe, to let our tongue run riot, and talk what we pleaſe, without any regard to the edification of others. 2. That there ought to be both a gracefulneſs and grace in our ſpeech; ſome ſavour of piety, ſomething that may teſtify there is grace wrought in ourſelves, and tends to the working of grace in others. 3. That our ſpeech may be thus ſavoury at all times, it muſt be "ſeaſoned with ſalt." 1. With the ſalt of truth: There muſt be an agreement betwixt the thing and our words, without falſhood; and an agreement betwixt our tongue and our hearts, without diſſimulation. 2. With the ſalt of wiſdom and prudence: This will teach us the time when, the manner how, and the meaſure how much, to ſpeak; thoſe words muſt needs be unſavoury, that have neither truth nor prudence in them. The people wonder'd of old at the gracious words which came out of Chriſt's mouth; and we may juſtly wonder at the graceleſs words which come out of the mouths of many that are called Chriſtians. (B.) See the notes on Matth. v. 13. Mark ix. 50. 1 Cor. xv. 33. and Eph. iv. 29.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. All my ſtate ſhall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful miniſter, and fellow-ſervant in the Lord: Whom I have ſent unto you for the ſame purpoſe, that he might know your eſtate, and comfort your hearts: With Oneſimus a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They ſhall make known unto you all things which are done here. Ariſtarchus my fellow-priſoner ſaluteth you, and Marcus ſiſter's-ſon to Barnabas (touching whom ye received commandments; if he come unto you, receive him) and Jeſus, which is called Juſtus, who are of the circumciſion. Theſe only are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me. Epaphras, who is one of you, a ſervant of Chriſt, ſaluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may ſtand perfect and complete in all the will of God. For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis. Luke, the beloved phyſician, and Demas greet you. Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his houſe. And when this Epiſtle is read among you, cauſe that it be read alſo in the Church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewiſe read the Epiſtle from Laodicea. And ſay to Archippus, Take heed to the miniſtry which thou haſt received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it. The ſalutation by the hand of me Paul. Remember my bonds. Grace be with you. Amen.

¶ Written from Rome to the Coloſſians, by Tychicus and Oneſimus.

Shall Tychicus declare.] This Tychicus was an Epheſian, and an old diſciple, mention'd Acts xx. 4. and in other places; who was either now returning into the eaſt, or was prevail'd on by St. Paul to go thither, and carry this Epiſtle, with that alſo, to the Epheſians; he being one, who was capable to inſtruct them, and to help forward their faith, as well as to inform them of St Paul's preſent ſtate. (Wall)

And comfort your hearts.] Viz. 1. By making known to them the true cauſe of his ſufferings; that it was for the Goſpel's ſake. 2. By keeping them from diſcouragement at the report of his ſufferings, that they might not be offended at his chain, nor ſink under the burden of immoderate ſorrow on his account. 3, By the report of that holy joy and chearfulneſs which the Apoſtle had in his own ſpirit, under the preſent burden of his ſufferings. (B.)

With Oneſimus.] Servant to Philemon; of whom mention is made in the Epiſtle to Philemon, ver. 10. The ancients ſay, this Oneſimus ſucceeded Timothy, as Biſhop of Epheſus: But Du Pin reckons him to have been another perſon; and St. Jerome only ſays, That of a ſervant, he was made a Deacon.

Ariſtarchus.] See the notes on Acts xxvii. 2.

Marcus.] See the notes on Acts xv. 37.

Jeſus, which is called Juſtus.] Among the Jews he was call'd Jeſus, (or Joſhua) and among the Romans, Juſtus. We do not find that any Chriſtians, ſince our Lord's reſurrection, did ever give their children the name of Jeſus, out of a due reverence to our Lord and Saviour. (G, and B,)

Theſe only are my fellow-workers.] Note here, 1. That, as in the large catalogue of ſalutations which St. Paul wrote to the Saints at Rome, Rom. xvi. in which particular perſons are mention'd, St. Peter is not once named: So here, in this catalogue of ſalutations ſent from Rome, no mention is made of St. Peter. Doubtleſs, had he been now at Rome, he had ſent ſalutations as well as the reſt: But here are ſalutations from Ariſtarchus, Mark, and others; none from Peter. (B.) And, 2. From this text it is evident, That either St. Peter was not at Rome, when St. Paul was there, or elſe that he was no comfort to him (theſe only, whom he here names, having been a comfort unto him), no promoter of the kingdom of God with him; which ſurely is no compliment to St. Peter. (W.) See the Preface to the Epiſtle to the Romans.

Epaphras, who is one of you.] That is, a native of their city of Coloſſe: Suppoſed to have been one of the ſeventy Diſciples of Chriſt; and now a priſoner, with St. Paul, at Rome, Philem. 23. (Biſhop Alley) See the Preface to this Epiſtle.

Stand perfect, and complete.] See the notes on Matth. v. 48. Rom. xv. 30. 1 Cor. xiv. 20. and Phil. iii. 15.

The Epiſtle from Laodicea.] Much controverſy has ariſen in the Church about this Epiſtle from Laodicea. Some have affirmed, that it was written by St. Paul to the Laodiceans, but loſt; from whence they would infer, that the canon of the Scripture is not entire: But ſuppoſing it were ſo, yet it follows not but that we have all things neceſſary to ſalvation in the holy Scripture: We have what the wiſdom of God thought fit to hand down to us, and what is ſufficient to make the ſerious reader of it wiſe unto ſalvation: Surely Almighty God was not bound to bring down all that he wrote to us; but only what his own wiſdom ſaw fit and neceſſary for us. Others underſtand it of an Epiſtle from Laodicea to St. Paul; and that he anſwered it fully in this Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, and, ſending it back, deſired the Coloſſians might read it, for better clearing of ſome paſſages in his Epiſtle to them. Laſtly, Some underſtand it of the Epiſtle to the Epheſians; Epheſus being the metropolis, or the chief city of Laodicea; and, accordingly, ſome called the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, the Epiſtle to the Laodiceans: The truth is, there is a very great affinity betwixt the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, and this to the Coloſſians; the doctrines, exhortations, and many expreſſions are the very ſame: So that it is no wonder if he deſired they ſhould be both read at Coloſſe, to let them ſee that he wrote the ſame doctrine to other Churches, which he had done to them. (W. and B.) That the Epiſtle here recommended, was ſome one ſent from Laodicea to St. Paul, ſeems clearly to have been the opinion of Biſhop Hall, Dr. Lightfoot, and the Aſſembly-men. But that it was indeed no other than the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Epheſians, is the opinion of Grotius, Hammond, Cave, Mills, Whitby, Du-Pin, Fleury, Wall, and B. To which latter I think it moſt reaſonable to aſſent. The truth ſeems to have been this, That a duplicate, or copy, of the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, was convey'd by St. Paul's direction, to the Laodiceans; which being communicated from thence to other Churches, was by ſome of them call'd The Epiſtle to the Laodiceans, as having receiv'd a copy of it from their neighbour-city, Laodicea: And ſo, the Apoſtle, requiring that Epiſtle, and this to the Coloſſians, to be interchangeably read in each other's Church, might properly enough call that the Epiſtle (ek Laodikeias) from Laodicea; ſince they of Coloſſe would receive a copy of it from Laodicea, not far from them, much eaſier than from Epheſus, which was at a great diſtance. However, a miſtaken notion of this paſſage gave occaſion to the forgery of an Epiſtle in the name of St. Paul to the Laodiceans, ſtill extant; tho', even in St. Jerome's time, it was exploded and rejected by all.

Say to Archippus.] This Archippus is, with good reaſon, ſuppoſed to be the miniſter at Coloſſe, in the room of Epaphras, now with St. Paul at Rome. Some think, that in the abſence of Epaphras, he was grown ſomewhat remiſs and ſlack in his miniſterial duty; He directs therefore the Coloſſians to admoniſh him to the exerciſe of greater diligence in diſcharging all the parts of his truſt, committed by Chriſt unto him; "Say unto Archippus, Take heed," &c. Obſerve here, A double charge, 1. A charge of meſſage, "Say unto Archippus:" The Coloſſians muſt ſay it: St. Paul could have wrote a private letter to him; but they muſt excite him; yet ſay to him, to his face, not of him behind his back: 'Tis the peoples duty to ſtir up their miniſters to the faithful performance of their duty; the fire of our miniſterial zeal doth not burn ſo bright, but we may need our people's bellows to inflame it: But this muſt be done with prudence by the people, in a way of exhortation, not by way of exprobation; to ſtir up your miniſter to his duty, that ye forget not your own. 2. The charge of an office, "Take heed to the miniſtry which thou haſt received of the Lord, that thou fulfil it." Here note, 1. A duty enjoined; to "fulfil the miniſtry:" But what is that? Negatively, Not to ſecure the ſucceſs of our miniſtry; we may deliver our own ſouls, tho' our people's be not delivered: The nurſe is not charged with the life of the child, but with the care of the child; ſhe ſhall be paid whether it live or die: Nor is it, abſolutely, to perform every part of our miniſterial duty without the leaſt deficiency; No, we rejoice in the teſtimony of our conſcience, that "in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity" we have done our duty. Poſitively, to fulfil the miniſtry, is to perform all the parts of our duty with care and faithfulneſs, perſevere in diligence, particularly publick preaching and private inſpection. A non-preaching miniſter is no miniſter, a breaſtleſs nurſe, a murtherer of ſouls, a bell without a clapper, a cryer without a voice; yet doth not his work lie all in the pulpit, but the greateſt part of it: He is ſtiled a watchman; for what; becauſe he is to watch one hour with his people in a week? No, ſurely, but becauſe he is to watch over them, and converſe with them all the week, upon occaſion. Is not the phyſician to viſit his patient, as well as to preſcribe his phyſick? Doth the husbandman caſt his ſeed into the ground, and never come into his fields to ſee whether it comes up, or how it grows? Verily, our people are great gainers by our profitable converſe with them, and we ſhall be gainers by them too. We may gain more experimental knowledge by an afternoon's viſiting our people, than by a week's ſtudy. 2. The means here directed to, for the fulfilling of the miniſtry; "Take heed to the miniſtry:" What doth that import? 1. Take heed to thy ſtudy; miniſterial abilities are not rained down like manna upon us: The Apoſtles did not ſtudy indeed; but one reaſon was, they had no time to ſtudy, they were itinerary preachers. 2. Take heed to thy doctrine, that it be the pure word of God, and delivered purely; not only in oppoſition to error, but in oppoſition to levity. 3. Take heed, that is, to thy life and practice; that we may tread out the ſteps before our people, which they are to take towards heaven. 3. The motive to ſtir us all up to the fulfilling our miniſterial truſt. We have received it: There is the importance of a ſpecial favour, and alſo the importance of a ſtrict account; what we have received, we muſt give an account for. 2. We have received it of, or from, the Lord: This implies aſſiſtance; that God that has called us to it, will aſſiſt us in it: "Lo, I am with you always, unto the end of the world;" with you to aſſiſt, with you to ſucceed, with you to reward. Let Archippus then, every one in the work of Chriſt, "take heed to the miniſtry which he has received of the Lord, that he fulfil it." (B.)

The End of the Epiſtle of St. PAUL to the COLOSSIANS.

ANNOTATIONS
Firſt Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,
THESSALONIANS.

THESSALONICA, (to the inhabitants of which, this, and the following, Epiſtle are addreſs'd) was the metropolis, as well as the moſt populous city, of Macedonia. Whether it was founded, or only rebuilt, by Philip; or whether he gave it this name, in honour of his daughter Theſſalonica, or in remembrance of his victory there over a people call'd Theſſali, is a queſtion which I leave to the antiquarians: Its name however, at preſent, is Salonichi.

This city had the honour and happineſs to receive the Goſpel of Chriſt, very early, preach'd by the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles. For, being warn'd in a viſion at Troas, to "come over into Macedonia," he paſſed by ſea to Neapolis, and thence by land to Philippi: Where having ſtay'd ſome ſhort time, and planted a Church, (of which we have the hiſtory in Acts xvi.) he proceeded, by way of Amphipolis and Apollonia, to Theſſalonica; as is recorded in the beginning of ch. xvii.

Here great numbers, eſpecially of the religious Proſelytes, were happily converted: Yet, like the ſun, which melts wax, but hardens clay, his preaching had a quite contrary effect upon the unbelieving Jews; who preſently ſet themſelves to blow up the city into a tumult: Inſomuch that the Apoſtle withdrew himſelf, and retired to Beræa; and from thence to Athens, and Corinth; as is related in the ſequel of that chapter, and the beginning of ch. xviii.

During his ſtay there, having receiv'd, from Silas and Timotheus, an account of the ſtedfaſtneſs and fortitude of the new converts at Theſſalonica, he forthwith diſpatch'd to them this Epiſtle; as well to confirm them in the faith, as to comfort them againſt the ſcandal of the croſs, and to prevent their being ſhaken by thoſe perſecutions, to which they were expoſed, both from the Jews and Gentiles.

The more particular contents of this Epiſtle, are, 1. Commendations of their ſincerity and conſtancy, ch. i. 2. Declarations of his faithful and powerful miniſtry among them, and love to them, ch. ii, iii. 3. Conſolations in the time of perſecution for the Goſpel, and againſt the terrors of death; to which he oppoſeth the glory of the reſurrection, and Chriſt's ſecond coming to judgment, ch. ii. 13. to ver. 17. and ch. iv. 13. to ch. v. 11. And 4. Exhortations to the duties of Chriſtian charity, ch. iv. 1. to 13. And piety, ch. v. 11. to 25.

What remains therefore, is briefly to obſerve,

i. That tho', in the ſubſcription, this Epiſtle is ſaid to have been "written from Athens," it was certainly written from Corinth: For there the Apoſtle was, when Timothy, whom he had ſent to know the ſtate of their Church, ch. iii. 1, &c. return'd back to him, with Silas, Acts xviii. 5. both whoſe names are join'd with him, in the authoritative inſcription of this Epiſtle.

ii. That tho' the Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians are placed the laſt of all St. Paul's Epiſtles to parricular Churches, yet they were undoubtedly the firſt in order of time; being written within "a ſhort time" after the Goſpel was firſt preach'd among them (as may be gather'd from ch. ii. 17.) and 'tis plain, from The Acts of the Apoſtles, that the Goſpel was preach'd here, ſooner than at either Corinth or Rome. And,

iii. That tho' Dr. Hammond dates the writing of this Epiſtle ſo early as A. D. 50. (as I have noted in the Preface to the Romans) and Archbiſhop Uſher ſo late as A. D. 54. yet other good chronologers generally compute it, between both; viz. about A. D. 52. Which controverſy I leave to the Criticks.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle declares, how mindful of them he was, at all times, in thankſgiving and prayer; and how well perſwaded he was of the ſincerity of their converſion.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Theſſalonians, which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers, remembring without ceaſing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the ſight of God, and our Father: Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God.

Your election of God.] See the notes on ch. iii. 5. and Col. iii. 12.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. For our Goſpel came not unto you in word only, but alſo in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your ſake. And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghoſt: So that ye were enſamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia. For from you ſounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but alſo in every place your faith to God-ward is ſpread abroad, ſo that we need not to ſpeak any thing. For they themſelves ſhew of us, what manner of entring in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to ſerve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raiſed from the dead, even Jeſus which delivered us from the wrath to come.

Our Goſpel.] That is, Our preaching the Goſpel. (Fell) Not as if he were the author, but only the diſpenſer of it. (B.) See the notes on Rom. ii. 16.

In power, and in the Holy Ghoſt.] That is, Our preaching was accompanied and confirm'd by miracles, giving the Holy Ghoſt, and whatever elſe was requiſite to produce a full and perfect aſſent to the truth of the Goſpel: Even as ye ſaw, that we were not men of eloquence, worldly wiſdom, or greatneſs; but the power of our preaching was only from God. (Fell) See the notes on 1 Cor. ii. 4. and iv. 20. 2 Cor. xi. 6. and Gal. iii. 2.

Followers of us.] See the notes on Acts v. 41. 1 Cor. xi. 1. and Phil. iii. 17.

Ye were enſamples to all.] Some of Macedonia, viz. the Philippians, believed before them, and ſent relief, "once and again," to Paul, while he was at Theſſalonica, Phil. iv. 15, 16. Yet, in ſome other reſpects, they were patterns to ſome of their own country: And to the Corinthians, and thoſe of Achaia, where he now was, he made uſe, it ſeems, of the good example of the Theſſalonians. (Wall)

From you ſounded out.] Either the word, which ye received from us, was publiſh'd, and ecchoed, as it were, from you: Or, Your converſation was divulged through all the Churches, to the great honour both of your ſelves, and the Goſpel, that had ſuch power, as to convince the Theſſalonians, notwithſtanding ſo many difficulties: Theſſalonica being a city of great commerce, their converſion was divulged into the neighbouring and diſtant countries. CHAP. II.

He puts them in mind, in what manner the Goſpel was preach'd to them; and how gladly they received it.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. FOR your ſelves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain. But even after that we had ſuffered before, and were ſhamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi, we were bold in our God to ſpeak unto you the Goſpel of God with much contention. For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanneſs, nor in guile: But as we were allowed of God to be put in truſt with the Goſpel, even ſo we ſpeak, not as pleaſing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. For neither at any time uſed we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetouſneſs; God is witneſs. Nor of men ſought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have been burdenſome, as the Apoſtles of Chriſt. But we were gentle among you, even as a nurſe cheriſheth her children: So being affectionately deſirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the Goſpel of God only, but alſo our own ſouls, becauſe ye were dear unto us. For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travel: For labouring night and day, becauſe we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the Goſpel of God. Ye are witneſſes, and God alſo, how holily, and juſtly, and unblameably we behaved our ſelves among you that believe: As ye know, how we exhorted and comforted, and charged every one of you (as a father doth his children) that ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

Your ſelves, brethren, know.] Obſerve here, How our Apoſtle did and durſt appeal to the Theſſalonians themſelves, as touching the ſincerity and ſucceſs of his publick miniſtry among them; "Ye your ſelves know." It is not ſufficient to a miniſter's comfort, that he be well reported of among ſtrangers, for his zeal and diligence, for his ſincerity and faithfulneſs, unleſs he can and dare appeal to the conſciences of his own people, and call them to vouch and bear witneſs to his integrity; "Ye your ſelves know, that our entrance in unto you, was not in vain:" "Our entrance in unto you;" that is, our firſt preaching among you, "was not in vain;" that is, ſay ſome, it was not in vain in the matter; we did not preach about vain, uſeleſs, and unprofitable niceties and ſpeculations; but our preaching was ſubſtantial, ſound, and ſolid: It was not in vain in the manner, ſay others; it was not undertaken raſhly, and without a call, nor managed in a ſlight and vain manner: But the word in vain, here ſeems to point at theſe two things; 1. That it did not want power and energy, but had the demonſtration of divine aſſiſtance to confirm them in the faith that heard it, and alſo thoſe that preached it, in expectation of ſucceſs. 2. "It was not in vain;" that is, it did not want fruit; it was not without a great and gracious ſucceſs: For the word vain, when it is applied to the meſſage which the miniſters of God bring, ſignifies, the accompliſhing the great ends for which it was deſigned. Iſa. lv. 11. "The word that goeth out of my mouth, ſhall not return unto me in vain," but proſper, &c. Hence learn, That where a miniſter is regularly called to, and faithfully diſcharges his duty amongſt a people, both by publick preaching and private inſtruction, his labours ſeldom, if ever, want fruit, in ſome degree or meaſure, either ſooner or later, either manifeſt or ſecret, either for converſion or edification. We have the promiſe of Chriſt's preſence with us, Matth. xxviii. 20. and if the fault be not ours, we ſhall certainly experience it; both the preſence of his power to ſtrengthen us, and the preſence of his gracious Spirit to ſucceed us. Poſſibly, we do not ſee any viſible ſucceſs at preſent; but this may comfort us, there is more good done by the miniſtry of the word, than we are aware of; and if we reap not the fruit of the ſeed we ſow, they that come after us may: But if neither they nor we reap fruit, our miniſtry ſhall not be in vain, with reference to our ſelves; yet ſhall we be glorious, tho' Iſrael be not gathered. But O! that our people might ſhare in that glory with us, and alſo ſhine as the ſtars, for ever and ever! God grant we may never be called forth by Chriſt to give a judicial teſtimony againſt any of them at the bar of God, for not "believing our report." (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 5.

We were bold in our God.] Eparrheſiaſametha; The word denoting his great courage in publiſhing the Goſpel: Inſomuch that the great perſecution which he ſuffer'd at Philippi made him not afraid to preach at Theſſalonica; where he alſo found no ſmall difficulty and oppoſition. (Fell) See the notes on ch. i. 5. John vii. 4. Acts iv. 29. and xiv. 3. Phil. i. 30. and Col. ii. 1.

Nor of uncleanneſs.] I do not conceive the reaſon, why St. Paul puts in the word (akatharſia) uncleanneſs here, and at ver. 5. pleonexia, which for the moſt part ſignifies, with him, greedineſs of luſt; unleſs it be for the reaſon which Dr. Hammond always inculcates, viz. that, about this time, ſome of the Gnoſtick Hereticks, Nicolaitans, and others, did, under colour of preaching Chriſtianity, encourage and entice people to ſome abominable luſtful practices and behaviour. 'Tis certain, the ſecond Epiſtle of St. Peter, ch. ii. 18, 19. and the Epiſtle of St. Jude, do plainly ſpeak of ſuch lewd preachers: But thoſe were written a great while after this. (Wall) The Hereticks and falſe Apoſtles propoſed to themſelves chiefly three ends, applauſe, gain, and voluptuouſneſs: The firſt they ſought to attain by ſoothing their hearers, and colloguing with them; the ſecond by crafty fetches, and "cloaks of covetouſneſs;" the third by ſowing pillows under mens elbows, and preaching doctrines tending to carnal liberty: From all which the Apoſtle here calls God himſelf to be his compurgator; viz. from the firſt, ver. 6. from the ſecond, ver. 5. and from the third, ver. 3. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Cor. iv. 2. and vii. 2.

Not as pleaſing men, but God.] St. Paul doth here ſpeak of pleaſing men, and of pleaſing God, as things not only different in ſpeculation, but inconſiſtent in fact. When he profeſſeth of himſelf, that, in the diſcharge of his miniſtry, he did not aim at "pleaſing men, but God, which trieth our hearts," he ſeems to imply, that theſe two are oppoſite ends, and that thoſe who purſue the one, do thereby plainly ſhew, that they have no regard at all to the other: But, in other parts of his Epiſtles, he ſpeaks as if he was of a quite contrary opinion. What therefore he, in this place, declares, muſt receive ſome limitations: And it may be of uſe to us (not ſo much to juſtify St. Paul's conduct in this matter, as to regulate our own) to know, what thoſe limits are; to enquire into the meaſures we ought to preſcribe to our ſelves, in our ſtudy to pleaſe men; to examine when, and in what caſes, an endeavour to pleaſe men is innocent, when unlawful, and when the duty of a good and ſincere Chriſtian: I ſay, an endeavour to pleaſe; for the actual pleaſing of men is not within our power, nor doth it depend upon our choice; ſo that it cannot properly be the ſubject of any command or prohibition. When St. Paul therefore ſays, that he did "not pleaſe men, but God," this cannot be underſtood of his actual pleaſing men, but of his aim and endeavour to pleaſe them. Men may be pleas'd with thoſe actions that are perform'd without any deſign to pleaſe them: But this pleaſure cannot be aſcrib'd as a virtue, or imputed as a fault, to thoſe who intended it not. When therefore we are either commanded or forbidden to pleaſe men, this precept is of the ſame nature, and muſt admit of the ſame interpretation, as that of St. Paul to Titus, "Let no man deſpiſe thee," Tit. ii. 15. It was not wholly in Titus's power, whether he ſhould be deſpiſed or not; nor is it in ours, whether we ſhall pleaſe men or not. But, as by that command Titus was enjoin'd to do ſuch things as might procure reverence, and to forbear ſuch as might cauſe contempt; ſo when we are either commanded or forbidden to pleaſe men, we are enjoin'd or prohibited to do thoſe things which are moſt likely to pleaſe; or to intend the pleaſing of men by our actions. So that, in this caſe, we are to meaſure the goodneſs or evil of our actions, not by their actual pleaſing, but by our deſign and endeavour to pleaſe; and are to ſhew when, and how far, this endeavour is innocent, when it is a ſin, and when it is a duty. What is neceſſary to be ſaid on this ſubject, will, I think, be fairly included under theſe three heads; 1. Whatever men may innocently be pleas'd with, that we may innocently do, in order to pleaſe men. 2. What men ought not to be pleas'd with, that we ought not to do, to pleaſe men thereby. And, 3. What men ought to be pleas'd with, that we are bound to do, that men may be pleas'd therewith. For the further diſcuſſion of which three points, ſee Biſhop Smalridge's Sermon at large on this text. See alſo the notes on 1 Cor. x. 33. and Gal. i. 10.

Uſed we flattering words.] That is, Speeches fitted to gratify the luſts and humours of men; or for gaining their favour, or courting their good opinion. Flattery in any is odious; in a Miniſter 'tis monſtrous; both becauſe ſpiritual men ought to be moſt plain-hearted, and alſo becauſe flattery about ſpiritual things is moſt fatal and pernicious, both to the giver and receiver. (B.) See the notes on Acts xx. 33. and 2 Cor. ii. 17. iv. 2. and vii. 2.

A cloke of covetouſneſs.] Prophaſis (the original word, here call'd a cloke) properly ſignifies a fair and ſpecious pretext; which thoſe commonly uſe, to beguile their hearers with, who go about, underhand, to make a gain and a prey of them. (Aſſ.) For the ſincerity of his teaching and actions, he calleth them to witneſs; but for the ſincerity of his intentions, he appealeth to God. (Idem, and G.). See the notes on ver. 3.

Nor of men ſought we glory.] See the notes on John xii. 43. and 2 Cor. x. 1, 10.

We might have been burdenſome.] That is, Tho' we might have taken upon us, and exerciſed our Apoſtolical authority, and required of you ſuch maintenance, and chargeable entertainment, as might befit the Ambaſſadors of Chriſt; yet we took a contrary courſe: We put you to no coſt at all; neither came we unto you with a rod, but with the ſpirit of meekneſs. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. iv. 21. and ix 1. and 2 Cor. xi. 10.

Even as a nurſe.] See the notes on 1 Cor. ii. 3.

But alſo our own ſouls.] See the notes on Rom. i. 11. and 2 Cor. xii. 15.

Labouring night and day.] See the notes on Acts xx. 34. 1 Cor. iv. 12. 2 Cor. xi. 9. and xii. 13.

Holily, and juſtly, and unblameably.] Holily, in reſpect of God; juſtly, in reſpect of men; unblameably, in reſpect of our ſelves: Or holily, in our miniſterial function; juſtly, in our civil affairs, and commerce; and unblameably, in reſpect of our private carriage, with our familiar and moſt intimate friends. This text ſeems to be parallel to Tit. ii. 12. for holy here anſwereth to godly there; juſtly, to righteouſly; and unblameably, to ſoberly. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts xxviii. 18, &c. and 2 Cor. vii. 2.

As a father.] Before, in ver. 7. he compared himſelf to a nurſe, which tenderly affecteth, and carefully attendeth, and cheriſheth the infant committed to her: But, becauſe a nurſe cannot be of the like natural affection as the parent, nor hath the like power to do it good, nor authority over it, he improveth the former metaphor; and withal amplifieth his love unto them, by reſembling his care over them, and affection towards them, to that of a father. And truly, paſtors are as ghoſtly fathers; both in reſpect of their fatherly affection, and fatherly power; and eſpecially, becauſe, in Chriſt Jeſus, they beget us through the Goſpel. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. iv. 15.

Walk worthy of God.] See the notes on Eph. iv. 1. Phil. i. 27. and Col. i. 10.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. For this cauſe alſo thank we God without ceaſing, becauſe when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God, which effectually worketh alſo in you that believe. For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God, which in Judea are in Chriſt Jeſus: For ye alſo have ſuffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews: Who both killed the Lord Jeſus, and their own prophets, and have perſecuted us; and they pleaſe not God, and are contrary to all men: Forbidding us to ſpeak to the Gentiles, that they might be ſaved, to fill up their ſins alway: For the wrath is come upon them to the uttermoſt. But we, brethren, being taken from you for a ſhort time, in preſence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly to ſee your face with great deſire. Wherefore we would have come unto you (even I Paul) once and again; but Satan hindred us. For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the preſence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy.

For this cauſe alſo.] Our Apoſtle's great deſign, in this chapter, being to ſet forth the wonderful ſucceſs which the preaching of the Goſpel had among the Theſſalonians, and alſo to aſſign the cauſes of that ſucceſs; he having in the former verſes given the reaſon of this ſucceſs on his own part, namely, his ſincerity in preaching it, and his pious converſation in all things ſuitable to it, now comes to ſhew the reaſon on their part, with all thankfulneſs to Almighty God for the ſame; 1. They heard it; 2. They received it; 3. They examined it, and found it no fable, but "the word of God;" and, as ſuch, entertain'd it with a Divine faith; 4. The word thus received did work with a mighty power and efficacy in them that believed; that is, was accompanied with miracles, and miraculous operations of the Holy Spirit, then to confirm them in the faith of what they did believe: And the word has alſo now an efficacious energy and divine efficacy accompanying it in the hearts of believers, working upon the will; not in a way of compulſion, but in a way congruous to the nature and liberty of the will, by a divine influx, Tollendo reſiſtentiam non voluntatis libertatem, (as the great St. Auſtin ſpeaks). Obſerve next, St. Paul further proves the efficacious ſucceſs which the word had among the Theſſalonians, from their conſtancy and patience under the ſharpeſt ſufferings for the word's ſake; "ye have ſuffered like things of your own countrymen:" As if he had ſaid, Ye of the Chriſtian Church in Theſſalonica have ſhewn your ſelves like to the Chriſtian Churches in Judea, in patient ſuffering perſecution from your friends and kinsfolk, from your countrymen and fellow-citizens, as they did from the unbelieving Jews. Note thence, That where the word is efficaciouſly received, it makes the embracer of it endure the hardeſt trials and ſufferings, rather than renounce it. 2. That there neither is, nor can be, any better evidence that the word of God is effectually received, than when it enables Chriſtians to bear afflictions, and undergo perſecutions with Chriſtian courage and holy reſolution; "Ye have ſuffered like things:" But of whom? "Of your own countrymen" at Theſſalonica, as the Churches of Judea did of the Jews. Learn thence, That ſuch is the fury of a perſecuting ſpirit, that when men are judicially given up of God unto it, they will break all bonds, both natural, civil, and religious, and turn barbarous and ſavage, like wolves and tygers, towards thoſe of their own fleſh, who dare not deny the truth, which they perſecute and oppoſe. Here the Churches in Judea and Theſſalonica were perſecuted alike by their own countrymen,—— "Ye have ſuffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews." (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 6. Acts xvii. 5, 13. Rom. v. 3. Gal v. 6. and the Preface to this Epiſtle

Killed the Lord Jeſus.] See the notes on Acts ii. 23.

Pleaſe not God, and are contrary to all men.] "They pleaſe not God," by their zeal for the law antiquated, and oppoſing the Goſpel, the word of God: "And are contrary to all men," by their rigid uncompliantneſs with other nations; by their frequent ſeditions; and by hindering the ſalvation of the world by the Goſpel. (Fell) Of the ſame temper with thoſe lawyers, againſt whom our Saviour pronounced a dreadful woe, Luke xi. 52. who neither entered themſelves into the kingdom of God, nor ſuffered others who were willing to enter. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts xiii. 50. xiv. 5, 19. xvii. 5, 13. xviii. 12. and xix. 9.

Fill up their ſins.] The Jews intended not, by perſecuting the Church of Chriſt, to fill up the meaſure of their ſins, and ſo to draw vengeance from heaven upon themſelves: But the Apoſtle's meaning is, that God, in his juſt judgment, permitted them thus to make up the full meaſure of their own, and their fore-fathers ſins; becauſe he intended to ſweep them away with the beſome of deſtruction, in the hand of the Romans. In the phraſe, and manner of expreſſion, the Apoſtle alludeth to Gen. xv. 16. and Matth. xxiii. 32. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke xxi. 22.

Being taken from you.] Aporphaniſthentes. Obſerve here, 1. That St. Paul, having all along, in the chapter before us, compared himſelf to a tender father, and a nurſing-mother, for his affectionate love unto, and his ſolicitous concern for theſe Chriſtian converts, he doth in the words before us declare, that his conſtrained abſence from them, occaſioned him no leſs grief, than that of a tender father, when bereft of his beloved children, or that of an indulgent mother, when the child ſhe loves as her own ſoul is taken violently from her. "We, brethren, being taken from you:" The words intimate ſuch a ſeparation as death makes between a father and a child; which rends the parent's heart inſunder, and is like cutting off a limb or member from his body, exquiſitely painful; intimating, that the enforced abſence of a paſtor from his beloved people, tho' but for a ſhort ſeaſon, is very afflictive. Ah! how heart-rending then is a total and final ſeparation from each other, occaſioned either by natural or civil death? 2. St. Paul tells them, that tho' perſecutors had deprived them of his bodily preſence, yet not of his heart: For tho' not in body, yet in mind he was preſent with them; miniſter and people, like true lovers, are preſent with each other in ſoul, when ſeparated in body. It is a ſingular comfort to Chriſtians under perſecution, that their enemies can neither deprive them of the preſence of God, nor the prayers of their faithful Miniſters: Their prayers may meet, when their perſons are diſtant; and they may be preſent in ſpirit, in heart, and affection, even when at the ends of the earth. 3. How he expreſſes his deſire and endeavour, his fervent purpoſe, and fix'd reſolution, to come unto them, to ſee their face, to refreſh them, and be refreſh'd by them: "But Satan hindred;" that is, Satan's inſtruments, perſecutors, lay in wait for him, on the one hand; and cauſed ſome diſſenſions in other Churches, which detain'd him from coming to them, on the other hand. Learn hence, 1. That ſuch as obſtruct the preaching and propagating of the Goſpel, and perſecute the promoters of it, are Satan's inſtruments and miniſters. 2. That ſuch as do Satan's work, deſervedly bear his name: Thus, Rev. ii. 10. "The devil ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon;" that is, his ſervants ſhall do it. (B.) See the notes on Rom. i. 13. and xv. 22. 1 Cor. v. 3. and 2 Cor. xi. 15.

Our hope, or joy, or crown.] Note here, a very remarkable gradation in the words. He calls them his hope; that is, the matter of his hope, that they ſhould be ſaved: His joy; that is, the occaſion of his joy, in their converſion by his miniſtry: And his "crown of rejoicing, in the preſence of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt at his coming;" that is, the fruit and ſucceſs of his miniſtry among them would add to his crown, and redound to his glory, in the day of Chriſt. (B.) See the notes on 2 Cor. vii. 4.

CHAP. III.

Further teſtimonies of his great love to them.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. WHerefore, when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone: And ſent Timotheus, our brother and miniſter of God, and our fellow-labourer in the Goſpel of Chriſt, to eſtabliſh you, and to comfort you concerning your faith; that no man ſhould be moved by theſe afflictions: For your ſelves know that we are appointed thereunto. For verily when we were with you, we told you before, that we ſhould ſuffer tribulation; even as it came to paſs, and ye know. For this cauſe, when I could no longer forbear, I ſent to know your faith, leſt by ſome means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. But now, when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, deſiring greatly to ſee us, as we alſo to ſee you: Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you in all our affliction and diſtreſs by your faith: For now we live, if ye ſtand faſt in the Lord. For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your ſakes before our God, night and day praying exceedingly that we might ſee your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

Wherefore, when we could.] This ſeems to follow upon ch. ii. 18. (Fell)

Moved by theſe afflictions.] See the notes on Eph. iii. 13.

We are appointed thereunto.] Keimetha; Set, as it were a mark, at which the arrows of perſecution are ſhot. (Aſſ.) Nevertheleſs, we are to keep our ground, and ſtand immoveable. We honour God abundantly, when we are immoveable in our active obedience; and we glorify him eminently, when we are immoveable in our paſſive obedience; when we ſtand to it in the midſt of ſufferings, and are no more moved, either by cowardice or impatience, than a poſt that is ſhot at: This is the glory of a Chriſtian, and his great duty; and it is the glory of God, and his certain due. (B.) See the notes on Luke ii. 34. Acts xiv. 22. Rom. viii. 17, 29. 1 Cor. iv. 9. and 2 Cor. iv. 17.

The tempter have tempted you.] Here note, 1. That the perſecution of the Saints are aſcribed to Satan, "the tempter;" who, by his Miniſters, endeavours to hinder the progreſs of the Goſpel, ch. ii. 18. and, by their perſecutions, to terrify men, and ſeduce them from the profeſſion of it, Rev. ii. 10. 2. That peirazein here doth ſignify, not barely to tempt, but to ſucceed in his temptation; for otherwiſe the labour of the Apoſtle could not be rendred vain among them. 3. That it is hence evident, the Apoſtle did not think them ſecure (by the election of them, mention'd ch. i. 4.) from falling, ſo as that his labour might have been in vain among them. And 4. That a faithful perſon, truly juſtified, may ſo fall from the faith, as that it ſhall become in vain to him. (W.) See the notes on Matth. iv. 1. Luke xxii. 3, 31. John viii. 44. and xiii. 27. Acts v. 3. 1 Cor. vii. 5. 2 Cor. ii. 11. and xi. 3. and Gal. iv. 11.

We were comforted.] In theſe words, our Apoſtle declares the tranſcendent joy, and overflowing comfort, which was found in his ſoul, upon the knowledge he had received of the conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſs of the faith of theſe Theſſalonians; "we were comforted in our affliction by your faith." Of all comforts which the people of God can afford to his Miniſters, there is none comparable with that which reſults from their unfainting perſeverance in the faith, and the unblameable holineſs of their life. No comfort can be greater than our peoples gracious demeanor: This put a kind of new life into St. Paul, in the midſt of all the ſorrows and ſufferings, the afflictions and perſecutions he underwent. "Now we live (ſays he) if ye ſtand faſt in the Lord;" that is, a life of joy and comfort; or, we live, that is, it will be a means to prolong our life, as well as add to the comfort of it; and the contrary tends to the ſhortening of our days. Thoſe that do impair the chearfulneſs of their Miniſters lives, ſuch as deaden their ſpirits, and break their hearts, by their obſtinate non-compliance with the rules of the Goſpel, are no better than murtherers in the account of God. If Miniſters may, as all other perſons do, value their lives by the joy and comfort of them, then may they ſay, with the great Apoſtle, we live, as we ſee any of our people "ſtand faſt in the Lord;" and we die, as we ſee others ſtick faſt in their ſins. (B.) To live, beſide the literal notation of it, ſignifies alſo to be chearful, or merry; to rejoice. So Pſal. xxii. 26. "your heart ſhall live for ever;" which is a conſequent of "eating and being ſatisfied, and praiſing God." So John xiv. 19. "Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo." In the firſt place, it is literally taken for Chriſt's reſurrection; but in the ſecond, for their rejoicing; ſuch as was cauſed by the recovery of a friend from death to life; and theſe joined by the figure antanaclaſis: And this is ordinary in all languages, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. And ſo here it is evidently uſed, "we live, if," &c. that is, it is matter of infinite joy to us; and accordingly it follows, as an expreſſion of exultancy, "For what thanks can we render," &c. (H.) See the notes on ver. 3. Matth. viii. 22. Luke xxi. 23. 1 Cor. xvi. 13. Gal. v. 1. and Phil. iv. 1.

Perfect that which is lacking.] It ſeems, they were not fully inſtructed in all points, but needed either a farther information in ſome doctrines of faith, which they had not yet learn'd, or a reſolution of ſome doubts which might trouble and perplex their conſcience. Theſe "lackings in their faith" were partly ſupplied by Timothy when ſent to them; and partly by the Apoſtle in his Epiſtles: And it is very probable, that what he pray'd for ſo earneſtly day and night, God granted unto him, a proſperous journey to the Theſſalonians, that he might water where he had before planted, and finiſh the building where he had ſo happily laid the foundation. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 9, 11.

Ver. 11, 12, 13. Now God himſelf and our Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, direct our way unto you: And the Lord make you to increaſe and abound in love one towards another, and towards all men, even as we do towards you: To the end he may ſtabliſh your hearts unblameable in holineſs before God even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt with all his ſaints.

Now, God.] Note here, The perſons to whom he directs his prayer; God and Chriſt. Where note, That Chriſt is invocated, as well as the Father: He is therefore God, as well as the Father. Becauſe this invocation of him by all perſons proves him omniſcient, ſearching the hearts of men; and alſo omnipreſent, being with his people in all places: And conſequently proves our Lord Jeſus Chriſt to be truly and undeniably God. (B and W.)

Stabliſh your hearts, unblameable.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 8. and Phil. i. 10.

With all Saints.] See the notes on Acts i. 11.

CHAP. IV.

He exhorts them to ſeveral duties and graces, to adorn their Chriſtian profeſſion: And inſtructs them in the doctrine of the reſurrection, and the laſt judgment.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. FUrthermore then we beſeech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jeſus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to pleaſe God, ſo ye would abound more and more. For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jeſus. For this is the will of God, even your ſanctification, that ye ſhould abſtain from fornication: That every one of you ſhould know how to poſſeſs his veſſel in ſanctification and honour; not in the luſt of concupiſcence, even as the Gentiles which know not God: That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter: Becauſe that the Lord is the avenger of all ſuch, as we alſo have forewarned you, and teſtified. For God hath not called us unto uncleanneſs, but unto holineſs. He therefore that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not man, but God, who hath alſo given unto us his Holy Spirit. But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you: For ye your ſelves are taught of God to love one another. And indeed ye do it towards all the brethren, which are in all Macedonia: But we beſeech you, brethren, that ye increaſe more and more; and that ye ſtudy to be quiet, and to do your own buſineſs, and to work with your own hands (as we commanded you) that ye may walk honeſtly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing.

We beſeech you.] See the notes on 2 Cor. v. 20.

As ye have received of us.] See the notes on Col. ii. 6.

Abound more and more.] See the notes on Eph. iv. 1. and Phil. i. 27.

What commandments.] Here our Apoſtle ſubjoins a reaſon to enforce his foregoing exhortation: What he now required of them, was nothing but what at their converſion to Chriſtianity he had commanded them; and that in the name, and by the authority of Jeſus Chriſt to be performed by them: So that they were not his commands, but Chriſt's by him; and as ſuch to be eſteemed of them. Learn hence, That the inſtructions and rules for an holy life, laid down by the Apoſtles before the Churches, are to be look'd upon as the commandments of Chriſt, as being dictated by his Spirit, and delivered by his authority; and as ſuch to be received of them, and obeyed by them. (B. W. and Q.) The original word, parangelia, ſignifies ſuch commandments, as one receiveth from ſome ſuperior authority to give them, in his name, to others. (Leigh)

Even your ſanctification.] "This is the will of God, even your ſanctification;" that is, this is the will of God, eminently and emphatically revealed in his word, that Chriſtians ſhould be holy and pure, chaſte and clean; not indulging themſelves in thoſe impure and filthy luſts of the fleſh, fornication, and all manner of uncleanneſs, which the Gentiles, who knew not the true God ſavingly, were addicted to, and in a moſt beaſtly manner guilty of; but that every one ſhould know how to poſſeſs and make uſe of his body, and all its members, as the veſſel and inſtrument of the ſoul, in holineſs and honour. Obſerve here, 1. How the Apoſtle deſcends from general to particular duties. He exhorted the Theſſalonians, ver. 1. in the general, to walk ſo as to pleaſe God: Here he exhorteth them, in particular, to purity and chaſtity, both of heart and life; and to watch againſt all the violent eruptions of concupiſcence in their earthly members; teaching us, that the Miniſters of God muſt not ſatisfy themſelves with giving general exhortations to a good life, but muſt treat of particular ſins and duties, and endeavour to put men upon the practice of the one, and to reclaim them from the other. 2. The particular duty exhorted to; ſanctification; a comprehenſive word, and of large extent: In the general it conſiſts in a conformity of our natures to the nature of God, and in a conformity of our lives to the will of God. In particular, ſanctification here ſtands in oppoſition to all bodily uncleanneſs, as the next words do plainly ſhew, "that ye ſhould abſtain from fornication;" that is, all filthineſs and uncleanneſs contrary to chaſtity; intimating to us, that as there are no ſins that human nature is more inclined to, than the luſts of the fleſh; ſo there are no ſins that a Chriſtian ſhould more guard againſt, and ſtrive to mortify and ſubdue, as being contrary to that purity of nature and life which the Goſpel expects, and the Holy Spirit aſſiſts unto. 3. The argument which our Apoſtle here uſes to enforce his exhortation to purity and holineſs; "This is the will of God;" 'Tis both the command of God that we ſhould be holy, and the will of God to make us holy: Now the ſignification of God's will ought to be a ſufficient inducement to us to deſire it, and endeavour after it. "This is the will of God, even your ſanctification, that ye ſhould abſtain from fornication." 4. The remedy preſcribed againſt all bodily uncleanneſs; and that is, a careful preſerving the veſſel of the body free from all fleſhly pollution, and in that meaſure of purity and chaſtity which is ſuitable to the honour put upon it by God, in being made a temple for the Holy Ghoſt, "That every one ſhould know how to poſſeſs his veſſel in ſanctification and honour." Where note, The title given to our body, it is called a veſſel: It is, firſt, the Spirit's veſſel; he reſides in it as his temple; and accordingly it ſeems to be an alluſion to the conſecrated veſſels of the temple, in which a more than ordinary cleanneſs and purity was found. Secondly, It is the ſoul's veſſel; 'tis its veſſel or receptacle, in which, for a time, it is preſerved; and it is the inſtrument of the ſoul, by which it acts and performs its office and function. Now it is every perſon's, every man and woman's duty, to poſſeſs their body, and to be maſters of it; not to be poſſeſſed by it, or enſlaved to it, but to keep it in ſubjection to, and as the inſtrument of, the ſoul; The body is God's curious workmanſhip, 'tis Chriſt's precious purchaſe, 'tis the ſoul's receptacle, 'tis the Holy Ghoſt's temple; therefore to be kept holy, pure, and clean, like the conſecrated veſſels of the temple. 5. Our Apoſtle exhorts the Theſſalonians not only to abſtain from the outward act of uncleanneſs, but to mortify and ſubdue the inward "luſt of concupiſcence," ver. 5. Or as the word ſignifies, the feveriſh fit, or violent paſſion of burning deſire, which boileth within, through all the members of the body without. There is a divine art in the exerciſe of chaſtity, and no ſmall skill required to keep a man's ſoul and body free from fleſhly uncleanneſs; in order to which, inordinate deſires muſt be reſiſted, the outward ſenſes guarded, enticing and enſnaring objects avoided, wanton company declined, meat, drink, and ſleep ſoberly uſed, our lawful callings diligently followed, the firſt motions to uncleanneſs ſuppreſſed, prayer to God renewed; and, if theſe prevail not, marriage, God's ſpecial remedy, holily made uſe of. Thus may Chriſtians "poſſeſs their veſſels in ſanctification and honour, not in the luſts of concupiſcence." (B.) Theſe inſtructions were very neceſſary for the Theſſalonians; among whom there was all manner of diſorder and impurity; as we learn from Socrates and Athenæus. (W.) See the notes on Acts xv. 29. Rom. i. 26. vi. 19. and xii. 2. 1 Cor. vi. 18. and xv. 34. 2 Cor. vii. 1. and Eph. v. 10, 17.

Go beyond and defraud.] When the foregoing words, and the following, are concerning adultery, it is not at all likely, that theſe middle ones ſhould be on another ſubject; they are moſt probably meant of the ſame. Pleonexia is, by St. Paul, often underſtood of greedineſs (not of money, but) of luſt. And en to pragmati is generally taken to relate (not to any matter, in general, but to the matter there ſpoken of: As, 2 Cor. vii. 11. "In all things ye have approved your ſelves to be clear (en to pragmati) in this matter." And ſo it ſhould have been tranſlated here, That no man ſhould over-reach or defraud his brother, in that matter, viz. of his wife's bed. So Theophylact ſays, He calls adultery a defrauding: By all which it is likely, that ſome of the Theſſalonians had been guilty, or ſuſpected, of that. (Wall) See Dr. Hammond's critical expoſition of theſe words, to the ſame effect; and Dr. Whitby's vindication thereof againſt the exceptions of Monſieur Le Clerc.

But unto holineſs.] See the notes on 2 Cor. vii. 1. and Eph. i. 4. and v. 2.

He therefore that deſpiſeth.] Or rejecteth; viz. theſe wholſome and apoſtolical counſels and commands: Or, he who maketh light of ſuch dealing, before-mention'd, ſlighteth God himſelf, and rejecteth his holy commands. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Eph. iv. 30.

Taught of God, to love one another.] The word theodidactos is all one with (didactoi tou Theou) the "taught of God," John vi. 45. yet ſome difference there is. There Theos is peculiarly God the Father, as appears ver. 37, 39, 44, 65. and ſo the "taught of God" are the followers, diſciples of him, who as being firſt ſuch, (having that honeſt heart which hath always been taught them by God, and by his preventing grace wrought in them, and accepted by him) do, when Chriſt is revealed to them, conſtantly receive and entertain him: But here (Theos) God, ſeems rather to ſignify Chriſt; ſpeaking of that which was not in them till they were Chriſtians, viz. "brotherly love;" at leaſt was taught them, and required of them moſt eminently by Chriſtianity: And therefore the (eis to agapan) for the "loving of one another," may either be a notation of the end, or only of the effect; and it is uncertain which. The word eis will bear either. If it be the end, then the ſenſe is, that to this eſpecially is their Chriſtianity deſigned, that they "love one another;" their being Chriſtians obliges them expreſly to that, and makes his exhortations to it unneceſſary. If it be the effect, then the meaning is, that, by their having been thus formed by the Chriſtian faith, they do already (ſee ver. 1.) perform this, and therefore need no exhorting to it. (H.) See the notes on John xiii. 34. and xv. 12.

Study to be quiet.] It is ſuppoſed by ſome, that the charity and bounty of theſe Theſſalonians, mention'd in the foregoing verſes, occaſion'd ſome perſons to be idle and carry tales from houſe to houſe; ſeeking ſuch flatteries and inſinuations to maintain themſelves without working. The Apoſtle therefore commands every man to work at ſome calling, that they neither be a burthen to the Church, nor give a ſcandal to the Heathen. "Study to be quiet;" that is, to be of a peaceable ſpirit and temper. The original word imports an ambitious ſtudy; it ought to be our ambitious deſire to live quietly and peaceably with all men; and to live ſo with ſome men will require ſtudy, and earneſt endeavour: "If it be poſſible, live peaceably with all men," ſays St. Paul, Rom. xii. 18. implying, That there are ſome men, whom it is impoſſible to live peaceably with. And whereas he adds, "To do your own buſineſs, and to work with your own hands," that Apoſtolical injunction requires, that every perſon be well employ'd, and found in the way of an honeſt and induſtrious diligence; for, no man is ſent into the world to be idle: And, as it is every man's duty, ſo it is alſo his privilege, to have a calling; the want of which expoſes to innumerable temptations; for the devil finds an idle perſon always ready to run of his errand. This the Apoſtle preſſes, in the following verſe, with a two-fold argument, 1. That hereby they ſhould "walk honeſtly towards them that are without;" that is, in a decent and ſeemly manner, in the eyes of unconverted Pagans; who are ſaid to be without, becauſe without the pale of the Chriſtian Church. And, 2. That, by God's bleſſing upon their induſtry, they would attain to ſuch a competency of the things of this life, as to "have lack of nothing," which the wiſdom of God ſaw fit and convenient for them: So that, by an induſtrious diligence, we pleaſe God, we profit our ſelves, are ſerviceable to the publick; we ſilence and ſtop the mouths of the enemies of religion, and beautify our profeſſion with a becoming converſation. (B.) There has been a change, in our Engliſh language, of the meaning of the word honeſt, or honeſtly. It did uſe to ſignify creditable, reputable, &c. and does grammatically ſo ſignify; in which ſenſe it is a proper rendering of euſchemonos here. He bids them "do their own buſineſs, and work with their own hands," that they may be in repute and credit among their neighbours who were yet Heathens; for a man, who cannot maintain himſelf, but, being idle, is fain to beg, is contemn'd of all. (Wall) Thus this ſame word (euſchemonos) 1 Cor. xiv. 40. which formerly was render'd honeſtly, is by our laſt tranſlators well render'd decently. See Biſhop Webb's Practice of Quietneſs; and the reſpective Sermons of Biſhop Laney, 1664. Mr. Thomas Sheppey, 1682. Mr. Nic. Claget, and Mr. Richard Pearſon, 1683. all on this text; and the ſeveral notes on Acts xvii. 21. Rom. xii. 18. and xiv. 19. 1 Cor. xiv. 33, 40. and Col. iii. 15.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are aſleep, that ye ſorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jeſus died, and roſe again, even ſo them alſo which ſleep in Jeſus, will God bring with him. For this we ſay unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, ſhall not prevent them which are aſleep. For the Lord himſelf ſhall deſcend from heaven with a ſhout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: And the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt. Then we which are alive and remain, ſhall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: And ſo ſhall we ever, be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another, with theſe words.

Them which are aſleep.] That (koimaſthai) to ſleep, ſignifies to die, to depart out of this world, according to the Scripture ſtile, there is no queſtion. Only two things are here to be obſerved; 1. That the word, which is in the ordinary reading (kekoimemenon) in the præter tenſe, thoſe that have fallen aſleep, is in the king's MS. (koimomenon) they that ſleep, in the preſent; to note ſimply thoſe that die, not only thoſe that are already dead, but that die daily; remembring withal, that (koimaſthai) to ſleep, is the word which is proper to expreſs the death of the righteous; whoſe death is but a repoſe of their bodies in their graves, or dormitories, and a reſt of their ſouls in God's hands: 2. That the men here peculiarly ſpoken of, are thoſe that die in the cauſe, or for the faith of Chriſt. That ſure is expreſs'd by (koimethentas dia tou Jeſou) thoſe that ſleep through Jeſus; that is, by occaſion of him, or for Chriſtianity ſake: And ſo ſignifies thoſe that have been perſecuted, and died, either by the hands of the perſecutors, or before the time comes of Chriſt's deſtroying the perſecutors, and releaſing the perſecuted by that means. And the conſidering of this will give us the occaſion of this diſcourſe, and of that concerning "the times and ſeaſons" following it, ch. v. 1. That the Chriſtians of Theſſalonica were ſorely perſecuted by the unbelieving Jews, and haled and dragged to the Roman officers, as diſturbers of the civil peace, hath been evidenced, ch. ii. 12. Againſt theſe perſecutors the Apoſtle deſigned to confirm and comfort them by this Epiſtle: And the direct way of doing it was to put them in mind of what he had told them when he was with them, that God's judgments ſhould ſhortly ſeize upon the unbelieving Jews, their perſecutors, ch. ii. 16. and bring them relief by that means. Of this he ſpeaks, as of a thing known to them, ch. v. 1. But yet one objection there was, either expreſs'd by them, or foreſeen and here anſwered by him, viz. That this deliverance being not yet come, ſome of the faithful either were daily put to death by the Roman officers upon the Jews inſtigation, (for the accuſations brought againſt them were capital, Acts xvii. 6, 7.) and ſo were not thus reſcued, or elſe did daily die before this promiſed deliverance came. And to this the Apoſtle gives anſwer here, That they ſhould not be diſcouraged, or grieve, for thoſe which thus died, eſpecially in the cauſe of Chriſt, becauſe their ſouls being by death brought to their harbour and their crown the ſooner, their bodies, which alone were ſuppoſed to be the ſufferers, were no way loſers by it, being ſure to be raiſed by Chriſt, (whoſe reſurrection converted his death into advantage to him) and that ſo ſpeedily, at the ſound of the dooms-day trumpet, that they which ſhould then be found alive, which have never died, ſhould have no advantage of them, but on the other ſide, they that were dead for the faith of Chriſt, ſhould firſt be raiſed before they that were remaining alive ſhould be caught up with Chriſt. And this was full matter of comfort to them, and anſwer to the objection. After which he fitly reſumes the diſcourſe of the times and ſeaſons of the vengeance on the Jews, and deliverance of the faithful by that means, ch. v. i. And ſo this is a perſpicuous account of the coming in of this diſcourſe of the reſurrection in this place. (H.) See the notes on Matth. ix. 24. John xi. 11. 1 Cor. xv. 20. and the ſeveral other notes here next following.

That ye ſorrow not.] He does not forbid Chriſtian ſorrow for the dead, but the Heatheniſh; not a moderate, but an exceſſive and immoderate ſorrow; either in reſpect of time, or the meaſure of our grief. We may water our plants for our deceaſed friends, but we muſt not drown them. (Aſſ.) The ſorrow of the Heathens was extravagant and exceſſive in the meaſure; fooliſh, cruel, and impious in the manner: They tore their hair, beat their breaſts, cut their fleſh, and ran howling up and down, in the moſt deſperate manner: But the Chriſtian ſorrow is ſober, ſilent, free from oſtentation, under the government of reaſon and religion. (B.) Let Heathens be overwhelmed with ſorrow; let them deſpair, under the neceſſity of parting with this life; becauſe they know no other: But let Chriſtians look upon death with joy, as the end of all their toils and miſeries, and as a paſſage to a bleſſed and eternal life. (Q.)

Others which have no hope.] Viz. Of a reſurrection, and future ſtate: Such as the Epicureans and Sadducees; or thoſe who did not believe it upon ſound principles, as the Phariſees and Platoniſts. (G.)

Jeſus died, and roſe again.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 3, &c.

Will God bring with him.] Note, That the Apoſtle ſpeaking here of the Reſurrection, makes no mention at all of the reſurrection of the wicked to condemnation; 1. Becauſe his purpoſe was, in this place, to comfort the Theſſalonians, ver. 18. whereas the doctrine of raiſing the wicked to condemnation and everlaſting puniſhment is a doctrine of terror. 2. Becauſe he directs his ſpeech here to them who liv'd and died in the faith of Chriſt; who, as Members of Chriſt, ſhall be raiſed with him to everlaſting glory, and never experimentally know any reſurrection to condemnation. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 23.

By the word of the Lord.] Some underſtand this, "word of the Lord" to be the promiſe of Chriſt, Matth. xxiv. 31. and John v. 28, 29. Others take it for a peculiar revelation of Chriſt to St. Paul, when he was wrapt up into the third heaven, 2 Cor. xii. 4. (Aſſ.)

We which are alive and remain.] In this verſe St. Paul obviates an objection. Some might ſay, that the Saints found alive at the laſt day might be ſooner happy than the dead Saints: No, ſays the Apoſtle, They that are alive "ſhall not prevent them that ſleep;" they ſhall not prevent their riſing, nor ſhall they get the ſtart of them, or get to heaven before them, or have any advantage above them; the living Saints ſhall not be made happy without them, nor one moment before them. Learn hence, That the Reſurrection, which the Saints that ſleep in Jeſus ſhall be made partakers of, ſhall put them into as full a capacity of the glory of Chriſt's coming, as if they had remained alive in the body till that bleſſed hour: Nay, "the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt;" that is, the Saints who ſleep in the grave at Chriſt's coming ſhall be ſo far from being made leſs happy, or later happy, than the Saints who ſhall be found alive, that they ſhall be firſt remember'd: Chriſt's firſt care will be about his dead Saints; they that have ſlept ſo long in their bed of duſt ſhall be firſt awakened, before any thing be done about them that never ſlept: If there be any privilege, any joy, any triumph, greater than others, ſuch as ſleep in Jeſus, and eſpecially ſuch as have ſuffered for Jeſus, ſhall be partakers of it at that great day. (B.) Theſe, and the like words, are not to be taken perſonally, as meant of the Apoſtle and his brethren; but as ſpoken in the perſon of all Chriſtians in general; ſome of whom will be ſurviving, and remain alive "unto the coming of the Lord." (Fell and W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 51. 2 Cor. v. 3. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 2.

Shall deſcend from heaven.] See the notes on Acts i. 11.

With the trump of God.] Pious and fit to be regarded is the note of Theodoret here, That if the loud ſound of the trumpet, when the law was given from Mount Sinai, was ſo dreadful to the Jews, that they ſaid to Moſes, Let not the Lord ſpeak unto us, leſt we die, How terrible muſt the ſound of this trumpet be, which calls all men to the final judgment! (W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 52.

Meet the Lord in the air.] See the notes on John xii. 26. xiv. 3. and xvii. 24. Acts i. 9. Rom. viii. 17. and 1 Cor. xv. 51.

CHAP. V.

He proceeds in the deſcription of Chriſt's coming to judgment; Exhorting them to watchfulneſs, and divers other duties.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. BUT of the times and the ſeaſons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For your ſelves know perfectly that the day of the Lord ſo cometh as a thief in the night. For when they ſhall ſay, Peace and ſafety; then ſudden deſtruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they ſhall not eſcape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkneſs, that that day ſhould overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: We are not of the night, nor of darkneſs. Therefore let us not ſleep as do others; but let us watch and be ſober. For they that ſleep, ſleep in the night; and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night. But let us who are of the day, be ſober, putting on the breaſt-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet, the hope of ſalvation. For God hath not appointed us to wrath; but to obtain ſalvation by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: Who diedf or us, that whether we wake or ſleep, we ſhould live together with him. Wherefore comfort your ſelves together, and edify one another, even as alſo ye do.

But of the times, and the ſeaſons.] The Apoſtle having, in the foregoing chapter, treated of Chriſt's ſecond coming to judgment; and foreſeeing that ſome curious perſons might take occaſion from thence to enquire into the time when the general reſurrection and future judgment ſhould be, he makes it his buſineſs here to divert them from all ſuch enquiries; and to put them upon the practice of ſuch duties as would prepare and fit them for that ſolemn time. (B.) For the year, month, day, or hour, in which the Son of Man ſhall come to judgment, as it is curioſity for you to enquire, ſo it is not given to any man or angel to reſolve you therein; or preciſely to determine "the times and ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his own power," Matth. xxiv. 36 Mark xiii. 32. and Acts i. 7. (Aſſ.) For the critical import of theſe words, the more curious reader is referr'd to the reſpective notes of Dr. Hammond and Dr. Whitby, on this text. See alſo the notes here, on Matth. xxiv. 36. and Acts i. 7.

The day of the Lord.] Here the Apoſtle has join'd together two elegant and very appoſite compariſons, more forcibly and fully to repreſent the ſuddenneſs of our Saviour's coming to judgment (viz. "a thief in the night," and "a woman with child;") the verbs are of the preſent time, to make the deſcription more affecting and awful. (Blackw.) See the notes on Luke xii. 39. xvii. 27. and xxi. 34, &c.

Not in darkneſs] See the notes on John i. 5. Rom. xiii. 13. and Eph. v. 8.

Watch, and be ſober.] The Apoſtle having acquainted the Theſſalonians with the privilege of their converted ſtate, that they were "the children of the light," having received the light of knowledge, a light of grace and holineſs, and a light of joy and comfort from the Goſpel, he comes next to infer the duties proper and ſuitable to perſons in ſuch a ſtate: 1. Negative; "Let us not ſleep as do others;" Sleep is not proper for the day, but the night; the ſleep here intended is the ſleep of ſin, and of ſinful ſecurity, whereby all the ſpiritual ſenſes of a man are bound up, ſo that he is both unapprehenſive of his duty, and regardleſs of his danger. 2. Poſitive; "Let us watch, and be ſober;" that is, let us be always ready and prepared for Chriſt's coming: And that we may be ſo, let us be found in the daily exerciſe of ſobriety, at no time over-charged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, leſt that day overtake us unawares: The exerciſe of theſe two graces, watchfulneſs and ſobriety, do beſt together, and can hardly be ſeparated one from another; he that is not ſober cannot be watchful, and he that is not watchful, can never be ready for Chriſt's coming; let us therefore (ſays the Apoſtle) "watch and be ſober." Obſerve next, Our Apoſtle ſubjoins a reaſon to enforce his exhortation to watchfulneſs and ſobriety, becauſe ſleep and drunkenneſs are works of darkneſs, performed in the night, and not ſuitable for the children of the day; "They that ſleep, ſleep in the night; and they that are drunk, are drunken in the night." The old Heathens had their Bacchanalia, their drunken feaſts, in the night; and in the Apoſtles times, drunkenneſs was ſo ſhameful a vice, that men were aſhamed to be ſeen drunken in the day-time: But, Lord, to what an height of impudence is the intemperance of our age arrived, when Chriſtians bluſh not to do that at mid-day, which Heathens were aſhamed of at mid-night! Obſerve farther, Another reaſon ſuggeſted why we ſhould be thus ſober and watchful; namely, becauſe our life is a ſpiritual warfare: 'Tis now a time of fighting, therefore not of ſleeping, and intemperate eating and drinking: Soldiers muſt be upon their guard, and well armed; accordingly St. Paul directs to the two principal pieces of ſpiritual armour, to guard the moſt noble and vital parts, namely, the head and the heart, the helmet for the head, the breaſt-plate for the heart; for thoſe two being the chief fountains of life and ſenſation, the preſerving of them ſafe, is, in effect, the preſerving of the whole man; and accordingly, the ſoldiers that were upon their watch, and kept centinel, never ſtood without their helmet and breaſt-plate. In alluſion to which, our Apoſtle here directs us, as Chriſtian ſoldiers, to put on the breaſt-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet, the hope of ſalvation," without which we can never be rightly and duly prepared for our ſpiritual warfare. Note here, Of what admirable uſe, faith, love, and hope, are to a Chriſtian: Faith fortifies againſt deſtructive temptations; love will preſerve from apoſtacy and revolting; and hope will be of univerſal uſe unto us in the exerciſes of our Chriſtian courſe: It will be a cordial to comfort us, a ſpur to quicken, a ſtaff to ſupport us, a bridle to reſtrain us, an helmet to defend us: Therefore "let us, who are of the day, be ſober, putting on the breaſt-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet, the hope of ſalvation." (B.) See the notes on Mark xiii. 36. Luke xii. 35. xxi. 34, &c. Rom. xiii. 11. 1 Cor. xv. 34 and Eph. vi. 14, &c.

Not appointed us to wrath] See the notes on Rom. viii. 29. and ix. 17, &c.

Who died for us.] See the notes on Rom. vi. 11. and xiv. 8, 9.

Edify one another.] See the notes on Rom. xiv. 19. and xv. 2. 1 Cor. xiv. 3. and Col. iii. 16.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. And we beſeech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admoniſh you; and to eſteem them very highly in love for their works ſake. And be at peace among your ſelves. Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, ſupport the weak, be patient toward all men. See that none render evil for evil unto any man: But ever follow that which is good, both among your ſelves, and to all men. Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceaſing. In every thing give thanks: For this is the will of God in Chriſt Jeſus concerning you. Quench not the ſpirit. Deſpiſe not propheſyings. Prove all things: Hold faſt that which is good. Abſtain from all appearance of evil. And the very God of peace ſanctify you wholly: And I pray God your whole ſpirit and ſoul and body be preſerved blameleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Faithful is he that calleth you, who alſo will do it. Brethren, pray for us. Greet all the brethren with an holy kiſs. I charge you by the Lord, that this epiſtle be read unto all the holy brethren. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you. Amen.

¶ The firſt Epiſtle unto the Theſſalonians, was written from Athens.

Know them which labour.] Obſerve here, i. The miniſterial office and function deſcrib'd; viz. Publickly to labour, privately to admoniſh, and miniſterially to rule over his people. To labour in the word and doctrine; the word (kopiontes) ſignifies labouring even to wearineſs: Our work is the moſt weighty, and withal, bleſſed be God, the moſt worthy work. Admonition conſiſts of two parts; reproving of ſins committed, and exhorting to duties neglected: Rightly to do both requires that the Miniſter be a perſon of knowledge and underſtanding, of prudence and diſcretion, of courage and reſolution, of integrity and unblameableneſs of converſation. To rule, not magiſterially, much leſs tyrannically; but in love, and with a ſpirit of meekneſs; executing that power which Chriſt has given, for edification, and not for deſtruction: Such a power as the ſhepherd has over the flock, to guide and conduct it; as the head has over the members, to influence and quicken them; as the father of the family has over the houſhold, to take care of it, and provide for it. ii. The people's duty to their paſtors, or ſpiritual guides, declar'd; viz. 1. To know them; and this with a knowledge of obſervation, approbation, and imitation. 2. Highly to eſteem them; paying honour to the function, reverence to their perſons; and all this "in love, for their works ſake." And, iii. The people's duty one towards another; "And be at peace among your ſelves." Such a people can never join hearts in duty, that cannot join hands in love. Chriſtian love is a nurſing-mother to all grace, and tends exceedingly to make the work of the Miniſtry ſucceſsful: But when ſtrife and diſſenſion, diſcord and diviſion, prevails, either among the people themſelves, or betwixt Miniſter and People, farewel all expectation of ſucceſs from the ableſt Miniſtry upon earth. (B.) See the notes on John iv. 38. Acts xx. 35. 1 Cor. iii. 9. iv. 1, 12. and xvi. 16. Gal. iv. 11. and Heb. xiii. 17.

Warn them that are unruly.] Or diſorderly. We muſt conſider of every man's condition and affection: And as the diſeaſe is, ſo muſt the remedy be uſed, of admonition to thoſe who are diſorderly; conſolation to thoſe whoſe hearts ſink under the burden of their croſſes; ſupport to weak conſciences; and patience towards all who are diſeaſed in mind, and troubled with any ſpiritual malady. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. xiv. 1. and xv. 1. and Gal. vi. 1.

Evil for evil.] See the notes on Matth. v. 38, and 44. Rom. xii. 17. 1 Cor. vi. 7. and Gal. vi. 10.

Rejoice evermore.] That is, We ought to carry our ſelves ſo holily towards God, and ſo circumſpectly and unblameably before men, that we may always have cauſe for rejoicing, and in the midſt of temptation, and in the midſt of poverty and affliction, may actually rejoice in the expectation of preſent advantage by them, and in the hope of the glory of God, as the reward of them. Learn hence, That the children of God ought to make conſcience of rejoicing in God at all times, and in all conditions. But is not there a time to mourn as well as rejoice? Yes, but it is no where ſaid Mourn evermore; Nay, holy mourning has the ſeed of ſpiritual joy in it; it directly tends to it, and will certainly end in it; mourning is but temporary, rejoicing is an eternal duty. (B.) See the notes on Acts v. 41. Rom. xii. 12. and Phil. iv. 4. and that which here next follows.

Pray without ceaſing.] Note here the connection between this precept and the foregoing. He who would "rejoice evermore," muſt pray evermore. Seldom praying and conſtant rejoicing will never ſtand together: According to our conſtancy in prayer, ſuch will be the conſtancy of our joy. (B.) See the notes on Luke xviii. 1.

In every thing give thanks.] Becauſe God, by Chriſt, turneth every condition for the beſt to us, Rom. viii. 28. (Fell) Therefore, whatſoever God ſends, receive it thankfully. In proſperity "give thanks" unto him, becauſe he crowns you with temporal mercies; in adverſity, becauſe he thereby tries your faith and patience, and gives you a ſight and ſenſe of your ſins: In wealth, becauſe he affordeth you thereby means of doing much good; in want, becauſe he takes away from you many nouriſhments of vice, and teaches you to depend upon him and his promiſes for your ſupply and ſupport, and not upon outward means and helps: In all the paſſages of your life, for his care and providence over you; and at your death, for his delivering you from the miſeries of this life, and preſently receiving you into his heavenly kingdom. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 28. Eph. v. 20. Phil. iv. 6. and Col. iii. 17.

Quench not the ſpirit.] This ſpeech is metaphorical, taken from the fire of the altar, which never was to go out. The Spirit is compar'd to a fire, both in reſpect of the light which it giveth to the underſtanding, and the heat and fervour to our affections. When we feel this fire within us, either in our private meditations, or at the hearing of the word, we muſt endeavour to keep it ſtill burning; and if it ſlack, we muſt (anazopyrein) "ſtir it up" in us, 2 Tim. i. 6. by ſuch means as God hath ordain'd for that end. (Aſſ.) The Holy Spirit is quench'd by ſtrife and contention; by reſiſting his ordinary motions, his gracious influences upon our minds; by neglecting to improve his gifts of any kind; and, in general, by living a careleſs or wicked life. Some injudicious people have fanſied, that the Holy Spirit is quenched by uſing a Form in our prayers. But, to omit other arguments, their miſtake is manifeſt; becauſe our Lord not only taught his diſciples a Form, but uſed Forms himſelf. (Fox) See the notes on Luke xi. 2. and 1 Cor. xii. 4, 10. and xiv. 30.

Deſpiſe not propheſyings.] Contemn not the preaching of the word, how mean ſoever the preacher's gifts ſeem unto you: Set not light by the declarations and applications of the Scriptures; either by ſuch as have the extraordinary gift of propheſying, 1 Cor. xiv. 1, 5. or by the ordinary gift which the Miniſters of the Goſpel receive by impoſition of hands, 2 Tim. i 6. In which prohibition, the Apoſtle meeteth with ſuch as thoſe who thought themſelves wiſe enough of themſelves, and that they had no need of ſuch helps. (Aſſ.) It is not ſufficient, that we do not ſlight the ordinance of preaching, nor declaim againſt it, as vain and uſeleſs (as the manner of ſome is) but we are to have an honourable eſteem of it; and evidence that eſteem, by a due attendance upon it. More is intended by the Holy Ghoſt than is here expreſs'd: For tho' he only forbids the ſin, he intends the duty or grace, in ſtrict oppoſition to the ſin; namely, That Chriſtians ought to be ſo far from deſpiſing, that they ought to be very forward in embracing, the Miniſtry and preaching of God's word. (B.) See the notes on ver. 12. and 1 Cor. iv. 1. xi. 4. and xiv. 1, 30.

Prove all things.] Theſe words, probably are ſpoken with reſpect to the preceding verſe, "Deſpiſe not propheſyings:" In reſpect to which it is implied, That, notwithſtanding propheſying, as ſuch, was to be reverenc'd, and not deſpis'd, there were ſome propheſyings abroad, which had no title to this reverence; and that we are not implicitly to believe every pretender to it, but, as far as God has given us ſenſes of diſcerning, to examine what we hear, and try the ſpirits which are gone out into the world. (Zinz.) The meaning of the Apoſtle here cannot be, that it is our duty to go amongſt all the ſeveral denominations of people profeſſing religion, to try and prove their principles and doctrines; for, that would be a very hazardous undertaking to many, whoſe ſenſes are not exerciſed to diſcern between good and evil: But his meaning is, That if any thing is propos'd, as an article neceſſary to be believ'd, or as a duty neceſſary to be practis'd, that we ſhould then examine, whether it be agreeable to the Scriptures; and if it be, we are to receive and hold it faſt; if not, we are to reject it. (Fox) And this is a ſtrong argument for the perſpicuity and the ſufficiency of Holy Scripture for this work; and againſt the neceſſity of a living judge: For he who muſt try and "prove all things," muſt alſo try and prove the doctrine of this living judge himſelf; and therefore, till he hath made this trial, muſt not admit his doctrine, as an article of Chriſtian Faith; for theſe words plainly teach, that what we muſt hold faſt, muſt firſt be tried or prov'd. (W. and B.) See Mr. Zinzano's Sermon on this text, 1708. and the notes on John v. 39. Acts xvii. 2, 11. Rom. ii. 18. 1 Cor. xi. 28. and Eph. iv. 14.

Abſtain from all appearance of evil.] This advice genuinely follows upon the former: After we have tried all things, we muſt "hold faſt that which is good," and "abſtain from evil." Where note, The gradation uſed by our Apoſtle; we muſt abſtain from evil, from all evil, "from all appearance of evil." Yet Obſerve, It is not the Apoſtle's meaning that we abſtain from all that which appears evil to others; for that would be to deſtroy our Chriſtian liberty in things indifferent, and create in our minds continual perplexities; there is nothing almoſt we can do, but may appear evil to ſome: But St. Paul here enjoins us to abſtain from every thing which, after trial, ſeems evil to our ſelves, and is judged by us ſo to be: Yet it is our duty, not to give any juſt occaſion of ſcandal to any, but to live not only without fault, but, if poſſible, without flaw, that the world may have nothing to ſpot us withal. (B. and W.) This duty of "abſtaining from all appearance of evil," is indeed incumbent on all Chriſtians in general; on thoſe of the Laity, as well as us of the Clergy; But it doth, in a more peculiar manner, oblige us. The infirmities, the follies, the vices obſerved in thoſe of other callings, are always imputed to the perſons who are guilty of them, and are not wont to be charg'd on the whole profeſſion: But, by a rule of judging, look'd upon to be unequal in all other caſes except ours, if any of the Clergy do, either in reality, or ſo much as in appearance, tranſgreſs, the whole profeſſion is made anſwerable for it; and tho' the fault be perſonal, the ſhame of it extends to all of the order. And the miſchief ſpreads ſtill farther: So that the doctrine which we preach loſes its efficacy and vigour; the Sacraments which we diſpenſe are brought into contempt; the offering of the Lord is abhorr'd; and the holy name of God blaſphemed, becauſe his Miniſters are vile in the ſight of the people. (Biſhop Smalridge) Yet, after all, probably, the original word (eidos) here tranſlated appearance, might more properly be rendred all kind, or ſort, of evil; as appears from the authority of the Syriac, St. Chryſoſtome and Theophylact, Baſil and Leontius; who deſcant thus upon the words, Flee not from this, or that only but from every ſin. See the Criticiſms of Dr. Hammond and Dr. Whitby on this text; and the notes on Phil. iv. 8.

God of peace.] See the notes on Rom. xv. 33.

Spirit, and ſoul, and body.] What is meant by body, all agree: But the apprehenſions of men, concerning the diſtinction between ſoul and ſpirit, are different. The moſt probable opinion I take to be that of thoſe, who, by ſoul, underſtand the animal, or ſenſitive, part, which follows the affections of the body, and takes part with it: Hence the body is ſtiled a natural, or animal, body, 1 Cor. xv. 44. By ſpirit they underſtand the mind, the rational and underſtanding part of man. This uſes the body as its inſtrument, and wars and fights againſt it: The ſpirit, or mind, being renew'd and aſſiſted by the Holy Spirit, is compleatly arm'd to gain a victory; otherwiſe its efforts by reaſon of the corruption of humane nature, by ſin, will be but feeble and ineffectual. (Fox) See Hammond and Whitby at large, in proof of this philoſophy; and the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 20. and xv. 44. and Gal. vi. 18.

Preſerved blameleſs.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 8.

Faithful is he.] Here our Apoſtle comforts the Theſſalonians with the aſſurance that God, who had called them to the knowledge of Chriſtianity, would do what he had prayed for; namely, "Sanctify them wholly, and preſerve them blameleſs:" And this becauſe "God is faithful," that is, always the ſame, true to his word. God will certainly do his part, in and towards the work of ſanctification and preſervation;" but in a way of concurrence with our care and induſtry: He will do nothing without us, as we can do nothing without him: God's faithfulneſs is a pledge to us of the performance of all his promiſes, and will moſt certainly put him upon the performance of them: But his promiſe to us always ſuppoſes, yea, exacts from us, the uſe of all means, and particularly the exerting of our own endeavours, in order to our preſervation in grace, and perſeverance in holineſs; "Faithful is he that calleth you, who will alſo do it." (B.) If the fidelity of God requir'd, that he ſhould ſanctify and preſerve us blameleſs to the end, without our care and induſtry, or ſhould work in us abſolutely and certainly that care, and the Apoſtle believ'd this, how could he fear, leſt the Theſſalonians ſhould be ſo overcome by Satan's temptations, as that his labour with them might have been in vain, ch. iii. 5. this being in effect to fear, that God might be unfaithful to his promiſe? (W.) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 9. and x. 13.

Brethren, pray for us.] See the notes on Rom. xv. 30.

An holy kiſs.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 16.

I charge you by the Lord.] Our Apoſtle having now finiſhed his Epiſtle, gives a ſtrict charge for the peruſal of it: In which, Obſerve, 1. The duty enjoin'd, with the matter of it; namely, the reading of this Epiſtle; and for the ſame reaſon all the reſt, which had the like ſtamp of Divine authority upon them. 2. The object, or parties to whom this Epiſtle is to be read; to the brethren; "To all the brethren." 3. The ſolemnity of the injunction, "I charge you;" not, I exhort, beſeech, or intreat, but charge and enjoin you: Nay, the word ſignifies, I adjure you; it has the force of an oath, and that under a curſe: As if he had ſaid, I oblige you, under the penalty of God's curſe, "that this Epiſtle be read." Learn hence, 1. That the Scriptures ought to be in a known tongue, that they may be read unto, and read by, the common people. 2. That to confine the reading of the Scriptures to the Clergy, and exclude the Laity or common people from reading of them, is a very grievous ſin, contrary to the intent and deſign of God in the firſt penning and compoſing of them. 3. That it doth, in a ſpecial manner, concern the miniſters and ſpiritual guides to take a particular care that the holy Scriptures be publickly read to, and privately read by, all their people; and in order thereunto, to excite parents to read them daily in their families, Deut. vi. 7. and in their cloſets, Col. iii. 16. And alſo, it is a great part of the Miniſter's duty, to look after the putting forth the children of poor parents to ſchool, that they may learn to read the Scriptures for their inſtruction and comfort. Alas! What a reproach is it to this Chriſtian nation, that in thouſands of families the Bible is ſo little known, that not a ſoul among them is able to read a letter in it! (B.) As to the ſolemnity of ſuch forms of adjuration, Dr. Whitby well obſerves, That, in judicial oaths, the cuſtom among the Jews was, not for the perſon who came under the obligation of an oath, to pronounce the words of ſwearing with his own mouth; but an oath was exacted from him by the magiſtrate or ſuperior, and ſo he was bound to anſwer upon oath, by hearing the voice of adjuration, Lev. v. 1. Inſtances of which are found, in Gen. l. 16. Joſh. vi. 26. 1 Sam. xiv. 24. 1 Kings xxii. 16. and Matth. xxvi. 63.

The grace of our Lord.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 20.

Written from Athens.] 'Tis plain, Acts xviii. 5. that St. Paul was gone from Athens to Corinth before Silas and Timotheus return'd to him; and yet they were with him at the writing this Epiſtle; as appears from the inſcription of it, ch. i. 1. Theſe ſubſcriptions are noted to be of no great authority; and therefore the vulgar Latin has none of them. (Fell)

The End of the First Epiſtle of St. PAUL to the THESSALONIANS.

ANNOTATIONS
Second Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,
TO THE THESSALONIANS.

TO what has been ſaid, by way of Preface to the former Epiſtle, we ſhall not need to add more here, than only to advertiſe the reader,

i. That this ſecond Epiſtle is generally believ'd to have been written ſome ſhort time after the firſt; becauſe the ſame perſons, Silvanus and Timotheus, appear to have been ſtill with him, ch. i. 1. as they were at the writing the former.

ii. That it was written alſo from the ſame place; viz. not from Athens, but Corinth.

iii. That the occaſion of it was, his having been providentially hindred from coming to them again (of which he had expreſs'd a longing deſire, and partly promiſed them, in his former Epiſtle) by the intervention of divers other affairs from time to time; ſo that he ſent this Epiſtle to them, to ſupply the want of his preſence among them, and, at the ſame time to explain and enforce certain paſſages, which they might have miſapprehended in the former. And,

iv. That the parts of this Epiſtle are three, anſwerable to the chapters; 1. Pathetical, expreſſing his great love to the Theſſalonians, and joy for their faith and perſeverance, ch. i. 2. Prophetical, deſcribing the ſtate of the Church, and the revelation of Antichriſt, before the coming of Chriſt, ch. ii. And, 3. Parenetical, perſuading them to the exerciſe of divers Chriſtian virtues, ch. iii.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle certifies them of his affection and joy for their faith, love, and patience: And comforts them againſt perſecutions; eſpecially by declaring the righteous judgments of God.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Theſſalonians, in God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: Grace unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, becauſe that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all towards each other aboundeth: So that we our ſelves glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your perſecutions and tribulations that ye endure. Which is a manifeſt token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye alſo ſuffer: Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompenſe tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled, reſt with us, when the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: Who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he ſhall come to be glorified in his ſaints, and to be admired in all them that believe (becauſe our teſtimony among you was believed) in that day. Wherefore alſo we pray always for you that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleaſure of his goodneſs, and the work of faith with power: That the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Grace unto you, and peace.] See the notes on Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. and Eph. i. 2.

Bound to thank God.] See the notes on Rom. i. 8. and Eph. i. 16.

Your faith groweth.] "Faith groweth," either when more propoſitions are known, or thoſe which are already known are more firmly believ'd, and aſſented to. The increaſe of their faith he knew by their conſtancy in ſufferings. (Fell)

Glory in you.] En humin kauchaſthai; boaſt of you. See the notes on 1 Theſſ. ii. 19.

Which is a manifeſt token.] As if he had ſaid, Which tribulations and perſecutions, or, which patience under your preſent perſecutions, is a ſign and token, yea, an evidence and manifeſtation, that God, the righteous judge, will reward you with a part and ſhare in that kingdom for which ye ſuffer, being, in his account, worthy of it: Not with a worthineſs of merit, but with a worthineſs of meetneſs; they being made meet and fit for heaven hereafter, by their patience and conſtancy under ſufferings and perſecutions here. Learn hence, That as none can enjoy the kingdom of heaven by meriting heaven, but by being made meet for heaven; ſo patience under ſufferings, and reproaches under perſecutions and ſharp trials, is a ſpecial qualification to make us meet for the enjoyment of that glorious kingdom; "that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye alſo ſuffer." (B.) See the notes on Acts xiv. 22. Rom. viii. 18. and Phil. i. 28.

Reſt with us.] See the notes on Rom. viii. 18.

The Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed.] In theſe words we have an awful deſcription of the day of judgment, and of the proceſs of that ſolemn day Where obſerve, 1. The judge deſcribed; "The Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven:" Since his aſcenſion the heavens have contained him, and concealed him alſo from our ſight and ſenſes; but he ſhall then viſibly appear, and locally deſcend from the higheſt heavens, into the region of the air. "He ſhall come in the clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him." 2. His noble attendants, the "mighty angels;" every one ſtronger than an hoſt of armed men. As the work Chriſt comes about is a great and mighty work, ſo he will have inſtruments ſtrong and mighty, ſufficient for that work; yet doth Chriſt make uſe of the angels, not for neceſſity, but for majeſty; he can do his work without them. 3. The manner of his coming; "In flaming fire," by which the heavens and the earth ſhall be burnt up, and in which the damned ſhall be eternally tormented. 4. The end of his coming; to "take vengeance" on the ignorant, and on the diſobedient; on ſuch as "know not God," and on them that do know, but "obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus." Learn hence, 1. That it greatly tends to the comfort and ſupport of perſecuted Chriſtians, that Chriſt their righteous judge will come; "He ſhall be revealed," and nobly attended; he ſhall come as an exalted king, accompanied with a glorious train of mighty angels. 2. That the dread and terror of the day of judgment will be matter of comfort to the godly, no ways terrifying. Thoſe very flames which ſhall ſet the heavens and the earth in a blaze, and occaſion dreadful conſternation and fear to the wicked and impenitent world, ſhall be a comfortable ſight to the godly; and the forethoughts of them may, and ſhould, yield comfort to them under their preſent troubles. 3. That ignorance, whether in Pagans or in Chriſtians, doth very much, but diſobedience to the Goſpel doth very much more, expoſe perſons, and lay them open to the vengeance of the great day: If Chriſt will render vengeance to them that know him not, much more to them that do know, but "obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus." (B.) See the notes on Acts i. 11.

Deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord.] The puniſhment of the damned is two-fold; 1. The puniſhment of ſenſe, ſet forth by flaming fire: 2. The puniſhment of loſs, expreſs'd in theſe words, "from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." (Aſſ.) See Dr. Whitby's Appendix to this chapter, juſtifying the eternity of hell-torments.

Glorified in his Saints.] That is, Becauſe of his highly glorifying his Saints, who are here ſo much deſpiſed and afflicted. (Fell)

Our teſtimony among you was believed.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 6.

Count you worthy of this calling.] That is, fit and meet for this calling; viz. for the foremention'd glory, which they were call'd to the expectation of. (B.)

Fulfil all the good pleaſure of his goodneſs.] That is, all the goodneſs which of his own free-will and good pleaſure he deſign'd and decreed for you; and which on your part was to be wrought out with faith and conſtant obedience. (Fell) Or, All the benevolence of his goodneſs. The original here (paſan eudokian tes agathoſynes) is the ſhorteſt, and moſt charming, and emphatical repreſentation, that is any where to be found, of that immenſe graciouſneſs, and adorable benignity; which no words or thoughts can fully expreſs, but was never ſo happily and ſo fully expreſs'd as here. (Blackw.)

CHAP. II.

He warneth them of the coming of Antichriſt; and encourageth them in their conſtancy and perſeverance.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. NOW we beſeech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not ſoon ſhaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by ſpirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Chriſt is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day ſhall not come except there come a falling away firſt, and that man of ſin be revealed, the ſon of perdition: Who oppoſeth and exalteth himſelf above all that is called God, or that is worſhipped; ſo that he as God ſitteth in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelf that he is God. Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, I told you theſe things? And now ye know what with-holdeth, that he might be revealed in his time. For the myſtery of iniquity doth already work: Only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then ſhall that wicked one be revealed, whom the Lord ſhall conſume with the ſpirit of his mouth, and ſhall deſtroy with the brightneſs of his coming: Even him whoſe coming is after the working of Satan with all power, and ſigns, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, in them that periſh; becauſe they received not the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved, And for this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould believe a lie: That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs.

By the coming of our Lord.] By is here an adjuration or obteſtation; but it may alſo be meant as concerning the coming, &c. which is the ſubject of the following diſcourſe. The original admits of either explication. (Fell) For the prepoſition hyper is often taken in the notion of peri; as for, concerning, or about: As when we ſay, Now, for (or concerning) ſuch a matter, or point, or queſtion; when it is the form of entring upon any diſcourſe. (H. W. and Wall) The coming of Chriſt is, by the reverend Dr. Hammond, referr'd to Chriſt's coming to deſtroy the unbelieving Jews, and throw down their temple, and their worſhip which depended on it. This is the coming of Chriſt, or the ſon of man, ſo often mention'd in our Lord's prediction of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and of the temple, Matth. xxiv. 27, 37, 39. This is moſt certainly the import of the phraſe in St. James v. 7, 8, 9. As for the phraſe, "Our gathering together in him," it ſeems parallel to the words of Chriſt, Matth. xxiv. 31. "His angels ſhall gather together his elect." And, to apply it to the Theſſalonians, let it be noted, that they were partly converts of the Jews and Proſelytes. For the converts made by St. Paul's preaching to them, were of the believing Jews, and the devout Greeks, Acts xvii. 4. who, in expectation of our Lord's prediction, as well as from their obſervation of the Jewiſh feſtivals, might be inclined to go up to Jeruſalem. Moreover, till the writing of this Epiſtle, if not long after, even till the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the Jewiſh converts kept up their ſynagogue-worſhip; and many proſelytes, and other Chriſtians, did not ſcruple to aſſemble with them: The Jewiſh converts thought themſelves obliged to do it, they being "all zealous of the law," Acts xxi. 20. and many of the Gentile Chriſtians complied with it at Corinth, Galatia, and Philippi. But, after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, there was an end of this ſynagogue-worſhip; the day having reveal'd, that God was no longer pleas'd with it; and then they met together ſtill as Churches of Chriſt: And this might be their "gathering together unto him," here ſpoken of. But yet, conſidering that this parouſia, or coming of Chriſt, in the former Epiſtle, ch. ii. 19. iii. 13. iv. 15. and v. 23. is uſed with relation to Chriſt's coming at the day of judgment, it may be thought more reaſonable to refer this paſſage to the ſame advent, and to paraphraſe it thus, "We beſeech you, brethren, by (the bleſſing ye expect at) the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and at our gathering together unto him." (W.) See the notes on Acts i. 11. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 15, &c.

Be not ſoon ſhaken in mind.] Saleuthenai apo tou noos. Nous, with St. Paul, does frequently ſignify the ſenſe, or meaning, of a thing ſpoken; as is apparent 1 Cor. xiv. 15, &c. And ſo, I think, here; "that ye be not ſoon" driven from the true meaning of things; for that is the ſcope of the following words: Apo tou noos can never ſignify in mind. (Wall) See the notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 15.

Nor be troubled.] Mete throeiſthai. The word imports ſuch perturbation as ariſeth from rumour, or the relation of ſomething terrible. It is a metaphor, taken from ſoldiers frighted by a ſudden alarm. (Leigh)

By ſpirit, nor by word, nor by letter.] Note here, A removal of all the ſuppoſed foundations of this error, or the means which theſe impoſtors uſed to entice the Theſſalonians to embrace it; and they are three, namely, ſpirit, word, and letter: Not by ſpirit, that is, be not ſhaken in mind, by any pretence of ſpiritual or divine revelation; "nor by word," by any pretended meſſage or word from us; "nor by letter," that is, not by any thing contained in our former Epiſtle, or in any ſpurious and counterfeit writings, paſſing under the Apoſtle's name, mentioning as if Chriſt ſhould come in that age wherein they lived. We need not wonder that St. Paul is ſo careful to obviate this error of the preſent coming and appearance of Chriſt, becauſe ſhould the Theſſalonians have depended upon it, and found themſelves deceived in their expectation of it, it might have cauſed great trouble to them, and even ſhaken their ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith. (B.)

The day of Chriſt is at hand.] This was the miſtake of ſome among the Theſſalonians; They were in ſuch apprehenſion of the day of judgment being then juſt at hand, that they left off their trades and employments (of which St. Paul complains in the next chapter, ver. 10, 11.) and now that Chriſt was coming, they would do no more work. A like enthuſiaſm to this did, ſeveral years ago, miſlead ſome people in England. Now, all ſuch fancies taken up by men, do hurt. For, tho' the men be well-meaning; yet, when they find their expectation diſappointed for the time they had pitch'd on, it weakens their faith of the main article. And the caſe is not much different, of thoſe learned, but fanciful, men, who have hitherto pretended, from the Apocalypſe, to determine the time of ſome great revolutions which ſhall be. We have liv'd (and ſome of themſelves lived) to ſee their aſſurances diſappointed for the time. St. Paul had preach'd to theſe Theſſalonians the thing it ſelf, the reſurrection and judgment; and had wrote plainly to them of it in his former Epiſtle: The time he knew not; but they, or ſome of them, had raſhly concluded it. He takes pains therefore to convince theſe haſty computers, of their wrong conſtruction of what he had ſaid; and that they had forgot a great part of what he had told them, of ſeveral things which would be before Chriſt's coming; and particularly of that which here follosw. (Wall) See the notes on Matth. xxiv. 4.

A falling away firſt] St. Paul's word, which is here engliſh'd "a falling away," is (apoſtaſia) apoſtaſy: And what he ſays, of the ſame thing, 1 Tim. iv. 1. "In the latter times ſome ſhall (or rather will) depart from the faith" (compared with what he ſays, 2 Tim. iii. 1, &c. and St. Peter, 2 Pet. ii. 1.) and eſpecially what our Saviour himſelf had ſaid, Luke xviii. 8. are the explication of this; viz. a defection, or revolting from the faith. (Wall) I dare not be poſitive in determining particularly, to whom this apoſtaſy is to be applied. But, if profeſs'd Atheiſm and Infidelity; if Hereſy, and denying the Lord who bought us; if Thinking freely, and ſpeaking boldly, of the dreadful things of Religion; if a general indevotion, and neglecting of God's holy worſhip; if ſecurity and impudence in ſinning; if curſing, and ſwearing, and blaſpheming, and affronting the authority of heaven: In ſhort, If open lewdneſs and debauchery; if luxury and drunkenneſs; if the moſt ſhameful beſtialities and abuſes of human nature, in adultery and common mixtures: I ſay, If any, or all theſe, may be ſuppoſed to be the "falling away," and the works of "the man of ſin," here mention'd by the Apoſtle; we of this age and generation have much reaſon to fear, that that day is coming; that the Judge is even at the door: But, tho' that may be a reaſonable and pious fear, yet ſtill it is to us uncertain. (Killingb.) See the notes on Luke xviii. 8.

That man of ſin.] That theſe phraſes, a "man of ſin," and "ſon of perdition," do, by a common Hebraiſm, ſignify a man notoriouſly ſinful, and worthy of perdition, is well known: And that this whole context relates to him, who is elſewhere call'd Antichriſt, is agreed on all hands. The queſtion is, To whom that character is applicable; and that indeed ſuch a queſtion as admits not of an eaſy ſolution. Where men of reputation for learning cannot come to any terms of agreement, I ſhall not preſume to determine. However, not to paſs ſuch a curious point without ſome notice, I ſhall briefly lay before the reader ſuch of their reſpective opinions, as I have had opportunity to collect; and leave him to judge for himſelf. Be pleas'd therefore to obſerve, 1. That ſeveral of the Fathers, and School Divines, have declar'd their opinion, from Gen. xlix. 16, 17. and Jer. viii. 16. That Antichriſt was to be a Jew, born of the tribe of Dan, and to be circumciſed. But (as the learned Mr. Parker notes) whence there ſhould be ſuch agreement among them in this opinion, is hard to determine; ſince 'tis a notion ſcarce to be reconciled with the tenor of Gen. xlix. 16. which runs altogether to the advantage of the character of the perſon, or perſons, ſpoken of. 2. Grotius applies it to the emperor Caligula: But that is exploded both by Dr. Hammond and Dr. Whitby; and particularly by the latter, becauſe this Epiſtle was not written till after Caligula's death. 3. Others applied it to Nero: But that (ſays Biſhop Alley) ſavours of an old wife's tale, invented by ſome whoſe minds were bewitch'd. 4. Others, again, to Domitian: But Dr. Hammond admits it not to be applicable to any of the Roman emperors; becauſe of the "power, and ſigns, and lying wonders," with which Antichriſt was to "come in, after the working of Satan," ver. 9. And indeed, moſt learned men do agree, that "the man of ſin," tho' expreſs'd in the ſingular number, muſt not be confined to a ſingle perſon, but to ſome one, or more, ring-leaders, and their followers. Thus, 5. Dr. Hammond himſelf interprets it of Simon Magus, with his followers, the Gnoſticks. But this is oppoſed by Dr. Whitby, and Dr. Wall, as well as by the Oxford Paraphraſt, and others: Not only, becauſe it depends upon the ſtory of Simon's flying in the air at Rome, and falling down dead at the prayer of St. Peter; (which is related with ſo many different and contradictory circumſtances, by divers Authors, as render it of little or no credit;) but alſo, becauſe Simon Magus himſelf certainly periſh'd ſome years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; whereas the text here ſuppoſes Antichriſt to be alive at the coming of our Lord, and to be "deſtroyed with the brightneſs of his coming," ver. 8. 6. The Oxford Paraphraſt has taken a great deal of pains to apply it all to Mahomet and his followers: But Dr. Whitby has taken no leſs to confute this as a vain conceit, (amongſt other reaſons) Becauſe the Apoſtle could not have ſaid, ver. 7. that "the myſtery of iniquity," which Mahomet was to bring into the world, about 567 years after, did then "already work," (as that Author had concluded) on the account of ſome Hereticks, already come, who confeſſed not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh," 2 John 7. ſince 'tis well known, that Mahomet was ſo far from denying, that both himſelf did, and his followers to this day ſtill do, confeſs this very freely: And beſides, the Antichriſt here ſpoken of, was to "come with all power, and ſigns, and lying wonders," that is, with miracles; whereas Mahomet expreſly renounced miracles, and conſequently could not be the perſon here deſign'd. 7. The more common opinion of other Proteſtants in general, is to apply this to the Pope and Popery. And this has indeed been labour'd, by divers very learned and eminent writers: But yet it is controverted, as much as the former, even by Dr. Whitby; who will not allow, that the Pope and Popery are to be underſtood as primarily meant here, tho' in his notes on this place, he admits they may be ſo in a ſecondary ſenſe. But then, 8. His own interpretation of it (which he owns to be a new one) is, That it is primarily to be underſtood of the Jewiſh nation, after the ſpirit of ſlumber and blindneſs was come upon them, for the rejection of the promiſed Meſſiah. The laſt that I have met with on this ſubject is, 9. The opinion of Dr. Wall, viz. That Deiſm, in the moſt proper ſenſe, when it riſes in a country which has been Chriſtian, is that which St Paul here names it, Apoſtaſy: But, as Quakeriſm (even that ſort of it which disbelieves the Scriptures) and all other Deiſm, yet makes uſe of the name Jeſus Chriſt, in ſome ſenſe of the word or other; ſo it ſeems, by the following words here, that this Apoſtaſy will yet wear the name of ſome ſort or ſect of religion. And no character (ſays he) will more adequately fit all parts of the deſcription given here, and at other places, than Atheiſm wearing the cloke of ſome name of Chriſtianity. But, after all, before we take upon us to determine which of all theſe, or whether any of them, is the true interpretation, we ſhould do well to obſerve that caution of Irenæus, That, this being a prophecy, it is ſafer for us to expect the fulfilling it, than too raſhly to expound it. See ſome more particulars, concerning this point, in the ſeveral other notes upon this ſection, hereunto ſubjoined: But, for the reſt, conſult the ſeveral Commentators here quoted, at large.

Who oppoſeth.] Ho antikeimenos; He who oppoſeth; or The adverſary: The ſame who is by St. John, call'd Antichriſt, 1 John ii. 18. (H.) He oppoſeth himſelf againſt Chriſt, in his doctrine, in his offices, in his members; corrupting his doctrine, debaſing his offices, and perſecuting his members. (B.)

All that is called God.] That is, Not only againſt kings and princes, to whom that ſtyle is given; but alſo above the true God; croſſing and contradicting his word and ordinances, &c. (Aſſ.)

Or that is worſhipped.] Exalting himſelf, epi pan to legomenon Theon, e ſebaſma: Where, as the word (legomenon) called, ſhews, that the Apoſtle ſpeaks of magiſtrates, who are called Gods, Pſal. lxxxii. 6. ſo the word ſebaſma ſeems to point more particularly to the Roman emperors, whoſe title was (ſebaſtos) Auguſtus. (W.)

He, as God.] Dr. Mill, and after him Dr. Wall, tell us, That theſe words (hos Theon, or tanquam Deum) as God, are not in the vulgar Latin, nor in the moſt ancient manuſcripts or fathers, and therefore conclude them to be an interpolation. But Dr. Whitby ſhews, that they are own'd by all the Greek Scholiaſts, the Syriac and Arabic verſions, as well as by Cyril of Alexandria, and Theodoret: And Dr. Wall himſelf ſays, the following words, (apodeiknynta heauton hoti eſti Theos) “ſhewing himſelf that he is God,” (or rather a God) which expreſs the ſame thing, are found in them all.

Sitteth in the temple of God.] That is, In the Aſſembly of men, which ſome time were the ſpiritual temple of God; that is, his undoubted true Church, and which ſtill beareth that name. But St. Auguſtine, and others, interpret the words (eis ton naon) not “in the temple,” but againſt the temple of God; conceiving, that Antichriſt ſhould riſe up againſt the Church of God. (Aſſ.)

I told you theſe things] Of the Jews, and their oppoſing themſelves to the doctrine of Chriſtianity, and the profeſſors of it, he told them in his former Epiſtle, ch. ii. 15, 16. and “when he was yet with them,” the perſecutions, which both he and they ſuffer'd from them, Acts xvii. 5, &c. gave him a juſt occaſion to ſpeak both of their oppoſition to the Goſpel, and of the deliverance which they ſhortly might expect from ſuch enraged perſecutors; this being hinted, for the encouragement of Chriſtians, in moſt of his Epiſtles: But that he ſhould tell them any thing of Mahomet, or of a Papal Antichriſt, who were not then in being, or to be known then to the Theſſalonians by any of the characters here mention'd, is not ſo eaſy to conceive. (W.) This is therefore a text, which ſeems to Dr. Whitby to ſettle his interpretation of this chapter.

Ye know what with-holdeth.] That is, what hindreth, and keepeth him back, from being reveal'd, until the time prefix'd by God. This, by the judgment of Tertullian, Jerome, and Chryſoſtome, and other ancient Doctors of the Church, was the Roman Empire; which ſubſiſting and flouriſhing then, with-held the manifeſtation of Antichriſt, who was to riſe upon the ruins of that empire; as they concluded from Rev. xiii. 1, 11. and xvii. 9, &c. (Aſſ.) Hence it was, that they pray'd ſo heartily (as Tertullian declares) for the continuance of that empire; becauſe, whenever that ſhould be extirpated, they expected times of dreadful trials, from which they were repriev'd ſo long as that empire laſted. (Wall) And this (ſay they) the Apoſtle here expreſſeth ſo covertly and obſcurely, that he might not incenſe the Roman emperors againſt the Chriſtians. (W.)

The myſtery of Iniquity.] That is, the ſecret riſing of Antichriſtian dominion; whereof ſome foundations were ſecretly laid in the Apoſtles times, by Satan and his inſtruments. (Aſſ.)

He who now letteth.] See the notes on ver. 6.

Then ſhall that wicked be revealed.] Ho anomos, “the wicked,” here, is undoubtedly the ſame with (ho antikeimenos) the oppoſer, in ver. 4. (H.) Ho anomos properly ſignifies a lawleſs man; one who holdeth not himſelf to be ſubject to any law. And (tho' we have declined to apply this character to any of the perſons or parties before mention'd; yet, we cannot but ſay,) it deſerves our ſerious conſideration, Who they are, that in their own Canon Law, diſt. 40. (as it is quoted by the Aſſembly-men) preſume to determine, That they are ſoluti omni lege humana, &c. not bound by any human law; ſo that neither all the Clergy, nor even the whole world, may judge or depoſe them; and that if they fall into damnable errors, and draw thouſands of ſouls after them to perdition, no man may ſay ſo much as What doeſt thou?

Whom the Lord ſhall conſume.] The word analoſei (from analiſko) doth properly ſignify to waſte and conſume, by little and little, till a thing come to nothing. (Aſſ.)

The ſpirit of his mouth.] That is, by the pure preaching of the Goſpel. (Idem.)

The brightneſs of his coming.] See the notes on ch. i. 8.

All power, and ſigns, and lying wonders.] Miracles are call'd powers, becauſe they are the effects of extraordinary powers; ſigns, from their uſe, becauſe they ſealed the doctrine to which they applied; and wonders, becauſe they breed aſtoniſhment in the minds of beholders. Now, Antichriſt pretends to all theſe: But his are lying powers, lying ſigns, and “lying wonders;” becauſe the greateſt of his pretended miracles are fables, forgeries, impoſtures, and diabolical deluſions. (B.)

In them that periſh.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 18. 2 Cor. ii. 15, &c. and iv. 3.

Received not the love of the truth.] From theſe words ſome conceive, that Antichriſt, or “the man of ſin,” muſt in profeſſion be a Chriſtian, becauſe he is ſaid, “not to receive the love of the truth” only: But all the Fathers, and many others, ſay, Not to receive the love of the truth, is, Not to receive the truth, which is worthy to be lov'd, and which would have taught them charity to thoſe whom they perſecuted; it being the ſame with “not believing the truth,” ver. 12. And this emphatically belong'd to thoſe unbelieving Jews to whom St. Paul ſpeaks, Acts xiii. 46. and to whom he applies the words of the Prophet, ver. 41. And all the Fathers, which ſpeak of Antichriſt, and the man of ſin (not one of them excepted) declare, that this, and the two following verſes, belong to the unbelieving Jews. (W.)

God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſion.] God, by with-holding his grace, ſhall blind their eyes, who wilfully ſhut them againſt the truth; or, for their obdurate malice and incredulity, ſhall give them over to Satan, to captivate their minds and underſtandings, and powerfully ſeduce and deceive them. (Aſſ.) As he is ſaid to have “put a lying ſpirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets,” 1 Kings xxii. 22, 23. by permitting the evil ſpirit to go forth for that end; Or, as he is ſaid to “deceive his people,” Jer. iv. 10. becauſe he ſuffer'd them to be deceiv'd by falſe-prophets. This muſt be the true interpretation of all ſuch paſſages as theſe. For, 1. God cannot ſecretly inſpire into us any evil, or infuſe any evil principle into our hearts: For evil can never proceed immediately from him who hath an abſolute and entire freedom from it; were it his offſpring, it muſt ceaſe to bear that name, his works being all very good, and wrought in righteouſneſs. 2. Nor can he incline, excite, encourage, or entice to ſin: For then he muſt excite men to perform the abominable thing which his ſoul hates; to do that which is infinitely diſpleaſing to him, and incline them ſecretly to that which he openly deters all perſons from; and then he cannot truly be offended with ſuch perſons, and puniſh them for their iniquities: Or elſe he muſt be angry with them, becauſe they do obey his motions, and ſentence them to endleſs miſery, becauſe they do comply with his own inclinations. Nor, 3. Can he neceſſitate any man to ſin: For then he muſt by force compel them to it; and then the action done by virtue of that force cannot be theirs, but God's; nor would our conſciences condemn us for ſin, were we aſſured that we could not help it. (W.) See the notes on Acts vii. 42. and 2 Cor. iv. 4.

Believe a lie.] That is, forged and falſe doctrines. (Aſſ.)

Might be damned.] Crithoſi: The literal tranſlation is, be judged, which ſounds not quite ſo harſh as our common Engliſh verſion.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, becauſe God hath from the beginning choſen you to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the ſpirit, and belief of the truth: Whereunto he called you by our Goſpel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Therefore, brethren, ſtand faſt, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epiſtle. Now our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and God even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlaſting conſolation, and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and ſtabliſh you in every good word and work.

Choſen you to ſalvation.] See the notes on Rom. viii. 29. and Col. iii. 12.

Called you by our Goſpel.] See the notes on Rom. i. 16. and ii. 16. and 1 Cor. i. 21, &c.

Stand faſt.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 13. and Gal. v. 1.

Hold the traditions.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 17. and 1 Cor. xi. 2.

Stabliſh you in every good word and work.] By “every good word” is meant ſound doctrine; and by every good work, holineſs of life. (B.) See the notes on ch. iii. 16. Rom. xvi. 25. and 1 Cor i. 8.

CHAP. III.

He concludes with an exhortation to ſundry Chriſtian duties; and a particular caution againſt idleneſs and ill company.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. FINALLY, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free courſe, and be glorified even as it is with you; and that we may be delivered from unreaſonable and wicked men: For all men have not faith. But the Lord is faithful, who ſhall ſtabliſh you, and keep you from evil. And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you. And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Chriſt.

Pray for us.] See the notes on Rom. xv. 30. and Eph. vi. 19.

And be glorified.] As "the word of the Lord" is diſhonour'd and contemn'd, when it is either not believ'd, or not obey'd; ſo it is glorified, and God by it, when it is mixed with faith and obedience in the hearers, Heb. iv. 2. (Aſſ.)

That we may be delivered.] See the notes on Rom. xv. 31.

The Lord is faithful.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 9. and x. 13. and 1 Theſſ. v. 24.

Into the patient waiting for Chriſt.] Eis hypomonen tou Chriſtou; into the patience of Chriſt; that is, into an imitation of his patience. (W.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye withdraw your ſelves from every brother that walketh diſorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us. For your ſelves know how ye ought to follow us: For we behaved not our ſelves diſorderly among you. Neither did we eat any mans bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travel night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you: Not becauſe we have not power, but to make our ſelves an enſample unto you to follow us. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither ſhould he eat. For we hear that there are ſome which walk among you diſorderly, working not at all, but are buſy-bodies. Now them that are ſuch we command and exhort, by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that with quietneſs they work, and eat their own bread. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well doing. And if any man obey not our word by this epiſtle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be aſhamed. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother.

Withdraw your ſelves.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 17. and 1 Cor. v. 11.

That walketh diſorderly.] By the context here he ſeemeth to mean ſome idle, begging people, who would not work, but were buſy-bodies; and who, perhaps, would not work any more, becauſe (as they underſtood it) Chriſt was coming. (Wall) See the notes on ver. 11. and 1 Theſſ. ii. 10. and iv 11, 12.

After the tradition.] "The tradition" here mention'd, is (according to Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, the tradition which he deliver'd by his works; in which he was an example to them, of induſtry, as he explains himſelf at the next verſe. (W.) See the notes on Rom. xvi. 17. and 1 Cor. xi. 2.

Behaved not ourſelves diſorderly.] That is, ſaith Theophylact, we were not idle: For God having order'd man to labour, and fitted him with members for that end, he who will not do ſo, deſerts the order in which God had placed him; and ſo the Apoſtle expounds himſelf, ver. 11. (W. and B.) See the notes on Acts xviii. 3. and xx. 34. 1 Cor. iv. 16. ix. 4. and xi. 1. 2 Cor. xi. 9. and 1 Theſſ. ii. 6, &c.

If any would not work.] He does not ſay, If any do not work; for ſome would work if they could get any employment; ſome are not able to work, through age and natural infirmity; yet God forbid, that either of theſe ſhould ſtarve for want of food: But the Apoſtle forbiddeth any ſuch to be reliev'd by the charity of the Church, who are in want through their own idleneſs; who may have work, and are able to perform it, but will not take any pains for their living. (Aſſ. and B.) This was a proverbial ſpeech, common among the Jews, Whoſoever doth not labour, doth not eat. (H.) See the notes on 1 Theſſ. iv. 11.

But are buſie-bodies.] Periergazomenous; workers round about; for ſo the word ſignifies. (Leigh) There are no perſons who meddle with more buſineſs, and who create more to others, than thoſe who have none of their own. Idleneſs is the mother of unquietneſs, diſorder, and curioſity; curioſity, ſacrilegious in religion, dangerous in ſcience, damnable as to future things, ſeditious in affairs of ſtate, contrary to the quiet of families, and ſhameful and infamous to thoſe who are poſſeſſed with it. (Q.) See the notes on Phil. ii. 4. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 11.

With quietneſs they work.] See the notes on Acts xx. 35. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 11.

Be not weary in well-doing.] See the notes on Gal. vi. 9.

Note that man.] Touton ſemeiouſthe. Some would have this Greek word to mean no more than to give notice, or ſignify him (viz. to the Apoſtle:) But it importeth both to note him with a mark or brand of infamy; and to give notice of him, as infamous, to the Church, that all may avoid him. The word is not ſemainete, but ſemeiouſthe. (Leigh) He directs them, 1. To note, or mark, the diſorderly perſon; 2. To avoid all intimacy and familiarity with him; and 3. To admoniſh him of his duty, that he may be brought, if poſſible, to repentance. (B.) See the notes on Matth. xviii. 17. Rom. xvi. 17. 1 Cor. v. 5, &c. Gal. vi. 1. and Eph. v. 11.

Ver. 16, 17, 18. Now the Lord of peace himſelf give you peace always, by all means. The Lord be with you all. The ſalutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epiſtle: So I write; The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

¶ The ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, was written from Athens.

Now, the Lord of peace.] Prayers are the ſeals of all exhortations, wherewith the Apoſtle concludes all his Epiſtles. (Aſſ.) And note here, 1. The mercy pray'd for; peace: Peace with God; peace with conſcience; peace and unity among themſelves as Chriſtians; peace with the men of the world, ſtrangers, yea, enemies to Chriſtianity. 2. The perſon prayed to; "The Lord of peace;" underſtand Jeſus Chriſt, the prince of peace, the purchaſer of peace, the procurer of peace, the preſerver of peace. 3. The perpetuity of the mercy prayed for; "The Lord give you peace," not for a ſhort time, but for continuance; "always," that is, at all times, and in all places, and with all perſons. 4 The way and manner of obtaining this and all other bleſſings; it muſt be in the uſe of means; "The Lord give you peace by all means," that is, in the uſe of all lawful and laudable means. Learn hence, 1. That the Lord himſelf is the author, procurer, and preſerver of all that peace which his people enjoy; and therefore his people may boldly truſt him for peace and ſafety, who is, and will be ſtiled, "The Lord of peace." 2. That ſuch as will obtain this bleſſing of peace, muſt pray for it, and endeavour after it in a diligent uſe of all lawful means, which is the uſual way and method in which God diſpenſes it. 3. That it is a laſting peace, a peace always, amongſt all perſons, and at all times, that a Chriſtian ſhould pray for and endeavour after, that it may be enjoyed without ceſſation, and without interruption; "The Lord of peace himſelf give you peace always, by all means." And further obſerve, That this prayer being put up to Jeſus Chriſt, is a ſtrong argument for the Divinity of Chriſt; For none but God is to be pray'd to; none but God can give peace, Iſa. lvii. 19. (B.) To which add, That peace, in the Hebrew phraſe, imports all happineſs, and "eſtabliſhment in every good word and work;" which muſt be deriv'd from God, and accordingly is pray'd for by the Apoſtle, ch. ii. 16, 17. (W.) See the notes on Rom. xv. 33.

The Lord be with you all.] The Apoſtle having before pray'd for peace, prays here for the preſence of God. Whence learn, That God's gracious preſence with his people, in any plentiful meaſure, is annex'd to their peaceable frame of ſpirit, and to their ſerious endeavours after peace and love, unity and concord, among themſelves; and the contrary ſpirit and temper grieves the good ſpirit of God, and provokes him to withdraw his quick'ning and comforting preſence from them. (B.)

The token in every Epiſtle.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 21. and Gal. vi. 11.

The grace of our Lord.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 24. and 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

Written from Athens.] This is a further proof, That theſe ſubſcriptions are added without good authority: For this, and the foregoing Epiſtle, were moſt probably not "written from Athens," but Corinth; as we have noted in their Prefaces.

The END of the Second Epiſtle of St. PAUL to the THESSALONIANS.

CRITICAL

ANNOTATIONS
Firſt Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the Apostle, TO TIMOTHY.

ALL that is neceſſary to be premiſed, in relation to this Epiſtle, may be briefly reduced to theſe four heads; The perſon to whom it was written, The place where, The time when, and The ſubject of it.

i. As to The perſon to whom it was written, viz. Timothy, we have an account, in the Holy Scriptures, That St. Paul found him at Lyſtra; and that his mother was a Jeweſs, but his father a Greek; (that is, a Gentile,) Acts xvi. 1. That this young diſciple, being "well reported of by the brethren" in thoſe parts, St. Paul took him "to go forth with him," in the ſervice of the Miniſtry; but firſt "circumciſed him, becauſe of the Jews, which were in thoſe quarters;" who, "knowing that his father was a Greek," might otherwiſe have been ſcandalized, ver. 2, 3. That Timothy, accompanying the Apoſtle in his travels thence through divers countries, was left behind (together with Silas) at Berea, while St. Paul himſelf proceeded to Athens, commanding them to follow him thither with all ſpeed, ch. xvii. 14, 15. That accordingly, they did come to him while he ſtay'd at Athens; and were from thence ſent back again, with certain inſtructions to the Theſſalonians; as may be gather'd from 1 Theſſ. iii. 1. That when they return'd, they found the Apoſtle at Corinth, Acts xviii. 5. where, having aſſiſted him in preaching the Goſpel, 1 Cor. i. 19. he join'd them both with himſelf, in the inſcription of his Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians, 1 Theſſ. i. 1. and 2 Theſſ. i. 1. That, after this, Timothy was ſent again into Macedonia, accompanied with Eraſtus, with freſh inſtructions from the Apoſtle, during his abode at Epheſus, ch. xix. 22. Whether he came back again before St. Paul himſelf came to Macedonia, St. Luke does not tell us, tho' 'tis probable he did: But we find him there again afterwards, in the Apoſtle's company, at his return from thence, by way of Troas, before his journey towards Jeruſalem, ch. xx. 4. What farther lights we have, into the paſſages of his life, from the Holy Scriptures, are briefly, That he was diſpatch'd from Epheſus, with the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians; as appears, not only from the note at the end of it (which alone indeed, as we have often obſerv'd, is of little authority,) but is intimated in the Epiſtle it ſelf, ch. xvi. 10. That he was with St. Paul at Philippi, when he wrote the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians; as is evident from his being join'd with him in the authoritative inſcription of it, 2 Cor. i. 1. That he was with him alſo at Corinth, as a work-fellow, or fellow-labourer, when he wrote that to the Romans, ch. xvi. 21. As he was alſo at Rome, when he wrote thoſe to the Philippians, ch. i. 1. to the Coloſſians, ch. i. 1. and to Philemon, ver. 1. And there is mention made of him, Heb. xiii. 23. as being then "ſet at liberty;" whence we may conclude, that he had been ſome time a priſoner for the Goſpel, and probably at Rome, together with St. Paul. We find alſo the names of "his grandmother Lois, and his mother Eunice;" and thoſe commemorated with honour by St. Paul, for their "unfeigned faith," 2 Tim. i. 5. And Timothy himſelf is never mention'd by him, but in terms of high commendation. That he was ordained very young into the Miniſtry of Chriſt, is evident from this, that even after St. Paul had made him Biſhop of Epheſus, he ſpeaks yet of his youth, ch. iv. 12. But as to the particular time when he was ſo conſtituted, we have very little certainty, but only that it plainly appears to have been at the Apoſtle's departure from Epheſus into Macedonia, ch. i. 3. which will be farther diſcuſs'd in the notes on that text.

ii. That tho' there is a wide difference among Chronologers, concerning the time of writing this Epiſtle, it ſeems, by the ſubject of it, to have been, not long after the Apoſtle had committed to Timothy that Epiſcopal charge of the Church of Epheſus: And therefore the beſt conjecture may be made of this, when we have firſt ſtated the opinions of the learned concerning that other; which we ſhall endeavour to do, in the notes upon ch. i. 3.

iii. That tho', in the Poſt-ſcript note to this Epiſtle, it is ſaid to have been "written from Laodicea, which is the chief city of Phrygia Pacatiana;" yet that note ſeems to be as groundleſs, as ſeveral others of 'em have been prov'd to be. For (as Dr. Hammond obſerves, from Cujacius) that note of ſubſcription could not have been ancient; ſince Phrygia was not known under the diſtinction of Pacatiana and Salutaris, earlier than the time of Conſtantine: And beſides, it appears from Col. ii. 1. That St. Paul had not been at all at Laodicea, when he wrote that Epiſtle; which yet is generally believ'd to have been written ſome years after this to Timothy. Conſidering therefore, that St. Paul was going into Macedonia, when he conſtituted Timothy Biſhop of Epheſus, ch. i. 3. that Timothy was ſtill a youth, when this was ſent to him, ch. iv. 12. and that the ſubject of it was to inſtruct him how to carry himſelf in that his new dignity, it ſeems to me moſt probable, that it was written to him ſoon after the Apoſtle arriv'd in Macedonia. For,

iv. As to the ſubject, it is anſwerable to the eminent parts and gifts of the great author. For, 1. As an Apoſtle, he puts him in mind of his charge, ch. i. 3, 4, 18, 19. he preſcribeth canons, concerning public prayer, ch. ii. 1. to ver. 9. concerning the habit and behaviour of women in the church, ver. 9, &c. concerning the office and qualities of Biſhops and Deacons, and their wives, ch. iii. 1. to ver. 16. concerning the rebuking and cenſuring offenders, ch. v. 1. to ver. 9. and ver. 19, 20. concerning the choice, and proviſion for widows, ver. 9. to ver. 17. concerning the ordination and maintenance of Miniſters, ver. 17, 18, 22. concerning the duty of ſervants, ch. vi. 1, 2. and the particular charge of the rich, ver. 17, 18, 19. 2. As a Prophet, he foretels the apoſtaſy of many in the latter times; whoſe deviliſh doctrine he relates and confutes, ch. iv. 1. to ver. 6. And, 3. As a paſtor, he teacheth the right end and uſe of the law, and the main ſcope alſo of the Goſpel, ch. i. 5. to ver. 18. The doctrine of the Church, and the bleſſed truth therein profeſs'd, ch. iii. 16. And the right uſe of all the creatures ch. iv. 3, 4, 5. And exhorteth to a proficiency in his miniſterial function, ch. iv. 6, &c. And to conſtancy in his profeſſion; obſerving his precepts, avoiding all profane babbling, and continuing in the ſimplicity of true doctrine, ch. vi. 3, &c. Whith ſeveral canons, injunctions, and precepts, are alſo a direction to all other Biſhops and Paſtors, how to govern themſelves, and how to guide their people.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle puts Timothy in mind of his charge: Declares the right uſe and end of the law: His own calling to the Apoſtleſhip; and the Apoſtaſy of Hymeneus and Alexander.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. PAUL an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which is our hope; unto Timothy, my own ſon in the faith: Grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. As I beſought thee to abide ſtill at Epheſus when I went into Macedonia, that thou mighteſt charge ſome that they teach no other doctrine. Neither give heed to fables, and endleſs genealogies, which miniſter queſtions, rather than godly edifying, which is in faith: So do.

Paul, an Apoſtle.] Obſerve here, 1. St. Paul aſſerts his apoſtolical authority, calling himſelf an Apoſtle: Not that Timothy queſtioned it, but he writes it for their ſakes over whom he was now preſiding at Epheſus; that neither Miniſters nor People might deſpiſe what Timothy did; it being enjoined both him and them by ſo great an authority as was that of an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt. 2. What authority St. Paul had for executing this office of an Apoſtle: It was "by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jeſus Chriſt;" that is, by the appointment, injunction, ordination, and immediate commiſſion of Chriſt, by his voice from heaven, as the reſt of the Apoſtles were called by a voice from Chriſt on earth: In 1 Cor. i. 1. he is ſaid to be called "by the will of God;" not by his permiſſive will barely, but by his preceptive will particularly. 3. The title given to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: He is ſtiled "our hope;" that is, the author of our hope, the object of our hope, the purchaſer of what we hope for, the declarer to us of the hopes of glory expected by us. Where note, That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is undoubtedly and undeniably God, becauſe he is our hope and truſt: If he were no more than a man, tho' never ſo excelling, to make him our hope would be to make ourſelves miſerable; for "curſed is the man that truſteth in man, and maketh man his hope," Jer. xvii. 5. (B.) See the notes on Acts ix. 15. and xiii. 2, &c. 1 Cor. i. 1. and Gal. i. 1, 15.

Unto Timothy.] See what account is given of him in the Preface.

My own ſon in the faith.] Obſerve here, 1. That endearing title, which the Apoſtle gives to Timothy; my ſon, my own ſon, "my own ſon in the faith;" becauſe he was, as ſome think, converted by him to the Chriſtian faith; others, that he was more thoroughly inſtructed, edified, and encouraged by St. Paul, but converted before: Poſſibly alſo he may call him his ſon, becauſe he was as aſſiſting to him, as obſequious and obſerving of him, as a ſon is to a father; he being a young man, and the Apoſtle now aged: Or it may be he calls him his ſon, becauſe he reſembled him in faith and doctrine, in preaching and converſation, as a ſon reſembles a father in face and manners. Conſider Timothy as a ſpiritual ſon to St. Paul, begotten to the faith by him; and then the note is this, That the miniſters of Chriſt cannot but bear a fervent and affectionate love to thoſe that are their ſpiritual children, their "ſons in the faith," and converted to Chriſt by their miniſtry: Conſider him as an aſſiſtant to St. Paul, a co-worker and fellow-labourer with him in the work of the Goſpel, and thus affectionately beloved by him; and we may learn for our inſtruction how fervently the miniſters of Chriſt ſhould love one another, ſpeak reſpectfully of each other, ſecure the reputation one of another, ſtrengthen each other's hands, encourage each other's hearts in the work of God. We have little, God knows, very little love from the world: Lord! how ſad is it that we ſhould yet have leſs one for another? See how the heart of St. Paul and his aſſiſtant Timothy were knit together in love, like father and ſon, to the great reputation, as well as the ſucceſsful furtherance of the Goſpel. (B.) This phraſe here, compar'd with 1 Cor. iv. 14, 15. Phil. ii. 22. and 2 Tim. i. 2. ſeem plainly to import, That Timothy was converted to the Chriſtian faith by St. Paul himſelf. 'Tis true, he is ſaid "from a child to have known the holy Scriptures," 2 Tim. iii. 15. Which is as true alſo of St. Paul, when yet he was no convert to the Chriſtian faith, but a zealous perſecutor of it: And tho' he was a diſciple, when St. Paul circumciſed him, and took him with him from Lyſtra, Acts xvi. 1. that hinders not, but he might be made ſo by St. Paul himſelf. (W.)

Grace, mercy, and peace.] See the notes on Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. and Gal. i. 3.

To abide ſtill at Epheſus.] The right underſtanding of this will enable us the better to judge of the time of St. Paul's writing this Epiſtle. In order to which we may obſerve, 1. That this verſe is by all underſtood of the time when the Apoſtle conſtituted Timothy Biſhop of Epheſus. 2. That St. Paul did thus conſtitute him, "when he went into Macedonia;" as he tells us himſelf here in the text; poreuomenos, when he was going, or preparing to go, thither. 3. That from the phraſe here uſed, with reſpect to Timothy, on that occaſion, (proſmeinai en Epheſo) "to abide ſtill at Epheſus," 'tis generally concluded to mean ſome time of St. Paul's going to Macedonia from Epheſus, and leaving Timothy there behind him. 4. That the holy Scriptures mention St. Paul to have been three ſeveral times in Macedonia, and as many at, or near, Epheſus. The firſt of which is recorded, Acts xvi. where we read, That St. Paul, having paſſed through Syria and Cilicia, came to Derbe and Lyſtra (in Lycaonia) whence he took Timothy to accompany him, ver. 1, &c. That from thence they went through Phrygia and Galatia, and came to Troas, ver. 6, &c. That here they were, when St. Paul, having had a viſion, calling him to "come over into Macedonia," ver. 9. they paſſed over accordingly, and preach'd the Goſpel there, both at Philippi, ver. 12. and at Theſſalonica, ch. xvii. 1, &c. And that they had not yet been at Epheſus, is evident, becauſe they "were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt to preach the word (as yet) in Aſia," ch. xvi. 6. that is, in the proconſular Aſia, of which Epheſus was the metropolis. After this we find the Apoſtle at Epheſus, ch. xviii. 19. in his way from Corinth towards Syria: But his ſtay there was very ſhort, being in great haſte; and from thence he ſailed (not towards Macedonia, but) to Cæſarea, (in Paleſtine) the ready way to Jeruſalem, ver. 22. But, ſome time after this, he came to Epheſus, a ſecond time, ch. xix. 1. where his ſtay was long, and his ſucceſs anſwerable, ver. 10, &c. which rais'd againſt him that uproar of the ſilverſmiths, mention'd ver. 23, &c. And now from hence "he departed for to go into Macedonia," ch. xx. 1. being the ſecond time alſo of his coming into that country: "And when he had gone over thoſe parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece," ver. 2. (that is, Achaia, or Greece properly ſo call'd, as diſtinguiſh'd from Macedonia, and Theſſaly, &c.) where he "abode three months," ver. 3. After this, intending to "ſail into Syria," with the contributions rais'd for the poor Chriſtians at Jeruſalem, he found that "the Jews laid wait for him," to rob and kill him by the way; whereupon he reſolv'd "to return through Macedonia," ver. 3, &c. which was the third (and, for ought appears, the laſt) time of his being there. For, at his departure thence, he paſſed by ſea, to Troas, ver. 6. and ſo along to Miletus, ver. 15. where he was attended, according to his order, by the Clergy of Epheſus, (not having leiſure to ſtop at that city;) ver. 16, 17. And when he had given them a ſolemn charge, and taken his laſt leave of them, ver. 18, &c. he proceeded to Jeruſalem; from whence he was, ſome time afterwards, ſent priſoner to Rome. Now, upon this ſtate of the caſe, there ſeems to me no difficulty to determine Timothy's being appointed Biſhop of Epheſus, to that point of time, when St. Paul was going from Epheſus to Macedonia, Acts xx. 1. which was the ſecond time of his being at each of thoſe places: And thus it is accordingly fix'd by Hammond, Lightfoot, Cave, and the Oxford Paraphraſt. But againſt this it is objected, 1. That St. Paul could not have exhorted Timothy "to abide ſtill at Epheſus," at any of the times here mention'd; and conſequently, not before his enlargement from his firſt impriſonment at Rome: Becauſe at the only time of St. Paul's going from Epheſus to Macedonia, Timothy was not with him at Epheſus; for St. Paul had "ſent him into Macedonia" already, Acts xix. 22: and therefore could not then exhort him "to abide ſtill at Epheſus." And, 2. That, after this, when St. Paul himſelf was in Macedonia, Timothy was alſo in thoſe parts, ch. xx. 4. and conſequently did not then abide at Epheſus. To which it is anſwer'd, 1. That tho' Timothy was ſent to Macedonia from Epheſus, it does not follow, that he ſtay'd there till the Apoſtle himſelf arriv'd. We may, with great probability conclude, that he return'd again to Epheſus before St. Paul left that place: Not only becauſe that ſame text informs us, that St. Paul "himſelf ſtayed in Aſia for a ſeaſon," ch. xix. 22. that is, ſome time after he had diſpatch'd Timothy to Macedonia; and how long that time might be, we do not know; (St. Luke telling us only, in few words, that in the whole he continued there, at leaſt, "the ſpace of two years," ver. 8, 9, 10.) for the word (chronon) which we tranſlate "for a ſeaſon," does not determine it to ſignify a ſhort time, rather than a long one: But moreover, becauſe 'tis plain, from 1 Cor. xvi. 11. (which Epiſtle was written from Epheſus, about that time, as we have prov'd in the Preface to it, and our notes on ver. 5. of the chapter laſt quoted) that he look'd for his return unto him thither. 2. That tho' Timothy was with St. Paul after his arrival in Macedonia, it does not follow, that he had not been at Epheſus when St. Paul left it, nor abode there ſome time after St. Paul came away. For, between St. Paul's leaving Epheſus, and Timothy's appearing with him again, (tho' ſpoken of by St. Luke in few words) there was a conſiderable ſpace of time, ſufficient for him to "go over thoſe parts, and give them much exhortation," Acts xx. 2. during which time it was, that he "preached the Goſpel round about unto Illyricum," Rom. xv. 19. And this, together with his "wintering at Nicopolis," Tit. iii. 12. and his "three months abode in Greece," Acts xx. 3. gave opportunity enough for Timothy, to ſettle the affairs of his Church, on ſuch a foot, as to ſpare him for ſo ſhort a time as he ſeems now to have been abſent from it: For, tho' we find he was with St. Paul, when he wrote the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, as well as that to the Romans, (as is noted in the Preface) yet was this but juſt before their ſetting out towards Jeruſalem, by the way of Miletus, from whence Timothy is ſuppoſed to have returned to his charge at Epheſus. And 3. That it is nothing unreaſonable to ſuppoſe, either that Timothy might have found ſome occaſion for a perſonal conſultation of the Apoſtle, concerning the affairs of his Church, when the voyage was ſo ſhort and eaſy; or that he might attend him in obedience to ſome ſummons; ſuch as we know he had, for a much longer journey, even to Rome, 2 Tim. iv. 9. Upon the whole matter therefore, I cannot ſee any ſufficient reaſon to doubt, That Timothy's appointment to the See of Epheſus (referr'd to here) was made by St. Paul juſt before he left that place to go into Macedonia the ſecond time; viz. that which is recorded Acts xx. 1. And that this Epiſtle was written to him very ſoon after the Apoſtle arriv'd in Macedonia; that is, about A. D. 55. tho' ſeveral very learned authors have thought fit to date it about ten years later. See the notes on ch. iii. 14. and iv. 12. Acts xv. 32. xvi. 1, &c. and xx. 17. Rom. xv. 19. 2 Cor. i. 1. Col. ii. 1. Tit. iii. 12. and Heb. xiii. 23:

Charge ſome, that they teach.] The chief paſtors of the Church, who were endued with Apoſtolical authority, as Timothy was, are to forbid any to preach, not only doctrine that is contrary, but other than, or beſide, that which the faithful have receiv'd from the Apoſtles. (Aſſ.) Heterodidaſcalein, is to teach other doctrine, either for matter or manner, ſubſtance or circumſtance. (Leigh) Hence it appears, that not the Apoſtles only, but the Biſhops alſo, ſuch as Timothy and Titus, had their Eccleſiaſtical courts, to "receive accuſations," ch. v. 19. to charge their Clergy to "teach no other doctrine," or, if they did teach things which they ought not, to "ſtop their mouths," Tit. i. 11. All which are to be expounded of judicial proceedings in the Biſhop's conſiſtory; and therefore argue a juriſdiction in Timothy and Titus, which (if we believe the Scriptures) they receiv'd from St: Paul, and not from St. Peter. Wherefore we conclude, that St. Peter was not the only fountain under Chriſt of ſpiritual juriſdiction, by law divine; and therefore much leſs the Pope. (Maſon) See the notes on Gal. i. 6, &c.

Neither give heed to fables.] He ſpeaks here of thoſe who from Judaiſm came over to Chriſtianity, and mix'd their Jewiſh fables with the Chriſtian doctrine: Such as thoſe, who pretended to tell, How God employ'd himſelf before he created this world, &c. (G.) The doctrine of faith is corrupted, not only by falſe opinions, but alſo by vain and curious ſpeculations, which no way tend to godly edifying. (Aſſ.)

And endleſs genealogies.] Not thoſe mention'd in Scripture, which have their uſe, and are determinate: But perhaps ſome queſtions upon them; or endeavours of particular perſons to prove themſelves ſons of Abraham and Iſaac; privileges they much valued. (Fell, B. and Fox) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 20.

Rather than.] Mallon e: That is, They "miniſter queſtions, and not godly edifying;" comparative particles, and eſpecially this of (mallon) rather, as the grammarians note, being often in their ſenſe poſitively negatives; as Luke xviii. 14. John iii. 19. and elſewhere. (W.)

So do.] Theſe words are not in the original, but ſupplied by our Tranſlators, to complete the ſenſe: But thus they ſeem to reinforce the Apoſtle's former exhortation to Timothy "to abide ſtill at Epheſus," till he ſhould come thither to him. Beza ſupplies it with the word vide; ſee that you charge, &c. Dr. Whitby paraphraſes it with the ſupplement thus: "As I beſought thee to abide (ſome time) at Epheſus," &c. ſo, I did it, "that thou mightſt charge ſome," &c. leaving it uncertain, whether Timothy ſtill abode at Epheſus or not. But the Oxford Paraphraſt thinks the ſenſe ſuſpended, till, ver. 18. where it is completed, "This charge I commit unto thee," &c. as if all that intervenes from ver. 4. to 18. were in a parentheſis.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conſcience, and of faith unfeigned: From which ſome having ſwerved, have turned aſide unto vain jangling; deſiring to be teachers of the law, underſtanding neither what they ſay, nor whereof they affirm. But we know that the law is good, if a man uſe it lawfully; knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawleſs and diſobedient, for the ungodly and for ſinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for man-ſlayers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themſelves with mankind, for men-ſtealers, for liars, for perjured perſons; and if there be any other thing that is contrary to ſound doctrine, according to the glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God, which was committed to my truſt. And I thank Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the miniſtery; who was before a blaſphemer, and a perſecutor, and injurious. But I obtained mercy, becauſe I did it ignorantly in unbelief: And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant, with faith, and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus. This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners; of whom I am chief. Howbeit, for this cauſe I obtained mercy, that in me firſt Jeſus Chriſt might ſhew forth all long-ſuffering, for a pattern to them which ſhould hereafter believe on him to life everlaſting. Now unto the king eternal, immortal, inviſible, the only wiſe God, be honour and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

The end of the commandment.] That is, The aim, the ſcope, the deſign, the perfection and conſummation; the perfecting end: The meaning is, That all the duties, which the law of God, and the Goſpel of Chriſt, do enjoin, are deſign'd only as means to advance and perfect our love both to God and man. (B.) Whereas the doctrine of thoſe teachers before ſpoken of tends only to breed diſſenſion. (G.) See the notes on John xiii. 34. Rom. iii. 31. x. 4. and xiii. 8, &c.

Charity, out of.] Here the Apoſtle himſelf gives us one genealogy, to wit, that of charity; to ſhew, that all genealogies are not uſeleſs. From faith unfeigned proceeds a good conſcience, that is, abſtaining from ſin: Hence proceeds a pure heart; and from this again proceeds charity, love and peace. (G.)

Turned aſide unto vain jangling.] When once men depart from theſe ſubſtantial duties, and let go faith and charity, purity of heart, and a good conſcience, they commonly take up with meer ſhadows, and buſy themſelves in endleſs diſputations, about things which profit not. (Downes) See the notes on ver. 4.

The law is good.] Leſt any ſhould have apprehended, from the reflection he made upon the teachers of the law, in the foregoing verſe, that he did diſparage and undervalue the law it ſelf, our Apoſtle in this verſe declares, that the law, rightly underſtood and preached, was very good, given for, and ſerves unto excellent purpoſes, if we uſe it lawfully; that is, as we ought to uſe it, as God intended it; namely, as a perfect rule of life to direct us in our obedience to God: But not ſo good as to expect juſtification by it; not good in oppoſition to the Goſpel, but in ſubſerviency to the Goſpel: "The law is good if uſed lawfully." Obſerve here, 1. Something implied; namely, that the law of God may be uſed unlawfully: But how and when may it be ſaid ſo to be? Anſw. When it is converted to unprofitable diſputes; as was the caſe here, when men oppoſe it to Chriſt, when they ſeek juſtification by it, and the like. 2. Something expreſſed; namely, That the law of God, conſidered in it ſelf, is good and excellent: 'Tis good in regard of its author, it hath the authority of God inſtamp'd upon it; good in regard of the matter contained in it, good in regard of the end of it, to lead us unto Chriſt, Rom. x 4. "Chriſt is the end of the law;" good in regard of the uſe of it; and that, 1. To the ungodly; to reſtrain them from ſin, to convince them of ſin, to condemn them for ſin. 2. To the godly; to diſcover ſin more clearly and more fully, to drive them out of themſelves, and from all expectation of righteouſneſs and juſtification by any thing in themſelves, or done by themſelves; to cauſe them to put the higher value, eſteem, and price upon Jeſus Chriſt, and the benefits received by him. Thus "the law is good:" And if ſo, wo to the Antinomians, who deny the uſe and excellency of the holy law of God, who vilify it, trample upon it, and becauſe it is not good for juſtification, affirm it is not good at all: What, is not gold good, becauſe you cannot eat it for food? It was never intended for that purpoſe: Is not obedience to the law, as an eternal rule of holy living, and good works agreeable to the demands of the law, neceſſary and good, tho' they never had the impreſs of God's ordination for our juſtification in his ſight, he having provided a perfect and ſpotleſs righteouſneſs for that purpoſe, which is highly pleaſing to him? Lord! in the day when thou ſhalt come to plead with the world for tranſgreſſing thy law, how ſhall theſe men, who with tongue and pen have cried down the uſe and excellencies of thy law, ſhew their heads before thee? (B.) See the notes on Rom. iii. 31. and vii. 12. 1 Cor. vi. 7. and Gal. iii. 24.

Not made for a righteous man.] There have been ſome ſo groſly wild, as from hence to fancy, that good men are not ſubject to the law of God. But the moral law, which is here underſtood, equally regards all men; and the direction given here, ver. 5. concerns the godly more than the wicked. 'Twas therefore eaſy to have obſerv'd, with Beza, that the authors of the New Teſtament do make uſe of the dative, in the ſame ſenſe as the Hebrews uſe it after the prepoſition Lamed, to ſignify the Engliſh particle againſt; as in Matth. x. 18. and Mark xiii. 9. where the ſame conſtruction is uſed in the original, as in the text before us. Wherefore, ſome learned men have very well render'd it thus, The law is not made againſt a righteous man, but againſt the lawleſs," &c. in the ſame ſenſe as Ariſtotle ſays, That the law is not againſt the virtuous, becauſe the virtuous are a law to themſelves. (Eſſay) See the notes on Rom. v. 20. and xiii. 3. and Gal. iii. 19.

But for the lawleſs, &c.] From this enumeration of offenders againſt the law, we learn, that the Apoſtle is here ſpeaking of the moral law contain'd in the Ten Commandments: For the ſins here contain'd reſpect them; The ungodly being ſinners againſt the firſt commandment; the (hamartoloi) ſinners, as that word ſignifies the idolatrous Gentiles, Gal. ii. 15. the tranſgreſſors of the ſecond; the perjured perſons, of the third; the unholy and profane, of the fourth; the murderers of fathers and mothers, of the fifth; the man-ſlayers, of the ſixth; the whoremongers, and thoſe who defile themſelves with mankind, of the ſeventh; the men-ſtealers, of the eighth; the liars, of the ninth; and the following general words, "If there be any other thing that is contrary to ſound doctrine according to the glorious Goſpel," muſt neceſſarily comprehend all the tranſgreſſions of the tenth. Note alſo, That (pornoi) whoremongers being here reckon'd among thoſe who commit ſins againſt the law of nature, or the moral law, as (porneia) fornication, or whoredom, is, Rom. i. 29. and among the manifeſt works of the fleſh, Gal. v. 19. yea, among thoſe things, for which "the wrath of God cometh upon the children of diſobedience," or unbelief, that is, the Heathens, Eph. v. 3, &c. for which men are to be excluded from "the kingdom of God," 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. and Rev. xxii. 15. and to be caſt into "the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone," Rev. xxi. 8. it is to be wonder'd, that this ſin ſhould be ſo generally committed by ſome, and pleaded for by others, who are call'd Chriſtians. (W.) See the notes on Rom. i. 24, &c. and 1 Cor. vi. 13, &c.

Counted me faithful.] See the notes on Acts ix. 15. and xxvi. 11. and 1 Cor. iv. 2. and vii. 25.

Who was before, a blaſphemer, &c.] Note here, 1. What a prodigious ſinner St. Paul repreſents himſelf before converſion. "I was a blaſphemer, perſecutor, and injurious:" A blaſphemer, the higheſt ſin he could commit againſt God; a perſecutor, the higheſt ſin he could commit againſt the Saints; injurious, the higheſt wickedneſs toward mankind: Sins of ſuch an aggravated and accumulated guilt, that they wanted but one ingredient, namely, ſufficient knowledge, to render them the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. Be aſtoniſhed, O heavens, at the great and infinite mercy of God toward great ſinners! even perſecutors aud blaſphemers may be, and ſometimes are, converted and brought home to God. 2. The reaſon aſſigned by him, why ſuch diſtinguiſhing mercy was diſpenſed to him; "he obtained mercy becauſe he did it ignorantly in unbelief:" The word becauſe doth not import or imply, that ignorance in the Apoſtle was the proper cauſe of mercy in God, but that it made St. Paul a more capable ſubject for receiving mercy, than he ſhould have been if he had maliciouſly ſinned againſt knowledge: Not that St. Paul by leſs ſinning did merit the mercy of God, but his ignorance and unbelief, being in a ſort invincible, through the prejudices of education, they did much abate the malignity of his ſin; for he was bred a Phariſee, which was a ſect that had an implacable enmity againſt Chriſt and his holy religion. Laſtly, The end and deſign of St. Paul in relating that his bitter perſecution of Chriſtianity was in the time of his ignorance, and not done deliberately, knowingly, and maliciouſly; partly to juſtify the Divine mercy and free grace of God which pardoned his fury, his rage and madneſs againſt Chriſt and his Saints; for had he done thus deliberately and maliciouſly, for ſecular ends and worldly advantages, it had been the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which was unpardonable; and partly he mentions his ignorance to prevent the abuſe of the Divine mercy in men, and to let the world know, that none ought to take encouragement from his example, and yet hope for mercy, when at the ſame time they ſin againſt light and knowledge. (B.) See the notes on Luke xv. 21. and xxiii. 34. Acts iii. 17. viii. 3. ix. 1, &c. and 1 Cor. ii. 8. and more again here, on ver. 15.

Faith and love.] Here note, That St. Paul, after his converſion, excell'd abundantly in thoſe graces, which were oppoſite and contrary to the ſins committed in his carnal and unregenerate ſtate; in faith, in oppoſition to his former unbelief; and in love, in oppoſition to his former rage and cruelty. Whence learn, That a Chriſtian's fruitfulneſs in grace and holineſs after his converſion ought to bear ſome proportion to his unfruitfulneſs in a ſinful ſtate before his converſion. (B.) See the notes on Luke vii. 47. and Rom. v. 20.

To ſave ſinners.] Here we may obſerve, 1. The moſt comfortable doctrine, "That Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners." Wherein we learn, 1. That the long promiſed Meſſiah is "come into the world:" 2. That "Chriſt Jeſus" was that Meſſiah: 3. That "Chriſt Jeſus" had an exiſtence before he "came into this world," his Divine nature pre-exiſting from all eternity; and, in the fulneſs of time, he aſſum'd the human nature into an union with the Godhead. 4. That the deſign of his coming being "to ſave ſinners," it is concluded, that if man had not ſinn'd, Chriſt had not "come into the world;" there being no need of a Mediator, where there is no breach; no need of a phyſician, where there is no diſeaſe. (W. and B.) Obſerve, 2. That, as the end of his coming was "to ſave ſinners;" ſo we have this encouragement, That he came to ſave even the chief of ſinners, upon their repentance: For he commanded this to be preached "among all nations," Luke xxiv. 47. that is, to all the world, and every perſon in it; excluding none from ſalvation, who will embrace the terms of it. (Frank, Comb. and W.) 3. That the certainty of this is here affirm'd by St. Paul, who had found the experience of it, and was himſelf ſo great an inſtance thereof, that he thinks, ver. 16. no ſinner will ever deſpair, that can but conſider how great an offender he was, and yet that "he obtained mercy:" Whereupon he doth, with great confidence, aſſert this, as a tried and infallible maxim; and, becauſe all men have ſinned, he propounds it as a truth, which every man is concern'd to receive as unqueſtionably, and believe as firmly, as the Cabala was among the ſcholars of the Jewiſh Rabbins. (H. Frank, and Comb.) But then, 4. We are to obſerve a three-fold caution; 1. Againſt thoſe who are ſo much againſt Chriſt's ſaving any body but themſelves, that they will allow him neither to ſave, nor to "come to ſave" any body but the elect. 'Tis true indeed, he ſaves none but thoſe who are, and ſhall be, ſaved; but he "came to ſave" even thoſe too who ſhall not be ſaved: "Not for our ſins only, but alſo for the ſins of the whole world," 1 John ii. 2. And it is neither a true, nor faithful ſaying, nor much worthy of acceptation, (however many receivers it has) that ſays otherwiſe, and binds up his coming only to the elect. (Frank. and W.) 2. Tho' the conſideration, "that Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners" is full of comfort, we ought to take care, that we neither deceive our ſelves, nor ſuffer our ſelves to be deceived by others, in this matter. If we repent of, and turn from, our ſins; if, by the ſpirit and power of Jeſus Chriſt, we are rais'd from the death of ſin to the life of righteouſneſs; if we endeavour to ſerve and pleaſe God, by living a new and a holy life, we cannot think too highly of, nor aſcribe too much to, the grace and mercy of God, in Chriſt Jeſus: But if we are impenitent and obſtinate; if we live and continue to live in known and wilful ſin, we do but deceive our ſelves, by thinking that our condition will be at all better'd by the coming of Jeſus Chriſt into the world; For ſuch a behaviour is a full proof, that we are "workers of iniquity," whom our Saviour and judge will hereafter bid to depart from him. (Fox) And, 3. That we are much miſtaken, if we imagine, that the Apoſtle here ſtiles himſelf the greateſt of ſinners: Nor does what he ſays, ver. 13. amount to ſuch an acknowledgment. The crime he accuſes himſelf of, was, that he perſecuted the Church of Chriſt. And this he did not do againſt his knowledge; but, as he tells us, Acts xxvi. 9. He "verily thought with himſelf, that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jeſus of Nazareth." He did not profane the name of God; nor was he what we mean by a profligate perſon: No; except in this inſtance, for which he ſo highly accuſes himſelf, he liv'd, before his converſion to Chriſtianity, a blameleſs, and exemplary life; for he "lived in all good conſcience before God," ch. xxiii. 1. "His manner of life, from his youth, was after the ſtricteſt ſect of their religion, a Phariſee," ch. xxvi. 4, 5. His meaning therefore cannot be, that he was the greateſt of ſinners; but that he was (protos) one of the firſt, or chief, of thoſe ſinners whom Jeſus Chriſt did ſave; a remarkable inſtance of divine mercy; that he "obtained mercy, that in him firſt Jeſus Chriſt might ſhew forth all long-ſuffering, for a pattern to them who ſhould hereafter believe on him to life everlaſting," ver. 16. The common expoſition therefore of this place, that St. Paul acknowledges himſelf the greateſt of ſinners, is neither conſiſtent with truth, or piety, or good ſenſe. See Mr. Oſtervald, of the Cauſes of the preſent corruption of Chriſtians, part i. cap. 4. (Idem) See Biſhop Griff. Williams's, and Dr. Frank's Sermons, and a Diſcourſe of Mr. Laur. Sarſon's, on this text; and the ſeveral notes on Mark ii. 17. Luke v. 32. xix. 10, 42. and xxiv. 47. and Acts xxiii. 1. and xxvi. 9.

Now unto the king.] See the notes on John i. 18. and Rom i. 23. and xvi. 27.

Ver. 18, 19, 20. This charge I commit unto thee, ſon Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mighteſt war a good warfare, holding faith, and a good conſcience; which ſome having put away, concerning faith have made ſhipwrack. Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaſpheme.

This charge I commit.] Viz. Either that mention'd ver. 3, 4. that none ſhould be permitted to "teach other doctrine, or give heed to fables," &c. Or this of "holding the faith and a good conſcience," againſt all oppoſition; Or, probably, both together.

According to the prophecies.] That the Apoſtles received frequent revelations, and never more diſtinctly and frequently than to this matter of deſigning Biſhops and governors of the Church, may appear by many places. Thus, concerning Paul and Barnabas, the text is diſtinct, Acts xiii. 2. "The Holy Spirit ſaid, Separate to me Barnabas and Paul for the work to which I have called them;" and ſo here of Timothy, and ch. iv. 14. For that by prophecy here is meant ſuch revelation, may appear by comparing 1 Cor. xiv. 21. with ver. 30. for there what is propheteuein, to propheſy, in the former place, and ver. 31. is apocalyphthenai auto, to receive a revelation, in the latter. To this ſenſe St. Chryſoſtome and Theophylact are clear, ſaying, The dignity of being a doctor and a prieſt being a great one, wants God's ſuffrage, that a worthy perſon may receive it; thereupon the prieſts were made anciently by prophecies, that is, by the Holy Ghoſt. Thus Timothy was choſen to the prieſthood; that is, his epiſcopacy. And ſo generally 'tis ſaid of the Biſhops of Aſia, that "the Holy Ghoſt had ſet them over the flock," Acts xx, 28. Thus ſaith Clemens Romanus, of the Apoſtles, that at their firſt preaching in every region and city, They conſtituted their firſt fruits, making trial and judgment of them by the ſpirit, into Biſhops and Deacons: And again, Having received perfect foreknowledge, (that is, revelation or prophecys) they conſtituted the forementioned Biſhops and Deacons; and not only ſo for the preſent, but for the next courſe or ſucceſſion; for ſo ſaith he, Afterward they gave order, that if thoſe whom they had conſtituted ſhould die, other men that were approved (by the ſpirit alſo) ſhould undertake their miniſtry, or employment. So ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus of St. John, That in Aſia he conſtituted Biſhops, ſometimes made up whole Churches, ſometimes ordained ſome certain perſons, ſuch as were ſignified to him by the Spirit. That this ſhould thus be done in the Apoſtles time, beſides the will of God, there is this reaſon alſo diſcernible, becauſe in the firſt preaching of the faith to any city or region, performed by the Apoſtles in their journeys, as it was neceſſary that the Apoſtle, before he went away from them, ſhould leave a governor among them, ſo it was not poſſible in ſo ſhort a ſtay as ordinarily was made after the converſion of ſome in a city, to diſcern by any humane means, who of thoſe new converts would be fit for that employment; and ſo this rendred it very neceſſary that the Apoſtles, either by the diſcerning ſpirit, which they had extraordinarily beſtowed on them, or by particular revelation, ſhould thus make deſignation of the perſons. But after, when Churches were ſettled, and men had continued in the faith ſo long as to give teſtimony of their ſincerity and abilities to qualify them for that office, there was not that need of revelation in this matter, humane means being in ſome meaſure ſufficient to direct in it. And accordingly, by the qualifications which St. Paul names to Timothy and Titus, in their ordaining Biſhops in every Church, it is evident, that they made Biſhops upon obſervation and experience of mens behaviour and abilities, and upon the teſtimonials of the brethren, (and therefore were forbid to make a novice Biſhop, that is, one lately converted, 1 Tim. iii. 6. becauſe of him they could not have this experience, or theſe teſtimonies) and were not afforded divine revelation in it, or any thing proportionable to that. (H.) See the notes on Acts viii. 29. xiii. 1. and xx. 28. and 1 Cor. xii. 10.

War a good warfare.] Viz. As a Chriſtian, againſt the world, the fleſh, and the Devil; and as a faithful Miniſter of Chriſt, againſt all falſe Apoſtles, and corrupters of the true faith. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Cor. x. 4. and Eph. vi. 13.

Hymeneus and Alexander.] Hymeneus is noted, 2 Tim. ii. 18. for diſputing away the doctrine of the reſurrection. Who Alexander was, is not known, unleſs it was the copper-ſmith mention'd 2 Tim. iv. 14. See the notes there.

Delivered unto Satan.] Viz. By eccleſiaſtical excommunication. See the notes on 1 Cor. v. 5, &c.

The duty of praying and thankſgiving for all men; eſpecially for kings, and all in authority: And the habit, and duty of women.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. I Exhort therefore, that firſt of all, ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and giving of thanks be made for all men: For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſs and honeſty. For this is good and acceptable in the ſight of God our Saviour: Who will have all men to be ſaved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. For there is one God, and one mediator, between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus: Who gave himſelf a ranſom for all, to be teſtified in due time. Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an Apoſtle, (I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt, and lie not) a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity. I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting.

I exhort therefore.] The word (paracalo) which we here render exhort, properly ſignifieth to call upon another; and is often uſed in Polybius, to expreſs a commander's encouraging his ſoldiers to battle. Thus St. Paul, the Apoſtle, being a leader in the Church militant, animateth Chriſtians to fight; but with no other weapons but prayers. Suidas obſerves, that the word ſignifies not only to exhort, but to intreat: And accordingly, 'tis often elſewhere tranſlated I beſeech. So deſirous is this Apoſtle that this duty of prayer ſhould be obſerv'd, that he prays for the performance of it. Indeed elſewhere, ch. v. 21. his word is I charge, and here, ver. 8. I will; which phraſes ſeem moſt ſuitable to an Apoſtle. But, the truth is, both theſe ways of expreſſion are very congruous, and have their peculiar emphaſis. I charge, and I will, are words which juſtify his authority; I exhort, or beſeech, teſtify his humility: Thoſe ſerve to ſet home upon the conſcience, and theſe to win upon the affections; and finally, both ariſe from the zeal of his ſpirit, and argue a great deal of vehemency. (Hardy)

Supplications, prayers, &c.] The writers on this place have diſtinguiſh'd, with ſome exactneſs, between ſupplications, prayers, and interceſſions, and endeavour'd to give us the ſtrict and proper ſenſe of each of theſe words; which, I think, it is neither neceſſary, nor eaſy, to determine. Sure we are, that by all theſe together the Apoſtle intended to expreſs the petitionary part of our devotions; and by giving of thanks, the other part, which conſiſts of hymns and praiſes. Theſe two comprize the whole of our religious ſervice; and in both theſe ways we are exhorted to addreſs our ſelves to God "for kings, and for all that are in authority." (Atterb.)

Giving of thanks.] It can ſcarce be thought reaſonable, that St. Paul ſhould charge Chriſtians to give thanks for ſuch prodigies of vice and tyranny, as then ſway'd the Roman empire; much leſs, that thanks ſhould be given "for all men," without diſtinction, for the enemies and perſecutors of Chriſtianity: But it was indeed proper to offer the Euchariſt, the Chriſtian ſacrifice, even for their moſt bitter enemies, That God might convert them, or bring them to a better mind, that ſo Chriſtians "might lead quiet and peaceable lives." The very name (Euchariſt) implies it to be a ſacrifice of thanks for all real bleſſings: And it is alſo, by virtue of the perſonal ſacrifice of Chriſt, a means of averting of evil. (Johnſ.)

For all men.] That is, all kinds of men; Jews and Gentiles, bond and free, faithful and infidel, friends and enemies, great and ſmall, publick and private. (Aſſ.) And the reaſon of this duty is here given, ver. 4. Becauſe "God, our Saviour, will have (or wills) all men to be ſaved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth:" And, ver. 6. Becauſe "Chriſt Jeſus gave himſelf a ranſom for all? (White) See the notes on ch. i. 15. Luke xxiii. 34. and Acts vii. 60.

Good and acceptable] This is given by the Apoſtle, as a reaſon enforcing the duty which he here requires of us, That it "is good, and acceptable, in the ſight of God our Saviour." Now, that our prayers may be ſo, 'tis required, that we pray with faith, for things lawful in themſelves, according to the rule of God's word, and to the glory of God; of which conditions, if any one be wanting, our prayers do thereby become evil. (Maſon) But prayers, or thankſgivings, for powers which are not lawful and rightful, but an uſurpation upon right and authority, do want all theſe conditions; Therefore ſuch prayers and thankſgivings cannot be "good and acceptable in the ſight of God:" Nay (as Bp. Burnet, before quoted, truly ſays) they are an impious profanation of the name of God, if that for which we pray, or bleſs God, be unlawful. From whence we may further conclude, that ſuch prayers or thankſgivings could never be intended by the inſpired Apoſtle, when he commands us to pray, and give thanks, "for Kings, and for all that are in authority."

Will have all men to be ſaved.] Hence we may learn, 1. That it is not only all ſorts of men, that God and Chriſt deſire ſhould be ſaved; but our Lord willed, together with his Father, the ſalvation of all men, in general, ſo far as to make a ſacrifice ſufficient for all, if they repent and believe, and to offer a general pardon to all, on condition of acceptance, and to ſend his Miniſters amongſt all with the word of reconciliation, accompanying it with an hearty deſire that all would accept of it. In ſhort, what Chriſt offereth to all, he undoubtedly purchaſed for all: But he offers to all, pardon and life, upon condition of acceptance; Therefore he is ſo far willing that all men ſhould be ſaved. 3. The means and method by which, and in which, God would have all men to be ſaved; namely, by "coming to the knowledge of the truth:" It is evidently falſe then, which ſome confidently affirm, That a man may be ſaved in any religion: No, he cannot come to ſalvation but by the knowledge of the truth; without the knowledge of God, without faith in Chriſt, where he has been revealed, and without obedience to the Goſpel, where it has been made known, there is no poſſibility of ſalvation; God would have all men to be ſaved, by coming to the knowledge of the truth. (B.) 3. That the word all here ſtands for every man; as it is uſed, ver. 1. where we are commanded to pray "for all men." Whence we may argue, That if God wills the ſalvation of all men, and would have all come to the acknowledgment of the truth, then he affords unto all, ſufficient means and grace, in order to their obtaining ſalvation; becauſe, without this they cannot be ſaved. If any therefore do periſh, it is not that God denies them grace and help, but becauſe they are wanting to themſelves, and will not be prevail'd with to uſe the aſſiſtance he affords: Their deſtruction therefore is not from any peremptory decree of God, but from themſelves. (Fox) See the notes on ch. i. 15 John i. 9. iii. 16. viii. 32. and xvii. 3. Acts x. 35. Rom. v. 10. Eph. i. 7, 10. and iv. 8. and Col. iii. 10.

And one Mediator.] Chriſt's mediation and interceſſion is founded upon his redemption; becauſe he gave himſelf a ranſom for all, therefore is he, and he only, qualified to intercede for all; in vertue of that ſacrifice which he offered for the ſalvation of mankind: Therefore the diſtinction of the Church of Rome, between a Mediator of redemption, and a Mediator of interceſſion, is groundleſs; for who dares plead with an offended God as an interceſſor on the behalf of ſinners, that has not firſt, as a redeemer, ſatisfied the juſtice of God for ſin? As there was no redemption wrought by any, ſo there is no interceſſion to be made by any but by Chriſt; as there is but one God, ſo but "one Mediator between God and man, the man Chriſt Jeſus." (B.) See the notes on John x 9. and xiv. 6. Rom. iii. 24. and Eph. ii. 8.

The man Chriſt Jeſus.] The Apoſtle doth not add the man, to exclude the Divine nature from his Mediatorſhip; but to expreſs that nature, in which he paid the ranſom for us; and to ſhew, that our Mediator being a man, all men have by faith free acceſs to him. (Aſſ.)

Gave himſelf a ranſom for all.] Antilutron ſignifies ſuch a ranſom, wherein a like, or equal, is given or paid for a like, or equal; as an eye for an eye, life for life, &c. Our Saviour's ranſom was equivalent to all mankind. Yet, becauſe all men did not believe, and obey the Goſpel, all men were not actually redeemed. (Fell) He gave his life, inſtead of ours; to expiate and attone for thoſe lives which we, by ſin, had forfeited. (W.) That a price was paid, the Scriptures are clear; and that a full and ſatisfactory price. Yet it was not paid to Satan, in whoſe poſſeſſion we were; for he was but an uſurper, and his title naught. He had but bought of us; and we, by our ſale, could convey unto him no more right than we had our ſelves; which was juſt none at all. Our Redeemer therefore would not enter into any capitulation with him, but, in purſuance of his own right, uſed his power over him, Pſal. xcviij. 1. (Sanderſ.) See the notes on John iii. 16. and x. 15. Rom. i. 16. iii. 22, 29. iv. 25. and x. 12. and 1 Cor. vi. 20.

Teſtified in due time.] To martyrion kairois idiois. The word martyrion is not in the copy written by Tecla, and the ſenſe is full without it, "Who gave himſelf a ranſom for all in due time." But, ſince moſt copies have that word, the meaning is, That the ranſom he paid was a real teſtimony of his Mediatorſhip betwixt God and man, whereby he reconciled both: Or, Tho' the ranſom was paid at one time, yet it is teſtified to ſeveral nations (kairois idiois) at ſeveral ſeaſons appointed by God for their converſion. (Aſſ.) But, if we obſerve, that the Apoſtle here, as frequently in other places, uſeth an ellipſis of the word (cata) according to, the ſenſe is plainly this, That Chriſt ſuffer'd according to the teſtimony of the Prophets given at proper times; and therefore the words ought to be render'd thus, "Who gave himſelf a ranſom for all, according to teſtimony (given) at proper ſeaſons." (Maſſey) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 6. and Eph. i. 10.

Ordained a preacher.] See the notes on Acts ix. 15. and Gal. i. 15.

I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt.] This oath, or vehement affirmation, could not be neceſſary to confirm Timothy in the belief of this matter. But, this Epiſtle being ſent to Epheſus, or ſome other place where there were many Jews, who either denied that ſalvation was to be preach'd to the Gentiles, or only on the terms of being alſo circumciſed, which this Apoſtle did ſo ſtoutly oppoſe, it might be neceſſary for their ſakes. (W.) See the notes on Rom. ix. 1.

Pray every where.] That is, In all ſuch places as are appointed for holy aſſemblies. (Hardy) See the notes on John iv. 21.

Lifting up holy hands.] The lifting up the hands in prayer, is an ancient ceremony; and it is a ſign of the lifting up the heart towards God, of truſt, of faith, and of hope, and of the fervency of its love and its deſires for him. (Q.) See the import of this phraſe among the Jews, in Dr. Hammond, and Dr. Whitby, at large upon this text.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. In like manner alſo, that women adorn themſelves in modeſt apparel, with ſhamefacedneſs and ſobriety: Not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or coſtly aray; but (which becometh women profeſſing godlineſs) with good works. Let the woman learn in ſilence with all ſubjection. But I ſuffer not a woman to teach, nor to uſurp authority over the man, but to be in ſilence. For Adam was firſt formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the tranſgreſſion. Notwithſtanding ſhe ſhall be ſaved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith and charity, and holineſs with ſobriety.

That women adorn themſelves.] This precept is to women, That at all times, but eſpecially in publick worſhip, they uſe ſuch apparel as becometh modeſt and chaſte women; expreſſing by their outward garb, the inward gravity and modeſty of their minds; not like proud and alluring perſons, with embroidered hair, gold and pearl, to attract the eyes and hearts of the ſimple. Note, 1. That the attire which all perſons wear, ought to be ſuch as may anſwer the end for which apparel was appointed; which was to hide and ſhroud our nakedneſs, for differencing and diſtinction of ſexes; for diſtinguiſhing between the qualities and ranks of perſons; as alſo for defence and protection, and for decency and ornament. 2. That tho' perſons of quality are not prohibited to wear ſuch garments, tho' coſtly, as becometh their degree, yet none are to ſtudy the external adorning of the body, ſo much as to neglect the inner man by good work. 3 That all ſuch attire is forbidden 1. which ſuſpected women uſe, either to provoke to luſt in others, or to ſhew inclinations to it in themſelves. 2. All ſuch as, by the richneſs and coſtlineſs of it, ſhews pride and vanity of ſpirit, and an ambition to excel others; not but that there may be pride under mean apparel, and oft-times is. 3. All ſuch attire as is unſuitable either to the time or place of worſhip. 4. That this precept ought not to be ſlighted by women, as of ſmall moment, becauſe the two great Apoſtles, St. Peter and St. Paul, do both give it in charge unto them. 5. That the men are by no means to look upon themſelves as unconcerned in this apoſtolical precept given to women: It is much more inexcuſable in them to affect gaiety and a gaudy dreſs; for it is vain and fooliſh, troubleſome and uneaſy, the nurſe of idleneſs, attended with luxury and wantonneſs, and very often with immodeſty and lewdneſs; and is the great bane very often of juſtice and charity: How many are fine and gay, but at the expence, and ſometimes at the ruin of the poor tradeſmen? And how oft is that ſpent in vain decking, which ought to be laid out in the poor's cloathing? (W. and B.) See the notes on 1 Pet. iii. 3.

Learn in ſilence.] See the notes on Acts xviii. 25. 1 Cor. xi. 3. xiv. 34. and Eph. v. 22.

Adam was firſt formed.] Here St. Paul offers a double argument, to enforce the duty of ſubjection upon the woman, and to prevent her "uſurping of authority over the man;" namely, becauſe the man was firſt in the creation, and the woman was firſt in the tranſgreſſion: She was therefore guilty of her own and her huſband's tranſgreſſion; and accordingly, not only by the law of her creation, but as a puniſhment for her tranſgreſſion, God has placed her in a ſtate of ſubjection, and given the man authority over her; which authority ſhe uſurps over him, whenever ſhe undertakes to be a publick teacher of him. Theſe two conſiderations doth the Apoſtle make uſe of, to humble the woman, and to keep her within the ſphere of her proper duty. (B.) Whereas the text ſays, "Adam was not deceived," we need but ſupply the word firſt, which we find in the preceding verſe, to reconcile it with the hiſtory of the fall. See the notes on 1 Cor. xi. 8.

She ſhall be ſaved in child-bearing.] It will be to little purpoſe to recount the different opinions of Expoſitors on this place. Theſe two following appear to be the moſt probable. 1. That women, provided they "continue in faith and charity, and holineſs with ſobriety," ſhall be preſerv'd, and carried ſafely through the perils of child-bearing: Not but that ſome, who do not ſo continue, may be preſerv'd, and ſome who live well may miſcarry; for God, if it ſeems good to him, may take good women to himſelf, at this time, as well as by any common diſeaſe: The promiſe, notwithſtanding, is made good, if he ſhall ſometimes give a ſafe deliverance to women, on account of their truſt in him, their charity, holineſs, and ſobriety. But a more probable ſenſe I take to be the following, 2. That (as ſome obſerve) in the foregoing verſes, the Apoſtle having forbid women to teach, for that Eve was the perſon who was firſt ſeduced; that they might not therefore be diſcourag'd by this cenſure, he adds, Notwithſtanding that, the woman, or the female ſex, ſhould not look upon themſelves to be leſs in the favour of God, or leſs capable of ſalvation: For, as woman was the unhappy occaſion of the fall, ſo woman, by the divine appointment, was the happy means of the recovery of fallen man; for that the Redeemer of the world, who is emphatically ſtiled The ſeed of the woman, ſhould be born of a woman, without the concurrence of man, and by this her child-bearing, that is, by Chriſt thus born of her, woman ſhould be ſaved, on the ſame conditions men are, "if they continue in faith and charity, and holineſs with ſobriety." (Wells and Fox)

CHAP. III.

The qualifications of Biſhops, and other Clergy, and their wives: And why the Apoſtle gave Timothy theſe directions.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. THIS is a true ſaying, If a man deſire the office of a biſhop, he deſireth a good work. A biſhop then muſt be blameleſs, the huſband of one wife, vigilant, ſober, of good behaviour, given to hoſpitality, apt to teach; not given to wine, no ſtriker, not greedy of filthy lucre, but patient, not a brawler, not covetous; one that ruleth well his own houſe, having his children in ſubjection with all gravity; (for if a man know not how to rule his own houſe, how ſhall he take care of the Church of God?) Not a novice, leſt being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. Moreover, he muſt have a good report of them which are without; leſt he fall into reproach, and the ſnare of the devil.

If a man deſire.] Not ambitiouſly affecting, but finding in himſelf a fitneſs and willingneſs to take upon him that office, moved thereunto by a holy and ſincere affection to conſecrate himſelf unto God in the ſervice of his Church, and to employ and improve there thoſe gifts which he hath receiv'd of him, for the edification of God's people. (Aſſ.) The Apoſtle neither commends nor diſpraiſes the deſire of it; but only ſhews the great difficulty of well-performing the duty. Yet it is rather to be ſubmitted to when enjoin'd, than ſought for when not offer'd. (Fell) A deſire to glorify God in the ſervice of the Church, and a ſignification of this deſire, when a man is fitted for the calling, is not only lawful, but alſo commendable. The greedy and ambitious deſire of thoſe who either are not willing, or not able, to glorify God in the miniſtry, is that which is to be condemned. (Downame)

The office of a Biſhop.] By Epiſcope we are, in this place, to underſtand the office, and by Epiſcopos the perſon, not only of ſuch as, ever ſince the Apoſtles times, have properly been call'd Biſhops, (howſoever this place is principally to be underſtood of them, and ſo is expounded by divers of the Fathers,) but of all paſtors and miniſters of the word and ſacraments in general. Which interpretation may be confirm'd by conference of this Scripture with Tit. i. 5, &c. where the ſame Canon being repeated, the Apoſtle uſeth ſometimes the word Epiſcopos, and ſometimes Presbyteros. From whence we may gather, either that, by Biſhop, here the Apoſtle meaneth any Presbyter, the names being as yet confounded, as Jerome and Theodoret ſuppoſe; or, at the leaſt, that the ſame things, which here are ſpoken of the duty and dignity of Biſhops, do alſo appertain to Presbyters in general; which cauſe the other Fathers alledge, why Presbyters are not expreſly mention'd in this place. But, howſoever the Fathers ſeem to be divided in the interpretation of the word Biſhop; yet all agree in this, that both of Presbyters and Biſhops, that is to ſay, of all Miniſters in general, this text is underſtood. (Idem) Concerning the import of the word Biſhop here, I find three different opinions among the Ancients: But every one of them a full confutation of the Presbyterian hypotheſis of a parity, or equality; ſince they all prove the inſtitution of three diſtinct orders of Miniſters in the Church, and that of Biſhops ſuperior to both the other. (W.) St. Cyprian, to ſhew the great uſe, and neceſſity, of a Biſhop, compares him to the Shepherd of a flock, the Pilot of a ſhip, and the Ruler among the people: (Epiſt. to Lucius Biſhop of Rome) And implies, that as a flock cannot be fed without a Shepherd, a ſhip ſteer'd without a Pilot, nor a multitude kept in order without a Governor; ſo neither can a Church be manag'd or preſerv'd without a Biſhop: Which being the higheſt order in the Church, and thoſe who are advanc'd to it being conſtituted ſupreme Eccleſiaſtical Rulers, not only over the people, but alſo over the inferior orders of the Clergy; therefore the Holy Ghoſt gives very ſtrict rules for the choice of Biſhops, and their admiſſion to this dignity hath been very ſolemn in all ages. (Comb.) See Dr. Comber on the Office of conſecration; Dr Hickes of the Chriſtian prieſthood; Dr. Brett of Church government; Dr. Barclay's Letter to the people of Scotland; and Dr. Whitby at large on this text; as alſo the notes on ch. iv. 14. Luke vi. 13. John xx. 21. Acts i. 25. viii. 17. xx. 17, 28. and Phil. i. 1.

Deſireth a good work.] He calleth it a work, that we ſhould not imagine it to be an idle dignity, which when we have once obtain'd, we might give our ſelves over to eaſe and ſecurity; but a work full of employment and difficulty, wherein it behoveth Miniſters (who are the Lord's workmen, Matth. ix. 38.) to labour, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, (kopian) to labour unto wearineſs. But neither is it a ſervile work, or a baſe Miniſtry, but (kalon ergon) a goodly and excellent work. Two things therefore do here offer themſelves to our conſideration, the burden and the honour of the Miniſtry; both appertaining to the greatneſs of this calling, and both requiring (which is the Apoſtle's ſcope) a correſpondency of gifts in the perſon of the Miniſter. (Downame) See Dr. Hammond's criticiſm on this text; and the notes on Acts xx. 28. 1 Cor. iv. 13. Eph. iv. 12. and 1 Theſſ. v. 13.

A Biſhop then muſt be blameleſs.] Here we have St. Paul's poſitive character of a Biſhop, and what he ought to be who is admitted into that high and honourable office in the Church of God: He ought to be blameleſs; a perſon free from ſcandal, without any juſt ground of blame: The life of a Biſhop ſhould ſhine ſo bright, that others may not only behold it, but admire it, and guide their lives by the example of it. "The husband of one wife;" that is, one at a time: Not guilty of the ſin of having many wives; or of putting away the wife by divorce, as the Jews frequently did for frivolous cauſes. Here note, 1. The Apoſtle's command (that the Biſhop be "the husband of one wife") doth not oblige him to marry, but it eſtabliſhes the lawfulneſs of his marriage, if he ſees ſufficient reaſon for it. Nor, 2. Does the Apoſtle here forbid ſucceſſive marriages, as if when a Biſhop has buried one wife, or more, he might not lawfully marry again; for this he elſewhere allows, 1 Cor. vii. 9. From this it may not be in a man's power to abſtain; many loſe their firſt, and ſometimes their ſecond, wives ſo ſoon, that were not after marriages lawful, all the ends of marriage muſt be fruſtrate as to them: Yet may we ſuppoſe, by theſe words, and many others, that St. Paul propoſes a greater degree of chaſtity to church-governors than to other perſons. "Vigilant;" very diligent and watchful in the performance of his whole duty; not long abſent from his flocks; nor negligent when he is among them. "Sober;" governing his paſſions and appetites, reducing thoſe rebellious powers under the dominion of reaſon and religion. "Of good behaviour," in his words, in habit and garb, in his deeds and actions, neither proud and ſupercilious, nor moroſe and ſowre, but affable and eaſy, kind and courteous, of a compoſed temper and grave behaviour. "Given to hoſpitality;" not to ſenſuality: It is not the keeping of a free table, and open houſe for all comers, which St. Paul points at, but charity in entertaining ſtrangers, poor Chriſtians that left their country by perſecution, or ſuch as travelled upon their lawful affairs from place to place: The free relieving of ſuch as are neceſſitous, and expoſed to want and hardſhip, is the hoſpitality pointed at by our Apoſtle. "Apt to teach;" that is, both knowing and willing, able to teach, and forward to it; having both skill and will, ability and dexterity for that part of his duty; one that is neither ignorant of his duty, nor negligent in the performance of it. (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 8. and the note here next following.

The husband of one wiſe.] To what is ſaid of this in the note foregoing, it may be proper here to add, That the queſtion is not whether a married man may be a Biſhop; for here 'tis plainly allow'd, that he may be "the husband of one wife:" But ſince that very expreſſion of one wiſe is a bar to more than one, the only queſtion is, Whether he who marries again, after the death of his former, is barr'd from the Epiſcopal dignity by this canon? And, if not ſo, then who they are the canon is intended to bar from it? For the ſolution of which, we may obſerve, with St. Jerome, That St. Paul himſelf being a Jew, and the firſt converts to Chriſtianity being alſo Jews, among whom it was become common to multiply children by more wives than one at a time, and that even their Prieſts were at liberty to do the ſame if they would; he therefore provided this reſtraint againſt the like licence among the Chriſtian clergy, ordering that none of them ſhould have more than one wife at one time (Epiſt. 23. ad Oceanum). To which ſome having objected, 1. That this could not be the Apoſtle's meaning, in his Epiſtles to Timothy and Titus; becauſe there were no ſuch Polygamiſts, or Bigamiſts, under their juriſdiction, either in or near to Epheſus or Crete. (Baron, A. D. 58. n. 16) 'tis anſwer'd, That theſe Epiſtles were not intended only for the inſtruction of Timothy and Titus, and their ſucceſſors in thoſe provinces, but of all future Biſhops throughout the Chriſtian Church; and therefore, if that cuſtom had obtain'd, in any part of the world, it was neceſſary to direct the Biſhops what to do in the caſe. (Maſon) 2. That tho' 'tis ſaid, ſuch a practice was not cuſtomary, at that time, either among the Jews or Gentiles, and much leſs among Chriſtians; and therefore could not need a prohibition, (Bellarm. de Clero, c. 23.) yet the contrary is evident, even from Baronius; who owns, That it was a cuſtom among the Jews, even in thoſe days, for ſome of them to have more wives than one at the ſame time, and quotes both Joſephus, and Juſtin Martyr, to prove it. (Baron. quo ſupra). But 'tis objected, 3. That in this ſame Epiſtle, ch. v. 9. the very ſame phraſe is uſed by our Apoſtle, requiring (amongſt other qualifications of the widow there treated of,) that ſhe be "the wife of one man;" which if thus interpreted, to exclude thoſe who had been the wives of more than one man at one and the ſame time, would be abſurd, as making the Apoſtle provide againſt what never was the cuſtom any where. (Bellarm. quo ſup.) But to this it is anſwer'd, That this hath ſometimes been accuſtom'd, as appears from our Saviour's own words, Matth. v. 32. and xix. 9. whereby 'tis plain, that a wife who was put away by one husband, (for other cauſes than that of fornication) was ſometimes married again to another; whereupon ſhe became the wiſe of two men at the ſame time; of the firſt by right, and of the ſecond in fact. And as the Apoſtle there excludes ſuch women (when they became widows) from a place in the number of the widows in the Church's Regiſter, (according to the expoſition of Theodoret and Theophylact;) ſo here, and ver. 12. in the very ſame manner, he excludes ſuch men from being admitted into the Church's Miniſtry, as proceeded to a ſecond marriage, during the obligation of the firſt. Death diſſolves the bond of wedlock. A dead wife therefore is no wife; for there cannot be a Relate without its Correlate. The husband, for the ſame reaſon, is no longer a husband when his wife is dead; and conſequently is not the husband of any wife: But, if he enter into a new bond of wedlock with another, he then becomes "the husband of one wife" again; that is, of the ſecond, not of the firſt. Now, whoever is "the husband of one wife," with all other circumſtances anſwerable, is by the Apoſtle allow'd to be made a Biſhop; and therefore, he who marries another, after the death of his firſt wife, all other circumſtances being anſwerable, is by the Apoſtle allow'd to be made a Biſhop. This argument was ſo forcible to Theodoret, that he no ſooner read it in the writings of ſome of the more ancient Fathers, but he immediately came into the ſame opinion. (Maſon) Agreeable to which, alſo, I find to be the interpretation of Biſhop Hall, Mr. Godwyn, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Comber, The Oxford Paraphraſt, Dr. Whitby, Mr. Johnſon, Monſieur Fleury, and others. But whereas the Church of Rome has carried this prohibition ſo much farther, as to extend it to all who are married; that is contrary to the plain words of this text (where the Apoſtle does not forbid, but expreſly permit a Biſhop to be "the husband of one wife") as well as to divers other places of Holy Scripture. And indeed, it is well prov'd, 1. That the celibacy of the Clergy was not inſtituted either by our Saviour, or his Apoſtles; 2. That the impoſition of it, upon any order of men, is unwarrantable; And, 3. That it was never univerſally impos'd, or practis'd, in the ancient Church. (Collier, Eccl. Hiſt. i. fol. 191, &c.) See the notes on ch. iv. 3. and v. 9. Matth. v. 32. and xix. 9. and 1 Cor. vii. 2, 9, 39. And whoever requires fuller ſatisfaction in this point, may find it largely and learnedly diſcuſs'd, in Maſon's Vindication of the Church of England, b. ii. c. 8.

Not given to wine.] The negative character of a Biſhop now follows, ſhewing what he muſt not be: "Not given to wine;" that is, to much wine; no inordinate love either of wine or ſtrong drink; no wine-bibber, no ſitter at wine in his own houſe, much leſs at taverns and publick houſes: "No ſtriker," either with hands or tongue; no quarreller, that cannot keep his hand from hurting; no ſtriker with his tongue in paſſion and anger: A word, we ſay, wounds deeper than a ſword: The Miniſters of God may wound the conſciences of men with the ſword of the ſpirit, but they muſt not wound the reputations of men with their own wrathful ſpirits; we muſt uſe our tongues rather to heal than wound, or if at any time to wound, it muſt be in order to healing. "Not greedy of filthy lucre;" no inordinate lover of money, which makes a man baſe and ſordid, both in getting, keeping, and ſpending: "But patient," meek and forbearing; not rigidly exacting his due, not acting ſummo jure, but rather parting with ſomewhat which in ſtrictneſs may be his right, for peace-ſake: "Not a brawler;" or contentious perſon, often engaged in law-ſuits, but of a mild and peaceable diſpoſition: "Not covetous," or enſlaved to the love of wealth; poſſeſs he may the good things of this life, but not be poſſeſſed by them. (B.) See the notes next following.

No ſtriker.] The Apoſtle ſeems here to have reſpect to the eccleſiaſtical cenſures, that the Biſhop ſhould with gentleneſs heal, rather than with ſeverity exaſperate: Of which it may not be unſeaſonable to ſubjoin what Eraſmus ſaid of old; that excommunications were too frequent and common for every frivolous matter; and never with more rigour, than for trifling ſums of money. (Maſſey)

But patient.] See the notes on Phil. iv. 5.

His children in ſubjection] This is a farther proof, that a Biſhop, according to the Apoſtle's doctrine, may lawfully be a married man. See the notes on ver. 2.

Not a novice.] Neophytus, a novice, ſignifies a young plant; and here, a young, raw, unexperienc'd perſon: Yet not ſo much young in years, as in knowledge; for Timothy himſelf was young, ch. iv. 12. Not a novice in religion then; not one that is unexperienc'd in the myſteries of the Goſpel, undertaking to teach others before he is learnt himſelf And the reaſon for this injunction is weighty, "Leſt being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil;" implying, that young, raw, and unexperienced perſons, when put into publick office, are in very great danger of falling into the ſin of pride, the devil's ſin, and of expoſing themſelves to condemnation, the devil's puniſhment; becauſe their knowledge is weaker, and their paſſions ſtronger, and their graces feebler, and they want that experience which ſhould conſolidate their judgments, and are therefore in great danger of ſelf exalting, for none ſo proud and confident as the ignorant and injudicious. Note here, That when St. Paul ſays, "Leſt he fall into the condemnation of the devil," it is as if he had ſaid, leſt he be condemned for the ſame ſin that the devil is condemned for, which was pride: Not that the devil will condemn him for his pride; for the more proud a man is, the more the devil approves him: Nor is it the devil's office to condemn, but to execute; he is the executioner, not the judge; he will not condemn for ſin, but he will eternally torment thoſe whom God condemns. (B.) Yet, when there was no ſuch danger of miſcarriage, the Church has, ſometimes, choſen ſuch novices, new-converts; as in the caſe of Ambroſe, Nectarius, and others. (Fell)

A good report of them which are without.] That is, without the Church, meaning the unbelieving Jews or Gentiles, with whom he had converſed; leſt, becoming contemptible, and ſo not able to perform his duty as he ought, he give occaſion to the Heathen to blaſpheme Chriſtianity, and to reproach him for his former courſe of life. (B.) Or, according to Theodoret, leſt, being tempted by Satan, he relapſe into his former ſins; or, being reproach'd by thoſe he is ſet over, Satan tempt him to apoſtaſy. (W.) By the excellency and neceſſity of theſe rules given by St. Paul, for the choice of a Biſhop or Paſtor of any Church, and for the qualifications which muſt be obſerv'd in him, before he be choſen, we may ſee what a neceſſary privilege thoſe Chriſtian Churches have loſt, which have now no longer the choice of their own Biſhops, nor their Biſhops the choice of the Curates of pariſhes in their own dioceſe; But both Clergy and people muſt take ſuch Biſhops, and the Biſhops and people muſt take ſuch parochial paſtors, as are preſented to them. (Wall) See the noets on Acts vi. 3, &c.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Likewiſe muſt the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre, holding the myſtery of the faith in a pure conſcience. And let theſe alſo firſt be proved; then let them uſe the office of a deacon, being found blameleſs. Even ſo muſt their wives be grave, not ſlanderers, ſober, faithful in all things. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houſes well. For they that have uſed the office of a deacon well, purchaſe to themſelves a good degree, and great boldneſs in the faith which is in Chriſt Jeſus.

Likewiſe muſt the Deacons be] The Apoſtle having before given the qualifications of a Biſhop, (which may alſo ſerve for a Presbyter, whoſe duty is almoſt equal to a Biſhop's, and therefore his qualities are to be much the ſame,) he now proceeds to thoſe of a Deacon (Comb.) See the notes on Acts vi. 3, &c.

Not double-tongued.] Dilogos; having, as it were, two tongues; ſaying one thing to one, and the contrary to another.

Not given to much wine.] Not the thing, but the exceſs, is here forbidden. (B.)

Not greedy of filthy lucre.] Not ſeeking profit by low and ſordid compliances. (Fell)

Holding the myſtery.] See the notes on 1 Cor. ii. 7.

Firſt be proved.] See the notes on Rom. ii. 18.

Being found blameleſs.] Anengeletos ſignifies not one who is without fault, infirmity, or ſin; but ſuch a one as no man can juſtly call into queſtion, or taint with any infamy. (Leigh) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 8.

Even ſo muſt their wives be.] See the notes on ver. 2. and ch. ii. 9.

Not ſlanderers.] Me diabolous; that is, Not devils; intimating how much a ſlanderer has of the nature of the devil.

Husbands of one wife.] See the notes on ver. 2.

Their children.] See the notes on ver. 4.

Purchaſe to themſelves.] Do ſo juſtly deſerve to be promoted to an higher place, that they may be ſaid to "purchaſe to themſelves," by the merit of their faithful ſervice, "a good degree;" that is, to be advanc'd into the order of Presbyters. (Comb.) The cuſtom was in thoſe days, out of the beſt of the Laity to elect the Deacons, out of the beſt of the Deacons to elect the Presbyters, and out of the beſt of the Presbyters to elect the Preſident, or Biſhop. (G.)

Great boldneſs in the faith.] See the notes on John vii. 4. and Eph. vi. 19.

Ver. 14, 15, 16. Theſe things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee ſhortly: But if I tarry long, that thou mayſt know how thou oughteſt to behave thy ſelf in the houſe of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. And without controverſy great is the myſtery of godlineſs: God was manifeſt in the fleſh, juſtified in the ſpirit, ſeen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

Hoping to come.] It does not appear, that St. Paul did, ever after this, come to Epheſus; But to Miletus he did; where Timothy ſeems to have been with him; having accompanied him from Greece. (Fell) 'Tis certain however, that he ſaw him at Troas, Acts xx. 6. (G.) Here Theodoret well notes, That neither the holy prophets, nor the expedient; as appears from theſe expreſſions, "Hoping to come unto thee ſhortly," and "But if I tarry long." (W.) See the notes on ch. i. 3.

How thou oughteſt to behave.] See the preface to this Epiſtle.

In the houſe of God.] The whole diſcourſe here being a direction to Timothy, for the chuſing and conſtituting Biſhops and other Miniſters in his province; the province wherein he was to do this muſt needs be (oicos Theou) "the houſe of God," wherein he is here directed "how he ſhould behave himſelf;" being by St. Paul ſet there, as the oiconomos, or ſteward in an houſe, who having, under the maſter, chief power in the family, to him it belongs to entertain or remove ſervants and officers out of it;

But this not ſo to reſtrain the phraſe to that one province, but that both the univerſal, and every other particular, Church of Chriſt is capable of that title, as truly and properly as that of Epheſus or Aſia at that time. For indeed the phraſe is derived from the temple, which, as the ſpecial place of God's preſenting and exhibiting himſelf, is called God's houſe; where he dwells, and delights, and meets the pious votary, receives his addreſſes, entertains and treats him, as in his houſe, and anſwers the petitions which he came to offer there; and where his Angels, which are his attendants and Court, as it were, are peculiarly preſent, 1 Cor. xi. 10. As when the Angels appeared to Jacob at Luz, he preſently calls it (Beth El) "the houſe of God;" ſaying, "Surely God is in this place, this is no other than the houſe of God," &c. Proportionably to this, the whole family of God, as that comprehends the whole corporation or community of all the Chriſtians alive, is fitly ſtyled (oicos Theou) this great houſe of God; and in like manner, every leſſer ſociety of Chriſtians, among whom God is pleaſed to dwell alſo, and rule by his oiconomos, or ſteward. And ſuch is every Biſhop in every particular Church. Of this houſe of God, in this ſenſe, two titles are here ſet down, fitly belonging both to the whole, and to each branch, but eſpecially verified at that time wherein the words were delivered, that firſt age of the Apoſtles preaching and planting of the faith. The firſt title is, "The Church of the living God," in oppoſition to the falſe, dead, lifeleſs gods, whoſe pictures were adorned in their Heathen temples. Thoſe were (eccleſiai) places of meeting and aſſembling, but only for the worſhip of idols, empty nothings, But the houſe of God, where Timothy was ſet œconomus, or ſteward, at Epheſus, contrary to Diana's temple there, was "the Church of the living God;" and ſo was every ſuch regular aſſembly of Chriſtians under a Biſhop (ſuch as Timothy was) an œconmus ſet over them by Chriſt. Such again every larger circuit under the Metropolitan, who (as Timothy again) had ordination and juriſdiction over the whole province. And ſuch all the particular Churches of the whole world conſidered together, under the ſupreme head, Chriſt Jeſus, diſpenſing them all by himſelf, and adminiſtring them ſeverally, not by any one œconomus, but by the ſeveral Biſhops, as inferior heads of unity to the ſeveral bodies, ſo conſtituted by the ſeveral Apoſtles in their plantations, each of them having a ſeveral diſtinct commiſſion from Chriſt immediately, and ſubordinate to none but the ſnpreme donor, or plenipotentiary. The ſecond title is, that it is (ſtylos kai hedraioma tes aletheias,) "the pillar of truth," and the baſis of that pillar. The houſes anciently were built on pillars, Judg. xvi 26. where we find "the pillars whereupon the houſe ſtandeth;" and ver. 29. "the two middle pillars, whereon the houſe ſtood," and on which it was born up, and upon the removing of which the houſe fell: And ſo when the Pſalmiſt deſcribes the land, by this ſimilitude of an houſe, he ſuppoſeth it ſet on pillars; and the feebleneſs of thoſe pillars, when they want bearing up, are an evidence of the weakneſs of the earth, "The earth is weak, and the inhabitants thereof, I bear up the pillars of it," Pſalm lxxv. 3. Now, if a pillar it is known, that it receives the uſefulneſs from the baſis on which it ſtands, which being ſo ſet that it cannot ſink, the pillar being firmly faſtened on that, and ſtanding upright, It is able to bear a vaſt weight of building laid upon it. And ſo theſe two, tho' ſeveral in themſelves, yet joining together, and conſolidated into one, they do as one, not ſeverally, ſupport what is laid upon them. A like expreſſion we find in the Jewiſh writers, from whence it ſeems to be imitated; as when Maimonides in his firſt volume, begins his firſt Hilchot, Thus the foundation of foundations, and the pillar of wiſdom is to know there is a firſt being, &c. Which phraſe, tho' it differ from this in ſpeaking of a firſt, abſolutely firſt foundation, whereas this ſpeaks indefinitely of a foundation, yet it agrees with it in this, that foundation and pillar are joyned together, to ſignify not ſeveral, but one and the ſame title. It is therefore neceſſary ſo to render theſe words, "pillar and ground," that they be not diſtinct titles of "the houſe of God," a pillar one, and a baſis another, but (by the figure of hendiadicin, one deſcribed to two) a pillar upon its baſis, which firmly ſuſtains that which is built and erected upon it. And ſo is "the houſe of God," (the Church, both univerſal of Chriſt, and, under him, of all the Apoſtles, and each particular, of each ſingle Apoſtle's plantation) this pillar erected firmly upon the baſis to ſuſtain, to uphold the truth of Chriſt, which being by Chriſt and his Apoſtles erected, as a roof upon a pillar, is ſuſtained and upheld by it. If the truth of the Goſpel had been ſcattered abroad by preaching to ſingle men, and thoſe men never compacted together into a ſociety under the government of Biſhops, or Stewards, &c. ſuch as Timothy was, to whom was delivered by St. Paul that parakatatheke, 1 Tim. vi. 20. a Depoſitum, or body of ſound doctrine, to be kept as a ſtandard in the Church, by which all other doctrines were to be meaſured, and judged; If, I ſay, ſuch a ſummary of faith had not been delivered to all Chriſtians that came in, in any place, to the Apoſtles preaching, and if there had not been ſome ſteward to keep it, then had there wanted an eminent means to ſuſtain and uphold this truth of the Goſpel, th[illegible] preach'd unto men. But by the gathering of ſingle converted Chriſtians into aſſemblies or Churches, and deſigning governors in thoſe Churches, and intruſting this depoſitum, or form of wholeſome doctrine, to their keeping, it comes to paſs that the Chriſtian truth is ſuſtain'd and held up, and ſo this "houſe of God" is affirmed to be "the pillar and baſis of truth," or that pillar on a baſis by which truth is ſupported. According to which it is that Chriſt is ſaid to have given not only Apoſtles, and Prophets, and Evangeliſts, but alſo paſtors and teachers, (that is, the Biſhops in the Church, known indifferently by thoſe two titles,) for the compacting of the Saints into a Church, for the building up of the body of Chriſt, confirming and continuing them in all truth, Eph iv. 12. that we ſhould be no longer like children, "carried about with every wind of doctrine," &c. ver. 14 And ſo again, when hereſies came into the Church in the firſt ages, 'tis every where apparent, by St. Ignatius's Epiſtles, that the only way of avoiding error and danger, was to adhere to the Biſhop in communion and doctrine; and whoſoever departed from him, and that form of wholeſome words kept by him, was ſuppoſed to be corrupted; that form of doctrine, depoſited with, and kept by, the Biſhop in the Church, is the only ſure means to ſupport and preſerve the truth: Which, how little it belongs to theſe congregations or Churches, which have either caſt out that Apoſtolical form of ſound words, or by degrees receiv'd in many corruptions and falſities, either againſt the will of their governors, or by connivence or aſſiſtance of them, doth eaſily appear, by what hath here been ſaid; becauſe, as the good husbandman ſows ſeed in his field, ſo the enemy may ſcatter darnel, and the field bring forth the fruits of one as well as the other. (H.) What ſpecial ſervice theſe words can do to the Church of Rome, in ſupport of her pretended infallibility, is hard to conceive: For "the pillar and ground of the truth," is as applicable to any other particular Church as to that; unleſs they will inſiſt, that their Church is the univerſal Church; which is all one as to ſay, that a part is as much as the whole! (Fox) See the notes on Rom. xv. 2. 1 Cor. x. 23. xi. 10. and xiv. 26. and Eph. ii. 20. and iv. 12, &c

Myſtery of godlineſs.] We uſe to call all ſuch things myſteries, as cannot poſſibly come to our knowledge, unleſs they be, ſome way or other reveal'd to us. Thus Nebuchadnezzar's dream is call'd myſterion, Dan. ii. 18. And St. Paul uſes the ſame word, Rom. xi. 25. concerning the converſion of the Jews, and the ſtate of thoſe who ſhall be alive on earth at the laſt day, &c. In this notion alſo is the Goſpel a myſtery; it being utterly impoſſible, that any wit of man, by the light of nature, or ſtrength of humane diſcourſe, ſhould have been able to have found out that way which Almighty God hath appointed for our ſalvation, if it had not pleaſed him to have made it known to the world by ſupernatural revelation. (Sanderſ.) See Biſhop Andrews, and Biſhop Sanderſon's ſermons on this text; and the notes on Matth. xiii. 14. John i. 18. Rom. xi. 25. and xvi. 25. and 1 Cor. ii. 7.

God was manifeſt in the fleſh.] Theoſe phanerothe en ſarki. There is in the reading of this ſentence a great difference between the two Churches. The Vulgar, and almoſt all the Latin manuſcripts, for Theos having only quod: So that, where we, according to the Greek, read, "Great is the myſtery of godlineſs; God was manifeſt" &c. they read it, "Great is the myſtery of godlineſs, which was manifeſt," &c. The Latin interpreter, who firſt made the miſtake, ſeems in his Greek copy, inſtead of Theos, (or, as they commonly abbreviated Ths) to have read, or miſtaken, the Theta for an O micron: And, it ſeems, one old Greek MS. has has now O; and the Alexandrian is either Ths, or Os; they can hardly tell which. See Dr. Mill on this text But all, even the Latins, however they read the word, underſtood the ſentence, to ſpeak of the perſon of Chriſt: And indeed, ſome of the clauſes cannot be underſtood of any other; as particularly the laſt, "Received up into glory." (Wall) See Biſhop Pearſon's Vindication of the paſſage againſt Grotius, (on the Creed, p. 128.) and Dr. Whitby's notes at large on this place; as alſo the ſeveral other notes here, on John i. 1, 14. Acts xx. 28. Rom. i. 3. and ix. 5.

Juſtified in the ſpirit.] Approved to be the Son of God, by the ſpirit's deſcending upon him at his baptiſm; by his miracles and reſurrection attributed to the Spirit, and its operations; as alſo by giving and continuing the Holy Spirit to his Apoſtles, who were thereby guided into all truth, enabled to work all miracles, convert, &c. (Fell) See the notes on Rom i. 4.

Seen of Angels.] As of his meſſengers and miniſters, viz. At his nativity, Luke ii. 13. at his temptation, Matth. iv. 11. at his paſſion, Luke xxii. 43. at his reſurrection, Luke xxiv. 4. and at his aſcenſion, Acts i. 10. (Aſſ.)

Received up into glory.] See the notes on Luke xxiv. 51. Acts i. 9. and ii. 33.

CHAP. IV.

He foretelleth a great departure from the faith; and exhorteth Timothy to be conſtant in his duty.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. NOW the Spirit ſpeaketh expreſly, that in the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith, giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits, and doctrines of devils; Speaking lyes in hypocriſy, having their conſcience ſeared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abſtain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thankſgiving of them which believe and know the truth. For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refuſed, if it be received with thankſgiving: For it is ſanctified by the word of God, and prayer.

The Spirit ſpeaketh expreſly.] Viz. In the Scriptures, concerning Apoſtaſy from the faith in general, and ſeduction by falſe teachers, Matth. xxiv. 23, 24. and Luke xviii. 8. But to me by ſpecial revelation, that the falſe prophets ſhall broach ſuch falſe and damnable doctrines in particular, as are here after mentioned. (Aſſ.)

In the latter times.] See the notes on Acts ii. 17.

Depart from the faith.] See the notes on 2 Pet. iii. 3.

Giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits.] See the notes on 1 John iv. 1.

And doctrines of devils.] Theſe (ſays Archbiſhop Tillotſon) can be no other doctrines, than thoſe tending to idolatry, which the Scripture every where doth in a particular manner aſcribe to the devil, as the inventor and promoter of: Therefore he tells us, that in ſome ancient copies the words thus; In the latter times ſome ſhall apoſtatize from the faith; for they ſhall worſhip the dead, having regard to doctrines of devils. So that the particular kind of idolatry into which ſome part of the Chriſtian Church ſhould apoſtatize, is here pointed at; namely, That they ſhould worſhip ſouls departed, or the ſpirits of dead men; which was part of the Heathen idolatry, into which the people of Iſrael did frequently relapſe. Theſe departed ſouls were called dæmons, and were eſteemed a middle ſort of Divine Powers, between the ſupreme Gods and mortal men; whoſe office it was to be agents and mediators between the Gods above and men below. (B.) But ſo different are the learned in their application of theſe words, that it is in vain to think of reconciling them; and no ſmall difficulty to judge among them However, ſome of the characters here following, and particularly that of "forbidding to marry," will not let us forget thoſe who preſume to call the marriage of the clergy ſacrilegious, and a pollution of holy orders; notwithſtanding the Spirit of God, for the avoiding of fornication, allows "every man to his own wife," 1 Cor. vii. 2. admoniſhing husbands and wives to render unto each other "due benevolence," ver. 3. and pronouncing marriage to be "honourable in all," Hebr. xiii. 4. For what elſe is this indeed, but the very "doctrine of devils? as Mr. Maſon expoſtulates, B. ii. ch. viii. 17. See the notes on ch. iii. 2. and 1 Cor. x. 20.

Speaking lies in the hypocriſie.] En hypocryiſei plendologon; through the hypocriſie of lying ſpeakers. (H. and W.) How far this character may effect thoſe who teach the practiſe equivocation, mental evaſion, and ſecret reſervation, beſides a multitude of falſe miracles, legends, &c. let the reader judge. See the notes on Eph. iv. 25.

Conſcience ſeared with a hot iron.] Kekauteriaſmenon; branded, or ſtigmatized, with the marks of many foul and enormous crimes. The Greek word is a metaphor taken from rogues, who are burn'd in the hand, or ſome other part of the body. (G. Aſſ. H. and Fell)

Forbidding to marry.] Many Here were in the ancient Church, which prohibited marriage, and taught abſtinence from meats, as neceſſary; having much of their doctrine from the Pythagorean Phyloſophers. Such were the Encratiæ, Montaniſts, and Macrionites. But theſe came after the Apoſtles times, and are not ſo probably ſpoken of here as thoſe which were preſent then in the Church. And ſuch, ſaith Ignatius, there were in the Apoſtles times, Ep. ad Philad. and ſuch, ſaith Irenæus, was Saturninus, l. i. c. 22. who, with Simon Magus, was the father of the Gnoſticks. Of him Theodoret ſaith, that he was the firſt that among Chriſtians affirmed marriage to be the work of the devil, and commanded to abſtain from the fleſh of beaſts. And indeed, that this was generally the doctrine of the Gnoſticks, appears from Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. l. iii. Irenæus, l. i. c. 22. and the author of The Conſtitutions, l. iv. 8. l. vi. 10. (H.) This application of it is alſo made by Dr. Wall. But Dr. Whitby, tho' he owns, 'tis evident, that all theſe things happen'd in the Apoſtles times, and many of them were to happen before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; yet will not allow it to be underſtood of the Gnoſticks, among whom (he ſays) there were no ſuch Hereticks till the ſecond century. The more curious may conſult him at large upon this text. 'Tis true, ſome ancient Hereticks diſparaged marriage, and diſallow'd it in thoſe they call'd their perfect ones; but we read of none, who by laws and canons prohibited marriage, ſave the Biſhops of Rome, and ſuch as adhere unto them; who forbid any in holy orders to marry. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 1. and ix. 3. and Col. ii. 23.

Abſtain from meats.] To abſtain from certain meats, out of an heatheniſh ſuperſtition, a Jewiſh diſcrimination, an heretical obſtinacy, or a fanatical deluſion, is a deplorable blindneſs; but to do it out of a ſpirit of repentance, mortification, and obedience, is virtue, piety, wiſdom, and religion. (Q.) See the notes on Acts x. 15. and xv. 29. Rom. xiv. 6, 14, 20. 1 Cor. x. 25. and Col. ii. 21.

Sanctified by the word of God.] "The word of God," in this place, by which meats are ſaid to be ſanctified, that is, reſcued and freed from all uncleanneſs or pollution, ſo that they may lawfully be uſed and enjoyed, is certainly that word of truth now revealed in the Goſpel, which frees the Chriſtian from thoſe obſervances. For this only can ſatisfy conſcience, that it is lawful to do ſo; and conſequently, that it may be done with faith or aſſurance that they do not ſin. And as this ſecures us in general, that no meat is now unlawful to a Chriſtian under the Goſpel; ſo to make it in the particular lawful to each one, the addition of prayer is the only requiſite; meaning by that, the prayer of faith, coming to God with the aſſurance that it is lawful, and acknowledging it to be received of him, and praying for his bleſſing upon it. (H.)

Bodily exerciſe profiteth little.] The former verſe had exhorted Timothy, (gymnazein) to "exerciſe himſelf unto godlineſs," as the Athleticks did, in the Olympic games, exerciſe themſelves for their combats: And here 'tis added, that their exerciſes, tho' they were very hard and difficult, tended little to profit; they ſtriving for maſtery, only that they might "obtain a corruptible crown," 1 Cor. ix. 25. whereas that piety, or godlineſs, in which he adviſed him to exerciſe himſelf, was "profitable unto all things:" Or, Becauſe Philo makes mention of the Eſſenes, and Joſephus of their Exerciſes, morning and evening; the Apoſtle may perhaps oppoſe unto the ſame this exerciſe of piety. (W.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 13. 1 Cor. ix. 25, &c. and Col. ii. 23.

Having promiſe of the life that now is.] If we look about us, (ſome may ſay) we may ſometimes obſerve good and upright men in a poor and afflicted condition; how therefore are theſe promiſes made good to them? I anſwer, The promiſe of the life "which is to come," unſpeakable joy and happineſs in the kingdom and preſence of God, when time ſhall be no more, is abſolutely made to them: But, as to "the life that now is," the promiſe implies, that they ſhall be in ſuch a condition and circumſtance as is beſt for them. We ſhort-ſighted mortals are apt to conclude, that riches and proſperity muſt needs be beſt: But time and obſervation often convince us, that they rob us of our peace, and prove a temptation too ſtrong for us. Whether therefore riches or poverty, proſperity or adverſity, are beſt, is known only to God; who is never wanting to them who love him, and makes "all things work together for their good." If therefore proſperity is beſt, they may reſt ſatisfied, that God, in his wiſe and good providence, will in due time make them proſperous: If adverſity and poverty, they have the greateſt reaſon to be contented and thankful; knowing, that God would better their condition, and deliver them out of their ſtraits and difficulties, were it, upon the whole, beſt for them. The promiſe therefore, as it reſpects this life, is only conditional. (Fox) See the notes on Matth. vi. 33.

The Saviour of all men.] That is, the preſerver of all men, but eſpecially of all good men, when their temporal preſervation conduces moſt to the advantages of his glory and their good; or if it be underſtood of eternal ſalvation, we muſt take it thus; that he publiſhes and proclaims, offers and tenders, ſalvation to all men; altho' believers only are actually ſaved, becauſe they only accept the offers and conditions of ſalvation. (B.) This is a beautiful ſentence, of vigorous ſtrength, and clean comprehenſive brevity. That ever-bleſſed Being is kind and good to the ungrateful and wicked. He protects thoſe by his providence, who deny it; and feeds wretches with his bounty, who turn it into wantonneſs and occaſions of profane abuſe. He lays his hand upon thoughtleſs wretches who are taking deſperate ſteps to their own ruin; and plucks 'em back when they are juſt falling from a precipice. The eternal Majeſty waits, with wonderful long-ſuffering and goodneſs, for the reformation of lewd and obſtinate mortals; emphatically expoſtulates with 'em, and condeſcends to intreat and beſeech 'em to become wiſe, and qualify themſelves for his infinite mercies, in language that at once cauſes admiration, gratitude, joy, fear and trembling, in every intelligent and pious reader. All the loftieſt flights of Pagan theology and eloquence on this head, are low and fluttering, to the inconceivable ſublimity of thoſe moſt marvellous paſſages in the Old and New Teſtament-writers, Ezek. xviii. 23. and xxxiii. 11. and 2 Cor. v. 19, 20. But God is the Saviour "eſpecially of thoſe who believe." He is their immortal friend and Saviour; treats them with peculiar care and tenderneſs; turns the troubles and ſufferings of this life to their advantage, and makes their enemies their benefactors: He bleſſes them with peace and ſatisfaction; fills them with joy in believing, and ſtrong hopes of his future mercies: He has promiſed to be their God and guide to death; and after, to receive them to himſelf, and to be their exceeding great reward. (Blackw.) See the notes on ch. ii. 4. Acts x. 35. xiv. 17. and xvii. 27. and 2 Cor. v. 20.

Let no man deſpiſe.] Here the Apoſtle proceeds in his direction and advice to Timothy, both as to his preaching and his practice; both as to his doctrine and converſation. 1. As to his preaching, he requires it to be done with due authority: "Theſe things command and teach;" that is, theſe things teach commandingly, and with a neceſſary authority: The Miniſters of God ſpeak from God; therefore may command for God. 2. As to his converſation, he exhorts him to exerciſe ſuch a becoming gravity in his deportment, that tho' he was very young, none might deſpiſe him or his function becauſe of his youth: Where piety and modeſty meet in young Miniſters, it will preſerve their youth from contempt; and where levity and vanity are found, it will expoſe not only youth, but grey hairs alſo, to contempt and ſcorn. 3. He directs him to be not only a preſident to all Miniſters, but a pattern to all believers; "Be thou an example of the believers;" and that, 1. In word, or ſpeech: Look that thy diſcourſe be wiſe and inſtructive, not idle and impertinent, much leſs frothy and profane; but let ſomething for edification always drop from thy lips. 2. In converſation: Look that thy gravity be beyond thy years; make up in thy deportment what is wanting in thy age; obſerve a juſt equality, neither be too aſſuming nor too proſtrate; behave not thy ſelf either above or below thy ſelf. 3. In charity: Shew benevolence, and exerciſe beneficence, towards all mankind, according to thy ability and opportunity; nothing gives a Miniſter a greater advantage for the ſucceſs of his labours, than charitable diſtributions; this gives us a throne in the hearts of our people when wiſely managed. 4. In ſpirit; that is, in zeal and warmth of ſpirit, in fervency of affection, in an active and ſprightly zeal for the glory of God and the good of ſouls; ſuch a zeal as may render thee induſtrious in feeding, governing and inſtructing thy flock. 5. In faith; that is, in fidelity to, and conſtancy in, the true religion; not enduring either to be huffed or wheedled out of the truth; for it is a ſacred depoſitum, an holy treaſure, which we muſt tranſmit to our poſterity, as our forefathers did to us with their precious blood. 6. In purity, in chaſtity and cleanneſs; abſtaining from ſenſual luſts, from wantonneſs and worldly-mindedneſs; chuſe ſpiritual delights now, for they are the entertainment which we muſt live upon to eternal ages. By all this we ſee how much it is in a Miniſter's own power to procure a due eſteem to himſelf, at leaſt to prevent his own contempt, ſince an holy exemplary deportment, faithful and conſtant labours, never fail to do that in ſome meaſure: But if we fail here, what other methods ſoever we uſe we ſhall find God making good his threatning, 1 Sam. ii. 30. that they which deſpiſe him "ſhall be lightly eſteemed:" Nor will any titles, dignities, or prehemiuencies above others, ſecure the guilty from the efficacy of this curſe, which will cleave to their perſons, yea, to their memories, like a girdle to their loins. (B.) It is not youth, but the uſual defects incident to youth, which make a Miniſter of Chriſt deſpiſed. A man is no longer young, when he is the pattern and example of all. (Q.) At this time Timothy was but a young man: Not one of the Neophytoi, a Novice lately converted to the faith, (for he had been ſome conſiderable time an aſſiſtant to St. Paul, and a companion in his travels;) but a young man in reſpect of his age, and in compariſon of other governors of the Church; who were generally venerable, not only for their holy lives, but for their hoary heads alſo, and ſo were ſometimes promiſcuouſly called (Presbyteroi) Elders, not becauſe the ſame authority, but becauſe the like gravity was common to all. (Pelling) Hence we may conclude, from Timothy's youth, that this Epiſtle to him was not written ſo late as ſome good chronologers have ſuppoſed. See the Preface; and the notes on ch. i. 3. 2 Cor. vi. 4, &c. and Tit. ii. 15.

Till I come.] See the Preface to this Epiſtle, and the notes on ch. iii. 14.

Give attendance to reading.] 'Tis certain, St. Paul deliver'd the Scriptures which were then written to Timothy his new-made Biſhop; and probably he did it at his ordination: For he calls it (paracatatheken) the pledge committed to him; which he moſt ſtrictly charges him to keep, as men do the ſecurities for their inheritance, or their ſeals and grants, as the word imports, ch. vi. 20. and 2 Tim. i. 14. And here the Apoſtle requires him to "give attendance to reading," viz. in the holy Scriptures, that he may perfectly underſtand it himſelf, and be furniſh'd out of it with fit paſſages, to be uſed in publick, and ſerve either "to exhortation" when his flock grew remiſs, or to inſtruction and doctrine, when he was to teach the ignorant. (Comb.) Here, 1. It is well noted by the Fathers, as well as by Eſthius, That if Timothy, who had ſpiritual gifts, was yet by St. Paul commanded to be thus diligent in reading the Scriptures, that in his exhortations he might profit others; then much more ſhould Biſhops and Miniſters be ſo, who are all here inſtructed in the perſon of Timothy; and not depend upon extemporary effuſions without "giving attendance to reading." 2. That the illuminations, or gifts of the Holy Spirit, ſhould not hinder our diligence in reading and ſtudying what we are to exhort others to, and inſtruct them in: For, ſaith Theodoret, it becomes us to bring our labour, and ſo to receive the grace of the Spirit. (W. and B.) And, 3. That (anagnoſis) reading, is ſet in oppoſition to (deuteroſeis) traditions (which the Rabbins call the oral word;) becauſe none but this was ſuffer'd to be read in the Church, and this not read only, but expounded alſo. (H.)

Neglect not the gift.] Excite by reading, meditation, and practice, thoſe good gifts of ſpiritual knowledge and wiſdom, in the myſteries of this holy religion, which were given thee according to the prophecies concerning thee: Or, "neglect not the gift," that is, the function and office of a Biſhop, Eph iv. 8, 11. to which thou art called by the Holy Spirit, in the mouth of a Prophet, being declared to be worthy. (Fell) See Dr. Iſham's Sermon on this text, 1703. and the notes on ch. i. 18. and v. 22.

The hands of the Presbytery.] Great uſe has been made of this text by the advocates for Presbyterian ordination, to prove, that mere Presbyters ordained Timothy. But this text does not at all prove, that Presbyters (in our ſenſe of the word) ordain'd Timothy, (at leaſt, not without an Apoſtle). For St. Paul ſays expreſly, 2 Tim. i. 6. that Timothy was ordain'd "by the putting on of his hands." So that, if mere Presbyters (in the modern notion) did lay hands on him, it was only in conjunction with St. Paul; and ſo is agreeable to our practice at this day, as may be ſeen in the Rubrick of the Office for ordaining Prieſts. But indeed many eminent Divines are of opinion, that the word (presbyterion) which is here rendred presbytery, ſignifies the office to which Timothy was ordain'd, and not the perſons who laid hands on him: And thus even Calvin himſelf interprets it, As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, See that the grace which thou didſt receive by the laying on of hands, when I made thee a Presbyter, be not in vain. (Inſtit. l. iv. c. 3.) Nor is it any argument for presbyterial ordination, that the word (cheiron) hands, is uſed in the plural number: For ſo the ſame word is uſed, Matth. xix. 13, 15. for our Saviour's laying hands on the little children; and ſure, no body join'd with him in that! And ſo, Acts xix. 6, 7. St. Paul is ſaid to have laid (cheiras) hands upon twelve men: And the like in other places. So that the word presbyterion, in what ſenſe you will, can be of no ſervice to the Presbyterian cauſe. If it be only the office of presbyterate, then there is nothing, in this text, which looks like presbyterial ordination: If it be the perſons who ordain'd Timothy, yet ſtill there was an Apoſtle at the head of them, and ſo no colour for the power of ordination in mere Presbyters without a ſuperior. (Barclay) Whereas, at the ordination of a Prieſt, all the Prieſts who are preſent do lay on their hands with the Biſhop (which is the cuſtom only of the Weſtern Church,) but never at the ordination of a Deacon, I do not think the import of it to be any more, than to do ſome greater honour to the higher order of Prieſts, and ſo to diſtinguiſh it from that of a Deacon; unleſs it be in token of the college of Presbyters conſenting to the Biſhop's ordaining one into their body. For of old they were his council, and the Biſhop was not to ordain any without their advice: So that the Presbyters laying on of hands only, and always, with a Biſhop, cannot imply their having any direct power in ordination, but only their agreeing to the election, teſtified by their publick joining in this act of their ſolemn admiſſion. (Comber) The holy Scriptures do not afford the leaſt argument, by which it can be prov'd, that Presbyters ever either ordain'd, or receiv'd a power of ordaining from the Apoſtles. We read in the New Teſtament, of no man that was ordain'd but by the Apoſtles themſelves, who without doubt were ſuperior to the Presbyters. St. Paul ſet ſingle perſons over Churches, with a peculiar authority of ordination. Let thoſe who are impartial judges ſay, Whether the opinion of ſuch as are for Epiſcopacy be not both ſafer and wiſer, which declares for retaining that method of ordaining, which the holy Scriptures, if they do not command, do at leaſt not obſcurely deſcribe and commend to us. And if we pay a due regard to the conſtant opinion of the Catholic Church, it is demonſtrable, 1. That the primitive Church admitted of no ordinations, but ſuch as were adminiſtred by Biſhops. 2. That all the holy Fathers to a man, who ſpeak of ordination, do ſo ſpeak of it, as of a power appropriated only to Biſhops. And, 3. That ordinations attempted by the inſolent temerity of Presbyters, were always invalid, upon that very account, that they were adminiſtred by Presbyters, who have not the leaſt authority in this matter. (Hughes) See Mr. Hughes's Preliminary Diſſertations to St. Chryſoſtom de Sacerdotio, publiſh'd in Engliſh, in the Appendix to Dr. Hickes's Treatiſes of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, No. 8. and the notes on ch. v. 22. Acts vi. 6. viii. 14. and xiv. 23. Rom. x. 15. 2 Tim. i. 6. and Tit. i. 5.

Meditate upon theſe things.] He had exhorted him, ver. 13. to "give attendance to reading" the Scriptures, and now he exhorts him to meditate upon what he read. Where note, That if thoſe who were inſpired, and divinely qualified, muſt yet read, meditate, ſtudy hard, and employ their whole time to fit themſelves for the miniſterial work, what ſhall we think of the ignorance and impudence of our Lay-preachers, who, without any ſuch divine qualification, and without any call or commiſſion, without giving themſelves wholly to theſe things, dare preſume to teach the Scriptures, when they never underſtood them, and can hardly read them! "Meditate on theſe things, and give thy ſelf wholly to them:" Be in them, ſays the original; lay out thy whole ſtrength and time in ſtudying God's will, and making known thy people's duty: Three things are here implicitly condemned in perſons ſet apart for the holy function. 1. Sloth and negligence: 'Tis a painful ſervice we are engaged in, and wo unto us if we be ſlothful in buſineſs, if we be ſparing of our pains for fear of ſhortning our days, and haſtning our end; verily the lamp of our lives can never burn out better than in lighting others to heaven. 2. Worldly-mindedneſs, 1 Pet. v. 2. "Feed the flock," but "not for filthy lucre:" The ſpiritual man muſt not ſo mind earthly things as to make them his principal aim and ſcope; for if ſo, he will act accordingly, and defeat all the ends of his miniſtry. The Apoſtles had no ſettled maintenance, but their ſubſiſtance to ſeek, yet were wholly in theſe things. How much more ſhould we be ſo now, who have our maintenance legally ſecured? How ſhould we ſeek the kingdom of God, and the welfare of our people's ſouls, ſeeing all other things are added to us in meaſure, tho' not in exceſs? 3. Incumbrance by worldly buſineſs: He that muſt give himſelf wholly to theſe things, what leiſure can he find for ſecular concerns? We cannot make a buſineſs of two things ſo widely different from each other. Can we be ſpiritual perſons and yet mere ſeculars in our thoughts and cares? Well therefore might St. Paul ſay to Timothy, "But thou, O man of God, flee theſe things," ch. vi. 11. (B.) See Mr. Nic. Clagett's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 13. and Rom. xii. 7, &c.

Take heed unto thy ſelf.] Note here, That St. Paul bids Timothy firſt to "take heed to himſelf," that is, to his life and converſation, and next "to his doctrine;" not firſt to his doctrine, and then to his life: Becauſe the ſucceſs of our doctrine depends upon the goodneſs of our lives. (B.) See the ſeveral Sermons of Dr. Richard Gardyner, 1631. Dr. Edward Pelling, 1692. and Mr. Edmund Chiſhull, 1711. on this text; and the notes on Acts xx. 28. 1 Cor. ix. 22. Eph. v. 15. and 1 Theſſ. v. 22.

CHAP. V.

Rules to be obſerv'd with reſpect to the Elders and Widows.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. REbuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren; the elder women as mothers, the younger as ſiſters, with all purity. Honour widows, that are widows indeed. But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn firſt to ſhew piety at home, and to requite their parents: For that is good and acceptable before God. Now ſhe that is a widow indeed, and deſolate, truſteth in God, and continueth in ſupplications and prayers night and day. But ſhe that liveth in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe liveth, and theſe things give in charge, that they may be blameleſs. But if any provide not for his own, and ſpecially for thoſe of his own houſe, he hath denied the faith, and is worſe than an Infidel. Let not a widow be taken into the number, under threeſcore years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works; if ſhe have brought up children, if ſhe have lodged ſtrangers, if ſhe have waſhed the ſaints feet, if ſhe have relieved the afflicted, if ſhe have diligently followed every good work. But the younger widows refuſe: For when they have begun to wax wanton againſt Chriſt, they will marry; having damnation, becauſe they have caſt off their firſt faith. And withal they learn to be idle, wandring about from houſe to houſe; and not only idle, but tatlers alſo, and buſy bodies, ſpeaking things which they ought not. I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the houſe, give none occaſion to the adverſary to ſpeak reproachfully. For ſome are already turned aſide after Satan. If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the Church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

Rebuke not an Elder.] In the judgment of Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, the Elder here ſignifies not a Prieſt, but a grave, ancient man; ſuch being, in all ages and nations, ſtiled Fathers: And this ſenſe the diſtinction here of ages and of ſexes ſeems to plead for. (W.) And the rather too, becauſe the Elders, or Church-governors, are diſtinctly treated of, ver. 17, &c.

Honour widows.] Tima; that is, yield them reverence and alimony. For the original word, both in the holy Scriptures, and ſundry other Greek authors, ſignifies recompence as well as reverence, reward of ſtipend as well as honour. (G. Leigh, H. W. Wall, and Maſſey) The parties being of ſuch wide diſtance, it had been moſt unſeemly for him to have given to them, but extreme and moſt ridiculous arrogancy in them to have expected from him, any honour, properly ſo called; that is, honour of reverence and ſubjection. But the honour he was to give them was ſuch as was meet for perſons of that quality; eſpecially in relation to their maintenance, That he ſhould take care that thoſe widows ſhould be provided for in fitting ſort; that ſo, in the province of Epheſus, there might be no cauſe of ſuch complaint, as had formerly been made by the Grecians at Jeruſalem, Acts vi. 1. that "their widows were neglected in the daily miniſtration. (Sanderſ.) See the notes on ver. 17.

That are widows indeed.] Cheras. The Apoſtle here means only widows, who are deſtitute of maintenance; as appears plainly, by his ſtanding upon the etymology, or force of the word, which he interprets, ver. 5. of one who, being left alone, is deſolate, and deſtitute of the ſuccour of friends, and therefore hath need to be relieved by the alms of the Church. (Leigh, Wall and B.) See the notes on ver. 9. and Acts vi. 1, &c.

Learn firſt to ſhew piety at home.] The Apoſtle here ſpeaks of the care the children ſhould take to nouriſh their parents which are widows, (proton) firſt, before they ſuffer them to be burthenſome to the Church; as it is evident from ver. 16. as well as from the words here following, "And to requite their parents;" which only can belong unto the children, and was always reckon'd an act of piety towards them, as, after God, the authors of our being. (W.)

Provide not for his own.] Theſe words are miſapplied, when they are cited, to juſtify the ſcandalous practice of many parents, in amaſſing together great wealth for their children, which they make an excuſe for their neglecting to relieve their brethren and fellow-chriſtians in want. But ſuch ſhould conſider, that, without alms-giving, in proportion to their ability, they cannot expect the bleſſing of God upon their enjoyments. It is often ſeen, that this covetous practice of parents contributes to their childrens unhappineſs. That parents ought to make an honeſt proviſion for their children, ſuitable to their condition and circumſtances, is granted. But this is not the duty the Apoſtle ſpeaks of here. The duty here enjoin'd is, the care which children, if they are able, ſhould take of their parents; not that which parents ſhould take of their children; "Let them learn to ſhew piety at home, and to require their parents," ver. 4. (W. and Fox) And he who neglects this duty of Natural Religion, "hath denied the faith," tho' not in words, yet in his deeds, and hath caſt away both humanity and religion; and therein "is worſe than an Infidel," ſince ſuch will take care of their own, and "love thoſe who love them," Matth. v. 46. (Aſſ.) See Dr. Sacheverell's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 4. and Gal. vi. 10.

Let not a widow be taken.] To explain this and the following verſes, obſerve, 1. The Apoſtle here directs Timothy about the choice of widows, who were to be employ'd in ſome office in the Church. Theſe are in Eccleſiaſtical hiſtory call'd Diaconeſſes; of whom Phebe, mention'd Rom. xvi. 1. was one; as alſo thoſe in Phil. iv. 2, 3. Their office ſeems to have been to aſſiſt at the baptiſm of women, to take care of the poor and ſick, to provide meat

(W. and Fox) And he who neglects this duty of Natural Religion, "hath denied the faith," tho' not in words, yet in his deeds, and hath caſt away both humanity and religion; and therein "is worſe than an Infidel," ſince ſuch will take care of their own, and "love thoſe who love them," Matth. v. 46. (Aſſ.) See Dr. Sacheverell's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 4. and Gal. vi. 10.

Let not a widow be taken.] To explain this and the following verſes, obſerve, 1. The Apoſtle here directs Timothy about the choice of widows, who were to be employ'd in ſome office in the Church. Theſe are in Eccleſiaſtical hiſtory call'd Diaconeſſes; of whom Phebe, mention'd Rom. xvi. 1. was one; as alſo thoſe in Phil. iv. 2, 3. Their office ſeems to have been to aſſiſt at the baptiſm of women, to take care of the poor and ſick, to provide meat and lodging for ſtrangers, who were oblig'd to travel from their own homes, &c. That the Apoſtle does not ſpeak of all widows, is manifeſt from the choice, and the particular qualifications here mention'd. 2. The word (crima) rendered damnation, ver. 12. ſignifies judgment; and is rather to be underſtood of that ſhame and condemnation they would bring upon themſelves in the world, for having deſerted a truſt committed to them, than of eternal damnation. To prevent this, the Apoſtle excludes young widows, from being appointed to this office; becauſe ſuch would not be grave enough, but would be apt to look after their being married, and ſo be careleſs of the charge committed to them. Their age might incline them to marry; and their inclination to marry might incline them to wantonneſs; and their wantonneſs to apoſtaſy; for they might marry with infidels, and ſo "caſt off their firſt faith:" Therefore it was not prudent to take ſuch into office in the Church. And, 3. Here is not any thing ſaid that favours the practice in the Church of Rome, of entring into vows of ſingle life. The Apoſtle not only lays it down as a rule, even when the Church was under perſecution, that "it is better to marry than to burn;" but he elſewhere tells us, that "marriage is honourable in all." And here, ver. 14. it is particularly recommended to the younger widows, that they marry. Vows, in this caſe, are not only attended with great inconveniences, but they are unlawful; becauſe thoſe who enter into them cannot tell but it may be impoſſible for them to keep them and to live chaſtly too. Dr. Lightfoot obſerves that God hath evidenc'd his curſe upon this wretched vowing, by giving them up to horrid uncleanneſs, and the murder of their own children! Turned aſide after Satan.] The converting men to the Chriſtian faith being the turning men "from the power of Satan unto God," Acts xxvi. 18. and the reſcuing men "out of the ſnare of the devil, who were taken captive by him at his will," 2 Tim. ii. 26. and who "walked according to the power of the prince of the air," Eph. ii. 2. the "caſting of the faith" may well be ſtyled "turning aſide afrer Satan." (W.)

Let them relieve them.] If any Chriſtian has any helpleſs widow, of his own family, or among his relations, he ought to relieve and maintain her, if he be able, and not caſt her upon the charity of the Church; leſt there be not a ſufficiency to ſupply the wants of ſuch as are "widows indeed," aged and helpleſs: Becauſe, for any to eat the poor's bread, who are not poor, and to whom it does not belong, is robbery. (B.) See the notes on ver. 4.

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, eſpecially they who labour in the word and doctrine. For the ſcripture ſaith, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn: And, The labourer is worthy of his reward. Againſt an elder receive not an accuſation, but before two or three witneſſes. Them that ſin rebuke before all, that others alſo may fear. I charge thee before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the elect angels, that thou obſerve theſe things without preſerving one before another, doing nothing by partiality. Lay hands ſuddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other mens ſins: Keep thy ſelf pure. Drink no longer water, but uſe a little wine for thy ſtomachs ſake, and thine often infirmities. Some mens ſins are open before-hand, going before to judgment; and ſome men they follow after. Likewiſe alſo the good works of ſome are manifeſt before hand; and they that are otherwiſe cannot be hid.

The elders that rule well.] Our Apoſtle proceeds to give Timothy directions concerning elders; not old men in years, but elders in office, ſuch as were employed in the governing of the Church, and over and above that ſervice, laboured even unto wearineſs, in preaching of the word, and expounding the Chriſtian doctrine," requiring that double honour be given unto ſuch. Note here, 1. The elders work and duty declared, to "rule well," wiſely to preſide over, and diſcreetly to govern, the Church of Chriſt; alſo to "labour in the word and doctrine," to take pains in preaching the Goſpel upon all occaſions; thoſe that are advanced to the higheſt eminency in the Church will not think themſelves above this part of their duty. 2. The honour and reſpect challenged on their behalf: "Double honour" is their due; namely, an honour of reverence, and an honour of maintenance; and a double meaſure of either. Some think it an alluſion to the firſt-born, who was the prieſt of the family, and had a double portion among his brethren; the Levites ſucceeded them, and the miniſters of the Goſpel theſe, who when laborious in governing and teaching the Church of Chriſt, deſerve more honour, and better maintenance, than the unkind world is willing to confer upon them, who inſtead of double honour, ſometimes deny them civil reſpect. 3. In that the Apoſtle ſtyles the miniſters maintenance, honour, it follows that their maintenance is not to be eſteemed in the nature of alms, but of a tribute paid by an inferior to a ſuperior; neither is it mercenary wages, but ſuch as ought to be given as a teſtimony of honour, as well as in the nature of a reward. And, when they are worthy of, let them never fail to receive, double honour, who rule well, and alſo "labour in the word and doctrine." (B.) 4. Whereas ſome, in our days, who obtrude a new doctrine and government upon the Church, altogether unknown and unheard of in the ancient, will needs have lay-elders here meant, (whom they call ruling-elders,) as well as the paſtors, whom they call teaching-elders; none of the fathers, who have commented upon this place, (as they had no ſuch,) ever thought of any lay-elders, but prieſts only, who adminiſter'd the word and ſacraments. (Mede) 5. There is one honour due to the place, or office; and another to the merit of the perſon: So that he who is regularly veſted with the office, tho' perhaps unworthy of it, is yet worthy of a ſingle honour, for his place ſake, and juſtice requires that he ſhould have it; but if he deſerve well in his place, by rightly diſcharging his duty therein, he is then "worthy of double honour," and juſtice requires, that he ſhould have that too. But alas! How unfairly do the men of the world conclude of the perſonal merit of the Clergy! If they do but ask for their right, they are covetous; if they apply to the Law for it, then they are branded as contentious! Not conſidering, that when they ſuffer unjuſtly, and ſay nothing, they do not only expoſe themſelves both to loſs and ſcorn, but alſo betray God's and the Church's right; and moreover are unfaithful in the work of their calling, in ſuffering ſin upon their neighbour, for want of a rebuke, Levit. xix. 17. Thus, thoſe "who labour in the word and doctrine," inſtead of receiving the double honour here recommended, are firſt robb'd of their maintenance, and then alſo of their good names! And what is this, but firſt to "muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn," ſo that we cannot eat; and then to put another muzzle upon him, that he may not complain? (Sanderſ.) And, 6. As the command of being charitable to the poor, gives juſt occaſion to thoſe laws which are made in all communities to oblige men, according to their abilities, to diſtribute to the neceſſities of the poor, becauſe otherwiſe the general rule of Scripture would not be obey'd, nor the poor provided for: So the ſtanding ordinance of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, concerning the double honour due to them who "labour in the word and doctrine," and the communicating to them in all good things, juſtifies the laws which aſcertain what ſhall be communicated unto them; ſince otherwiſe, it is much to be fear'd, the general rules of Scripture, concerning this matter, would not be obey'd, nor the Clergy ſufficiently provided for. (W.) See Mr. Joſ. Mede's Diatribæ, the notes of Hammond and Whitby on this text at large; as well as the ſeveral notes on ch. iv. 14. Matth. x. 10. Receive not an accuſation.] Here the Apoſtle directs Timothy how to proceed in Church-cenſures againſt open offenders; which plainly ſhews, that there was a right of judging and cenſuring offenders, in Timothy, by virtue of his office. Firſt then, he acquaints him with his duty in cenſuring an elder; and adviſes him never to admit an accuſation againſt ſuch, without the atteſtation of "two or three witneſſes;" 1. Becauſe it is the intereſt of the Church of Chriſt, that the reputation of its miniſters be ſupported. 2. Becauſe prejudiced perſons will be ready to accuſe without reaſon: Conſcientious miniſters ſhall never want accuſers, if falſe accuſers can but find judges willing to believe them. Next, He adviſes him, when there is a juſt and ſufficient cauſe, for cenſuring an elder, to do it publickly, "before all;" that is, before all the Church; before all the Clergy, as in a ſynod, putting them to publick ſhame, "that others alſo may fear." (B.) 3. Becauſe the teſtimony of the whole Church in his behalf, at his election, ought reaſonably to over-ballance the contrary teſtimony of any one witneſs; and he who had been thought worthy of the office then, ought not to be ſuſpected of any notorious guilt now, without very good evidence and ſtrong proof. (G. and Aſſ.) 4. Whereas the law had taken care, that no man ſhould be condemn'd but by the mouth of two or three witneſſes, the Apoſtle, knowing how much the Church would ſuffer by the raſh accuſations of her governors, Biſhops and Presbyters, ſeems to riſe higher; not ſuffering an accuſation to be admitted againſt them, without the like number of witneſſes. (Fell and W.) For, in the judicial proceedings, among the Jews, before the giving ſentence, there were three parts, 1. The admiſſion of the cauſe or ſuit; 2. The confirmation of ſuit, or complaint, by oath; And, 3. The ſearching out of the cauſe, by arguments; Of which only the firſt is to be underſtood here. (H.) And, laſtly, Upon the whole, there can be no doubt, but Timothy was ſuperior to all the Presbyters then conſtituted at Epheſus, and endow'd with a ſuperior power. (Hughes) See the notes on 2 Cor. ii. 6.

And the elect Angels.] He joins the Angels with Jeſus Chriſt; not (ſaith Theodoret) as equal in honour, but as ſervants to him, and thoſe who are to attend him at the great day of judgment. (W.)

Doing nothing by partiality.] Proſcliſis is a metaphor, taken from a ballance when the ſcales do not hang even, but one weighs down the other. (Leigh) And the foregoing phraſe (choris procrimatos, which we tranſlate "without preferring one before another," ſeems to be rendered with too much latitude in our tranſlation, which confounds it with partiality that follows; but, as the original ſignifies, and the Vulgar Latin tranſlates it, denotes prejudice; which is a thing as much ſeparate and diſtinct from partiality, as the cauſe is from the effect, and is indeed the neceſſary fountain from whence it is deriv'd. (Sachev.) See Dr. Sacheverell's ſermon on this text.

Lay hands ſuddenly on no man.] Some have thought theſe words relate to the reconciliation of penitents, and not to ordination; becauſe it immediately follows, "Neither be partaker of other men's ſins." But I ſee no cauſe to recede from the ſenſe generally receiv'd; 1. Becauſe St. Paul had not mention'd "laying on of hands," in relation to penitents; but he had done it, in this epiſtle, with reſpect to ordination; and that in Timothy's own caſe, ch. iv. 14. 2. Becauſe, if theſe words do not relate to ordination, St. Paul would have given Timothy no particular direction, about that which was one main part of his office: As it is expreſs'd, concerning Titus, That he was appointed to "ordain elders in every city," Tit. i. 5. and no doubt, Timothy had the ſame commiſſion, tho' it is no where intimated, except in theſe words. 3. Suppoſing laying on of hands then equally uſed in both caſes, yet the Apoſtle gives no rules concerning the qualifications of penitents, as he doth concerning Biſhops and Deacons: And therefore we have more cauſe to apply it according to the chief intention and deſign of this epiſtle: But he ſays nothing before, what penitents were to be reconciled, and after what time, and under what conditions they were to have hands laid on them, in token of reconciliation; and there is no concurrent evidence of ſuch a practice ſo early in the Chriſtian Church. 4. The following words are capable of a very good meaning according to this ſenſe. For then, being "partaker of other men's ſins," doth imply, that as it is a fault in thoſe who rudely, and inconſiderately, without due preparation of mind, do ruſh upon ſo ſacred an office; ſo thoſe cannot acquit themſelves of a great ſhare in their guilt, who do not uſe their beſt endeavours, by due examination and trial of the perſons, to keep them from entring upon it, till they are prepared and qualified for it. And, 5. The great uſe of laying-on of hands, in the New Teſtament, is for the ſetting perſons apart for the diſcharge of a ſacred office. So, when the office of Deacons was firſt inſtituted, it is ſaid, They were "ſet before the Apoſtles, and when they had prayed, they laid their hands upon them," Acts vi. 6. And, which is more conſiderable, when Barnabas and Paul, by the particular appointment of the Holy Ghoſt, were to be ſeparated unto the work whereto God had called them, it is ſaid, "And when they had faſted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they ſent them away," Acts xiii. 3. Here it was not for miraculous cures, as the Apoſtles ſometimes uſed it to ſick perſons, nor for conferring miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, as at other times they uſed it, (and probably this was "the gift of God" which Timothy had by laying on of the Apoſtle's hands, 2 Tim. i. 6) neither was it a mere rite of benediction, as Jacob laid his hands on the ſons of Joſeph, Gen. xlviii. 14. and our Saviour on the children, when he bleſſed them, Mark x. 16. but it was a ſolemn rite of dedication of particular perſons to God, when they are ſet apart for the exerciſe of a function which immediately related to his ſervice. (Stillingfl.) As to the other ſenſe of theſe words, with reſpect to the abſolution of penitents, the reader may ſee a large account of it in Dr. Hammond. See Biſhop Stillingfleet's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Acts vi. 6.

Partaker of other mens ſins.] That which St. Paul cautions Timothy againſt in the foregoing words, "Lay hands ſuddenly on no man," whether underſtood of abſolution of penitents, or of ordination, would involve him in all the ill conſequences of ſuch a raſh and precipitate action, and make him "partaker of other mens ſins." The words however may be taken in an unreſtrained ſenſe, as an excellent maxim for the conduct of humane life in general; or as an univerſal prohibition of contributing towards, concurring, or complying with, the wicked practices of others, leſt, as we thereby become accomplices in their iniquity, we may be alſo ſharers in their guilt, and fellow-ſufferers in their puniſhment. (Sachev.) See Dr. Sacheverell's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Acts viii. 1. and Rom. xiv. 13. and Eph. v. 11.

Keep thy ſelf pure.] Pure and blameleſs; both in thy carriage, and in thy judging others. (Fell)

Uſe a little wine.] Here note, 1. That there is a lawful uſe of wine, to ſupport nature, not to clog it; to cure infirmities, not to cauſe them. 2. That our meat and drink ſhould be fitted for the preſervation of health, rather than for the gratification of our appetite. And, 3. That the Apoſtles, who had the gift of healing, could not make uſe of it when, and upon whom, they pleaſed, no not upon themſelves; but muſt help their own infirmities in and by the uſe of ordinary means. (B.)

Some mens ſins are open.] I find three expoſitions of theſe words, 1. That of St. Baſil and St. Auſtin, which refers them to the judgment of God, thus; The good and evil works of ſome men are ſo manifeſt, that they may be diſcern'd of all men before the day of Judgment, and ſo, in diſcerning them, thou canſt not err: But, if they be latent here, and ſo eſcape this examination and cenſure, they will be manifeſted at the great day of their accounts. 2. Others, referring this to the cenſures of the Church, mention'd ver. 20. make the ſenſe run thus; "Some mens ſins" are ſo open and notorious, as to bring them under the cenſures of the Church, by way of precedent merit: Others appear more criminal after the cenſures paſs'd upon them; and ſo leſs fit to be abſolv'd: And ſome mens reformation, or good works, are ſo manifeſt after cenſure, as to evidence that they deſerve abſolution; and if they continue evil, or do but few good works, that alſo will be in time diſcernable; ſo that thou may'ſt know who are fit to be abſolv'd, and who not. But againſt this expoſition there lie theſe objections, 1 That no man ſhould incur the cenſures of the Church, but by way of precedent merit; and ſo no mans evil works, for which he is to be cenſur'd, ſhould "follow after" that act of diſcipline. And, 2. That the laſt clauſe of the laſt verſe ſeems, by the Antitheſis, to refer, not to evil, but to good works, tho' done, as the works of charity ought to be, ſo as not to be obſerv'd by men. But, 3. The ancient Greek expoſitors, with Grotius, refer theſe words to ordination, thus; When I ſaid, "Lay hands ſuddenly on no man," I ſpake not of men whoſe good or bad "works are manifeſt before hand;" for they, without further diſcuſſion or examination, may be admitted, or are to be rejected: But of thoſe whoſe vices or good works are latent; for they, after examination and inquiry, cannot be long hid. And ſo, if thou be not haſty in "laying on of hands," thou timely may'ſt diſcover them; or if by this means thou canſt not do it, thou will not be partaker with the ſinner, as having done as much as was in thy power to diſcover them. (W.)

CHAP. VI.

The duty of ſervants. Novel doctrines to be avoided. Godlineſs is gain. The danger of coveteouſneſs. Timothy's own charge; and what admonition he was to give the rich.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. LET as many ſervants as are under the yoke, count their own maſters worthy of all honour; that the name of God, and his doctrine be not blaſphemed. And they that have believing maſters, let them not deſpiſe them, becauſe they are brethren; but rather do them ſervice, becauſe they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. Theſe things teach and exhort. If any man teach otherwiſe, and conſent not to wholſom words, even the words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and to the doctrine which is according to godlineſs; he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about queſtions and ſtrifes of words, whereof cometh envy, ſtrife, railings, evil ſurmiſings, perverſe diſputings of men of corrupt minds, and deſtitute of the truth, ſuppoſing that gain is godlineſs: From ſuch withdraw thy ſelf, But godlineſs with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a ſnare, and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which drown men in deſtruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil: Which while ſome coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themſelves through with many ſorrows.

Let as many ſervants.] Here the Apoſtle directs him to inſtruct ſervants in the great duty of obedience to "their own maſters," whether Infidels or Chriſtians. Chriſtianity frees perſons from ſinful ſlavery and bondage, but not from civil ſervitude and ſubjection. Religion does not level perſons, but allows of an inequality among men, Superiors and inferiors; and as it gives the former power to command, ſo it lays the latter under an obligation to obey. (B.) A religion founded upon humility and obedience towards God, muſt needs be very far from favouring pride and rebellion. The faith and the ſpirit of God are not given to Chriſtians to diſturb the order of ſtates and of families, but to confirm and eſtabliſh it; not to aboliſh, but to ſanctify the lawful dependence and ſubjection, wherein the faith finds them, and their duty engages them. (Q.) But there is an emphaſis in the words (idious deſpotas) "their own maſters," whereby we may learn, That this honour and ſervice cannot be juſtly exacted by every one who gets the power over them; but only by ſuch as have a proper right to it: In like manner as wives are to ſubmit themſelves unto their own husbands, Eph. v. 22. and ſubjects to their own rightful ſovereigns, Rom. xiii. 1, &c. and 1 Tim. ii. 2. See the notes there; as alſo on Rom. ii. 24. 1 Cor. vii. 22. and Eph. vi. 5.

And his doctrine be not blaſphemed.] For, if they ſhould refuſe to ſerve their maſters, tho' Infidels, under pretence of their Chriſtian liberty, this would occaſion their maſters to reproach Chriſtian religion, as if it taught them contumacy and diſobedience. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. ii. 24.

Let them not deſpiſe them.] It is here ſomewhat uncertain, to whom theſe words (hoti adelphoi eiſi) "becauſe they are brethren," and (hoti piſtoi) "becauſe they are faithful," do belong; whether to the ſervants, who pretend themſelves at liberty, becauſe they were Chriſtians, or to the maſters, whom the ſervants would not obey, but deſpiſe, becauſe thoſe maſters were brethren, and ſo but equals, no better men than they. That the latter is it, is made probable by this, that, in the beginning of the verſe, we read (piſtous deſpotas) "believing maſters," where the (piſtoi) faithful or believing, is directly applied to the maſters. But there is more reaſon to adhere to the former; 1. Becauſe the probability of the latter is of no force, concluding only that the maſters here ſpoken of are Chriſtians, which is granted alſo in the former interpretation, and not that the ſecond piſtoi, &c. is not applicable to the ſervants: For it is certain, that the ſervants here ſpoken of are ſuppoſed to be Chriſtians alſo; for otherwiſe the Apoſtle's exhortation could not be here given to them, or to Timothy concerning them; neither Paul nor Timothy having juriſdiction over thoſe who were not Chriſtians. 2. Becauſe the Libertine Chriſtian's plea, againſt ſubjection to their maſters, cannot be ſuppoſed to have been taken from the Chriſtianity of their maſters: For 'tis evident, by ver. 1. that they excepted againſt ſubjection, and pleaded exemption from obedience, to maſters who were not Chriſtians, viz. thoſe who kept them "under the yoke," (as Chriſtians were not allow'd to do to Chriſtians,) that is, Heathen maſters: But their plea againſt all ſubjection both to Heathens, ver. 1. and to believing maſters, ver. 2. was the ſame; only this, that they were Chriſtians, and therefore too good to ſerve Heathens; and again, Chriſtians, whoſe title (adelphoi) brethren, was a ſtyle of equality, and ſo an argument that they were free from ſerving their Fellow-Chriſtians. And, 3. Becauſe the (antilambanomenoi tes euergeſias) helpers to do good, with the particle hoi before it, being in all reaſon the ſubject, and (piſtoi kai agapetoi) "faithful and beloved," the predicate in the propoſition, the ſenſe will be obvious, by applying it to the ſervants, (but not ſo by applying it to the maſters) thus, Let not the Chriſtian ſervants deſpiſe their Chriſtian maſters, upon this ſcore, that the ſervant by Chriſtianity is made a brother, and equal to his maſter, but the rather ſerve them, upon this very ſcore of being Chriſtians, becauſe they that help and aſſiſt in doing good (for Chriſtian ſervants of Chriſtian maſters do aſſiſt their maſters in doing good; whereas it cannot ſo fitly be ſaid of the maſters, tho' Chriſtians, that they thus help or aid their ſervants) "are faithful and beloved;" that is, ſuch as Chriſtians ought to be, exerciſing fidelity and love to God, and to their maſters for God's ſake, who hath commanded obedience to them. And for theſe reaſons this notion ſeems the moſt probable, by applying all theſe to the ſervants, in the latter part of the verſe, but to thoſe as ſervants of the Chriſtian maſters, in the former part of the verſe. (H.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 22 and Gal. v. 1.

If any man teach otherwiſe.] See the notes on ch. i. 3, 4.

The words of our Lord.] This phraſe being oft uſed of the very words which Chriſt ſpake, may be referr'd to Matth. xx. 27. and Mark x. 44. Tho' ſince it often refers alſo to the doctrine of Chriſt, preach'd by the Apoſtle, as 'tis uſed Acts xix. 10. 1 Theſſ. i. 8. and 2 Theſſ. iii. 1. in this ſenſe it affords us this uſeful obſervation, That the words written by St. Paul, in theſe Epiſtles, are "the words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt." (W.) See Dr. John Moore's Sermon on this text, 1682. and the notes on ch. iii. 16. and Eph. v. 6.

Knowing nothing.] See the notes on 1 Cor. viii. 2.

Suppoſing that gain is godlineſs.] That is, That Religion is to be uſed as a Trade, or a way to get ſecular advantages by. (Wall) See the notes on Phil. iii. 19.

From ſuch withdraw.] Hence it is very evident, that he ſpeaks of perſons who were then in being; the Gnoſtick Hereticks, according to ſome; the Judaizing teachers, in the opinion of others; that is, they of the circumciſion, who taught things which they ought not, for filthy lucre ſake. Whoever they were, St. Paul's admonition to Timothy, to withdraw himſelf from ſuch, teaches us, that heretical ſeducers are to be ſhunned and avoided, rather than diſputed with, as unfit for our Chriſtian communion, and common converſation. (B.)

Godlineſs with contentment.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, altho' theſe ſeducers are for making a gain of godlineſs, yet we know that "godlineſs is great gain," eſpecially "godlineſs with contentment:" With contentment, I ſay, which it becomes us to have; "for we brought nothing into the world" with us, and ſhall carry nothing away with us; "having therefore food and raiment, let us be therewith content" and ſatisfied. Learn hence, 1. That godlineſs is the ſincere practice of the Chriſtian religion, ſo called, becauſe it directeth and preſcribeth to us the true and only way of worſhipping and ſerving God. 2. That ſome men ſuit their godlineſs with their worldly ends; they make a trade and ſaving bargain of it. 3. That godlineſs, or the ſincere practice of the Chriſtian religion, is true gain, great gain, yea, the beſt gain, both for this world, and that which is to come. 4. That one great point of godlineſs is to be content with what we have; yea, tho' it be of "food and raiment." Contentment is a ſedate and quiet temper of mind about outward things: It is the wiſdom and will of God not to give all alike, but to ſome more, to others leſs, of theſe outward comforts; but nothing beſides food and raiment is abſolutely neceſſary, a little will ſuffice a contented mind: He is not rich that has much, but he that has enough; that man is poor who covets more; "having food and raiment," &c. Laſtly, the Apoſtle's argument to excite and move the Chriſtian to this duty of contentment, without enlarging his deſires inordinately after the world, and the periſhing ſatisfactions of it: "For we brought nothing into the world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out:" Where remark, that the note of aſſurance is fixed rather to our carrying out, than to our bringing in: The Apoſtle doth not ſay, it is certain that we brought nothing into the world, and we ſhall carry nothing out: But he ſays, We brought nothing in, and "it is certain we can carry nothing out." The note of aſſurance is applied to the latter; for this reaſon I conceive, becauſe tho' all perſons come naked, and bring nothing with them into the world, yet abundance is put upon them, and they are born heirs to vaſt poſſeſſions: But it is obvious to every eye, and moſt indubitably certain, that they carry nothing away with them. Death is called an uncloathing; it uncloaths the body, diſrobing it of all its gaudy and glorious attire; yea, it uncloaths the bones; our fleſh wears off quickly in the grave; we proverbially ſay of a rich man, he has left a vaſt eſtate, left it behind him, carrying neither a foot of land nor farthing of money with him; therefore doth St. Paul add, "it is certain we can carry nothing out." (Idem) Can a man poſſibly abandon himſelf to the deſire of riches, when he conſiders the condition in which he was born, and in which he muſt die? Thou hadſt them not yeſterday; Thou ſhalt not have them to morrow: What extreme folly then is it, to ſet thy heart upon them to day, for one moment! (Q.) See the notes on ch. iv. 8. and Phil. iv. 11.

They that will be rich.] Obſerve here, 1. The parties deſcribed; "they that will be rich; that is, whether God will or no; their hearts are ſet upon the world, they feel it coming; and have it they will, if by any means, right or wrong, they can come at it, ask no body's leave, no not God Almighty's leave, but rich they are reſolved to be. 2. Their danger repreſented; they "fall into temptation and a ſnare, and many fooliſh luſts," &c. Learn hence, that a will and reſolution to be rich, is the occaſion of much miſchief to thoſe that cheriſh and allow it in themſelves: A will to be rich is to make riches our principal buſineſs, our main ſcope, our great work, to purſue the world with the full bent of our wills: Now the bent of our will is diſcovered, firſt, by intention, ſecondly, by induſtrious proſecution; when the mind is wholly intent upon getting wealth, and unwearied induſtry and endeavour is found in the purſuit of it. Now this is to make a God of the world; for that which is a man's aim, deſign, and end, is his chief good, and that which is our chiefeſt good is God. 2. That a hot and over-eager purſuit of the world lays a man open to endleſs temptations, ſo that it is not only difficult, but impoſſible, to keep his innocency; and that being irrecoverably loſt, drowns a man in perdition and deſtruction. Obſerve alſo, 3. Here we have the nature of covetouſneſs, with the evil and ſin of it, and the miſchief and hurt of it, declared. 1. The nature of it. It is an inordinate "love of money," an inſatiable deſire after wealth. 2. The evil and ſinfulneſs of it. 'Tis "the root of all evil:" The fruit of all ſin grows from this root; diſtruſting care, tormenting fear, anger, malice, envy, deceit, oppreſſion, bribery, perjury, vexatious law-ſuits, and the like: Nay, further, covetouſneſs is the root of hereſy in judgment, as well as of iniquity in practice: "They have erred from the faith;" that is, in point of doctrine as well as practice; it makes a man believe as well as act, againſt the rule of faith, "for filthy lucre." 3. The miſchief and hurt of covetouſneſs. It "pierceth through with many ſorrows." But whom doth it pierce? 1. Others: It pierceth the poor, the needy, the widow, the fatherleſs; all who fall within the reach of its griping hand. And, 2. It doth not ſpare its own maſter, or ſlave rather, but pierceth him too; they "pierce themſelves through (ſays the Apoſtle) with many ſorrows;" with many more, and much worſe, ſorrows, than they pierce others with. Riches ill-gotten, by covetouſneſs or oppreſſion, inſtead of making their owners heartily merry, make their conſciences ake. None can tell what gall and wormwood ſprings from this bitter root, both to themſelves and others! (B.) But, it is not the poſſeſſion, but the inordinate deſire, of earthly good things, which St. Paul condemns. A man may be poor in ſpirit in the midſt of riches; and rich by covetouſneſs in the midſt of poverty: The former ſanctifies himſelf in poſſeſſing them; the latter may damn himſelf in deſiring them. (Q.) See the notes on ch. i. 19. Luke xii. 21. and Acts v. 2.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. But thou, O man of God, flee theſe things: And follow after righteouſneſs, godlineſs, faith, love, patience, meekneſs. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art alſo called, and haſt profeſſed a good profeſſion before many witneſſes. I give thee charge in the ſight of God, who quickneth all things, and before Chriſt Jeſus, who before Pontius Pilate witneſſed a good confeſſion; that thou keep this commandment without ſpot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: Which in his times he ſhall ſhew, who is the bleſſed and only potentate, the king of kings, and Lord of Lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath ſeen, nor can ſee: To whom be honour and power everlaſting. Amen.

O man of God.] All righteous men are the ſervants of God; but the title of "Man of God" implieth more: For in Scripture it is attributed only to men of eminent ſanctity, who had more familiarity, and inwardneſs with God; as Moſes, Samuel, David, Elijah, Eliſha, and here Timothy. A man of God is he, who is wholly devoted unto God; and his chief employment is to bring meſſages from God, as the Prophets did, and to bring men unto God, as the faithful Miniſters of the Goſpel do. (Aſſ.)

Follow after righteouſneſs, &c.] The Apoſtle oppoſes all theſe virtues to covetouſneſs: Becauſe, as the love of money takes away the goods of others, makes uſe of religion in or to that end, extinguiſhes faith, minds nothing but its own intereſts, is impatient under loſſes, omits no violence to ſecure it ſelf from them, and to become rich; ſo, on the contrary, righteouſneſs deſires no temporal good things at the expence of our neighbour; godlineſs never ſerves God only in order to obtain them; faith makes men deſpiſe them; love, or charity, diſtributes them amongſt others; patience bears the loſs of them without grief; and meekneſs is not bitter againſt thoſe who are the cauſe thereof. (Q.)

Fight the good fight.] This whole verſe alludes to the exerciſes of the Grecians; in which, as there were five ſorts, running, wreſtling, &c. formerly mentioned; ſo every of them is commonly ſtiled (agon) a combat, or ſtrife, and they which contended in each of them ſaid, as here, agonizeſthai agona. The rendring of this "fight a good fight," may make it believed to belong peculiarly to that of cuffing (pygme), whence our Latin (pugna) fight comes. But the word is not here to be ſo reſtrain'd, but ſet more generally, in ſome common word, as ſtriſe, or combat; as (agonizeſthai eiſelthein) ſtrive to enter in at the ſtrait gate, and (epagonizeſthai) Jude 3. to contend earneſtly: And then 'twill, by the conſequents, be applied to that of racing, where the crown was ſet over the goal, that he that came foremoſt, and ſo conquered, might catch it off, and carry it away with him: For ſo (epilabou) lay hold, or apprehend, that follows here, and ver. 19. is the word that expreſſes the catching of the crown from the top of the goal, and eternal life is that crown; and the (enopion pollon martyron) "before many witneſſes," denotes the many ſpectators that were wont to be at thoſe games, called from thence (panegyreis) frequentiæ, and ſolemnities; and ſo kalein may refer alſo to the keryx, or præco, who proclaimed the laws, and the prize, or reward, of the agones, and called the company together to contend for it. (H.) See Mr. J. Robinſon's Sermon on this text, 1631. and the notes on ch. i. 18. 1 Cor. ix. 24. and Phil. iii. 14.

Profeſſion before many witneſſes.] He underſtandeth the ſolemn vow Timothy had made, either at his baptiſm or ordination, wholly to dedicate himſelf unto, and employ his uttermoſt endeavours to the ſervice of God. (Aſſ.) The profeſſion of Timothy's faith was, at his baptiſm, as Catechumen; in the courſe of a holy life, as Chriſtian; at his ordination, as Prieſt and Biſhop; and afterwards before Tyrants, as Martyr. Let us fight, after his example, if we aſpire to the ſame triumph, and the ſame prize; and woe be to us, if we do not aſpire to them! (Q.)

Charge in the ſight of God.] A vehement kind of adjuration, to obſerve and keep all the promiſes faithfully, with his eyes fixed upon the coming of Jeſus Chriſt; whoſe glory we are to ſet againſt the vain gliſtering of this world, and his power againſt all the terrors of the wicked. (Aſſ.)

God, who quickeneth all things.] Obſerve here, 1. What a glorious diſplay our Apoſtle here makes of the adorable attributes of God. He ſtiles him the "God who quickneth all things;" that is, all things which have, or ſhall have life: "The bleſſed and only potentate;" becauſe all power is eſſential in him, and derived from him: "Who only hath immortality;" that is, an original, primitive, ſimple, independent, eſſential immortality; that is, only proper, and peculiar to God, who only is eſſentially and neceſſarily, of himſelf, immortal: "Dwelling in the light, which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath ſeen, nor can ſee." God is inviſible in his eſſence: He is not to be ſeen by any mortal eye on earth; only the eye of faith ſees him here: Nay, he is not to be ſeen by any glorified eye in heaven, in his Divine eſſence; for the nature and eſſence of God never was ſeen, nor ſhall be ſeen. But we are, by "the ſight of God" in heaven, to underſtand a more clear and full manifeſtation of God unto us; even ſo far as our glorified nature can bear it; which will be abundantly beyond expreſſion, yea, beyond our comprehenſion. And, 2. The teſtimony which the holy Apoſtle bears to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when here on earth, that "before Pontius Pilate he witneſſed a good confeſſion;" that is, he did not deny the truth to ſave his life; but gave all his Miniſters and People an example of courage and conſtancy, in owning the truth, and ſealing it with his blood. (B.) See the notes on John v. 21. and Rom. iv. 17.

Without ſpot.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 8.

The appearing of our Lord.] See the notes on 1 Theſſ. iv. 15.

Who only hath immortality.] That is, Eternally ſubſiſting, of himſelf, and not by any other: Angels, and the ſouls of men, are immortal, but by participation only from God; as the Moon and Stars ſhine continually, but with a light derived from the Sun. (Aſſ.) See the references on ch. i. 17.

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy: That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate; laying up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy truſt, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppoſitions of ſcience falſly ſo called: Which ſome profeſſing, have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

¶ The firſt Epiſtle to Timothy was written from Laodicea, which is the chiefeſt city of Phrygia Pacatiana.

Charge them that are rich.] Obſerve here, 1. Timothy's duty; not barely to exhort and teach, but to charge and command. True, the Miniſters of Chriſt are ſervants to their people; but ſervants to their ſouls, not to their wills, much leſs to their luſts; there is an authority in our office which impowers us to command for God as well as to intreat. 2. The ſubject of the charge; "them that are rich in this world:" Mark; no man is forbidden to be rich; nor yet to uſe ſuch lawful means by which, through God's bleſſing thereupon, men may be rich: But rich men need a charge; they want plain dealing from Miniſters, becauſe they meet with ſo little of it from other men; for ſome flatter them, others fear them, God's Miniſters ought ſure to deal faithfully with them. 3. The charge it ſelf; and this is ſet down negatively and affirmatively; both two-fold. 1. The negative matter of the charge; "That they be not high-minded;" pride of heart and haughtineſs of mind and ſpirit, is one ſpecial ſin which great men are ſubject to: When God lifts them up by his providence, they lift up themſelves by pride; there is a ſecret malignity in riches when they meet with mens corruptions, to lift them up above their due region; tho' neither the wiſer, the holier, the nearer heaven for all their wealth; nay, perhaps a great deal nearer hell for the abuſe of it: Yet ſtill the rich think high, look big, breathe ſcorn, talk with diſdain; forgetting that God gives them riches, to exalt him, and not themſelves. Next part of the negative charge, is, That they "truſt not in uncertain riches;" intimating, That creature-confidence, or making an idol of wealth, is the dreadful bane and ruin of ſome rich men: Their actions ſay to the Gold, Thou art my hope, and to the fine gold, thou art my confidence; but the vanity and ſinfulneſs of this appears by the Apoſtle's calling them "uncertain riches;" uncertain in their abode and continuance with us, uncertain in their promiſe and pretences to us; we expect more from them than ever we find in them. 4. The poſitive part of the charge, 1. To truſt in God, "the living God," a bountiful God: He giveth riches; they buy, they do not give, He "giveth all things;" all the wealth in the world cannot buy a mouthful of air, or drop of light, if God with-holds it. God is the giver of all, he giveth richly all things; the moſt miſerable man cannot number the rich mercies which he doth receive; and he gives all "things richly to enjoy;" that is, He gives an heart to take and taſte the comfort of what he gives; He gives not only poſſeſſion, but fruition: Riches can do none of theſe things; why then ſhould we "truſt in uncertain riches," and not "in the living God?" 5. Another duty exhorted to, and that is to imitate God in the works of bounty; "To do good;" Rich men are to make their wealth the materials of good works: Nay, they muſt not only do good works, but "be rich in good works;" as their eſtate is plentiful, ſo muſt their charity be proportionable: They muſt do it copiouſly, "be rich in good works;" they muſt do it chearfully, "ready to diſtribute," without grudging, and without delay; they muſt do it diffuſively, "willing to communicate," that is, To do as much good to the community as poſſibly they can, upon principles of humanity, and upon principles of Chriſtianity alſo. 6. The encouragements given to this duty: 1. Thus to lay it out, is "to lay up," and that as in a treaſury; 'tis like ſcattering of ſeed in order to an increaſe and harveſt. 2. Thus to lay out upon others, is to "lay up for themſelves;" they have the comfort here, and the reward hereafter. 3. It is to lay up for themſelves a foundation; not by way of merit towards God, but by way of evidence in regard of our ſelves; a teſtimony of our reconciliation to, and acceptance with God. 4. It is "a good foundation for time to come;" all our glory, wealth and ſubſtance, is no durable foundation, here to day, and gone to morrow; but good works are a bank in heaven: All is depoſited in a ſafe hand, that we lay out for God. 5. It ſhall be rewarded with eternal life, "laying up for themſelves a good foundation for the time to come, that they may lay hold upon eternal life." Now from the whole, Learn, 1. That the wiſdom of God has ſeen fit to make a great diſtinction between men in this world; ſome are poor, others rich, as God ſees beſt for both. 2. That ſome are rich who are not rich in this world; rich in faith, heirs of a kingdom, yet wandring in deſarts, dens, and caves. 3. That there are many who are only "rich in this world:" Look beyond the grave and they are poor men, miſerable, having great poſſeſſions in this world, but no proviſions for the next. 4. That the great deſign which all men, eſpecially rich men, ſhould purſue and proſecute in this life, is, how they may in this life ſecure and lay hold of eternal life:" Bleſſed be God it may be laid hold upon, 'tis worth laying hold upon, 'tis life, 'tis eternal life. Queſt. But how ſhould we lay hold upon eternal life? Anſw. 1. In our judgments, by having them convinced of the tranſcendent excellency of it, and by having them approve of the ſtricteſt condition upon which it is tendred. 2. In our affections, by ſtrong and vehement deſires after eternal life. 3. In our endeavours, by a diligent uſe of all means in order to the obtaining of it; and particularly by doing good, by being "rich in good works," by being "ready to diſtribute, and willing to communicate;" for hereby ſhall we "lay up for our ſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, and at length lay hold of eternal life." (B.) See the ſeveral Sermons of Biſhop Andrews, Biſhop Hall, Dr. J. White, Dr. Featley, Mr. Jer. Whitaker, Mr. T. Gouge, Archbiſhop Sharpe, Biſhop Kidder, and Archbiſhop Dawes, all on this text; and the notes on Matth. vi. 20. and xix. 21. Mark x. 24. Luke xii. 21, 33. and xvi. 9. 2 Cor. iv. 5. and Gal. vi. 6, &c and that which here follows.

Them that are rich.] In general, by the rich, here, and in other parts of Scripture, is meant no more than barely men of power and ability: And, in this ſenſe, all men who ſhall, in their reſpective capacities, at any time, be able, are to be accounted as the rich; and therefore chargeable as ſuch. (Archbiſhop Lindſay)

Keep that which is committed.] Our Apoſtle concludes this Epiſtle to Timothy with a very paſſionate and pathetick exhortation to him, that he would maintain the purity of the doctrine of the Goſpel, and preach that to his hearers; avoiding all idle ſpeculations and philoſophical niceties, which the Heathen philoſophers admired, deſpiſing, in the mean time, the plainneſs and ſimplicity of the Goſpel: And he tells him farther, that ſome Chriſtians, being taken with this ſort of learning, have corrupted Chriſtianity, turned Hereticks, erring concerning the faith; to prevent which, he begs for Timothy the grace of God to preſerve, ſanctify and ſave him. Learn hence, 1. That in the beginning of Chriſtianity, the philoſophers, by pretences of great learning, were the greateſt deſpiſers, and the bittereſt enemies of Chriſtianity. 2. That the generality of them were taken up with mere uſeleſs quibbling, ſtriving about words and barren notions, inſtead of neceſſary and uſeful knowledge. 3. That Timothy and every Miniſter of Chriſt with him, ought to preach the Goſpel, without any ſuch human mixtures, in the purity and plainneſs of it; and the people receive it, with a ſimplicity of mind, to be guiding and directed by it. Laſtly, That the ſanctifying and eſtabliſhed grace of God is neceſſary and indiſpenſably needful, to preſerve both Miniſter and people ſtedfaſt in the faith of the Goſpel, and to perſevere in their obedience to it. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 18. and the reſt which here follow.

Committed to thy truſt.] The doctrine of the Church is a truſt, of which the Biſhops are not the proprietors and maſters, but the guardians, the interpreters, and the defenders. It is one of their chief obligations, not to ſuffer any alterations in it, any more than in the Scripture, and in primitive and apoſtolical tradition. (Q.)

Vain babblings.] See the notes on ch. i. 4.

Science, falſly ſo called.] The ancient Fathers have obſerv'd, That the great pretence of the firſt Hereticks, (as of Simon Magus, Nicolaus, and the reſt,) was for ſcience; wherefore they were afterwards call'd Gnoſticks. Contrary to theſe, the Apoſtle commands Timothy to keep himſelf cloſe and faſt unto faith, and the doctrine of Chriſtian religion, committed unto, and depoſited, charge with him. (Aſſ. H. and Fell) See the notes on Gal. ii 5.

Written from Laodicea.] See this ſuppoſititious note corrected in in the Preface to this Epiſtle.

The End of the Firſt Epiſtle of St. PAUL to TIMOTHY.

ANNOTATIONS

UPON THE

Second Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the Apostle,

TO

TIMOTHY.

CONCERNING this Epiſtle, the reader may be pleas'd to obſerve,

i. That the Subject of it is much of the ſame nature with the former; viz. 1. To forewarn, and thereby forearm, Timothy, againſt thoſe Hereticks, Seducers, and falſe Teachers, who were, even then, creeping into the Church: And, 2. To excite him to the utmoſt care and diligence in the faithful diſcharge of his Office; exhorting him to prepare for ſufferings and perſecutions, from his own example ſet before him.

ii. That the place, where it was written, is agreed on all hands to have been Rome; and that while the Apoſtle was in reſtraint, and danger there. But, iii. As to the Time, when he wrote it, there is no ſuch agreement among the learned, whether it was during his firſt, or ſecond, impriſonment there. Euſebius, and the Ancients in general, and moſt of the Moderns alſo, underſtand it to have been written but a little while before his martyrdom; being induced thereunto by that paſſage, chap. iv. 6. that he was then "ready to be offered, and that the time of his departure was at hand." But nevertheleſs, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Cave, and the Oxford Annotator, hold it to have been written during his firſt impriſonment, which is mention'd Acts xxviii. And the arguments by which they maintain this opinion, are, 1. That the text here cited is not neceſſarily to be interpreted of his death, as then actually near at hand; but rather of the imminent danger he had been in, but had, for that time, providentially eſcaped, as he declares there, ver. 16, 17, 18. 2. That he ſpeaks, at the ſame time, of his being deliver'd, to the end, that his preaching might be ſtill more fully heard among the Gentiles, ver. 17. which could not be conſiſtent with the laſt time of his impriſonment, tho' with the former it well might; and accordingly was verified, in his preaching abroad for ſeveral years, between the firſt and ſecond time of his impriſonment at Rome, as is intimated in the Preface to The Acts of the Apoſtles. 3. That he preſſes Timothy to come to him, chap. iv. 9. which 'tis plain he did during his firſt impriſonment; and was with him at his writing the ſeveral Epiſtles to the Philippians, Coloſſians, and Philemon; but that Timothy was ever at Rome during the Apoſtle's ſecond impriſonment there, or afterwards, there is not the leaſt colour of proof. 4. That he bids him "bring with him" ſome things which he had "left at Troas," chap. iv. 13. Which alſo is more reaſonably to be underſtood of the time of his firſt impriſonment, not long after he had himſelf been at Troas, than of the other which was not till many years after that. 5. That he bids him likewiſe "bring Mark with him," who might be "profitable to him for the miniſtry," ver. 11. But Mark could be of no uſe to him for the miniſtry, ſo late before his death, when he had no longer any opportunity to exerciſe it: Neither can it be pretended, that Mark could be neceſſary to St. Paul, to prepare him for death; at leaſt when Timothy himſelf was to be with him. And, 6. That he tells him of divers things, which Timothy muſt have known already, if this Epiſtle had been written ſo many years after they had happen'd; as will be more particularly obſerv'd in the notes on the reſpective paſſages.

CHAP. I.

St. Paul declares his affection for Timothy: Exhorts him to a ſteady perſeverance in his duty: And informs him of the apoſtaſy of Phygellus and Hermogenes, and the conſtancy of Oneſiphorus.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. PAUL an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the will of God, according to the promiſe of life, which is in Chriſt Jeſus; to Timothy my dearly beloved ſon: Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. I thank God, whom I ſerve from my forefathers with a pure conſcience, that without ceaſing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day: Greatly deſiring to ſee thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy: When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt firſt in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am perſwaded that in thee alſo. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou ſtir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. For God hath not given us the ſpirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a ſound mind. Be not thou therefore aſhamed of the teſtimony of our Lord, nor of me his priſoner: But be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Goſpel, according to the power of God; who hath ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus, before the world began, but is now made manifeſt by the appearing of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, who hath aboliſhed death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Goſpel: Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an Apoſtle, and a teacher of the Gentiles. For the which cauſe I alſo ſuffer theſe things; nevertheleſs I am not aſhamed: For I know whom I have believed, and I am perſwaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him againſt that day.

Paul, an Apoſtle.] See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 1.

According to the promiſe.] Kat' epangelian; Concerning the promiſe; or That I might declare that eternal life which is promiſed to men; as Theodoret renders it. And ſo the prepoſition kata is alſo uſed Matth. xix. 3. Phil. iv. 11. and Tit. i. 1. (W.)

My dearly beloved Son.] See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 2.

Grace, mercy, and peace.] The reaſon why St. Paul, to (Charis and Eirene) "Grace and peace, which are uſed in the introductory ſalutations of his other Epiſtles, adds, in theſe to Timothy, in a peculiar manner alſo (eleos) mercy, ſeems to be referable to the denomination he here gives Timothy, viz. that of his being his (gneſion tecnon) own ſon. For it appears, from the words of Joſeph to Benjamin, Gen. xliii. 29. that the form of bleſſing, uſed by parents to their children, was this, according to the tranſlation of the Seventy, (Ho Theos eleeſai ſe tecnon) "God be gracious unto thee, my Son." Hence St. Paul wiſhes not only grace and peace, but alſo mercy, to Timothy; as teſtifying thereby his paternal affection to him. (Wells) See the notes on Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. Gal. i. 3. and Eph. i. 2.

I thank God.] See the notes on Rom. i. 8. and Eph. i. 16.

From my forefathers.] How could Paul, before his converſion, be ſaid to "ſerve God from his forefathers, with a pure conſcience," when he was a perſecutor, and the chief of ſinners? The meaning is, He worſhipp'd the ſame God, and the only true God, whom his forefathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, worſhipped; and that he worſhipp'd him ſincerely, according to his conſcience, and the meaſures of light he had then receiv'd. (B.) Before his converſion, by the law; afterwards, by the Goſpel: Which is a juſtification of himſelf both againſt Jews and Judaizers. (Fell) See the notes on Acts xxiii. 1. and xxvi. 9.

Prayers night and day.] See the notes on Luke xviii. 1. Acts xx. 31. and 1 Theſſ. v. 17.

Mindful of thy tears.] Probably ſhed at their laſt parting, Acts xx. 37. (G. Fell and B.)

The unfeigned faith.] See the notes on Acts xvi. 1. and 1 Tim. i. 5.

Stir up the gift.] The original word Anazopyrein ſignifies, as it were, with bellows, to blow up the coals, and to receive or ſtir up fire that is buried under aſhes. Here is a moſt elegant metaphor, from a ſpark cover'd with aſhes, which with blowing is kindled: Whereby is declar'd, that the "gifts of God," in this life, are as certain little coals, or ſparks; which unleſs they be ſeaſonably ſtirr'd up, and with daily godly exerciſes cheriſh'd, are ſoon extinguiſh'd: Or rather, (ſaith Gerhard) there is an alluſion to the type of the Prieſts, in the Old Teſtament; by whoſe daily miniſtery the fire which came from heaven was cheriſh'd, that it might not go out. (Leigh) See Dr. Horneck's Sermon on this text.

Putting on of my hands.] See the notes on 1 Tim. iv. 14.

The ſpirit of fear.] Here our Apoſtle exhorts Timothy to an holy courage and undaunted reſolution, in the execution of his office: As if he had ſaid, Be not diſcouraged by perſecution; "for God hath not given us (his meſſengers) the ſpirit of fear," but of courage and fortitude; fearleſs we are of the frowns of men: Alſo the ſpirit of love; love to God and the ſouls of men, which will make the Miniſters of God indefatigable in their endeavours for the good of ſouls: Likewiſe the ſpirit "of a ſound mind," which enables God's Miniſters to curb their paſſions, inordinate luſts, deſires, perturbations of mind; an admirable ſpirit; to know when to be angry and ſevere, and when to be mild and gentle. Learn hence, That love is the genuine principle of obedience, and ought to be that frame of ſpirit, that inward affection of mind, from whence all our ſervices to God and our neighbour do proceed. Thus, having fortified Timothy againſt fear, he next fortifies him againſt ſhame: "Be not thou aſhamed of the teſtimony of our Lord;" that is, of giving teſtimony to the Goſpel of our Lord, whether by preaching of it, or ſuffering for it: "Nor of me his priſoner," for I do not ſuffer as a malefactor; nay, be thou a chearful partaker of the ſame ſufferings as my ſelf, and for the ſame cauſe with my ſelf, "according to the power of God;" that is, being ſtrengthened with the Almighty power of God. Learn hence, That the Miniſters of the Goſpel are to take great care that they be always ready to ſuffer reproach for the Goſpel; but that they never be a reproach unto the Goſpel: Suffering for Chriſt will be ſweet, if it be not imbittered by ſinning againſt Chriſt. (B.) Theſe are here call'd "afflictions of the Goſpel;" becauſe, as Chriſt ſuffer'd in the perſecution of his members, ſo the Goſpel, after a ſort, ſuffereth, when the preachers thereof are oppoſed, diſgrac'd, ſilenc'd, and impriſon'd, or any way hinder'd from the free and powerful preaching thereof. (Aſſ.) That almoſt univerſal deſertion, which generally attends a Miniſter of the Church, when perſecuted by the Higher Powers, evidently ſhews, that, in order to be faithful under ſuch circumſtances, it is neceſſary to have a ſtrength more than human. His own purpoſe.] The ſalvation of mankind through Chriſt, was predeſtined and prepar'd, "before the world began," to be "made manifeſt by his appearing" in the fleſh, and by his meriting (through his obedience and ſufferings) for us, the aboliſhing of, and our freedom from, death, both eternal and temporal, in our reſurrection: Which great bleſſings are declar'd unto us in the Goſpel; the publiſhing whereof was begun by our Saviour, and after him by his Apoſtles; and among them by St. Paul. (Fell) It is not here ſaid, that God, "before the world began," choſe a few particular perſons to ſalvation, excluſively of the reſt of mankind; which is a doctrine ſome would eſtabliſh upon ſuch expreſſions. No! The promiſe of eternal life and happineſs, which by the Goſpel we are made capable of obtaining, belongs to all who will ſincerely comply with the reaſonable terms it was fit for God to offer it upon. None are excluded, but thoſe who refuſe to be reclaim'd, and who, by continuing in a courſe of ſin, wilfully exclude themſelves. This was a grace, or favour, which neither Jews nor Heathens could merit, by any works or performances of their own: But it was the effect of the mercy and compaſſion of God, in and through Jeſus Chriſt, to all mankind; to all who would be prevail'd with to forſake their ſins, and to believe in, and obey the laws of, Jeſus Chriſt. This was promiſed to Adam, to Abraham, &c. (Fox) It is to be acknowledg'd, that the Heathens had, by tradition and the light of nature, conceiv'd ſome hope of ſome future good things to be receiv'd after this life was ended: But yet this hope was very weak and feeble in them, and ſcarce credited by their Philoſophers: And as for that immortality the body ſhall obtain at the reſurrection, the Heathens knew and believ'd nothing of it; they laugh'd at it, and look'd upon it as a thing impoſſible, and unworthy of God to do, and without any example to convince them that it might be done. Hence then we ſee the neceſſity that this "life and immortality ſhould be brought to light by the Goſpel;" and what continual thanks we owe to the bleſſed Jeſus, who hath by his death not only removed the fear and ſting, but even the being, of death, and hath procured a bleſſed immortality, not only for the ſoul, but the body alſo (W.) See Dr. Whitby at large on this text; and Dr. Stanhope's ſixth Sermon at Boyle's Lecture, 1701. together with the notes on Acts ix. 15. Rom. viii. 28, 29. ix. 13. and xvi. 25. 1 Cor. xv. 26, 55. I alſo ſuffer.] See the notes on Acts ix. 16. Rom. i. 16. and viii. 38. and Eph. iii. 1.

I know whom I have believed.] As if he had ſaid, Let thoſe who ſuffer for ill doing be abaſh'd and troubled at it; I am neither aſham'd of the Goſpel, nor the leaſt diſcourag'd by my ſufferings, how great and ignominious ſoever, for its ſake, and for doing my duty in relation and obedience to it; for I truſt and depend on one who will ſecure me, and will bleſs and crown my labours. That he wills and intends it, I am ſure, for he hath promiſed; and in what he hath promiſed, I know he is faithful, Heb. x. 23. and he is able, above all that I can ask or think, Eph. iii. 20. and conſequently, whatever, in purſuance of his promiſe, is entruſted to him, muſt be ſafe in his hands, I am ſure; "for I know whom I have believed." So that theſe words direct us, how to quiet and ſecure our ſelves, in what eſtate ſoever affairs may be, whether public or private; namely, in a cloſe dependance upon God. See Dr. Alleſtree's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 13, 14. ch. iv. 8. Rom. iv. 21. and Eph. iii. 20

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Hold faſt the form of ſound words which thou haſt heard of me, in faith and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus. That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghoſt which dwelleth in us. This thou knoweſt, that all they which are in Aſia be turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. The Lord give mercy unto the houſe of Oneſiphorus; for he oft refreſhed me, and was not aſhamed of my chain. But when he was in Rome, he ſought me out very diligently, and found me. The Lord grant unto him, that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day: And in how many things he miniſtered unto me at Epheſus, thou knoweſt very well.

The form of ſound words.] By ſound words we are to underſtand the doctrine of the Goſpel; by "the form of ſound words," the truths and doctrine of the Goſpel, methodically diſpoſed and digeſted; and to hold it faſt is, not to ſwerve from it in the courſe of our miniſtry, but pertinaciouſly to adhere to it, not parting with it our ſelves, nor ſuffering it to be adulterated by others. This "form of ſound words" ſome take to be the articles of our Creed, in the words we now have them; probably, the ſame in ſenſe, if not in words. This is call'd "that good thing which was committed to Timothy to keep," ver. 14. Learn hence, 1. That ſuch a "form of ſound words" is very faithfully to be retained, and carefully to be kept unto. 2. That "faith and love" are the hands whereby we are to hold faſt Goſpel-truth; "Hold faſt the form of ſound words, in faith and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus." And, 3. That as Chriſtians are to hold theſe evangelical truths faſt in their judgment, ſo are they to hold them forth in their lives and practices; "keep by the Holy Ghoſt, which dwelleth in us:" That is, The power and aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt will not be wanting to our endeavours, to help our memory, love, and practice, if we be not wanting to our ſelves. (B.) The parakatatehke, ver. 12, 14 (or paratheke, as it is read in St. Chryſoſtome, and in the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other manuſcripts) being to be underſtood of the whole Chriſtian doctrine, it is very reaſonable to underſtand the hypotypoſis, here mention'd, of a ſhort ſummary of Chriſtian faith, as the ſaid word imports. (Wells) See the notes on Rom. ii. 20. vi. 17. and xii. 6. 1 Tim. i. 14, 18. and vi. 20.

Thou knoweſt, that all.] By "all they which are in Aſia," we are to underſtand very many, almoſt all; not every individual perſon. Some think they were teachers in Aſia; others, that they were private Chriſtians: Some, that they were his companions and followers, who, when they ſaw him impriſon'd, deſerted and left him; and particularly, "Phygellus and Hermogenes." Yet note here, 1. That he does not tax them of apoſtaſy from Chriſt. 2. That ſin may, and oftentimes has, the major vote on its ſide; the generality going one way, and uſually the wrong way: Sinners, like ſheep, run after one another; and, like fiſhes, ſwim down the ſtream together! (B.) 3. That the perſecution of the paſtors diſcovers the true ſheep. He who is drawn to admire the truth, only by the figure, and the reputation of the preacher, will ſoon deſert both, when he ſhall ſee them treated ill. (Q.) And, 4. That the Apoſtle's ſaying, "This thou knoweſt," is an argument, that Timothy reſided there (at Epheſus,) and probably ever ſince the Apoſtle's leaving Aſia. (Fell and Wall) And conſequently, that this Epiſtle is written earlier than many learned men contend for, as we have ſhewn in the Preface.

The houſe of Oneſiphorus.] What "the houſe of Oneſiphorus" here ſignifies, is thought fit to be examin'd by ſome, in order to the doctrine of praying for the dead: For, becauſe the prayer is here for the houſhold, and not for the maſter of it, it is by ſome preſently concluded, that Oneſiphorus himſelf was dead at that time; and then, that being ſuppoſed, it appears, that St. Paul prays for him, viz. "That he may find mercy of the Lord in that day," ver. 18. But neither is there any evidence of Oneſiphorus being then dead, nor probability of it here. For of this Oneſiphorus theſe two things may be obſerved from hence: 1. That his family was now at Epheſus; and accordingly he ſalutes it there, chap. iv. 19. and conſequently, that there was his ordinary place of abode: And agreeably it is here ſaid of him, that he had relieved Paul when he was at Epheſus, ver. 18. and that is the reaſon why, in an Epiſtle to Timothy, reſiding in that city, this mention is made of his family. 2. That he was at the time when Paul wrote this, abſent from his home, in all probability at Rome, (for genomenos muſt be rendred being, not when he was) at leaſt but lately departed, and ſo ſtill on his way from Rome, where Paul was a priſoner, and where Oneſiphorus had ſought and found him out, ver. 17. and without fear viſited and relieved him. And this is a fair account, why Paul, writing to Timothy, where his family was, mentioned them with ſo much kindneſs, but joyns not him in that remembrance, becauſe he was at Rome, from whence; and not at Epheſus, to which he wrote. And ſo all the force of that argument is vaniſhed. (H.)

Not aſhamed of my chain,] Hence we may learn, 1. That it is no new thing, for the moſt holy and innocent ſervants of Chriſt, to ſuffer hardſhip, impriſonment, baniſhment, yea, even death itſelf, for the ſake of Chriſt; and, when they do ſo, to have friends forſake, and turn their backs upon them. Proſperity affords many friends, more flatterers: But who regards the priſoner in bonds? Who cares for looking on the dial, when the ſun is off? And, 2. That not to be aſhamed of the ſaints in the day of their ſufferings, but to adminiſter to them, in ſuch a condition, is a certain ſign of a ſound and a ſincere Chriſtian. Good Oneſiphorus had this, amongſt other evidences of his gracious ſtate, that he was not aſham'd to own a perſecuted Paul in his chain: Nay, he ſought for the Apoſtle very diligently, and found him; ſo far was he from hiding his eyes from him, and forſaking him, as others did. (B.) See the notes on ver. 15. Acts xxviii. 20. and Eph. iii. 13.

Sought me out.] By this it appears, That St. Paul was not in cloſe priſon; for, if ſo, Oneſiphorus needed not to have made any great ſearch to find him. Yet, neither was he free, but committed to the cuſtody of a keeper; with whom he might go abroad to diſpatch his Affairs: And therefore, in the verſe foregoing, he ſpeaketh not of chains, in the plural number, but of a chain, in the ſingular, with which he was tied to the ſoldiers who kept him. (Aſſ.) Which is another argument, that this Epiſtle was written, during the firſt time of St. Paul's being brought to Rome, in ſuch a chain; when he was much more gently treated, than at the ſecond, when he was put to death. See the Preface to this Epiſtle, and the notes on Acts xxviii. 20.

In that day.] Viz. In the great day of judgment. (B.)

CHAP. II.

The Apoſtle here exhorts him to the practice of ſeveral duties, belonging to his ſacred function; and that by arguments drawn from ſoldiers, wreſtlers, and husbandmen: Dehorting him at the ſame time, from ſeveral ſins, which render the office of a Biſhop obnoxious to cenſure, and his perſon to contempt.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. THOU therefore, my ſon, be ſtrong in the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus. And the things that thou haſt heard of me among many witneſſes, the ſame commit thou to faithful men, who ſhall be able to teach others alſo. Thou therefore endure hardneſs, as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt. No man that warreth intangleth himſelf with the affairs of this life; that he may pleaſe him who hath choſen him to be a ſoldier. And if a man alſo ſtrive for maſteries, yet is he not crowned, except he ſtrive lawfully. The husbandman that laboureth muſt be firſt partaker of the fruits. Conſider what I ſay; and the Lord give thee underſtanding in all things.

Be ſtrong.] This ſeems to be inferr'd from ch. i. 14. the Apoſtle having interpoſed that relation of ſo many deſerting him, to make Timothy more ſtedfaſt and valiant, both in retaining and preaching the Goſpel, and the grace of God contain'd in it. (Fell) See the notes on ch. i. 6, 7, 14. and Eph. vi. 10.

The things thou haſt heard.] That is, the articles and doctrines of Chriſtianity, which thou haſt heard of me, eſtabliſh'd, or confirm'd, by the joint conſent of the reſt of the Apoſtles. (Wells) See the notes on ch. i. 13, 14. and 1 Tim. vi. 20.

Commit thou to faithful men.] Do thou communicate the ſame to others, whoſe ability and fidelity is known to thee; and appoint them, as Biſhops, of the ſeveral Churches under thee, "to teach others alſo." (Oxf.) This expoſition Dr. Whitby can hardly mention with decency. He thinks, there is no foundation for this in the text; no intimation, that God choſe this way, to continue down the faith, in an uninterrupted ſucceſſion, from age to age, of ſuch perſons; or that this was a commiſſion to Timothy, to appoint Biſhops under him, in the ſeveral Churches of Aſia. For he ſays, the Apoſtle does not appoint Timothy, as he did Titus, "to ordain Elders in every city," Tit. i. 5. And that the Biſhops of Epheſus, and the adjacent cities, were, before, not only appointed, but convened, by the Apoſtle himſelf, Acts xx. 17, 28. But to this it may be replied, briefly, 1. That Dr. Whitby himſelf, in his own notes upon the text laſt cited, argues ſtrenuouſly againſt Dr. Hammond, for having interpreted it of the Biſhops of Epheſus and the adjacent cities; and inſiſts, that the Elders there convened were no other than thoſe of Epheſus only, who were then indifferently called Presbyters and Biſhops. 2. That all Orthodox Writers, whom I have yet met with, do hold, that Timothy was appointed at Epheſus, with the ſame authority and commiſſion, as Titus was in Crete, "to ordain Elders in every city:" And I never till now met with any, who own'd the one, and yet denied the other. For, 3. That Timothy had the ſame, not only the ancient Fathers teach, but St. Paul himſelf alſo; where he tells him, to what end he left him at Epheſus, and how he ought to exerciſe that power which he had receiv'd of him by ordination, 1 Tim. i. 3. and v. 19, 22. and gives him the very ſame inſtructions, concerning the qualifications of the Biſhops, &c. ch. iii. 2, &c. on whom he was to lay his hands, as he did to Titus: All which had been impertinent to Timothy, and conſequently unworthy of the Apoſtle, if he had not appointed him to the ſame office, and with the ſame authority, as Titus had. 4. As to the ſucceſſion of Biſhops, however Dr. Whitby might be pleaſed to inſinuate his diſlike of the term uninterrupted, as Popiſh; the neceſſity of ſuch an uninterrupted ſucceſſion is well known to have been the receiv'd doctrine of the primitive Church, in all places, before Popery (properly ſo call'd) had any exiſtence: And it will not be an eaſy matter to expound Chriſt's promiſe to his eleven Apoſtles, Matth. xxviii. 20. to be with them (that is, with them and their lawful ſucceſſors) alway, even unto the end of the world, to any conſiſtent ſenſe, without underſtanding it of an uninterrupted ſucceſſion of Biſhops, from age to age; as all the records of antiquity have taught us to underſtand it. And, by the way, it is no ſmall honour and happineſs to Our Church, that we have ſuch an uninterrupted ſucceſſion, (without which no Church of Chriſt can truly continue;) as is learnedly, and at large, prov'd by Francis Maſon; to whom, eſpecially, amongſt others, the reader is recommended, for a full ſatisfaction in all the doubts, which may ariſe in relation to the doctrine of Ordination. See, alſo, Mr. W. Wotton's Sermon on this text, 1706. and the ſeveral notes on ch. i. 14. 1 Tim. i. 18. iii. 2, &c. iv. 14. v. 19, 22 and Tit. i. 5, &c.

Endure hardneſs.] Kakopatheſen. The two moſt ancient Manuſcripts, Alexandrian and Clermont, and ſome others, do here read ſynkakopatheſon, Be thou partaker with me of afflictions; agreeably with ch. i. 8. And thus alſo the Clermont reads here ſyſtratiotes, a fellow-ſoldier. (Wells) Still we find our Apoſtle proſecuting the great and general deſign of this Epiſtle; which is to direct Timothy in the faithful diſcharge of his office, as a Miniſter of the Goſpel, and particularly to prepare for ſufferings, and to inure himſelf to hardſhip, and to encounter with difficulties and dangers: Hence he compares him to a ſoldier, to a wreſtler, and an husbandman; 1. To a ſoldier, "endure hardneſs, as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt." Learn hence, That every faithful Miniſter is a ſpiritual ſoldier, warring under Jeſus Chriſt, his captain and chief commander. Muſt the ſoldier be called and do all by commiſſion? So muſt the Miniſter. Muſt the ſoldier be armed, trained up, and diſciplined, and made fit for ſervice? So muſt the Miniſter. Muſt the ſoldier ſhun no dangers, ſtick at no difficulties, paſs through thick and thin? Muſt he uſe allowed weapons, approved armour of his general's directing, not of his own inventing? All this muſt the Miniſter be and do. In a word, Muſt the ſoldier pleaſe him that hath choſen him to be a ſoldier, and in order thereto, not "entangle himſelf with the affairs of this life?" Such a life of freedom from incumbrance by ſecular affairs, ſhould the Miniſter of God deſire and endeavour after. Soldiers muſt be as free as may be from diſtractions: A ſoldier that fights in fetters, cannot fight well: He muſt put off his fetters before he puts on his armour: The Miniſter's work lies in the affairs of the other life: Now he that is entangled in the affairs of this life, will do little about the affairs of the next. He muſt alſo pleaſe his captain, not pleaſe himſelf, his appetite, his pride, his covetouſneſs; much leſs muſt he pleaſe the enemy he is to fight againſt, the devil, the world, and the fleſh. Again, 2. The Miniſter here is compared to a wreſtler, "If a man ſtrive for the maſtery;" that is, for the prize, the garland, the crown, at the end of the race, he ſhall be crowned, if "he ſtrives lawfully," if he runs fairly according to the rules of the game, and perſeveres finally till he comes to the end of the goal. Thus muſt the Miniſters of the Goſpel ſtrive for the crown of life, by putting forth all their ſtrength, exerting their utmoſt endeavours; ſuch as are now wreſtlers, ſhall e're long be conquerors. Laſtly, Timothy, and all with him in the work of the Goſpel, are here compared to husbandmen: As the husbandman muſt firſt toil and labour, before he can partake of the fruits of the earth; he muſt plow and ſow, before he can reap and gather: So muſt the Miniſter of God, by a laborious diligence, cultivate and improve his people, before he can hope to reap ſouls to Chriſt. God will reward no Miniſters but the laborious, he will never dignify drones in the Church Triumphant. Farther, by comparing Timothy to an husbandman, he intimates to him his duty, not to be diſcouraged if he doth not reap fruit preſently; the ſeed ſometimes lies under the clods long before it does appear; we muſt not deſpair of men too ſoon. And laſtly, By comparing Timothy to an husbandman, he ſeems to intimate, that he was to be ſuſtained and maintained by thoſe for whom he laboured. Thus having laid Timothy's duty before him, under the metaphor of a ſoldier, a wreſtler, and an husbandman; he counſels him to conſider what he had ſaid unto him, and deſires of God to give him a right underſtanding and ſound judgment in all things; intimating, that they that will have God's word and good counſel bleſs'd by God to their underſtanding and practice, muſt ponder upon it, conſider of it, and duly apply it to themſelves; "Conſider what I ſay, and the Lord give thee underſtanding in all things." (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 7, &c. and 25. 2 Cor. x. 4. and 1 Tim. i. 18. and thoſe here next following.

Conſider what I ſay.] Noei; Mind, or mark well, what I ſay.

The Lord give thee underſtanding.] Doe. The Alexandrian, Clermont, and ſome other Manuſcripts, as alſo the Vulgar, Syriac, and Arabic Verſions, read it (doſei) ſhall or will give. But doe is often put for doſei; as in Gen. xxvii. 28. (W. and Wells) See the notes on Coi. i. 9.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Remember that Jeſus Chriſt of the ſeed of David, was raiſed from the dead, according to my Goſpel: Wherein I ſuffer trouble as an evil-doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound. Therefore I endure all things for the elects ſakes, that they may alſo obtain the ſalvation which is in Chriſt Jeſus, with eternal glory. It is a faithful ſaying. For if we be dead with him, we ſhall alſo live with him: If we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reign with him: If we deny him, he alſo will deny us: If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny himſelf.

Remember, that Jeſus.] Our Apoſtle having, in the foregoing verſes, exhorted Timothy to patience and conſtancy under ſuffering, comes now to direct him as to the matter and ſubject of his preaching; particularly, that he inſiſt upon the incarnation and reſurrection of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. "Remember, that Jeſus Chriſt" was the promiſed Meſſias, "of the ſeed of David," not of Joſeph. Timothy is here called upon to aſſert the incarnation of Chriſt: There being ſome Hereticks which did very early deny the truth of his human nature, as the Marcionites and Manichees; as there were others that denied the reality of his Divine nature, particularly Ebion and Cerinthus. Secondly, He calls upon Timothy to preach and preſs the doctrine of Chriſt's reſurrection alſo; both becauſe upon that depended the great evidence of his Divinity, that he was really God; his reſurrection by his own power declared him to be God, Rom. i. 4. and alſo becauſe upon that depend the conſolation and ſalvation of all believers. Remember, and frequently inculcate, That Chriſt "was raiſed from the dead, according to my Goſpel;" that is, according to the Goſpel of Chriſt preached by me. Chriſt's incarnation and reſurrection, are truths much to be preached and inculcated by Miniſters, and frequently remembred and thoroughly conſidered by their people. It follows, "Wherein I ſuffer trouble, as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound;" that is, For which Goſpel, and for preaching which reſurrection, I ſuffer as a criminal, and reputed malefactor, yea, I ſuffer to that degree, that I am bound with chains for preaching Jeſus and the reſurrection: "But the word of God is not bound;" tho' they have reſtrained me, they cannot reſtrain that; that is looſe, and at liberty; when the diſpenſers of it are in bonds, that has its free courſe. Learn, 1. That the preachers of the Goſpel have from the beginning, met with great perſecutions; they have "ſuffered trouble as evil doers, even unto bonds." 2. That the perſecution of preachers doth not hinder the progreſs and liberty of the word; when Miniſters are in priſon, the word may have free paſſage, and holy men rejoice at its liberty, under their own confinement: Yea, the providence of God ſo ordered it, that St. Paul, even during his impriſonment, preached the word with all boldneſs; his confinement had cauſed the Goſpel to ſpread in Rome. Thus God out-ſhoots Satan in his own bow: He thinks when he has the Miniſters of God in priſon, he has done his work; but God over-rules and cauſes their impriſonment it ſelf to fall out rather to the furtherance of the Goſpel, "I ſuffer bonds, (ſays the Apoſtle) but the word of God is not bound." (B.) See the notes on Acts xxviii. 31. and Rom. i. 3. and thoſe which here next follow.

Chriſt, of the ſeed of David] The words, according to the placing of them in the original, ſhould rather be render'd, thus, Remember, that Jeſus Chriſt was raiſed from the dead, and was of the ſeed of David, according to my Goſpel: Whereby the Apoſtle ſeems to denote, That as the reſurrection of Chriſt was oppoſed by ſome, ſo his being "of the ſeed of David," and conſequently the true Meſſiah, was oppoſed by others. (Wells)

Was raiſed from the dead.] In all trials, doubts, or attacks made on a Chriſtian's faith, this hold is the ſtrongeſt to rely on; for it aſſures the belief of all his promiſes, and the truth of all that he taught. Therefore, our Atheiſts act cowardly, who attack this or that text, verſe, or expreſſion, of Scripture, and dare not try the general iſſue, which St. Paul does frankly offer to be tried, 1 Cor. xv. 14, &c. If it be not true, that God "raiſed from the dead" Jeſus Chriſt, who taught theſe things, (viz. of the future life, &c.) we will, without more ado, yield, that our faith is vain: And, on the other ſide, if they confeſs that to be true, they labour in vain in their attempts on ſome out-works of the Chriſtian fortreſs. (Wall) See the notes on Acts ii. 24. Rom. i. 4. and 1 Cor. xv. 14, &c.

According to my Goſpel.] See the notes on Rom. ii. 16.

Wherein I ſuffer.] See the notes on Acts ix. 16. and Eph. iii. 1.

I endure all things, for the elect's ſake.] Not in their ſtead, or that my ſufferings may be imputed unto them; but I endure afflictions, for thoſe offices which I do, towards the furthering of the ſalvation of God's elect. (Aſſ.) That is, for the ſake of Chriſtians; who are all "a choſen generation," 1 Pet. ii. 9. and who may be confirm'd in the faith, by the example of my patient ſufferings; and, continuing in it, may obtain that ſalvation to which they are called. Vain, therefore, are theſe following notes of Eſthius, viz. 1. That there is a certain election of God, which hath infallibly choſen us to ſalvation; unleſs he means this of a conditional election; God having infallibly determin'd to ſave thoſe who "make their calling and election ſure," by perſeverance in good works, 2 Pet. i. 10. 2. That, as Paul ſuffer'd thoſe things only "for the elect," ſo Chriſt died only for them. For "he taſted death for every man," Hebr. ii. 9. He died, and "gave himſelf a ranſom for all," 1 Tim. ii. 6. "Not for our ſins only, but alſo for the ſins of the whole world," 1 John ii. 2. And, 3. That neither Chriſt did, nor ought we to do, any thing, that the reprobates may obtain ſalvation: Which is horribly falſe; Chriſt's preaching to the unbelieving Jews being intended for their ſalvation, John iii. 17. v. 34, 40. and xii. 47. and for the blinded Jews the Apoſtle prays, and labours, that they might be ſaved, Rom. ix. 1, &c. and x. 1, &c. (W.) See the notes on the texts here quoted; as alſo on Rom. viii. 28, 29. and 1 Tim. i. 15.

If we be dead with him.] See the notes on Rom. v. 8. vi. 5, 8. and 2 Cor. iv. 10.

If we ſuffer.] See the notes on Luke xxii. 30. Acts xiv. 22. and Rom. viii. 18.

If we deny him.] See the notes on Luke xii. 9.

He abideth faithful.] "If we believe not," that is, if we be unfaithful and forſake him, "yet he abideth faithful," he will be true to his word; he will not forſake his own cauſe, but make good his threatnings; his own veracity ſtands firm, and is as much engaged to execute the threatning, as to fulfil the promiſe. (B.) See the notes on Rom. iii. 3.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. Of theſe things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord, that they ſtrive not about words, to no profit, but to the ſubverting of the hearers. Study to ſhew thy ſelf approved unto God; a workman that needeth not to be aſhamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. But ſhun profane and vain bablings; for they will increaſe unto more ungodlineſs. And their word will eat as doth a canker: Of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, ſaying that the reſurrection is paſt already, and overthrow the faith of ſome. Nevertheleſs, the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure; having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And, Let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt depart from iniquity. But in a great houſe there are not only veſſels of gold, and of ſilver, but alſo of wood, and of earth; and ſome to honour, and ſome to diſhonour. If a man therefore purge himſelf from theſe, he ſhall be a veſſel unto honour, ſanctified and meet for the maſters uſe, and prepared unto every good work. Flee alſo youthful luſts: But follow righteouſneſs, faith, charity, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart. But fooliſh and unlearned queſtions avoid, knowing that they do gender ſtriſes. And the ſervant of the Lord muſt not ſtrive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themſelves out of the ſnare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

Put them in remembrance.] Obſerve here, 1. The excellent advice, which St. Paul gives to Timothy, and all Miniſters of the Church, and to all the Chriſtian Churches far and near; That they ſpend not their time in diſputes, nor contend about words, which have no tendency to make men either wiſer or better, but ſerve only to violate the laws of charity, and cauſe men to wrangle eternally, and perſecute one another with hard names, and characters of reproach. Where note, The things which ought not to be matters of contention among Chriſtians; viz. 1. Such, in which we differ from each other, rather in words, than in ſenſe: For oftentimes opponents mean the ſame things, but differ only in the way and manner of expreſſion. And, 2. Such things as tend to little, or no profit, either as to faith, love, or practical godlineſs. Obſerve alſo, 2. The Apoſtle's argument, why we ſhould not contend about theſe things; Becauſe, 1. They tend to beget ſtrife and contention among Chriſtians, by dividing them into factions and parties: And, 2. They tend alſo "to the ſubverting of the hearers;" cauſing them to doubt of the truth of the faith, about which the contending parties cannot agree. (W. and B.) See the notes on Acts xv. 24 and xx. 30 and 1 Tim. i. 4.

Approved unto God.] See the notes on Rom. xvi 10.

Rightly dividing the word of truth.] That (orthotomein) to divide aright, ſhould refer to the cuſtom in ſacrifices, which were to be cut after a certain preſcribed manner, and of them ſome parts given to the Prieſts, &c. may probably be imagin'd: But, another notion of the phraſe here, as it is join'd with "the word of truth," may ſeem more probable. For, in the Old Teſtament, the Greek Tranſlators uſe of the word belongs to a way, or path, to go in; which was wont to be cut out, that it might be fitter for uſe: And thence came the Latin phraſe, viam ſecare, to cut a way; that is, to go before, and direct any in their journey; which, with the word (orthos) right, join'd with it, is to go before one, and direct him the ſtraight, or right, way to ſuch a place. Thus orthotomein hodon, (which we render to direct the path, or way) Prov. iii. 6. and xi. 5. is the rend'ring of the Hebrew, which ſignifies to ſet right, or rectify; and ſo, to cut a way right, is to put, and keep, one in the right way. And then, the Goſpel of Chriſt, "the word of truth," being moſt fitly reſembled to a way, (much better than to a ſacrifice) "rightly to cut the word of truth," is to go uprightly, and according to the truth, before others, in Chriſtianity: And that was Timothy's part, as a Doctor or Biſhop, to lead them, both by his example and doctrine, the right way that is preſcribed by Chriſt, without falling into any errors or ill practice. (H.) See the notes on Luke xii. 42.

Profane and vain babblings.] See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 4. and vi. 20.

Eat, as doth a canker.] Gangræna, a diſtemper ſo call'd, from graino, ſignifying to eat: Which, if it be not timely cured, grows incurable; not only conſuming the part where it is, but ſpreading farther in the fleſh. And ſuch is the nature of Heretical doctrine, that if it be not ſtopt in the beginning, and cured by ſolid confutations, and Eccleſiaſtical cenſures inflicted upon thoſe who are obſtinate, it will ſpread far, and run over the whole body of the Church, and corrupt the ſame. (Aſſ.) And this may be aſcrib'd, partly to the ſubtilty and activity of ſeducers; partly to the curioſity and ſimplicity of the ſeduced; and partly to the juſtice of God, for the manifeſtation of thoſe who are ſincere, and the puniſhment of thoſe who receiv'd not the truth in the love of it. (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. v. 7. and Gal. v. 9.

Hymeneus and Philetus.] Concerning Hymeneus, we read, 1 Tim. i. 20. that he, and Alexander, had "made ſhipwrack of the faith," and were therefore "delivered unto Satan;" and here we find what their hereſy was.

That the reſurrection is paſt already.] It is probable, they taught that there was no other reſurrection, but the ſpiritual riſing of the ſoul from the death of ſin; or elſe the renovation of the condition of the world under the Goſpel, as the word reſurrection is ſometimes uſed. (Aſſ.) The belief of the reſurrection is one of the chief foundations of religion; and therefore the Devil cauſed it to be undermined one of the firſt. (Q.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 1, 12, and 44.

The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure.] There being here mention made of a ſeal, ſome ſuppoſe, that the Apoſtle deſign'd to have theſe two following ſentences, "The Lord knoweth them that are his," and "Let every one that nameth," &c. conceiv'd as the two impreſſes of the ſaid ſeal: And further, on this ſcore, they obſerve, That the word Themelios is, or may be, uſed to denote an obligation, or contract, to which the ſaid ſeal is affix'd. But, ſince ſeals have generally but one impreſs; and ſince the word ſeal is uſed, in other places of the writings of this Apoſtle, to denote no more than a confirmation; and ſince Themelios is uſually taken to denote a foundation, and this ſenſe of the word is very applicable to the deſign of the Apoſtle; on theſe conſiderations, I think, the ſenſe here given, in the following paraphraſe, is to be preferr'd; viz. "The foundation of God," that is, the fundamental doctrine of the reſurrection, whereon principally God has deſign'd the truth of the Goſpel to be built, "ſtandeth ſure," or firm, "having this ſeal," that is, being confirm'd after the ſame way, as God confirm'd the authority of Moſes and Aaron, againſt the gainſayings of Korah and his companions: Namely, as in reply to Korah, &c. Moſes anſwer'd, The Lord knoweth them who are his, Numb. xvi. 5. that is, God will acknowledge thoſe who are commiſſion'd by him to reveal his will, and will maintain their cauſe againſt all oppoſers; ſo, the ſame may be ſaid by us, the true Apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt, in oppoſition to the falſe teachers. And likewiſe, as Moſes then ſaid to the congregation of Iſrael, in reference to Korah, &c. Depart from the tents of theſe wicked men, Numb. xvi. 26. ſo may we ſay to Chriſtians, in reſpect to the preſent falſe teachers, "Let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt depart from iniquity;" that is, from the doctrines of theſe falſe teachers, which tend to iniquity. (Wells) See the notes on Matth. vii. 23.

But, in a great houſe.] Here the Apoſtle tells us, it is not to be wonder'd at, that there ſhould be ſuch perſons (as Hymeneus and Philetus, &c.) in the Church, becauſe the viſible Church is God's great houſe. Now, "in a great houſe," it is no uncommon thing, to have veſſels of all ſorts, ſome "of wood, and of earth," others "of gold and ſilver;" ſome to honourable uſes, and others to diſhonourable. In like manner it is in the Church of Chriſt; wherein will be a number of orthodox, and alſo of heterodox, Chriſtians; hypocrites and ſincere Chriſtians. He adviſes Timothy therefore, not to be ſcandalized at them, but to "purge himſelf from them," to keep himſelf pure from hereſy and impiety: Whereby he would manifeſt himſelf to "be a veſſel unto honour, ſanctified and meet for the maſter's uſe;" that is, for the ſervice and glory of God, and diſpoſed for every good work. (B.) See the notes on Rom. ix. 21.

Flee alſo youthful luſts.] See the notes on Eph. v. 4.

Follow righteouſneſs, &c.] See the notes on Rom. xiv. 19. 1 Cor. xiv. 1, &c. Gal. v. 22. 1 Tim. i. 5. and vi. 11.

Fooliſh and unlearned queſtions.] See the notes on ver. 16. and 1 Tim. i. 4.

Muſt not ſtrive.] That is, He muſt not be of a contentious diſpoſition; nor at all ſtrive about "fooliſh and unlearned queſtions. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. xii. 19. Rom. xv. 5. Phil. iii. 16. and 1 Tim. iii. 3.

Gentle unto all.] See the notes on Rom. xiv. 19. and xv. 5. and Eph. iv. 15.

Apt to teach.] See the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2.

In meekneſs inſtructing.] Paideuonta, as properly ſignifies correcting, as inſtructing; but both to be done with gentleneſs and meekneſs, as to children: And ſo it is uſed, 1 Cor. xi. 32. Heb. xii. 6. and elſewhere. See the notes on 1 Cor. iii. 2. iv. 21. and xi. 32. and Gal. vi. 1.

If God peradventure will give.] That is, Counting it not impoſſible, or hopeleſs, but that, by the grace of God, they may be brought to repentance, and ſo come to acknowledge the truth at length. (H.)

Taken captive by him at his will.] Ezogremenoi hyp' autou, eis to ekeinou thelema. That (to thelema) will, refers not to the Devil, which is the immediate antecedent, but to God, which is the remote, ver. 25. may be conjectur'd by the word ekeinou joined with it. For, if it belong'd to the Devil, then (autou) his, immediately precedent, would have ſerved the turn; and the addition of this other demonſtrative, not ejus, but illius (tho' our Engliſh hath no diverſity or variety of words to expreſs it) clearly divides it from (autou) him. The only difficulty will be, whether eis to thelema ekeinou ſhall be thought to denote the impulſive cauſe, God's will or pleaſure, in giving repentance, (and ſo the words be rendred, according to his will) or the terminus to which their recovering tendeth. To this latter the context ſeems to incline, by comparing this verſe with ver. 25. For there God's giving repentance (eis epignoſin) to the acknowledgment, makes (eis) to, a note of the term to which that repentance tended; to wit, "the acknowledgment of the truth;" and then, by analogy, (ananepſoſin eis thelema) recover to the will, will make thelema (the will of God) the term again to which, (as the ſnare of the Devil was the term out of which) they recover; and accordingly (thelema Theou) the will of God, is his will to be obeyed, or practiſed, Eph. vi. 6. and ſo our ſanctification is ſaid to be the will of God. As for a third poſſible rendring of it, that they ſhould be ſaid to be taken and caught by the Devil, at or according to the will of God, permitting them ſo to be, that is made improbable by the punctation, the comma's, before and after ezogremenoi hyp' autou, taken, or caught, by him, putting thoſe words as in a parentheſis, and connecting eis to ekeinou thelema, to the will of him, to the verb precedent ananepſoſin, recover, thus, whether they may not recover to his will, that is, to that ſtate, thoſe practices, which God requires. As for the diſtance betwixt (ekeinou) of him here, and (Theos) God, ver. 25. which may make this interpretation leſs probable, it is very ordinarily to be obſerved; and in the very next chapter, ver. 9. we have an example of it, where the (hos kai he ekeinon) as alſo theirs, in the end of the ninth verſe, is as far diſtant from Jannes and Jambres in the beginning of the eighth verſe, (to which it certainly refers) as ekeinou is diſtant here from Theos. Theophylact goes farther yet, and will have the phraſe, caught and taken by him, refer to God alſo: But that cannot well be admitted, becauſe in all reaſon they muſt be conceived to be caught by him who lays the ſnare; and that is the Devil in the former part of the verſe. (Idem)

CHAP. III.

The Apoſtle here deſcribeth the falſe Teachers, and other Enemies of the Truth, who were afterwards to ariſe: And encourageth him againſt them; by his own example, and by the Divine authority of the Holy Scriptures.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. THIS know alſo, that in the laſt days perillous times ſhall come. For men ſhall be lovers of their own ſelves, covetous, boaſters, proud, blaſphemers, diſobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, falſe accuſers, incontinent, fierce, deſpiſers of thoſe that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleaſures more than lovers of God; having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power thereof: From ſuch turn away. For of this ſort are they which creep into houſes, and lead captive ſilly women laden with ſins, led away with divers luſts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, ſo do theſe alſo reſiſt the truth:

Men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they ſhall proceed no further: For their folly ſhall be manifeſt unto all men, as theirs alſo was.

In the laſt days.] See the notes on Acts ii. 17.

Perillous times.] When evil examples and faſhions by many are follow'd. (Andr.) The times, wherein the Apoſtles themſelves ſuffer'd martyrdom, were, for perſecution and murder, as bad as ever could be expected: But yet St. Paul reckons a general corruption of manners among Chriſtians, by ſuch abominable vices as he here, in the next verſes, foretels, to be more perillous to the Faith, than any perſecution from without. And ſo it has prov'd. It is a harder matter, to keep up a religious temper, in a world of debauchees and hypocrites profeſſing Chriſtianity, than it is among barbarous Heathen perſecutors: And where ſuch corruptions prevail, and no reformation is made, Chriſtianity is not long-lived. (Wall)

Lovers of their own ſelves.] That is, of their own pleaſures or profit, without any regard to the welfare of others. (Wells) Sins, eſpecially great ones, ſeldom go ſingle and alone, but commonly generate and beget one another. Thus here, ſelf-love begets covetouſneſs, covetouſneſs pride, and pride blaſphemy, &c. (B.)

Without natural affection.] See a lively deſcription of theſe, and ſuch like, ſins and ſinners, in the notes on Rom. i. 31.

Deſpiſers of thoſe that are good.] Aphilagathoi, Not lovers of thoſe that are good. An expreſſion, by way of meioſis, to ſignify rather ſuch as hate thoſe who are good: Or, who do not only hate good men, but goodneſs it ſelf. (Leigh)

Traitours.] Prodotai; Treacherous; betraying one another. (Wall)

Having a form.] That is, an outward ſhew of godlineſs, but denying, by the wickedneſs of their principles, or practices, or both, the power thereof; that is, not letting the Goſpel have its due power over, or effect upon, them, ſo as to make them frame their principles and practices agreeable to the doctrine of the Goſpel. (Wells) But withal, let me add, that whoſoever makes a good profeſſion "hath a form of godlineſs;" and is ſo far commendable, as he profeſſes well: If there be not matter to this form, the fault is in what there is not, and not in what there is. Certainly, Religion, is not chaos-like, without form. As civility cannot, ſo neither can godlineſs, be without due form. He who hath but a form is an hypocrite, but he who hath not a form is an Atheiſt. Both are human Devils well met: An hypocrite is a masked Devil; an Atheiſt is a Devil unmask'd: But which of them ſhall, without repentance, be deeper in hell, they ſhall once feel; I determine not. (Hall) See Biſhop Hall's, and Dr. J. Preſton's, Sermons on this text, at large.

From ſuch turn away.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 17. 1 Cor. v. 11. and Tit. iii. 10.

Creep into houſes.] Endunontes; not only creeping in, as it were, clandeſtinely, but ſearching and intruding into the ſecrets of families; that they may get an abſolute tyranny over the conſciences and eſtates of thoſe they deceive. (Leigh and Blackw.) Dr. Wall ſuppoſes, there were ſome ſuch at Epheſus: Elſe (ſays he) we ſhould take this character, with the following clauſes, to be a prophetical deſcription of the Jeſuits in the Popiſh countries, and of another ſuch ſort of men in the Proteſtant countries. It were to be wiſh'd, that the learned Doctor had ſpoke out, whom he meant by this laſt inſinuation. Becauſe, if it was meant of ſome who have indeed no regular miſſion, and yet take upon them to preach without being ſent, I have nothing to ſay to his reflection: But, if any one ſhall underſtand him of regular Clergymen, preaching in houſes, or upper-rooms, at any time when the powers in being will not ſuffer them to do their bounden duty elſewhere, he muſt be taught, that this is no other than what our Bleſſed Saviour himſelf, as well as his holy Apoſtles, and the Martyrs, of the firſt and beſt ages of the Church, authoriz'd and practis'd, in ſpite of all anti-chriſtian oppoſition and deadly perſecution. See the notes on Acts i. 13. ii. 1, 42. and v. 41. and Rom. x. 15.

Lead captive ſilly women.] Gynaicaria; an excellent diminutive word; denoting inconſtancy, folly, and lewdneſs. (Blackw.)

Ever learning.] The Apoſtle does not tax theſe women, for endeavouring, by continual learning, to improve their knowledge; but for curious enquiring into every novelty of doctrine, and following now one teacher, now another; having no care to attain to ſound and ſaving truth. (Aſſ.)

Jannes and Jambres.] Theſe are generally underſtood to have been the two chief of the Egyptian magicians, who ſtrove with Moſes: And that tho' their names are not recorded, Exod. vii. 11. yet they are here related by the Apoſtle, either out of ſome of the Jewiſh writers, not now extant, or elſe from ſome ancient tradition. However, 'tis certain, the names of theſe magicians were noted: For both of 'em are mention'd by Numenius, the Pythagorean Philoſopher, and Artabanus the Hiſtorian; and the former of 'em by Pliny. For more particulars, the curious reader may conſult Dr. Hammond on this text, and the notes of the learned Mr. J. Gregory.

Reprobate concerning the faith.] See the notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 5.

They ſhall proceed no further.] The reign of error, and of the wickedneſs of men, has its bounds: That of truth, and of charity, has none but eternity. The faithful perſon perſeveres in the love of the truth, even when oppreſs'd, and comforts himſelf with the hopes of its triumph; patiently waiting for the ſeaſon appointed in the deſigns of God. (Q.)

As theirs alſo was.] Viz. As that of Jannes and Jambres was. See the laſt note on ch. ii.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13. But thou haſt fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpoſe, faith, long-ſuffering, charity, patience, perſecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lyſtra; what perſecutions I endured: But out of them all the Lord delivered me. Yea, and all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer perſecution. But evil men and ſeducers ſhall wax worſe and worſe, deceiving, and being deceived.

Thou haſt fully known.] Parekolouthekas, the original word, does primarily, or literally, ſignify to follow; and in this ſenſe it is here applicable to ſeveral of the inſtances following: But, becauſe it is not applicable to all of 'em, therefore commentators and interpreters are agreed, in judging, that the word ought here to be taken in a ſecondary ſenſe; viz. wherein it ſignifies to know fully, or the like. (Wells)

My doctrine, &c.] Theſe are parts which compoſe an Apoſtolical perſon; viz. ſound doctrine, penitent life, pure intention or purpoſe, generous faith, long-ſuffering towards the weak, indefatigable charity, and patience under afflictions, perſecutions, and oppoſitions to that which is good. (Q.)

At Antioch.] That is, in Piſidia; for he ſuffer'd none of theſe at Antioch in Syria. (Wall)

Shall ſuffer perſecution.] See the notes on Acts xiv. 22. and 1 Theſſ. iii. 3.

Wax worſe and worſe.] Our Apoſtle having acquainted us, in the former verſe, with the condition of the godly, that they muſt expect and prepare for perſecution, he lets us, in this verſe, underſtand the miſerable condition of the wicked, that they "wax worſe and worſe:" Their proficiency is mere apoſtaſy; they actively deceive others, and are paſſively deceived themſelves, by the Devil, that lying ſpirit, that grand impoſtor. Learn hence, That the proſperous eſtate of wicked men is much more dangerous and miſerable, than the afflicted and perſecuted condition of the godly; the good by perſecution grow better, but the wicked by living eaſy "wax worſe and worſe." (B.) See the notes on 2 Theſſ. ii. 11.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17. But continue thou in the things which thou haſt learned and haſt been aſſured of, knowing of whom thou haſt learned them; and that from a child thou haſt known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wiſe unto ſalvation, through faith which is in Chriſt Jeſus. All Scripture is given by inſpiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for inſtruction in righteouſneſs: That the man of God may be perfect, throughly furniſhed unto all good works.

But, continue thou.] Several arguments are here made uſe of by St. Paul, to preſs Timothy to the duty of perſeverance in the doctrine of Chriſt, contained in the holy Scriptures: 1. From the authority of the perſon, from whom he had received that doctrine; to wit, St. Paul himſelf, an inſpired Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt: "Continue in the things which thou haſt learned;" that is, from me, and by me, as an authorized Apoſtle: All the ſervants of God, but eſpecially the Miniſters of God, muſt continue conſtant in the faith, and ſtedfaſt in the truth received. 2. From his long acquaintance with the Scriptures, even from his childhood, yea, from his infancy; "from a Child thou haſt known the holy Scriptures," &c. And the argument lies thus, Thou, O Timothy, haſt learnt the Scriptures from thy infancy: Now, what a ſhame would it be for thee, who haſt been taught ſo early the true religion, to turn from it and forſake it? "from a child thou haſt known the holy Scriptures;" from a ſuckling, as the word ſignifies. (B.) Note here alſo, 3. The care of the Jews, to teach their children the Scriptures, even from their childhood. From five years old (ſay the Talmudiſts) we put our children to read the Bible. And Joſephus informs us, that their children, learning their laws from the firſt dawnings of ſenſe and reaſon in them, had them engraven in their ſouls. Which, as it condemns the practice of the Church of Rome, in witholding thoſe ſacred oracles from old and young; ſo alſo does it reprehend the generality of Chriſtians, who are more concern'd to teach their children things unneceſſary; or at the beſt, things only needful for this preſent life, than to inſtruct them in that word of God, which "is able to make them wiſe unto ſalvation." (W.) Here Mr. Fox gives us a ſummary of the character of a good Miniſter of Chriſt; which may be of uſe, eſpecially to candidates for Holy orders; and to which I therefore refer them. See alſo the notes on ch. ii. 2.

Able to make thee wiſe.] Obſerve here, 1. The title given to the word of God; "the holy Scriptures:" they are holy in their author, holy in their matter, holy in their penmen, holy in their end and deſign, which is to make us holy, John xvii. 17. The word of God is not only pure but purifying, not only clean but cleanſing. 2. The high commendation given of the Word; "It is able to make thee wiſe unto ſalvation:" No knowledge can bring us to ſalvation, without the knowledge of the holy Scriptures; the Philoſophers will teach you wiſdom, but not a word of ſalvation by a Redeemer, without whom our ſalvation is impoſſible; therefore it is here added, "wiſe unto ſalvation, through faith which is in Chriſt." (B.) And further note, That the books of Scripture are therefore call'd Canonical, becauſe, as they had their prime and ſovereign authority from God himſelf, by whoſe divine will and inſpiration they were firſt written, and by whoſe bleſſed providence they have been ever ſince preſerv'd and deliver'd over to poſterity; ſo they have been likewiſe receiv'd, and in all times acknowledg'd by his Church, to be the infallible rule of our faith, and the perfect ſquare of our actions, in all things that are any way needful for our eternal ſalvation. (Coſin) See Dr. Alleſtree's ſermon on this text; and the notes here following.

All Scripture is given.] Our Apoſtle cloſes this chapter with an exhortation to Timothy, to perſevere in his ſtudy of the Holy Scriptures, by a three-fold argument, drawn, 1. From their dignity and authority: They are "given by inſpiration of God;" that is, they are not the contrivance of any man's wit and fancy, but a revelation of the mind and will of God; and thoſe that wrote them were excited to it, and aſſiſted in it by the Spirit of God: No part of Scripture had either Angels or men for its author; but every part of Scripture is divinely inſpired or breathed by God, both for matter and order, ſtyle and words. 2. From the utility and ſufficiency of the Holy Scriptures: They are "profitable for doctrine and inſtruction," teaching us what to to know and believe in order to ſalvation, concerning God and Chriſt and ourſelves, &c. "for reproof" of error and confutation of falſe doctrine; "for correction" of ſin and evil manners; "for inſtruction in righteouſneſs," directing us how to lead a righteous and holy life according to the will of God. 3. From the perfection of them: They are able to make "the man of God perfect, throughly furniſhed unto all good works;" that is, to make the miniſters of Chriſt complete in knowledge, faith, and holineſs, every way fitted for their work and duty, as Chriſtians, and as Miniſters. Obſerve here, 1. That the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, and not of the New, muſt be the Scriptures here intended; they being the only Scriptures Timothy had known from a Child; that was before the Scriptures of the New Teſtament were written. 2. That the Apoſtle doth not ſay, that theſe Scriptures were of themſelves ſufficient to make Timothy wiſe unto ſalvation, but only that with faith in Chriſt Jeſus they were ſufficient for that end; much more then muſt the Scriptures both of Old and New Teſtament together, when accompanied with faith in Chriſt Jeſus, be ſufficient for that end. 3. That the Scriptures are a perfect, plain, and ſufficient rule, in all things neceſſary to ſalvation: 1. They are a perfect rule, becauſe the writers of them were divinely inſpired; and conſequently their writings are infallible: 2. They are a plain rule, otherwiſe they would be no rule at all, of no more uſe to direct our faith and practice than a ſun-dial in a dark room is to tell us the hour of the day: A rule that is not plain, whatever it may be in itſelf, is of no uſe to us till it be made plain: 3. They are a ſufficient rule; they are able to make the man of God perfect and wiſe to ſalvation. Here the Church of Rome diſtinguiſhes and ſays, the Scriptures are ſufficient to ſalvation, but not to inſtruction: To whom one of the martyrs replied, If ſo, God ſend me the ſalvation, and you the inſtruction. (B.) See alſo Dr. Whitby's annotations at large on this text; and Bp. Chappel, of the uſe of Holy Scripture, 1653. together with the reſpective notes on Luke xvi. 29. John v. 39. and xxi. 25. Acts i. 1. Rom. xv. 4. Gal. iii. 24. Eph. ii. 10. and 1 Tim. iv. 13.

CHAP. IV.

Further exhortations to a faithful diſcharge of his office; with a further deſcription alſo of the oppoſers of the Goſpel: The Apoſtle's readineſs to die for it; and his certainty of a reward: Directions as to ſome common affairs: Cautions againſt Alexander: And an account of what had already befallen himſelf.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. I Charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing, and his kingdom: Preach the word, be inſtant in ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-ſuffering, and doctrine. For the time will come, when they will not endure ſound doctrine; but after their own luſts ſhall they heap to themſelves teachers, having itching ears. And they ſhall turn away their ears from the truth, and ſhall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an Evangeliſt, make full proof of thy miniſtry.

I charge thee.] See the notes on ch. ii. 14. and 1 Tim. vi. 13.

Judge the quick and the dead.] See the notes on Acts x. 42. and xvii. 31. 2 Cor. v. 10. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 7.

Preach the word.] Obſerve here, The perſon to whom this charge is given, viz. To Timothy, a perſon regularly ordain'd and ſet apart to the work. See the notes on Acts xviii. 25. Rom. x. 15. 1 Cor. ix. 16. and 1 Tim. iv. 14.

In ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon.] That is, ſaith Chryſoſtom, not only when thou art in the Church, but alſo in thy houſe; not only in times of peace and ſafety, but alſo when thou art in priſon; not only in time of health, but even when thou art to die. (W.) There is no contradiction in theſe commands: Both may, and ought to be done, by a faithful Miniſter of God, who preacheth the word in ſeaſon, when God offers him a fair opportunity, and the hearers deſire, and call for it, Nehem. viii. 1, &c. and the argument he handleth is ſeaſonable for the time: "Out of ſeaſon," when a door of utterance is opened unto him, that he may preach; but his hearers are not willing to hear, either becauſe they are ill-affected to the word, or diſtracted by other buſineſs, or they like not to hear ſuch points touch'd or meddled with at ſuch a time; when yet he knows it to be needful for the health of their ſouls, to hear ſuch doctrines handled, or duties preſs'd. (Aſſ.) A paſtor deceives himſelf, if he thinks he has juſtly diſcharg'd his office, by mounting the pulpit, and preaching the Goſpel: He muſt try all manner of ways to gain one ſoul. (Q.) He muſt, many times, make his own way to do thoſe duties, without waiting for more favourable times, which perhaps may not come till it is too late. (Wall) See the notes on Luke xiv. 23. and Acts xx. 7.

The time will come.] Are we not already arrived at theſe miſerable times? The more we perceive them approaching, the more zeal ought we to have, to make the truth known. Let us not judge of any doctrine by the great number of the teachers; but of the teachers by the doctrine. It is not the doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, if it be remote from the holy ſeverity of his Goſpel; if it flatters the inclinations of the ſinner; or if it be favourable to his luſts. (Q.) See the notes on ch. iii. 1. and 1 Tim. iv. 1, &c.

Heap to themſelves teachers.] Forſaking thoſe who are ſet over them by the Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors, they will chuſe for themſelves; and, to ſatisfy their own vain itchings, and ſecular advantages, have many falſe teachers; who ſhall flatter and humour them. (Oxf. and Wells) See the notes on ch. iii. 6.

They ſhall turn away.] Or rather, will turn away. See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 4.

Watch thou in all things.] See the notes on ch. ii. 3. Matth. xxiv. 42. Eph. iv. 11. and Col. iv. 17.

Ver. 6, 7, 8. For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord the righteous judge ſhall give me at that day: And not to me only, but unto all them alſo that love his appearing.

Ready to be offered.] To be ſacrificed, or martyr'd. The word in the original, ſpendomai, ſignifieth properly, libation, or a drink-offering: And he alludeth to the pouring out of blood, or wine which was uſed in ſacrifice; and ſeems withal to intimate the manner of death, wherewith he was to glorify God; which was not by being offer'd, as a holocauſt, by fire, as Polycarp, and many others were, but by a death, wherein his blood was to be ſhed or pour'd out; namely, beheading. (Beza, Heinſ. Aſſ. Leigh, and B.) This is the text, from whence 'tis generally concluded, that St. Paul wrote this Epiſtle but a very little while before his martyrdom: But ſeveral reaſons againſt that concluſion have been intimated in the Preface. To which may be added here, 1. That if we take the words in their literal ſenſe, ede ſpendomai, I am already, as it were, poured out, or made a ſacrifice, will prove too much; even that he was now offer'd, rather than ready to be offer'd. (Oxf.) And, 2. That epheſteke does not ſo properly ſignify, "the time of my departure is at hand," as that it hath been at hand. (H.) See Dr. Dillingham's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 9, and 16, &c. Rom. ii. 6. and vi. 23. 1 Cor. ix. 24, 25. Phil. i. 23. ii. 17. and iii. 14. Col. iii. 1. 2 Theſſ. i. 6. and 1 Tim. vi. 12. and the other notes here next following.

At that day.] See the notes on ch. i. 12, 18. and 2 Theſſ. i. 7. and Dr. Whitby at large upon this text.

That love his appearing.] As being duly prepared for it. Which therefore is the greateſt encouragement that can be, for others alſo to "keep the faith," even unto death. (Wells) To be a good Chriſtian, and to love the glorious appearing of Chriſt, is one and the ſame thing, in the language of St. Paul. As that perſon loves it, who behaves himſelf ſo as to be able to deſire it with confidence; ſo he does not love it, who lives as if he had no expectation of it at all. (Q.) See the notes on Col. iii. 3.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Do thy diligence to come ſhortly unto me. For Demas hath forſaken me, having loved this preſent world, and is departed unto Theſſalonica: Creſcens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia. Only Luke is with me. Take Mark and bring him with thee: For he is profitable to me for the miniſtry. And Tychicus have I ſent to Epheſus. The cloke that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comeſt, bring with thee, and the books, but eſpecially the parchments. Alexander the copper-ſmith did me much evil: The Lord reward him according to his works. Of whom be thou ware alſo; for he hath greatly withſtood our words. At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me, but all men forſook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge. Notwithſtanding, the Lord ſtood with me, and ſtrengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: And I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. And the Lord ſhall deliver me from every evil work, and will preſerve me unto his heavenly kingdom: To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. Salute Priſca and Aquila, and the houſhold of Oneſiphorus. Eraſtus abode at Corinth: But Trophimus have I left at Miletum ſick. Do thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with thy ſpirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

¶ The ſecond Epiſtle unto Timotheus, ordained the firſt biſhop of the church of the Epheſians, was written from Rome, when Paul was brought before Nero the ſecond time.

Come ſhortly unto me.] See the notes on ver 21. and ch. i. 3.

Demas hath forſaken me.] This Demas was one of thoſe whom St. Paul ſtiles (ſynergoi) "his fellow-labourers," Philem. 24. But whence he came, or when he was admitted into the miniſtry, we are not inform'd. Some are of opinion, that his forſaking the Apoſtle, here complain'd of, was but a ſeceſſion for a ſhort time, and that he ſoon recollected himſelf, and return'd to his duty: Which is generally affirm'd by thoſe who underſtand this Epiſtle to have been written before that to Philemon. But, however that may be, the Apoſtle (as Dr. Whitby obſerves) does not ſay, that Demas had forſaken the Chriſtian religion, or that he betook himſelf to his own ſecular affairs, forſaking his attendance on the ſervice of God in the Church, or preferr'd the things of this life before thoſe of a future: But, as the Ancients do expound the words, he left the Apoſtle in this time of danger, conſulting the ſafety of his own life. For ho nyn aion, in the Scripture-phraſe, ſtill ſignifies, this preſent life; as in Mark x. 30. and 1 Tim. iv. 8. and vi. 17. He ſeems therefore only to ſay of him here, what he ſays of others, ver. 16. "At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me, but all men forſook me." (W.) See Dr. Byam's Sermon on this text; and the notes on Rom. xii. 11. and the Preface to Philemon.

Take Mark, and bring him.] See the notes on Acts xv. 37. and the Preface to this Epiſtle.

Tychicus have I ſent.] See the notes on Col. iv. 7.

The cloke that I left.] Ton phelonen ſome take for a riding coat, or travelling cloke; as if it were made, by a tranſpoſition of letters, from the Latin penula. But the moſt ancient Syriac interpreter takes it for domum, or repoſitorium ſcriptorum: And Heſychius, a moſt exquiſite Greek grammarian, inclineth to this opinion, that by it the Apoſtle meant a little deſk, or coffer, wherein he laid his books or writings. (Aſſ.) Phavorinus renders it to marion bembranon; which, without queſtion, ſhould be written tomarion membranon: And ſo the explication of phelones will be a little piece of parchment roll'd, or folded up; which perhaps may be all one with the (membranai) parchments here alſo mention'd; becauſe they being added with an eſpecially, ſeem to denote ſomewhat before-mention'd, rather than any new thing. (H.) Conſentient with which I find Tremellius, Heinſius, Dr. Whitby, and the author of an Eſſay for a New Tranſlation. See the Preface to this Epiſtle.

Alexander, the copperſmith.] Who this was is not known; except it was the ſame who is mention'd Acts xix. 32. where ſee the notes.

The Lord reward him.] Apodoë. The Syriac, and the King's Manuſcript, read it apodoſëi, ſhall, or will reward him. The full import of this phraſe is no more than a prophetical denunciation or prediction, of what ſhould, in the juſt judgment of God, befall him. And it is a vulgar Hebraiſm, for the imperative and future tenſes to be uſed promiſcuouſly, the one for the other. (H.)

I was delivered.] See the Preface to this Epiſtle.

The mouth of the lion.] This is generally interpreted of Nero: But, it may alſo ſignify only the greatneſs of the danger. (Oxf.) A proverbial form of ſpeech, alluding to the gaping of the lion after his prey, and the direfulneſs of that. (H.)

Salute Priſca and Aquila.] 'Tis not to be doubted, but the Priſca, here mention'd with Aquila, was the ſame who is elſewhere call'd Priſcilla: Nor are there wanting ſome Manuſcripts which expreſly read it Priſcilla here; as do alſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions. (Wells) Theſe ſeem at that time to have been at Epheſus; and therefore Timothy was then alſo at, or near, the ſame place. (Wall) See the notes on Acts xviii. 24. and Rom. xvi. 3.

The houſhold of Oneſiphorus.] See the notes on ch. i. 16.

Eraſtus abode.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 22.

Left at Miletum.] Others, inſtead of (en Mileto) at Miletum, read it (en Melite) in Melita; that is, Malta; where St. Paul and his companions got to ſhore, after their ſhip-wreck, Acts xxviii. 1.

Come before winter.] This Epiſtle ſeems hence, to have been written either in the ſpring, or at leaſt early in the ſummer, and by this direction to Timothy, St. Paul ſeems not to have been under any apprehenſion, that his martyrdom was then very nigh at hand. (Oxf. and Wall)

Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia.] Pudens and Claudia were husband and wife, and Claudia a Briton, if thoſe be the ſame who are mention'd in ſeveral epigrams by Martial: And Linus is conceiv'd to be the ſame who was afterwards Biſhop of Rome. (Cave, Oxf. and Wall)

The END of the Second Epiſtle of St. PAUL to TIMOTHY.

ANNOTATIONS
Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE, TO TITUS.

HAVING treated at large upon the two Epiſtles of St. Paul to Timothy, I may be the ſhorter on this; which is much of the ſame nature with thoſe other. All that needs to be particularly taken notice of here, is,

i. That Titus was a Gentile, who had been early converted to Chriſtianity by St. Paul, and imploy'd by him in divers places for the ſervice of the Church; as appears, Acts xvi. 3. 2 Cor. viii. 6. Gal. ii. 3. and elſewhere: Whom the Apoſtle left in Crete (now call'd Candia) to ſettle and govern the ſeveral Churches in that, and (probably alſo) the other neighbouring iſlands; as is evident, ch. i. 5.

ii. That the occaſion, and ſubject, of this Epiſtle, are the ſame with thoſe (eſpecially the former) to Timothy; only much ſhorter, becauſe Titus ſeems to have ſtood the leſs in need of long and many inſtructions. However, St. Paul fully, tho' briefly, inſtructs him in all the parts of his Epiſcopal Office; giving him a complete collection of Eccleſiaſtical Canons, dictated by the Holy Ghoſt: And happy had it been for the Church, in all ages, if ſtrict Canonical obedience had been duly paid, as well as ſworn, to them!

iii. That the Holy Scriptures not having mention'd the time, either of St. Paul's being in Crete, or of his writing this Epiſtle, we are left to conjecture: And the moſt probable ſeems to be this, that he viſited that iſland in his paſſage to Greece, mention'd Acts xx. 2. and then left Titus there: And that, after his arrival in Greece, he wrote this Epiſtle to him; which Dr. Hammond, Dr. Lightfoot, Dr. Cave, and the Oxford annotator, place about the year of our Lord 55. But others date it ſeveral years later; tho' 'tis generally agreed to have been written about the ſame time with the former of thoſe to Timothy. And, iv. That tho' the note placed at the end of it, ſays, "it was written from Nicopolis of Macedonia," it ſeems more probable, from ch. iii. 12. that St. Paul was not yet come to Nicopolis, but only that he had "determined there to winter."

CHAP. I.

The end of St. Paul's leaving Titus in Crete: The qualifications requiſite in Biſhops, and other Clergy: Falſe teachers to be ſilenc'd: And the character of the Cretians in general.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. PAUL a ſervant of God, and an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godlineſs: In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lye, promiſed before the world began; but hath in due times manifeſted his word thro' preaching, which is committed unto me, according to the commandment of God our Saviour: To Titus mine own ſon after the faith, Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour.

Paul, a ſervant.] See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 1.

The truth, which is after godlineſs.] See the notes on 1 Tim. vi. 3.

Before the world began.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 25. Eph. i. 4. and 2 Tim. i. 9. and ii. 13.

In due times manifeſted.] Kairois idiois; in his own ſeaſon; that is, in that ſeaſon, which he thought fit to deſign for it. (H.) See the notes on Rom. xvi. 26. Gal. iv. 4. and Eph. i. 10.

According to the commandment.] By Chriſt's immediate appointment. (H.) See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 1.

Son, after the common faith.] See the notes on 2 Tim. i 2.

Grace, mercy, and peace.] See the notes on Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. and Gal. i. 3.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. For this cauſe left I thee in Crete, that thou ſhouldſt ſet in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee. If any be blameleſs, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not accuſed of riot, or unruly: For a Biſhop muſt be blameleſs, as the ſteward of God; not ſelf-willed, not ſoon angry, not given to wine; no ſtriker; not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hoſpitality, a lover of good men, ſober, juſt, holy, temperate; holding faſt the faithful word, as he hath been taught, that he may be able, by ſound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainſayers.

For this cauſe left I thee.] In theſe words we have, 1. The erection of a power in the perſon of Titus; a Metropolical power over the whole iſland of Crete. 2. The end of this inſtitution, or the uſe and exerciſe of this power, in a double inſtance; to order, and to ordain, to correct, and to conſtitute; to make Biſhops, and to govern them. And, 3. The limitation of all to Apoſtolical preſcript and direction; both ordination, and juriſdiction too; the whole office, muſt be manag'd, "as I had appointed thee," ſays the Apoſtle. The ſource, and the ſtream, the original and derivation of all was from our Lord, by his Apoſtle, and commiſſioner: I Paul, an "Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt," (ver. 1.) left thee, &c. Therefore, not as a ſuffragan of St. Peter, as ſome of the Romiſh partizans would fain have it: Not as a diſciple of Gamaliel, acting only in purſuance of a Jewiſh cuſtom: Nor yet as a delegate of the civil magiſtrate. (Sancroft) See that excellent Archbiſhop's ſermon at large on this text; and the notes on Acts xx. 38. as well as the Preface to this Epiſtle, and the other notes here next following.

Set in order.] Epidiorthoſe, ſignifying properly, to correct, or make ſtraight that which is crooked, (not "the things that are wanting," to which it ſeems not to have ſo juſt a relation) and ta leipointa being, in the next notion, thoſe "things that are wanting," (and therefore not ſo aptly ſaid to be corrected, as ſupplied or added;) for the according of the terms, I cannot ſee why the participle may not have as powerful influence upon the verb (to qualify that) as that upon the participle; and ſhall therefore take in the conſideration of both ſenſes, and ſuppoſe, that Titus is here commiſſion'd, both to ſupply what was wanting, and to correct what was amiſs. (Sancr.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xi. 34.

Ordain Elders in every city.] That is, Biſhops; as they are expreſly call'd, ver. 7. See the notes on Acts xi. 30. and xiv. 23. Phil. i. 1. 1 Tim. iii. 1. and v. 1, 22.

If any be blameleſs.] This, and the other qualifications requiſite in a Biſhop, have been ſo fully and largely explain'd already, that little needs to be ſaid thereof here, but to refer the reader to the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 1, &c. What few particulars remain to be added, are ſubjoin'd in the notes and references here next following.

A Biſhop muſt be] See the notes alſo on Phil. i. 1.

As the ſteward of God.] See the notes on 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2.

Lover of good men.] Philagathon; a lover of that which is good.

Holding faſt.] This is a neceſſary qualification, and frequently repeated by our Apoſtle; that no Heretick, or Diſſenter from the received doctrine of the Church, be entruſted with any office in the Church. (Oxf.) See the notes on ch. ii. 1. 1 Cor. iii. 10. 1 Tim. i. 10. and vi. 3. 2 Tim. i. 13. ii. 2. iii. 13. and iv. 3.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. For there are many unruly and vain talkers, and deceivers, eſpecially they of the circumciſion: Whoſe mouths muſt be ſtopped, who ſubvert whole houſes, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucres ſake. One of themſelves, even a prophet of their own, ſaid, The Cretians are always lyars, evil beaſts, ſlow bellies. This witneſs is true: Wherefore rebuke them ſharply, that they may be ſound in the faith; not giving heed to Jewiſh fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth. Unto the pure all things are pure: But unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, is nonothing pure; but even their mind and conſcience is defiled. They profeſs that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.

Vain talkers, and deceivers.] See the notes on 2 Cor. xi. 20. and 1 Tim. i. 3, &c.

Mouths muſt be ſtopped.] Not by force; for Titus had no power of the ſword; but by confutation. (B.) Either ſolidly confuting their errors, or ſilencing them by ſuſpenſion, and other Eccleſiaſtical cenſures. (Aſſ.)

For filthy lucres ſake.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 18. Phil. iii. 19. 1 Tim. vi. 5. and 2 Tim. iii. 6, 13.

A prophet of their own.] Some will have this allegation to be taken out of Callimachus his hymn in praiſe of Jupiter; where the firſt part of this verſe is found: But Callimachus was no prophet of the Cretians. The Apoſtle therefore certainly meant Epimenides, who was himſelf a Cretian, and whoſe poem is call'd a book of oracles or prophecies; among which this whole verſe is found; viz. "The Cretians are always liars, (that is, crafty companions, falſe in their words and deeds, as the Latin proverb, Cretizare cum Cretenſibus, declareth;) evil beaſts, (that is, fierce, intractable, and dangerous to deal withal;) and ſlow bellies," (that is, given to ſloth, and idleneſs, and luxurious gluttons.) Which cenſure the Apoſtle here confirms; not to diſcredit the Cretians, or to blaſt their reputation, but to diſcover the maladies of that people, to him whom he there left, as a phyſician, to cure them by ſound and wholeſome doctrine. (Aſſ.) This man is by St. Paul ſtiled a prophet, becauſe he paſs'd for ſuch among his countrymen. (G.) Some further criticiſms on this text may be ſeen in Hammond and Whitby. See alſo the notes on Acts xvii. 28.

Rebuke them ſharply.] Apotomos; with a cutting ſeverity. The word is a metaphor, taken from chirurgeons, who cut out dead fleſh to the quick, in order to the healing. We may, we muſt, ſpeak cutting words, when kind words will not do. (B.) As a ſharp and ſevere charity is ſalutary, when it awakes a ſlumbering ſinner; ſo, a cowardly and miſtaken mildneſs is fatal, when it only flatters the diſeaſed perſon, and increaſes the diſeaſe. (Q.) See the notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 10. and 2 Tim. iv. 2.

Jewiſh fables.] See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 4.

Commandments of men.] The Apoſtle forbiddeth not ſimply, to give heed to the commandments of men; for, elſewhere, he requireth us to obey the lawful commands of our ſuperiors in Church and ſtate; but, of ſuch men as "turn from the truth." (Aſſ.)

Unto the pure] See the notes on Luke xi. 39. Rom. xiv. 14, 20. 1 Cor. vi. 12. and x. 23, 25. and 1 Tim. iv. 3.

In works they deny him.] See the notes on Rom. ii. 17, &c. and x. 9. and 2 Tim. iii. 5.

Reprobate.] See the notes on Rom. i. 28.

CHAP. II.

Directions to Titus, concerning the Laity of all degrees: And a deſcription of the deſign and doctrine of the Goſpel.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. BUT ſpeak thou the things which become ſound doctrine: That the aged men be ſober, grave, temperate, ſound in faith, in charity, in patience: The aged women likewiſe, that they be in behaviour as becometh holineſs, not falſe accuſers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things; that they may teach the young women to be ſober, to love their husbands, to love their children, to be diſcreet, chaſte, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blaſphemed. Young men likewiſe exhort to be ſober-minded. In all things ſhewing thy ſelf a pattern of good works: In doctrine ſhewing uncorruptneſs, gravity, ſincerity, ſound ſpeech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be aſhamed, having no evil thing to ſay of you. Exhort ſervants to be obedient unto their own maſters, and to pleaſe them well in all things; not anſwering again, not purloining, but ſhewing all good fidelity; that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

Sound doctrine.] Hygiainouſa didaſcalia; that is, 1. Pure; not adulterated with fables, or mingled with traditions. 2. Wholeſome; which heals the ſoul; whoſe end is not to delight the times, or ſerve a turn, but to cure the men. 3. Entire; ſpun out of an even thread, which hath no croſs opinions interwoven, no party-colour'd skeins of faction, nor wonder-working rags torn from any ſhrine, and patch'd to that white robe of truth, which Chriſt gave his ſpouſe, as his Church's Livery. 4. Plain, and perſpicuous; not muffled up in dark concluſions. 5. Firm at the foundation, and ſmoothly laid. 6. Solid at the heart. The plain, poſitive, Catechiſtical doctrine of the Church, as it is moſt eaſy and familiar, ſo moſt ſound and orthodox: Poſitive divinity contains abundantly enough for the ſatisfaction of the knowledge, and ſalvation of the ſoul: A little logic ſerves a Chriſtian; and a man may go to heaven without quaint diſtinctions. But yet, 'tis neceſſary, ceſſary, 7. That it be deliver'd in ſound terms: That the terms be not only not repugnant to the truth of the poſition; but not ambiguous, ſo as either to darken or diſtort the meaning. See Biſhop King's Sermon at large, on this text, 1662. and the notes on ch. i. 9. 1 Cor. xiv. 40. 1 Tim. i. 3, &c. and vi. 3. and 2 Tim. i. 13.

That the aged.] Here the Apoſtle comes to direct Titus how to apply his doctrine aptly to the ſeveral ſexes, ages, and conditions of men. Whence, in general, is to be obſerv'd, That every faithful Miniſter muſt fit and apply his doctrine to the ſeveral ages, conditions, and occaſions of his people, that every man and woman, young and old, ſuperior and inferior, may know, not only what is lawful, but what is moſt expedient and becoming. (Tayl) Some conceive, that by presbytai here, and presbytides, ver. 2. is meant, not in general any ancient perſons, men or women, tho' the words ſignify ſo, largely; but Church-officers, Deacons and Deaconeſſes; as presbyteros (an Elder, or more ancient) ſignifies a Presbyter, or Prieſt. For, as the Apoſtle to Timothy gives charge firſt concerning Biſhops, and next for Deacons, and after for Deaconeſſes; ſo he might uſe the ſame method here. Nor were there, any where, Biſhops ordained, where there were not alſo Deacons to wait upon them: Beſides, the office of the Deaconeſſes was, amongſt other things, to inſtruct the younger women; and they were alſo anciently call'd Presbytides, Concil. Laod. can. 11. (Oxf.) See Dr. Hammond and Dr. Whitby on this text; and the notes on 1 Tim. ii. 9, &c. iii. 2, &c. and v. 1, &c.

Obedient to their own husbands.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 34. Eph. v. 22. and Col. iii. 18.

A pattern of good works.] See the notes on Phil. iii. 17. and 1 Tim. iv. 12.

Sound ſpeech.] See the notes on ver. 1. and 2 Theſſ. iii. 14.

Servants to be obedient.] See the notes on Eph. vi. 5, &c. Col. iii. 22, &c. and 1 Tim. vi. 1.

Not anſwering again.] Me antilegontas; not gainſaying, or contradicting. Neither croſſing, or contradicting, what they are commanded; nor ſaucily replying when they are reproved. (B.) But, only with ſubmiſſion, pleading their own cauſe; for that even Nature doth allow. (W.)

Not purloining.] The original word, Noſphizomenoi ſignifies, thoſe who detain any thing to themſelves, which belongs not to them, and put it apart to their own uſe. (Leigh) And here it forbids the making unlawful advantage, without the knowledge or conſent of their maſters, even in ſmaller matters. (Oxf. B. and Fox) And therefore Dr. Wells has, not improperly, ſubſtituted the word filching, inſtead of purloining; the latter not being now ſo generally well underſtood as the former. See the notes on Acts v. 3.

Adorn the doctrine of God.] As the evil lives of the profeſſors of Chriſtianity is a great blemiſh; ſo their godly converſation is a great honour and ornament, to the doctrine of the Goſpel. (Aſſ.) For, their faults would by the adverſaries be imputed to the doctrine it ſelf; as their doing better, after their converſion, would be attributed to the religion in which they learned it. (Oxf.) See Biſhop Wilkins's Sermon on this text, and the notes on Phil. iv. 8.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. For the grace of God that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared to all men; teaching us, that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world; looking for that bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: Who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Theſe things ſpeak and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man deſpiſe thee.

The grace of God.] See the notes on Rom. iii. 24. and 2 Cor. vi. 1.

Hath appeared to all men.] The more proper placing of the words, according to the Greek, is this, "For, the grace of God, that bringeth ſalvation to all men, hath appeared, &c. as our Tranſlators have noted on the margin. See the notes on Acts xxvi. 18. Rom. xiii. 12. and 1 Tim. ii. 4.

Ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts.] By ungodlineſs we are here to underſtand all ſins committed againſt the firſt Table; and by worldly luſts all ſins committed againſt the ſecond Table; called worldly luſts, becauſe the object of them is worldly things, and becauſe they are the luſts of worldly men. (Aſſ. and B.) Or, becauſe they are ſuch luſts as the greateſt part of the world is apt to follow. (G.) See the notes on Eph. ii. 2. and iv. 17, &c. and thoſe which here next follow.

Live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly.] Here, the word ſoberly contains our duty to our ſelves; righteouſly, our duty to our neighbour; and godly, our duty to God. And all theſe together comprehend The whole Duty of Man; as is largely ſet forth and explain'd, in a moſt excellent book under that Title: To which it were much to be wiſh'd, that no Chriſtian were a ſtranger. See the notes on 1 Theſſ. ii. 10.

That bleſſed hope.] See the notes on Col. i. 5.

The great God, and our Saviour.] Or rather, our powerful God and Deliverer. (H.) The title (tou megalou Theou) "Great God," is here referr'd to our Saviour, by Clemens of Alexandria, in his Protrept. (Wells) And it deſerves to be noted, That it is highly probabſe Jeſus Chriſt is here ſtiled "the Great God," 1. Becauſe in the original, the article (tou) is prefix'd only before "Great God;" and therefore ſeems to require this conſtruction, the appearance of Jeſus Chriſt, the great God, and our Saviour. 2. Becauſe, as God the Father is not ſaid properly to appear; ſo the word epiphaneia never occurs, in the New Teſtament, but when it is applied to Jeſus Chriſt, and to ſome coming of his; as 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. 1 Tim. vi. 14. 2 Tim. i. 10. and iv. 1, 8. 3. Becauſe Chriſt is emphatically ſtiled "our hope," 1 Tim. i. 1. and "the hope of glory," Col. i. 27. And, 4. Becauſe not only all the ancient Commentators on the place do ſo interpret this text, but the Ante-Nicene Fathers alſo. (W.) Whoever yields not to the evidence of this proof of the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt, is either a Jew, who has ſtill a veil before his eyes, or an impious perſon, who is blinded by the corruption of his own heart. (Q.)

Who gave himſelf for us.] See the notes on John x. 18. and xviii. 4, &c. Acts ii. 24. Gal. i. 4. and ii. 20. and 1 Tim. ii. 6.

Redeem us from all iniquity.] That is, from the guilt, puniſhment, and power of all ſin. (Aſſ.) To which we were formerly in bondage. (Oxf.)

A peculiar people.] Laon periouſion; people peculiarly conſecrated to his ſervice. (Q.) This phraſe is borrow'd from the great dearneſs and love which God ſhew'd to his former Church of the Jews; ſignifying, that the Gentiles are now admitted into the ſame eſteem and nearneſs to God as were the Jews, Exod. xix. 5, &c. (Oxf.)

Zealous of good works.] See the notes on Eph. ii. 10.

Speak and exhort.] As if he had ſaid, Let theſe neceſſary, practical truths, be the ſubject-matter of thy preaching: And, according to the authority of thy office, rebuke gainſayers; and let thy doctrine and behaviour, in wiſdom and gravity, be ſuch as may keep and preſerve thee from contempt. (B.) See Dr. South's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ch. i. 13. 1 Cor. iv. 1. 2 Cor. iv. 5. and v. 20. 1 Theſſ. ii. 4. and 1 Tim. iv. 12.

CHAP. III.

Further directions, concerning his doctrine; particularly with reſpect to Magiſtrates: And how to deal with Hereticks.

Ver. 1, 2. PUT them in mind to be ſubject to principalities and powers, to obey magiſtrates, to be ready to every good work, to ſpeak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, ſhewing all meekneſs unto all men.

Put them in mind.] Obſerve here, The Apoſtle doth not ſay; Teach them, or exhort them, as before; but "Put them in mind," or remembrance. Whence we learn, 1. That this doctrine of ſubjection and obedience to authority, is no new doctrine, but renew'd; not aboliſh'd to Chriſtians, but confirm'd. And, 2. That this doctrine ought to be often inculcated, and earneſtly preſs'd upon their memory, by the Biſhops and Clergy; eſpecially when they find a buſy, factious, and ſeditious ſpirit abroad in the world. (Tayl. and Sherl.) See the notes on 2 Pet. i. 12.

To be ſubject.] Hypotaſſeſthai imports ſubjection and ſubordination, in a regular way, where ſome are above, and others gradually below. (Dove) See Archbiſhop Sharpe's, and Dr. Dove's Sermons on this text; and the ſeveral notes on Rom. xiii. 1, &c. and 1 Pet. ii. 13.

Principalities and powers.] That is, The ſupreme Civil Governors of every nation; and under them, their ſubordinate officers. (Sharpe) See the notes at large on Rom. xiii. 1, &c. and 1 Tim. ii. 2.

To obey magiſtrates.] Peitharchein ſignifieth to perform a voluntary obedience, without ſimulation or coaction. (Leigh) This ſeems to intimate the duty of active obedience to the laws and orders of our governors; as the other (hypotaſſesthai) does that of our ſubmiſſion where we cannot obey. (Sharpe) As obedience makes no delays, ſo it admits of no excuſes; eſpecially where the authority is good, and the thing not unreaſonable. (Dove) See the notes on Acts v. 29.

Ready to every good work.] That is, "to every good work," which may contribute to ſupport a good government. (Stephens) Or, to whatſoever the magiſtrates ſhall command, that is not contrary to the laws of God. (Oxf. and Wells) See the notes on Eph. ii. 10.

Speak evil of no man] Eſpecially, not of any lawful magiſtrate. (Wells) Calumny and evil ſpeaking has been a reigning vice in all ages; and a greater guilt is contracted by it than men apprehend. Every man ought to be as juſt to his neighbour's reputation as his own. If we report of another what we know to be falſe, it is downright lying; if we believe it to be falſe, it is a ſlander: If the evil which we report of others be really true, and we know it to be ſo, yet it is a defamation, and contrary to that charity and goodneſs which Chriſtianity requires; for, to divulge the faults of others, tho' they be really guilty of them, without neceſſity, is certainly a ſin, and included in this Apoſtolical prohibition: To think and ſpeak evil of others is not only a bad thing, but a ſign of a bad man; and, in many caſes, it is as great charity to conceal an evil which we hear of our neighbour, as it is to relieve him in his diſtreſs. (Tillotſ. and B.) See Archbiſhop Tillotſon's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Eph. iv. 31.

No brawlers.] Amachous; not quarrelſome: Eſpecially, not to be ready to take up arms and fight againſt their magiſtrates. (Wells) See the notes on 2 Tim. ii. 24.

But gentle.] See the notes on ver. 3. and 2 Cor. x. 1.

Ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. For we ourſelves alſo were ſometimes fooliſh, and diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſure, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another. But after that the kindneſs and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared; Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt: Which he ſhed on us abundantly, thro' Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour: That being juſtified by his grace, we ſhould be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works: Theſe things are good and profitable unto men. But avoid fooliſh queſtions, and genealogies, and contentions, and ſtrivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain.

For we our ſelves.] See the notes on Rom. i. 29. 1 Cor. vi. 11. Eph. ii. 1 and Col. iii. 7.

Not by works of righteouſneſs.] See the notes on Rom. iii. 20. iv. 2. and xi. 6. Eph. ii. 9. and 2 Tim. i 9.

The waſhing of regeneration.] Mr. Mede has well obſerv'd, and ſhewn, That as in baptiſm the ſign is waſhing with water, ſo the (antiſtoichonon) inviſible and celeſtial thing figur'd thereby, or which anſwers thereto, is the Spirit, or Holy Ghoſt: Namely, as the body is cleans'd without by waſhing, ſo the ſoul is cleans'd and renew'd within by the Spirit. As for the blood of Chriſt, it concurs in the miniſtry of baptiſm, by way of efficacy and merit; but not as the thing figur'd; this being, according to the Scriptures, the Spirit. It is alſo well obſerv'd, that waſhing with water is therefore made the outward ſign of baptiſm, in alluſion to the cuſtom of waſhing infants from the pollution of the womb, when they are firſt born. (Wells) The Ancients obſerve in this paſſage a very expreſs mention of the Bleſſed Trinity. (G.) Where note, How every Perſon acts diſtinctly in the work of our ſalvation; 1. The fontal cauſe, the ſpring and ſource of our happineſs, lies in "the kindneſs and love of God" the Father. 2. The meritorious and procuring cauſe of the application of this love, is Jeſus Chriſt, in the work of redemption and mediation. And, 3. The immediate and efficient cauſe of the communication of that love of God the Father, procur'd through the mediation of Chriſt the Son, is the Holy Spirit, in the work of regeneration. (B.) See Mr. Mede's Diatribæ on this text, and the notes on John iii. 3, 5. Eph. v. 26. and Col. iii. 10.

Juſtified by his grace.] See the notes on ch. ii. 11. Acts xiii. 39. and Rom. iii. 24. v 1. and viii. 24.

That thou affirm conſtantly.] Diabebiaousthai; to affirm ſtrongly, and to preſs it home with all the ſtrength we have. (Leigh)

Be careful to maintain good works.] Each one endeavouring to perform them himſelf, and that others alſo may advance continually in good works: Which ſome interpret of trades and profeſſions: But it ſeems to be more generally meant of all (chiefly external) good works, whereby our neighbour is benefited. (Oxf.) The former expoſition is preferr'd by Grotius, Hammond and Wall; and the latter by Tremellius and Beza, Taylor and the Aſſembly-men, Whitby, Burkitt and Wells. The more curious reader may ſee the arguments on both ſides in Hammond and Whitby. See alſo the notes on ver. 14.

Avoid fooliſh queſtions.] See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 4. and 2 Tim. ii. 16.

Ver. 10, 11. A man that is an Heretick, after the firſt and ſecond admonition reject: Knowing that he that is ſuch, is ſubverted, and ſinneth, being condemned of himſelf.

A man that is an Heretick.] In order to come at a right notion, who is properly an Heretick, we may take this ſhort and comprehenſive definition of Hereſy from Cardinal Tolet; who calls it an obſtinate error of a Chriſtian, contrary in part to the Catholic faith. Whence we learn, that every error is not hereſy: But it muſt be, 1. In a matter of Faith: For the object of Hereſy is not any humane thing, but divine; and therefore 'tis no Hereſy to err in matters phyſical or mathematical, but only in thoſe which are ſacred, as articles of faith. 2. Of a Chriſtian: For tho' the ſubject of Hereſy is man, yet not every man; for he who is not baptiz'd, tho' he do err as a Heretic, is not call'd a Heretic, but rather an Infidel. 3. In part only; not in the whole: For if a man who is baptiz'd do wholly fall away from the faith, he is not call'd a Heretic, but an Apoſtate. And, 4. Obſtinate: For tho' all the other conditions do meet together in a man, yet they are not ſufficient to make him a Heretick, unleſs he be obſtinate therein too: And ſuch a one is ſaid to be obſtinate, (as the ſame Tolet well obſerves) who will perſiſt in what he affirms, nevertheleſs, tho' he knows it to be contrary to the judgment of the Church. (Maſon) See the notes on Rom. xvii. 17.

Firſt and ſecond admonition] See the notes on Matth. xviii. 15. and 2 Cor. xiii. 1, 10.

Reject.] Paraitou, Cut him off from the ſociety of the Church by excommunication. See the notes on Matth. xviii. 17. Rom. xvi. 17. 1 Cor. v. 13. Gal. i. 8. and v. 12. and 2 Theſſ. iii. 6, 14.

Condemned of himſelf.] See the notes on Acts xiii. 46.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15. When I ſhall ſend Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: For I have determined there to winter. Bring Zenas the lawyer, and Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them. And let ours alſo learn to maintain good works for neceſſary uſes, that they be not unfruitful. All that are with me ſalute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

¶ It was written to Titus, ordained the firſt biſhop of the Church of the Cretians, from Nicopolis of Macedonia.

When I ſhall ſend Artemas.] Viz. To ſupply thy place, during thy abſence. (Tayl. Oxf. and B.)

Or Tychicus.] See the notes on Col. iv. 8.

Determined there to winter.] Ekei. He does not ſay here, but there: Which ſhews, that he was not yet come to Nicopolis (as is obſerv'd in the Preface;) and conſequently, that the ſubſcription, added by the tranſcriber, to the end of this Epiſtle, is erroneous; as many of the reſt are confeſs'd to be, both by Proteſtants and Papiſts. (Tayl. and W.)

Bring on their journey.] Propempſon. See the notes on Acts xv. 3.

Let ours alſo.] Viz. Thoſe who are converted and confirm'd in the faith by thy labour and mine. (Tayl.)

To maintain good works.] Kalon ergon proiſtasthai. The very ſame phraſe which is uſed in ver. 8. And here 'tis generally agreed to injoin the profeſſing honeſt trades (as it is render'd in our margin;) that ſo they may both be able to ſuſtain themſelves, and be uſeful alſo to the poor. (Oxf.) See the notes on Rom. xv. 28. and 2 Theſſ. iii. 11.

Grace be with you all.] This plainly intimates, That tho' this Epiſtle be written by name to Titus, it was intended for the benefit and advantage of the whole Church. (B.)

From Nicopolis.] See the Preface to this Epiſtle; and the notes on ver. 12.

The End of the Epiſtle of St. PAUL to TITUS.

ANNOTATIONS
Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,
TO PHILEMON.

IN order to prepare our readers for the better underſtanding this ſhort Epiſtle, and to ſave the unneceſſary trouble of repetitions in the following notes, we think it proper to obſerve here,

i. That Philemon, to whom it is addreſs'd, was a perſon of eminency in Coloſſe, converted by St. Paul (tho' not at that place, the Apoſtle moſt probably having not been there in perſon, as is noted Col. ii. 1.) with whom he had contracted a friendſhip, and by whom he is here ſtiled his fellow-labourer, ver. 1. Whence St. Chryſoſtome, and others, have concluded, that he was one of the Clergy: And the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions have made him afterwards Biſhop of Coloſſe; to which opinion St. Jerome ſeems alſo to incline. But Hilary the Deacon affirms, that he was no Eccleſiaſtick, but a mere Layman, as Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact ſeem likewiſe to think: Neither indeed does the Apoſtle's ſtiling him fellow-labourer neceſſarily prove him a Clergyman; ſince the very ſame phraſe is elſewhere applied to Chriſtians in general, and even to women, Rom. xvi. 3. Be that as it will, ſo great was his zeal for Chriſtianity, that his houſe was the common Oratory to thoſe where he dwell'd; and remain'd ſtanding entire in the time of Theodoret, viz. about four hundred years afterwards.

ii. That Oneſimus, a ſervant (or ſlave) of Philemon, having run away from his maſter, either for ſome wrong done him (as it ſeems) in his temporal eſtate, or (as Baronius rather thinks) out of perſonal affection for St. Paul, and his doctrine, of which he had heard ſomewhat in his maſter's houſe, came to Rome, while the Apoſtle was there in bonds: Where, providentially becoming a conſtant attendant upon his preaching, he was not only touch'd with a due ſenſe of his crime, in thus withdrawing himſelf from his maſter's ſervice, but happily converted to the Chriſtian faith; inſomuch that, after ſome time, St. Paul ſent him back to his maſter, with this letter of recommendation; wherein he, in the moſt pathetick terms, intercedes with Philemon to forgive the penitent, and to receive him again to favour; promiſing withal, that he himſelf would make good whatever damage he had ſuſtain'd on the other's account. And ſuch happy effects have the precepts of Chriſtian Religion (with God's grace) upon thoſe who are thoroughly influenc'd by them, that this Oneſimus became ſo eminent for his virtues, that his maſter did not only reſtore him to his favour, but to freedom alſo: And (as St. Ignatius, and others of the Ancients, inform us) he (not Philemon, as Mr. Burkitt miſtakes it) was afterwards promoted to ſucceed St. Timothy in the Epiſcopal See of Epheſus; tho' Du-Pin reckons this to have been another of the ſame name, as we have noted on Col. iv. 9.

iii. That the place, from whence this Epiſtle was written, is agreed upon by all; namely, Rome: And ſo is, iv. The time; viz. During St. Paul's firſt impriſonment there: And particularly, at the ſame time with that to the Coloſſians; as may be probably conjectur'd from theſe characters, common to both; 1. That Timothy is join'd with St. Paul in the inſcriptions of both: 2. That there are the ſame ſalutations in the concluſion of both; viz. from Epaphras, Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas and Luke: 3. That the like remembrance is had of Archippus in both: And, 4. That this Epiſtle is ſent by Oneſimus; who is mention'd to have accompanied Tychicus, who carried the other, Col. iv. 9.

v. That the ſubject of it being particular, to one perſon only, and not to the whole Church, ſome did anciently queſtion this Epiſtle, as not Canonical: But it was from the beginning ſo generally acknowledg'd, that even Marcion, who found fault with all the reſt, yet receiv'd this. And indeed, tho' there is not much in it concerning the doctrine of faith, yet it contains excellent rules and examples of charity: As not to deſpiſe the meaneſt condition, nor deſpair of the worſt; ſince the great Apoſtle St. Paul took ſo much care for a poor fugitive ſlave: That humanity, gentleneſs, courteſy, and charity, are the ornaments of the greateſt perſons: That ſervants converted do not thereby obtain their freedom: That the Clergy ought not to preſs too much upon their penitents, &c. In ſumm, it carries with it the lively character of an Apoſtolical Spirit. For 'tis admirable (as the judicious Mr. Blackwall obſerves) for the tender ſentiments of humanity flowing almoſt in every word; for the grateful ſimplicity and familiar eaſineſs of the ſtyle; for the ſtrength of its reaſoning, the delicacy of the turn, and the prudence of its conduct and addreſs. After the ſalutation, the divine writer inſinuates into his friend's affections, by juſtly praiſing his ſteady faith in Chriſt, and generous charity to all Chriſtians; and this was a ſure method to obtain what he was going to deſire. To put a generous man in mind of his former bounties and charitable offices, naturally encourages him to repeat the pleaſure of doing good, and obliging numbers. He but juſt mentions his authority to command, as a prime Miniſter of Chriſt; and modeſtly hints to Philemon his obligation to a perſon whoſe convert he was. But, with what engaging condeſcenſion does he drop the conſiderations of authority and obligation; and chuſes rather to entreat as a friend, than to command as an Apoſtle! Who could reſiſt the moving entreaties of St. Paul, a name ſo glorious and dear to the world for his converſion of a conſiderable part of it! And St. Paul the elder, now grown old in his labours of charity, and indefatigable endeavours to oblige and ſave mankind! And, what goes farther ſtill, St. Paul now "a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt," an undaunted champion of the croſs, in confinement and chains for this adorable cauſe, and aſpiring after the conſummation of Chriſtian honour and happineſs, the crown of martyrdom! Could that fervour of charity to a ſtranger, that humility and condeſcenſion to a fugitive ſlave fail of prevailing upon Philemon, a relation to St. Paul's convert; when the great Apoſtle, a ſtranger to him, eſpouſes his cauſe with ſuch warmth, and pleads for the hopeful convert with all the hearty and flowing tenderneſs of a parent? ver. 10, &c. The Fathers juſtly obſerve, that here the compaſſion of the Apoſtle is ſo tender, the charity ſo undiſſembled and generous, that it would melt down the moſt obdurate heart.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. PAUL a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon, our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer, and to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellow-ſoldier, and to the Church in thy houſe: Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers. Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou haſt toward the Lord Jeſus, and toward all ſaints; that the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Chriſt Jeſus. For we have great joy and conſolation in thy love, becauſe the bowels of the ſaints are refreſhed by thee, brother.

Paul, a priſoner of.] That is, for. Jeſus Chriſt. Which circumſtance is here touch'd upon, to move compaſſion. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts ix. 16. Eph. iii. 1. and iv. 1.

Timothy, our brother.] See the notes on 2 Cor. i. 1.

Fellow-labourer.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 3. and the Preface to this Epiſtle.

Our beloved Apphia.] Generally thought to be the wife of Philemon; whom the Apoſtle here ſalutes, that he might gain her good-will alſo, in the behalf of Oneſimus. (W.)

And Archippus.] He was now paſtor of the Church at Coloſſe; and therefore might prevail the more with Philemon, who was one of his flock, and in whoſe houſe they aſſembled. See the notes on Col. iv. 17.

To the Church in thy houſe.] He intereſts the whole Church alſo, in the cauſe of a miſerable perſon; becauſe he judges not of the value of his ſoul by his condition, but by the blood of Jeſus Chriſt. (Q) See the Preface to this Epiſtle, and the notes on Rom. xvi. 5. and 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

I thank my God.] See the notes on Rom. i. 8. 1 Cor. i. 4. and Eph. i. 16.

Thy love and faith.] That is, "of thy faith, which thou haſt toward the Lord Jeſus, and of thy love (or charity) which thou haſt towards all the Saints." Here the Apoſtle uſeth a tranſpoſition: For faith is to be referr'd to Chriſt, and love to the Saints; as in Col. i. 4. So alſo, in Matth. xii. 22. and 1 Cor. vi. 11. and frequently elſewhere. Thus are theſe words interpreted, not only by Theodoret, and the Syriac tranſlation, but even by the gentlemen of the Port-Royal, who can't be ſuſpected of favouring Proteſtants. Hence therefore Papiſts vainly conclude, that we may place our faith in ſaints departed: For even their own Eſthius declares, that, in the Eccleſiaſtical phraſe, to believe in any one is a profeſſion of Divinity. (G. Aſſ. Oxf. W. Wells, and Eſſay) See the notes on Eph. i. 10.

The communication of thy faith.] Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, expounded theſe words thus, I pray, That the faith in Chriſt, which thou haſt common with us, may be operative in thee, to make thee know how to perform every good work. (W.) But, in ſome copies, it is not (energes) effectual, or operative; but (enarges) clear, or evident. However, the ſenſe is much the ſame, viz. That the charitable actions, which proceed from thy faith, may be a clear evidence, and give an effectual demonſtration of the holy graces which are in thee. (Aſſ. and Wall) See the notes on Acts xi. 29. 2 Cor. ix. 13. and Phil. iv. 15.

Great joy and conſolation.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 18. 2 Cor. vi. 12, 13. and vii. 4. and Phil. iv. 18.

The bowels of the Saints are refreſh'd.] Anapepautai. A metaphor drawn from the reſt of the body, wearied with travel, or tyred and oppreſs'd with ſome burden; and fitly applied to the reſt of the affections, toil'd and turmoil'd with grief, and ready to ſink under the burden of ſome grievous affliction. (Leigh) See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 18.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Wherefore, tho' I might be much bold in Chriſt, to enjoyn thee that which is convenient.

venient: Yet for loves ſake I rather beſeech thee, being ſuch a one as Paul the aged, and now alſo a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt. I beſeech thee for my ſon Oneſimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds: Which in time paſt was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me: Whom I have ſent again: Thou therefore receive him that is mine own bowels. Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy ſtead he might have miniſtred unto me in the bonds of the Goſpel. But without thy mind would I do nothing; that thy benefit ſhould not be as it were of neceſſity, but willingly. For perhaps he therefore departed for a ſeaſon, that thou ſhouldeſt receive him for ever; not now as a ſervant, but above a ſervant, a brother beloved, ſpecially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the fleſh, and in the Lord? If thou count me therefore as a partner, receive him as my ſelf. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account. I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: Albeit I do not ſay to thee, how thou oweſt unto me even thine own ſelf beſides. Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: Refreſh my bowels in the Lord. Having confidence in thy obedience, I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt alſo do more than I ſay. But withal prepare me alſo a lodging: For I truſt, that thro' your prayers I ſhall be given unto you. There ſalute thee Epaphras my fellow-priſoner in Chriſt Jeſus: Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit. Amen.

¶ Written from Rome to Philemon, by Oneſimus, a ſervant.

I might be much bold.] It is expedient for a Paſtor, that his power and authority ſhould be known, but it is not always expedient for him to make uſe of it. Charity ought frequently to ſupply the place of authority; and it is ſometimes neceſſary to forget that he is a ſuperior, and to remember that he is a brother. (Q.) See the notes on John vii. 4. and 1 Theſſ. ii. 6.

Paul the aged.] St. Paul might be at this time about ſixty years old; but much broken by his frequent and great ſufferings. (Oxf.) This Epiſtle being writ, at the furtheſt, but 28 years from his converſion, when he is ſtiled (Neanias) "a young man," Acts vii. 58. it is inquir'd, how he could be now (Presbyter) "the aged?" I anſwer, That both the words (neaniſcos) young, and (presbytes) aged, are of that large ſignification, as is ſufficient to remove this ſeeming difficulty. Phavorinus, from Hippocrates, ſaith, A man is ſtiled (neaniſcos) a young man, till twenty-eight; and (presbytes) aged, from forty-nine to fifty-ſix; making but 21 years difference betwixt them: Elſewhere he ſaith, That old age begins from ſixty-nine years: But then he ſays, A man is young from twenty-three, till forty-one years; making the difference between them 28 years. Varro (in Cœlius Rhodiginus, lib. xxix. c. 21.) ſays, A man is young till forty-five, and aged at ſixty. And thus, St. Paul, according to the computation of St. Chryſoſtom, might be "a young man" of thirty-five years at his converſion; an old man at the writing this Epiſtle. (W.)

Now alſo a priſoner.] See the notes on ver. 1.

Begotten in my bonds.] That is, my ſpiritual ſon, converted to Chriſtianity by my miniſtry, when I was in priſon. (B.) See the notes on Gal. iv. 19.

Now profitable.] Here the Apoſtle manifeſtly alludeth to the name of Oneſimus, which in Greek ſignifieth profitable. While he was thy ſervant before, and an unbeliever, he was, contrary to his name, utterly unprofitable: But now, upon his converſion, he will make good his name, and prove truly Oneſimus; that is, "profitable to thee and to me." Thou oweſt unto me.] For the ſpiritual gifts thou haſt receiv'd by my means. (Idem)

Through your prayers.] The Apoſtle knew the efficacy of the prayers of the Church, for preſervation of Chriſt's eminent ſervants from impending dangers; as in the caſe of Peter, Acts xii. 5, &c. And therefore, in moſt of his Epiſtles, he doth moſt earneſtly intreat them to pray, that he might be enabled to preach the Goſpel with freedom and ſucceſs, Eph. vi. 19. Col. iv. 3. 2 Theſſ. iii. 1. and for deliverance from the malice of his perſecutors, Rom. xv. 30. 2 Theſſ. iii. 2. Or elſe he expreſſeth his confidence, that their prayers will be effectual to that end; as here, and 2 Cor. i. 10, 11. and iv. 14, 15. and Phil. i. 19. And had he thus conceiv'd of prayers directed to Angels, and departed Saints, why doth he not afford one inſtance of them in all his Epiſtles? (W.) See the notes on the texts here cited.

The End of the Epiſtle of St. PAUL to PHILEMON.

ANNOTATIONS
Epiſtle of St. PAUL, the APOSTLE,
HEBREWS.

CONCERNING this excellent, and moſt learned Epiſtle, it will be neceſſary to take notice of ſeveral doubts, which have been ſtarted and propagated by divers writers.

i. As to the Author, 'tis confeſs'd on all hands, that the Title prefix'd to it in our Bibles, (which aſcribes it to St. Paul) being no part of the original Epiſtle it ſelf, is alone of no great authority. And, to ſay nothing of thoſe Hereticks, who diſputed it, becauſe it is ſo full of teſtimonies to prove the Divinity of our Lord; even Tertullian aſcribes it to St. Barnabas, as ſome others do to St. Luke, or St. Clement Biſhop of Rome; partly, becauſe the Apoſtle does not begin it, as he does his other Epiſtles, in his own name; partly, on account of ſome diverſity in the ſtyle of this and the other of his writings; and partly again, becauſe the Author, writing to the Hebrews, does not quote the Scriptures in the original Hebrew, but according to the tranſlation of the Septuagint; which, 'tis ſuppos'd, St. Paul (who was himſelf an Hebrew) would not have done. But to theſe it is anſwer'd, 1. That whoever reads this, and that other which is call'd St. Barnabas's Epiſtle, will eaſily conclude, that they were not both written by the ſame hand. 2. That neither St. Luke, nor St. Clement, were properly Apoſtles; and therefore 'tis leſs probable, that either of them ſhould be the Author of ſuch an authoritative Epiſtle, whatever reſemblance there may ſeem to be in the ſtyle of this and their reſpective writings. And, 3. That St. Paul himſelf is acknowledg'd to have quoted the prophecy of Iſaiah, in his Epiſtle to the Galatians, ch. iv. 27. diſputing againſt the Hebrews, not according to the Hebrew text, but the Septuagint Verſion, which was at that time in common uſe among the Jews: As did alſo Joſephus, and Philo (both learned Jews) in their reſpective writings; and why the Apoſtle might not do the ſame in this Epiſtle, as well as the other, is not eaſily to be underſtood. In ſhort, that St. Paul himſelf was the Author of it, (beſide the generally receiv'd opinion of the Church, which ought to be of ſome weight,) we may fairly conclude, amongſt other arguments, 1. From ch. x. 34. where he acknowledges their having "had compaſſion of him in his bonds." 2. From ch. xiii. 23. where he gives them notice, "that his brother Timothy was ſet at liberty;" by which title it was St. Paul's cuſtom to ſpeak of Timothy. 3. From ver. 18. where he exhorts them to "pray for him;" as was uſually done by St. Paul, in his other Epiſtles, Rom. xv. 30. Eph. vi. 19. Phil. i. 19. Col. iv. 3. and 2 Theſſ. iii. 1. but not by any other of the Apoſtles in theirs; and from all the concluſion, which is generally like his other. And 4. From what St. Peter ſays, 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16. of St. Paul's having written to them, to whom he himſelf was then writing; that is, to the believing Jews (or Hebrews) in general. And indeed, the moſt rational account of it ſeems to be, That St. Paul himſelf wrote this Epiſtle in the Hebrew (or rather Syriac) language, and that it was tranſlated by St. Luke, or St. Clement; which might occaſion that reſemblance in the ſtyle with their other writings, which ſome have taken notice of. And the reaſon of his not putting his name to it, is ſuppos'd to have proceeded from his being the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, not of the Jews; ſo that he would not write to them in the ſame authoritative manner, as he did to thoſe of his own proper province; tho' there are not wanting ſuch expreſſions in it, as ſhew the Author to have been a perſon of great authority, and of a ſpirit like that of St. Paul. However, ſince 'tis evident, that this Epiſtle (as well as the reſt) was indited by the Holy Spirit of God, we need not (nor ought to) be too ſollicitous to find out whoſe hand it was that held the pen.

ii. As to the Hebrews, to whom it is directed, the opinion of the Ancients was, that they were the believing Jews dwelling in Judea and Paleſtine; yet not excluſive of thoſe who were diſpers'd abroad. And indeed, we muſt believe, that the bearer of it (who could not deliver it to all the Jews in general) was directed to leave it at ſome one particular place, for the uſe of all the reſt: And what place ſo proper and likely, as Jeruſalem, the principal ſeat of the circumciſion, from whence it might be communicated, not only to the neighbouring Jews in Judea and Paleſtine, but by degrees alſo to all thoſe of the diſperſion?

iii. As to the occaſion of writing it, The Apoſtle, underſtanding that the Hebrews (or at leaſt a great part of them) were ready to fall back from the faith of Chriſt, into their former Judaiſm, by reaſon of thoſe cruel perſecutions, which they ſuffer'd from their unbelieving countrymen, and others by their inſtigation, did therefore ſend this pathetick Epiſtle unto them, to confirm them in the faith which they had embrac'd, and to exhort them to conſtancy in it. Hence it is, iv. That the ſubject of this Epiſtle is compos'd of the moſt convincing arguments, drawn, 1. From the excellency and ſupereminency of Chriſt's nature, perſon, and offices; but chiefly, of his prieſtly office, above that of Aaron. 2. From the danger of apoſtaſy. 3. From the excellency and great power of faith. 4. From the gracious effects and fruits of affliction. And the whole concluded with exhortations to divers Chriſtian duties, both general and particular.

v. The time of writing it, tho' ſomewhat uncertain, ſeems to have been a little before, or very ſoon after, St Paul s diſcharge from his firſt impriſonment at Rome. Baronius (upon the authority of St. Chryſoſtome, and others) places it under the year of our Lord 60. and that while St. Paul was in bonds. That text in ch. xiii. 23. where the Author ſpeaks of his intention to come ſhortly to ſee them, ſuppoſes him to have been at his liberty at the time: But it may be underſtood only, that he had a fair proſpect of being ſet at liberty very ſhortly; For thus indeed he writes in other Epiſtles, while he was yet undoubtedly a priſoner, Phil. ii. 24. and Philem. 22. And this opinion ſeems, in the main, to be generally agreed unto; only that ſome Chronologers compute this Æra of St. Paul's enlargement to have been about two or three years later.

vi. As to the place alſo from whence it was written, there is ſome variety of judgment. The ordinary note of ſubſcription, (apo tes Italias) that it was "written from Italy," together with that expreſſion, ch. xiii. 24. "they of Italy ſalute you," incline moſt interpreters to conclude, that St. Paul had now left Rome, and was in ſome other part of Italy when he wrote it. But Dr. Hammond obſerves, that the King's MS. reads the ſubſcription to it (apo Romes) from Rome; which with the original reading of the before cited text, (hoi apo tes Italias, which ought properly to be rendred they from Italy,) favour the other interpretation, that it was written at Rome, before his enlargement. But this we ſhall leave to the Criticks.

CHAP. I.

Chriſt, by whom the Goſpel was deliver'd, does far excell the Angels, by whom the law was deliver'd.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. GOD who at ſundry times, and in divers manners, ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the prophets. Hath in theſe laſt days ſpoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom alſo he made the worlds: Who, being the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, and upholding all things by the words of his power, when he had by himſelf purged our ſins, ſat down on the right hand of the Majeſty on high.

God, who, at ſundry times.] The Apoſtle, intending here a compariſon between the Law and the Goſpel, ſhews firſt, wherein they both agree, and next, wherein they differ. 1. They agree in this, that God was the author of them both: Both Law and Goſpel receiv'd their original from God himſelf, and God the Father, by way of eminency, was the peculiar author of both; that God, who "ſpake in time paſt unto the Fathers by the Prophets, hath, in theſe laſt days ſpoken to us by his Son." 2. The difference between them, with reſpect to the manner of their revelation. That of the will of God under the Law was, 1. "At ſundry times:" Before the flood, by Enoch and Noah; after the flood, by Abraham, Jacob, Moſes, and all the Prophets. 2. "In divers manners:" Sometimes by a lively voice, ſometimes by dreams and viſions, and ſometimes by inſpiration and immediate revelation, ſometimes by Urim and Thummim, and ſometimes by ſigns from Heaven. 3. "In time paſt;" that is, of old, formerly; whereas the revelation of the Goſpel was made "in theſe laſt days:" That was made "unto the Fathers;" this "unto us." 4. That revelation of the Law was made "by the Prophets;" this by "his Son," Jeſus Chriſt. From the whole, learn, 1. That Almighty God did not leave the world only to the light of nature, and to know him barely by his works of creation; but beſtow'd upon them the invaluable bleſſing of ſupernatural revelation, thereby to bring mankind to the clear knowledge of their duty. 2. That the revelation which God was pleas'd to make of himſelf, and his will, was gradual, and by parts; not all at one time, and in one manner, but "at ſundry times, and in divers manners." 3. That the Goſpel-diſpenſation is the moſt perfect revelation of the will of God, which God ever did, or will, make to the ſons of men. And, 4. That it is a final revelation of God's mind and will to a loſt world. A further diſcovery of it, for man's ſalvation, is not to be expected. In the Goſpel God has "ſpoken unto us by his Son:" If we will not hear him, he will ſpeak no more; we muſt expect no other: He can ſend no greater Prophet, no dearer perſon, to us, than his own Son; and therefore he will ſend no other. (B.) When this Epiſtle begins with a compariſon between the Jewiſh and the Chriſtian revelation, we may very well underſtand the reaſon of doing ſo to be, not only becauſe the perſons immediately addreſs'd to were concern'd in the former, but becauſe (as the Pſalmiſt juſtly glories in the diſtinguiſhing kindneſs of Almighty God to them, Pſa. cxlvii. 19, 20.) the circumſtance of no other people but them could pretend to rival, or indeed be worthy ſo much as to be named with, Ours on this account. And therefore, to ſhew the Chriſtian's advantage confeſſedly above that of all mankind, in point of divine light and knowledge, no more was neceſſary, than to prove it ſuperior to any, in times paſt, afforded to the Jews. (Stanh.) And how far it was ſo, will be more particularly ſhew'd in the ſeveral notes here next following. See Biſhop Andrews's ſermon on this text.

At ſundry times.] Polymeros does literally import ſomewhat done at ſeveral parcels, or by ſeveral degrees. Hence the common tranſlation, "at ſundry times," is not wrong; but only ſeems not to be full enough to denote all that the Apoſtle might probably deſign to denote by that word; namely, that God "ſpake unto the Fathers," not only "at ſundry times," but alſo by ſundry degrees of revelation; ſtill imparting further and further diſcoveries of the Goſpel ſtate, as the time of its commencing grew nearer and nearer. (Wells) Thus God ſpake, Firſt, concerning the perſon of Chriſt, only that he ſhould be of the woman's ſeed, and ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head, Gen. iii. 15. Then he diſcover'd of what nation, viz. Of the ſeed of Abraham, ch. xxii. 22. Then more particularly, of the tribe of Judah, ch. xlix. 2, &c. and at length, the very family; namely, of the houſe of David, Pſa. cxxxii. 11, &c. So likewiſe, concerning his offices, it was reveal'd to Moſes, that he ſhould be a Prophet, Deut. xviii. 18. To David, that he ſhould be a Prieſt, Pſa. cx. 4. And to Jeremy, that he ſhould be a King, Jer. xxiii. 5. And other circumſtances relating to him were alſo diſcover'd by like parcels; as, to Iſaiah, that he ſhould be born of a Virgin, Iſa. vii. 14. and ix. 6. to Micah, the very place of his birth, Micah v. 2. and to Daniel the time of it, by number of weeks, Dan. ix. 25, &c. (Andr.) From all which, and many more of the like ſort, 'tis evident, how God ſpake to the Fathers, in time paſt, not only at ſundry times, but by ſundry degrees of revelation; ſo as conſtantly to have ſome reſerve of freſh diſcoveries for ſucceeding ages, which thoſe that went before had liv'd in ignorance of. (Stanh.) See the notes on Rom. x. 4 1 Cor. xiii. 10. Gal. iv. 4. and Col. ii. 3.

And in divers manners,] Polytropos, if underſtood (as it may well be) of tropes or figures, will point out to us many more ways of God's revealing his will to the Fathers of old, beſide thoſe abovemention'd: Such as the Paſchal lamb, Exod. xii. 4, &c. The Scape goat, Lev. xvi. 10. The Red heifer, Numb. xix. 2, &c. and a multitude of the like kind, ſhadow'd out darkly, rather than clearly expreſs'd. (Andr.)

By the Prophets.] En tois prophetais; In the Prophets: Which phraſe in the original hath an eſpecial emphaſis; importing, that God was after an eſpecial manner in the Prophets; inſpiring their minds, and ordering their tongues, ſo as they ſpake not their own words, but the very words of God. (Gouge)

In theſe laſt days.] That is, in the days of the Meſſiah. See the notes on Acts ii. 17. and Gal. iv. 4.

By his ſon.] Since the Majeſty of an infinite God muſt needs be too vaſt, not only for any words, but even for the moſt extended thought, of a comprehenſion ſo narrow as ours, great care muſt be taken, in the expounding of Scripture, not to inſiſt too rigorouſly upon thoſe images and repreſentations, which are made uſe of there, to rectify our notions of things ſo far above us. For, theſe in truth are uſed, not becauſe they expreſs the matter fully, and in all its parts, but becauſe we are not capable of better. And again, ſince one and the ſame image will not ſuffice to repreſent all that is neceſſary to believe, there is a neceſſity of doing it by ſeveral: And therefore, we muſt be ſure to obſerve, for what purpoſe each of theſe is made choice of, and content ourſelves with applying it to that particular difficulty which it was brought to illuſtrate: Otherwiſe, if it be ſtretch'd beyond its line, we may give occaſion to perverſe and dangerous conſequences; and make that, which ſhould be a guard againſt errors and hereſies, a foundation for ſtrange inferences and opinions, to which the author never meant it ſhould extend. (Stanh.) And theſe neceſſary cautions are here premiſed, with a particular regard to the characters of our bleſſed Saviour, and the arguments for his divinity, which here next follow. See the notes on John i. 14, 18. and iii. 16. and Acts x. 36.

Appointed heir of all things.] By this, no doubt, we are to underſtand that univerſal dominion, mention'd in other texts, which call him "a prince and a Saviour," Acts v. 31. "Lord and Chriſt," ch. ii. 36. "Lord of all," ch. x. 36. "Lord both of the dead and living," Rom. xiv. 9. Which ſpeak of his ſubduing "all enemies," even death itſelf; having "put all things under his feet," 1 Cor. xv. 25, &c. of his having "all power given unto him in heaven and in earth," Matth. xxviii. 18. and of "going into heaven, and being on the right hand of God, Angels, Authorities, and Powers, being made ſubject unto him," 1 Pet. iii. 22. A government, of which, as God, he ſtood poſſeſs'd from all eternity. A government, which, however, his human nature might have hereditary title to, by virtue, and ſo from the very inſtant, of its perſonal union with the Divine; yet was he not, as God and man both, actually inveſted with it, till after, and by way of compenſation for, his ſufferings and death: But a government withall, which were not he very God, as well as very Man, it is not to be conceiv'd, how he could be qualified to exerciſe. (Stanh.) See the notes on John i. 8. and v. 27. Acts ii. 36. Rom. xiv. 9. and Eph. i. 20.

He made the worlds.] Di hou kai; By whom; not for whom, as the Socinians would ſuggeſt. The word ſignifies the efficient, not the final, cauſe, according to Coloſſ. i. 16, 17. And by him, not as an inſtrument, or created cauſe; for then muſt he be created by himſelf, ſeeing all things were made by him, and nothing made without him, John i. 3. But as the principal efficient cauſe, according to St. John v. 19. Whatſoever the Father doth, that doth alſo the Son likewiſe. The Father doth all by the Son, and the Son doth all from the Father. And by making the worlds, we are to underſtand his forming of the old world, not his reforming of the new; for if ſo, the Apoſtles might be ſaid to make the worlds as well as Chriſt, becauſe they had a principal hand in converting and reforming the worlds. But by the world here underſtand the viſible and material worlds; all things in heaven and earth, which were made by Chriſt, not as ſubordinate inſtrument, but a primary and principal agent; which ſets forth the Omnipotent Power of Chriſt, and conſequently proves him to be truly and really God. (B.) See Dr. Whitby at large upon this text: and the notes on John i. 3. and Col. i. 16, 17.

The brightneſs of his glory.] The word apaugaſma, here tranſlated brightneſs, is metaphorical. The verb, apaugazein, from whence it is deriv'd, ſignifieth to ſend forth brightneſs, or light: And the noun here uſed, ſuch brightneſs as cometh from light; as the brightneſs, or light, or ſun-beams iſſuing from the ſun. But, ſince the Engliſh word brightneſs is, by ſome learned perſons, thought not duly to anſwer to the Greek apaugaſma, becauſe, (they ſay) brightneſs properly reſpects the light of any lucid body itſelf, as well as that of the rays which proceed from that body, whereas apaugaſma does peculiarly reſpect the light of the rays, not of the lucid body itſelf; we may therefore expreſs the ſaid Greek word by another Engliſh expreſſion, more plainly anſwering thereto, and render it the ſhining forth, rather than a beam or ray: For a beam or ray denotes only a ſmall portion of that light which flows from the lucid body; whereas apaugaſma denotes all the whole light which flows from the lucid body, conſider'd collectively as one body of light iſſuing from the lucid body; not as diſtinguiſh'd into ſeveral rays of light; and ſo is moſt aptly applicable to our Saviour. (Wells) For as the brightneſs of the ſun is of the ſame nature with the ſun, and of as long continuance as the ſun, and cannot be ſeparated from the ſun; and yet the ſun, and the brightneſs of the ſun, are really diſtinct each from other: In like manner the Father and the Son are of one and the ſame eſſence, co-eternal and inſeparable; yet the perſon of the one is diſtinct from the other. And as the ſun communicates its light and influence to us by its beams, ſo doth God communicate his goodneſs, and manifeſt himſelf to us by Jeſus Chriſt. Learn hence, That the Son is of the ſame eſſence with the Father, yet a perſon really diſtinct from the Father, and all the incomprehenſible glory of the Father brightly ſhines forth in Chriſt his Son. (B.) It is not to be queſtion'd, but the Nicene-Fathers, in alluſion to this text among others, repreſented to us the generation of God the Son by that expreſſion, Light of Light. And further, it is very probable, that the Apoſtle might deſign, by taking notice, that our Saviour was the ſhining forth of his Father's glory, to teach the Hebrews, or at leaſt to put them in mind, That our Saviour was that perſon of the Godhead, who appear'd ſo often to their Fathers in Glory; or in that glorious light, which they call'd Shechinah; that is, the Glory, wherein God in a peculiar manner dwells, Exod. xvi. 7, 10, and elſewhere. (Wells) See much more to this effect, in Biſhop Andrews's ſermon, and the reſpective commentaries of Dr. Gouge, Dr. Stanhope, and Dr. Whitby, all on this text at large.

Expreſs image of his perſon.] Character tes hypoſtaſeos autou; The character, &c. The verb, charattein, ſignifieth to engrave: And the word character, thence deriv'd, ſignifieth the ſtamp, or print, of a thing engrav'd; as the ſtamp on money coin'd, the print on paper, the mark made by a ſeal, or any ſuch like impreſſion. (Gouge) And this verſion is much more ſignificant, than that of image: For even in a looking-glaſs we may behold the image of any thing, but not the character of it. (Leigh) Moreover, tho' hypoſtaſis came afterward to be uſed for perſon, it anciently ſignified ſubſtance: And the ancient Chriſtians expreſs'd themſelves ſo, that Chriſt, in his divine nature, is ejuſdem ſubſtantiæ with the Father, as Tertullian hath it in many places; and, according to the Greeks, homoouſios; which character of our Saviour ſeems to be deſigned by this text, and Col. i. 15. (Wall) As, under the term of ſon, is repreſented his true identity of nature, whereupon is grounded our belief of him, that he is conſubſtantial: So, under that of brightneſs, (or ſhining forth) that he is coeternal; and, under this of image (or character) that he is coequal; all againſt the new heads of the old hydra, ſprung up again in our days. (Andr.) See the notes on John xiv. 9. 2 Cor. xiv. 4. and Col. i. 15.

Upholding all things.] Obſerve here, That our Apoſtle, having declared what Chriſt is, next declares what he does; namely, that he "upholdeth all things by the word of his power;" that is, he exerts and puts forth the ſame omnipotent power in the work of preſervation, which he did in the work of creation, keeping it from ſinking into its original chaos of confuſion. This work of conſervation, is as great an act of omnipotency, as that of creation: By the former, all things were brought out of nothing; by the latter they are preſerved from turning into nothing, which their own nature, and their perpetual conflict by contrariety of qualities, would neceſſarily precipitate them into. Learn hence, 1. That ſuch is the nature and condition of the univerſe, that it cannot ſubſiſt one moment without continual ſupport. 2. That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt has the weight of the whole creation upon his hand; he upholdeth what himſelf created: And as well his upholding as creating, his conſervation as well as creation of all things by the word of his power, do prove him truly and really God. (B.) And this is here taken to denote the regal power of Chriſt, to which he is advanced by his reſurrection. (H.) See the notes on Col. i. 17.

By himſelf purged our ſins.] That is, by the ſacrifice of himſelf, he took away the guilt of our ſins, by making ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God for them: Whereby is implied the excellency of Chriſt's ſacrifice above all others. (Aſſ.) See Biſhop Andrews's Sermon on this text; and the notes on Acts xx. 28. Rom. iv. 25. Gal. i. 4. and Tit. ii. 14.

Sat down.] Hereby is denoted the ſupreme dignity, power and dominion, which Chriſt obtain'd when he aſcended into heaven. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts vii. 55. and Col. iii. 1.

Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. Being made ſo much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels ſaid he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he ſhall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the firſt-begotten into the world, he ſaith, And let all the angels of God worſhip him. And of the angels he ſaith, Who maketh his angels ſpirits, and his miniſters a flame of fire. But unto the Son he ſaith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a ſceptre of righteouſneſs is the ſceptre of thy kingdom: Thou haſt loved righteouſneſs, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs above thy fellows. And, thou, Lord, in the beginning, haſt laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands: They ſhall periſh, but thou remaineſt: And they all ſhall wax old as doth a garment; and as a veſture ſhalt thou fold them up, and they ſhall be changed: But thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall not fail. But to which of the angels ſaid he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footſtool? Are they not all miniſtring ſpirits, ſent forth to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation?

Being made ſo much better.] In the foregoing verſes, a compariſon was made between Chriſt and the Prophets, here between Chriſt and the Angels; and the preference and pre-eminence is given to him above them all. (B.) And conſequently, above all other creatures. (Aſſ.) Where note, That (genomenos) doth not only ſignify being made, but alſo ſimply, being, John i. 15. and Acts vii. 38. And not only ſo, but being declar'd or acknowledg'd, Rom. iii. 4. and Jam. i. 12. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 14. and Acts vii. 38.

A more excellent name.] That is, more honourable and glorious titles and attributes, or greater honour, power, dominion, majeſty, and glory, than the Angels. (Aſſ.) This is evident from the citations here produced, wherein are mention'd ſeveral names, as Son, God, Lord: So that by name is here to be underſtood, not a bare ſingle name, but a ſtyle, or title; which is eſteem'd but one, tho' made up of ſeveral names of dignity and authority. (Wells) It was a known doctrine of the Jews, that the Meſſiah ſhould be higher than the Angels: Agreeably to which it is, that the Apoſtle, here writing to the Jews, ſignifies Chriſt to be indeed the Meſſiah, and ſo ſuperior to the Angels themſelves. (H.) See the notes on Eph. i. 21. and Phil. ii. 9.

Thou art my ſon.] This teſtimony is taken out of Pſa. ii. 7. which Pſalm is wholly prophetical. There is never a clauſe in it, but may moſt fitly be applied to Chriſt. (Gouge) And accordingly, Rabbi Solomon here ſays, Our maſters have interpreted all that is written in that Pſalm of the King, Meſſiah: And Saadias Gaon doth, from theſe very words, prove the dominion and kingdom of the Meſſiah. (W.) See the notes on Acts xiii. 33.

I will be to him a Father.] Tho' Dr. Wall owns the foregoing citation to be commonly applied to the Meſſiah, yet he ſays, how this, which was ſaid of Solomon, is applied to Chriſt, is not evident. But Dr. Whitby's note might have ſatisfied him, That theſe words are cited from 2 Sam. vii. 14 promiſing to Solomon, the type of Chriſt, a kingdom to be "eſtabliſhed for ever," ver. 13, and 16. and ſo to Chriſt, the Antitype, and eminently the Son of God, an everlaſting kingdom and dominion; for which he voucheth the judgment of the Jewiſh Church. And further, he well notes, That tho' the Angels be ſometimes in Scripture call'd "the ſons of God," Job i. 6, &c. yet God never ſaid to any of them, "I will be to him a Father," to protect him in his kingdom; much leſs, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee" to a kingdom: And ſo, theſe paſſages, in the true and full extent of them, cannot agree to any of the Angels.

Angels of God worſhip him.] Here again Dr. Wall ſays, in Deut. xxxii. 43 there are, according to the LXX, theſe very words, but nothing of them in the Hebrew there: And that, in Pſa. xcvii. 7. the Hebrew, tranſlated by the Engliſh, "worſhip him all ye Gods," is All ye Elohim; which the Seventy and the Vulgar do more rightly tranſlate, All ye his Angels: But whichſoever of thoſe texts be cited here, he knows not whether it can be made out, from the context of the places, that they are underſtood of the Meſſiah; or whether any of the Targums do ſo apply that of the Pſalm. In anſwer to which we muſt obſerve, from Dr. Whitby, 1 That Kimchi ſays, the Hebrews did expound that Pſalm, of what was to come to paſs in the days of the Meſſiah. 2. That, in the Septuagint, it is ſtiled, A pſalm of David, when the land was eſtabliſh'd to him, or when he was made maſter of all thoſe countries, which God deſign'd to be the inheritance of Iſrael; and therefore very properly referr'd to the Son of David, at his reſurrection, or coming again into the world, when "all power was given unto him in heaven and earth," and he was ſolemnly inaugurated in his ſpiritual kingdom. Obſerve alſo, from Grotius, 3. That not only Iſaac Benarama applies thoſe words of Pſa. ii. 7. to the Meſſiah, but all the Hebrews confeſs'd, that, in a myſtical ſenſe, they belong'd to him. And 4. That D. Kimchi ſays, upon Pſa. xcvii. that all the Pſalms from xciii. to ci. do contain the myſtery of the Meſſiah. To which I may add, 5. That the ſeveral texts here quoted, being produc'd by an inſpir'd Apoſtle, in direct proof, that Jeſus Chriſt was the long-expected Meſſiah, 'tis very extraordinary in any one to ſuggeſt, that they were not proper and pertinent to the purpoſe. And, 6. From Dr. Gouge, and Mr. Burkitt, That the Angels themſelves (who were the moſt excellent of all the creatures) being commanded to worſhip the Meſſiah, and that here applied by the Apoſtle to Chriſt, it follows, not only that Chriſt is God, but that the Angels are not to be worſhipp'd; nor conſequently any other created being.

Maketh his Angels Spirits.] A ſecond argument to prove the Angels inferior to Chriſt. They who are made Spirits and Miniſters, are inferior to him who made them ſo: But Angels are made Spirits and Miniſters by Chriſt; Therefore Angels are inferior to Chriſt. (Gouge) But, not to enlarge upon the ſeveral particulars of this diſparity, Let us obſerve here, once for all, That Chriſt, the Meſſiah, is, in a ſenſe and manner peculiar to himſelf, entitled The Son of God, ver. 5. while the Angels are allow'd no higher a denomination, than that of Miniſters and Servants of God: Nay, they are all commanded to worſhip this Son, ver. 6, 7. a homage, to which nothing leſs could give him right, than his being their Creator, and they his creatures. At other times we find him repreſented as a righteous King, poſſeſs'd of an everlaſting dominion, and inveſted with ſuch diſtinguiſhing honours, as none, even the higheſt and moſt peculiar favourites of heaven were, or may ever hope to be dignified with. And moreover, not only the Creation of the world, but the diſſolution of it alſo, is expreſly declared to be his doing, ver. 10, &c. Mean while, the utmoſt attributed to the Angels amounts to no more than their being inſtruments in the hand of God. (Stanh.) In a word, What proof more can be deſir'd of Chriſt's Divinity, than what is here given by the Apoſtle? The name and attributes of God are given to him; divine honour is requir'd to be paid to him; divine works are aſcribed to him; his omnipotency is declar'd; and his eternity and immutability aſſerted. (B.) See the notes on Col. i. 16. and thoſe here next following.

Therefore, God.] Dia touto; For this end, God hath qualified thee with the gifts of his ſpirit, for the adminiſtration of thy kingdom. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts x. 38.

Fold them up.] Helixeis, the original word here, in our ordinary copies, from heliſſo, ſignifies properly to fold up, as we uſe to do curtains, carpets, &c. when a family removes. In which ſenſe it is a beautiful metaphor, as applied to the heavens. (Leigh) But Dr. Hammond, and Dr. Wells, have obſerv'd, that the true primary word, according to the Hebrew, was allaxeis, not helixeis, anſwerable alſo to the following clauſe (kai allageſontai) Thou ſhalt change them, "and they ſhall be changed." Which is further confirm'd by the Ethiopic Verſion; and is accordingly rectified by Dr. Grabe. Mean-while, the meaning is clear, that the heavens ſhall be changed, after the manner of changing cloaths, putting off the old, and putting on new; that is, that the heavens, having no more ſervice to do to the earth, by enlightning and ſhining upon it, ſhall be chang'd into a form, which ſhall be moſt agreeable to the preſent employment or uſe of them.

Enemies thy footſtool.] An alluſion to a cuſtom in the eaſtern parts, of the conqueror's ſetting his foot upon the necks of thoſe whom he has conquer'd. (Aſſ.)

All miniſtring ſpirits.] The deliverances of the godly, as alſo the puniſhments of the wicked, are frequently in Scripture deſcrib'd to be done by the inſtruments of Angels; ſometimes viſible, moſt commonly not. (Oxf.) See the notes on Matth. xviii. 10. Luke xvi. 22 and Acts xii. 23. And whoever has the curioſity to inquire more particularly into the exiſtence, nature, number, order, and offices of Angels, may conſult a Theological diſcourſe upon this text, by Mr Benj Camfield, 1678.

CHAP. II.

Motives to a more ſteady adherence to Chriſt, and his Goſpel.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. THEREFORE we ought to give the more earneſt heed to the things which we have heard, leſt at any time we ſhould let them ſlip. For if the word ſpoken by angels was ſtedfaſt, and every tranſgreſſion and diſobedience received a juſt recompence of reward; how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God alſo bearing them witneſs, both with ſigns and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will?

Therefore we ought.] The Apoſtle begins this chapter with an exhortation, by way of inference from his former diſcourſe; That "we ought to give the more earneſt heed to the" doctrines of the Goſpel, which he had been recommending, "leſt at any time we ſhould let them ſlip." In the next verſe he gives a reaſon why we ought to be ſo regardful of theſe things; becauſe, If the old Law of Moſes, deliver'd only by Angels, was of ſo great authority, that God would not permit any wilful tranſgreſſion of it to go without a ſevere puniſhment, "how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect," or deſpiſe the new Law of the Goſpel; the doctrine of "ſo great ſalvation," as is deliver'd to us, by no leſs a perſon, than the Son of God, and confirm'd to us by his Apoſtles, who were witneſſes of what he did and taught? (Sharpe)

At any time.] There are ſundry times and ſeaſons, as there are alſo ſeveral ways and means, dangerous for the loſs of the word, if men attend not diligently to its preſervation; ſome loſing the word in a time of proſperity, others in a time of perſecution, or temptation: And "therefore we ought to give the more earneſt heed to it." (B.)

Should let them ſlip.] Pararrhyomen: A metaphor taken from water pour'd into a cullender, or crackt veſſel (Leigh)

The word ſpoken by Angels.] That is, by the mediation or miniſtry of Angels. (H.) See the notes on Acts vii. 38, 53. and Gal. iii. 19.

So great ſalvation.] Salvation, in its general ſenſe, imports any great deliverance from evil or danger: And indeed, this is the uſual ſenſe of the word throughout the Old Teſtament But now, becauſe the greateſt of all evils and dangers, which mankind are obnoxious to, are thoſe which are occaſion'd by their ſins; therefore is the word ſalvation, by way of eminence, appropriated to that deliverance which our Lord Jeſus Chriſt wrought for mankind, from their ſins, and the puniſhment of them. So that our ſalvation, in the New Teſtament ſenſe, is the ſame thing with our redemption by Chriſt Jeſus Chriſt came to be our Saviour; and that redemption he wrought for us, is our Salvation: And as many parts and branches as go to the making up that redemption, ſo many parts and branches go to make up our Salvation. This is the ſalvation here ſpoken of: Only, the Apoſtle, by an uſual figure, puts ſalvation for the doctrine of ſalvation, or that Goſpel of Chriſt which tenders this ſalvation to mankind. (Sharpe) For other notions of this word, See Dr. Hammond on the place See alſo Archbiſhop Sharpe's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Luke xiii. 23. Acts xiii. 26. Rom. i. 16. 1 Cor. iii. 15. and 2 Cor. vi. 2.

Began to be ſpoken.] Not that Chriſt deliver'd the doctrine of ſalvation imperfectly, and left it to be fully deliver'd by the Apoſtles; but becauſe he firſt preach'd it, and that fully and plainly, which before was but obſcurely revealed. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 1, &c. Matth. iv. 17. and Mark i. 1.

Confirmed unto us.] That is, Unto us Jews; not unto us Apoſtles, by whom it was confirmed. Vain therefore is the argument taken from theſe words, to prove St. Paul not the author of this Epiſtle, becauſe the Goſpel was not confirm'd to him, "by them that heard Chriſt," he receiving it by immediate revelation from him, Gal. i. 12. And 'tis uſual with St. Paul, in this and other Epiſtles, to ſay, We, and Us, when not he himſelf, but only thoſe he ſpeaks to, or of, are to be underſtood; as in Rom. iii. 7. and elſewhere. (W. Wells and Wall)

Bearing them witneſs.] See the notes on Mark xvi. 16, &c. Acts xiv. 3. Rom. xii. 6. 1 Cor. ii. 4, 7, 11. and xii. 11. and Eph. iv. 8.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. For unto the angels hath he not put in ſubjection the world to come, whereof we ſpeak. But one in a certain place teſtified, ſaying, What is man that thou art mindful of him? Or the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him? Thou madeſt him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedſt him with glory and honour, and didſt ſet him over the works of thy hands: Thou haſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet. For in that he put all in ſubjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we ſee not yet all things put under him. But we ſee Jeſus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the ſuffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God ſhould taſte death for every man.

The world to come.] That is, the world of believers, gather'd out of all nations by the preaching of the Goſpel: And this is "not put in ſubjection" unto Angels, but unto Chriſt; which is another argument to perſwade the Hebrews, "to give the more earneſt heed" to the Goſpel preach'd by Chriſt, than to the Law deliver'd by the miniſtry of Angels. See Dr. Gouge and Dr. Whitby at large upon this text.

What is man?] The proof here cited is from Pſa. viii. 4. where the Pſalmiſt breaks out into admiration, at that "glory and honour," which God put upon man, at firſt, in the work of the Creation, and next, in the work of Redemption. (B.) See Mr. Mede's ſermon on that Pſalm; and the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 25.

Madeſt him a little lower.] Or, Haſt leſſen'd him, a little while, below the Angels. (Aſſ. H. and Wall)

All things in ſubjection.] See the notes on ch. i. 13. Matth. xi. 27. 1 Cor. xv. 27. and Eph. i. 20.

Taſte death for every man.] Chriſt may be ſaid but to have taſted death, either becauſe he ſaw no corruption; or becauſe he continued but a ſhort time under the power thereof. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on John x. 15. xii. 32. and xvii. 9. Acts ii. 33. 2 Cor. v. 15. Phil. ii. 7, &c. and 1 Tim. ii. 6.

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many ſons to glory, to make the captain of their ſalvation perfect through ſufferings. For both he that ſanctifieth, and they who are ſanctified, are all of one: For which cauſe he is not aſhamed to call them brethren; Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midſt of the Church will I ſing praiſe unto thee: And again, I will put my truſt in him: And again, Behold, I, and the children which God hath given me. Foraſmuch then as the children are partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo himſelf likewiſe took part of the ſame; That through death he deſtroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life-time ſubject to bondage. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the ſeed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren; that he might be a merciful and faithful high-prieſt, in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people: For in that he himſelf hath ſuffered, being tempted, he is able to ſuccour them that are tempted.

For it became him.] Chriſt is call'd "the captain our ſalvation," becauſe the whole work of ſalvation, from firſt to laſt, our guidance and conduct, through ſin and ſuffering, unto glory and happineſs, is committed to him. (B.) And, as ſuch, (eprepe) "it became him," &c. This Greek word is diverſly uſed; As it implies, 1. A neceſſity, Heb. vii. 26. 2. A duty, Matth. iii. 15. 3. An anſwerableneſs and agreement of one thing to another, Tit. ii. 1. And, 4. A decency, comelineſs, or glory of a thing, 1 Tim. ii. 10. In which laſt ſenſe it is uſed here: For never did any thing more make to the glory of God, than his making his Son "lower than the Angels," that he might "taſte death for every man." (Gouge) Whether the work of man's redemption could have been wrought, without the humiliation of the Son of God, is not determinable by men: But that it was the moſt admirable way, which wiſdom, juſtice, and mercy could require, cannot be denied. (Aſſ.) See Dr. Whitby on this text; and the notes on Acts iii. 15. and v. 31. and Rom. xi. 36.

Perfect through ſufferings.] Teleiſoai, which we here tranſlate, to make perfect, doth alſo ſignify to conſecrate him to his Prieſtly office: And thus it is uſed, by the Seventy, Exod. xxix. 9. and elſewhere. And ſo it is underſtood here alſo by Beza, the Aſſembly-men, Gouge, Leigh, Whitby, Burkitt, Johnſon and Wells; tho' the laſt of them acknowledges it unreaſonable ſo to reſtrain the word to this ſignification, as to exclude the other. See the notes on Luke xiii. 32. and xxiv. 26, and 46.

He that ſanctifieth.] Hagiazon. The word hagiazein, in this Epiſtle, is uſed in the ſacrificial ſenſe, or with relation to expiation of ſins. In the Old Teſtament, when it reſpecteth ſacrifices, it ſometimes ſignifies to devote, conſecrate, and offer them to God. And in this ſenſe our Saviour uſeth it, John xvii. 19. For, as Aaron and his ſons were hallow'd, and ſet apart for God's ſervice, by a ſacrifice, to expiate them from their ſins, and ſanctify them to the Prieſthood, as well as by the holy anointing: So were Chriſt's Apoſtles ſanctified and ſet apart to their office, not only by the unction of the Holy Ghoſt; but alſo by that piacular victim Chriſt offer'd for their ſins. And accordingly, in theſe words, "He that ſanctifieth," is Chriſt who offers himſelf, that he might (hagiazein) ſanctify, that is, purge them from their ſins, by his own blood: "And they that are ſanctified," are they who by this blood are purg'd from their ſins, and ſo are fitted to draw nigh to God, and made a Royal Prieſthood. (W.) See the notes on John xvii. 19.

Call them brethren.] See the notes on John xx. 17.

Partakers of fleſh and blood.] See the notes on John i. 14.

Might deſtroy him.] That is, the power and kingdom of Satan, which ſtands in three things; 1. In tempting man to ſin. 2. In holding him under the bondage of ſin. 3. In accuſing him to God for ſin. Hence, Chriſt may be ſaid by death to deſtroy the Devil, that is, the power of the Devil; becauſe, by the merit and virtue of his death, he took away both the reigning and condemning power of ſin. (Aſſ.) The word katargein, which we here render to deſtroy, ſignifies to fruſtrate, evacuate, invalidate, and take away all force or power from any: And ſo it muſt be taken here, that Chriſt (katargeſe ton diabolon) did evacuate or fruſtrate the Devil's deſigns, and cancel that deed, by which, upon ſins coming into the world, men were bound over unto death. For, this notion of the phraſe doth fitly belong to it here, where it is laid, as the foundation of comfort to thoſe who dread perſecutions, "through fear of death," ver. 15. by aſſuring them, that Chriſt hath taken away the ſting of death. (H.) See the notes on Acts ii. 24. Rom. vi. 3, &c. and vii. 1. 1 Cor. xv. 26, 55. Col. ii. 15. and 2 Tim. i. 10.

He took not on him.] Epilambanetai. It may be rendered from the original thus: He catched not hold on Angels, but on man he catched hold. A metaphor taken from a perſon that catches hold of another, who is falling down ſome deep and dangerous precipice, to his inevitable deſtruction. Such a good and kind office did the Son of God for us, when he ſuffered Angels to fall headlong from that ſtate of happineſs in which they were created, into that abyſs and gulph of myſtery, into which they had plunged themſelves by their own voluntary tranſgreſſion: The like into which had man alſo done, had he not been ſeaſonably catched by the Son of God in the arms of preventing grace and mercy. Learn, That it was not the angelical, but the human nature: It was the nature of fallen man, and not of lapſed Angels, which the Son of God did vouchſafe to aſſume, and take into a perſonal union with his Godhead. Queſt. Why would not Chriſt take upon him the nature of Angels? Probably, Becauſe they were the firſt tranſgreſſors; and God might judge it decent, that the firſt breach of the Divine Law ſhould be puniſhed with death, to ſecure obedience for the future: Or, 2. Becauſe the Angels ſinned without a tempter; they had no ſuperior rank of creatures already fallen, as man had, to ſeduce and draw them from their obedience to their Creator's will: Or, 3. Becauſe the Angels ſinned againſt more clear and convictive light and knowledge; there was nothing of weakneſs, deceit, or ignorance, to leſſen the malignity of their ſin; they did not ſin by miſperſuaſion, but of purpoſed malice. But, after all, the reaſon why Chriſt took not hold on Angels, but on man, the ſeed of Abraham, muſt be ultimately reſolved into the ſovereignty of God's will, who will be merciful to whom he will be merciful. Lord! Why mercy, thy milder attribute, ſhould be exerciſed towards man, and juſtice, thy ſeverer attribute, be executed upon Angels! Why veſſels of clay are choſen, and veſſels of gold rejected, muſt be reſolved into that love which paſſes knowledge! And we ſhall never fully underſtand the riches of this diſcriminating grace, till thy dear Son ſhall appear at the Great Day, as their Judge and our Juſtifier: Then ſhall we feel the comfort of theſe words, That "Chriſt took not upon him the nature of Angels, but the ſeed of Abraham." (B.) See Biſhop Andrews's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Rom. iv. 12, &c. and Gal. iii. 14, 29.

In all things] Sin only excepted.

It behoved him.] See the notes on ver. 10. and an excellent note here, in Mr. Burkitt, againſt the Socinians.

CHAP. III.

Chriſt's pre-eminency above Moſes, ſtated and applied.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. WHerefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, conſider the Apoſtle and High-prieſt of our profeſſion, Chriſt Jeſus; who was faithful to him that appointed him, as alſo Moſes was faithful in all his houſe. For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moſes, in as much as he who hath builded the houſe, hath more honour than the houſe. For every houſe is builded by ſome man; but he that built all things is God. And Moſes verily was faithful in all his houſe as a ſervant, for a teſtimony of thoſe things which were to be ſpoken after; but Chriſt as a ſon over his own houſe: Whoſe houſe are we, if we hold faſt the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

Wherefore.] The Apoſtle proſecutes the exhortation begun ch. ii. 1. and continues it to the end of ch. iv. (Aſſ.)

Holy brethren.] See the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 11. and vii. 14.

Partakers of the heavenly calling.] See the notes on Rom. i. 1. and x. 15. 1 Cor. i. 24. Phil. i. 27. Eph. iv. 1. and Col. i. 10.

Conſider the Apoſtle.] Catanoeſate; Ponder, with all your heart and mind, his dignity and excellency; that ſo ye may adhere unto, and obey him. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 2. and ii. 18. John i. 11. Rom. x. 10. and xv. 8.

Of our profeſſion.] The word homologia, here tranſlated profeſſion, is uſed, by the LXX, for a free-will offering, Lev. xxii. 18, 19. Deut. xii. 6, 17. Jer. xliv. 25. Ezek. xlvi. 12. and Amos iv. 5. And therefore, in reaſon, it ought to be ſo render'd here. (Johnſ.) See the notes on 2 Cor. ix. 13. and Eph. v. 2.

Who was faithful.] Here the Apoſtle enters upon a compariſon between Chriſt and Moſes, ſhewing, in general, wherein they were alike, and agreed; as in the following verſes, he ſhews ſundry inſtances, wherein Chriſt is highly exalted above Moſes. See the notes on ch. ii. 17. Acts ii. 36. and 1 Cor. iv. 2.

In all his houſe.] That is, in the Church of God in his time; and wherein God did dwell. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 15.

This man was counted.] Houtos. This very man; Or rather, This Jeſus, of whom I am now ſpeaking. (Wells) See the notes on Acts vii. 36. 1 Cor. xv. 21. and 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Who hath builded the houſe.] The word cataskeuazo ſignifies not only to build, but alſo to order and diſpoſe, and to govern; and both theſe ſenſes are applicable to the deſign of the Apoſtle here; where he is thought to allude to Zach. vi. 12. (Wells) See Hammond and Whitby on this text.

Is God.] That God the Son, our bleſſed Saviour, is here denoted, is evident, from what the Apoſtle undertakes to prove; viz. the dignity of Chriſt above Moſes. The particular arguments ſtand thus; He who builded, or founded, the houſe we are ſpeaking of, (that is, the Jewiſh Church,) and ſo is head thereof, has more honour than any, or all, the members of the ſaid Church; and conſequently more than Moſes: But Jeſus, our bleſſed Saviour, builded the Jewiſh Church; Therefore Jeſus, our bleſſed Saviour, has more honour than Moſes. To prove the Minor, the Apoſtle ſhews, 1. That it was neceſſary to the Jewiſh Church to have ſome builder, founder, or head; which he proves thus, What is neceſſary to every houſe, is, or was, neceſſary to the houſe we are ſpeaking of, or to the Jewiſh Church: But it is neceſſary to every houſe to be builded by ſome one; Therefore it is neceſſary to the houſe we are ſpeaking of, or the Jewiſh Church, to be builded by ſome one. And then, 2. He ſhews, that the ſame perſon, who is Jeſus Chriſt, did build, or found, the Jewiſh Church; which he proves thus, He who built all things, without doubt built every thing which in a more peculiar manner relates to God; and conſequently every ſuch houſe as we are here ſpeaking of, or every Church; and conſequently the Jewiſh Church: But God the Son (as is prov'd in the firſt chapter) who is the ſame perſon with Jeſus our bleſſed Saviour, built all things; Therefore God the Son, who is the ſame perſon with Jeſus, our bleſſed Saviour, built every ſuch houſe as we are ſpeaking of; that is, every Church; and conſequently the Jewiſh Church. And therefore it follows, (according to the concluſion of the firſt ſyllogiſm) that Jeſus, our bleſſed Saviour, has more honour (or was honour'd with more glory) than Moſes; which was the thing to be prov'd by the Apoſtle. (Wells)

And Moſes verily.] Another propoſition, proving the ſame concluſion. He, who is "a Son, over his own houſe," is of more honour, than a ſervant in the houſe of another: But Chriſt is a Son over his own houſe, Moſes was only a ſervant in the houſe of another; Therefore more honour is due unto Chriſt, than is payable to Moſes. (B.)

Whoſe houſe are we.] The Apoſtle, having thus confirmed his arguments, returns (according to his uſual manner) to make application of it unto the Hebrews; and improves it for enforcement of his exhortation unto conſtancy and perſeverance. "Whoſe houſe are we;" that is, believers, who worſhip him according to the Goſpel, are ſo, upon this condition, "that we hold faſt our confidence;" that is, the confident profeſſion of our Chriſtian faith, and the joy and glorying in our hopes of the promiſed bleſſedneſs unto the end. Learn hence, 1. That as it is an eminent privilege to be of the houſe of Chriſt, or a part of that houſe, ſo the greatneſs of the privilege requires an anſwerable duty; becauſe we are of the houſe of God, it becomes us to hold faſt our confidence unto the end. 2. That, at all times, ſo eſpecially in a time of trial and perſecution, conſtancy in our Chriſtian profeſſion is, and will be, a good evidence, both to our ſelves and others, that we are living ſtones in the houſe of God. (B.) See the notes on Matth. xxiv. 13. John vii. 4. Acts iv. 29. and xxviii. 31. Rom. v. 2. x. 10. and xii. 12. 1 Cor. iii. 16. and vi. 19. 2 Cor. i. 12. iii. 12. vi. 10. xi. 23. and xii. 10. Eph. ii. 21. iii. 17. iv. 16. and vi. 19. 1 Theſſ. ii. 2. and 1 Tim. iii. 15.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. Wherefore, as the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderneſs: When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and ſaw my works forty years. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and ſaid, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways. So I ſware in my wrath, They ſhall not enter into my reſt. Take heed, brethren, leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily, while it is called, To day; leſt any of you be hardened through the deceitfulneſs of ſin. For we are made partakers of Chriſt, if we hold the beginning of our confidence ſtedfaſt unto the end; while it is ſaid, To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation. For ſome when they had heard, did provoke: Howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moſes. But with whom was he grieved forty years? Was it not with them that had ſinned, whoſe carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs? And to whom ſware he that they ſhould not enter into his reſt, but to them that believed not? So we ſee that they could not enter in becauſe of unbelief.

Wherefore.] Inaſmuch as God's wonders in Egypt, and in the wilderneſs, the conducting of his people into the land of Canaan, and their rebellious behaviour in it, were true types or ſhadows of the like events in future times, under the Goſpel; therefore the Apoſtle, upon good ground, alledgeth this of the Pſalmiſt, not only as an exhortation applicable to his times, but as a prophecy. (Aſſ.)

To day, if ye will hear.] See the notes on Luke xix. 42. and 2 Cor. vi. 2.

Hear his voice.] That is, Chriſt's; to whom the Pſalm here cited hath reference. (Gouge)

Harden not your hearts.] Leſt any ſhould pretend, their hearts were obdurate by nature, we are here charg'd, that we do not harden them; intimating, that it is wilful obſtinacy, not natural diſability. The true cauſes are here ſet down, by the Apoſtle; viz. 1. Unbelief, ver. 12. both of the threatnings denounc'd againſt ſin, and of the promiſes made unto holineſs, as if they ſhould never be perform'd: And, 2. "The deceitfulneſs of ſin," ver. 13. which promiſeth preſent pleaſures and profits, with all ſenſual ſatisfactions; and if men believe Satan in this, which is falſe, and doubt of, or deny, all that the God of truth affirms, what thunder can awake them? (Comb.) See the notes on Acts vii. 51.

In the provocation.] Meaning the whole ſpace of time, wherein they tempted God in the wilderneſs. (Aſſ.) Tho' many learned expoſitors have underſtood this text more particularly of Maſſah and Meribah, Exod. xvii. 7, places ſo call'd from the Iſraelites tempting and provoking the Lord there, (Gouge) Tempted me.] Viz. By calling into queſtion my preſence, power, and providence. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. x. 9.

Proved me.] The Hebrew word, which is here render'd proved me, is, in Mal. iii. 15. by the Greek, tranſlated reſiſted; and by the Chaldee, Syriac, and in our verſion, tempted: That is, ſaith Dr. Pocock, they went to try and prove God, whether he could or would puniſh ſinners, and to provoke, and dare him, to do his worſt; to execute his judgments, if he were a God of judgments. And then to "ſee his works forty years," muſt be underſtood, to ſee his judgments executed upon them forty years; as he plainly threatned they ſhould, Numb. xiv. 33, 34. But if, according to the reading of the Hebrew, and the Septuagint, the forty years ſhould here be added to the following verſe, thus, "Wherefore, I was grieved (or angry) with that generation" forty years, as the Apoſtle doth intimate, by that inquiry, ver. 17. "With whom was he grieved forty years?" Then the Hebrew and Greek particles will be beſt rendred, Though they ſaw my works; as they will both very well bear. (W.)

Enter into my reſt.] Literally it was underſtood of the land of Canaan; which was a type of the eternal reſt of the faithful in heaven, ch. iv. 9. But inaſmuch as the land of Canaan was a type of heaven, therefore we are to underſtand it of the excluſion of unbelievers out of heaven. (Aſſ.) See this more at large in Dr. Hammond.

Take heed.] Take care, that ye do not imitate the old Iſraelites in their unbelief, which will endanger your revolt from God now, as it did theirs then. (B.) See Mr. W. Pemble's ſermon on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 1, &c.

Exhort one another daily.] See the notes on 2 Cor. vi. 2. Eph. iv. 22. and Col. iii. 16.

For we are made partakers.] This verſe ought to be read as in a parentheſis; the following having an immediate coherence with that which goeth before. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 6. and Col. i. 23.

Howbeit, not all.] Joſhua and Caleb, by name, were excepted: So were alſo the women, and children, and the whole tribe of the Levites, Numb. i. 2, 3, 47. See the notes on 1 Cor. x. 5.

Grieved forty years.] See the notes on ver. 9.

Becauſe of unbelief.] See the notes on ver. 8.

CHAP. IV.

Further motives to faith, obedience, and perſeverance, from the eminency of Chriſt above Joſhua.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. LET us therefore fear, leſt a promiſe being left us of entring into his reſt, any of you ſhould ſeem to come ſhort of it. For unto us was the Goſpel preached, as well as unto them: But the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. For we which have believed do enter into reſt, as he ſaid, As I have ſworn in my wrath, If they ſhall enter into my reſt, altho' the works were finiſhed from the foundation of the world. For he ſpake in a certain place of the ſeventh day on this wiſe, And God did reſt the ſeventh day from all his works, And in this place again, If they ſhall enter into my reſt. Seeing therefore it remaineth that ſome muſt enter therein, and they to whom it was firſt preached, entred not in becauſe of unbelief: Again, he limiteth a certain day, ſaying in David, To day, after ſo long a time, as it is ſaid, To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. For if Jeſus had given them reſt, then would he not afterward have ſpoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a reſt to the people of God. For he that is entred into his reſt, he alſo hath ceaſed from his own works, as God did from his. Let us labour therefore to enter into that reſt, leſt any man fail after the ſame example of unbelief.

Let us therefore fear.] As if he had ſaid, ſince ye have ſo dreadful an example of God's wrath, executed upon your fathers in the wilderneſs, for their unbelief, take heed of their ſins, leſt ye ſuffer the like puniſhments. (B.) See the notes on Phil. ii, 12.

A promiſe being left us.] Viz. Of the Celeſtial Canaan, as to them of the Terreſtrial. (W.) See the notes on Matth. xi. 28. John xiv. 27. and xvi. 33. Acts xvii. 5. Rom. viii. 18. Eph. vi. 16. Phil. iv. 7. and 2 Theſſ. i. 7.

Should ſeem to come ſhort of it.] That is, ſhould come ſhort; either, as thoſe who run in a race, and yet come not to the goal, and ſo receive not the prize; or elſe come too late, as the fooliſh virgins did, Matth. xxv. 10. (Aſſ) See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24. and xi. 16.

For, unto us.] The argument is this. They who have like privileges, may expect the like judgments as were inflicted on thoſe who perverted the privileges: But, we Chriſtians have the ſame privileges as the Iſraelites had; therefore we Chriſtians may have the like judgments if we pervert the privileges. (Gouge) As they had the Law, ſo have we the Goſpel. But, as then, ſo now, "the word preached will not profit them" who hear it, if it be not digeſted by faith; or them, who are not by faith united to thoſe who heard it. See Dr. Hammond's critical note upon the word ſynkecramenos, which we here tranſlate mixed: And the other notes on ch. iii. 7, 12. and Rom. x. 14, &c.

Although the works.] Here the Apoſtle begins to ſhew, what the reſt was, whereof the Pſalmiſt ſpake, and of which he had exhorted them not to come ſhort, viz. Not the reſt of the ſeventh day, ſpoken of, Gen. ii. 2. and here alluded to, ver. 4. Nor yet that reſt in the land of Canaan, to which Joſhua brought the Iſraelites, and here ſpoken of, ver. 8. But another reſt, whereof the former were but types and ſhadows; and as ſuch intended by the Pſalmiſt. (Aſſ.) That is, an eternal reſt with God in heaven. (B.)

In a certain place.] The Jews were not wont to refer to the particular chapter or place of any book of Scripture which they quoted; becauſe all their people were ſo well verſed therein, from their very childhood, that every one knew the place, whenever he heard the words cited. (G.) And Dr. Gouge obſerves, upon a like phraſe, in ch. ii. 6. That the Jews were ſo verſed in the Hebrew text, (being their mother-tongue) that they could readily tell, how many times ſuch or ſuch a word was uſed in the Hebrew Bible.

Seeing therefore it remaineth.] The main force of this argument reſteth in the truth of God's promiſe, mention'd, ver. 1. And it may be formed thus; If the land of Canaan was not entred into, by them to whom it was promiſed, there muſt be another reſt, for thoſe to whom a reſt is promiſed: But, the land of Canaan was not entred into by thoſe to whom it was promiſed; Therefore, there muſt needs be another reſt; as the Apoſtle concludes here, and ver. 9. (Gouge)

To day, after ſo long a time.] Viz. More than four hundred and fifty years, Acts xiii. 20. Whereon he frameth another argument to confirm the former, thus; That reſt, whereinto men are invited to enter 450 years after a reſt poſſeſſed, is another reſt than that which is poſſeſſed: But the reſt intended by David is a reſt, whereinto he inviteth men to enter, 450 years after Canaan was poſſeſſed; Therefore, Canaan is not that reſt whereinto David inviteth men to enter, but another. (Idem) And this argument is well enforc'd, againſt Mr. Le Clerc, by Dr. Whitby; to whoſe reaſoning upon this paſſage at large I refer the reader.

For if Jeſus.] That is, Joſhua in the Hebrew; called Jeſus, according to the Greek idiom. See the notes on Col. iv. 11.

There remaineth therefore.] This is the concluſion of the foregoing arguments. Where note, 1. That, by changing the word (catapauſis) reſt, uſed in the foregoing verſes, into (ſabbatiſmos) ſabbatiſm, here, and, by comparing this ſabbatiſm with the reſt of God on the ſabbath, or ſeventh day, the Apoſtle clearly leads us to the interpretation of all the ancient Chriſtians, that our glorious and complete reſt hereafter with God, is that of which God's reſting on the ſeventh day was a ſymbol; and the ſpiritual ſabbath, of which the Jewiſh Doctors ſpeak ſo generally, as the great thing ſignified by their ſabbath. (W.) And, 2. That the Apoſtle, affirming, that there is reſt remaining for the people of God, ſtrongly implies, that there is labour at preſent belonging to them; reſt and labour being correlates, the one ſuppoſing the other. (B.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 18.

Hath ceaſed from.] Here the Apoſtle diſtinctly declares, that the reſt here ſpoken of cannot be entred into in this world. For thus he argues; "He that is entred into his reſt, hath ceaſed from his own works:" But, no man, in this world, ceaſeth from his own works; Therefore, no man, in this world, entreth into his reſt. (Gouge)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and ſharper than any two edged-ſword, piercing even to the dividing aſunder of ſoul and ſpirit, and of the joynts and marrow, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart: Neither is there any creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight: But all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. Seeing then that we have a great high-prieſt, that is paſſed into the Heavens, Jeſus the Son of God, let us hold faſt our profeſſion. For we have not an high-prieſt which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without ſin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

The word of God.] Ho logos tou Theou. That this ſhould ſignify Chriſt, the eternal word, (as ſome think) is not impoſſible; it being, among the Jews, the known title of the Meſſiah, See the notes on Luke i. 2.) and to that alſo the mention of eyes here, in the following verſe, doth ſomewhat incline. But, it is more reaſonable here to take it for that word which hath been deliver'd by Chriſt; that is, his Goſpel; as is ſhew'd at large, by Gouge, Hammond, Whitby, and Wells. See the notes on Acts ii. 37. Rom. i. 16. 1 Cor. xiv. 24. 2 Cor. x. 4. Eph. vi. 17. and 1 Theſſ. v. 23.

Naked and opened.] Theſe two noble words, gymna kai tetrachelismena, contain a moſt vigorous metaphor, and graceful alluſion to the cuſtom in ſacrifiſing, of taking off the skin from the victim, and cutting it open; whereby all the vitals, and inward conſtitution, are laid open to full view: No words in language could be ſo proper and emphatical; naked is what has no cover without, and open is what has no concealment within. (Blackw.) See Mr. P. Gunter's ſerm. on this text, 1615.

With whom we have to do.] Pros hon hemin ho logos. This phraſe is variouſly interpreted. The Aſſembly-men, Hammond, and the Oxford Annotator render it Of whom we ſpeak: Tremellius, Whitby, Burkitt, Wells, and Wall, render it, To whom we are to give an account: Dr. Gouge leaves it ambiguous; and ſo ſhall I.

Paſſed into the heavens.] Hereby Chriſt is prefer'd to the Levitical High-prieſts, who entred only into the Holy of Holies in the temple. (Aſſ.)

Tempted.] See the notes on Luke xxii. 28. and 2 Cor. v. 21.

Come boldly.] Mr. Johnſon, underſtanding the homologia, which we render profeſſion, here, ver. 14 to be meant of the Euchariſt, apprehends, that we cannot more congruouſly interpret theſe words of the Apoſtle, than by ſuppoſing, that he invites us to approach the altar with a becoming modeſt aſſurance; ſince Chriſt "is paſſed into the heavens," to make way for the acceptance of our homology, or oblation, of which he is the High-prieſt, and we have therefore all the encouragement we can deſire, to perſevere in offering it up to God. See the notes on ch. iii. 1. John x. 9. and xiv. 6. 2 Cor. iii. 12. and Eph. ii. 18.

CHAP. V.

The preference of Chriſt's prieſthood to that of Aaron.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. FOR every high-prieſt taken from among men, is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and ſacrifices for ſins: Who can have compaſſion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himſelf alſo is compaſſed with infirmity: And by reaſon hereof he ought, as for the people, ſo alſo for himſelf, to offer for ſins. And no man taketh this honour unto himſelf, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron: So alſo Chriſt glorified not himſelf to be made an high-prieſt; but he that ſaid unto him, Thou art my Son, to day have I begotten thee. As he ſaith alſo, in another place, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec: Who in the days of his fleſh, when he had offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears, unto him that was able to ſave him from death, and was heard, in that he feared; Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience, by the things which he ſuffered: And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal ſalvation unto all them that obey him; called of God an high-prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec.

For, every High-prieſt.] Here the Apoſtle enlarges upon a compariſon of the chief things obſervable in an Aaronical Prieſt, with the like obſervable in Chriſt, our High-prieſt, viz. 1. That the Aaronical Prieſt is ſeparated, and ſet apart from the multitude, and appointed to act in their ſtead, in all things between them and God; and particularly, in matters of burnt-offerings, and ſin-offerings. 2. That he does this affectionately, and with a fellow-feeling of their infirmities. And, 3. That no man might aſſume, or take it to himſelf, but he who was called of God. Now all theſe are directly applicable, and accordingly here applied, to Chriſt: The firſt, in ver. 10. where he is ſhewn to have been taken from men; but in a much higher manner, than the Aaronical Prieſt was: The ſecond, in ver. 7. and 8. where he is ſhewn to have been qualified to have due compaſſion on us under temptations by what he himſelf ſuffered for us: And, 3. That he did not intrude himſelf into this office, but God call'd him to it, ver. 5, 6. (Gouge, H. Wells and B.) And the preference of Chriſt to the other Prieſts appears in theſe inſtances; That they were temporary, he perpetual, ver. 6. They called immediately, by the voice of man, being only ſervants; he immediately by the voice of his Father, being a Son, ver. 5. They after Aaron's order, he after that of Melchiſedec, ver. 6, and 10. both former and higher; and therefore no neceſſity that he ſhould be of the tribe of Levi: And both offering for ſins, with great compaſſion; but they for their own ſins alſo, he (being without ſin himſelf) only for the ſins of other men. (Oxf.) See the notes following.

Gifts and ſacrifices.] This prerogative of Prieſts (proſpherein) to bring unto God, ſhews one main difference between Prieſts and Prophets. Prieſts bring from man to God; Prophets, from God to man, viz. inſtructions, directions, admonitions, &c. And thus, Chriſt, as Prieſt, offer'd up prayers and ſupplications, yea, and his own body, unto God: As Prophet, he "ſpake to the world thoſe things which he had heard of his Father," John viii. 26.

Compaſſion on the ignorant.] See the notes on Luke xxiii. 34. Acts iii. 17. and xvii. 30. Rom. xiv. 19. and xv. 5. 1 Cor. iii. 2. and iv. 21. Gal vi 1. Eph. iv. 32. Phil. ii. 1. and iii. 16. Col. iii. 12. 1 Tim. iii. 3. and 2 Tim. ii. 24.

To offer for ſins.] That is, for ſins of ignorance or infirmity. For, for ſins committed wittingly and wilfully, there was no ſacrifice appointed by the Law. (W.) See the notes on ch. x. 26.

No man taketh.] That is, No man ought to take; or can take according to the Law. This is the interpretation of moſt expoſitors. But Dr. Whitby ſees no neceſſity of this limitation; and ſeems to think it enough, that no man can promiſe to himſelf that God will accept his offerings, who hath no commiſſion from God to make ſuch offerings. But, ſurely, whoſoever ſhall preſume to make ſuch offerings, as a Prieſt (for ſuch are the offerings and office here treated of) cannot only not promiſe himſelf, that God will accept ſuch offerings; but ought to be convinc'd, that God will both abominate ſuch offerings, and puniſh him for ſuch his uſurpation; as is evident from the known caſes of Corah, Numb. xvi. of Saul, 1 Sam. viii. 8, &c. of Uzza, 1 Chron. xiii. 9, &c. and of Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16, &c. See this queſtion fully ſtated, in the notes on Rom. x. 15. See alſo the ſeveral ſermons of Dr. Brett, Dr. T. Biſſe, and Mr. W. Richardſon, on this text, and the notes alſo on 1 Cor. iv. 1.

The order of Melchiſedec.] See the notes on ch. vii. 1, &c.

With ſtrong crying and tears.] See the notes on Luke xxii. 43. and John xii. 27.

In that he feared.] Meaning that fear, which poſſeſs'd Chriſt in the depth of his agony, which was one of his ſinleſs infirmities. (Gouge)

Learned he obedience.] Emathen; He taught us obedience. For, as the Hebrew, lamad, ſignifies both to learn, and to teach, and is, by the Septuagint, above twenty times, render'd (didaskein) to teach; and as the word learn, in our language, ſignifies alſo to teach, as in Pſa. cxix. 66 of our old tranſlation: So alſo, ſaith Euſtathius, the word manthano is (meſe lexis) a word that ſignifies both to teach, and to be taught, and is ſo uſed by the authors who liv'd after Homer's time, and by the ſophiſters. (W.) But the more common expoſition is, That Chriſt, as man, learned experimentally, "by the things which he ſuffer'd" himſelf for us, what a hard thing it is to perform conſtant obedience, when death it ſelf ſometimes muſt be taken in the way to it; and conſequently alſo, to have compaſſion on thoſe who ſin out of weakneſs. See the notes on Phil. ii 8.

Being made perfect.] Teleiotheis is here taken in the notion of conſecration. (H. and W.) See the notes on Luke xiii. 32.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14. Of whom we have many things to ſay, and hard to be uttered; ſeeing ye are dull of hearing. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the firſt principles of the oracles of God; and are become ſuch as have need of milk, and not of ſtrong meat. For every one that uſeth milk, is unskilful in the word of righteouſneſs, for he is a babe. But ſtrong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even thoſe who by reaſon of uſe have their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil.

Of whom.] Or, Concerning which; viz. the reſemblance between Chriſt and Melchiſedec. (H. and Oxf.) From hence to the ſeventh chapter, is a long digreſſion; wherein he gives them a ſharp, tho' moderate, reproof, for their negligence in labouring for knowledge; that ſo, he might make them the more attentive to that which he was to ſpeak afterwards. (Aſſ. Gouge, Oxf. and Wells)

Hard to be uttered.] Dyſermeneutos. The proper ſignification of this word is, hard to be expounded. So do St. Chryſoſtome and Ambroſe interpret it. But the Rhemiſts, contrary to the evident circumſtance of the text, and moſt proper ſignification of the word, have turn'd it inexplicable, or that which cannot be expounded, as the Vulgar Latin has it interpretabilis, that which cannot be interpreted. (Leigh) Here we ſee what are St. Paul's (dyſnoeta) "things hard to be underſtood," mention'd 2 Pet. iii. 16, viz. Things which were not ſo in themſelves, or through the difficulty of the matter reveal'd, but through the imbecility and weakneſs of thoſe to whom they were ſpoken. (W.)

Dull of hearing.] See the notes on Matth. xiii. 15. John iii 10. and 1 Cor. iii. 1.

Strong meat.] That is, ſuch high doctrines, as he was now entred upon the diſcourſe of. (H.) See the notes on 1 Cor. ii. 7. Eph. iii. 4. and vi. 16. and Col. ii. 2.

CHAP. VI.

Exhortation to conſtancy, ſtedfaſtneſs, diligence, and patient waiting upon God, in confidence of the truth of his promiſes.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. THEREFORE leaving the principles of the doctrine of Chriſt, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God: Of the doctrine of baptiſms, and of laying on of hands, and of reſurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. And this will we do if God permit. For it is impoſſible for thoſe who were once enlightned, and have taſted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, and have taſted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they ſhall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; ſeeing they crucifie to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and put him to an open ſhame. For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dreſſed, receiveth bleſſing from God: But that which beareth thorns and briers, is rejected, and is nigh unto curſing, whoſe end is to be burned. But beloved, we are perſwaded better things of you, and things that accompany ſalvation, tho' we thus ſpeak. For God is not unrighteous, to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have ſhewed toward his name, in that ye have miniſtred to the ſaints, and do miniſter. And we deſire, that every one of you do ſhew the ſame diligence, to the full aſſurance of hope unto the end: That ye be not ſlothful, but followers, of them, who thro' faith and patience inherit the promiſes.

Therefore.] Here the Apoſtle proceeds in the digreſſion, which he had begun in the latter end of the foregoing chapter; adding exhortations here to the reproofs he had entred upon there.

Leaving the principles.] Not that we are to neglect the firſt principles of religion; but to labour hard, to acquire a greater meaſure of knowledge, and to go on towards perfection. (Aſſ. and B.) That is, to be fully inſtructed in the principles of Chriſtian faith. (W.) See the notes on ch. ii. 3. 1 Cor. ii. 6. and Phil. iii. 13.

The foundation.] Here we may ſee what was the method of the firſt inſtructions uſed to new converts. 1. They taught 'em the neceſſity of "repentance from dead works;" either of idolatry, or of lew'd and wicked living; which they call'd the renouncing the Devil and all his works, the pomps of the world, and the unlawful pleaſures of the fleſh. 2. They taught 'em to believe in the true God, and faith in his Son, our Lord Jeſus, that he is the Chriſt. 3. The doctrine and uſe of baptiſm; and, if they own'd a belief in Chriſt, they baptiz'd them, as our Saviour appointed. 4. Then ſome Apoſtle, or Biſhop, laid his hands on them; and they receiv'd the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt. 5. Then they inſtructed 'em in the other articles of the Creed, or Chriſtian belief: As of "the reſurrection of the dead," at our Saviour's coming again. And, 6. Of the judgment of the wicked and impenitent to everlaſting puniſhment, and of the righteous to life eternal. (Wall) And theſe firſt principles are here compared to the foundation of a building; on which the more perfect knowledge of the myſteries of the Goſpel was to be built. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes here next following.

Repentance from dead works.] So call'd, becauſe they render a man liable to death. See the notes on Rom. vi. 16, 21, &c. and vii. 1. and Eph. ii. 1.

The doctrine of baptiſms.] The original word (baptiſmon) being of the plural number, has been thought to denote the ancient rite, of dipping the baptized thrice under water, at the mention of each of the three Divine Perſons in the Holy Trinity: Others underſtand it of the ſolemn ſtated times of the Primitive Church for baptiſm, when, a great many were baptiz'd together. And others again, of the outward baptiſm of water, and the inward baptiſm of the Spirit. But, after all, it may be only an enallage of the number; and is by moſt agreed to denote no more than what we mean, in the ſingular number, by baptiſm. (Wells) See the notes on Acts xiv. 4. Rom. vi. 4. and Eph. iv. 5.

Laying on of hands.] Tho' this ſolemn rite was uſed alſo in the ordination of the Clergy, in the curing of the ſick, in the abſolution of Penitents, and the bleſſing of ſingle perſons; yet none of theſe are to be reckon'd among the Catechetical doctrines, or general fundamental principles of Chriſtianity, in which all Chriſtians are equally concern'd, and which we all ought equally to obſerve: But their laying on of hands here is of as general an extent and obligation in the practice of it, as baptiſm itſelf, and therefore is here reckon'd up next after it; which muſt needs imply a rite as univerſal in its obſervation as baptiſm itſelf, and in order of time after it. But this can only be applied to laying on of hands in confirmation; which was always uſed after baptiſm, as a ſolemn rite, or ceremony, for conferring the gift of the Holy Ghoſt. So that even Mr. Calvin upon the place underſtands it of impoſition of hands in confirmation; and ſays, this one place doth abundantly teſtify, that the original of this holy rite, or ceremony, was from the Apoſtles. See Dr. Hickes's, and Mr. Stubbs's ſermons on this text; and the notes on Acts vi. 6. viii. 17. and xix, 5, &c.

Reſurrection of the dead.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 12, &c. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 15, &c.

Eternal judgment.] A plain proof of the eternity of Hell-Torments. (Wells)

This will we do.] That is, We will "go on unto perfection:" Or, We will go on to treat of ſuch things as relate to a more perfect knowledge of Chriſtianity; ſuch as the Melchiſedecal prieſthood of Chriſt, &c. (Idem)

For, it is impoſſible.] Many Chriſtians having been much perplex'd about the ſenſe of this place, I offer the following obſervations to be conſider'd by them. 1. That the falling away, ſpoken of here, ver. 6. is manifeſtly the ſin of Apoſtaſy; the renouncing the Chriſtian religion, and going to any other profeſſion of religion, whether Jewiſh or Heathen; as appears, not only from the import of the word it ſelf, but the context, "Seeing they crucify to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and put him to an open ſhame:" That is, They, by their Apoſtaſy, deſpitefully uſe him; they judge and condemn him to be a ſeducer, one who was deſervedly put to death by the Jews and Romans. The guilt next to this, is that of thoſe, who live and continue to live, in a plain and wilful contradiction to the commandments of our pure and holy religion. 2. Such words as cannot, could not, impoſſible, &c. tho', ſtrictly ſpeaking, they denote a natural and abſolute impoſſibility, yet they are generally uſed in a ſenſe which imports that a thing is difficult; not that it is ſtrictly impoſſible. In common converſation, we are wont to ſay, Such or ſuch a thing cannot be, it is impoſſible, and the like; when we mean no more, than that it is not probable, or likely; or that it will be attended with great difficulties and inconveniencies, &c. For inſtance, Gen. xix. 12. "Haſte thee, eſcape thither; for I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither:" Again, ch. xxxiv. 14. "We cannot do this thing——; for that were a reproach unto us," Luke xi. 7. "Trouble me not——; I cannot riſe and give thee:" And, ch. xvii. 1. "It is impoſſible, but that offences will come:" And, John xii. 39. "Therefore they could not believe." Not that theſe things could not, or that it was, ſtrictly ſpeaking, impoſſible for them to be. Could not God, if he, in his infinite wiſdom, ſaw fit, prevent offences? Would our Lord have done ſo many miracles, to convince the Jews, had it been abſolutely impoſſible for them to believe in him? In a legal ſenſe, that is impoſſible, which is contrary to law, and inconſiſtent with our duty. So that there are degrees of impoſſibility; and that word is oftner uſed in a ſenſe that denotes the difficulty of an action, than in a proper ſenſe; and ſo it is uſed here. And, 3. The Apoſtle is not to be underſtood to ſay, that if a man is ſenſible of the heinouſneſs of his ſin, that he cannot be renewed to repentance, under the Chriſtian diſpenſation: But his meaning is, that the Chriſtian diſpenſation is the laſt method which God will make uſe of for the recovery of fallen man; and therefore he who wilfully, obſtinately, and finally apoſtatizes from it, cannot be ſaved in any other way: No other Saviour will be appointed; no other ſacrifice will be offer'd up, or accepted, than that full, perfect, and ſufficient ſacrifice, which Jeſus Chriſt hath offer'd up upon the croſs: There is no other Spirit or Grace to be receiv'd. Salvation, therefore, is impoſſible to thoſe who ſeek it in any other way: But ſalvation is not impoſſible, to him who returns from his Apoſtaſy, and owns and confeſſes Chriſt and his religion, and lives according to his laws. It is impoſſible to thoſe, and thoſe only, who do not repent, but die in their Apoſtaſy, or in the wilful neglect, or wilful contempt of the laws of Jeſus Chriſt. (Fox) St. Paul here gives his reaſon, why he would not ſtay to inculcate over again to them the Catechetical Articles aforeſaid, becauſe they had been taught them all already: And as for thoſe who had, after their profeſſing and owning thoſe Articles of Faith, and their receiving the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the laying on of hands, and the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt upon it, fallen away from it all, it was impoſſible for him, by any thing he could ſay or write, to reclaim them, or reduce them again to a right faith and repentance. (Wall) See the notes on ch. x. 26. and 1 Cor. iii. 12. and thoſe here next following.

Were once enlightened.] St. Paul here uſes the word photiſthentas, enlightened, for baptized. What he calls baptiſm, ver. 2. he calls illumination here, ver 4. and ſo he does again, ch. x. 32. (Wall) Photizein, with the Ancients, being commonly uſed for baptizare. (Oxf.) And this, becauſe of the divine illumination which was convey'd to the minds of men by the knowledge of Chriſtianity. (B.) See the notes on John i. 9. and Eph. i. 18.

Taſted of the heavenly gift.] That is, Either of the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, in or after Baptiſm, appearing in ſome extraordinary graces and operations: Or elſe, Of our Lord's body and blood, in the Sacrament of the Euchariſt. (Oxf.) Dr. Wells, with good reaſon, ſuppoſeth theſe expreſſions to anſwer in order to the principles mention'd in ver. 2. Thus he refers the phraſe of "thoſe who were once enlightened," to that of the doctrine of Baptiſm, and thoſe who "have taſted of the heavenly gift," to that of the Spirit imparted in that Sacrament; thoſe who were "made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt," to that of laying on of hands; thoſe who have "taſted the good word of God," to that of the reſurrection; "and the powers of the world to come," to that of eternal judgment. See the notes on John iv. 10. and vi. 32.

If they ſhall fall away.] At the time when the Engliſh tranſlation was made, there was a ſtrong biaſs for an opinion then held by ſome people, That he who is once a ſanctified man can never fall away; once a Saint, and ever a Saint! But they ſhould not have alter'd the words of Scripture. They have here tranſlated it, "If they ſhall fall away:" But St. Paul's words are (as plain as can be expreſs'd) kai parapeſontas, and ſo is the Vulgar Latin, Et prolapſi ſunt; and are fallen away. I know of none but Beza, whom the Engliſh could follow, in his ſi prolabantur. A much more material queſtion to have been diſcuſs'd on this text, is, Whether when they are fallen away, they can ever be rais'd up or recover'd again? If we take our reſolution of the queſtion from the examples and inſtances of our modern Apoſtates or Atheiſts, they give but little encouragement to the maintenance of the affirmative: And it will be time enough to ſpeak of what is poſſible, when they come to thoſe horrors and beginnings of deſpair; which, if God have mercy upon 'em, he will ſend them in this life. (Wall)

For the earth.] He illuſtrates the former commination, by a ſimilitude taken from the earth: As the earth, painfully tilled, and plentifully water'd with rain from Heaven, is good for nothing but to be burnt, if, inſtead of good fruit, it bringeth forth "thorns and briars:" So thoſe, who have been plentifully water'd, with many ſweet ſhowers of "the word of God," and enrich'd with divers excellent graces, are good for nothing, but to burn in hell-fire for evermore. (Aſſ.)

But, beloved.] It was a terrible doom, which the Apoſtle had denounc'd, in the former verſes, againſt backſliders. Now, that theſe Hebrews might not thereby be induc'd to think, that he judg'd them to be Apoſtates; by a ſweet inſinuation, he plainly and expreſly declares his own good opinion of them, and his entire affection for them, that ſo he might make the better way to his exhortation following. (Gouge) And the ground of this his opinion was, becauſe they had been formerly ſo couragious in profeſſing of Chriſt, and ſo charitable to poor Chriſtians, and were ſo ſtill: Which works of yours (ſaith he) God, according to his pro-

miſe of mercy in the Goſpel, is bound to reward, with giving more grace; and not to forſake and leave ſuch without all grace, as thoſe who, for their obſtinacy in ſin, are accurſed by him. (H.) Vain and fooliſh therefore is what Popiſh writers have concluded from hence, for the merit of good works: For it is juſt with God to do this, not in regard of man's merits, but of his own promiſe. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke xvii. 10. Rom. iv. 4. and 2 Theſſ. i. 6.

Be not ſlothful.] See the notes on Phil. iii. 13, 14.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. For when God made the promiſe to Abraham, becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, he ſware by himſelf, ſaying, Surely, bleſſing, I will bleſs thee, and multiplying, I will multiply thee. And ſo after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promiſe. For men verily ſwear by the greater: And an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all ſtriſe. Wherein God willing more abundantly to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an oath: That by two immutable things, in which it was impoſſible for God to lie, we might have a ſtrong conſolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope ſet before us: Which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul both ſure and ſtedfaſt, and which entreth into that within the vail: Whither the forerunner is for us entred; even Jeſus, made an high-prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec.

God made promiſe.] The Apoſtle having told us, in general, that the Saints, "through faith and patience, inherit the promiſes," ver. 12. inſtanceth here particularly in Abraham; unto whom God made a promiſe of multiplying his ſeed greatly to him, and confirm'd that promiſe by an oath: But Abraham waited long, by faith and patience, for the compleat fulfilling of the promiſe; and ſo muſt we. God delights to be truſted by his people upon his word and oath: And, when they do not live to ſee the promiſe of God fulfill'd, they glorify him exceedingly, by dying in the faith and firm belief, that it ſhall be fulfill'd in God's own appointed time. (B.)

An oath for confirmation.] The neceſſity of religion, to the ſupport of humane ſociety, in nothing appears more evidently, than in this, That the obligation of an oath, which is ſo neceſſary for the maintenance of peace and juſtice among men, depends wholly upon the ſenſe and belief of a Deity: For, no reaſon can be imagin'd, why any man that doth not believe a God, ſhould make the leaſt conſcience of an oath; which is nothing elſe but a ſolemn appeal to God, as a witneſs of the truth of what we ſay. So that, whoever promotes Atheiſm and Infidelity, doth the moſt deſtructive thing imaginable to humane ſociety, becauſe he takes away the reverence and obligation of oaths; and whenever that is generally caſt off, humane ſociety muſt diſband, and all things run into diſorder. Whenever we ſwear, we appeal to his knowledge, and refer ourſelves to his juſt judgment who is the powerful patron and protector of right, and the Almighty Judge and avenger of all falſhood and unrighteouſneſs: So that it is not poſſible for men to lay a more ſacred and ſolemn obligation upon their conſciences, than by the religion of an oath. Moſes very well expreſſeth it, Numb. xxx. 2. "If a man ſwear an oath, to bind his ſoul with a bond;" intimating, that he who ſwears, lays the ſtrongeſt obligation upon himſelf, and puts his ſoul in pawn for the truth of what he ſays; and every oath implies a curſe upon ourſelves, in caſe of perjury, as Plutarch obſerves. Now, Perjury may be committed many ways; as, 1. When a man aſſerts upon oath what he knows to be otherwiſe; or promiſeth what he does not intend to perform; In both which caſes the very act of ſwearing is perjury: And ſo likewiſe, when a man promiſeth upon oath to do that which is unlawful for him to do; becauſe ſuch an oath is contrary to a former obligation. 2. When a man is uncertain whether what he ſwears be true: For men onght to be certain of the truth of what they aſſert upon oath; and not to ſwear at a venture. In like manner, he is guilty of perjury, who promiſeth upon oath what he is not morally and reaſonably certain he ſhall be able to perform. 3. When they do not uſe great plainneſs and ſimplicity in oaths; but anſwer equivocally and doubtfully, or with reſervation of ſomething in their minds; thinking thereby to ſalve the truth of what they ſay. For, what can be a greater affront to God, than to uſe his name to deceive men? And what can more directly overthrow the great end and uſe of oaths, which are for confirmation, and to put an end to ſtrife? This may be laid down for a certain rule, That all departure from the ſimplicity of an oath is a degree of perjury; and a man is never a whit the leſs forſworn, becauſe his perjury is a little finer and more artificial than ordinary: And tho' men think, by this device to ſave themſelves harmleſs from the guilt of ſo great a ſin, they do really increaſe it, by adding to their iniquity the impudent folly of mocking God and deceiving themſelves. (Tillotſ.) See Archbiſhop Tillotſon's ſermon on this text (preach'd 1681.) And whoever deſires a more full and thorough diſcuſſion of this important queſtion, may conſult what has been well written by Biſhop Hall, Biſhop Sanderſon, Biſhop Wake, and the author of The Whole Duty of Man, upon this ſubject: See alſo the notes on Matth. v. 33. Rom. ix. 1. and 2 Cor. i. 23.

Heirs of the promiſe.] See the notes on Gal. iii. 16, 26.

Fled for refuge.] Alluding to the cities of refuge, ſpoken of under the Law, for the caſual man-ſlayer to fly unto: Which were an illuſtrious type of Chriſt; who is the only refuge and ſanctuary, for diſtreſſed ſouls, by faith, to fly unto, when the guilt of ſin purſues them. (Gouge and B.)

An anchor of the ſoul.] The hope of ſalvation ſet before us in the Goſpel, is here beautifully deſcribed, "as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure and ſtedfaſt," amidſt all the ſtorms and billows of this world; and conſequently ſuch as will preſerve our ſouls from being ſhipwreck'd, or caſt away eternally; "and which enters," that is, gives us aſſurance of entring into Heaven, here alſo repreſented by that part of the Jewiſh tabernacle, which is "within the vail," and was called the Holy of Holies. (Aſſ. Gouge, H. W. B. Wells, and Wall) See the notes on Rom. viii. 25.

The fore-runner.] Meaning Chriſt, here call'd (prodromos) the fore-runner; Either, 1. In regard of his excellency, in that he far out-ſtripped all: Or, 2. In regard of his undertaking to be our guide and pattern in the ſame courſe. (Gouge) See the notes on John xiv. 2.

Jeſus, made an High-prieſt.] The Apoſtle here, mentioning the name of our fore-runner, "even Jeſus," therewith concludes the long digreſſion, begun ch. v. 11. and now prepares to proceed on the ſubject he then was upon, viz. Chriſt's being "made an High-prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedec." (H. Wells and Wall)

CHAP. VII.

Melchiſedec, a type of Chriſt: More excellent than the Prieſts of Aaron's order.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. FOR this Melchiſedec king of Salem, prieſt of the moſt high God, who met Abraham returning from the ſlaughter of the kings, and bleſſed him: To whom alſo Abraham gave a tenth part of all: Firſt being by interpretation king of righteouſneſs, and after that alſo king of Salem, which is, king of peace; without father, without mother, without deſcent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a Prieſt continually.

This Melchiſedec.] The Apoſtle, having, in ch. v. 6, 10. and vi. 20. affirm'd, that Chriſt was "a Prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedec," gives here an hiſtorical deſcription of him; that ſo it might the better appear, wherein he was a type of Chriſt, and by conſequence, wherein the prieſthood of Chriſt was better than that of Aaron. (Aſſ.) The hiſtory which we have of Melchiſedec is briefly given us by Moſes, in Gen. xiv. 18, &c. (to which agrees alſo, in ſubſtance, the expreſs teſtimony of the Gentile hiſtorian Eupolemus, in the fragment of Alex. Polyhiſtor, tranſmitted to us by Euſebius;) That when Abraham return'd from the ſlaughter of Chederlaomer, and the other kings confederated with him, "Melchiſedec, king of Salem, brought forth bread and wine; and he was the prieſt of the moſt high God: And he bleſſed him: —— and he (that is, Abram) gave him the tithes of all." By which text it is evident, that Melchiſedec was both a king and a prieſt: But, there are ſo many doubts and diſputes amongſt authors concerning him, that it may be neceſſary to take notice of ſome of the moſt conſiderable. 1. Tho' Moſes in that text, as well as St. Paul in this, expreſly calls him "king of Salem," the queſtion is, what place that was; whether Jeruſalem (ſometime called Salem) or another city of the ſame name? Now, the general opinion is for the former: For Joſephus in his Antiquities (l. i. c. 18.) witneſſeth, that Jeruſalem, in Abraham's time, was called Salem, and afterwards Solyma; and other Hebrews tell us, it was called Salem by this very Melchiſedec, to whom they aſcribe the firſt foundation of it. That it was thus call'd (ſometimes at leaſt) alſo in David's days, is evident from Pſa. lxxvi. 2. where it is mention'd as all one with Zion, which every body underſtands to be Jeruſalem. Yet Dr. Whitby thinks it a miſtake, and inclines to underſtand it (with St. Jerome) of another Salem, near Scythopolis, which lay in the way, from the valley of Damaſcus, (where Abram had reſcued Lot, in his late victory over their enemies) towards Sodom, where Lot then reſided; and which retain'd the name of Salim even in our Saviour's time, John iii. 23. But, whether this reaſon is of ſufficient weight, to overballance the common opinion of others, muſt be left to the criticks of more leiſure. But the greateſt difficulty will be to determine, 2. As to his perſon; who this Melchiſedec was? For ſome conclude him to have been Shem, the ſon of Noah: Among whom I find Biſhop Carleton, the learned Sir Henry Spelman, Mr. Broughton, and Dr. Gouge; which two laſt have offer'd divers plauſible arguments in ſupport of their opinion. But yet, I think, that is hardly to be aſſented to, for the reaſons offer'd by Dr. Whitby: To whom I muſt refer the curious for theſe, as well as for ſatisfactory anſwers to the notions of others; who wildly fanſied, that Melchiſedec was not a man, but an Angel, or the Holy Ghoſt, or the Son of God himſelf; and likewiſe to the inſufferable objections of Mr. Le Clerc, againſt the Apoſtle's whole argument here; more becoming a declared adverſary of the inſpired writings, than any one who calls himſelf a Chriſtian! As to the particulars of this type, ſee the notes here next following.

And bleſſed him.] With a Sacerdotal benediction. (Oxf.) And Sacerdotal bleſſings were authoritative; and that by ſpecial inſtitution. (B.)

Abraham gave a tenth.] The one paid them in a way of duty; the other receiv'd them in a way of office. Note here, the antiquity of tithes: They were paid in Abraham's time, long before the Ceremonial Law; and therefore cannot be ſaid to be Jewiſh and Levitical. (Idem) And ſince our Lord remaineth for ever a prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec, why ſhould not tithes ſtill belong unto him, and in him to thoſe who, in his ſtead, exhort us to be reconciled unto his father? (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 4. 1 Cor. ix. 7, &c. 2 Cor. v. 20. Gal. vi. 6. and 1 Tim. v. 18.

Without father, &c.] That is, according to the common interpretation, that there is no mention of his father, mother, deſcent, birth or death, left us upon record. Anciently thoſe were call'd fatherleſs, and motherleſs, whoſe parentage was either obſcure or loſt. (Heinſ. and Fox) As a man, he certainly had father, and mother, and deſcent, as well as "beginning of days, and end of life," tho' not recorded in Scripture: But, as a Prieſt, he was "without father, without mother," of any Prieſtly order; "without deſcent" from any of the pedigree of Abraham; having neither beginning of days, from which his Prieſtly office was to commence, "nor end of life," in which it terminated. (W. and B.) We may obſerve, after Camerarius, that the Apoſtle does not deſcribe him by thoſe qualities, with reſpect to his perſon, but with reſpect to his office, or dignity of prieſthood, which made him like Jeſus Chriſt; on which account, 'tis enough, that his genealogy, birth and death, are not recorded in Scripture, to juſtify this deſcription; as ſeveral have obſerv'd. But, ſince 'tis uſual, in the beſt authors, to deſcribe famous nations and perſons, as if they were the firſt of their order, and as if they had produced themſelves, it ſeems more natural to have recourſe to that cuſtom, and tranſlate it, with Outram, That Melchiſedec was the moſt illuſtrious of his family, and had neither predeceſſor nor ſucceſſor in his imployment; which verſion is very natural, and expreſſes fully the ſenſe of the original. (Eſſay) I think, herein is contain'd a very good argument for the eternity of our bleſſed Saviour, as to his Divine nature. For here the Apoſtle expreſly aſſerts, that Melchiſedec is repreſented in Scripture, as not having beginning of days; that ſo he might typify Chriſt, who conſequently muſt in reality have no beginning of days; which is the ſame, in other words, as to be from all eternity. (Wells) In fine, all the deſcriptions here given of Melchiſedec, the type, do ſuit with Chriſt, the Antitype. For, 1. As Melchiſedec was a king and a prieſt; ſo is Chriſt. 2. As Melchiſedec was both "king of righteouſneſs, and king of peace;" ſo is Chriſt. 3. As Melchiſedec bleſſed Abram; ſo doth Chriſt bleſs all the ſeed of Abraham, that is, all true believers. 4. As Melchiſedec received tithes of Abram; ſo doth Chriſt, by his Miniſters, of all the faithful. 5. As Melchiſedec is here repreſented "without father;" ſo was Chriſt really, as man, in reſpect of his perſon, and in reſpect of his prieſthood alſo, inaſmuch as therein he ſucceeded not to any man, as other prieſts did: "Without mother, without deſcent, or beginning of days," as God; and without "end of life," both as God and man: And, in reſpect of his prieſtly office alſo, "without mother," inaſmuch as he did not receive that office in right of his nativity, his mother not being of the prieſtly tribe of Levi, but of Judah; "without deſcent," as being made a Prieſt, tho' not found in the regiſter, nor reckon'd by genealogy, in the Sacerdotal line, as the Levitical Prieſts were, Ezra ii. 62. and Neh. vii. 64. "Not having beginning of days;" as being "the ſame yeſterday, and to day, and for ever," Hebr. xiii. 8. "fore-ordained before the foundation of the world," 1 Pet. i. 20. And, laſtly, not having "end of life," foraſmuch as his prieſthood is perpetual, and he "abideth a Prieſt continually." Thus was Melchiſedec a type of Chriſt, both in the adjuncts of his kingdom, righteouſneſs and peace; and in the adjuncts of his prieſthood; perpetuity, and excellency above the Levitical prieſthood: Whence Chriſt is ſaid to be "a Prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedec." But, whereas Melchiſedec "brought forth bread and wine," which ſome would have to be a type of Chriſt's unbloody ſacrifice, and others of what they call the maſs; the Apoſtle mentions no ſuch thing: Neither does Moſes ſay, that he offer'd the bread and the wine in ſacrifice to God, but that he brought it forth; to wit, as a refreſhment to Abraham and his ſoldiers: And indeed, notwithſtanding all that has been written, by other learned men, on this ſubject, Dr. Hammond's paraphraſe ſeems to be very juſt, That Melchiſedec treated Abram civilly, as a King; and, as a Prieſt, bleſſed him, and received from him the tenth of all he had there. Yet ſee the notes on ch. viii. 3.

Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Now conſider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the ſpoils. And verily they that are of the ſons of Levi, who receive the office of the prieſthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, tho' they come out of the loyns of Abraham: But he whoſe deſcent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and bleſſed him that had the promiſes. And without all contradiction, the leſs is bleſſed of the better. And here men that die receive tithes: But there he receiveth them, of whom it is witneſſed that he liveth. And as I may ſo ſay, Levi alſo who receiveth tithes, payed tithes in Abraham. For he was yet in the loyns of his father, when Melchiſedec met him.

Now conſider, how great.] The Apoſtle, having before obſerv'd, how the perpetuity of Chriſt's prieſthood was typified by Melchiſedec, proceeds here to ſhew, how the excellency of Chriſt's prieſthood, above the Aaronical or Levitical prieſthood, was likewiſe typified by the ſame Melchiſedec. (Wells) And this he does by two circumſtances; 1. Becauſe Abraham paid tithes to him: And, 2. Becauſe Melchiſedec bleſſed Abram. (Aſſ.) See the notes here following.

The patriarch.] Patriarches ſignifies, as it were, (tes patrias archon) the prince of the family. (Leigh) For the firſt governors were the fathers of families; and under them the eldeſt ſons. (Raleigh) See this argument further proſecuted, and fully prov'd, in The ſhort hiſtory of the Regal Succeſſion, &c. 1731. Abraham was ſo call'd, becauſe he was the firſt father of the ſtock of the Jews: The twelve ſons of Jacob, becauſe they were the firſt fathers and heads of the twelve tribes: And David, becauſe he was the father and head of that ſtock, whereof Chriſt, as king, was to deſcend. (Gouge)

The tenth of the ſpoils.] Ec ton acrothinion; out of the choice, or prime, or beſt of the ſtore; for that was wont to be pick'd out and dedicated to God. (Aſſ. Gouge, H. Oxf. and W.) See Hammond and Whitby at large on this text.

They that are of the ſons of Levi.] Hence may be gather'd two arguments, for confirmation of Melchiſedec's greatneſs; 1. If among them who are brethren, coming from the ſame ſtock, they who receive tithes, are in that reſpect the greater; then much more "he whoſe deſcent is counted from them" of whom he received tithes: But the Levites, who received tithes of their brethren, were in that reſpect greater than their brethren; Therefore Melchiſedec, "whoſe deſcent is not counted from them" of whom he received tithes, muſt needs be in that reſpect the greater. 2. He who receiveth tithes of the head and ſtock, is greater than they who receive tithes of the branches ſprouting out of that head and ſtock: But Melchiſedec received tithes from Abraham, the head and ſtock of the Levites; who received tithes of the branches: Therefore Melchiſedec is greater than the Levites. (Gouge)

Whoſe deſcent is not counted.] Me genealogoumenos. This phraſe is a confirmation of the interpretation of (a genealogetos) "without deſcent," in ver. 3. becauſe his deſcent or pedigree is not reckon'd up. (Idem)

Bleſſed him that had the promiſes.] That is, Abraham. Where we have another argument to confirm the greatneſs of Melchiſedec. He who bleſſeth one is greater than he whom he bleſſeth: But Melchiſedec bleſſed Abraham; therefore Melchiſedec was greater than Abraham. (Idem) See the notes on ver. 1. Rom. iv. 13. and Gal. iii. 16.

And here men that die.] Another argument to the ſame effect: He who ever liveth, to execute his prieſthood, is more excellent than they, who are ſubject to death, and thereupon forced to leave their office to others: But Melchiſedec ever liveth, &c. whereas the Levites are ſubject to death, &c. Therefore Melchiſedec is more excellent than they. (Idem)

That he liveth.] That is, There is no mention of his death. See the notes on ver. 3.

Levi alſo.] That is, the Levites themſelves, who afterwards "received tithes," did now "pay tithes in Abraham;" Levi himſelf being as yet unborn: And conſequently, Melchiſedec, who received their tithes, was greater than they who paid them, according to the arguments foregoing.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. If therefore perfection were by the Levitical prieſthood (for under it the people received the law) what further need was there that another prieſt ſhould riſe after the order of Melchiſedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? For the prieſthood being changed, there is made of neceſſity a change alſo of the law. For he of whom theſe things are ſpoken, pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar. For it is evident that our Lord ſprang out of Judah; of which tribe Moſes ſpake nothing concerning prieſthood. And it is yet far more evident: For that after the ſimilitude of Melchiſedec there ariſeth another prieſt, who is made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endleſs life. For he teſtifieth, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec. For there is verily a diſannulling the commandment going before, for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs thereof. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.

If therefore perfection.] The Apoſtle here proceeds to ſhew, that the Levitical prieſthood was not able to make a perfect expiation of ſin, (altho' it be true, that it was inſtituted by the Law of God for that time;) becauſe, if ſo, there would then have been no need (as it ſeems there was) that God ſhould inſtitute another ſort of Prieſt, (to wit, his own ſon) to be ſuch a one as Melchiſedec was, and not ſuch a one as Aaron. (H.) The Jews had Aaron's prieſthood in ſuch high account, that they had little or no regard to that of Chriſt: And therefore the Apoſtle endeavours to draw their minds from Aaron's to Chriſt's prieſthood; which he proves to be far more excellent. (Gouge) That Chriſt's prieſthood was another than Aaron's, he proves, in that it was after another order, here, ver. 11. under another Law, ver. 12. by a Prieſt of another tribe, ver. 13. of greater efficacy, ver. 19. having a better ſacrifice, ch. ix. 23. and a more glorious place, ch. ix. 24. (Idem)

The prieſthood being changed] Metatithemenes ſignifies ſuch a change, as implieth, that one prieſthood is utterly abrogated and null'd, and another ſubſtituted in the room of it. And thus, "the prieſthood being changed, there is made of neceſſity a change alſo of the Law:" That is to ſay, it could not be otherwiſe. For, there is ſuch a mutual dependance of the Law and prieſthood, one upon another, that they cannot be ſeparated. (Idem) The change was not caſual and contingent, but abſolutely needful, in regard of "the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs," the imperfection and inability, of the Levitical prieſthood. Learn hence, That the promulgation of the Goſpel, and the inſtitution of Chriſtianity, did abrogate the Levitical Law, and make it of no force: And this might be the reaſon, why God did not only, by the death and ſacrifice of Chriſt, the great High-prieſt, aboliſh the Levitical prieſthood, but alſo deſtroy'd the temple itſelf, and never ſuffer'd it to be rebuilt. (B.)

To another tribe.] This change of the prieſthood, from the tribe of Levi to that of Judah, conſider'd by itſelf, is ſufficient to convince any unprejudiced perſon, that there is alſo a change of the Law. (H. and Wells) Note here, that if, under the Law, the whole worſhip of God did ſo depend on the prieſthood, that that failing the whole worſhip was to ceaſe, as being no more acceptable to God; how much more will all worſhip, under the New Teſtament, be rejected by him, if there be not a due regard therein to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as the great and only High-prieſt of his Church? (B.) And how can this be had, without a ſteady adherence to, and unity with, ſuch his Miniſters, as he has ſent, to repreſent him and to preſide in his divine worſhip, in an uninterrupted ſucceſſion, to the end of the world? See the notes on Rom. x. 15. 1 Tim. iv. 15. and 2 Tim. ii. 2.

Who is made.] That is, conſecrated unto his prieſthood. (Aſſ.) Not by a Law which commands or injoins only ſuch ſacrifices and other rites, as ſerve only to the purifying of the fleſh, of which ſort is the Law of Moſes; but after another Law, which is the Power of God unto ſalvation, or whereby we are made capable of attaining the happineſs of an endleſs life of glory in Heaven; that is, in ſhort, the Goſpel. (Wells). See the notes on Rom. vi. 14. and Col. ii. 14.

A diſannulling of the commandment.] That is, after the Moſaic Law. (Wells) See the notes on ver. 3. Rom. viii. 3. and Gal. iv. 9.

The Law made nothing perfect.] See the notes on Acts xiii. 39. Rom. viii. 3. and Col. ii. 17.

The bringing in of a better hope.] Epeiſagoge properly ſignifies the ſuperinduction, or bringing in of one thing after another. And the Goſpel is call'd "a better hope," becauſe it, being a covenant of grace and mercy, worketh in us ſure hope and confidence. (Aſſ) See the notes on ch. iii. 6, &c. and vi. 19. Eph. ii. 18. and iv. 16.

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. And inaſmuch as not without an oath he was made prieſt, (For thoſe prieſts were made without an oath: But this with an oath, by him that ſaid unto him, The Lord ſware, and will not repent, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec) By ſo much was Jeſus made a ſurety of a better teſtament. And they truly were many prieſts, becauſe they were not ſuffered to continue by reaſon of death: But this man, becauſe he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable prieſthood. Wherefore he is able alſo to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them. For ſuch an high-prieſt became us, who is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparated from ſinners, and made higher than the heavens; who needeth not daily, as thoſe high-prieſts, to offer up ſacrifice, firſt for his own ſins, and then for the peoples: For this he did once, when he offered up himſelf. For the law maketh men high-prieſts, which have infirmity; but the word of the oath which was ſince the law maketh the Son, who is conſecrated for evermore.

Not without an oath.] Here the Apoſtle proceeds to ſome other conſiderations, to ſhew further the excellency of Chriſt's prieſthood above the Levitical; of which this is one, That he was made a Prieſt by an oath; but they without one. (Wells) Which argument is in form, thus; He who is made an unchangeable Prieſt by the oath of God, is a better, greater, and more excellent Prieſt, than any made without it: But, whereas the Levitical "Prieſts were made without an oath," by a law changeable at the will of the Law-giver, Jeſus Chriſt "was made Prieſt" by the unchangeable oath of God; "The Lord ſware, and will not repent; Thou art a Prieſt for ever;" Therefore Jeſus Chriſt is a better, greater, and more excellent Prieſt, than the Levitical Prieſts. (Gouge and B.) For this oath ſignifies its perpetuity, never to be altered (Oxf.)

Made a ſurety.] Engyos; one who undertakes for another. He ſtands between creditor and debtor. And thus, Chriſt has ſo far engaged himſelf for us, that he neither can nor will ſtart from his engagement: He has undertaken for all that can be requir'd of us, or deſir'd by us. (Gouge and B.) See the notes on 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Of a better teſtament.] Diatheke is uſed to ſignify a teſtament, or a covenant. In this place the word covenant ſeems to be the more proper; as that to which the office of a ſurety has a more fit relation than to a teſtament. (Gouge) See the notes on ch. viii. 6.

They truly were many.] Another argument to prove the excellency of Chriſt's prieſthood above the Levitical Prieſts is this; He who continueth ever, to execute his office himſelf, is more excellent than they who are forced by death to leave their office to others: But Chriſt "continueth ever," &c. whereas the Levitical Prieſts were forced by death to leave their office to others; Therefore Chriſt is more excellent than they. (Gouge) From Aaron the firſt high-prieſt, unto Phinehas the laſt, who was deſtroy'd with the temple, are reckon'd fourſcore and three high-prieſts, who ſucceeded one another: Of whom thirteen are ſaid to live under the tabernacle, eighteen under the firſt temple, and all the reſt under the ſecond.

An unchangeable prieſthood.] Aparabatos here ſignifies that which doth not paſs from father to ſon, or from one ſucceſſor to another; (and ſo it is expounded by St. Athanaſius) the word being deriv'd from parabaino to paſs. (H.) See the notes on John xii. 34. and Rom. vi. 9.

Wherefore he is able.] This is an inference made upon Chriſt's everlaſting prieſthood, that he "is able to ſave to the uttermoſt;" (eis to panteles) abſolutely, perpetually, and perfectly: (Leigh) So that nothing needs to be added, as an help to him. Whereby we diſcover, 1. The vanity of the Church's ſuppoſed treaſure, wherein Papiſts make their deluded people to truſt; as man's ſatisfaction, interceſſion of Angels and Saints, merits of men, indulgences, and ſuch like. (Gouge) And, 2. How injurious thoſe are to their own ſouls, who ſit down deſponding, either under the guilt and power of their ſins, and conclude them either ſo great that they cannot be pardon'd, or ſo ſtrong that they can never be vanquiſh'd and overcome; when here they are aſſur'd of Chriſt himſelf, that "he is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt." (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 18.

That come unto God by him.] That is, by a true and lively faith in him. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. iv. 16. John vi. 37. x. 9. xiv. 6. xvi. 23. xvii. 2. and 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Interceſſion for them.] See the notes on John xvii. 9. Rom. viii. 34. and 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Such an high-prieſt became us.] See the notes on ch. ii. 10. and 2 Cor. v. 21.

Holy, harmleſs, undefiled.] Thus was Chriſt, in his conception, birth, life and death; never tainted or ſtained with the leaſt ſin, but both habitually and actually more pure and holy than any Prieſt upon earth, or Angel in Heaven. (B.) So that he needed not to intermit the holy ſervices, as the Levitical Prieſts did till their expiation. (Oxf.) See the notes on John viii. 46. xiv. 30. and 2 Cor. v. 21.

Separate from ſinners.] As the Levitical High-prieſt was to be, when he went into the Holy of Holies, Lev. xvi. 17. (Oxf. and W.)

Higher than the heavens.] How are all the bright and ſparkling expreſſions of Homer (in his pompous deſcription of his Jupiter ſitting in majeſty on the top of mount Ida) obſcur'd and extinguiſh'd, if ſet in compariſon with this very ſhort, but ſuperlatively glorious, deſcription of the Lord and Heir of all things, hypſeloteros ton ouranon! Which ſeems to be deriv'd from that great original in the Pſalms, a paſſage of the divineſt poetry and ſublimity, Pſa. cxiii. 4, 5, 6. upon which ſee Dr. Hammond's annotations. (Blackw.)

For, this he did once.] Epaphax; once for all, that is, fully and perfectly. (Aſſ.) Grotius, and the Socinians, contend, that Chriſt is here ſaid to have offer'd up himſelf "for his own ſins;" but then, by ſins, they ſay, is improperly ſignified his natural infirmities and ſufferings. But, where hath the word ſin any ſuch import? It is indeed ſometimes applied to impurities, not moral, but only legal, Lev. xii. 8. xiv. 30. and xv. 13. but never to any thing which by the Law of Moſes was accounted no defilement. And, how improper is it to make the ſame words, uſed but once, ſignify properly ſin, when reſpecting the people, and only ſufferings, with reſpect to Chriſt? Moreover, how did he offer up himſelf for his own ſufferings? Did he ſuffer, that he might not ſuffer? Or that he might not be obnoxious to ſufferings? The interpretation therefore of all the ancient Commentators ought to ſtand in oppoſition to this vain invention, viz. That Chriſt is a High-prieſt, "who needeth not daily, as thoſe High-prieſts (under the Law did) to offer up ſacrifice firſt for his own ſins (which he, being free from evil, ver. 26. could not do) and then for (the ſins of) the people: For this (laſt) he did once, when he offered up himſelf." (W.) There can be no doubt, but this text is meant of the ſacrifices offer'd on the day of expiation; for then only, the High-prieſt offer'd firſt for the ſins of his own houſe, or family, the Prieſts, and then for the ſins of the people, Lev. xvi. 6, 15. and therefore (cath' hemeran) daily, muſt here ſignify on every day of expiation. But, Chriſt can, in no ſenſe, be ſaid to offer for his own ſins, whatever Grotius conceited; Nor does Dr. Whitby allow of his wild notion: But then, he gives no account, how the Apoſtle could ſay, that our Saviour did what the High-prieſt uſed to do, viz. offer firſt (hyper ton idion hamartion, which is here tranſlated) for his own ſins, "and then for the people:" Whereas, by making idion to relate to the Apoſtles, who are call'd (idioi) "his own," John xiii. 1. as being thoſe who did peculiarly belong to him; and ſuppoſing the word Apoſtolon underſtood, to be the latter ſubſtantive to hamartion, the words may fairly be render'd thus, he offered firſt for the ſins of them who belonged to him, and then for the ſins of the people; and this Jeſus undoubtedly did, when he offer'd up himſelf. (Johnſ.) See the notes on ch. ii. 11. v. 3. and x. 18. and Rom. vi. 10.

The word of the oath.] That is, the prophecy, or promiſe of God by the Pſalmiſt, confirm'd by an oath. (Aſſ.)

Conſecrated for evermore.] See the notes on ch. i. 3. ii. 10. and v. 9.

CHAP. VIII.

The Levitical prieſthood of Aaron aboliſh'd by the eternal prieſthood of Chriſt; and the temporal covenant of the Fathers, by the eternal covenant of the Goſpel.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. NOW of the things which we have ſpoken this is the ſum: We have ſuch an high-prieſt, who is ſet on the right-hand of the throne of the Majeſty in the heavens; A miniſter of the ſanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man. For every high-prieſt is ordained to offer gifts and ſacrifices: Wherefore it is of neceſſity that this man have ſomewhat alſo to offer. For if he were on earth, he ſhould not be a prieſt, ſeeing that there are prieſts that offer gifts according to the law: Who ſerve unto the example and ſhadow of heavenly things, as Moſes was admoniſhed of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle. For ſee (ſaith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern ſhew'd to thee in the mount.

This is the ſum.] As if he had ſaid, to give you a ſummary of the things ſpoken of in the former chapters, touching our High-prieſt, Chriſt Jeſus: Or, The chief of the things ſpoken, is this. (W.) Either the ſubſtance in ſhort, or the chief and moſt important particulars. (Wells)

We have ſuch an High-prieſt.] Chriſt, the High-prieſt of the New Teſtament, is a ſpiritual, celeſtial High-prieſt: He is not, as the Prieſts under the Law, external, terreſtrial, occupied about outward, carnal rites, exerciſing and ending his function on earth; but a Prieſt of a better covenant, exerciſing his function in Heaven. Gouge) The key of this whole Epiſtle, the abridgment of the ſcience of the prieſthood of Chriſt, the foundation of the New Covenant, is this, That Jeſus Chriſt is an High-prieſt only for Heaven, and in glory; and that all the external part of the religion here on earth, is only the figure of that which he exerciſes at the right hand of God to all eternity. (Q.) See the notes on ch. i. 3. and iii. 1. John i. 14. and ii. 19. and Col. ii. 9.

For, every High prieſt.] Every Prieſt's peculiar buſineſs is to ſacrifice, and offer burnt-offerings, and ſin-offerings, &c. Agreeably to which, Chriſt was to have ſome ſacrifice to offer to God as a Prieſt; and that was Himſelf; preſenting himſelf in Heaven, the true ſanctuary, after the ſlaying him upon the croſs. (H. and Wells) From this text Mr. Johnſon infers, that Melchiſedec was a ſacrificer; and that he could never have a greater occaſion to execute that principal part of his prieſtly office, than that of his meeting and bleſſing Abraham; ſuch benedictions never being paſs'd without previous ſacrifice: And conſequently, he concludes, that the bread and wine, which he brought forth, were for ſuch ſacrifice. (Unbl. Sacrif. Part i. p. 50.) See the notes on ch. iii. 1. v. 1. and vii. 3.

If he were on earth.] This verſe is ſomewhat obſcure; which may be clear'd up, thus; "If he were on earth, he ſhould not be a Prieſt" elſe; that is, If he had not ſomewhat to offer; Prieſts being they who "offer gifts according to the Law. (Wall and Maſſey)

The example and ſhadow.] The whole earthly tabernacle, with the prieſthood, ſacrifices, and ceremonies, appertaining to it, were types and ſhadows of Chriſt, and of heavenly things to be obtained through him. (Aſſ.) Thoſe words, "according to the pattern ſhewn to thee in the mount," plainly ſhew, that the Levitical tabernacle and prieſthood, &c. were only inſtituted as reſemblances of the heavenly things, not the heavenly things themſelves. (Wells) See Dr. Whitby's anſwer to Mr. Le Clerc's exceptions on this text; and the notes on Acts vii. 44. and Col. ii. 17.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. But now hath he obtained a more excellent miniſtry, by how much alſo he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes. For if that firſt covenant had been faultleſs, then ſhould no place have been ſought for the ſecond. For finding fault with them, he ſaith, Behold, the days come (ſaith the Lord) when I will make a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael, and with the houſe of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; becauſe they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, ſaith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: And I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people. And they ſhall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, ſaying, Know the Lord: For all ſhall know me, from the leaſt to the greateſt. For I will be merciful to their unrighteouſneſs, and their ſins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he ſaith, A new covenant, he hath made the firſt old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old, is ready to vaniſh away.

A more excellent miniſtry.] This may have a ſpecial reference to ver. 4. proving, that Chriſt is not only a Prieſt, but a more excellent Prieſt than any other. This excellency of Chriſt's office hath been deſcrib'd before, by divers arguments; 1. By the Order, of which it was; "the order of Melchiſedec," ch. vii. 6. 2. By the manner of its inſtitution; with a ſolemn oath, ch. vii. 20. 3. By the perfection of it, ch. vii. 19. 4. By its powerful operation, ch. vii. 16. 5. By the place where it is exerciſed, ch. viii. 1. 6. By the everlaſting continuance of it, ch. vii. 3. 7. By the kind of ſacrifice; Himſelf, ch. vii. 27. 8. By the dignity of his perſon; the Son of God, ch. vii. 28. And here, 9. By the covenant ſeal'd thereby. (Gouge) The more excellent the covenant, the more excellent the miniſtry. (B.) Becauſe the prieſthood muſt be anſwerable to the covenant. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Cor. iii. 6.

A better covenant.] Of this Goſpel-covenant it is obſervable, 1. That it is now ſettled as a Law, in which both parties are mutually bound to each other; God to man, and man to God. And, 2. That it is a more excellent, perfect, beneficial covenant than the former; the duties now required, more ſpiritual and ſublime, and the promiſes now propoſed infinitely better promiſes than thoſe which were under the Law, viz. Not only legal impunity, which the ſacrifices under the Law yielded, but pardon and remiſſion: And that pardon, not only for light faults, ſins of error, &c. For which thoſe ſacrifices were deſign'd; but even for wilful ſins, if forſaken and repented of; yea, and the pouring out of the Spirit on all fleſh, giving ſpiritual gifts for the building up of the Church; not only to a few, as to one or two Prophets under the Law, but to many, even to all, Gentiles as well as Jews, yea, to all Chriſtians in ſome meaſure; and laſtly, inſtead of the promiſes of a temporal Canaan, the plain promiſes of eternal life and bliſs. (H.) See the notes on Rom. iii. 21, &c. iv. 13, 16. 2 Cor. iii. 13. Gal. iii. 2, 9, 15, &c. Col. ii. 17. and 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Had been faultleſs.] By what is here charg'd on the firſt covenant, we are not to underſtand the ſinful faultineſs, but defectiveneſs and imperfection only: For it was not faulty in the matter and ſubſtance of it, as it was inſtituted and ordain'd by God; but therefore call'd faulty, becauſe it was obſcure, not ſo ſurely ratified, and not attended with that virtue, power, and efficacy, which the New Covenant is accompanied with. (B.) See Dr. Whitby here at large; and the notes on ch. vii. 12. Rom. iii. 20, 29. vii. 7, 14, 19. viii. 3, 13. Gal. ii. 19. iii. 21. and iv. 3, 9.

I will make a new covenant.] In this, and the following verſes, we have the ſubſtance of the new covenant laid before us; which is full of grace and mercy, and offers pardon and forgiveneſs to all who will be prevail'd with to comply with thoſe reaſonable and neceſſary conditions on which it is offer'd. Thoſe certainly miſtake the nature of this covenant, who think, that when God ſays, he will put his laws into our hearts, he requires nothing to be done by us; for this at once makes void all the laws of the Goſpel. God has promis'd the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit, to enable us to perform our part of the Goſpel-covenant; which he will moſt undoubtedly give to all who, in his way, apply themſelves to him for it, and concur with his divine influences, and are not wanting to themſelves. He will do as much for us, as reaſonable creatures, ſuch as we are, can expect: But we cannot reaſonably expect, that he will, whatever he may do in ſome extraordinary caſes, offer violence to our faculties, and conſtrain us to be good againſt our wills. Some think, that the ſenſe of this paſſage is to this effect, That whereas the Jews had many laws given to them, which, when ſeparated from the command of God, had no internal goodneſs in them; now, under the Goſpel, the precepts required ſhould be ſuch as were moſt agreeable to our reaſon and underſtanding; ſuch as we ourſelves could diſcern their excellency and perfection; That God would not only convince us of our duty, but powerfully incline our wills to the practice of it; that it ſhould be more eaſy, than at any time before, to attain to the knowledge of the will of God; for that the precepts ſhould be ſuch, that every one who would conſult the dictates of his own mind and conſcience would approve, being, as it were, written in the hearts of men. And ſuch, in fact, are the precepts of the Goſpel. (Fox) See Dr. Whitby at large on this place; and the notes here next following.

They ſhall not teach.] That is, they ſhall not need, in ſuch a manner as formerly, to inſtruct one another in the manner of the types and ſhadow of the Law. Note here, What abuſe is put upon this text, by ſome who bring it to ſet aſide the neceſſity of human teaching; for it is by ſuch teaching (ordinarily) that God gives men the knowledge of himſelf. (B.) See the notes on John vi. 45. and xiv. 26.

Ready to vaniſh away.] Spoken of the legal diſpenſation, and the whole Jewiſh oeconomy and government; which accordingly did "vaniſh away," and totally expire, in a few years after the writing this Epiſtle. (Oxf. Wells, and B.)

CHAP. IX.

The ſacrifices, and other rites, of the Law, far inferior to thoſe of the Goſpel.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. THEN verily the firſt covenant had alſo ordinances of divine ſervice, and a worldly ſanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made, the firſt wherein was the candleſtick, and the table, and the ſhew-bread; which is called the ſanctuary. And after the ſecond vail, the tabernacle which is called the holieſt of all: Which had the golden cenſer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory ſhadowing the mercy-ſeat: Of which we cannot now ſpeak particularly. Now when theſe things were thus ordained, the prieſts went always into the firſt tabernacle, accompliſhing the ſervices of God: But into the ſecond went the high-prieſt alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himſelf, and for the errors of the people. The Holy Ghoſt this ſignifying, that the way into the holieſt of all was not yet made manifeſt, while as the firſt tabernacle was yet ſtanding: Which was a figure for the time then preſent, in which were offered both gifts and ſacrifices, that could not make him that did the ſervice perfect, as pertaining to the conſcience; which ſtood only in meats and drinks, and divers waſhings, and carnal ordinances impoſed on them until the time of reformation. But Chriſt being come an high-prieſt of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to ſay, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entred in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the aſhes of an heifer ſprinkling the unclean, ſanctifieth to the purifying of the fleſh; how much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your conſcience from dead works to ſerve the living God?

The firſt covenant had.] The Apoſtle, having before prov'd, from the enallage of the Prieſt and prieſthood, and of the former covenant, that an end was put unto the Jewiſh conſtitution, proceeds now to prove the ſame from the conſideration of that tabernacle which was a ſhadow of good things to come. (W.) And here he gives us a diſtinct view of the typical ordinances, under the Moſaical diſpenſation; and alſo of their accompliſhment in Jeſus Chriſt. (B.) But there is a queſtion, whether the true reading of theſe words, in the original, be (he prote skene) the firſt tabernacle, or only (he prote) the firſt, referring to (diatheke) covenant, which is expreſs'd in the foregoing verſes, and ſuppos'd to be underſtood alſo here. In our common Greek copies it is skene, tho' our tranſlators expreſs it by covenant: And Dr. Whitby believes skene to be the true reading; tho' I find the other is preferr'd by Biſhop

Hall, the Aſſembly-men, Hammond, the Oxford Annotator, Burkitt, Wells and Wall, as well as by Tremellius, Beza, and Queſnel: But, for the reaſons given on both ſides, the reader may conſult Hammond and Whitby. See the notes on ch. viii. 5.

The firſt, wherein was.] The Apoſtle here tells us, what ſacred utenſils were by God's appointment in the tabernacle, viz. In the Tabernacle, or ſanctuary, was 1. "The candleſtick," repreſenting that fulneſs of light which is in Chriſt, and which is by him communicated to the whole Church. (B.) A type of the word of God. (Godw.) 2. "The table, and the ſhew-bread:" Of which the table, whereon it ſtood, repreſented the Saints communion with Chriſt, and with one another; and the ſhew-bread it ſelf typified Chriſt, the only bread of life. (B.) As likewiſe the loaves, being twelve in number, were alſo a type of the twelve tribes. (Godw.) In the Holy of Holies, was 1. "The golden cenſer," which was to hold the incenſe; repreſenting the interceſſion of Chriſt, which gives efficacy to the prayers of all believers. But this cenſer, not being mention'd by Moſes, ſeems particularly reſerv'd for the uſe of the day when the High-prieſt burned incenſe in the Holy of Holies; and 'tis ſuppos'd not to have been always kept there, but only carried in when the Prieſt went in; and therefore it is reckon'd as belonging to it. (Aſſ. H. Oxf. W. B. and Wall) 2. "The ark of the covenant," (ſo call'd, becauſe the two tables, in which the Ten Commandments were written by the finger of God, were kept in it,) repreſenting the preaching of the Law. (Downame, H. and B.) 3. "The golden pot that had manna," miraculouſly kept in it without putrefaction; a type of Chriſt, the bread of life, and of the ſacraments inſtituted by him. (Down. and B.) 4. "Aaron's rod that budded;" which rod repreſented Eccleſiaſtical diſcipline, as its budding and fruitfulneſs did their fruitful converſation: But neither of theſe two laſt are underſtood to have been kept in the ark of the covenant, but only in the Holy of Holies, near the ark; at leaſt in Solomon's time. (Down. Godw. Aſſ. H. W. and Wall) 5. "The tables of the covenant," or the Ten Commandments, containing the ſubſtance of God's covenant with the People, and repreſenting the preaching of the Law. (Down. and B.) And, over the ark "the cherubims of glory, ſhadowing the mercy-ſeat:" Which mercy-ſeat was made of pure beaten gold, exactly to cover the ark wherein the Law was laid up; and therein a type of Chriſt, who fully covers our ſins, the tranſgreſſions of the Law, out of God's ſight: And the cherubims, with their faces towards each other, but both looking downwards towards the mercy-ſeat, ſhadow'd out the Jews and Chriſtians, both looking towards each other, but both expecting ſalvation in Chriſt only. (Godw. Aſſ. H. and B.)

Now, theſe things being thus.] As if he had ſaid, Since we have, from ver. 2. hitherto, deſcribed the ſanctuary, appertaining to the firſt covenant, or the Law, we proceed to ſpeak next of the other particular, mention'd ver. 1. as relating to the ſaid firſt covenant, viz. the rites or "ordinances of divine ſervice." (Wells)

The Prieſts went.] The Vulgar Latin, the Engliſh, and ſome other tranſlators, do, in the following verſes, alter the tenſe from the preſent (which the Greek keeps) to the præter; which alters the reader's conception of the time when this Epiſtle was written When the writer ſpeaks of thoſe ſervices of the temple, as continuing to be perform'd at the time when he ſpeaks of 'em, it is a ſign that the Epiſtle was written while Jeruſalem and the temple ſtood; and ſo it muſt be, if it was written by St. Paul: But, reading the words in the præter tenſe, creates a conception of its being written after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the temple, viz. after the year 70. whereas St. Paul died A. D. 68. the lateſt. It ſeems moſt fitting to keep the tenſes as they are in the original. And conſequently, in this verſe, for went, read go: ver. 7. for "the ſecond went," read the ſecond goeth; and for offered, read offereth: ver. 8. for "was not yet," read is not yet; and for "was yet ſtanding," read is yet ſtanding: ver. 9. for "was a figure for the time then preſent," read is a figure for the time yet preſent; for "were offered," read are offered; and for "could not make him that did," read cannot make him that does: And ver. 10. for "which ſtood," read which ſtand: And ch. x. 1. for offered, read offer, &c. I do not ſay, that the preſent tenſe here uſed is a proof that the Epiſtle was written before A. D. 70. But when a book otherwiſe reaſonably ſuppoſed to be ſo ancient, does uſe the preſent tenſe, I think we ſhould not alter it. (Wall)

The High-prieſt alone, once.] By this it appears, that the offering of Chriſt, which is anſwerable to this, is, after his paſſion, perform'd at his going into Heaven; which was ſignified by the Holy of Holies. (H.)

Offered for himſelf.] See the notes on ch. v. 3. and vii. 27.

Errors of the people.] Agnoemata, ignorances. Knowledge, without practice, is with God accounted ignorance: And hence are all ſins term'd agnoemata. (Andr.) Accordingly, this text may be interpreted of all ſorts of ſins; becauſe all ſorts of ſins ariſe from ſome error in judgment. (Aſſ.) 'Tis certain, the Law allow'd of ſacrifices for ſins committed, not out of mere ignorance; ſuch as for lying, and forſwearing, Lev. vi. 1, 6. We therefore muſt either ſay, with Vatablus and Munſter, that ſins committed through the violence of our paſſions and affections are call'd ſins of ignorance, and ſo ſtand oppoſed to ſins of preſumption, Numb. xv. 27, &c. Or elſe, that the ſins of the people are here ſo ſtiled, becauſe they are moſtly ſuch. (W.) And thus Hammond and Wells expound it of all thoſe ſins for which there was allow'd expiation and ſacrifice under the Law; that is, all ſins but thoſe of preſumption and wilfulneſs.

Not yet made manifeſt.] This, the ancients ſay, was ſignified by the rending of the veil at our Lord's death, that Heaven, before inacceſſible, was then open'd, and a way was made into the true Holy of Holies; and the hope of Chriſtians being now to enter within the veil, becauſe our fore-runner is gone before, that ſeems to intimate the ſame thing. (W) See the notes on ch. 19, 20. and John xiv. 6.

Gifts and ſacrifices.] See the notes on ch. v. 1. and vii. 3.

Perfect, as pertaining.] See the notes on ch. vii. 19. Acts xiii. 39. Gal. iv. 1, &c.

Carnal ordinances.] See the notes on Col. ii. 16.

The time of reformation.] That is the time of the Meſſiah; the time of the New Teſtament Diſpenſation; when Chriſt ſhould and did reform the carnal rites or ceremonies, and ſervices of the Law, by fulfilling them; exhibiting the truth, and thoſe ſpiritual bleſſings typified and ſignified by them; and by inſtituting a more ſimple and ſpiritual worſhip. (Aſſ. W. B. and Wells) See Mr. T. Fuller's ſermon on this text, 1643.

More perfect tabernacle.] Here follows the explication and application of the former type: And the compariſon is chiefly made between the remedy appointed for ſins merely ceremonial, that is legal pollutions and irregularities; which was "the blood of bulls and of goats," &c. and the remedy of thoſe ſins which in their own nature poiſon the ſoul; and this is only the blood of Jeſus Chriſt. (Aſſ.) As Aaron, the type, went into the holieſt of all, Lev. xvi. 3. ſo Chriſt, the Antitype, went "into the Holy place:" As Aaron went in "once a year," Exod. xxx. 10. ſo Chriſt "entred in once:" As Aaron with "the blood of goats and calves; ſo Chriſt "by his own blood:" As Aaron went in alone; ſo Chriſt "hath troden the wine-preſs alone," Iſa. lxiii. 3. As Aaron was clothed with the "holy garments," Lev. xvi. 4 ſo Chriſt was ordained and ſealed to this office, by his Father, from all eternity. As Aaron did take "two goats," Lev. xvi. 7. ſo Chriſt took two natures: The impaſſibility of his Godhead was ſhadowed by the ſcape-goat; and his ſufferings in his manhood, by the goat that was ſacrificed. And as the goat did "bear upon him all the peoples iniquities," Lev. xvi. 22. ſo Chriſt was "made ſin for us," 2 Cor. v. 22. (Godw.) 'Tis ſtrange to me, that there ſhould be any diſpute what is here meant, by the "tabernacle not made with hands," through which Chriſt entred into Heaven; it ſeems ſo plain a deſcription of the Church of the firſt-born, the Apoſtles, and other converts, which Chriſt made while he was here on earth, and with whom alone he converſed for the forty days between his reſurrection and aſcenſion, and from the midſt of whom he was afterwards aſſumed into Heaven. As the High-prieſt, on the day of expiation, went from the altar through the ſecond court, or the apartment of the Prieſts, into the Holy of Holies; ſo Chriſt Jeſus, from the altar of the croſs, proceeded with triumph into Heaven, through his new ſanctuary, the Church, "not made with hands:" And this (ſays the Apoſtle) he did, "having obtained eternal redemption for us;" an eternal redemption from the incapacity we are under, by nature, of rendring acceptable worſhip to God; and from an endleſs repetition of thoſe burthenſome rites and ſacrifices, by which the Jews annually purged themſelves from this incapacity. (Johnſ.) See ch. iii. 1. vii. 27. and viii. 1. Acts xx. 28. Rom. iii. 24. 1 Cor. i. 30. Gal. iv. 21, &c. and Eph. i. 7.

How much more.] If the legal pollutions (the eating or touching of unclean things, &c.) be expiated by blood and aſhes, ſo far as to keep them who are polluted ſo, from being turn'd out of the congregation, and from any legal puniſhment; How much more ſhall Chriſt's death, the ſhedding of his blood for you, and after that, his preſenting himſelf to his Father in Heaven, in a body that ſhall never die any more; raiſed from the dead by the Spirit and power of God, and now being not only alive but immortal, deliver you from the guilt of ſin, and fit you to ſerve God in a vital Chriſtian courſe, giving over all ſins of the former life? (H.) See Dr. Hammond, and Dr. Whitby, at large on this text; and the notes on ch. iii. 1. and vi. 1. Acts xx. 28. Rom. iii. 25. and Eph. v. 2.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. And for this cauſe he is the Mediator of the New Teſtament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the tranſgreſſions that were under the firſt Teſtament, they which are called might receive the promiſe of eternal inheritance. For where a teſtament is, there muſt alſo of neceſſity be the death of the teſtator. For a teſtament is of force after men are dead: Otherwiſe it is of no ſtrength at all whilſt the teſtator liveth. Whereupon, neither the firſt teſtament was dedicated without blood. For when Moſes had ſpoken every precept to all the people, according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water and ſcarlet wool, and hyſſop, and ſprinkled both the book and all the people, Saying, This is the blood of the teſtament which God hath enjoyned unto you. Moreover, he ſprinkled likewiſe with the blood both the tabernacle, and all the veſſels of the miniſtry. And almoſt all things are by the law purged with blood; and without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion. It was therefore neceſſary that the pattern of things in the heavens ſhould be purified with theſe; but the heavenly things themſelves with better ſacrifices than theſe. For Chriſt is not entred into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itſelf, now to appear in the preſence of God for us: Nor yet that he ſhould offer himſelf often, as the high-prieſt entreth into the holy place, every year with blood of others: (For then muſt he often have ſuffered ſince the foundation of the world) but now once in the end of the world, hath he appeared to put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: So Chriſt was once offered to bear the ſins of many; and unto them that look for him ſhall he appear the ſecond time, without ſin unto ſalvation.

Mediator of the New Teſtament.] The covenant of grace is here call'd a Teſtament, becauſe it received its ratification and confirmation by the blood of Chriſt. All things requir'd in a teſtament are here found, viz. a Teſtator deceaſed; Chriſt Jeſus: Legacies bequeathed; temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal bleſſings: Legacies named; the heirs of promiſe: Conditions requir'd, upon which only the legacies may be obtained; faith, repentance, and ſincere obedience: Seals annexed; baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper: And witneſſes ſubſcribing; the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt. The ſum is this, That the death of Chriſt is the foundation, life, and ſoul of the New covenant: And that the New covenant is of the nature of a Teſtament; and the benefit promiſed therein, viz. Remiſſion of ſin, reconciliation with God, ſanctification on earth, and glorification in Heaven, are legacies freely left us by our Teſtator, who was dead, but is alive again, and lives for evermore, to execute his own will and teſtament, of which the Scripture is the inſtrument, and the ſacraments the ſeals. (B.) See the notes on ch. vii. 22. and viii. 6. John xvii. 24. Rom. iii. 5. and v. 6. Gal. ii. 21. and iii. 15. and 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Without blood.] The Apoſtle here ſhews, that both the firſt and ſecond Covenant were dedicated, that is, confirm'd, by blood. The firſt covenant, which God made with Iſrael in Horeb, had not its ſanction without typical blood. The uſing of blood, for the ſanction of leagues and covenants, was a very ancient rite, and probably ſignified, that the parties confederating did thereby engage blood and life for the obſervation of them. (B.) See the dangerous reflections of Mr. Le Clerc upon this argument of the Apoſtle, fairly and largely refuted by Dr. Whitby.

Patterns of things.] See the notes on ch. viii. 5.

Chriſt is not entred.] See the notes on ch. iv. 14. vi. 20. and viii. 2.

Now to appear.] The Prieſts of old, when they entred the Holy Place, were forced ſoon to go out again, to prepare for a new ſacrifice: But this word now is expreſſive of the whole ſeaſon and duration of time, from the entrance of Chriſt into Heaven, unto the conſummation of all things. There is no moment of time, in which it may not be ſaid, He now "appeareth in the preſence of God for us." (B.) See the notes on ch. vii. 25. and Rom. viii. 34.

But now, once, in the end.] Our Apoſtle, in theſe words, ſets forth the excellency of Chriſt's ſacrifice, from its ſingularity; in that it needeth no repetition, as their ſacrifices of old did. Their ſacrifices were repeated often; and their repetition was an evidence of their imperfection: But Chriſt's once offering himſelf a ſacrifice was ſufficient, in regard of the infinite worth and dignity of his perſon; "Once, in the end of the world;" that is, in the Goſpel-age, the laſt age of the world. (B.) Epi ſynteleia ton aionon; in the concluſion of the ages. Dangerous here is the note of Grotius, That St. Paul was of opinion, the deſtruction of the world was then at hand; whereas this phraſe does not ſignify properly "the end of the world," but the laſt of the three celebrated ages of the world. (W.) See Archbiſhop Tillotſon's ſermon on this text; and the ſeveral notes on ver. 12. ch. i. 2. and vii. 27. Mark i. 15. John iii. 16. and xv. 13. Rom. vi. 6, &c. 1 Cor. x. 11. 2 Cor. v. 21. Once to die.] See the notes on Rom. v. 12.

After this the judgment.] See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 52. and 2 Cor. v. 10.

To bear the ſins of many.] Plainly alluding to the ſacrifices under the Law; which did, as it were, bear the faults of the ſinner. And that this expreſſion, of Chriſt's being "offered to bear our ſins," cannot be meant of his taking away our ſins by his holy doctrine, which was confirm'd by his death, but of his bearing our ſins, by way of imputation, and by his ſuffering for them in our ſtead, as the ſacrifice was ſuppoſed to do for the ſinner, is evident, beyond all denial, from the oppoſition which follows after the text, between his firſt appearance and his ſecond: Which can have no other imaginable ſenſe but this; that at his firſt coming he ſuſtain'd the perſon of a ſinner, and ſuffer'd inſtead of us; but his ſecond coming ſhall be upon another account, and he ſhall appear without ſin, unto ſalvation; that is, not as a ſacrifice, but as a judge, to confer the reward of eternal life upon thoſe who are partakers of the benefit of that ſacrifice which he offered to God for us in the days of his fleſh. (Tillotſ.) We are expreſly taught, in this very Epiſtle, ch. ii. 9. that Chriſt "taſted death for every man" When therefore it is here ſaid, that "Chriſt was once offered to bear the ſins of many," thereby is to be underſtood, not that Chriſt was once offer'd to bear the ſins only of ſome certain perſons; but that he was offer'd for the ſins of the whole world, tho' wicked men, by their impenitence, lay not hold of this benefit: And ſo it comes to paſs, that Chriſt actually bears the ſins only of many, viz. of ſuch only as believe and obey the Goſpel, and ſo actually enjoy the benefit of Chriſt's oblation, according to ch. v. 9 (Wells and Oxf.) See the notes on ch. ii. 9. v 9. and vii. 27. Rom. v. 19. and vi. 10. Phil. iii. 10. 1 Tim. ii. 4. and Tit. ii. 4.

CHAP. X.

The weakneſs and imperfection of the Levitical ſacrifices further urged; and the neceſſity and efficacy of that of Chriſt; with exhortations ſuitable thereto.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. FOR the law having a ſhadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with thoſe ſacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceaſed to be offered? Becauſe that the worſhippers once purged, ſhould have had no more conſcience of ſins. But in thoſe ſacrifices there is a remembrance again made of ſins every year. For it is not poſſible that the blood of bulls and of goats ſhould take away ſins. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he ſaith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not, but a body haſt thou prepared me: In burnt-offerings and ſacrifices for ſin thou haſt had no pleaſure: Then ſaid I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Above, when he ſaid, Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for ſin thou wouldſt not, neither hadſt pleaſure therein (which are offered by the law) Then ſaid he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the firſt, that he may eſtabliſh the ſecond. By the which will we are ſanctified, through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt once for all. And every prieſt ſtandeth daily miniſtring, and offering oftentimes the ſame ſacrifices, which can never take away ſins: But this man, after he had offered one ſacrifice for ſins, for ever ſat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footſtool. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified. Whereof the Holy Ghoſt alſo is a witneſs to us: For after that he had ſaid before, this is the covenant that I will make with them after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them: And their ſins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now, where remiſſion of theſe is, there is no more offering for ſin.

A ſhadow of good things to come.] Ton mellonton agathon; "of the good things to come." (H. and Oxf.) That is, of thoſe good things to come, of which Chriſt is the High-prieſt. (W.) Some are of opinion, that here St. Paul alludes to the cuſtom of painters, who firſt make a rude draught, and then, out of that, a perfect and lively picture: And theſe make the ſenſe to be, That the Old Covenant did contain only dark reſemblances and types of heavenly things, but no lively repreſentations of them; this being reſerv'd unto the times of the Goſpel, wherein Chriſt, and all ſpiritual bleſſings in him, are clearly and plainly manifeſted. Others are of opinion, That St. Paul alludes unto the ſhadow of a body; and theſe make the ſenſe of the words to be, That the Old Covenant had only types, wherein Chriſt, and the heavenly things through him, were darkly repreſented, and not the ſubſtance and truth of the things themſelves. And this is the more probable opinion. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on ch. vii. 12, 19. viii. 5 and ix. 11, &c. and Col. ii. 17.

Not the very image.] See the notes on 2 Cor. iv. 4. Eph. i. 14. Phil. ii. 6. and Col. i. 15.

Make the comers thereunto perfect.] See the notes on ch. vii. 19. Acts xiii. 39. Gal. iv. 1, &c.

Would they not have ceaſed.] Epei ouk an epauſanto. Thus it is in the Edition of Rog. Daniel, Lond. 1653. to which our Engliſh verſion here anſwers exactly. But many other copies (and particularly that of Elzevir, Amſt. 1662.) read it thus, Epei an epauſanto, without the ouk; the ſenſe of which is affirmative, thus, they would have ceaſed. But, whether we read this clauſe with, or without an interrogation, (Would they not? or They would) the ſenſe is ſtill the ſame; the ſcope and deſign of the Apoſtle being to ſhew the weakneſs and inſufficiency of the legal ſacrifices to purge the conſcience from the guilt of ſin; which he has done by an argument drawn from their being ſo often repeated "year by year, continually:" Whereas thoſe ſacrifices would not have needed to have been offer'd again continually, had the work for which they were offer'd, been already wrought; even as, when the cure is effected, the medecine needs not be any more applied. But the caſe is otherwiſe: For, in their moſt ſolemn ſacrifices, there was (anamneſis) a romembrance, or commemoration, and confeſſion made of their former ſins by the High-prieſt every year; which was an intimation to them, that they needed a new and better ſacrifice for the expiation of ſin, viz. that of the Meſſiah, in and by which alone remiſſion of ſin was to be expected and obtained. (Aſſ. H. Oxf. W. B. Wells, and Fox) See the notes on ch. ix. 28.

Blood of bulls and of goats.] See the notes on ch. x. 9, 13. and Rom. v. 12, &c.

When he cometh.] Our Apoſtle, having ſhewed the weakneſs and inſufficiency of the Levitical ſacrifices, in the former verſes, comes now to declare the efficacy and ſufficiency of Chriſt's ſacrifice, and of his bleſſed undertaking, To do, fulfil, perform, and ſuffer all things required by the will and wiſdom, by the holineſs and righteouſneſs of God, unto the compleat ſalvation of the Church. And this he doth by a quotation out of the Old Teſtament, Pſalm xl. 6, 7, 8. Where Chriſt is brought in, as newly made man, ſpeaking to his Father, in and after this manner; Foraſmuch as thy wiſdom did inſtitute, and formerly appoint, ſacrifices, as types to prefigure the ſacrifice of thy Son, but thou didſt not intend their longer continuance, when he ſhould once be offered up; purſuant to this holy will and pleaſure of thine, I am now come into the world: Thou haſt prepared me a body, an holy and innocent human nature, fit to be united to my glorious Godhead; in which nature I will ſuffer, and by my ſufferings ſatisfy thy juſtice for ſin; and by the ſufficiency of my ſacrifice put a period to all the Levitical ſacrifices that did precede me, and prefigure me. Learn hence, 1. That in the fulneſs of God's appointed time, Chriſt came into the world, to accompliſh that which the Levitical ſacrifices did only prefigure, but could not effect. 2. That in order thereunto Chriſt did aſſume the human nature, and offered himſelf in that nature willingly to his Father, as a ſacrifice to atone divine diſpleaſure. 3. That by this one ſacrifice and oblation of Chriſt, which he performed in obedience to the will of God, all that believe in him are juſtified and ſaved, do obtain remiſſion of ſin, grace here, and glory hereafter: "By which will we are ſanctified through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt once for all." (B.) See the notes on John xvi. 28. and xviii. 37. and thoſe which here next follow.

A body haſt thou prepared me.] The words in the Hebrew are, My ears haſt thou bored, in alluſion to the ceremony uſed to a ſlave who would not have his liberty, but would continue in his obedience to his maſter, and would not go free, Exod. xxi. 6. and Deut. xv. 17. And ſince this was done out of love to his maſter, the boring of his ear ſeems not to be commanded as a note of infamy, but as a ſolemn devoting of him to his maſter's ſervice: Tho' were it uſed as a mark of ſervitude, it anſwers ſtill exactly to our Saviour, who took upon him (ſaith the Apoſtle) the form of a ſervant, or a ſlave, and became obedient to the death for us, when he might have been free from it, out of love to his Father, and us his children, Phil. ii. 7, 8. And becauſe he only could appear in this form, and perform'd this obedience in the body which he aſſumed for this purpoſe, the LXX interpreters, perhaps by the internal motion of the Holy Spirit, tranſlated the phraſe thus, "A body haſt thou prepared," or framed, for me. For that the Apoſtle did not change the tranſlation of the Septuagint, but find it thus, his words declare, where he ſaith, "He taketh away the firſt," to wit, ſacrifice and offering, according to the Law, "that he may eſtabliſh the ſecond," that is, the oblation of his body, or his obedience to the death in the body thus prepared for him. So read Theodoret, St. Auſtin, Euthymius, St. Chryſoſtome, Apollinarius, and Ambroſius: So read the Arabick and Æthiopick verſions; and they who read otherwiſe may be ſuppoſed to have follow'd not the Greek, but the Hebrew. And this reading the Apoſtle approves and follows, as the true meaning of the Hebrew phraſe, and that which ſo fitly doth expreſs our Saviour's oblation of himſelf, as that ſacrifice which was to put an end to thoſe which only were the types and ſhadows of it; and his giving up himſelf entirely a ſervant to do the will of God; on which account ſlaves and ſervants, who were altogether at the beck and will of their Lords, were both by the Jews and Heathens called (Smota) bodies. (W.) See the notes on John i. 14. Rom. viii. 3. and 1 Tim. iii. 16.

Thou haſt had no pleaſure.] It is abſurd to ſuppoſe, that either David in ſpeaking, or St. Paul in citing, theſe words, ſhould mean that God did not deſire any ſacrifice at all; for that would render even the ſacrifice of Chriſt himſelf vain and needleſs. But the meaning is, that God had no ſuch deſires or appetite to ſacrifice (which is to be underſtood of the Levitical ſacrifices) as could make him uneaſy at the want of it; or that he did not chuſe it, as a thing from which he received any real advantage: For ſo the Hebrew words uſed by the Prophet may be underſtood, as well as the Greek (eudokeſas) here uſed by the Apoſtle. (Johnſ.)

In the volume.] Before the Jews came to bind up books in the manner as we now have them, they wrote in a roll of paper or parchment (ſometimes of vaſt extent:) And this they call'd Megilla, from galal, which in Hebrew ſignifies to roll, as volumen, from volvo, does in Latin, and volume in Engliſh. (Godw.) Here, "the volume of the book" ſignifies the Law of Moſes; and the words in their firſt ſignification relate to David: But when underſtood of Chriſt, they mean, according to Dr. Hammond, that bill, or roll of contract between God the Father and Son, wherein is ſuppoſed to be written the agreement concerning man's redemption. (Johnſ. on Pſa. xl. 7.) See the notes on Luke iv. 17. xxiv. 44. and John v. 46.

Lo, I come to do thy will.] To wit, by offering the acceptable thing or ſacrifice; namely, that of his prepared, or conſecrated body. (Johnſ.) See the notes on John v. 30. and vi. 38.

He taketh away the firſt.] See the notes on ver. 5.

We are ſanctified.] That is, freed from the guilt of our ſins, and conſecrated to God's ſervice. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. ii. 11. and John xvii. 17.

Once for all.] See the notes on ver. 18. ch. vii. 27. and ix. 12, 16.

For ever ſat down.] See the notes on ch. i. 3.

Made his footſtool.] See the notes on ch. i. 13. and 1 Cor. xv. 25.

Perfected for ever.] That is, completely expiated the ſins of "them that are ſanctified" through faith in his blood, procuring the remiſſion of ſins. (W.) See the notes on ch. ii. 10. and ix. 13. and Acts xxvi. 18.

This is the covenant.] See the notes on ch. viii. 10. and Acts ii. 17.

No more offering for ſin.] That is, No more offering needful; Neither, 1. For thoſe who live holily; they having ceaſed from ſinning as formerly; and this offering is made for all their ſins, as well future as paſt, they not receding from the Evangelical condition thereof: Nor, 2. For the wicked or revolted; for this offering made already remitted not their ſins, they being defective in performing the condition of the covenant, and therefore another offering ſtill would be as uſeleſs. (Oxf.) And here, at the cloſe of this point, I cannot omit to lay before my reader ſome ſhort remarks on this ſubject taken from Mr. Johnſon's Unbloody Sacrifice and Altar. This learned author, having treated at large of the ſacrifice which our Saviour himſelf offer'd in the Euchariſt, comes more particularly to conſider the ſpecious objection againſt this doctrine, drawn from this and the foregoing chapter, viz. That Chriſtians are here ſaid to be ſanctified and perfected by the one ſacrifice of Chriſt in perſon, ver. 10, 14 and eſpecially, that ſince remiſſion of ſin is obtain'd by Chriſt's once offering himſelf, therefore now there remaineth no more ſacrifice, or offering for ſin, ver. 12, 18. To which he anſwers, 1. That granting that the Euchariſt cannot be a piacular, or expiatory victim, and that there is no occaſion for any ſacrifice, but that of the croſs, for taking away the guilt and puniſhment of ſin; yet it will not follow, that it is not a ſacrifice of Thankſgiving, properly ſo call'd, in which bread and wine are offer'd as the repreſentatives of the body and blood of Chriſt, and as teſtimonies of our gratitude to God for the redemption of the world by Jeſus Chriſt. And, 2. More directly to the allegations from this Epiſtle; Which he does, 1. By conſidering what the Apoſtle means by perfecting, and ſanctifying, and ſacrifice for ſin. It is evident (ſays he) that to "perfect for ever," and to purge, or ſanctify the worſhipper, ſo that he may never again "have conſcience of ſin," are two phraſes ſignifying the ſame thing, in the firſt and ſecond verſes of this chapter. It is clear beyond all diſpute, that no ſacrifice does, once for all, take away the moral ſtain, or guilt, of ſins hereafter to be committed, or exempt men from ſin for the time to come; therefore the Apoſtle cannot be underſtood, in this context, of any ſuch perfection. But, by perfecting, and taking away ſin once for all, St. Paul plainly deſcribes that privilege purchas'd by Chriſt's death, and once for all conferr'd upon his Church, whereby the whole body of Chriſtian Prieſts and people are qualified to make their publick addreſſes to God with acceptance, notwithſtanding their corruption of nature, and the known actual ſins of particular members. 'Tis the univerſal opinion of the main bulk of mankind, or at leaſt was ſo of old, That men are not fit to approach the Divine Nature without ſome Mediator, or ſome preparative luſtrations: And therefore, not only the Heathens, but the Jews, by God's appointment, had variety of rites and ſacrifices, whereby not only to propitiate the Deity, but to initiate and fit themſelves to perform thoſe propitiatory ſervices. St. Paul does frequently inſiſt upon this particular, as a very eminent privilege of the Chriſtian Church; which makes it more credible, that he ſhould ſpeak of it ſo largely here. For the illuſtration of which, this author quotes Eph. ii. 18. and iii. 12. Rom. v. 2. Hebr. iv. 15, 16. and x. 19, 22. and John x. 9. and xiv. 6. Upon which he enlarges much beyond the compaſs of this our undertaking to particularize. Then he proceeds, 2. To ſhew, that the perfecting, and ſanctifying, and ſacrifice for ſin, here meant by the Apoſtle are not excluſive of farther perfecting, and ſanctifying, and ſacrifice for ſin: For the perfecting here meant is only conſecrating the whole Church, eſpecially the Prieſts, to the ſervice of God; the ſanctifying here intended imports no more than the freeing men and things from the diſability they are under by nature, or otherwiſe, for the ſervice of God; and by the ſacrifice for ſin, is here meant ſuch a ſacrifice as effected this conſecration or dedication. For, if the conſecratory, or initiatory ſacrifices offer'd by Moſes, or the re conſecratory oblations made on the day of expiation, had been never ſo perfect in their kind; tho' they had once for all effectually attain'd their end, and conferr'd a perpetual, indelible, conſecration on Prieſts, and people, and tabernacle; yet it does by no means follow, that they were therefore to offer no other ſacrifices, either for pardon of ſin, or for any other ends. The conſequence of this conſecration, which the Church of Chriſt acquires by the firſt oblation of the grand ſacrifice, is this, That all the members of this Church have a certain, infallible remedy againſt the guilt of all actual ſin: That is, they have a right of acceſs to God in the publick aſſembly; and by virtue of the holy offices there perform'd, and eſpecially of the ſacrifice of the Euchariſt there offer'd, they have an application of the merits of Chriſt's death made to them, for the taking away that obnoxiouſneſs to puniſhment which they had incurr'd: And therefore, the full effect and conſequence of our being conſecrated, perfected, or admitted to the ſervice and worſhip of God, once for all, is this, That we are by this means made capable of pardon upon repentance, and of all the bleſſings purchaſed by Chriſt, upon condition that we apply our ſelves to God in the method appointed by him. And then this author proceeds, 3. To ſhew further, what reaſon we have to believe, that the Apoſtle had an eye to the Euchariſtical oblation, even in theſe very chapters. The reaſon of which he takes from the inference which the Apoſtle draws from the foregoing diſcourſe. For, having ſaid, there remains yet no ſacrifice, or offering for ſin, meaning ſuch initiatory ſacrifice, or offering, as Moſes made upon the ratification of the Old Covenant, and the dedication of the tabernacle, or reconſecratory ſacrifices as were injoin'd on the day of expiation; and having ſhew'd them juſt before, what a more perfect conſecration to the ſervice of God they had obtain'd through the perſonal ſacrifice, he firſt concludes, that they ought to make uſe of this privilege, in drawing near to the Holies, by the way that Chriſt had dedicated for them; that is, the Church, which was the tabernacle, through which he enter'd into heaven, ch. ix. 11, 12. and it is certain, that we muſt follow the way which Chriſt did firſt tread out for us. This is the Apoſtle's meaning, when he ſays, We have freedom of acceſs to the Holy of Holies, that is, heaven; and having a "new and living way," through his tabernacle the Church, which was firſt conſecrated by the body of Chriſt, which is therefore as the veil, by which we muſt be let into this tabernacle; let us approach to the Holies, that is, to heaven: And then we make our neareſt approaches to heaven, when we join in the ſolemn devotions of the Church. This is the moſt natural and obvious application of the foregoing context, taking it to contain a proof, that Chriſt did, by his firſt ſacrifice, once for all, prepare us for divine worſhip: For it is to ſay, Since we have this privilege, purchas'd by Chriſt, let us make uſe of it. And the whole cannot more aptly be underſtood, than by applying it to the Euchariſt. But, for the reader's better underſtanding this important queſtion, I muſt, after all, recommend him to Mr. Johnſon's book here cited, (to wit, The Unbloody Sacrifice and Altar, unvail'd and ſupported, 1714.) wherein he profeſſedly undertakes to prove, That the Euchariſt is a proper material ſacrifice; That it is both Euchariſtick and propitiatory; That it is offer'd by proper officers; That the oblation is to be made on a proper altar; and that it is properly confirm'd by manducation. See alſo the notes on ver. 6, 9, 22, &c. ch. ii. 10, 11. iii. 1. iv. 14, &c. vii. 27. ix. 11. and xiii. 10.

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Having therefore, brethren, boldneſs to enter into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus, by a new and living way which he had conſecrated for us, through the vail, that is to ſay, his fleſh; and having an high-prieſt over the houſe of God: Let us draw near with a true heart, in full aſſurance of faith, having our hearts ſprinkled with an evil conſcience, and our bodies waſhed with pure water; Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promiſed) and let us conſider one another to provoke unto love, and to good works: Not forſaking the aſſembling of our ſelves together, as the manner of ſome is; but exhorting one another: And ſo much the more as ye ſee the day approaching.

Having therefore.] The Apoſtle, having, in the foregoing parts of this Epiſtle, largely ſhewn the excellency of the Chriſtian religion above the Jewiſh, takes up the remaining part of it in drawing ſuch inferences, and making ſuch exhortations (grounded on thoſe inferences) as are proper to the deſign of the Epiſtle. And here, from the conſideration of perfect remiſſion being attainable by the Goſpel, and ſo a way opened for true believers into heaven, he encourages the Hebrews, 1. To draw near to God, ver. 22. To perſevere in the Chriſtian Faith, ver. 23. 3. To ſtir up one another "to love, and to good works," ver. 24. And, 4. To continue conſtant in Chriſtian communion, ver. 25. (Wells and B.) See the notes on ver. 18. and ch. ix. 11. and John xiv. 6. and Eph. ii. 18. and thoſe which here next follow.

Boldneſs to enter.] Parrheſia here plainly ſignifies liberty, or freedom, as it is explain'd on the margin of our Engliſh Bible: Whereas none of the Jews, but only the High-prieſt, had the liberty to enter into their Holy of Holies, we Chriſtians have the liberty to enter into the true Holy of Holies. (Heaven itſelf) by the blood of Jeſus. (Wells) See the notes on John vii. 4.

A new and living way.] , New, in reſpect there was no entrance thereinto, till Chriſt, our fore-runner, firſt enter'd, and ſo opened the way for us: And living, in that our walking therein conſiſts in true ſpiritual holineſs of life, not in the obſervance of the dead letter, or external rites, of the Law, and alſo terminates in life everlaſting. (Idem and B.) See the notes on ver. 18. and ch. vii. 20.

An High-prieſt.] See the notes on ch. iii. 1. and iv. 14. and Eph. i. 22.

Let us draw near.] What the Apoſtle means, by "drawing near" to God, will be eaſily underſtood, by thoſe who are already convinc'd, that the Euchariſt is the moſt proper Chriſtian worſhip; in which we therefore make our neareſt approaches to the throne of God: And which St. Paul explains, in the following words, when he bids us "hold faſt, (homologian) the oblation of our faith without wavering;" for, by the oblation of our faith, the Euchariſt is meant. It is true, there is no privilege or favour convey'd to us in the Euchariſt, but what we firſt receive by baptiſm; yet we receive them in a much leſs degree in baptiſm than in the Euchariſt: In the firſt we receive the remiſſion of that guilt which we brought into the world with us, or that which we contracted while we were in a ſtate of nature, of Judaiſm, or Heatheniſm; in the other we have our pardon ſeal'd for ſuch ſins as we have committed ſince we were baptized Chriſtians; and the ſins of baptized Chriſtians are not ordinarily forgiven, but in the Euchariſt. In baptiſm or confirmation (which is but a completing of that ſacrament) we have the firſt livery and ſeiſin, if I may ſo ſay, of all the favours purchaſed by Chriſt; in the Euchariſt we receive the continuance and improvement of them. (Johnſ.) See the notes on ver. 18. ch. iv. 14. and vii. 25.

Having our hearts ſprinkled.] That is, being firſt baptized. For it is by baptiſm, that men are "ſprinkled from an evil conſcience;" becauſe thereby they have not only forgiveneſs of all paſt ſins, but admittance into the Church, and liberty to join in the public addreſſes and devotions of God's people; as the Jews of old were qualified to enter into the tabernacle, by having water mingled with the aſhes of the red heifer ſprinkled upon them. (W. and Johnſ.) See the notes on ch. ix. 14. John iii. 5. and 1 Cor. vi. 11.

Hold faſt the profeſſion.] Homologian; the oblation. See the notes on ch. iii. 1. and iv. 14.

Provoke unto love.] To wit, by our own examples. (Wells) See the notes on Eph. ii. 10.

Not forſaking the aſſembling.] That is, the public congregation of the faithful, wherein the word of God is taught, the ſacraments adminiſtred, and common prayer and thankſgiving made; unto which God hath promiſed a bleſſing, Matth. xviii. 20. (Aſſ.) The Apoſtle here warns Chriſtians againſt forſaking theſe public aſſemblies, foraſmuch as it would endanger their falling from their Chriſtian profeſſion. Thereby we not only neglect a duty which even natural religion requires us to perform, but loſe the advantages of joining together in public worſhip. As this is a duty not to be neglected; ſo we ought to take care to prepare our ſelves before hand for it, that our ſervices may be acceptable to God. Some at that time neglected this neceſſary duty, for fear of being taken notice of, and coming into trouble upon this account. If the Apoſtle did not allow this as a good reaſon for abſenting from public worſhip, what cenſure would he paſs upon that multitude of Chriſtians, who now abſent from public worſhip, not for fear of perſecution, but merely out of ſloth and lazineſs, if not out of contempt of God and his ſervice? If any omit public worſhip from an apprehenſion that they receive greater illumination and improvements in private, than they can in public; they ſhould conſider, that private and public worſhip are duties not oppoſed to each other, but ſuch as every ſerious Chriſtian ought to practiſe in their time and place; and I would earneſtly recommend it to them ſeriouſly and impartially to try and examine by what ſpirit they are led. That the intereſt of that ſpirit, who is oppoſed to the Holy Spirit, would be highly promoted, were public worſhip to be laid aſide, cannot reaſonably be doubted: For, were it not for the frequent returns of public worſhip, the wickedneſs of the world would be greater than it is: And I am fully perſwaded, that no one thing conduces more to mens apoſtatizing from the Chriſtian religion, and ſettling in downright infidelity, than this cuſtom of forſaking the public aſſemblies of Chriſtians for the worſhip of God. (Fox) See Dr Mayne's ſermon on this text, 1652. And Dr. Hickes's book of the Conſtitution of the Catholick Church, and the nature and conſequences of ſchiſm, 1716. As alſo the notes on Acts ii. 42, 46.

Exhorting one another.] Not only by exhortation properly ſo call'd, but alſo by admonition, conſolation, reproof, example, and the like. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. iii. 13. and Eph. v. 11.

Ye ſee the day approaching.] That is, the day of Jeruſalem's approaching deſtruction to them; the day of death and judgment haſtening towards us. (B.) See Dr. Hammond at large on this text; and the notes on Rom. xiii. 11. 1 Cor. vii. 29. and Phil. iv. 5.

Ver. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. For if we ſin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which ſhall devour the adverſaries. He that deſpiſed Moſes law, died without mercy under two or three witneſſes: Of how much ſorer puniſhment, ſuppoſe ye, ſhall he be thought worthy, who hath troden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was ſanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done deſpite to the ſpirit of grace? For we know him that hath ſaid, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompenſe, ſaith the Lord. And again, The Lord ſhall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

For, if we ſin wilfully.] Here the Apoſtle, as a further motive to perſeverance, ſets before them the woful conſequences of Apoſtaſy. (Wells and B.) It is plain, from ver. 23. and 29. that by ſinning wilfully is meant the falling from the profeſſion of our faith by Apoſtaſy; and that ſuch, if they return and repent, may be pardon'd, has been ſhew'd in the note on ch. vi. 4. But, becauſe ſome have thought, that by "ſinning wilfully" may be meant the being guilty of wilful ſins, after they have been baptiz'd and made profeſſion of religion, and have thereby been almoſt driven to deſpair, imagining that they could not be admitted to repentance; I will endeavour, by ſome plain paſſages of Scripture, to give them comfort, and to ſhew them their miſtake. Can any words be fuller to this purpoſe, than thoſe of St. Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 21? Where he tells them, He "ſhould bewail many, who had ſinned already, and had not repented of the uncleanneſs, and fornication, and laſciviouſneſs, which they had committed." There was therefore room for repentance to thoſe who had wilfully committed theſe abominable and crying ſins. And in the caſe of the inceſtuous Corinthians, when the Apoſtle directed that Church to proceed to excommunication, was not the end propoſed thereby, 1 Cor. v. 5. "that his ſpirit might be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus?" Now, how could this be, but by his repentance? Repentance therefore was not impoſſible to him. The ſame thing is evident from Jam. v. 15, 19, 20. and from Gal. vi. 1. Are not the Churches in the Revelation call'd upon to "repent, and do their firſt works?" Rev. ii. 5, 19, 21. To mention no more, did not St. Stephen wilfully deny his Lord and Maſter? And was not his repentance notwithſtanding accepted of, and he admitted to pardon? If any ſhall abuſe this comfortable doctrine, and take encouragement from thence to commit ſin, let them know, that they do it at the peril of their ſouls. We can never conceive too highly of the mercy of God, in and through Jeſus Chriſt, provided we are penitent and humble: The danger lies in promiſing our ſelves peace, and reconciliation, and pardon, even while we continue to live in our ſins, and neglect to do works meet for repentance. If we ſeriouſly endeavour to make our ſelves fit objects of divine mercy; if we confeſs, and hate, and forſake our ſins; if we become new creatures, and are careful to know and do the will of God, we are aſſur'd, that all our ſins ſhall be waſh'd away and pardon'd. (W. Fox and Wall) See Dr. Hammond's learned critique on this place, and the notes on the ſeveral texts cited; as well as thoſe on ch. iv. 9. v. 8. and ix. 26, 28. Luke xi. 26. xii. 47. and xix 17. Rom. vi. 10. 2 Theſſ. i. 8. and the other notes here next following.

Much ſorer puniſhment.] See the notes on ch. ii. 3. and 1 Cor. xi. 29.

Wherewith he was ſanctified.] From what is here ſaid, it is evident, that by being ſanctified is not meant being made holy ſo as not to be liable to fall back again into a ſtate of unholineſs: Nay, the Apoſtle is here plainly ſpeaking of one who, being ſanctified by baptiſm, actually falls back into a ſtate of ſin, and ſo becomes unholy. (Wells)

Vengeance belongeth.] See the notes on Rom. xii 19.

It is a fearful thing.] A much more "fearful thing, to fall into the hands of the living God," who as ſuch can eternally puniſh us, than into the hands of our perſecutors, who are but mortal men. (Wells) See the notes on Matth. x. 28. Luke xii. 5. and 2 Cor. v. 11.

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39. But call to remembrance the former days, in which after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions: Partly whilſt ye were made a gazing-ſtock, both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly whilſt ye became companions of them that were ſo uſed. For ye had compaſſion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the ſpoiling of your goods, knowing in your ſelves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring ſubſtance. Caſt not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward. For ye have need of patience; that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promiſe. For yet a little while, and he that ſhall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the juſt ſhall live by faith: But if any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the ſaving of the ſoul.

But call to remembrance.] Here the Apoſtle moves them to perſeverance; conſidering that they had ſtill the ſame motives, as at firſt to believe, and that without perſeverance all they had hitherto done and ſuffer'd would be of no advantage to them. (Wells) He does not mean the remembrance of what was bitter and afflictive in their ſufferings; but the cauſe for which they ſuffer'd, and the preſence of God enjoy'd by them in and under their ſufferings. (B.) See the notes on ver. 26. and ch. vi. 4, 9. Gal. iii. 4. and Phil. i. 7.

Great recompence of reward.] See the notes on ch. xi. 26. and 1 Cor. xv. 58.

Ye have need of patience.] And ſo have we! God help us. For, 1. We live here in a vale of miſery; where we meet with a thouſand petty croſſes and vexations, in the common road of our lives; poor things in themſelves, and, if rationally conſider'd, very trifles and vanity; yet able to bring vexation upon our impatient ſpirits; therefore we "have need of patience" to digeſt them. 2. We are ſurrounded with a world of temptations, aſſaulting us within and without, on every ſide, and at every turn; therefore we "have need of patience" to withſtand them. 3. We are expoſed to manifold injuries, obloquies, and ſufferings; many times without cauſe, it may be ſometimes for a good cauſe; therefore we "have need of patience" to bear them. We have many rich and precious promiſes made us in the word; of grace, of glory, and of outward things; of ſome of which we find as yet but ſlender performance, and of other ſome (but that we are ſure the anchor of our hope is ſo well fix'd that it can't fail) no viſible probability of their future performance; therefore we "have need of patience" to expect them. 5. We have many good duties requir'd to be done of us, in our Chriſtian callings, and in our particular vocations, for the honour of God, and the ſervice of our brethren; therefore we "have need of patience" to go through with them. 6. We have to converſe with men of different ſpirits and tempers; ſome hot, fiery, and furious, others flat, ſullen, and ſluggiſh; ſome unruly, ſome ignorant, ſome proud and ſcornful, ſome peeviſh and obſtinate, ſome toyiſh, fickle, and humourous; all ſubject to paſſions and infirmities in one kind or other; and therefore we "have need of patience," to frame our converſations to the weakneſſes of our brethren, and to tolerate what we cannot remedy; that, by helping to "bear one anothers burdens," we may "ſo fulfill the law of Chriſt," Gal. vi. 2. (Sanderſ.) "Ye have need of patience, (ſaith the Apoſtle) that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promiſe:" Patience firſt, in doing, yea, and ſuffering too, according to the will of God; and then, after that, but not before, the enjoying of the promiſe. (Idem) For the deſign of the Apoſtle here is to urge patience and perſeverance, from this conſideration, that the ſtate of a Chriſtian is a ſtate of faith, not of actual poſſeſſion. CHAP. XI.

A deſcription of faith, and what excellent fruits it hath produced in former times.

Ver, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. NOW faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen. For by it the elders obtained a good report. Through faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, ſo that things which are ſeen were not made of things which do appear. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent ſacrifice then Cain, by which he obtained witneſs, that he was righteous, God teſtifying of his gifts: And by it he being dead, yet ſpeaketh. By faith Enoch was tranſlated that he ſhould not ſee death; and was not found, becauſe God had tranſlated him: For before his tranſlation he had this teſtimony, that he pleaſed God. But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him: For he that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is; and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the ſaving of his houſe; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith. By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he ſhould after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he ſojourned in the land of promiſe, as in a ſtrange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Iſaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the ſame promiſe: For he looked for a city which hath foundation, whoſe builder and maker is God. Through faith alſo Sarah her ſelf received ſtrength to conceive ſeed, and was delivered of a child when ſhe was paſt age, becauſe ſhe judged him faithful who had promiſed. Therefore ſprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, ſo many as the ſtars of the ſky in multitude, and as the ſand which is by the ſea-ſhore innumerable. Theſe all died in faith, not having received the promiſes, but having ſeen them afar off, and were perſwaded of them, and embraced them, and confeſſed that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on the earth: For they that ſay ſuch things, declare plainly that they ſeek a country. And truly if they had been mindful of that country, from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned: But now they deſire a better country, that is, an heavenly; wherefore God is not aſhamed to be called their God: For he hath prepared for them a city. By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Iſaac: And he that had received the promiſes, offered up his only begotten Son: Of whom it was ſaid, That in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called: Accounting that God was able to raiſe him up, even from the dead; from whence alſo he received him in a figure. By faith Iſaac bleſſed Jacob and Eſau concerning things to come. By faith Jacob when he was dying, bleſſed both the ſons of Joſeph; and worſhipped leaning upon the top of his ſtaff. By faith Joſeph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Iſrael; and gave commandment concerning his bones. By faith Moſes, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, becauſe they ſaw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the kings commandment. By faith Moſes, when he was come to years, refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter; chuſing rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon; eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures in Egypt: For he had reſpect unto the recompence of reward. By faith he forſook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: For he endured, as ſeeing him who is inviſible. Through faith he kept the paſſover, and the ſprinkling of blood, leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born, ſhould touch them. By faith they paſſed through the Red-ſea, as by dry land: Which the Egyptians, aſſaying to do, were drowned. By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compaſſed about ſeven days. By faith the harlot Rahab periſhed not with them that believed not, when ſhe had received the ſpies with peace. And what ſhall I more ſay? For the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samſon, and of Jephtha, of David alſo and Samuel, and of the prophets: Who through faith ſubdued kingdoms, wrought righteouſneſs, obtained promiſes, ſtopped the mouths of lions: Quenched the violence of fire, eſcaped the edge of the ſword, out of weakneſs were made ſtrong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens.

aliens: Women received their dead raiſed to life again: And others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better reſurrection. And others had trial of cruel mockings and ſcourgings; yea moreover, of bonds and impriſonment: They were ſtoned, they were ſawn aſunder, were tempted, were ſlain with the ſword: They wandred about in ſheep-skins, and goats-skins, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented: (Of whom the world was not worthy) They wandred in deſerts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. And theſe all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promiſe: God having provided ſome better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not be made perfect.

Faith is the ſubſtance.] Hypoſtaſis; the ground and firm confidence, the conſtant expectation, aſſurance, and dependance upon the good things which God had promiſed. Such a faith, as is effectually uſeful in our whole life; eſpecially unto conſtancy and perſeverance in the Chriſtian profeſſion; which was the great duty urged in the foregoing chapter, and here further enforc'd by manifold examples. See Dr. Hammond's critique, and Mr. Rob. Dixon's doctrine of faith, &c. on this text, 1668. and the notes on ver. 2, &c. ch. i. 3. John xvi. 8. and xx. 29. Rom. viii 24. and x. 10. and 2 Cor. v. 7. and ix. 17.

By it the elders.] That is, by the efficacy and power of their faith, enabling them to ſuffer and obey, and to work miracles and great exploits. (Aſſ.) By it, or through it, as a condition appointed and ordained of God; not for it, or by the worth and influence of it, as a meritorious cauſe. (B.) See the notes on ver. 39.

The worlds were framed.] Here is an account of faith, in the ſtate of innocency. The creation of the world is the firſt article even of Adam's faith. Whoever once believes, that God made all things of nothing, can he poſſibly not believe all the reſt? (Q.) Yet Adam is not here named in the catalogue of the faithful worthies, becauſe of his ſin. (Dixon and B.) See the notes on ch. i. 2. John i. 2. and Rom. i. 20.

Things which are ſeen.] As the viſible world was made out of what appeared not formerly: So, all his other promiſes are accompliſh'd out of nothing ſeen for the preſent, but only by the eye of faith. (Oxf.) The old Heathens could never determine who made the world; nor when, nor how it was made; nor whence, and out of what it was made. Reaſon may propound the queſtion; but Revelation muſt reſolve it. (B.) And by this we learn, that matter is not eternal, as ſome philoſophers have taught; but that the creation was out of nothing. (Wall)

By faith Abel offered.] The hiſtory here referr'd to, is recorded in Gen. iv. And therein are to be obſerv'd, 1 The offering: 2. The acceptance of it: And, 3. Its effect with reſpect to us. i. As to the offering, three things are here declar'd, 1. That Abel offered ſacrifice unto God: 2. That it was "a more excellent ſacrifice than Cain's;" And, 3. That Abel's ſacrifice was offer'd by faith. Now, as to the firſt of theſe, it is obſervable, That the practice of ſacrificing was both ancient and univerſal: We are ſure, it began in the infancy of the world, ſoon after Adam's removal out of Paradiſe, if not before; and the uſe of it was continued amongſt all mankind, till the coming of Chriſt: But, how it came to obtain ſo univerſally, has been matter of ſome queſtion. It muſt be confeſs'd, That no law of nature was ever more univerſally receiv'd and practis'd, than this of ſacrifice: But, that it is owing to the light of nature alone, (as ſome ancient Chriſtians believ'd) cannot eaſily be granted; at leaſt as to bloody ſacrifices. For, I can't ſee, that nature ſhould teach us, that an offended Deity can be appeas'd by any means ſo diſproportionable to the nature of the offence; nor by what reaſon diſobedience to God's commands ſhould be atton'd for, by the death of creatures not at all concern'd in the tranſgreſſion: (And yet ſuch atonement was one great end of ſuch ſacrifices, as Dr. Outram has learnedly prov'd, from the concurrent opinions of Chriſtians, Jews, and Heathens.) For example, That Cain ſhould, by the dictate of nature, imagine, that the murder of his brother was to be forgiven, by a new cruelty ſhew'd in killing an ox or a ſheep! To believe, that God "would eat bull's fleſh, or drink the blood of goats," Pſa. l. 13. was too groſs for any who had a tolerable notion of the Deity: And to imagine, that the blood of a brute beaſt was an adequate commutation for any ſin againſt infinite purity, was a notion which could never enter into the minds of men, till the corruption was by time ſo diffus'd, that they came to be in the condition in which St. Paul deſcribes the Heathen world, Rom. i. 21, &c. If it be ask'd, How then came the univerſal practice of ſacrificing to obtain all the world over? I anſwer, that the univerſality of it is a demonſtration to me, that it proceeded from God himſelf. For, that ſacrifices ſhould have been perform'd before the flood, as the Scripture aſſures us; and that all mankind ſhould have combin'd together, to offer ſacrifices of one kind or other, in all places and all ages, when there is nothing in the nature of them, that can atone for ſin, is not to be imagin'd, but from ſome univerſal tradition, handed down, through all the poſterities of mankind, from their common father. Now, Noah was the laſt common father of the whole world: And from him undoubtedly the tradition was deriv'd. But it did not begin from him; for the Apoſtle mentions Abel and Cain, before the flood, who practis'd it alſo. And, how it came to be practis'd at all, ſeems to me to be thus. Upon the fall of Adam, infinite juſtice was offended, and mankind out of a poſſibility of being reconcil'd to God, if God himſelf had not provided an expedient to ſatisfy his juſtice, and yet to be merciful to fallen man, viz. By exacting the forfeiture from humane nature, in the perſon of the Meſſiah, then promiſed; and to make his own Son the ſacrifice to his juſtice, in the place of Adam and his poſterity, who could by no other method be reconcil'd to God. Upon this promiſe of a ſacrifice, to be made in due time, God himſelf undoubtedly taught Adam to offer ſacrifices, as types of the great ſacrifice to come. Nor is it to be thought, that both Cain and Abel, the one righteous, and the other wicked, ſhould have thus ſacrificed, without a Divine command. If this be allow'd, as I think it muſt, there is no difficulty of tranſmitting it to Noah: And if we allow, that all the world was peopled from him, (as we muſt do, till ſome of our ingenious Free-thinkers give us a better and more rational account of the origin of the world, than Moſes has) the practice, afterwards follow'd by all mankind, can be eaſily accounted for by tradition, however it was, by ignorance and ſuperſtition, corrupted afterwards. In a word, reaſon itſelf tells us, that this way of worſhip muſt have come from the firſt parents of mankind; for it will otherwiſe be next to an impoſſibility to ſhew, how it ſhould come to be the univerſal practice of all civilized nations. (Johnſ. and Barclay) 2. In order to explain the excellency here aſcrib'd to Abel's ſacrifice, more than to Cain's, we muſt take notice, That ſome people can hardly be perſwaded, that any thing deſerves the name of a ſacrifice, but ſome creature which hath life and blood; whereas the very firſt ſacrifice mention'd in Scripture was of "the fruit of the ground," Gen. iv. 3. and therefore conſiſted probably of corn, grapes, or ſuch like materials: St. Paul here expreſly calls this a ſacrifice; and the ancient Greek tranſlators (whoſe phraſes the writers of the New Teſtament do moſt commonly follow) almoſt perpetually gives the ſame title to offerings made of ſuch fruits, or of meal: Nay, St. Stephen, or St. Luke, or both, do give the name of ſacrifices to meal-offerings, and at the ſame time call the bloody oblations ſlain beaſts, Acts vii. 42. compared with Amos v. 25. as doth Chriſt himſelf alſo, according to St. Mark ix. 49. compar'd with Lev. ii. 13. In a word, both Moſes and St. Paul expreſs the offering made by Cain by the ſame word as they do that of Abel; and they were both equally ſacrifices, tho' not equally acceptable. The chief fault of Cain's ſacrifice was not that it conſiſted of fruit, but that it was not ſeaſon'd with faith: And the great commendation of Abel's ſacrifice was, not that it conſiſted of living creatures, but that it abounded in that quality which Cain's wanted. The learned Grotius aſſerts, that Abel's ſacrifice was an unbloody one. Our tranſlation indeed ſays, "Abel brought of the firſtlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof." But, by the firſtlings we may underſtand, not the firſt-born, or beſt of lambs, but the firſt-fruits, or products of it, that is, the milk; and the ſame Hebrew word, diverſly pointed, ſignifies both fat and milk. Accordingly, Joſephus, as well as Grotius, took it, in this place, for milk; that, being frequently offer'd by the Ancients. (Johnſ.) And, 3. The true reaſon of Abel's ſacrifice being accepted, was (as before intimated) becauſe he offered it by faith; to wit, by that faith, which "is the ſubſtance of things hoped for," ver. 1. that is, in firm expectation, and perſuaſion, that God would certainly reward thoſe who diligently endeavour to pleaſe him, either in this or the next world, ver. 6. (W.) Parallel to which is the faithful, conſtant Chriſtian now, who will part with all that is moſt precious, and ſuffer any thing, even the loſs of life itſelf for Chriſt's ſake. (H.) The next conſideration is, ii. As to the acceptance of Abel's offering; that is, how he is here ſaid to have "obtained witneſs that he was righteous, God teſtifying of his gifts:" That is, From this his faith it was, that God pronounced him a righteous perſon, and expreſs'd his approbation of his ſacrifice. (Idem and Maſſey) How that approbation was teſtified is matter of queſtion. The common opinion indeed is, That fire from heaven deſcended upon Abel's ſacrifice, and made it an acceptable burnt-offering, but did not touch that of Cain; In like manner as it deſcended on thoſe of Elijah, to the conviction of Baal's prophets, 1 Kings xviii. 38. and of Solomon, at the dedication of the temple, 2 Chron. vii. 1. Or elſe aſcended out of the altar on which it was offer'd, as in the ſacrifice of Gideon, Judg vi. 21. But this not being reveal'd in the word of God, it becomes not us to be too curious, but to reſt ſatisfied, that it did manifeſtly appear, tho' we do not certainly know the manner of it. (Babingt.)

Our main inquiry is to be, iii. As to its effect, with reſpect to us, How "he, being dead, yet ſpeaketh." Now, ſome underſtand this of Abel's blood crying for vengeance, ch. xii. 24. and Gen. iv. 10. Others, more probably, of his example, whereby he yet preacheth to the world for imitation. (Aſſ. and B.) For the virtue and the faith of the Saints ſpeak after their death to the ears of God, and their example to the ears of men. (Q.) He yet ſpeaketh, as it were declaring, 1. That God is a rewarder of the righteous, tho' they be perſecuted even to death for their righteouſneſs. (Wells) And, conſequently, 2. The certainty of a future judgment. and recompence at the reſurrection, when the righteous ſhall not go unrewarded; which even Abel himſelf muſt needs fail of, who was ſo quickly ſlain, after God's declar'd approbation of him, if he were not ſure to be rewarded in the other world. (W.) See Dr. Tho. Reeve's ſermon on this text, Jan. 30. 1660.

By faith Enoch.] This refers us to his hiſtory, Gen. v. 24, &c. Concerning whom we muſt obſerve the following particulars; 1. The different effects of faith, in Abel, and in Enoch: That of Abel, crown'd with a glorious death, and with the primacy itſelf of martyrdom, ſhews evidently the virtue of faith, upon earth; that of Enoch, being victorious over death without undergoing it, repreſents the reward which we are to expect for it in Heaven. (Q.) 2. That he "was tranſlated, that he ſhould not ſee death." Moſes ſays of him, That "he was not, for God took him:" Not ſimply, he was not in being, for he was the ſame after, which he was before, his tranſlation; but (according to the Targ. Jon.) he was not with the generations upon earth; he was not any longer with the children of men in this lower world; "for God took him," viz. unto himſelf; and that, as it ſeems, not the common way of death, but by an extraordinary tranſlation of him, as appears, Firſt, In that it is not ſaid of him, as of the reſt, that he died: Secondly, Onkelos, in his Chaldee paraphraſe, ſaith expreſly, "And he was not;" but God did not kill him: And Thirdly, The Apoſtle ſays here plainly, "That he ſhould not ſee death." (Bever.) 3. That this tranſlation was the fruit of his faith, by which he obtained "this teſtimony that he pleaſed God;" and therefore God could not take him from hence in diſpleaſure, but out of favour to him. (W.) 4. That the Lord did this to him (as afterwards to Elijah) to give us ſome ſign of the reſurrection to a better life prepar'd, and to be a teſtimony of the immortality of ſouls and bodies; their bodies being changed, as the Apoſtle ſays, all ours ſhall be, when corruptible ſhall put on incorruption, and mortal immortality, and as they who are alive at the Lord's coming ſhall be changed. (Babingt.) 5. That this tranſlation of Enoch, who was neither circumciſed, nor kept the ſabbath, ſatisfieth us, that we may pleaſe God without the works of the Law. (Parker) But, 6. As to his preſent ſtate, or place of reſidence, St. Chryſoſtome, and Theodoret, decline it, as a preſumptuous curioſity to inquire into. (Alley, Babingt. and Park.) Our buſineſs is not to inquire, how Enoch was changed, but how he liv'd; not how God took him, but how he pleaſed God. (Bever.) For, 7. "Before his tranſlation he had this teſtimony, that he pleaſed God." Now, this teſtimony is probably, that recorded in Scripture, Gen. iv. 24. that he "walked with God:" Or elſe, it may be ſuppoſed, that God did, by ſome more than ordinary means, teſtify ſo much of him, as he did of Abel's ſacrifice. (Aſſ. and Oxf.) That phraſe of "walking with God," (which the Apoſtle here calls pleaſing God) doth ſometimes ſignify to obey and ſerve, to reverence and fear the living God: And, by the way, if godly men be ſaid to "walk with God," with whom then do the ungodly walk? (Babingt.) Certainly, what was Enoch's teſtimony, ought to be our duty; and what God commands in one, he commands in all: And therefore the teſtimony concerning Enoch may be turned into this doctrine, that it is every one's duty to pleaſe God. (Bever.) 8. That tho' there is no expreſs mention made in the Old Teſtament, of the faith either of Enoch, or Abel, and divers others; yet the Apoſtle infers it from this argument; Enoch pleaſed God: "But without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him;" Therefore Enoch had faith; and that was the inſtrumental cauſe of his pleaſing God, and conſequently of his being tranſlated by him: That is, He was by faith brought into that ſtate and condition of favour and acceptance with God, as to have this peculiar privilege conferr'd upon him. (H. B. and Keith) And, 9. Here are ſet forth two immoveable ſupports of the ſoul in the greateſt extremities; 1. That there is a God: And, 2. That he being juſt, it is impoſſible that thoſe who ſerve him ſhould be for ever abandon'd to the power of the wicked, and not be ſooner or later rewarded for their fidelity. (Q.) But then, Laſtly, we muſt obſerve, That the reward here depended upon, is not to be of our merit but God's mercy. (Aſſ.) See Mr. G. Keith's ſermon on this text 1707. and the notes on ver. 1, &c. ch. vii. 25. and x. 22. Rom. iv. 4. 1 Cor. iv. 5. and xv. 51. 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Eph. iii. 17. 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. and Jude 14.

By faith Noah.] This refers to the hiſtory of Noah, recorded at large by Moſes, in Gen. vi. and the following chapters: Concerning whom theſe ſeveral particulars are here taken notice of; 1. That he was "warned of God of things not ſeen as yet;" that is, Concerning his deſign and purpoſe to drown and deſtroy the whole world. 2. The effect of this warning: Being "moved with fear, he prepared an ark to the ſaving of his houſe." It produced in him fear and obedience: Fear of the threatning, and obedience to the command. So that neither the difficulty of the work, nor the length of time, (being 120 years, Gen. vi. 3.) nor his want of ſucceſs all that time of his preaching, nor the contempt and ſcorn caſt upon him by the world, could weaken his hands, or diſcourage his heart, from proceeding in it. 3. The motive to all this, was his faith. 4. The conſequent of it; Not only "the ſaving of his houſe," but the "condemnation of the world:" And this, not as a judge, properly and authoritatively, but as a witneſs, by plea and teſtimony; he condemn'd it by his doctrine and example, and ſo left it altogether without excuſe. And 5. The fruit and effect of it with reſpect to himſelf: He became heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith;" that is, the ſole ſurviving heir to the title and benefits of the righteouſneſs which is acquired by faith. (Aſſ. H. Oxf. W. B. and Wells) To which I may add, 6. That the fathers ſay, the flood was a type of the end of the world; the ark a type of the Church; Noah of Chriſt; and his ſmall family of the few good and faithful ſervants, &c. (Park.) And 7. As there was only one ark, out of which all periſh'd; ſo there is only one Church, out of which there is no (promiſe of) ſalvation. (Q.) See Mr. S. Parker's learned diſſertations concerning Noah's ark, &c. and the notes on ver. 1. Rom. i. 17. and iii. 22. and 1 Pet. iii. 20.

By faith Abraham.] The hiſtory of Abraham is recorded at large by Moſes, Gen. xi. 26. and ſeveral chapters there next following: But all that we are here immediately referr'd to by the Apoſtle, is with reſpect to his eminent faith; of which theſe illuſtrious inſtances are taken notice of; 1. That "when he was called to go ———, he went out, not knowing whither he went:" Which is largely expatiated upon, in St. Stephen's apology, recorded by St. Luke, Acts vii 3, &c. and referr'd to alſo by our Apoſtle, Rom. iv. 1, &c. 2. That "he ſojourned in the land of promiſe, as in a ſtrange country:" For God gave him for the preſent "none inheritance in it, no not ſo much as to ſet his foot on;" as St. Stephen expreſſes it, in the place before cited: Both which particulars are ſufficiently explain'd already in our notes on thoſe texts, and Gal. iv. 22, &c. But the Apoſtle here ſubjoins, 3. The ground of this faith of Abraham, which ſupported him under all his extraordinary difficulties, and enabled him to reſt contented with the promiſe which was not to be fulfill'd long after his time, viz. "He looked for a city which hath foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God; or rather, according to the original, the city, which hath, the foundations; that is, the new Jeruſalem, mention'd Rev. xxi. (Maſſey) He placed his hope and comfort, not in enjoying the cities of Canaan, but in the certainty of his future enjoyment of heaven; that firm and enduring city, here oppoſed to tents and tabernacles, which had no foundations; and which would amply reward all his obedience, tho' he had no other reward to receive in this life. (Aſſ. H. Oxf. B. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 17. ch. ix. 11. 2 Cor. v. 1. and the other notes here cited.

Through faith alſo Sarah.] This inſtance of Sarah is remarkable, 1. In that ſhe "received ſtrength to conceive ſeed, and was delivered of a child when ſhe was paſt age." Her hiſtory tells us, Gen. xi. 30. that ſhe "was barren:" But, ch. xvii. 17. when ſhe was "ninety years old," and there was no hopes of her bearing a child, according to the courſe of nature; God promiſed Abraham, that ſhe "ſhould bear unto him a ſon at the ſet time in the next year," ver. 21. which was ſoon after repeated in her own hearing, ch. xviii. 10. Accordingly, ch. xxi. 2. "Sarah conceived, and bare Abraham a ſon in his old age, at the ſet time which God had ſpoken to him:" Whereby was verified what was ſaid, ch. xviii. 14. that nothing is "too hard for the Lord." And this miraculous conception and birth are here aſcribed by the Apoſtle to the faith of Sarah herſelf, no leſs than to that of her husband; becauſe, 2. "She judged him faithful who had promiſed." 'Tis true, "Sarah laughed within herſelf," when ſhe heard the promiſe made, Gen. xviii. 12. And ſo did Abraham alſo, ch. xvii. 17. But, as St. Auſtin underſtands that of Abraham, as not expreſſing a doubt, but only his ſurprize and wonder; ſo does Clemens of Alexandria underſtand that of Sarah in the like manner. (Park.) Be that as it will, 'tis plain, ſhe firmly believed; and the Apoſtle therefore makes honourable mention of that, and ſays nothing of the other. (B.) For ſhe had no ground to believe this, or hope it poſſible, but that God had promiſed it; and ſhe was confident he would not break his promiſe but perform it. (H.) See the notes on Rom. iv. 19.

Theſe all died in faith.] That is, (ſay Whitby and Burkitt) all the foremention'd ſaints, Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham and Sarah. But 'tis more reaſonable to underſtand it (as the Aſſembly-men, Hammond, the Oxford-Annotator, and Wells do) of Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac and Jacob. For to theſe doth porperly belong what is ſaid, in this and the three following verſes; but but not ſo to Abel, Enoch, or Noah: See the notes on ch. xiii. 14. John viii. 56. Acts vii. 32. 1 Cor. ii. 9. and 2 Cor. v. 1, &c. and Phil. iii. 20.

By faith Abraham.] This wonderful trial of Abraham's faith is recorded by Moſes, Gen. xxii. And the ſhort account of it given us here offers to our conſideration, 1. How Abraham "was tried." His faith was tried, whether he would depend upon God's promiſe, above reaſon; his obedience was tried, whether he would yield to God's command, againſt nature; his love was tried, whether his affection was not more warm towards his ſon than to his God; and his fear was tried, whether he did reverentially acknowledge and ſtand in awe of God, by adoring his ſovereignty and dominion over him. (B.) And what a moving melancholy climax is here! How was each word a dagger to his heart! Thy ſon muſt die upon my altar! Yea, Thy only ſon! Even the ſon of my promiſe; and the ſon of thy love! "Thy ſon, thine only ſon, Iſaac, whom thou loveſt!" Him ſhalt thou take and "offer for a burnt-offering;" but not till thou haſt undergone the dreadful agonies of a three days journey to the place appointed! And all this too to be done by thine own hand at laſt! What a dreadful gradation is this! It looks as if the Deity had intended to aggravate the ſeverity of the command, by the manner in which he utters it. 'Tis one of the moſt violent conflicts, in which human nature can well be engaged; and it would be natural for a man to have recourſe to every conſideration that could poſſibly ſoften and mitigate ſuch an order. (Babingt. Park. B. and Humphreys) 2. How readily Abraham obey'd. We read not of the leaſt demurr or delay on his part; but he "roſe up early in the morning," and ſet out towards "the place of which God had told him," Gen. xxii. 3 and there (as the Apoſtle expreſſes it, he "offered up Iſaac:" That is, in the eſteem of God, who takes the will for the deed, he did the ſame as if he had actually offer'd him up. Almighty God is the abſolute Lord of life and death; ſo that what he gives he may take again, how, and whenſoever, he pleaſes, without injury to any one. He could therefore as juſtly command Abraham to ſlay his ſon, as appoint any diſtemper to diſpatch him. Had Abraham done that indeed, without the command of God, he had been guilty of murder; but having the command of God for his warrant, that clears him from all imputation. (Babingt. Aſſ. H. W. B. Wells, Johnſ. and Fox) And this readineſs of Abraham's obedience, is a demonſtration, that God had reveal'd his will to him in ſome ſuch a plain manner, as left him no room to doubt that God himſelf had ſpoken to him. (Humphr.) 3. The ground of this his ready obedience; to wit, his faith; "accounting that God was able to raiſe him up, even from the dead; from whence alſo he received him in a figure:" Which laſt clauſe may be fairly underſtood either of Abraham's receiving Iſaac alive from off the altar on which he had offer'd him, in order to ſacrifice him; which was deſign'd by God to prefigure the reſurrection of Chriſt, after he ſhould be actually ſlain on the altar of the croſs: Or elſe, as a pledge or motive to ſtrengthen Abraham's faith in this extremity; remembering that he had at firſt receiv'd him, as it were, from the dead; being begotten and born of aged parents, who were in that reſpect dead, as to the ordinary courſe of procreation. (Aſſ. H. Oxf. Tillotſ. W. Wells, Wall, and Parker) To which I ſhall only add, 4. That when we conſider Iſaac, at leaſt three and thirty years of age at that time, and conſequently able to have reſiſted his aged father, now alone with him, (Howel's hiſt. Bib.) and yet paſſively expoſing his own life to the laſt extremity, without the leaſt regard to ſelf-defence; the caſe of this eminent patriarch is a ſingular pattern of non-reſiſtance to authority, and may ſufficiently expoſe the abſurdity of thoſe modern caſuiſts, who aſſert, That becauſe the relation of children to a parent ariſes out of his conveying being to them, if he goes about to deſtroy that being, they are acquitted when they defend themſelves; and preſume further to conclude, in general, That in all relations, where the foundation is taken away, the relation and obligations ariſing out of it are deſtroy'd. For 'tis plain, Iſaac himſelf did not think ſo; and yet, if ever any, he muſt have thought himſelf acquitted in ſuch reſiſtance: But he ſignaliz'd his love of duty, above his own life; for which he is deſervedly extoll'd by the Primitive Fathers, as chuſing to be a martyr, rather than a rebel. See the notes on ver. 12. Rom. iv. 17, &c. and ix. 7. and 2 Cor. viii. 12.

By faith Iſaac.] This refers to Gen. xxvii. 27, &c. Wherein we are to obſerve, that there is a bleſſing by way of prayer, and a bleſſing by way of prophecy, foretelling what good things ſhall happen to perſons in time to come. Of which latter ſort is the bleſſing here ſpoken of; the patriarchs being, in a peculiar manner, directed and guided by God; and their bleſſing a conferring of a right to the parties bleſſed. (B.) How properly Iſaac is here ſaid to have bleſſed Jacob by faith, tho' for ſome time he miſtook him for Eſau, is fairly accounted for by Dr. Hammond on this text.

By faith Jacob.] This has been commonly thought to refer to Gen. xlvii. 31. where the Septuagint verſion reads it, proſekyneſen epi to acron tes rhabdou autou, which are the words we here tranſlate "worſhipped, leaning upon his ſtaff." But the Apoſtle alludes not to that tranſaction, when Joſeph at his father's requeſt, ſware to bury him with his anceſtors, on which occaſion (as we tranſlate it from the Hebrew) "Iſrael bowed himſelf upon the bed's head:" But the paſſage here before us plainly refers to his next viſit, in the following chapter, where we read that Joſeph brought with him his two ſons, Manaſſeh and Ephraim, whom Iſrael bleſſed, Gen. xlviii. 1, &c. In the former caſe, the old patriarch ſeems to have kept his bed, and then he might well "bow himſelf upon the bed's head," as a civil acknowledgement of his ſon's kindneſs: But in this caſe, when Joſeph came again, "Iſrael ſtrengthened himſelf, and ſat upon the bed," tho' leaning perhaps upon his ſtaff; and the Apoſtle mentions this circumſtance, to intimate the ſtrength of Jacob's faith, even when he was ſo weak, as not to be able to bow himſelf, as an act of worſhip, at his bleſſing the children, without the help of his ſtaff. Beſides, if we conſider, that the Hebrew word meta ſignifies both a bed and a ſtaff, the different readings will be eaſily accounted for.

By faith Joſeph.] This alludes evidently to Gen. l. 24, 25. where he manifeſted his faith touching God's promiſe, as his dying father did before. And Mr. Burkitt pertinently remarks, That the Papiſts plea from this caſe, for paying veneration to relicks, is weak and contemptible. For the commandment which Joſeph gave his brethren "concerning his bones," was only in order to their being buried; which is far enough from authorizing the practice of digging mens bones out of their graves, enſhrining them, and placing them upon altars, carrying them in proceſſion, adoring them, and aſcribing miraculous operations to them. See the notes on Acts vii. 15.

By faith Moſes —— his parents.] This is recorded in Exod. ii. And the faith here aſcribed to them, was probably grounded upon ſome particular revelation; or, at leaſt, on God's general providence. (Aſſ. and W.) And their not being afraid to diſobey the King's commandment, is commendable only becauſe that command was in itſelf unlawful. See the notes on Acts vii. 20.

By faith Moſes.] Here are ſeveral particular inſtances of the faith of Moſes himſelf. 1. His "refuſing to be called the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter;" with the motives and reaſons for ſuch his ſelf-denial: 2. His "forſaking Egypt:" 3. His "keeping the paſſover:" And 4. His conducting the children of Iſrael, when "they paſſed through the Red-ſea, as by dry land." And, 1. He is here ſaid (arneiſthai) to have "refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter;" in conſequence of which he alſo refuſed the crown of Egypt, to which he was adopted and deſigned the heir: Which refuſal is not neceſſary to be expreſs'd in words, if it be ſufficiently declar'd by actions; as it is uſed here, as well as 2 Tim. iii. 5. Tit. i. 16. Jude 4. and elſewhere. Joſephus tells us (as a thing generally believ'd among the Jews of his time) That the princeſs Thermutis, having no child of her own, preſented Moſes (whom ſhe had adopted) to the king her father; who taking him in his arms with much affection, plac'd his crown upon the child's head; which he, inſtead of being pleas'd with it, caſt upon the ground, and ſtamp'd his foot upon it: But this being only the action of a child, ſeems not properly to be the refuſal which the Apoſtle here aſcribes to his faith. It ſeems therefore more reaſonable to refer this text to his following conduct; when he retired from Pharaoh's court, and aſſociated himſelf with his countrymen, who were then poor bondmen, labouring hard at the brick-kilns, and choſe to take his lot of ſuffering among them, Exod. ii. 11. And this he did "when he was come to years," as the Apoſtle here expreſſes it; or according to St. Stephen's account of it, "when he was full forty years old," Acts vii. 23. (Alley, W. B. and Humphr.) And, as to the ground of this his ſelf-denial, (upon which Mr. Burkitt's obſervations are alſo very juſt, and memorable) we find it was, becauſe "he had reſpect unto the recompenſe of reward:" That is, to a ſpiritual and heavenly reward; for he neither came into the earthly Canaan; nor could he expect any greater temporal bleſſing than he might have enjoy'd in Egypt, which he forſook. (W.) Which, as well as moſt other inſtances in this chapter, are fitted to encourage the perſecuted Hebrew-Chriſtians to perſevere in their profeſſion by faith, believing and looking for the reſt and reward to come. (Oxf.) For it is not only permiſſively lawful, or an indulgence allow'd unto the infirmity of weak believers; but it is likewiſe neceſſary for the moſt eminent Saints, to ſtrengthen and ſupport themſelves in their difficulties, by a ſpecial and particular regard "to the recompence of reward;" as Bp. Wilkins has well prov'd in a ſermon on this text. 2. The next inſtance of Moſes his faith here applauded is, That "he forſook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king;" that is, of Pharaoh, when he purſued him, Exod xiv. 13. as Dr. Whitby, moſt probably, explains it: And the ground of this is here ſubjoyn'd, that "he endured, as ſeeing him who is inviſible;" that is, he ſaw him by faith, whom he could not ſee by ſenſe; he ſaw him in his omnipreſence, power and faithfulneſs, and had a fixed truſt in him, at all times, and on all occaſions. (B.) 3. That "he kept the paſſover, and the ſprinkling of blood:" The former, with reſpect to its Divine inſtitution, the command for its continual obſervance, the ſacramental nature of it, and the myſtical or typical ſignification of it; and the latter alſo with reſpect to its myſtical ſignification, viz. That unleſs we are ſprinkled with the blood of Chriſt, our Paſchal Lamb, no other privilege can ſecure us from deſtruction. (Idem) And, 4. That he, and the Iſraelites under his conduct, “paſſed through the Red-ſea, as by dry land; which the Egyptians eſſaying to do were drowned:” And the like faith will now ſecure the conſtant ſufferers, while their perſecutors are overwhelm'd and deſtroy'd, by the ſame means which gives them deliverance. (H.) See the notes on ver. 6. ch. xii. 2. and xiii. 13. John i. 18. Acts vii. 21, &c. Rom. iv. 4. 1 Cor. x. 1. Gal. vi. 17. and Col. i. 15.

By faith the walls.] This is a like inſtance of faith in Joſhua, and the Iſraelites under his conduct; who, by means moſt improbable in their own nature, gain'd an entrance into the land of promiſe, through the ſtrong fort of Jericho, without ſtroke ſtruck, or ſword drawn againſt it; viz. only by marching round it ſeven times in ſeven days, in obedience to God's command, as it is related Joſh. vi.

By faith the harlot Rahab.] This inſtance is alſo taken from the ſame book of Joſhua; where we read the particulars here referr'd to, viz. 1. A deſcription of the woman, by her name and occupation; an harlot, who kept an houſe of entertainment, or inn, in Jericho, ch. ii. 1, &c. 2. Her faith declared; that when the ſpies, ſent thither by Joſhua, were in danger to be taken in her houſe, ſhe hid them, and diverted the purſuers another way, declaring her firm belief in God's power and providence, &c. And, 3. The happy fruits of this her faith; that when the reſt of the people of Jericho were deſtroy'd, ſhe “periſhed not with them that believed not,” but was preſerv'd, with all that belong'd to her, ch. vi. 17, &c.

And what ſhall I more ſay?] Here the Apoſtle ſums up the remaining teſtimonies briefly, to ſhew, that it was faith which made Gideon ſucceſsful over the Midianites, Judg. vi. 11, &c. Barak over the Canaanites, ch. iv. 6, &c. Sampſon and Samuel over the Philiſtines, ch. xiii. 24, &c. and 1 Sam. vii. 10. Jephthah over the Ammonites, Judg. xi. 1, &c. David over Goliah, 1 Sam. xvii. 4, &c. and divers other enemies; and which alſo encourag'd Samuel, and the reſt of the Prophets, to depend upon God's protection in the doing their duty. This their faith enabled ſome to “ſubdue kingdoms;” as did Joſhua particularly, and David, and others: To “work righteouſneſs;” as well by executing God's righteous judgments on the unbelievers, as by doing what elſe was righteous themſelves: To “obtain promiſes,” that is, the good things promiſed; as Abraham by faith obtained the promiſed ſon; Joſhua the promiſed Canaan; and David the promiſed kingdom, &c. tho' their faith was ſometimes put to a long and hard exerciſe: To “ſtop the mouths of lions;” as did Sampſon, Judg. xiv. 5. David, 1 Sam. xvii. 34. and Daniel; Dan. vi. 22. To “quench the violence of fire;” as did Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, Dan. iii. 15. To “eſcape the edge of the ſword;” as did David thoſe of Goliah and Saul, 1 Sam. xvii. 26, &c. and xviii. 10, &c. the Jews that of Haman, Eſth. ix. 1, &c. Elijah that of Jezabel, 1 Kings xix. 1, &c. and Micajah that of Ahab, ch. xxii. 26, &c. “Out of weakneſs to become ſtrong;” as did Gideon, Judg. vii. 9. Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 7. and Iſa. xxxviii. 9. and Job, ch. xlii. 13. To “wax valiant in fight;” as did Joſhua, Gideon, Barak, Jephtha, David, Jonathan, and others; who, through faith in God, feared neither the number nor the ſtrength of their enemies: To “turn to flight the armies of the aliens;” that is, of their foreign enemies: And the like faith prevail'd with God, ſo that even weak “women received their dead raiſed to life again;” as in the caſes of the widow at Zarephath, 1 Kings xvii. 22. and the Shunemite, 2 Kings iv. 20, &c. From all which we may learn, That there is nothing too difficult, when undertaken through faith in God's promiſes, and executed according to his command. (Aſſ. H. Oxf. B. and Wells)

Others were tortured,] In the foregoing verſes the Apoſtle had reckon'd up what great things faith had enabled the Saints to do; and here he mentions what it had enabled them to ſuffer; ſpecifying the ſharpeſt and bittereſt afflictions which human nature perhaps can be expoſed to: But, to do the greateſt things, and to ſuffer the hardeſt, is equally eaſy to faith. Thus, ſome “were tortured, not accepting deliverance;” which is generally thought to refer to the caſe of old Eleazar, mention'd 2 Macc. vi. 18, &c. and that of the ſeven brethren and their mother, there alſo mention'd, ch. vii. 1, &c. in which there is expreſs mention of their faith in a reſurrection: Tho' (as Bp. Coſin, on the canon of the Scripture, ſect. xl. has fairly prov'd) theſe words of the Apoſtle may as reaſonably be underſtood of the ſufferings of ſome of the Chriſtians in his own time, under the New Teſtament. However, 'tis certain, the Apoſtle there mentioning theſe caſes only as hiſtorical facts, without ſo much as quoting the books of the Maccabees, is far enough from giving thoſe Apocryphal books the authority of Holy Scripture, as the Papiſts do. “Others had trials of cruel mockings;” as Micajah, and others, 1 Kings xxii. 24. “and ſcourgings;” as Jeremiah, ch. xx. 7. and xxxvii. 15. “Yea, moreover, of bonds and impriſonments; as Joſeph in Egypt, Gen. xxxix. 20. Sampſon in Gaza, Judg. xvi. 21. and Jeremy in the dungeon, Jerem. xxxvi. 15. So that for theſe alſo there is no need to refer to the Maccabees, as many do. “They were ſtoned;” as Zechariah, the ſon of Jehoiada, 2 Chron. xxiv. 21. “They were ſawn aſunder;” which is generally interpreted of Iſaiah, tho' the Scripture mentions it not: “Were tempted,” viz. with fair promiſes, and great rewards; but refuſing thoſe, “were ſlain with the ſword,” (ſay Burkitt and Wells; and ſo does Heinſius alſo ſeem to take it:) But, inſtead of (epeiraſtheſan) tempted, Hammond, and the Oxford Annotator read it (epyraſtheſan) burnt with hot irons, as a ſtill greater gradation in the tortures here ſpecified; the reaſon of which, Whitby alſo approves, tho' he rather thinks the word epeiraſtheſan to have been unſkilfully written for epriſtheſan (ſawn aſunder) and by degrees to have been inſerted after it, contrary to the acknowledged reading of the Ancients. “They wandred about, in deſerts and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented:” Which may be referr'd particularly, to Elijah, Ezekiel, and John the Baptiſt, &c. but has been the portion of many of God's faithful ſervants, under perſecutions, in all ages. “Of whom the world was not worthy:” That is, Tho' the men of the world think the Saints of God not worthy to live among them, the world indeed is not worthy of ſuch excellent company; and therefore, ſo ſoon as their work is done, God removes them. See the notes on ver. 26. ch. x. 32, &c. Acts xxii. 25. and xxvi. 6. and 1 Cor. iv. 13.

And theſe all.] The Apoſtle here makes an obſervation from his foregoing enumeration; in which we are to take notice, 1. That theſe all is not to be underſtood of the forementioned worthies only, excluſive of others; but of all the Saints who liv'd from the beginning of the world, in the faithful expectation of the Meſſiah, promiſed, Gen. iii. 15. 2. Their “having obtained a good report through faith,” alludes to the teſtimony, recorded in Holy Scripture, that by their faith they pleaſed God; as in ver. 2, &c. 3. Their “not receiving the promiſe” is not to be underſtood ſtrictly of the promiſe itſelf, but of the actual exhibition of the promiſe; that is, Chriſt, the promiſed Meſſiah: The promiſe was made by God to the elders from the beginning; tho' not accompliſh'd till the fulneſs of time: But they, being firmly perſuaded of the truth of it, embracing it with a longing deſire for the accompliſhment of it, thus enjoy'd the benefit of it as well as we. 4. The “better thing,” here ſaid to be provided for us by God, is the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh; which they ſaw a far off, but we enjoy at hand. And, 5. That by the end and deſign of God in ſo doing, “that they, without us, ſhould not be made perfect,” we may underſtand, That God never intended, that the infant condition of the Church ſhould be made perfect before the coming of Chriſt; that is, that they ſhould be juſtified and ſaved by the ſacrifices and ſervices done in their time, but by looking through faith to the ſacrifice and ſatisfaction of Chriſt, whereby both they and we are perfected. See the notes on ver. 13. ch. viii. 6. John viii. 56. and Acts i. 7.

C H A P. XII.

Inferences drawn from the foregoing arguments; with further motives to patience and perſeverance in the faith.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. WHerefore, ſeeing we alſo are compaſſed about with ſo great a cloud of witneſſes, let us lay aſide every weight and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us, and let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us, looking unto Jeſus the author and finiſher of our faith; who for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God. For conſider him that endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, leſt ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

Wherefore, ſeeing we alſo.] Now the Apoſtle comes to make an application of his diſcourſe; and the particle wherefore ſhews the reaſon, why he had recited the example of Saints in the foregoing chapter, viz. That we ſhould follow them, in “running the race that is ſet before us:” For, if they ſo conſtantly kept the faith, much more ſhould we do ſo, “God having provided better things for us.” (Aſſ. and Foſbr.) There is ſcarce any other provocation, to the performance of any duty, ſo prevalent with men, as are the examples of ſuch as have perform'd the ſame before them with glory and ſucceſs: Becauſe, beſides that the ſame ſtirreth up in them an emulation of their glory, and cheareth them on with hopes of like ſucceſs; it alſo clean taketh off that, which is the common excuſe of ſloth and neglect of duty, the pretence of impoſſibility. (Foſbr.) The Apoſtle therefore gives us, in the foregoing chapter, a large account of the ſtrong faith and ſufferings of holy men; and in this not only by their examples, but alſo by that of Chriſt himſelf, exhorts and animates us to patience and conſtancy, conſidering what he ſuffer'd and endured for us. (Knaggs) Wherein we are to conſider, 1. The exhortation, "Let us run the race that is ſet before us." 2. The circumſtances enforcing it, viz. 1. An inducement or motive; "Seeing that we are compaſſed with ſo great a cloud of witneſſes." 2. A direction how to prepare for the performance of the duty; "Laying aſide every weight, and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us." And, 3. The manner how we are to run this race; "With patience." (Foſbr.) See the ſeveral ſermons of Bp. Andrews, Bp. Sanderſon, and Dr. Frank, Mr. Foſbroke, in 1633. T. B. in 1643. and Archbiſhop Laud's on the Scaffold, 1644. all on this text; and the notes here next following.

A cloud of witneſſes.] Meaning a multitude. Some are of opinion, 1. That the Apoſtle here alludes to that cloud, whereby the children of Iſrael were guided, Exod. xiii. 21, viz. That, as that cloud guided the Iſraelites from Egypt to the land of Canaan; ſo this company of the faithful may direct us all, the right way, from the kingdom of darkneſs, to the ſpiritual Canaan, the kingdom of heaven; and that too, even in the darkeſt night of our ſorrows and ſufferings, in the wilderneſs of this world. (Aſſ. Foſbr. and B.) 2. They are here called witneſſes, becauſe they bear witneſs to us of this great truth, That faith will carry believers ſafely through all they may be call'd to do and ſuffer, in the profeſſion of the Goſpel. (B.) Tho' they may alſo be properly ſo call'd, becauſe, when the Lord ſhall come to judgment, they ſhall again encompaſs us, and witneſs for us, if we follow their ſteps; or elſe againſt us, if we do not ſo. (Foſbr. and Q.)

Lay aſide every weight.] The Apoſtle ſpeaking here metaphorically, with alluſion to thoſe who run races, the terms he uſes muſt be underſtood according to the cuſtom of thoſe exerciſes. Thus, as it is neceſſary for him who would win the prize, to "lay aſide every weight," and make himſelf as light as poſſible; ſo, he who runs the race to heaven muſt lay aſide, and leave behind him every ſin, and ſinful affection, which will otherwiſe entangle him, and prevent his reaching the goal. That this is the weight here ſpoken of, there is no room for doubt. Agreeably to which, "the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us," muſt be underſtood of ſin which cleaves to our affections, like a long garment wrapt about us, and ſo hinders the running of our Chriſtian race. For it is either our affection to, and our deſire of, what we ought not to deſire or affect at all, or which we ought not comparatively to affect or deſire, which gives the riſe and prevalence to all temptations to ſin, and renders ſelf-denial ſo exceeding difficult: He therefore requires us to put off this ſin, as racers did their garments; running naked, ſo that without hindrance we may run our Chriſtian race. See the notes on Luke xiv. 16, &c Rom. vi. 6, 12, &c. vii. 23. xii. 2. and xiii. 14. 1 Cor. vii. 31. 2 Cor. xii. 7. Phil. i. 30. iii. 8, 14. 1 Tim. vi. 12. and 2 Tim iv. 7.

And let us run.] That Chriſtianity is a race, and heaven the goal, and that we all are to run the race, is a known allegory; and that every one who runs a race does not obtain the prize, is plain to every body. Now the Apoſtle here inſtructs us in the manner of our running, ſo that we may not fail of the end, viz. That, being directed by the word of God, encouraged by the cloud of witneſſes, and prepar'd by removing all impediments, the race muſt be "run with patience:" For this will teach us to preſs through all difficulties, even with joy. Indeed, when we caſt our eyes upon the manifold troubles, croſſes, afflictions, and enemies, we are to encounter in the way, our ſpirits will be apt to faint and droop within us: But if we lift up our eyes from the earth towards Heaven, looking with faith unto Jeſus calling us, the Spirit aſſiſting, the Father bleſſing, the Angels comforting, the Word directing, and the Crown inviting us, it will enable us not only patiently, but joyfully to run this race. And therefore the Apoſtle ſubjoins this motive, to ſtir us up to patience, in the verſe following. See the notes on ch. x. 36. Luke xvii. 32. Rom. xii. 12. 1 Cor. ix. 24. Gal. v. 7. and 2 Tim. ii. 12.

Looking unto Jeſus.] Aphorontes eis, the original phraſe here, is not expreſs'd with an emphaſis ſtrong enough by our tranſlators. For in this phraſe there are two prepoſitions, (apo) from, as well as (eis) to; the one ſignifying the turning away our eyes from other things, and the other a fixing them ſtedfaſtly upon one alone. Thus, in our Chriſtian race, we muſt take off our minds from every thing which might divert and diſcourage us, and fix them upon Jeſus Chriſt for our imitation; that is, upon him, before and above all others: For tho' it is not amiſs (nay, is by the Apoſtle himſelf, in the foregoing chapter, recommended to us) to look upon other good mens examples for our imitation; yet Chriſt alone is to be follow'd abſolutely, others no farther than they are followers of him. (Aſſ. and Leigh) And this of Chriſt Jeſus is not only recommended to their conſideration, from the completeneſs of the perſon, (the Alpha and the Omega, the giver of the law, at the ſtart, and the giver of the prize at the goal) "the author and finiſher of our faith;" but it is alſo farther amplified, 1. From the moſt grievous things which he ſuffer'd; torture and ignominy, the croſs and the ſhame: 2. From the manner of his ſuffering; not only patiently, enduring, but alſo ſtoutly, deſpiſing them: 3. From the iſſue and conſequents of his ſufferings; joy for the pain, and glory for the ſhame: And all this to intimate to us, That as "it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer (firſt, and after that) to enter into his glory," Luke xxiv. 26. ſo, if we deſire to come to the ſame end he did, and to reign with him, we muſt reſolve to take the ſame way he did, and to ſuffer with him. (Sanderſ. and B.) For, if the world, which roſe up againſt Jeſus Chriſt, permitted us to be at quiet, we ſhould have reaſon to fear, that we did not follow his ſteps, and that we were too acceptable to the world: But when we ſuffer for doing our duty, the remembrance of our bleſſed Saviour's own ſufferings is a powerful ſupport under our own. (Q.) As to the expreſſion, archegon kai teleioten tes piſteos, which we tranſlate "the author and finiſher of our faith," it is hardly to be doubted, but it has reference to the like expreſſion, ch. ii. 10. where it is render'd "the captain of our ſalvation:" For the Apoſtle here mentions our Saviour, not as he was the author of the Goſpel, but as he is the captain, or leader, to all Chriſtians, in reſpect of performing their duty, and eſpecially that great duty of patience or ſuffering for the ſake of the Goſpel; which is what the Apoſtle is here preſſing the Hebrews to, by ſetting before them the example of our bleſſed Saviour; who alſo is here ſtiled (teleiotes) the perfecter of our faith, as in other reſpects, ſo eſpecially in reſpect of his giving us the moſt perfect pattern of patience and obedience to the will of God. (Wells) See Bp. Andrews's, and Bp. Sanderſon's ſermons at large on this text, and the notes on ver. 5. ch. i. 3. ii. 10. vi. 20. and x. 26. Luke xxi. 19. xxii. 30. and xxiv. 26. John vii. 12. and xiv. 2. Acts xiv. 22. Rom. vi. 5. and viii. 18. 1 Cor. ix. 24. and xv. 20. Gal. vi. 9. Eph. ii. 8. and Phil. i. 6. and iii. 14.

Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood, ſtriving againſt ſin. And ye have forgotten the exhortation, which ſpeaketh unto you, as unto children, My ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. For whom the Lord loveth, he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth. If ye endure chaſtening, God dealeth with you as with ſons: For what ſon is he whom the father chaſteneth not? But if ye be without chaſtiſement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye baſtards, and not ſons. Furthermore, we have had fathers of our fleſh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: Shall we not much rather be in ſubjection unto the Father of ſpirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chaſtened us after their own pleaſure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. Now no chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous: Nevertheleſs, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs unto them which are exerciſed thereby. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees: And make ſtraight paths for your feet, leſt that which is lame be turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed.

Ye have not yet reſiſted.] Here the Apoſtle proceeds to other motives to perſeverance; Firſt, putting them in mind, That their ſufferings were ſmall, in compariſon of what Chriſt himſelf, and many of his faithful ſervants had ſuffer'd; "Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood:" That is, tho' ye have reſiſted bravely, and ſuffer'd manfully, yet your lives are ſtill ſafe. It is therefore highly diſhonourable, to faint in the cauſe of Chriſt and the Goſpel, under leſſer ſufferings, when we know there have been, and ſtill are to be, greater undergone on the ſame account. (H. Wells, and B.) See the notes on ch. xiii. 18, 19.

Ye have forgotten.] That is, By growing weary and faint in your minds, ye will plainly declare, that "ye have forgotten the exhortation," which God gives, Prov. iii. 11, 12. "ſpeaking unto you as unto children." (W. Wells, and B.) Or the words may be underſtood interrogatively thus, Have ye forgotten? &c. (Aſſ. H. and Oxf.)

My ſon, deſpiſe not.] Note here, A ſweet and endearing compellation, My ſon. When good men are even under the greateſt trials and heavieſt afflictions, God calls them ſons, and deals with them as ſons. 2. The nature of their afflictions declar'd: They are not judgments, but fatherly chaſtiſements; ſo the original word (paideia) ſignifies ſuch a correction as a father gives his child, for his inſtruction, and for the bringing him to a ſenſe of his duty. 3. A caution againſt two very dangerous extremes, viz. Neither to deſpiſe his chaſtiſement, nor to faint under it. (B.) And, 4. A reaſon, why we ſhould not faint under it, Becauſe it is the effect of God's love; "for whom the Lord loveth he chaſtneth," &c. (B.) See Biſhop Sanderſon's, and Mr. Knags's ſermons, on this text, and the notes on 1 Cor. xi. 32. And, by the way, To ſay nothing of the beautiful metaphors, and noble Agoniſtical terms, which we find in theſe and the foregoing verſes of this chapter, they are compoſed of firm feet and choice numbers, of as much vigour and dignity as the ſelecteſt inſtances produc'd, and laid open by the famous Critic of Halicarnaſſus. (Blackw.)

If ye endure chaſtening.] The Apoſtle here proceeds to argue from the foregoing text of Solomon's Proverbs. Wherein we may obſerve, 1. That he does not ſay, If ye be chaſtiſed; but "if ye endure chaſtiſement;" that is, If ye endure it with faith and patience, with ſubmiſſion and perſeverance, ſo as not to faint under it. 2. That where 'tis ſaid "all are partakers" of chaſtiſement, the meaning is, that all ſons are ſo. (B.) And, 3. That (as St. Chryſoſtome notes on the place) from thoſe things, whence men uſually conclude that they are deſerted by God, the Apoſtle ſhews, that God demonſtrates his fatherly affection to them. (W) Agreeably to which the Jews ſay, Woe to the man that goes out of the world, without tribulations. (Idem) See Dr. Nicholls's ſermon on this text, and the notes on Acts xiv. 22.

Furthermore, we have had.] This argument is drawn from the leſs to the greater, thus; If our earthly parents chaſtened us, only "a few days," and "after their own pleaſure," and yet we are ſubject to them; how much more ought we to be ſubject to our heavenly Father, who chaſtens us "for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holineſs?" (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on Eph. vi. 1, &c.

Yieldeth the peaceable fruit.] The word (gegymnaſmenois) exerciſed, in the end of this clauſe, ſhews, that the phraſe is agoniſtical, like the reſt in the beginning of the chapter; and alludes to the exerciſes perform'd naked in the olympic games, where one of the crowns given to the victors was of olive, the ſymbol of peace: Whence Faber conceives, the Chriſtian crown is here repreſented by "the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs." (H. Oxf. W. and B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. x. 13. and Jam. iii. 18.

Wherefore, lift up.] Be not dejected in mind, nor ſuffer fear to ſeize upon you, which weakens the hands, and enfeebles the knees, and cauſes them to ſmite one againſt another. But, be reſolute for God; "make ſtrait paths" in the way of Chriſtianity, not ſtepping once out of it to avoid perſecution; leſt they who are already lame and feeble, the weak and wavering Chriſtians, be diſheartened, and moved by your example to "turn out of the way," but let them rather by your conſtancy be confirm'd in their Chriſtian courſe. (Aſſ. H. Oxf. W. Wells and B.) See the notes on Gal. vi. 1.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17. Follow peace with all men, and holineſs, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord: Looking diligently, leſt any man fail of the grace of God; leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up, trouble you, and thereby many be defiled: Leſt there be any fornicator, or profane perſon, as Eſau, who for one morſel of meat ſold his birth-right. For ye know how that afterward when he would have inherited the bleſſing, he was rejected: For he found no place of repentance, though he ſought it carefully with tears.

Follow peace.] Here is recommended to our practice a double duty; peace with reſpect to men, and holineſs with reſpect to God: Wherein is repreſented to us, Firſt, the combination and conjunction of the two together, peace and holineſs; Secondly, the order in which they are here recommended; firſt peace, then holineſs. But, having already treated this ſubject at large, in the notes here below referr'd to; therefore, to avoid unneceſſary repetitions, we ſhall collect what remains to be ſaid on this text, under the following particular obſervations; 1. That we are ſo to "follow peace," as not to forſake holineſs; and ſo to follow holineſs, as not to break peace: For, holineſs without peace, will prove but factious ſingularity; and peace without holineſs, but profane conſpiracy. (Curl) 2. That peace ſtands firſt, as that without which nothing is acceptable to God; no, not even the gift upon the altar, Matth. v. 24. (Idem) And therefore, 3. That peace is to be follow'd, with an earneſt and eager purſuit: For ſo the word, diokete, ſignifies; being a metaphor taken from huntſmen, who follow the chace, and purſue their game, tho' it flies before them. Thus, if peace may be had, tho' it be upon hard terms, we muſt endeavour to ſecure it; for it can never be bought too dear, if it be not purchaſed by ſin or baſeneſs. (Curl, H. and B.) And this, 4. "With all men:" Not only with our friends, and ſuch as love us, but alſo with our enemies, and ſuch as hate us; not only with the good, but alſo with the wicked: But yet, not with their wickedneſs; peace with the men, but not with their manners; with the perſons, but not with their conditions; with all the world, except the Devil and ſin. (Curl) For, 5. The peace which we are to follow, muſt be accompanied with holineſs, or purity. It muſt be a holy peace: For as we are "called to peace," 1 Cor. vii. 15. ſo are we "called unto holineſs," 1 Theſſ. iv. 7. Therefore, let us follow our calling, which is "an holy calling," 2 Tim. i. 9. (Idem) 6. That without this "no man ſhall ſee the Lord." Without both theſe, ſays Mr. Burkitt. But he did not carefully enough obſerve the gender of the article, which plainly ſhews the meaning. It is not hes choris, (referring to eirenes) without which peace; but hou choris (referring to the latter ſubſtantive, hagiaſmou) without which holineſs: Neither is the article of the plural number, referring to both, but of the ſingular, referring only to one of them. Without peace, when a man has faithfully endeavour'd it, but cannot obtain it, (that not being his fault) a good man may; but without holineſs (which if any man want, it is through his own fault only) "no man ſhall ſee the Lord." (Sanderſ.) It is peace which opens Heaven to us; but it is holineſs, or purity of ſoul, which renders us capable of ſeeing God there. (Q.) See Biſhop Curl's ſermon on this text, 1622. and the notes on Rom. xii. 13, 17. xiv. 19. and xv. 5. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. 2 Cor. vii. 1. Gal. v. 22. 1 Tim. i. 5. and ii. 2.

Looking diligently, leſt.] See the notes on 2 Cor. vi. 1. and Gal. v. 4.

Any root of bitterneſs.] Apoſtacy is here call'd a root; becauſe at the beginning it is hidden in the hearts of men, and cannot be diſcover'd till it ſprings up: And it is call'd a "root of bitterneſs," becauſe of its noxious and poiſonous qualities, its bitter effects and fruits. (B.) See the notes on ch. iii. 12. iv. 1. and x. 26. Acts viii. 23. Rom. iii. 23. 1 Cor. v. 6. Gal. i. 7. and v. 9.

Leſt there be any fornicator.] See the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 18, &c. and Col. iii. 5.

Or profane perſon, as Eſau.] Who, in deſpiſing his birth-right, which he ſold at ſuch a low rate, became a type of ſuch as deſpiſe Chriſt, of whom the firſt-born were a type. (Aſſ.) See Hammond and Whitby on this text at large; and the notes on ch. x. 29.

He found no place of repentance.] Some ignorant or deſponding readers underſtand this, as if Eſau had no poſſibility of repenting in his own mind; and ſo make it an example or ground of deſpair, to be applied to themſelves. But the words are plainly, "he found no place" of changing his father's mind, ſo as to give him the principal bleſſing, tho' he ſought it earneſtly. The Apoſtle does not ſay, that Eſau never ſo repented as to obtain forgiveneſs at the hands of God. (Aſſ. H. Oxf. W. B. Wells, Fox, Wall and Maſſey) See Mr. Kettlewell's meaſures of Chriſtian obedience, B. v. ch. vii. p. 555. and the notes here, on ch. vi. 6.

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackneſs, and darkneſs, and tempeſt, and the ſound of a trumpet, and the voice of words, which voice they that heard, intreated that the word ſhould not be ſpoken to them any more: (For they could not endure that which was commanded, And if ſo much as a beaſt touch the mountain, it ſhall be ſtoned, or thruſt through with a dart. And ſo terrible was the ſight, that Moſes ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake) But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jeruſalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels, to the general aſſembly and Church of the firſt-born, which are written in Heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, and to Jeſus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of ſprinkling, that ſpeaketh better things than that of Abel. See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh: For if they eſcaped not who refuſed him that ſpake on earth, much more ſhall not we eſcape, if we turn away from him that ſpeaketh from Heaven: Whoſe voice then ſhook the earth: But now he hath promiſed, ſaying, Yet once more I ſhake not the earth only, but alſo Heaven. And this word, Yet once more, ſignifieth the removing of thoſe things that are ſhaken, as of things that are made, that thoſe things which cannot be ſhaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may ſerve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. For our God is a conſuming fire.

Ye are not come.] As another motive to perſeverance, the Apoſtle here ſets before them, the excellency of the Goſpel above the Law, in ſome other reſpects not before mention'd. He deſcribes firſt the legal ſtate of the Church under the Old Teſtament, and the manner of their forefathers entring into covenant with God at mount Sinai, together with the circumſtances of terror which accompanied the giving of the Law: And then he ſets forth the Evangelical ſtate whereunto they were called, and into which they were entred, with the privileges thereunto belonging. (Wells and B.) See ſome of the particulars, in the notes and references here following.

The mount that might be touched.] Dr. Wall, tho' confeſſedly unſupported by any ancient reading, thinks it ſhould rather be the mount which might not be touched. But, 'tis certain, mount Sinai, in itſelf, might be touched; tho' not at that time, becauſe of the expreſs prohibition, Exod. xix. 12, &c. (Aſſ.)

That burned with fire.] By the terrible manner of giving the Law, here deſcribed, we are given to underſtand the ſlaviſh, ſervile, and fearful condition of thoſe who were under it. (Idem) And God's deſign in all this was to cauſe them to long for, and look after, the great Prophet Chriſt Jeſus; by whom God would ſpeak unto them more comfortably, and by whom they might have acceſs to the throne of grace more freely. (Oxf. and B.) Theſe ſights and ſounds affect not us, becauſe they are paſt: But yet the Apoſtle's argument muſt affect us. If the delivery of the Law was ſo terrible, how dreadful ſhall the account be, how it is kept? Now, this will appear more plainly, by comparing the circumſtances in the delivery of the Law, with thoſe of the day of judgment. 1. A thick and dark cloud; here expreſs'd by "blackneſs and darkneſs:" To which agrees the deſcription of the laſt judgment, Joel iii. 15. Amos v. 18, 20. and Jude 13. 2. Thunder; probably here alluded to by tempeſt: To which agrees that of St. Peter, 2 Pet. iii. 10. 3. Lightning; here expreſs'd by fire: To which agrees the ſame deſcription of the laſt day by St. Peter. 4. The ſound of a trumpet, here alſo expreſly mention'd: To which agrees that of St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 52. And, 5. The ſhaking or quaking of the mount, and the peoples trembling; here plainly alluded to by the Apoſtle: And to which alſo agrees that deſcription of the future judgment, Luke xxi. 11. (Andr.)

Moſes ſaid.] This, not being mention'd in Exodus, Interpreters generally conclude, that the Apoſtle had it by tradition among the Jews; tho' no footſtep of that tradition has been found among them: But we may more reaſonably ſuppoſe, the Apoſtle had reſpect to Deut. xi. where Moſes, reciting to the people, how "the mount burned with fire," ver. 15, &c. ſays, "I was afraid," &c. ver. 19. But the Septuagint there ſpeaks in the preſent tenſe, as the Apoſtle does here, (ecphobos eimi) I am full of fear, and do even tremble at the remembrance of it, tho' near forty years ago. (W. and Wall)

But ye are come.] As if he had ſaid, ſince thoſe terrible circumſtances which accompanied the giving of the Law, and which were to ſhew, that the Law itſelf gives no freedom of acceſs to God, makes no friendly intercourſe between God and man, but rather drives us farther from God in horror and amazement, by making known to us the purity of God and our own impurity; the conſideration of theſe circumſtances would be of force, if duly weigh'd, to keep you off from falling back to Judaiſm: And, on the other hand, the conſideration of the New Covenant would be of force, if duly weigh'd, to keep you ſtedfaſt in the faith; theſe not being of the like nature with thoſe of the Law. (Wells)

Unto mount Sion.] That is, To the Church of Chriſt under the Goſpel; whereof mount Sion was a type. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Gal. iv. 26. Eph. ii. 19. and Phil. iii. 20.

The general aſſembly.] So call'd, as not conſiſting of one nation only, as the aſſembly at mount Sinai did, but collected out of all nations of the world. (H. and Wells)

Church of the firſt-born.] That is, Of the Apoſtles and others, who firſt receiv'd and preach'd the Goſpel. (Idem)

Spirits of juſt men made perfect.] Teteleiomenoi, are thoſe who have receiv'd their crown, the reward in the agoniſtical notion; that is, who have attain'd the end of their race, and are triumphant in Heaven. (H. Oxf. and B.) See the notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 10.

Mediator of the New Covenant.] See the notes on ch. viii. 6. and ix. 15. and 1 Tim. ii. 5.

For the blood of ſprinkling.] That is, The blood of Chriſt, with which we muſt be ſprinkled, before we can be admitted into Heaven (as the Prieſt was to ſprinkle himſelf before he went into the Holy of Holies); which is quite contrary to Abel's blood, that call'd for vengeance on Cain; this calling for mercy even upon his crucifiers, if they would repent and reform, and doth powerfully draw down mercy on the penitent believers: Or, that hath much more efficacy in it, to obtain God's acceptance than had the blood of Abel's ſacrifice, which was the firſt type of the blood of Chriſt that we read of, and of which is ſaid, that God had reſpect to it. (H.) Or elſe, becauſe the blood of Abel procur'd acceptance for himſelf alone, but that of Chriſt for all believers: That ſpeaking only for him, and declaring him righteous; this interceding to God for the juſtification of all men, through faith in his blood. (W.) See the notes on ch. xi. 4.

Refuſe not him that ſpeaketh.] That is, Chriſt. To refuſe him, is either to reject his doctrine and not receive it, or having receiv'd it, to renounce it: So that his refuſal here may include both unbelief and apoſtaſy. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 2. ii. 2. iii. 12. and x. 28.

Our God is a conſuming fire.] Tho' he declar'd himſelf by the Goſpel, to be a moſt gracious God to the true believer and obedient Chriſtian, yet to the diſobedient Chriſtians he will prove now, as formerly to the diſobedient Iſraelites, "a conſuming fire:" (Wells) See the notes on ch. x. 31. and 2 Theſſ. i. 8.

CHAP. XIII.

The Apoſtle concludes with exhortations to ſeveral Chriſtian duties.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. LET brotherly love continue. Be not forgetful to entertain ſtrangers: For thereby ſome have entertained Angels unawares. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which ſuffer adverſity, as being your ſelves alſo in the body. Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: But whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. Let your converſation be without covetouſneſs; and be content with ſuch things as ye have: For he hath ſaid, I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee. So that we may boldly ſay, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man ſhall do unto me.

Let brotherly love continue.] See the notes on John xiii. 34. Rom. xii. 10. and Eph. iv. 2.

Entertain ſtrangers.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 13.

Entertained Angels unawares.] Alluding to the caſes of Abraham and Lot, Gen. xviii. 2. and xix. 1.

Remember them that are in bonds.] Viz. By viſiting them, adminiſtring to them, ſympathizing with them, praying for them; and all this as "bound with them;" which implies an act of union, as members of the ſame myſtical body, and ſuffering in and for the ſame common cauſe. (B.)

Them which ſuffer adverſity.] That is, All who are in any kind of adverſity; whether they ſuffer in body, name, or eſtate; by ſickneſs, pain, loſſes, reproaches, or any kind of calamity: And this, "as being ourſelves alſo in the body," that is, either as members of the ſame myſtical body, and therefore ſuffering with each other; or as in the ſame ſtate of natural life, ſubject and obnoxious to the ſame ſufferings, and within the reach of the ſame adverſities. (Idem) See the notes on Rom. xii. 15. and 1 Cor. xii. 26.

Marriage is honourable.] And ſo to be eſteem'd, in regard of its author, God himſelf, Gen. ii. 18. in regard of the place, Paradiſe; in regard of the time, in man's innocency; and in regard of the end and uſefulneſs of it, the continuation of the race of mankind. The Apoſtle adds, that it is "honourable in all;" that is, amongſt all orders, ranks and degrees of men that are call'd thereunto. The remedy is equally provided by God for all: And therefore, for the Church of Rome to deny it to their Clergy, is to uſurp authority over the conſciences of men, and to judge themſelves too pure for an inſtitution of their Maker, which our firſt parents, even in innocency did not think themſelves too pure for. (B.) But here may be conſider'd, more particularly, 1. Whether the original text, which is only this, (Timios ho gamos en paſi) Marriage honourable in all, be an affirmative propoſition, or a precept; that is, whether the verb underſtood, and with which it is to be conſtrued, is of the Indicative, or Imperative Mood? Some read it affirmatively, (Timios eſti) is honourable; tho' others think it ſhould rather be read preceptively, (Timios eſto) thus, Let marriage be honourable, &c. as being moſt agreeable to the other duties here recommended, all in the Imperative mood; and particularly to the verſe next following, where the like phraſe in the original is well tranſlated imperatively, Let your converſation be, &c. But this different reading is not material, ſince it makes little or no difference in the ſenſe: For, if it be a duty to hold marriage honourable, it muſt be ſo becauſe it is in itſelf honourable; and if marriage be, by nature or inſtitution, or by virtue of its end and uſes, honourable, then it muſt be the duty of all to honour it, and to have it in great eſteem. (Cockb.) 2. What is the meaning of (en paſi) in all. And this cannot be fairly conſtrued to be in the neuter gender, to ſignify all things; (as the Romaniſts pretend,) ſince the Apoſtle immediately ſpeaks of perſons in the ſame verſe, as oppoſed to thoſe (paſi) all who are married. (Maſon) In ſhort, Marriage is not only tolerable, allowable, or commendable, but honourable; and ſo it was ever reputed in all ages, by all perſons: For, not only the Patriarchs, Prieſts and Prophets, under the Law, were married; but, under the Goſpel, Elders and Prieſts were married, and ſo were the Apoſtles and Biſhops. (Andr. and H.) 3. That "the bed undefiled," tho' here directly applied to the marriage-bed, may be underſtood alſo ſimply of the bed, whether in or out of marriage; ſo as to comprehend the monial, as well as the conjugal chaſtity, alluding to the fornication and adultery immediately after mention'd. (H. and Fiſher) See Biſhop Andrews on the 7th Commandment, and Mr. Rogers's Diſcourſe, 1650. Mr. Fiſher's ſermon, 1694. and Dr. Cockburn's at Amſterdam, all on this text; Mr. Fra. Maſon's Vind. of the Ch. of Engl. 1728. B. ii. ch. viii. and the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 2. and 1 Tim. iii. 2. and iv. 3.

Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge.] See the notes on 1 Cor. iii. 17. and vi. 18. and Eph. v. 5.

Without covetouſneſs.] See the notes on Luke xii. 15. and Col. iii. 5.

And be content.] Hence we may learn, 1. That we are then covetouſly-minded, when we are not content with the things we enjoy at preſent, but are impatiently deſirous of more. (W. and B.) 2. That what God promiſes to any of his ſervants, may, in like circumſtances, be applied to them all: For this, which the Apoſtle here applies to all good Chriſtians, was particularly made to Joſhua, ch. i. 5. (Aſſ. H. W. B. and Wells) 3. That God always ſuccours thoſe who put their truſt in him; if not in that manner which they deſire, at leaſt in that which he judges the beſt, and which is more advantageous for them: If he permits any evil to happen to them, it is becauſe that very evil is their good. (Q.) And, 4. That, in that promiſe, "I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee," the original words contain five negatives; which is a great beauty, not ſufficiently preſerv'd in any verſion: They are deſign'd to expreſs the doctrine therein contain'd in the fulleſt and moſt comfortable manner; and to give good men an entire dependance on the veracity and gracious promiſes of God, and the ſtrongeſt aſſurance that he will never, on any occaſion, leave or forſake them. (B. and Blackw.) See the notes on Phil. iv. 11. and 1 Tim. vi. 6, 8.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Remember them which have the rule over you, who have ſpoken unto you the word of God: Whoſe faith follow, conſidering the end of their converſation: Jeſus Chriſt the ſame yeſterday, and to day, and for ever. Be not carried about with divers and ſtrange doctrines: For it is a good thing that the heart be eſtabliſhed with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein. We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat, which ſerve the tabernacle. For the bodies of thoſe beaſts, whoſe blood is brought into the ſanctuary by the High-prieſt for ſin, are burnt without the camp. Wherefore Jeſus alſo, that he might ſanctify the people with his own blood, ſuffered without the gate. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. For here have we no continuing city, but we ſeek one to come. By him therefore let us offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name. But to do good, and to communicate, forget not: For with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed. Obey them that have the rule over you, and ſubmit yourſelves: For they watch for your ſouls, as they that muſt give account: That they may do it with joy, and not with grief: For that is unprofitable for you.

Remember them which have.] Ton hegoumenon hymon; your rulers; which is agreed to be ſpoken of their ſpiritual rulers: But the original not diſtinguiſhing them, either as paſt or preſent, the exhortation to remember, or call them to mind, is reaſonably thought to refer to thoſe who were dead, and whom they were obliged to bear in memory, for teaching them the ſincere "word of God," and leaving them a good example: And this too the rather, 1. Becauſe the Apoſtle here immediately recommends to their ſerious and frequent "conſideration the end of their converſation;" or their exit, as the original word ecbaſis fairly ſignifies: And, 2. Becauſe afterwards, ver. 17. he commands them to obey their rulers, in the very ſame phraſe, which is there always interpreted, in the time preſent, of thoſe who "have the ruler over you." And thus indeed I find this text underſtood, not only by Beza, Grotius, Hall, Hammond, the Oxford-Annotator, Whitby, Burkitt, Wells, Fleury, &c. but in ſome editions of our Bible (and particularly in that of H. Hills and J. Field, 1660. in 8vo.) there is an evident and proper diſtinction made, between thoſe which "had the rule," ver. 7. and thoſe which "have the rule," ver. 17. Agreeable to which reading, both Mr. Nelſon, on the Feſtivals, and Mr. Wheatly, on the Common Prayer, treating of Saints-days in general, conclude, with great probability, That the ancient practice of the primitive Chriſtians, celebrating the Memoriæ Martyrum, yearly, in honour of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, was founded on this very exhortation, "to remember thoſe who had had the rule over them," &c. in which place the author is thought chiefly to hint at the martyrdom of St. James, the firſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem; who, not long before, had laid down his life for the teſtimony of Jeſus. See the notes on Phil. iii. 17. and 1 Tim. v. 17.

Jeſus Chriſt, the ſame.] The Apoſtle here, as a motive to adhere to the doctrine of thoſe, who firſt preached the Goſpel, and ſeal'd the truth of it with their blood, in certain hope of being rewarded therefore, with a crown of glory, by our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; argues, That by following their faith, and imitating their example, they alſo ſhould obtain the ſame reward: Which he does upon this practical principle, and maxim of Chriſtianity, That Jeſus Chriſt is "the ſame yeſterday, to day, and to morrow;" that is, eternal in his nature, and uniform in his diſpenſations. This character of our bleſſed Lord doth beyond queſtion belong only to his Godhead; in reſpect of which only, he could be ſaid to be eternal and unchangeable. The inferences from which doctrine, are, 1. That his doctrine is to be reverenced: 2. That the ſame obligations of duty are incumbent upon Chriſtians at all times: And, 3. That (as the Apoſtle himſelf here infers,) we ſhould "not be carried about with divers and ſtrange doctrines." (H. W. B. Wells and Mang.) See Dr. Mangey's ſermon on this text at large, 1719. and the notes on ch. i. 8, &c. John i. 1. and viii. 58. 1 Cor. iii. 11. 2 Cor. xi. 4. Gal. i. 7. Eph. iv. 14. and v. 6. Col. i. 17. and ii. 7.

With grace, not with meats.] That is, With the doctrine of grace; or elſe with thoſe graces which are wrought in the ſoul by the preaching of the word or doctrine of grace; as faith, love, &c. And "not with meats;" that is, Not with a legal obſervance, or choice of meats; whereby we may underſtand all the legal ceremonies. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. ix. 10. and x. 1, &c. John i. 17. Acts xv. 11. and xviii. 27. Rom. xiv. 17. 1 Cor. viii. 8. 2 Cor. vi. 1. Gal. v. 4. Eph. ii. 7. and Col. ii. 16.

For we have an altar.] That (Thuſiaſterion) an altar, here ſignifies the ſacrifice offer'd upon the altar, is plain from this expreſſion of eating; as thoſe who did eat of the Jewiſh ſacrifices are ſaid to be "partakers of the altar," 1 Cor. x. 18. that is, of the things offer'd on the altar: And then it muſt import the body of our Lord, offer'd and broken on the croſs; by partaking the memorials of which body, we teſtify our communion with Chriſt and his Church, ver. 16, 17. And of this (ſaith the Apoſtle here) "they have no right to eat (or partake) who ſerve the tabernacle;" that is, who ſtill cleave to the worſhip appointed for the Jewiſh tabernacle. (W.) Now, the Communion Table was moſt uſually call'd an altar, in the three firſt centuries after Chriſt. And whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaks of eating of, or from, the altar, this ſeems clearly to point to the ſacrifice of the Euchariſt, which was indeed taken from the altar to be diſtributed; whereas that part of the Jewiſh ſacrifice, which was intended to be eaten, either by the Prieſt or people, was never laid on the altar, and ſo could not be taken, or eaten, from it. Some, by the altar, would underſtand the croſs of Chriſt; and, by eating, would have the Apoſtle mean, believing in him: And then the ſenſe will be, That the Prieſts, who ſerve the Jewiſh tabernacle, have no right to believe in Chriſt. But this cannot be the Apoſtle's meaning, becauſe it is not true: For, both the Jewiſh Prieſts and people had the right, privilege or power of believing in Chriſt; nay, to them, and their children, the offer of the Goſpel was firſt made. Therefore, by the altar, we can rationally underſtand nothing but the Communion-Table; and, by conſequence, the ſacrifice, which we receive from thence, and which the Jewiſh Prieſts had no right to eat, is the Euchariſt. (Johnſ.) There is no more difference between a table and an altar, than between another cup and a chalice, or a houſe and a Church, or a feaſt and a ſacrifice. (Mede and Hickes) See Dr. Brett's ſermon on this text; and the notes on 1 Cor. x. 16. and Gal. v. 3.

Burnt without the camp.] Even as thoſe "who ſerved the tabernacle" might not eat of thoſe beaſts, which were "burnt without the camp;" ſo thoſe who now cleave to the tabernacle cannot be partakers of Chriſt: Which is further illuſtrated by thoſe beaſts being a type of Chriſt, and the place of their burning a type of the place of Chriſt's ſuffering. (Aſſ. H. W. and Wells) And the ſum of the exhortation following is, That we muſt leave all, to go forth to a crucified Saviour; and if we reſolve ſo to do, we muſt expect and prepare to meet with all ſorts of reproaches. (B.) See the notes on ch. xi. 26. Acts vii. 58. and xxvi. 6. 2 Cor. v. 21. and Col. i. 24.

No continuing city.] Theſe words may be conſider'd either relatively or abſolutely. Conſider them with relation to the context, and their ſenſe is this; How chearfully ought believers (according to the advice in the foregoing verſe) to go forth to Chriſt without the camp, bearing his reproach, when they conſider their preſent ſtate and condition, that they have no city here below, the ſeat of Divine Worſhip, as the Jews had at Jeruſalem, before the aboliſhment of their ceremonial worſhip; but they ſeek one to come, even the heavenly Jeruſalem, where they ſhall worſhip God in his temple day and night? Conſider the words abſolutely in themſelves, and two things ſeem to be intended and deſigned by them: 1. That our condition in this world is very uncertain and unſettled, We have no continuing city here. 2. It implies a tendency to a future ſettling, and the hopes and expectations we have of a happier condition, into which we ſhall enter when we go out of this world. Learn hence, 1. That the world never did, nor ever will, give a ſtate of ſatisfactory reſt unto believers; it will not afford them a city of reſt, hardly a place of refuge: They muſt therefore ariſe and depart, for this is not their reſt. 2. That as God has prepared a city of reſt for believers, ſo it is their duty to ſeek and ſecure it, and continually endeavour the attainment of it, in the way of his own appointment: We have not, but we ſeek. (B.) See Mr. T. Prichard's ſermon on this text at a funeral, 1690. and the notes on ch. xi. 10, 16. and Phil. iii. 20.

By him therefore.] Our Apoſtle having, at the tenth verſe, declared that we Chriſtians have an altar, to wit, Jeſus Chriſt; here we are directed to offer a ſacrifice, without which an altar is of no uſe; by him let us offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually. Where note, 1. Chriſtians are to offer a ſacrifice to God, and to none but God; no creature, Angel, or Saint, has any part in it: Praiſe them we may, but offer a ſacrifice of prayer or praiſe to them we may not. 2. That the Chriſtian's ſacrifice which he preſents to God, and none but him, is a ſacrifice of praiſe. What we offer is the fruit of our lips; not the fruit of our fields, or of our flocks, but of ſuch lips as confeſs his name. 3. The time when, and the perſon by whom, this ſacrifice of praiſe is to be offered to God, and that is continually, conſtantly, morning and evening: Not putting Almighty God off with leſs under the Goſpel, than the Jews offered to him under the Law, which was the morning and evening ſacrifice; and all this by Chriſt; by him let us offer, by him who is our peace may we find acceſs. It is his merit and mediation that crowns our ſacrifice, and obtains acceptance for it. 4. Another ſacrifice, eſpecially recommended to our care, as exceeding acceptable and well-pleaſing unto God, and that is the ſacrifice of almſgiving, beneficence, and bounty, doing all the good we can, and communicating to the relief of ſuch as want; But to do good, &c. As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Take heed ye do not put God off with the fruit of your lips, the prayers and praiſes which coſt you little; but now he calls for the labour of your hands, and for a part to be given to him, in his poor members of what he has given to you: Therefore be ſure ye forget not to do good and communicate, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed; with none better pleaſed than this, pleaſed with none without this; Intimating, 1. That it is dangerous to the ſouls of men, when attendance to one duty is abuſed, to countenance the neglect of others; when men give God daily a ſacrifice of prayer and praiſe, but withold from him, in his members, the ſacrifice of almſgiving: They give him the fruit of their lips, which coſt them nothing; but to do good and communicate, which will coſt them ſomething, this they forget. 2. That ſuch works and duties as are peculiarly uſeful to men, are peculiarly acceptable unto God; with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed. (B.) See the notes here next following.

By him.] That is, As they did under the Law, by their High-prieſt. (Oxf.) Here indeed Chriſt is; but not in the quality of a ſacrifice to be offer'd, as in the maſs (whereof he is made the matter) but as a Mediator only: It is not him, but by him we are to offer; 'Tis that which gives power and efficacy to this, and all our ſervices; which would be nothing worth, if we came in our own names. See Biſhop Laney's ſermon on this text, 1663.

Offer the ſacrifice.] Tho' carnal ſacrifices are now aboliſh'd, yet there are others, of a ſpiritual kind, which are ſtill in force under the Goſpel, and to be of perpetual obligation. Thankſgiving to God, for the benefits receiv'd of him, and beneficence to our brethren, in communicating to them a due proportion of theſe good things, which are by God's providence diſpenſed to us, were, even under the Law, of ſuperior obligation to the ſacrifices required by it; for theſe receiv'd all their value from poſitive inſtitution, but thoſe were, in their own nature, proper for God to exact, and for men to perform. (Smalr.) Dr. Pocock notes, That (carpos) fruit, is here taken for carpoma, which in the Septuagint, ſignifies a Holocauſt; which being uſually of young bullocks, correſponds to the calves of our lips, in Hebrew. (H. and W.) And this "fruit of our lips," offer'd to God continually, is by Biſhop Laney, in his ſermon before-cited, applied to the daily ſervice by a Liturgy; and by Dr. Hammond, Mr. Johnſon, and others, more particularly to the Euchariſt.

Giving thanks to his name.] In all conditions and ſtates of life, even under afflictions, as knowing he can make them tend to our good. (Wells) But Biſhop Laney, and others, render the word (homologounton) confeſſing to his name; ſolemnly celebrating the commemoration and acknowledgment of the greateſt of the bleſſings that God ever beſtowed upon men, viz. the redemption of our ſouls by the blood of his dear Son: Which confeſſion carries away from all the reſt the name of an Euchariſt, a ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving. See the notes on Matth. x. 32. Luke xii. 8. Rom. i. 8. and x. 10. and Eph. v. 20.

To do good, and to communicate.] See the reſpective ſermons of Dr. Hickes, and Biſhop Smalridge, and an homily in 1596. all on this text; and the notes on 2 Cor. ix. 6, &c. Phil. iv. 18. and 1 Tim. vi. 18.

Obey them that have.] In ver. 7. the Apoſtle had exhorted them to remember thoſe who had formerly ruled over them, and here he recommends to them the duty of obedience to thoſe who then were their rulers; meaning their rightful ſpiritual rulers and guides. (Wells) That is, to their doctrine, diſcipline, and cenſures, &c. but yet not with a blind and implicit obedience. (Oxf. and B.) Nor yet to thoſe who ſacrilegiouſly uſurp and intrude themſelves into office and power; for we ſhall be unjuſt in our obedience, if we ſubmit to uſurpation. (Featly) See the reſpective ſermons of Mr. J. Featly, 1635. Mr. Joſh. Clarke, 1691. Mr. J. Stillſman, 1707. and Dr. Hare, 1719. all on this text; and the notes on ver. 7. Acts xx. 20, &c. Gal. iv. 14. and vi. 6. 1 Theſſ. v. 12. and 1 Tim. v. 27.

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Pray for us: For we truſt we have a good conſcience, in all things willing to live honeſtly. But I beſeech you the rather to do this, that I may be reſtored to you the ſooner. Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus, that great ſhepherd of the ſheep, through the blood of the everlaſting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. And I beſeech you, brethren, ſuffer the word of exhortation; for I have written a letter unto you in few words. Know ye, that our brother Timothy is ſet at liberty; with whom, if he come ſhortly, I will ſee you. Salute all them that have the rule over you, and all the ſaints. They of Italy ſalute you. Grace be with you all. Amen.

¶ Written to the Hebrews from Italy, by Timothy.

Pray for us.] See the notes on Rom. xv. 30. and Eph. vi. 19.

We have a good conſcience.] "A good conſcience, is a conſcience enlightned by the word of God, awaken'd by the Spirit, purified and pacified by the blood of Chriſt, and univerſally tender of all God's commands: And the teſtimony here given of this, is, the being "in all things willing to live honeſtly;" that is, having a will and reſolution, accompanied with conſtant endeavours, to live honeſtly; (B.) Or to behave ourſelves well in all things. (H.) See Dr Rob. Harris's ſermons, 1630. and Mr. Whitfield's 1714. on this text; and the notes on Acts xxxiii. 1. and xxiv. 16.

The God of peace.] See the notes on Rom. xv. 33. and xvi. 20.

Brought again from the dead.] See the notes on Acts ii. 24. and 1 Cor. xv. 20.

That great ſhepherd,] This text ſeems to expreſs all the three offices of our great Mediator, which are the foundation of all our prayers and praiſes directed to God, and of all the bleſſings we receive or expect from him; 1. His Prophetick office, in that he is ſtiled "the great ſhepherd of the ſheep:" 2. His Prieſtly office, in that he is ſaid to be "brought again from the dead, through the blood of the everlaſting covenant:" And, 3. His Kingly office, in that he is ſtiled "our Lord Jeſus." (Andr. W. and B.) See the notes on John x. 11.

Make you perfect.] That is, Prepare and fit you for every good work; or, accompliſh that in you, which as yet may be wanting. (B.) See Biſhop Andrews's ſermon on this text; and the notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 9, &c. and Eph. iv. 12.

Suffer the word of exhortation.] The Apoſtle ſpeaks this to qualify the ſeeming boldneſs of ſome exhortations, ſprinkled here and there in this Epiſtle, eſpecially in the ſixth and tenth chapters. (Aſſ. Oxf. and Wells)

Timothy is ſet at liberty.] Hence 'tis certain, that the ſubſcription of this Epiſtle is ſuppoſititious: For, what need ſhould there be of certifying, that Timothy was ſet at liberty, if this Epiſtle was ſent by him, as the ſubſcription relates? (Aſſ) See the Preface to the firſt Epiſtle to Timothy.

They of Italy.] See the Preface to this Epiſtle.

Written.] The abſurdity of this ſubſcription, is evident, from the note on ver. 23. and the Preface to this Epiſtle.

The END of the Epiſtle of St. PAUL to the HEBREWS.

ANNOTATIONS

General Epiſtle of St. James.

BEFORE we ſpeak of this Epiſtle in particular, it may be proper to take notice, That this, and the following, (except the two laſt of St. John) have been commonly ſtiled the Catholic Epiſtles; becauſe they are not directed to any particular Church of one denomination (as St. Paul's generally were, but to the Jewiſh converts in general, who were diſperſed abroad in divers countries, as we have obſerv'd on John vii. 35. And therefore we properly call them General Epiſtles, or Epiſtles General; ſignifying much the ſame in Engliſh, as Catholic (that is, univerſal) does in Greek Such alſo we read of among the Ancients, under the title of Encycliai (that is, circular) being deliver'd to the Church in ſome one particular city, and from thence appointed to be tranſmitted to all the other Churches within ſuch a cyrcle, compaſs or diſtrict.

As to this now before us, we are to obſerve,

i. The author of it: And this the title itſelf prefixt to it declares to be St. James; or, as it is in moſt Greek copies, James the Apoſtle. That it was not James the ſon of Zebedee (commonly called James the Great) is evident; becauſe he was put to death by Herod, about the year of our Lord 43. (as we have noted on Acts xii. 2.) which was ſome conſiderable time before the writing of this Epiſtle: So that the title prefix'd to theſe Catholic Epiſtles, in the Geneva Edition of Beza, &c. is plainly a miſtake, in aſcribing the next following Epiſtles to thoſe three Apoſtles who were preſent at our Saviour's transfiguration in the mount; whereas the Goſpel itſelf acquaints us, that it was James, the brother of John, and the ſon of Zebedee, who was there preſent, (Matth. xvii. 1.) and conſequently, not the author of this Epiſtle. We muſt therefore neceſſarily conclude it to have been written by James the ſon of Alpheus, (diſtinguiſh'd by the title of James the Leſs) if the author of it was an Apoſtle (ſtrictly ſo call'd) that is to ſay, one of the Twelve. Indeed ſome very learned men have thought it not written by either of theſe two, but by another James; reckoning up three of that name, viz. James the ſon of Zebedee, James the ſon of Alpheus, and James the Juſt, Biſhop of Jeruſalem. However, it ſeems to be agreed on all hands, that this Epiſtle was written by that James who was Biſhop of Jeruſalem: So that if it be prov'd, that James the ſon of Alpheus, was that very ſame Biſhop of Jeruſalem, we can be no longer in doubt about our author. Now, we muſt obſerve, 1. That this Biſhop of Jeruſalem was the ſame who is elſewhere call'd James the Juſt, and the Brother of our Lord; which is alſo agreed. 2. That he was the ſame with James commonly call'd The Leſs, is the concurrent opinion of Baronius, Maſon, the Aſſembly-men, Ravanellus, Cave, Dupin, Stanhope, Whitby, Nelſon, Wells and Burkitt. 3. That the perſon thus deſcribed was no other than James the ſon of Alpheus, they likewiſe conclude, not only from the Scriptures mentioning no more than two Apoſtles of this name; but alſo from the Primitive Fathers, and particularly from St. Jerome himſelf, who has fully prov'd, with many arguments, that James the Juſt, the Brother of our Lord, was the ſame with James the ſon of Alpheus; as we have noted on Acts xv. 13. The ſame Father alſo declares his opinion, That this Biſhop was the ſon of another Mary, ſiſter of the bleſſed Virgin, of whom St. John makes mention, ch. xix. 25. where ſhe is ſtiled "the wife of Cleophas," otherwiſe called Alpheus, (as we have there noted), and "the mother of James the Leſs," Mark xv. 40. Agreeable to which he is in Scripture call'd "the Brother of our Lord," Gal. i. 19. (that is, his couſin-german) as well as by Joſephus, who was eminently ſkilful in the genealogies of his own country; the Jewiſh language properly comprehending, in the name of brethren, not only the ſtrict relation of fraternity, but the larger alſo of conſanguinity. And this being ſo, we need not here to conſider, how properly he might have been ſtiled an Apoſtle, tho' he had not been one of the Twelve: Tho', by the way, it ſeems hardly credible, that the writer of this Epiſtle ſhould be ſo emphatically deſcrib'd by the addition of The Apoſtle, in moſt copies, if there had been another Apoſtle of the ſame name then living, and he too more properly ſo call'd; without ſome character of diſtinction to ſhew that it was not he who was one of the Twelve. But I can't omit referring to a juſt and ſeaſonable remark of Dr. Barclay's, in favour of Dioceſan Epiſcopy,

4. That whether this our author was, or was not, one of the twelve Apoſtles, yet ſtill we have an unanſwerable, argument that Dioceſan Epiſcopacy was ſettled in the very infancy of the Chriſtian Church; and that too, allow'd to be exerciſed with great authority, even in a council of the Apoſtles themſelves; as we have already quoted, on Acts xv. 13. To conclude what relates to this Apoſtle, the circumſtances of his extraordinary piety and devotion, his charity and univerſal benevolence, his exemplary life and glorious death, are commemorated by all the writers of his hiſtory: Inſomuch that he is not only celebrated amongſt all men, under the title of James the Juſt; but his martyrdom is reckon'd, even by the Jews themſelves, as that which more immediately call'd down the Divine Vengeance, and haſtned the univerſal ruin and deſtruction of their whole nation.

ii. That this Epiſtle (which was his only genuine work) was written to the diſperſed Jews who had embraced Chriſtianity, has been obſerv'd before: And indeed their ſuffering condition rendred the conſolation, which this Epiſtle affords, very uſeful and neceſſary, as being greatly ſupporting. But the more immediate occaſion of it ſeems to have been, That many, profeſſing Chriſtianity, had perverted St. Paul's doctrine, concerning free juſtification by faith, to the neglect of good works: He therefore the more ſtrenuouſly preſſeth the neceſſity of them; urging purity, patience, charity, and all the virtues of a good life; and by undeniable arguments evincing, that that faith only, which carries along with it obedience and a holy life, can juſtify us before God, and entitle us to eternal life.

iii. As to the time of writing it, tho' not certainly to be determin'd, we may conclude it was after thoſe of St. Paul to the Galatians and Romans, for the reaſons newly mention'd: And it muſt needs have been before the year 63. for then (if not in A. D. 62.) this James was put to death. But, iv. As to the place, there is little room to doubt; becauſe our Apoſtle does not ſeem to have ever remov'd from Jeruſalem, from the time when he was firſt ſettled the Biſhop there. But,

v. Whereas certain perſons have freely cenſur'd the ſtyle of this Epiſtle, as not altogether expreſſing the Apoſtolical gravity and majeſty; others, no leſs learned and judicious, have diſcover'd therein, vigorous and expreſſive words, a beautiful ſimplicity, lively figures, natural and engaging thoughts, and ſolid eloquence, altogether worthy of an Apoſtolical pen; ſome of which we ſhall take notice of in their proper places: And, to the honour of Luther be it remember'd, That whereas he had once ſpoke ſlightly of this ſacred piece of Scripture Canon, he had the good ſenſe and humility afterwards to retract it.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle exhorts them to rejoice under afflictions; and to ask wiſdom of God: Teacheth them not to impute their ſins unto God: But to hearken to God's word, and act according to it; and to bridle their tongues.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. JAMES a ſervant of God, and of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to the twelve tribes which are ſcattered abroad, greeting. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. If any of you lack wiſdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it ſhall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering: For he that wavereth is like a wave of the ſea, driven with the wind and toſſed. For let not that man think that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord. A double-minded man is unſtable in all his ways. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted: But the rich, in that he is made low: Becauſe as the flower of the graſs he ſhall paſs away. For the ſun is no ſooner riſen with a burning heat, but it withereth the graſs, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the faſhion of it periſheth: So alſo ſhall the rich man fade away in his ways. Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptation: For when he is tried, he ſhall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him. Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: For God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man. But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own luſt, and enticed. Then when luſt hath conceived, it bringeth forth ſin: And ſin when it is finiſhed, bringeth forth death. Do not err, my beloved brethren. Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the father of lights, with whom is no variableneſs, neither ſhadow of turning. Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we ſhould be a kind of firſt-fruits of his creatures.

James, a ſervant.] See the Preface to this Epiſtle; and the notes on Acts xii. 2. and xv. 13. Rom. i. 1. 1 Cor. iv. 1. and 2 Cor. iv. 5.

The twelve tribes, which are ſcattered.] The condition of the Jews had, for ſeveral ages before our bleſſed Saviour's coming into the world, been very diſtreſſed. Indeed, ever ſince the carrying away the ten tribes by Salmaneſer, and the captivity of Babylon, under Nebuchadnezzar, great numbers of them were ſcatter'd abroad in foreign countries; and were not only depriv'd of the opportunities to ſettle and en-body themſelves, as formerly, in their own land, but found very unkind treatment from the nations, among whom they ſojourn'd. The caſe, in this reſpect, was indeed made worſe, to thoſe of them, whom the irreſiſtible evidences of truth had brought into the acknowledgment and obedience of the Chriſtian faith. Such had now not only the malice of the Heathens to encounter, but the yet more implacable envy and rage of the far greater part of their own countrymen, who ſtill continued in obſtinacy and unbelief. The contempt and prejudices of the former, and the blind and bitter zeal of the latter, had extinguiſh'd all humanity, and inſtigated them to perſecutions, in which cruelty was even reputed a virtue. Under theſe circumſtances, theſe perſons were moſt proper to be addreſs'd to by this Apoſtle: And when nature, and character, and the tenderneſs of a charity reſulting from both, had determin'd him to the perſons, their preſent ſufferings pointed out the ſubject proper, above all others, to begin his good counſel with; he therefore begins immediately with thoſe ſufferings, which the feeling of them, to whom he wrote, would naturally make uppermoſt in their thoughts. (Stanh.) See the notes on John vii. 35. and Acts viii. 1, &c.

Count it all joy.] To tempt, in the full extent of the word, is to try: And, by analogy, whatever is a tryal of our virtue, may be call'd a temptation. In this moſt comprehenſive ſignification we may ſay, that every circumſtance, every event of human life, is a temptation: Becauſe there is not any one of theſe, but is capable of being uſed to right, or abuſed to wrong, purpoſes; and ſo, of becoming the occaſion of our doing well or ill, in the management of it. But, in regard ſome of theſe can hardly deſerve to be call'd tryals, therefore that name is generally confined to ſuch as carry apparent danger and difficulty in them; ſuch as offer violence to fleſh and blood, and create great ſtruggles, between the affections of nature, and the principles of religion: Hence it comes to paſs, that great afflictions, of any kind whatſoever, and eſpecially the ſufferings, undergone for the ſake of God and a good conſcience, are peculiarly diſtinguiſh'd under the title of temptations. In all theſe caſes, the Scripture acknowledges temptations to come from God. Thus he is ſaid to tempt Abraham, when commanding him to ſacrifice Iſaac; that being the moſt difficult experiment of faith in, and love to, God, that perhaps was ever made. Thus again, The temptations of affliction and ſuffering, in a good cauſe, are frequently attributed to God in Scripture; even when moſt violent, and ſuch as the weakneſs of human nature is apteſt to ſtartle at, and ſhrink back from: Which is plainly the meaning of ſeveral paſſages, comparing the afflictions themſelves to fire, and the perſons enduring them to metals paſſing through it. There is another ſort of temptation, in the ſame ſenſe of trying; by which men are ſaid to tempt God, when they adventure upon dangerous experiments of his power and goodneſs: Such as import either a wicked diſtruſt of, or unwarrantable preſumings upon, his protection and care, or ſome of his divine perfections. So the Iſraelites tempted God in the wilderneſs, when queſtioning his ability to ſupply their wants, &c. But this is an application of the word no way belonging to the place in hand. Another more reſtrained ſenſe of it there is, which imports ſeducing men into ſin: And this is to be conſider'd, under ver. 13. (Stanh.) The temptations here ſpoken of are to be accounted matter of great joy: Not that afflictions are in themſelves joyous; but becauſe of their good effects, and ſweet fruits, in "trying our faith," and increaſing our patience. But he does not ſay this, when we run ourſelves unadviſedly into them, or draw them unneceſſarily upon us; but when we fall into them without either our own guilt or imprudence. (Aſſ. and B) See the notes on Luke xxii. 28. Acts v. 9, 41. vi. 15. and xx. 19. Rom. v. 3. viii. 18. and xii. 12. 1 Cor. x. 13. 2 Cor. vii. 5. and xii. 10. Gal. vi. 1. 1 Theſſ. iii. 5. 2 Tim. i. 12. Hebr. x. 32, &c. and xii. 5, &c.

Let patience have.] That is, Let your patience and perſeverance under ſufferings reſolutely continue and hold out unto the end. This the Apoſtle urges, becauſe ſome perſons bore out the firſt brunt and onſet of perſecution, but being exerciſed with diverſity and length of trials, they fainted. Now, If we will be complete Chriſtians, our patience muſt run parallel with our ſufferings; and thus ſhall we be perfect; not with an abſolute perfection, but with a perfection of duration and perſeverance. Where there is this perfect work of patience, there muſt be a ſtrong faith, as the foundation of it, a ſteady virtue, or Chriſtian fortitude, enabling us thus to ſuſtain theſe fiery trials; an exact knowledge of our duty, to bear theſe afflictions with a meek and quiet ſpirit, with forgiveneſs of, love to, and prayer for, them who perſecute us, which includes the height of charity, under the higheſt provocations; a great love to God, for whoſe ſake we ſuffer, and a ſtrong affection to his ſervice; a greater fear of his diſpleaſure, than of the wrath of man; an entire truſt and dependance on him, and a full reſignation to his will and providence, in which conſiſts the life of godlineſs; an exact temperance, as to the honours, pleaſures, and temporal concerns, of this life, which we loſe by theſe our ſufferings; and a true charity to our Chriſtian brethren, for whoſe example and encouragement we do thus ſuffer. And theſe are all the graces, which the Apoſtle Peter doth require to make us fruitful, and perfect Chriſtians, 2 Pet. i. 5, &c. (W. and B.) See the notes on Hebr. x. 36. xii. 5. and xiii. 21.

If any of you lack wiſdom.] Here is to be obſerv'd, 1. A truth neceſſarily ſuppoſed, That every man, more or leſs, doth "lack wiſdom," to enable him patiently to bear, and prudently to manage, the afflictions of this life; and that there is need of great wiſdom, to enable us to glorify God in a ſuffering hour. 2. The perſon directed to, for obtaining this Divine Wiſdom; viz. God, the fountain of wiſdom. 3. An encouragement to aſk it of God; becauſe he "giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it ſhall be given." 4. The condition requir'd on our part; "Let him aſk in faith, nothing wavering." And, 5. The danger of wavering, and doubling, in the matter of prayer; "Let not that man think, that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord." (B.) By this ſimilitude of "a wave of the ſea," the Apoſtle illuſtrates the property of a wavering-minded man: As the waves of the ſea, through tempeſtuous winds, ſometimes are carried up to Heaven, ſometimes deſcend as low as the deep; ſo a wavering-minded man ſometimes is of this opinion and reſolution, and ſometimes of that. (Aſſ.) On the one hand, his conſcience calls upon him to adhere to the faith of Chriſt, as his duty; on the other hand, his fear of afflictions makes him ready to renounce the faith, or at leaſt to act contrary to it. (Wells) See Dr. Hammond on this text, and the notes on Matth. vii. 7. and xviii. 19. Luke xi. 9. John xiv. 13. xv. 7. and xvi. 23. Eph. iv. 14. 1 Tim. ii. 8. 2 Tim. iii. 6. and Hebr. xii. 5, &c.

A double-minded man.] Whom the Apoſtle had before called wavering, and compar'd to "a wave of the ſea," he here ſtiles "double-minded;" becauſe he is ſometimes of one mind, ſometimes of another; unſettled in his reſolutions and purpoſes; having not a foundation of faith to build them upon: And ſuch a one muſt needs be "unſtable in all his ways;" that is, in all his practices, courſes, and undertakings. (Aſſ.) And verily, of all the paſſions of the mind, which betray us thus to the tempter, none is more apt to do it than fear; which makes us many times do things quite otherwiſe than our own reaſon tells us we ſhould do. If then we ſee a man faint-hearted, we may well ſuſpect him falſe-hearted too. It is certainly a very hard thing, if at all poſſible, for a coward to be an honeſt man, or a true friend either to God or man. He is at beſt but (aner dipſychos) "a double-minded man:" But God requires ſimplicity and ſingleneſs of heart. He hath a good mind perhaps to be honeſt, and to ſerve God and the king, and to love his neighbour and his friend; and if he would hold him there, and be of that mind always, all would be well: But his double mind will not ſuffer him ſo to do. He hath a mind withal to ſleep in a whole skin; and to ſave his eſtate, if he can, howſoever: And thus he becometh (acataſtatos) fickle, and "unſtable in all his ways," and turneth as the tyde turneth; ſo that there is no relying on him, no truſting him. Men are apt to pretend, in excuſe of their own failings in this kind, the outward force offer'd by others; ſuppoſing, they have ſaid enough, to excuſe what they have done, when they have ſaid, they did it by compulſion: As if any man could be maſter of another's will; or enforce a conſent from him without his conſent; which carrieth before it a manifeſt contradiction. Indeed, if we ſuffer what we ſhould not, without any of our own provocation, that is not our fault, becauſe it is not in our power to help it: But, if we do what we ſhould not, upon what inducement ſoever we do it, we muſt bear the greateſt part of the blame ourſelves, becauſe it is our doing ſtill. For a man then, when he has been frighted out of his conſcience and his duty, and done amiſs, to ſay, He was compell'd to do it, againſt his mind, is not only falſe, but ridiculouſly falſe: For when it was left to the choice of his own will, whether he would do that which was requir'd, or ſuffer that which was threatned, rather than ſuffer the one, he choſe to do the other. It is manifeſtly abſurd therefore, for any man to pretend a thing to have been done by him againſt his will, which, how hard ſoever the choice was, he yet choſe to do. We muſt needs acknowledge, That there lyeth a neceſſity upon us, if we will be Chriſt's diſciples and friends, Matth. xvi. 24. to deny ourſelves, our luſts, our intereſts, our fortunes, our liberties, our lives, or if there be any thing elſe, that can be dearer to us, rather than, for fear of any thing, conſent to the leaſt wilful violation of our bounden duty either to God or our neighbour: That no force or violence from without, no ſtraits we can be driven into by any circumſtances whatſoever, can either make it neceſſary for us to ſin, or excuſable in us to have ſinned: That we are bound, both by virtue of Chriſt's example and command, to take up any croſs, that it is his good pleaſure to lay before us, and to bear it, ſo long as he pleaſeth, with patience, chearfulneſs, and courage: That if we grow weary of it, and faint in our minds, ſo as to caſt about how we may work ourſelves from under it, by ſuch means, as we have no clear warrant from him; we muſt anſwer for it wholly ourſelves, and cannot juſtly charge it on any other perſon or thing, than upon our ownſelves, and our own baſe cowardice. (Sanderſ.)

Let the brother.] He who has always liv'd in mean circumſtances, and in a poor condition, yet, notwithſtanding his ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt, has great reaſon to rejoice; for, by his becoming a Chriſtian, he is highly advanced, having ſuch opportunities of improvement in holineſs and virtue, which are much more valuable goods, than all the riches and honours of this world: On the other ſide, he who was rich before, has great reaſon to rejoice, tho', for the ſake of Chriſt, and his religion, he is depriv'd of all his riches; for thereby he has a title to ſubſtantial goods, the promiſe of an eternal inheritance, which is not ſubject to decay and periſh, as all temporal things are, even like "the flower of the graſs," by the burning heat of the ſun. (Fox) Obſerve alſo, 1. That to be called to ſuffer for Chriſt, is to be eſteem'd a peculiar and extraordinary favour, and ſo an exaltation, is evident from Phil. i. 29. (Wells) 2. That in the argument which the Apoſtle here uſes, to enforce his foregoing exhortation, he does not pronounce him bleſſed who eſcapes temptations and trials in this life, but him who endureth and beareth them with courage and conſtancy, patience and ſubmiſſion. (Aſſ. and B.) 3. That whereas Eraſmus cenſures this expreſſion (euprepeia tou proſopou autou) "the grace of the faſhion of it," as harſh; herbs and flowers are the gayeſt beauties of the lower creation; and a beautiful face, gay appearance, &c. aſcribed to them, ſounds neither with harſhneſs nor impropriety. I hope, at leaſt, 'tis not harſher, than aſcribing a brow, or a breaſt, to a mountain: And yet, we find the former in Herodotus, to which a paſſage in St. Luke iv. 29. is exactly parallel; the latter in Xenophon, which is bolder than any thing of that nature to be met with in the Divine writers of the New Teſtament. (Blackw.) 4. That whereas certain of the Romaniſts, for the authorizing the book of Eccleſiaſticus, will needs have this paſſage, and that of 1 Pet. i. 24. to be cited out of ch. xiv. 17. of that apocryphal book; 'tis evident, that they are, word for word, taken out of Iſa. xl. 6, &c. but have no better agreement with the other, than the graſs of the field with the wearing of a garment. (Coſin) And, 5. That the riſing ſun is wont, at certain ſeaſons, to be accompanied with a wind, called (cauſon) burning, or ſcorching, Jonah iv. 8. to which the Apoſtle ſeems here to allude, by the "ſun's riſing with a burning heat." (G.) See Dr. Hammond at large on this text; and the notes on ver. 2. Matth. v. 3. and xix. 29. Luke xii. 20. and xvi. 19. Let no man ſay.] Of the temptations, or trials, by affliction, the foregoing verſes have treated. The Apoſtle comes here to another more reſtrained ſenſe of the word, as it imports ſeducing men to ſin. Now, to this the Devil is moſt emphatically ſtyled the tempter: Becauſe he is always lying in wait, and induſtriouſly ſuggeſting evil thoughts; either drawing us from good purpoſes, or putting us upon, and emboldening us in, wicked ones: Yet, this ſort of temptation is here aſcribed to the corrupt inclinations of our own hearts. The truth is, in all ſeducement, the tempter plays our own artillery upon us. For, by the corruption, which, ſince the fall, mankind lie under, their faculties are miſerably weakn'd, ſo as to become a fit matter to the ſubtle enemy of ſouls to work upon. When therefore a man is tempted by his own luſt, he is alſo tempted of the Devil; and when tempted of the Devil, he is tempted of his own luſt: Becauſe the corruption of our nature, meant by the word luſt, is the inſtrument the Devil makes uſe of; and it is our preſent unhappineſs to have a falſe party within, which holds a correſpondence with the enemy, and furniſhes thoſe very arms which he labours to ſlay us by. But, as we daily imitate our firſt parents in their tranſgreſſion, ſo do we alſo in their contrivances to cloak and excuſe it too. Some have had the confidence to argue, That as to our weakneſs and corruption, God knows it perfectly; and how far we are from being an equal match for the enemy who attacks us: That God declares, That he hates ſin, That he tempts no man to ſin, That he willeth not the death of a ſinner: But, (ſay they) Does he not ſuffer man to be tempted? Nay, Does he not ordain the very temptations; that is to ſay, thoſe very events which become occaſions of ſin to them? Theſe (and ſuch like) are pretences ſometimes laid hold on, to ſilence the reproaches of a guilty conſcience. But, it is to be obſerv'd, That theſe objectors agree with us in this principle, That it cannot conſiſt with the notions we ought to entertain of God, to ſuppoſe, That a Being perfectly good, ſhould lead men into inevitable ruin; Or that a Being, perfectly holy ſhould be author of, or partaker in, the ſins of men; Or that a Being perfectly juſt, ſhould puniſh men for facts by himſelf ordain'd; and neceſſarily brought upon them, without any ſeeking or concurrence of their own. Now, this being premiſed, as out of the queſtion, the following particulars may ſatisfy all reaſonable ſcruples about this matter; If we conſider, 1. That it can be no reflection upon God to preſerve men in that liberty of the will, which all allow to be the moſt valuable liberty of any. 2. That if there were no motives to be reſiſted, then doing well would not entitle us either to virtue or reward: And conſequently, that our preſent temptations, by furniſhing opportunities for the exerciſe of our virtue, do plainly add both to our preſent commendation, and to our future happineſs. 3. That temptations are not properly the cauſes, but merely the occaſions and inſtruments of ſin: And, even then, they are not ſuch, by any natural tendency of their own; but altogether made ſuch by our neglect or miſmanagement. And, 4. That, notwithſtanding the deplorable impotence of humane nature, and that unhappy bent of paſſion and inclination, which draw us much more ſtrongly to evil than good; yet, bleſſed be God, there is a proviſion made for this alſo, by the aſſiſtances of that grace, which is promiſed to all our weakneſſes and wants; upon condition, it be earneſtly ſought, and diligently improv'd: And this is what the Apoſtle had before recommended to us, ver. 5, &c. (Stanh.) But obſerve alſo, more particularly, 1. That here are ſet down two ways, where luſt tempts unto ſin; that is, ſo as to prevail againſt us; Firſt, By drawing us away, under pretence of ſome danger, from that which is good: And Secondly, By enticing us into that which is evil, under the appearance of that which is pleaſant and delightful. (Aſſ. and Sanderſ. and Wells) 2. That here are five degrees of temptation; 1. Luſt, or concupiſcence, ſolliciting the will: 2. An imperfect conſent, or conception of ſin: 3. A perfect conſent, which "bringeth forth ſin," and takes away righteouſneſs: 4. A conſummation, or finiſhing of the ſin; which diſpoſes to the habit, and often adds accomplices to the ſinner: And, 5. The fruit of it, which "bringeth forth death;" the eternal death both of body and ſoul, in the impenitent. And whoever trembles not at the firſt degree, runs the riſque of arriving at the laſt. (Aſſ. H. W. B. Wells, and Q.) See Whitby and Burkitt, and Mr. Collier's ſermon, at large, on this text; and the notes on ver. 5, &c. Matth. vii. 7. John xv. 5, &c. Rom. v. 12. and vii. 7. 1 Cor. vii. 5. and x. 13. 2 Cor. xii. 9. Phil. iv. 13. 1 Theſſ. iii. 5. and 22. and 1 Tim. vi. 9.

Do not err.] Me planasthe; Be not deceived. This caution, as it ſtands between both, may be very well referr'd, both to what is ſaid before, ver. 13. concerning that wrong and wicked notion, of God's being the cauſe of ſin; as alſo to what is added, ver. 17. concerning that other wrong notion of men's virtue being owing to the influence of the Heavens, or their conſtitution, and not to the concurrence of God's grace. And that both theſe opinions obtain'd among the ancient Jews, is evident from their writers. (Wells) See Grotius, and Hammond on this text.

Every good gift.] Here is a reaſon given, why we ſhould not conceive that God is the author of ſin; becauſe God is the author of all good. Now, if he ſhould likewiſe be the author of ſin, by tempting man to it, there would be found a change in him. (Aſſ.) The appearances of the heavenly bodies vary, and their influences are more powerful, or feeble, in proportion as themſelves are nearer to us, or more diſtant from us. Now, thoſe bodies, being continually in motion, muſt conſequently change their ſuppoſed power with their ſituation; ſo that, as themſelves are not, ſo neither can the effects attributed to them be, fixed and conſtant. But "the father of lights" is immutable and omnipreſent: He is always at hand, to hear and to help; and always both able and willing to do that, which he knows to be moſt for the advantage of them, who have recourſe to him, for ſuccour and ſupplies. Now, this fully anſwers the Apoſtle's purpoſe: For, 1. By declaring God to be the author of "every good and perfect gift," he ſtrengthens his exhortation, to beg of him a ſupply of all neceſſary wiſdom: 2. By obſerving the unchangeableneſs of God's nature and will, he hath abundantly confuted the error of thoſe, who, by holding a fatality in all events and actions, do from thence ſlide into a conſequence not eaſy to be avoided, viz. the horrible impiety, of charging the ſins of men upon God, the ſuppoſed ordainer of that fatality. For what can be a greater contradiction, than, that the giver of all the good, ſhould likewiſe be the author of all the evil, in the world? (Stanh.) And that we are believers and religious, is not owing to fate, or to the good temperature of our own conſtitution, or the happy poſition of the Heavens at our natural birth: But, on the contrary, "of his own will," and mere pleaſure "he begot us with the word of truth;" that is, with the Goſpel; That we, believing Jews, "ſhould be a kind of firſt-fruits of his creatures;" that is, ſhould have the favour of being firſt call'd to the Chriſtian faith before the Gentiles. Which conſideration is an undeniable argument, that God will not do any thing to deſtroy that ſpiritual life, which he has ſo freely begotten us too; and conſequently does by no means tempt us to ſin, that being the only thing that can deſtroy the ſpiritual life. (Wells) See Bp. Andrews's ſermons, and Dr. H. Leſlie's 1627. on this text; and the notes on ver. 5. Luke xviii. 1. John i. 13. and iii. 3. Rom. x. 14. Eph. i. 4, &c. 2 Tim. i. 9. Hebr. xii. 23. and xiii. 8.

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak, ſlow to wrath. For the wrath of man worketh not the righteouſneſs of God. Wherefore lay apart all filthineſs, and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, and receive with meekneſs the engrafted word, which is able to ſave your ſouls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own ſelves. For if any man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glaſs: For he beholdeth himſelf, and goeth his way, and ſtraitway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoſo looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, this man ſhall be bleſſed in his deed. If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, To viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction, and to keep himſelf undefiled from the world.

Be ſwift to hear.] The Apoſtle having before intimated, that "the word of truth" is the inſtrumental cauſe of our new and ſpiritual birth, he here lays down directions for our behaviour with regard to it. 1. Diligent endeavours to be inſtructed in this word, meant by being "ſwift to hear," that is, making uſe of all proper means and opportunities for underſtanding our duty: 2. Modeſty; or being "ſlow to ſpeak;" not taking upon us raſhly to be teachers, through a vain conceit of our own ſufficiency: Which, tho' it might perhaps be intended for a reproof to the Gnoſticks of that age, is yet but too applicable to multitudes in every age. And, 3. The government of our paſſions; particularly, that of anger. To this purpoſe, he adds, "ſlow to wrath," and recommends its oppoſite virtue, meekneſs, ver. 21. the neceſſity of which is declar'd, ver. 23. that "the wrath of man worketh not the righteouſneſs of God." That is, by ſome, underſtood to regard the Zealots among the Jews: But it certainly is a ſeaſonable reproof to all, who make the warmth of their zeal either a pretence, or a real occaſion, of gratifying the bitterneſs of their own diſpoſition; and particularly thoſe, who take it amiſs, to be admoniſh'd or reprehended, and who count them their enemies who tell 'em the truth. And, 4. Another direction here is to lay aſide "all filthineſs and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs." In which latter expreſſion, ſome have ſuppos'd a peculiar elegance, as alluding to circumciſion in particular: As there is alſo in that other metaphor, which commands us to "receive with meekneſs the engrafted word;" Engrafting being the incorporating one ſort of plant with a tree of another, by which means the old ſtock is not deſtroy'd, but a new quality ſo ſuperinduc'd, that the fruit is from thenceforth chang'd, and made more generous: Thus, the Word muſt be throughly join'd to us, and made of a piece with us; it muſt penetrate, and mingle with, and influence, every faculty of our minds: And thus it becomes "able to ſave our ſouls." (Stanh.) See the notes on Rom. vi. 4. 1 Cor. iii. 6 Eph. iv. 26 and Hebr. xii. 1.

But, be ye doers.] This phraſe, "doing of the word," in its true notion, imports obedience to the word, in its full comprehenſion; That, as we muſt obey it all, ſo we muſt obey it upon a right principle; That we are to practiſe the word in that ſenſe and perfection, to which the Goſpel hath advanc'd the old Moral Law; and that none are eſteemed faithful in this matter, except thoſe who continue faithful unto the end. From whence, the inference is unavoidable, That all, ſhort of theſe qualifications, is a "deceiving ourſelves, and being no better than "hearers only." (Stanh.) See Biſhop Andrews's ſermon on this text, and the notes on ch. ii. 14. Matth. vii. 21. Luke xi. 28. and xii. 4 John xiii. 17. and xv. 14. and Rom. ii. 13.

Beholding his natural face.] Obſerve, 1. The word of God compar'd to a glaſs; or mirrour and that very ſignificantly: For it is like a faithful glaſs, wherein we may ſee what we are, what we are not, and what we ought to be; we may perceive both God and ourſelves, Chriſt's beauty and our own deformity, our own diſeaſe and our remedy; and whereby we have not only an opportunity of knowing ourſelves, but a certain rule and model by which to ſet right whatever we ſee amiſs in us. (G. Stanh. B. and Q) 2. A beautiful diſtinction in the terms here uſed. The careleſs and forgetful hearer is compar'd to one who only beholds his face, as it were, en paſſant, but does not ſtay to adjuſt what is out of order; and this is further heighten'd alſo, by alluſion to a man, rather than to a woman, ſince women are wont to be far more curious and exact in that particular, than it becomes a man to be: Whereas he who makes the proper uſe of God's word, is compar'd to one who carefully and intentively looketh into it, and continueth at it, (parakypſas) bowing, and ſtooping down to it, and ſeriouſly endeavouring to correct whatever he finds to be out of order. (G. Aſſ. Leigh, H. Stanh. B. Wells, and Q.) And 3. From the bleſſing here promis'd to the "doer of the work," we have a plain argument, that works, as well as faith, are conſider'd by God, as the means or conditions of our juſtification. (Wells) Yet, the Apoſtle doth not ſay, "this man ſhall be bleſſed for his deed," but in his deed. 'Tis an evidence of our bleſſedneſs, not the ground of it; the way, not the cauſe of bleſſedneſs. (B.) See more of this on ch. ii. 24. and Dr. Hammond at large here.

Bridleth not his tongue.] See this ſubject treated of at large, in the notes on ch. iii. 2, &c.

Pure religion and undefiled.] The Apoſtle plainly diſtinguiſhes here, between a religion, which will paſs very well upon men, and that which is neceſſary for recommending us to "God and the Father." They ſee our actions only, and in regard of them we muſt be cautious: He is a ſearcher of hearts; and therefore, nothing can gain his approbation, which is not "pure and undefiled." To pleaſe them, we ſhall find it neceſſary to do no injuſtice: Pleaſe Him we cannot, without doing all the good we can: Acts of mercy and pity; relief to the diſtreſſed, and redreſs to the injur'd, when theſe are in our power; condoling with them, and compaſſion for them, when no more is in our power. For all this, no doubt, is intended, by "viſiting the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction." And ſo again, mortifying all our carnal appetites; getting above the temptations of ſenſuality and covetouſneſs; refining all our deſires; preſerving chaſt and holy hearts; and leading a rational and divine life: All this, and nothing leſs, we are to underſtand, by "keeping ourſelves unſpotted from the world." In ſhort, the Chriſtian religion expects from all its profeſſors, that they ſhould not only eſchew evil, but heartily hate and abſtain from the very appearance of it; that they ſhould cleanſe their hearts, as well as their hands; that they ſhould do all the good they can, and do it with delight; and that they ſhould not only obey, but ſtudy to adorn, the doctrine of their Lord in all things. (Stanh.) See Dr. L. Butler's ſermon, in 1704. and Mr. Swynfen's in 1705. both on this text; and the notes on Rom. xii. 2. Phil. iv. 8. and 1 Theſſ. v. 22.

CHAP. II.

No reſpect of perſons, in religious matters, becauſe of any wordly advantages. Faith without works availeth nothing.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. MY brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Lord of glory, with reſpect of perſons. For if there come unto your aſſembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in alſo a poor man in vile raiment; and ye have reſpect to him that weareth the gay cloathing, and ſay unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and ſay to the poor, Stand thou there, or ſit thou here under my footſtool: Are ye not then partial in yourſelves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God choſen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promiſed to them that love him? But ye have deſpiſed the poor. Do not rich men oppreſs you, and draw you before the judgment-ſeats? Do not they blaſpheme that worthy name, by the which ye are called? If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the Scripture, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf, ye do well: But if ye have reſpect to perſons, ye commit ſin, and are convinced of the law as tranſgreſſors. For whoſoever ſhall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that ſaid, Do not commit adultery; ſaid alſo, Do not kill Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a tranſgreſſor of the law. So ſpeak ye, and ſo do, as they that ſhall be judged by the law of liberty. For he ſhall have judgment without mercy, that hath ſhewed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth againſt judgment.

Have not the faith] As the Apoſtle had ſhewn, in the foregoing chapter, ver. 27. the duty of viſiting and relieving the helpleſs; ſo here he teaches, that we ought not, on any occaſion, partially to prefer the rich before the poor, in relation to matters of religion and right. Where we may obſerve, 1. That men are very apt to honour worldly greatneſs in general, and to admire outward appearances: As if thoſe who are, or ſeem to be, worth moſt, muſt needs be moſt worthy! (Aſſ. B. and Fox) 2. That this fault has been too common, even in the courts and conſiſtories, and other aſſemblies, both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical, that perſons of figure, and gay appearance have been reſpected, honour'd, and favour'd, while poor men have been neglected, deſpiſed, and brow-beaten. For, tho' the (ſynagogai) aſſemblies, are here generally interpreted of courts of Judicature, (wherein, according to the Jews own canon, the parties who are ſuitors muſt either both ſit, or both ſtand, to avoid all marks of partiality, whatever diſtinction may happen between them as to riches and poverty;) Yet, from the reaſon and nature of things, 'tis evidently a duty, which Chriſtian charity lays upon the rich, to provide alſo in Churches ſome decent places to accommodate the poor, for hearing the word of God, and performing the other parts of religious worſhip; whereas, in many congregations, it is a ſcandal to Chriſtianity, to ſee ſome crouded and fainting for want of ſuch conveniencies, while at the ſame time they might be admitted into ſuch ſeats which have few or none in them. (H. W. B. Wells and Fox) 3. That thoſe who thus partially prefer the rich before the poor, are ſelf-condemn'd, and convinc'd in their own conſciences, that they do evil; for the reaſons given in the verſes following. (Aſſ. W. B. and Wells) Yet, after all, 4 This cenſure is not to be underſtood as inconſiſtent with that reſpect and reverence to perſons in authority, either Eccleſiaſtical or civil, which is elſewhere commanded to be paid to them as their due. (B. and Fox) See the notes on Luke xvi. 19, &c. and xxiii. 11. Acts x. 34. Rom. ii. 11. and xiii. 7. 1 Cor. i. 26. ii. 7. vi 1, &c.

Hath not God choſen the poor?] To prevent the growing evil, condemn'd in the foregoing verſes, of under-valuing thoſe who are rich in grace, becauſe poor in eſtate, the Apoſtle here puts them in mind, That God himſelf gives countenance to the contrary practice; having conferr'd a three-fold dignity upon them; inaſmuch as they are, 1. Choſen by him; 2. "Rich in faith;" And, 3. "Heirs of the kingdom" of Heaven. As if he had ſaid, "Hath not God choſen" men as poor in this world as any, to be moſt eminent believers and Saints? And are they fit to be deſpiſed by you, when they are thus highly dignified and enrich'd by God? (H. B. and Q.) See the notes on Luke xii. 21. and xvi. 19, &c. John vii. 48. 1 Cor. i. 26, &c. and xi. 22. and 1 Tim. vi 18.

Do not rich men oppreſs you?] Another argument, ſhewing how little reaſon they had thus to deſpiſe the poor, and idolize the rich, viz. 1 Becauſe rich men are frequently oppreſſors and perſecutors; And, 2. Becauſe ſuch oppreſſors and perſecutors are generally alſo blaſphemers of the holy name of Chriſt. (H and B.)

Fulfil the Royal Law.] Obſerve here, 1. The reaſon why the Law of loving our neighbour is call'd "the Royal Law," viz. as Highways are call'd the king's, becauſe they are common to all. (Aſſ.) Or, becauſe it governs all the other laws relating to our neighbour; eſpecially the Ceremonial and Poſitive Laws, which are to give place to this of Charity and Mercy. (W.) 2. How this Law is to be fulfill'd: By "loving our neighbour as ourſelf;" that is, in the ſame manner, tho' not in the ſame meaſure; in the ſame kind, tho' not in the ſame degree; with parity, and likeneſs, tho' not in equality of proportion; and by endeavouring his good as really and truly, tho' not ſo vehemently and earneſtly, as our own. (B.) Where, by our neighbour, we are to underſtand every one to whom we may be helpful, whether rich or poor, without any limitation, or reſpect of perſons. (Aſſ. and B.) We can ſtickle in our own cauſes, and ſollicit our own buſineſs, with unwearied diligence: How active, and provident, and vigilant we can be, in things wherein our ſelves are concern'd, or when our own lives or livelihoods are in jeopardy! Not giving ſleep to our eyes, or ſlumber to our eye-lids, till we have deliver'd ourſelves from the ſnare of the oppreſſor! Now, if we can be thus fiery and ſtirring, when it is for ourſelves, but frozen and remiſs when we ſhould help our neighbour, we do not "fulfil the Royal Law," &c. (Sanderſ.) We neither "love our neighbour as ourſelves," nor do unto him as we would that he ſhould do to us. And, 3. How the Law does convince, viz. Not only by reproving, but by proving: It ſhews us a rule, and where we have departed from it; a ſtraight line, and how we have tranſgreſs'd it. (B.) See the notes on ver. 1. ch. i. 23. John xiii. 34. Rom. xiii. 9. 1 Cor. xiii. and Gal. vi 2.

For, whoſoever ſhall keep] The meaning of the Apoſtle here cannot be, that he who breaks one of the laws of God is as great a ſinner, and liable to as great puniſhment, as he who ſhall break many, or all: But that he who, wilfully and purpoſely, breaks one of the laws of God, deſpiſes and rebels againſt the authority of God, by whom the law was made. The Apoſtle here, probably, intends to oppoſe that principle, which was commonly taught by the Jewiſh doctors, and which, I fear, has infected many Chriſtians, That if a man was but careful to keep ſome of the greater precepts of the law, he might, without incurring God's diſpleaſure, break the reſt. The precepts, which many of the Jews accounted the greateſt, were ſome of theſe; The Law of the Sabbath, the Law of Sacrifiſing, and the Law of Tythes: For, theſe might be obſerv'd, without doing violence to their ſinful luſts and corrupt paſſions; which to bring men to, and to prevail with them to practice univerſal holineſs, are the great things aim'd at by all religion. When therefore the Jews come to our Lord with this queſtion, Which is the firſt and great commandment? He anſwers them, with great wiſdom, The love of God, and the love of of our neighbour; the practice of which takes in every duty we owe to God, and every duty we owe to our neighbour. How exact ſoever therefore they might be in keeping the Sabbath, or doing whatever elſe they accounted the great commandment, this could never excuſe them for their injuſtice, in favouring the rich, and oppreſſing the poor, or for the neglect of any duty commanded by God, or the commiſſion of any ſin forbidden by him; for every part of the law was enacted by the ſame authority. A wiſe and good Chriſtian will not oppoſe the means of religion to the end; he will not ſet up one part of religion againſt another; but he will lay a ſtreſs upon every duty, in proportion to its ſubſerviency to the great end of religion, univerſal holineſs of heart and life, and practiſe every one in its proper time and place: The apprehenſions he has of the goodneſs, wiſdom, and love of God, makes him conclude, that external duties would not have been requir'd, had they not been highly ſubſervient to promote the internal. On the contrary, whoſoever allows himſelf in any one ſin, either of omiſſion or commiſſion, and doth not convert and turn from it to God, is not only in a ſtate of damnation, becauſe he affronts and contemns the authority of God; but alſo ſtands prepar'd to break any other, or all, in the groſſeſt manner, whenſoever any forcible temptation may aſſault him: To which we may add, that living in the breach of any one Law will make a perſon unmeet for the enjoyment of God, as well as living in the breach of all. (G. Aſſ. Spanh. H. Hickes, W. B. Wells, and Fox) See Dr Hickes's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Matth. v. 19. and 27. and Rom. ii. 22. and iii. 20.

So ſpeak ye, and ſo do.] See the notes on ver 14, &c. Matth. v. 7. and vi. 15. Luke xi. 41. and xv. 2. and Acts x. 28.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man ſay he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith ſave him? If a brother or ſiſter be naked, and deſtitute of daily food; and one of you ſay unto them, Depart in peace, be you warned, and filled: Notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even ſo faith, if it hath not works, is dead being alone. Yea, a man ſay, Thou haſt faith, and I have works: Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will ſhew thee my faith by my works. Thou believeſt that there is one God; thou doſt well: The devils alſo believe, and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? Was not Abraham our father juſtified by works, when he had offered Iſaac his ſon upon the altar? Seeſt thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect. And the Scripture was fulfilled, which ſaith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteouſneſs: And he was called the friend of God. Ye ſee then how that by works a man is juſtified, and not by faith only. Likewiſe alſo, was not Rahab the harlot juſtified by works, when ſhe had received the meſſengers, and had ſent them out another way? For as the body withuot the ſpirit is dead, ſo faith without works is dead alſo.

What doth it profit?] So many have been the diſputes concerning the doctrine of juſtification by faith, and ſo great is the danger of miſtaking it, that, we hope, at leaſt, our readers will not think us too large, upon ſo important a queſtion, while we endeavour to lay before 'em, all that ſeems neceſſary to be ſaid here, in one view, under the following obſervations. 1. The ground or occaſion of thoſe diſputes, viz. That whereas St. Paul has declar'd, "that a man is juſtified by faith;" St. James here affirms, "that by works a man is juſtified, and not by faith only." And, 2. How theſe ſeemingly contradictory aſſertions may be fairly reconciled. In order to which, we are to conſider, 1. That as theſe Epiſtles were written to different perſons, ſo the occaſion and ſubject of them were alſo different. For, St. Paul had to do with thoſe who thought to be juſtified partly by faith in Chriſt, and partly by their own works, or the works of the law: And therefore his deſign, in excluding works from juſtification, was only to deny the ſufficiency of the works of the Jewiſh Law, or thoſe that were thought meritorious, as being wrought by our own ſtrength; and, in aſſerting, that, in oppoſition to ſuch works, we are juſtified by faith, he meant no more, than that either we are juſtified in an Evangelical way; or more particularly, by faith, he intended a practical belief, including Evangelical obedience. But St. James, writing to thoſe who confeſs'd the free juſtification thro' faith in Chriſt, but nevertheleſs did not duly conſider, that the true lively and juſtifying faith doth bring forth the fruit of righteouſneſs; he therefore proves, that where theſe fruits of faith are wanting, true faith itſelf is wanting; and that all ungodly and carnal profeſſors of Chriſt have but a dead faith, which in no reſpect is able to help or ſave them; by works meaning no more than Evangelical obedience, in oppoſition to a naked and empty faith. St. Paul's aim and drift is to prove affirmatively, that the true faith doth unite us to Chriſt, and thereby ſave us; that of St. James is negatively, to prove, that the dead, unfruitful faith, which is but a bare image of the true faith, cannot profit a man: And moreover, they do not ſpeak of juſtification in the ſame meaning of the word, but in a different ſenſe. (Giff. Aſſ. Cave and B.) For,

2. The juſtification, aſcrib'd by St. Paul, to faith without works, means abſolution from ſins which were committed by men before they believ'd in Chriſt; and the not having thoſe ſins imputed, but being admitted to peace and favour with God, upon entrance into covenant with him by baptiſm: And this cannot poſſibly be owing to their good works; becauſe, till intereſted in Chriſt, and aſſiſted by his grace, men can have no ſuch works to owe it to. But the juſtification, ſpoken of by St. James, is that other, whereby the Scriptures do ſignify the full and final juſtification of good men, in their laſt great account, as is evident from the whole tenor of his argument in this place. (Blackall, Stanh. and W.) But, 3. Suppoſing there had been any diſagreement in this matter (as indeed there is not,) 'tis moſt reaſonable to follow St. James's explanation of it; not only becauſe his expreſſions are ſo clear and poſitive, as not to be juſtly liable to any ambiguity, becauſe he wrote this ſome time after St. Paul wrote the other; and conſequently, as he was perfectly inſtructed, by the Divine Author of both, ſo he was capable of explaining the true meaning of the other inſpired Apoſtle, and to confute thoſe falſe principles which ſome men had built upon the miſtake of it: And the rather ſtill, becauſe this Epiſtle, in the opinion of ſeveral of the Ancients, as well as of learned Moderns (as were likewiſe the firſt of St. John, the ſecond of St. Peter, and that of St. Jude) was written on purpoſe to rectify the miſtakes which ſome had fallen into, through their miſunderſtanding ſome of St. Paul's writings. (Cave, Black. Wells, and Fleury) And how diſtinctly this ſubject is here treated of, and determin'd, by this Apoſtle, will appear, more at large, in the explication of the reſpective paſſages here next following

Tho' a man ſay.] The Apoſtle here proceeds to enforce his former exhortation, to "be doers of the word, and not hearers only," ch. i. 22. and what he had further ſaid, concerning ſpeaking, and doing works of charity and mercy, in the foregoing verſes of this chapter: As if he had expreſs'd himſelf thus. It is not for a Chriſtian to ſay, that his faith ſhall render ſuch works unneceſſary; for indeed, without ſuch works, his faith will profit him nothing. (H. W. and Wells) Where we muſt obſerve, 1. That ſome people there were, who thought they had St. Paul's authority to prove, that if they had but faith, it was no great matter how defective they were in good works: And therefore the Apoſtle here ſhews at large, that Chriſtianity does not conſiſt only in a profeſſion of the faith, how orthodox ſoever; and that a bare belief in Chriſt, or of the truths of the Goſpel, without bringing forth fruits anſwerable to it, in our life and converſation, will not be ſufficient to juſtify or ſave us. (Beza, Giffard, G. Hall, Aſſ. Cave, Blackall, and B.) 2. That this notion is again reviv'd, in our unhappy times, among ſome of thoſe who pretend to the title of The Reformed; againſt which error therefore it behoves all men, who have a due regard to godlineſs, and the good of their neighbours ſouls, ſeriouſly to oppoſe themſelves. (G.) But, 3. The Apoſtle doth not here ſeem to diſpute, whether the true faith doth juſtify and ſave, or not: For he only ſtates the queſtion thus, "What doth it profit, though a man ſay, he hath faith?" Speaking after the manner of thoſe who call'd it faith, when indeed it was no more than a mere ſhadow of it. (Giff.) See the notes on ver. 19. However, 4. When he adds, "Can faith ſave him?" It muſt be underſtood of faith alone, without works: And the interrogation imports a ſtrong negation; that ſuch a fruitleſs faith cannot ſave him. (Aſſ.) For, if nothing but the external profeſſion of religion, or the viſible uſe of the Sacraments, diſtinguiſhes us from Infidels, we ſhall be ſo far from being ſaved by it, that we ſhall find our condemnation therein. (Q.) As to the proper import of the words, faith, and works, ſee the notes on ver. 24.

If a brother.] The abſurdity of expecting to be juſtified by ſuch a faith alone, is here expos'd, by a familiar inſtance. Even as fair words, where no relief is given, do nothing profit the needy, naked, and hungry; ſo neither can a bare profeſſion of faith, nor that faith which "hath not works," any way profit us, in order to our juſtification and ſalvation. (Beza, Giff. G. Hall, Aſſ. H. W. B. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 26.

Yea, a man may ſay.] That is, a man, who is a ſincere believer, and has indeed a true juſtifying and ſaving faith, may ſay thus to another who pretends that he hath faith, and yet doth not manifeſt it by his works, Talk as much of thy faith as thou wilt, no man will believe thee; thy works muſt be ſuperadded to the confeſſion of thy faith, to approve the ſincerity of it: For an uniform, impartial, and univerſal obedience to God's commandments, is a ſure and certain token of a juſtifying faith, 1 John ii. 3. (Giff. G. Aſſ. H. and Wall) Thus it is in moſt of the Greek manuſcripts (ec ton ergon ſou) by thy works: But in the Alexandrian, and ſome others, as well as in the Syriac, the Ethiopic, and the Vulgar Latin, it is (choris ton ergon ſou) "without thy works;" thus, ſhew me the reality of "thy faith without thy works," which thou canſt never do, faith being an internal act of the mind, and not to be diſcover'd but by its effects; "and I will ſhew thee" the reality of "my faith by my works," as the cauſe is demonſtrated by the effects. (Hall, W. B. and Wells) And this latter reading (which the following words, ver. 20. ſeem to require) is preferr'd by our tranſlators, tho' our common Greek copies have it according to the former

Thou believeſt.] As if he had ſaid, "Thou believeſt that there is one God," and aſſenteſt to the articles of religion; and thus far "thou doeſt well." But yet, this is no more than what the very devils themſelves do; for "the devils alſo believe, and tremble:" And therefore, if thou haſt no better faith, and no better fruits of thy faith than they, thou haſt the ſame reaſon to tremble which they have. (Giff. Black. W. and B.) Where we may obſerve, 1. That the hiſtorical and dogmatical faith here ſpoken of, which is only a bare and naked aſſent to the truths of the Goſpel, or to the fundamental truths and articles of religion, is not the faith which will juſtify and ſave us. (Beza, Giff. Aſſ. H. Black. and B.) And, 2. That ſince the "believing that there is a God," without leading a life agreeable to ſuch a belief, is not of itſelf able to juſtify and ſave any man, the Atheiſt, who denies the being of a God, or at leaſt lives ſuch a life as if he did not "believe that there is a God," is worſe than the very devils, who both "believe, and tremble," under the apprehenſion of his juſtice. (Giff. Wells, B. and Q.)

But, wilt thou know?] This is the laſt reaſon; and ſerves to introduce the argument drawn from the caſe of Abraham, in the verſes next following: And 'tis remarkable, how the Apoſtle here ſtiles him a vain man, who flatters himſelf with the vain hope of being juſtified and ſaved by a "dead faith without works." (Giff. G. H. and W.) See the notes on ver. 24.

Was not Abraham?] Here the Apoſtle proceeds to illuſtrate his argument, by the great example of faith and juſtification, upon which St. Paul had argued ſo largely. In which we may obſerve, 1. The propriety and force of this example; as Abraham was not only the Father of the Jewiſh nation, in particular, to whom this Epiſtle was directed, upon which relation to him they ſo highly valued themſelves, but the Father of the faithful in general, both Jews and Gentiles. (Giff. Aſſ. and H.) 2. How he was juſtified, viz. "by works." Now, St. Paul having ſaid, in many places, that Abraham was juſtified by faith, St. James here explains, what ſort of faith it was, whereby Abraham was juſtified; namely, not ſuch a dead, and fruitleſs faith, as he had before ſpoken of, but a working faith; a faith which "wrought with his works, and by works was made perfect." His faith was full of life, efficacy and power, bringing forth the fruits of obedience unto God: Witneſs his ready and active obedience to that moſt hard and trying command, here inſtanced, of his "offering Iſaac his ſon upon the altar." Tho' he was juſtified in the ſight of God, many years before this, yet his conquering the difficulties of that ſevere trial ſhew'd the perfection of his faith, as the perfection of the fruit ſhews the excellency of the tree. Upon his giving a full and hearty aſſent to the truth of the Divine Promiſes, he was immediately receiv'd into God's favour and acceptance, even before the ſincerity of his faith had been actually tried by his obedience; and this "was counted unto him for righteouſneſs," Rom. iv. 3. ſo that he was then in a juſtified ſtate: And yet, if, after this, he had declin'd (the proof of it,) to leave his country, and his father's houſe, or even to ſacrifice his ſon, at God's command, he would, by this diſobedience, have fallen from that ſtate of Divine Favour, and not have been finally juſtified by God. (Giff. Aſſ. Black. Stanh. W. and B.) See more in the notes on ver. 24. 3. That his "offering Iſaac his ſon upon the altar," is here to be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe as is already noted on Hebr. xi. 7. 4. That what is here ſaid, of the Scripture being fulfilled, explains how we are to underſtand thoſe texts, "which ſay, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteouſneſs:" viz. That his belief was not a bare, naked, and fruitleſs faith, but ſuch as brought forth the fruit of good works; and it was with reſpect to ſuch his acts of obedience, that this Scripture is here ſaid to be fulfilled, for his life did ſhine with holy works; he was merciful to the poor, he entertain'd and lodg'd ſtrangers; he was peaceable with all men, as well as juſt and true in all his dealings: Yet, doubtleſs, this, of his "offering Iſaac his ſon upon the altar," in obedience to God's command, firmly believing, that "God was able (if he ſaw it good) to raiſe him up even from the dead," Hebr. xi. 19. was ſuch a moſt eminent, and tranſcendent evidence of the perfection of his faith, as might well be here mention'd inſtead of all the reſt. (Beza, Giff. G. Aſſ. H. W. and Wells) 5. That it was eſpecially with reſpect to this laſt trial of his faith, that "he was called The friend of God;" and that God was pleas'd to confirm his former promiſes to him, with the additional ſolemnity of an oath, (as Kings do with their friends and allies) Gen. xxii. 16. (G. and W.) 6. Whereas Serarius, the Jeſuite, would perſwade us, that this laſt clauſe was cited out of the Apocryphal book of Judith (viz. ch. viii. 22.) where indeed thoſe words are found in the Latin paraphaſe, but not in the Greek) that Latin paraphraſe itſelf was not extant in the Apoſtle's time; and we need look no further for that citation, than to 2 Chron. xx. 7. and Iſa. xli. 8. in both which places of the undoubted canon of Sacred Scripture, Abraham is expreſly call'd The friend of God. (Coſin) See the notes on ver. 24. Acts vii. 4, &c. Rom. iv. 3, 13, 18. Gal. iii. 6, 16. iv. 22, &c. and Hebr. xi. 6, 17.

Ye ſee then.] This is the concluſion drawn from the foregoing example: And the argument is thus; If Abraham of old was juſtified by a working faith, then we cannot be juſtified without it at this day: But Abraham was juſtified by a working faith; and therefore we cannot be juſtified without it at this day. For, in the ſame manner as Abraham was juſtified, we, and all others, muſt be juſtified; becauſe the means and method of juſtification were ever one and the ſame, and ever will be uniform and alike. (B) Now, the order of our juſtification is this; 1. It is God who doth juſtify, by imparting unto us his mercy and promiſes. 2. It is Chriſt who hath deſerved this mercy of God, and promiſe of ſalvation, for us, by ſuffering thoſe pains for us, which we ourſelves ſhould have ſuffer'd. 3. Faith is, as it were, the organ or inſtrument, by which we perceive and receive Chriſt, and with him the mercy and promiſes of God, by which we are juſtified. And, 4. We expreſs and declare our being juſtified, by the good works which we practiſe. Thus, upon the whole, it appears, that faith is not the thing which doth juſtify us, but rather the thing by which we perceive and apprehend righteouſneſs and juſtification. (Biſhop Alley) And our faith itſelf muſt be juſtified (that is, ſhewn to be a true faith) by our works. (Wall) But, on the other hand, the works, which cannot juſtify, are, 1. Works of perfect and ſinleſs obedience; there being none ſuch among the poſterity of fallen Adam. 2. Works done in the ſtrength of the law of Moſes, without the grace of the Goſpel. 3. Works of the Ceremonial Law; ſuch as Circumciſion, Sacrifices, and other ritual obſervances. And, 4. No works whatſoever can be relied on, as the meritorious cauſes of our juſtification; ſince the only meritorious cauſe of our juſtification is the obedience and ſufferings of Jeſus Chriſt. (Fox) Thoſe who deſire to ſee this argument more at large, may conſult Mr. Oſtervald, on the cauſes of the preſent corruption of Chriſtians, Part i. ca 4. Was not Rahab?] Leſt the example of Abraham ſhould be thought too high for our imitation, the Apoſtle here ſubjoins another as low; whoſe faith it will be a ſhame for us, at leaſt, not to imitate. (Giff. Hall, and Q) But, Tremellius and Junius obſerve, That the original word, in the Hebrew, as well as the Syriac, ſignifies either an harlot, or an hoſteſs: And tho' our tranſlators make choice of the former, yet the moſt and beſt of the Hebrew interpreters do prefer the later. See the notes on Hebr. xi. 31.

For, as the body.] Here the Apoſtle concludes this ſubject, with comparing faith, which is not accompanied with good works, to a "body without the ſpirit," or breath, which is dead; and conſequently imperfect, uſeleſs, and loathſome. In a word, Tho' there is no merit in our good works, ſo as that we ſhould be ſaved for them, yet there is ſuch a neceſſity of obedience, that we cannot be ſaved without 'em.

CHAP. III.

The neceſſity of keeping our tongues under good government, as an argument both of our ſincerity and wiſdom, as well as an ornament to our profeſſion.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. MY brethren, be not many maſters, knowing that we ſhall receive the greater condemnation. For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man, and able alſo to bridle the whole body. Behold, we put bits in the horſes mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body. Behold alſo the ſhips, which though they be ſo great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very ſmall helm, whitherſoever the governour liſteth. Even ſo the tongue is a little member, and boaſteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth. And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: So is the tongue amongſt our members, that it defileth the whole body; and ſetteth on fire the courſe of nature; and it is ſet on fire of hell. For every kind of beaſts, and of birds, and of ſerpents, and things in the ſea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poyſon. Therewith bleſs we God, even the Father; and therewith curſe we men, which are made after the ſimilitude of God. Out of the ſame mouth proceedeth bleſſing and curſing. My brethren, theſe things ought not ſo to be. Doth a fountain ſend forth at the ſame place ſweet water and bitter? Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries? Either a vine, figs? So can no fountain both yield ſalt water and freſh. Who is a wiſe man and endued with knowledge amongſt you? Let him ſhew out of a good converſation his works with meekneſs of wiſdom. But if ye have bitter envying and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not againſt the truth. This wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, deviliſh. For where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion, and every evil work. But the wiſdom that is from above, is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eaſy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits without partiality, and without hypocriſy. And the fruit of righteouſneſs is ſown in peace of them that make peace.

Be not many maſters.] The Apoſtle here reſumes the ſubject, which he had touch'd upon at the cloſe of the firſt chapter, viz. the ſin and danger of an unbridled tongue: And as he had there ſhew'd, that for a man to allow his tongue a licentious freedom of ſpeaking evil of others, is enough to render all his profeſſion of religion vain; ſo here he cautions us againſt the abuſe of it in cenſuring, rebuking and reprimanding others, For 'tis certain, the Apoſtle does not here forbid the uſe of private and brotherly admonition, or friendly reproof, proceeding from Chriſtian love of one towards another; nor yet does he condemn that of public and authoritative reproof, in the cenſuring of offenders: But ſuch a way of reproving, as is ſupercilious, maſterly, and imperious, manag'd with ſharpneſs and ſeverity, raſhly and rigorouſly; which is reviling, rather than reproving. And the check to this great evil, is the conſideration, that for ſo doing, "we ſhall receive the greater condemnation;" that is, be puniſh'd for it at a higher tribunal. Sharp reprovers, in judging others, pronounce a ſentence upon themſelves; and therefore ſuch as take this office upon themſelves, ought to look to themſelves, leſt in reproving others, they condemn themſelves. And the reaſon here given, is becauſe "in many things we offend all." (Giff. Aſſ. H. and B.) That is, We all offend in many things. (Wells) But nevertheleſs, thoſe who from this laſt paſſage take occaſion to indulge their corruptions, do not only deceive themſelves, but their ſins are attended with this high aggravation, that they abuſe the Holy Scriptures, which were written to "teach us, that denying all ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly in this preſent world," Tit. ii. 12. For tho' all men are ſinners, yet all are not alike guilty. There is great difference with reference to the nature and kinds, the number and aggravations of the ſins of men. Some repent of, and forſake their ſins; others live and continue in them: In ſome ſin reigns; in others it is ſubdued and mortified: Some not only yield to moſt temptations which offer, but even go into the way of temptation, and ſeek for opportunities of committing ſin; others do ſeriouſly endeavour to die unto ſin, and live unto righteouſneſs, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God, which is indiſpenſably neceſſary to our being in a ſtate of ſalvation. (Fox) See Mr. P. Bales's ſermon on this text, 1649. and the notes on Matth. vii. 1. and xxiii. 8. Rom. ii. 1, 20. 1 Cor. iv. 4. 2 Cor. vii. 1, and Tit. ii. 12.

A perfect man.] That is, endued with much wiſdom and diſcretion: Or a ſincere Chriſtian indeed; tho' not abſolutely perfect, according to all the parts and degrees of perfection. (Aſſ.) Able to reſiſt all other temptations, and to guide all his actions according to the Chriſtian rule. (H. B. and Wells) But, if we take the didaſcaloi, in the firſt verſe to be underſtood (as many do) of teachers in the Church, then this may properly be interpreted (according to Grotius) thus; That he who ſpeaks with diſcretion, and obſerves the proper time and ſeaſon, when to ſpeak, and when to be ſilent, is a prudent man, and able to govern the whole body of the Church. See Dr. Hammond's critical annotations on the place; and the notes on Matth. xii. 37. John i. 47. 1 Cor. ii. 6. Phil. iii. 15. and Col. iv. 6.

Behold, we put bits.] Here the Apoſtle treats of the government of the tongue, by way of alluſion to the manner of governing a horſe, by putting a bridle or bit in his mouth; of a ſhip, which is "turned with a very ſmall helm;" and of "every kind of beaſts, and of birds, and of ſerpents, and of things in the ſea," which, ſome way or other, "is tamed, and hath been tamed, of mankind." But the tongue of man is ſo much more ungovernable than all theſe, that, he tells us, "no man can tame" it: The unrulineſs of which he declares, in divers inſtances, and by various compariſons: Out of which we may obſerve, 1. That the tongue of man is apt to run out, unleſs well bridled; nor is any bridle ſtrong enough to hold it in, but that of grace, which ſtops us from ſpeaking what may grieve the Spirit of God, and juſtly offend others. (B.) Whereas he who cannot govern his tongue, is like a perſon mounted upon a fiery, untamed horſe, without bit or bridle; or like a paſſenger in a ſhip, without any helm, in the midſt of the ſea, driven by fierce winds and ſtorms. (Q.) 2. That as a ſmall ſpark of fire will ſet a houſe, a town, a city, in a flame, and lay it in aſhes; ſo will a fiery tongue inflame a family, a ſociety, a Church, a kingdom, yea the whole world, by ſtrife and contention, flattering, lying, ſwearing, &c. putting all into combuſtion; ſuch a tongue being ſet on work by the Devil, and kindled by that fire which came from hell: And the wicked world is as the wood, which the fire kindleth, according to the Syriac verſion. (Giff. Aſſ. H. W. B. and Wells) For the word megalauchei, which we here tranſlate "boaſteth great things," doth alſo ſignify doeth great things; which ſeems more pertinent to the matter in hand. (H. W. and Wells) 3. That the word herpeton, here called ſerpents, ſhould more properly be render'd creeping things, as we tranſlate it, Acts x. 12. xi. 6. and Rom. i. 23. (Leigh, and Wells) And ſo likewiſe, damazein, is not here ſo properly interpreted to tame, (which can hardly be ſaid of ſome of the wild beaſts here generally ſpoken of) as to ſubdue, maſter, and keep under, ſo as they cannot hurt us: In which ſenſe, it ſuits well with what is ſaid of the tongue, being "full of deadly poiſon;" whereas the poiſon of other things may be prevented or cured by proper antidotes. (H. and Wells) But, 4. Where it is ſaid, "The tongue can no man tame," it is not meant of his own tongue (which by grace a man may tame) but of another man's tongue; againſt which we can have no defence but innocency, and a good conſcience. (B. and Wells) 5. That when the Apoſtle ſays, "Therewith bleſs we God, and therewith curſe we men," he ſhews us firſt, the proper uſe, which we ought to make of the tongue, viz. to bleſs and praiſe God; and then the ſinful uſe which many men do make of it; namely, to curſe, ſlander and revile one another: The abſurdity of which he expoſeth, by the inſtances of a fountain, which doth not ſend forth "at the ſame place ſweet water and bitter," nor "ſalt water and freſh;" and of a fig tree, which doth not "bear olive-berries, nor a vine figs." (Giff. H. B. and Wells) And, 6. That, upon the whole, there is not to be found a more vigorous and beautiful deſcription of the miſchiefs and malignity of an unbridled tongue, than in this paſſage. Nothing upon the ſubject, that I have ſeen, comes up to the propriety and vigour of its ſingle and compound words, the liveलineſs of the metaphor, the variety of its alluſions and illuſtrations, the quickneſs of the turns, and the fitneſs and force of its compariſons. (Blackw.) See Mr. G. Giffard's ſermon, 1597. and Mr. T. Adams's 1616. both on this text; and the notes on Matth. v. 22. iii. 13. and Eph. v. 4.

Who is a wiſe man.] The Apoſtle comes here to ſhew the difference, between that wiſdom, with which ſome of them were endued, and that which they ought to acquire, if they would be juſtly eſteem'd wiſe men: As if he had ſaid, Ye perſwade yourſelves, that in cenſuring others ye ſhew much wiſdom and knowledge; but if there be that wiſdom and knowledge in you, as ye pretend, then ſhew it by your works, without imperious, and rigid, and proud cenſuring your brethren, and with that meekneſs which is guided by true Chriſtian wiſdom. For their glorying in, and boaſting of, their wiſdom, was, it ſeems, "lying againſt the truth;" and their "bitter envying and ſtrife" were a demonſtration, that their pretences to wiſdom were falſe. Such miſcall'd wiſdom is of another kind and original from that which a Chriſtian ought to be valued for: It comes not down from Heaven; but is only a certain skill to carry on worldly intereſts and projects, or to gratify the animal part of the man, or ſuch as the Devil exerciſeth, and inſpires men with: For, "God is not the author of confuſion, but of peace" and order, 1 Cor. xiv. 33. but "where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion, and every evil work." (Aſſ. H. Bradford, W. B. and Wells) See the notes on ch. i. 17. and ii. 18. Rom. xiii. 13. 1 Cor. ii. 6, 14. iii. 3. iv. 7. and xiv. 33. Gal. vi. 4. and 2 Tim. ii. 25.

Wiſdom that is from above.] Having, in the foregoing verſes, ſpoken of the wiſdom falſely ſo call'd, the Apoſtle comes here to deſcribe the "true wiſdom that is from above;" and that by its ſeveral proper characters, effects, fruits and qualities, viz. Pure, in oppoſition to earthly-mindedneſs and ſenſuality: Peaceable and gentle, in oppoſition to envying and ſtrife: "Eaſy to be entreated," in oppoſition to wilfulneſs and obſtinacy: "Full of mercy and good fruits," in oppoſition to cruelty and revenge, and all evil deeds or affections whatſoever: "Without partiality, and without hypocriſy;" Upon which deſcription, we may more particularly obſerve, 1. That tho' the true ſpiritual wiſdom be both pure and peaceable; yet it is "firſt pure, then peaceable." (B.) 2. That eupeithes does not only ſignify "eaſy to be entreated," but may alſo denote obedient, or well diſpoſed to be obedient. (Wells) And, 3. That the wiſdom that is from above, is here fully and beautifully dreſs'd up and ſet off, by an admirable variety of proper epithets. (Blackw.) See Dr. Bradford's ſermon on this text, 1710. and the notes on ch. i. 6, 17. ii. 1, &c. and 13, &c. Matth. v. 3, &c. Rom. xii. 18. 1 Cor. ii. 6. and xiiii. 4, &c. 2 Cor. v. 16. x. 1. and xi. 26. and Phil. iv. 5, 8.

The fruit of righteouſneſs.] Becauſe the world is apt to perſwade itſelf, that thoſe are miſerable who live peaceably; therefore the Apoſtle pronounceth, that they ſhall at length reap the harveſt of a peaceable righteouſneſs, who are not only of a peaceable diſpoſition, but ſeek peace, and labour to make peace between thoſe who are at variance. (Aſſ. H. and W.) See the notes on Matth. v. 9. Rom. xii. 18. Gal. vi. 8. Phil. i. 11. and Hebr. xii. 11.

CHAP. IV.

He diſcovers the true cauſe of wars, contentions, evil ſpeaking and raſh judgments: And directs us to ſubmit all our concerns to God's providence.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. FRom whence come wars and fightings amongſt you? Come they not hence, even of your luſts, that war in your members? Ye luſt, and have not: Ye kill, and deſire to have, and cannot obtain: Ye fight and war, yet ye have not, becauſe ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, becauſe ye ask amiſs, that ye may conſume it upon your luſts. Ye adulterers and adultereſſes, know ye not, that the friendſhip of the world is enmity with God? Whoſoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God. Do ye think that the Scripture ſaith in vain, The ſpirit that dwelleth in us luſteth to envy? But he giveth more grace: Wherefore he ſaith, God reſiſteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. Submit yourſelves therefore to God; reſiſt the Devil, and he will flee from you: Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you: Cleanſe your hands ye ſinners, and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: Let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heavineſs. Humble yourſelves in the ſight of the Lord, and he ſhall lift you up. Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that ſpeaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, ſpeaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: But if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. There is one law-giver, who is able to ſave, and to deſtroy: Who art thou that judgeſt another?

Wars and fightings.] The Jews had about this time great "wars and fightings," not only with their neighbours, but even among themſelves. (W. and B.) Yet there were none ſuch among thoſe of them who had embraced the Chriſtian faith. (Aſſ.) This text is therefore well paraphraſed, in connexion with the foregoing verſe, On the contrary to what is ſaid in the cloſe of the foregoing chapter, "From whence come" thoſe open and public wars, wherein the unbelieving Jews are ſo frequently engag'd againſt other nations; and thoſe leſs public fightings and diſſenſions "among you," wherein the Judaizing believers are engag'd againſt the orthodox believers? (H. and Wells) However, they both ſpring from the ſame fountain, viz. "even from our luſts that war in our members." (Aſſ.) Now, of theſe luſts, 1. Pride and vain-glory is the chief incendiary, which abounds in the hearts of Phariſaical men, who ſeek to have their perſons had in admiration, becauſe of advantage; and, for want of ordinary qualifications, and honeſt means, pretend to extraordinary revelations of the Spirit, and ſpeak great words of vanity, or by fair ſpeeches deceive the hearts of the ſimple, and ſpeak preverſe things contrary to the doctrine receiv'd from the Apoſtles, to draw away diſciples after them. 2. Envy and malice; and the Apoſtle had before told us, that "where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion, and every evil work," ch. iii. 16. 3. The immoderate deſire of having things which are ſuperfluous and unlawful, whether power, pleaſures or poſſeſſions: For, when men ſet no bounds to their luſts, they conſider not whether the end be neceſſary, or the means lawful, but they muſt have the thing, be it how it will; and they who are greedy of gain, will not ſtick to take away the life of the owners thereof, as the Apoſtle obſerves here, ver. 2. where he joins the deſire of having together with killing. And, 4. The want of a due conſideration of the miſchief and evil conſequences of war; too many to be here enumerated. (Long) See Mr. T. Long's ſermon on this text, 15. Jan. 1683. and the notes on ch. i. 14. and iii. 1, 18. Rom. vii. 23. Gal. v. 17. and 1 Tim. vi. 9.

Ye luſt, and have not.] As if he had ſaid, All your coveting, and envying, and contending and fighting brings you in no kind of profit; becauſe praying to God, which is the only means of attaining it, is neglected: Or, if ye do pray to God, "ye ask, and receive not" what ye pray for, "becauſe ye ask amiſs; that ye may conſume it upon your luſts." (G. Aſſ. H. and B.) See the notes on ver. 1. and John ix. 31.

Ye adulterers.] Meaning ſpiritual, not corporal adulterers, For, the inordinate love of the world is call'd ſpiritual adultery; becauſe it draws away the love of the ſoul from God, and diſſolves the ſpiritual marriage between God and the ſoul. (B. and Wells)

The friendſhip of the world.] See the notes on Matth. vi. 24. John xv. 19. and xvii. 14. 2 Cor. vi. 15. and Gal. i. 10.

The Scripture ſaith.] Not in any particular place, or in ſo many words; tho' the ſenſe may be gather'd out of the Scriptures. Some conceive, that the Apoſtle refers to Gen. vi. 5. and others to Numb. xi. 29. (Aſſ.) Dr. Wall obſerves, that from what Scripture, or writing, this is cited, interpreters cannot find. But the difficulty is remov'd, if, inſtead of reading this as a particular text quoted out of Scripture, we make each part of the verſe a diſtinct interrogation, and read it thus; "Do ye think that the Scripture ſpeaks in vain?" viz. when it ſo often repreſents, that "the friendſhip of the world is enmity with God:" Or, does "the ſpirit that dwelleth in us luſt to envy?" (W. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 1. Rom. viii. 11. and Gal. v. 17.

Giveth more grace.] See the notes on 2 Cor. vi. 1.

Wherefore he ſaith.] This ſentence here quoted is no where to be found in the Hebrew: But, according to the Greek of the LXX it is verbatim to be ſeen in Prov. iii. 34.

Reſiſt the Devil.] That is, Do not conſent to his temptations. See Dr. Alleſtree's ſermon on this text; and the notes on ch. i. 13. and Eph. vi. 12.

Draw nigh to God.] Viz. by repentance, faith, obedience, and fervent prayer. (Aſſ. and Wells) God will certainly draw nigh to that Chriſtian, in a way of mercy, who prepares his heart to approach and draw nigh to him, in the way of duty. (B.)

Cleanſe your hands.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 1, &c.

Be afflicted, and mourn.] See the notes on Matth. v. 4. and Luke xiv. 11.

Speak not evil.] As if he had ſaid, Speak not againſt them who do not obſerve thoſe legal ceremonies, which ſome of you Jewiſh Chriſtians do ſtill retain, nor condemn any man for not obſerving them: For he who doth ſo, ſpeaketh in effect againſt the law, by which that Chriſtian rules his actions, (that is, the Law of Chriſt, or the Goſpel;) cenſuring that for imperfect, in that it commands not thoſe things; and if thou doeſt ſo, then, inſtead of obeying the Law of Chriſt, thou undertakeſt to over-rule and judge it, and canſt not truly be call'd a Chriſtian. Chriſt, and none elſe, hath authority to give laws unto us, and to puniſh the refractory: And it is not for you to impoſe obſervances, where he hath given liberty. (H. W. and Wells) See the notes on Matth. vii. 1. Rom. ii. 1. and xiv. 10. 1 Cor. iv. 5. Gal. v. 1. and Tit. iii. 2.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Go to now, ye that ſay, To day or to morrow we will go into ſuch a city, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain: Whereas ye know not what ſhall be on the morrow: For what is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away. For that ye ought to ſay, If the Lord will, we ſhall live, and do this, or that. But now ye rejoice in your boaſtings: All ſuch rejoicing is evil. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is ſin.

To day, or to morrow.] It was a cuſtom among the Jews, to begin every thing with God; and to undertake nothing without this holy parentheſis, "If the Lord will." The ſame is alſo a common phraſe among all the people of the eaſt. Indeed, it were very much, if we men, of what nation ſoever under Heaven, ſhould go about any thing, without this ſeaſonable condition of God's help. Since "in him we live, and move, and have our being," Acts xvii. 28. certainly we ought not to venture upon any thing without him: As he ought to be in all our thoughts; ſo eſpecially in thoſe of enterpriſe and deſign, be it of the greateſt, or the ſmalleſt undertaking. Conſidering either God's providence, or the uncertainty of man's life, one would think this manner of ſpeech to be equally natural to the whole race of mankind: But, as the Jews gave the firſt example, ſo they brought it into uſe on occaſion of a wiſe ſaying of Ben Sira, ſuppos'd to be nephew to Jeremy the Prophet. His ſaying is this, The bride went up into her chamber, but did not know what was to befall her: Upon which the Peruſh there maketh this explication; Let a man never ſay, he will do any thing, without this condition, If God permit. For there was a man who ſaid, To morrow I will ſit with my bride in the bride-chamber, and will know her there. They ſaid unto him, ſay, If God will. He ſaid unto them, Whether he will or will not, to morrow I will ſit with my bride in my bride-chamber. So he did ſit with her there. At night they went to bed; but both died before he knew her. When they were found dead in the morning, their friends ſaid, That ſaying of Ben Sira was true: Upon which they added, That whoſoever hath a purpoſe to do any thing, ought to ſay, If God permit; for otherwiſe he is not like to proſper. And theſe words of St. James ſeem to have a full reſpect upon that tradition. (Gregory, H. and W.) See the notes on ch. i. 10. Luke xii 18. and Acts xvii. 28.

Rejoice in your boaſtings.] That is, in your preſumption, that ye ſhall live long, and gain much, &c. And "all ſuch rejoicing is evil;" becauſe thereby ye manifeſt, that ye neither think of God's providence, nor the brevity and uncertainty of your own lives. (Aſſ. H. and Wells)

To him that knoweth.] See the notes on Matth. xi. 20, &c. Luke xii. 47. John xi. 41. and xv. 22, &c. Rom. i. 20, 32. and ii. 17, 23.

CHAP. V.

The vanity and danger of riches ill-gotten, or not well imploy'd: Exhortation to patience and perſeverance: Caution againſt ſwearing. Direction for conduct in proſperity, adverſity, and ſickneſs: And a motive to mutual love and Chriſtian charity.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. GO to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miſeries that ſhall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and ſilver is cankered; and the ruſt of them ſhall be a witneſs againſt you, and ſhall eat your fleſh as it were fire: Ye have heaped treaſure together for the laſt days. Behold, the hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: And the cries of them, which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of ſabaoth. Ye have lived in pleaſure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nouriſhed your hearts, as in a day of ſlaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the juſt; and he doth not reſiſt you.

Weep and howl.] The Apoſtle does not here threaten all rich men; but ſuch only, as either did not make a right uſe of their riches, ver. 2, 3. but hoarded and heaped them up, and did not diſtribute them to the neceſſities of their poor brethren; or elſe abuſed them to oppreſſion, ver. 4, 6. or luxury, ver. 5. (Aſſ.) Where we may obſerve, 1. A deſcription of the ſins of ſuch covetous rich worldlings. They choſe rather to have their goods to be corrupted and ſpoil'd, than to be imploy'd to good uſes: Their victuals, which might have refreſh'd the bowels of the hungry, were ſuffer'd to putrify and ſtink; their garments, which might have cloathed their naked brethren, lay uſeleſs in their wardrobes, and became moth-eaten; and their gold and ſilver, which might have been applied to many good uſes, were ſuffer'd to canker and ruſt in their cheſts: They oppreſs'd their labourers and ſervants, by unjuſtly defrauding them of their hire and wages: They liv'd wantonly in earthly pleaſures, ſenſuality, luxury and laſciviouſneſs; eating and drinking to exceſs, and pampering themſelves, as if they were to be fattened for the ſhambles: Yea, and they even proceeded to violence and blood, condemning and killing the juſt, and innocent perſons, who did neither injure nor reſiſt them. (H. and B.) 2. The judgments denounc'd againſt ſuch ſins. The ruſt of their gold and ſilver "ſhall be a witneſs againſt them, and ſhall eat their fleſh as it were fire:" Their oppreſſion and other ſins cry againſt them, and the cries of the oppreſſed have "entred into the ears of the Lord," and ſhall bring down woful miſeries upon them. (Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) 3. The fulfilling and accompliſhment of theſe predictions, viz. In the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when the rich Jews were plunder'd and ſlaughter'd throughout Judæa and Galilee: Where, as Joſephus informs us, the Zealots ſpared none but thoſe who were poor and low in fortune; ſearching the houſes of the rich, killing the men, abuſing the women; and, in ſhort, both their ſubſtance, and their fleſh, were devour'd by the flames, which burn'd up the city and the temple, and ſo conſumed their dead bodies, and their wardrobes, and their other riches together: And that thoſe who were diſpers'd abroad in other countries fared no better than theſe, is evident from the ſame Joſephus, Tacitus, Euſebius, and other hiſtorians of undoubted credit. (H. and W.) See the notes on ch. ii. 2, &c. Matth. vi. 20. x. 18. and xxiv. 15. Luke xii. 19. and xvi. 19, &c. and 1 Tim. vi. 9, 17.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain, Be ye alſo patient; ſtabliſh your hearts: For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Grudge not one againſt another, brethren, leſt ye be condemned: Behold, the judge ſtandeth before the door. Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have ſpoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of ſuffering affliction, and of patience. Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord: That the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

Be patient therefore.] Patience is a ſenſe of afflictions without murmuring, and of injuries without revenge. (B.) And this is the proper virtue of the poor and helpleſs, when oppreſs'd by the rich and powerful. The motives here intimated are, 1. That this life is ſhort; beyond which the power of our perſecutors can extend no farther. 2. That ſuffering is a ſeed, which brings forth fruit in abundance, to thoſe who ſuffer in a Chriſtian manner. 3. The example of "the husbandman," who waiteth with long patience for rain and for harveſt. 4. That tho' a man ſhould be conſtrain'd to ſuffer, even till "the coming of the Lord," yet this is but a ſmall thing for one who expects the reward of eternity for it. 5. That he who is exaſperated, and grows bitter againſt his perſecutors, loſeth all the reward of perſecution. 6. That it is common, to paſs from bitterneſs to hatred, and thereby to deſerve condemnation, inſtead of receiving a reward. 7. That "the judge" will come quickly; and therefore we ſhould take care, not to anticipate his judgment by deſires of revenge. 8. The example of "the Prophets;" who in proportion to the greater knowledge they had of Chriſt, had ſo much the greater ſhare in his ſufferings 9. That ſince we celebrate with the Church the happineſs of the martyrs, we ought to love the fellowſhip of their ſufferings. 10. The example of Job, whoſe miraculous re-eſtabliſhment is a figure of that glory with which God crowns patience in the kingdom of Heaven. 11. That God is ſo good, that he never leaves thoſe without aſſiſtance and conſolation, who ſuffer with truſt and confidence in him. And, 12. That whoever contemplates Jeſus Chriſt, dying upon the croſs, finds there not a barren and unprofitable pattern, but a ſource of ſtrength and of courage; a God who ſuffers in thoſe who ſuffer with him; a Saviour whoſe mercy and compaſſion is never fruitleſs or ineffectual. (Q.) Upon which context we muſt further obſerve, 1. That "the coming of the Lord," here mention'd, is expreſly defined by Oecumenius, to be the expedition of the Romans; to which alſo he applies the words of Chriſt concerning John, "If I will that he tarry till I come," John xxi. 22. the time of whoſe life was extended until the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and a little beyond it. (G. H W. Wells, Fox and Wall) And this was a fit argument to ſupport the Jews of that time, who had embrac'd the Chriſtian religion, againſt the perſecutions of their brethren. Yet, 2. If we underſtand theſe words of the future judgment, they are a powerful argument to ſupport good Chriſtians under all the troubles and afflictions of this life; ſince Chriſt will then put a final period to all their ſufferings, and reward their victorious faith and patience. (B. and Fox) However, 3. The bold inquirers into the preciſe time of the laſt judgment, inſtead of doing any ſervice to reaſon or religion, contribute, as far as in them lies, to diſturb the good order and œconomy of the world, and to fruſtrate the moſt ſubſtantial virtues and moſt noble duties of Chriſtianity, which either conduce to, or which are contain'd in, an habit of Chriſtian watchfulneſs. (Chiſhull) And, 4. That from the example of Job, here recommended, we may very probably conclude, That the book of Job is a real hiſtory, and not a parable, as ſome have imagin'd it to be: For, 1. If it was a mere parable, or deſcription of a thing not really done, he could not be propos'd as a ſerious motive to, or juſt example of, patience: And, 2. As Noah and Daniel were real perſons, truly prevalent in prayer; ſo muſt Job alſo have been, or elſe he had been improperly number'd by them, as ſuch, Ezek. xiv. 14, 20 (W. and B.) See Mr. Edm. Chiſhull's ſermon on this text, 1707. and the notes on ch. i. 12. and iv. 11, 14. Matth. v. 3, &c. and xxiv. 33. John v. 22. and xxi. 22. Acts xvii. 31. 1 Cor. vii. 29. 2 Cor. v. 10. Ver. 12. But above all things, my brethren, ſwear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: But let your yea, be yea, and your nay, nay; leſt ye fall into condemnation.

But, above all things.] Tho' there is a plain connection between this and the foregoing verſes, yet there is ſuch a remarkable emphaſis laid upon this "above all things, as requires a more particular and diſtinct conſideration. Let us therefore carefully obſerve, 1. That the Apoſtle having before exhorted his Chriſtian brethren patiently to bear afflictions, and not to be provok'd to anger by them; and knowing that our impatience under ſufferings, and our unbridled paſſions, do often vent themſelves in oaths, he therefore adds this neceſſary caveat, "But, above all things, my brethren, ſwear not." (Beza, G. H W. Wells and Wall) 2. That by this prohibition, we are not to underſtand, that all ſwearing in general is abſolutely forbidden, but only ſuch as is raſh, vain, light, cuſtomary, irreverent, profane, falſe, equivocal, deluſory, or otherwiſe in its own nature unlawful. (Babingt. Andr. Spanh. Bever. W. B. and Fox) 3. That what the Apoſtle here directly levels his prohibition againſt, is the cuſtom of raſh ſwearing, and that "either by Heaven, or by the earth," or any other creature; a cuſtom too common both among the Jews and profane Chriſtians: Whereas we are taught to ſwear only in the name of God; and that too on warrantable and ſolemn occaſions. (Andr. Spanh. Aſſ. H. W. B. Wells and Fox) 4. That, in order to know, when and how we may warrantably ſwear, we are to obſerve, 1. In general, That no man may ſwear, or induce another to ſwear, unlawfully. 2. That it is no lawful oath, which is not attended with truth, juſtice, and judgment, Jer. iv. 2. The firſt of which requires, that the thing to be ſworn be true; the ſecond, that it be juſt; and the third, that it be not unfit to be ſworn and undertaken. But, 3. This muſt be underſtood with theſe particular reſtrictions, That a promiſory oath, to the certain prejudice of another man's right, cannot be attended with juſtice. 4. That no prejudice of another man's right can be ſo dangerous and ſinful, as that prejudice which is done to the right of public and ſovereign authority. 5. That the right of ſoveraign authority is highly prejudic'd, when private ſubjects encroach upon it, and ſhall combine and bind themſelves without (and much more if againſt) the authority of their lawful ſoveraign. 6. That a man is bound in conſcience to reverſe and diſclaim that which he was induced unlawfully to engage himſelf by oath to perform. And, 7. That no oath is or can be of force that is made againſt a lawful oath formerly taken. (Andr. Hall, and Maſon) And, as a man is guilty of perjury, who tranſgreſſeth theſe rules, in promiſory oaths; ſo alſo, with reſpect to aſſertory oaths, he is guilty of the ſame heinous ſin, and liable to "fall into condemnation," 1. If he ſwears to the truth of any fact, which at the ſame time he either certainly knows to be falſe, or does not know to be true. And here it matters not, whether a man certainly knows what he ſwears to be falſe: It is enough, that he does not know it to be true: Nay, ſhould it even happen to be true, yet if he thought it to have been otherwiſe, and yet ſwore to the truth of it, he forſwore himſelf; nor will his miſtake at all contribute to the excuſing his perjury before God. (Wake) Nay, 2. If he ſwears to the truth of that whereof he is only doubtful, tho' the thing ſhould happen to be true, yet it brings upon him the ſame guilt and danger; becauſe he ſwears at a venture, and the thing might, for ought he knew, be as well falſe as true; whereas we ought never to ſwear to any thing, the truth of which we do not certainly know. (W. D. M.) And, 3. If he prevaricates in any the leaſt circumſtance of what he delivers and confirms with an oath; either adding or concealing any thing which may notably affect the point to which he ſwears. (Wake) Whereas we ought to uſe the greateſt truth and ſincerity imaginable, not only in our oaths when neceſſary, but even in our common converſation, as is intimated in this text, "Let your yea be yea, and your nay nay." See more on this ſubject in the notes on ch. i. 8. Matth. v. 33, &c. xiv. 9. and xxiii. 16. Acts xxiii. 12, &c. Rom. ix. 1. and xiii. 1, &c. 2 Cor. i. 17, &c. 1 Tim. ii. 2, 8. and Hebr. vi. 16. And whoever has the curioſity to ſee this important ſubject more at large and learnedly diſcuſs'd, may conſult Biſhop Andrews on the 3d Commandment; Biſhop Sanderſon of the obligation of oaths; The Whole Duty of Man, Sund. iv. the preſent Archbiſhop Wake's Practical Diſcourſe concerning ſwearing, 1696. and the late Biſhop Hall's irrefragable Propoſitions on the ſame ſubject, 1639. re-printed 1723.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray. Is any merry? Let him ſing pſalms. Is any ſick among you? Let him call for the elders of the Church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oyl in the name of the Lord: And the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord ſhall raiſe him up; and if he have committed ſins, they ſhall be forgiven him. Confeſs your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed: The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. Elias was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not rain: And it rained not on the earth by the ſpace of three years and ſix months. And he prayed again, and the Heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

Afflicted, Let him pray.] Namely, to God, either for deliverance out of his afflictions, or for patience to undergo them as he ought. (Wells and Fox) See the notes on Luke xviii. 1.

Merry, Let him ſing pſalms.] That is, praiſe and thankſgiving to God, who has graciouſly given him this chearfulneſs of ſpirit, and ſuch proſperity or ſucceſs as makes him merry. (B. and Wells) The word pſallo properly ſignifies to ſing to the harp, or by touching ſome muſical inſtrument: And hence David's Pſalms were ſo call'd, becauſe they were made to be ſung to his lute or harp, or ſuch like inſtrument. (Johnſ.) See the notes on Eph. v. 19.

Anointing him with oyl.] Obſerve here, 1. That anointing with oyl was made uſe of by the Jews, as a natural means for recovery of the ſick: And ſome of them uſed a ſort of charms over him at the ſame time; which the Apoſtle did not at all approve of, but inſtead thereof directed them to anoint the ſick in the name of the Lord. I cannot here enter upon the diſputes which have ariſen from this paſſage: But the circumſtances here mention'd ſeem plainly to refer this anointing to the miraculous cures which were done in the times of the Apoſtles. As, 1. The prayer of faith ver. 15. that is, the prayer offer'd up to God, upon a ſtrong impulſe of the Holy Spirit, that he ſhould be enabled to perform the cure: 2. The inſpired prayer, mention'd ver. 16. (for ſo the Greek words deeſis energoumene, which we tranſlate the effectual fervent prayer, do properly ſignify) to wit, the prayer to which the perſon praying was moved by the impulſe of the Holy Spirit: And, 3. The example of Elias, ver. 17. whoſe prayer was an inſpired prayer. (G. H. Williams, W. B. Killingb. Wells, Wheatly, Fox, and Wall) 2. That tho' thoſe miraculous cures were effected wholly by virtue of that power with which the Apoſtles and others at that time were endued, (inſomuch that we read of ſome who were heal'd by the bare ſpeaking of a word, Acts ix. 34. of others cur'd by handkerchiefs or aprons, ch. ix. 12. of others by impoſition of hands, Mark xvi. 18. and Acts xxviii. 8. or even by the mere ſhadow of an Apoſtle paſſing by, Acts v. 15. in all which cures there was no uſe of any unction;) yet ſince it was cuſtomary for the Jews to apply oyl to the ſick, as an ordinary medicine, therefore the Apoſtles, in working cures upon thoſe of their own nation, did often make uſe of the ſame application; not as having any natural force in itſelf to procure the effect, but only as a ſymbol or ſign of a miraculous recovery, wrought without any means, by the ſole power and "in the name of the Lord." (H. Williams, W. Kill. Wells, and Wheatly) 3. That ſo long as that power continued in the Church, there might be reaſon for continuing the uſe of this rite, as the Apoſtle here directs: But as this, even then, was not neceſſary, ſo when that power ceaſed, there was no reaſon for the continuance of this ſign; for, to continue the ſign, without being able to perform the thing ſignified, is not to relieve, but indeed to impoſe upon and deceive the ſick. (H. Will. B. Kill. and Wheatly) And conſequently, 4. That the continuance of this ceremony of unction, in the Church of Rome, without any pretence to the power, is not only unreaſonable, but the nature and uſe of it is wholly perverted from what it was in Apoſtolical times: For, 1. It was not then uſed as neceſſary, but indifferent, and occaſional; but in the Church of Rome it is made abſolutely neceſſary. 2. It was then uſed as a mere rite or ceremony; but in the Church of Rome it is made properly and truly a Sacrament, and whoſoever ſaith it is a mere rite, is accurſed: 3. It was then uſed properly only for corporal maladies; but in the Church of Rome it is properly for the ſoul, and but accidentally for the body: And, 4. It was uſed then for the recovery of the ſick and infirm; but here it is to be applied only to thoſe who are judg'd to be paſt recovery. (H. Will. W. B. Kill. Wheat. and Fox) But, obſerve further, 5. That when the Apoſtle ſays, "if he have committed ſins," it is not his intention, by that conditional ſpeech, to intimate as if any man is without ſin; but he ſpeaks of ſuch ſpecial ſins, for the reformation of which God doth often lay ſickneſs upon men. (Aſſ. H. W. B. Kill. Wells and Wheatly) 6. That the promiſe that ſuch ſins "ſhall be forgiven him," alludes to his receiving abſolution from the Biſhop or Prieſt, when upon examination he is found fit for it, and ſincerely deſirous of it. (H. Wheat. and Wall) And, 7. That the following precept "Confeſs your faults one to another," expreſſes the preparative to, or condition of, that abſolution: And this ought to be public, in caſe of public ſcandal, as well as private to a ſpiritual guide, for diſburthening the conſcience, and as an help to repentance. (H. Comb. Will. B. and Wells) See Dr. Hammond at large, and Mr. Killingbeck's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Mark vi. 13. John ix. 31. Acts xiv. 15. 1 Cor. xii. 9. and 1 Tim. ii. 1.

Ver. 19, 20. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converterh the ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins.

If any of you do err.] Either in matters of faith or practice, as a wandring traveller doth out of the right way. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on Matth. xviii. 15. Luke xvii. 3. and Rom. ix. 3.

Shall hide a multitude of ſins.] Here is a double encouragement to excite our charity, in order to the converſion of an erring brother. 1. The advantage to the receiver; to wit, the ſaving his ſoul: And, 2. To the inſtrument himſelf; to wit, the hiding of a multitude of his ſins. (H.) See Dr. Hammond's critical note on this text; and thoſe on Acts iii. 1, &c. 1 Cor. xiii. 4, &c. and 1 Pet. iv. 8.

The END of the Epiſtle General of St. JAMES.

ANNOTATIONS

Firſt Epiſtle General of St. Peter.

THE author of this and the following Epiſtle, is ſo well known, that I ſhould not need to ſay more of him here, than to refer the reader to the notes already made, upon ſeveral paſſages of his life, in the progreſs of this work: And particularly, as to what relates to his Call, Matth. iv. 18. and x. 1. to his pretended ſupremacy, Matth. x. 2. and xvi. 18. Mark iii. 16 John xxi. 15. Acts i. 15. v. 15. viii. 14. xi. 7. and xv. 19. to his infallibility, Matth. xvi. 23. Mark viii. 33. and Gal. i. 18. and ii. 11, &c. to his forward and raſh zeal, Luke xxii. 50. to his ſelf-confidence and fall, Luke xii. 34, 60. John xiii. 38. and xviii. 26. and to his recollection and repentance, Luke xxii. 62. But ſince the Romaniſts conſtantly affirm, that St. Peter was 25 years Biſhop of Rome, upon which they zealouſly contend for the ſupremacy of the Popes, or Biſhops of Rome, as his ſucceſſors, whilſt others, with equal zeal, deny that ever he was there; it may be of uſe to our readers, to ſet the fact before them, in a true light, that they may ſee how to avoid the extremes on either ſide, and hold faſt the truth between both. 1. Then, it is undeniable, That St. Peter's having been at Rome is atteſted by witneſſes of the moſt remote antiquity, perſons of great eminency and authority, and who liv'd near enough to thoſe times, to know the truth and certainty of what they reported; namely by Papias, Irenæus, Dionyſius of Corinth, Clemens of Alexandria, Tertullian, Caius, Origen, &c. 2. The arguments uſually produc'd, to ſhake the credit of their teſtimony, are chiefly negative, drawn from the ſilence of other authors; which can be of no force againſt the poſitive authorities of ſo many credible witneſſes. 3. 'Tis true, there is no mention of this, either by St. Luke, in the Acts of the Apoſtles, nor in any of St. Paul's Epiſtles, written to or from that place: But all the inference to be drawn therefrom, is only that St. Peter was not, and probably had not been, at Rome, ſo early; tho' he might come thither after that time. But then, 4. This will no way confirm the Popiſh account of his having been 25 years Biſhop there, becauſe 'tis generally agreed, that he ſuffer'd martyrdom about the year of our Lord 68. which was not more than 8 years after St. Luke's writing the Acts, nor could be more than 9 or 10 after St. Paul's writing thoſe his Epiſtles, as I have already noted in the reſpective Prefaces thereunto prefix'd. Therefore, 5. It is evident, that St. Peter's coming to Rome was but a very few years before his death, and probably during St. Paul's being there the ſecond time; with whom he might joyn, in preaching to the Jews there, as St. Paul did to the Gentiles, and then ſhare with him the glory of martyrdom. But in whatever year he firſt came thither, 'tis certain, 6. That the honour of founding a Chriſtian Church at Rome can't be aſcrib'd to St. Peter, excluſive of St. Paul, ſince all the Ancients, who ſpeak of his having any hand in it, expreſly mention St. Paul, as at leaſt equally concern'd with him: And therefore, whatever authority the ſucceeding Biſhops of Rome can claim, from their Apoſtolical founder, it ſhould in reaſon be deriv'd to them as ſucceſſors to St. Paul, the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, rather than St. Peter the Apoſtle of the circumciſed Jews. See more of this in the Preface to the Romans, and the notes on Rom. i. 11, &c. xvi. 3, &c. and Col. iv. 10. and divers other places.

ii. Granting therefore, that St Peter was actually at Rome, ſome time (tho' far ſhort of what the Papiſts pretend) before his death, there is little or no reaſon to doubt, that he wrote this Epiſtle from thence; and conſequently but a few years before his martyrdom. See the notes on ch. v. 13.

iii. As to the occaſion and ſubject of it, this Apoſtle having by agreement the more immediate charge of the circumciſion, Gal. ii. 7. wrote to them in general this Epiſtle, which might reach them whereſoever they were diſperſed and ſcatter'd abroad: And therein his principal aim is, to confirm them in the Chriſtian religion, to encourage them to patience under their ſeveral trials, and to excite them to the practice of their reſpective relative duties, adorning their holy profeſſion with a ſuitable and becoming converſation. And

iv. As to ſtyle, 'tis well obſerv'd by a judicious Critic, frequently here quoted, That the plain Fiſherman, without the advantages of learning and polite education, is ſometimes equal, in the marvellous and majeſtic, to the learned ſcholar of Gamaliel, and great doctor of the Gentiles.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle bleſſeth God for his manifold ſpiritual graces; ſhewing that ſalvation in Chriſt is no new doctrine, but propheſied of old time: And exhorteth them accordingly to a godly converſation, as being now born anew by the word of God.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. PETER, an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, to the ſtrangers ſcattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia, elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through ſanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt: Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied. Bleſſed be the God, and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead, To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation, ready to be revealed in the laſt time: Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations, That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt: Whom having not ſeen, ye love; in whom, though now ye ſee him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; Receiving the end of your faith, even the ſalvation of your ſouls. Of which ſalvation the prophets have enquired and ſearched diligently, who propheſied of the grace that ſhall come unto you: Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Chriſt which was in them did ſignify, when it teſtified before hand the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow: Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themſelves, but unto us, they did miniſter the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the Goſpel unto you, with the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven; which things the angels deſire to look into.

Peter, an Apoſtle.] See the notes on Rom. i. 1. 1 Cor. i. 1 and 1 Tim. i. 1.

To the ſtrangers, ſcattered.] When it was, that theſe diſpers'd or ſcatter'd Jews came and ſettled in theſe countries, is neither very eaſy nor material to decide. It is not to be doubted, but it was done by degrees; ſuch Jews as quitted their own country ſetling firſt in ſuch other countries as were nearer to them, and afterwards, on ſeveral occaſions, removing further and further into countries more remote from Judæa. (Wells) See the notes on John vii. 35. and Jam. i. 1.

Elect, according.] Here is a ſtrange and needleſs tranſpoſition of words. St. Peter puts the words (eclectois perapidemois diaſporas) to the elect ſtrangers of the diſperſion, &c. whereas the word eclectois, which he put the firſt in the ſentence, our tranſlators have placed the laſt. He uſes the word eclectoi, to denote Chriſtians: And as St. Paul directs almoſt all his Epiſtles to the Saints (that is, Chriſtians) of ſuch a place, ſo does St. Peter here, to the elect (that is, Chriſtians) ſojourning in the diſperſions of Pontus, &c. (Wall) See the notes on John xv. 19. Rom. viii. 29. Eph. i. 4. and Col. iii. 12.

Sprinkling of the blood.] See the notes on Hebr. xii. 24.

Grace unto you and peace.] See the notes on Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. and Eph. i. 2.

Bleſſed be the God and Father.] See the notes on John iii. 3. Rom. i. 8. viii. 24. and ix. 5. 1 Cor. i. 4. and 2 Cor. i. 3.

Begotten us again.] See the notes on John iii. 16. Acts xiii. 33, 38. Rom. i. 4. and viii. 29. 1 Cor. i. 3. and xv. 20, &c. Eph, ii. 3. Col. i. 5. 1 Theſſ. v. 8. Tit. iii. 5. and Hebr. vi. 19.

An inheritance incorruptible.] See the notes on Rom. viii. 17. Gal. iii. 18. Col. i. 12. and iii. 4.

Who are kept.] See the notes on ver. 10. John vi. 39. x. 28. and xvii. 11. 1 Cor. i. 8. Col. iii. 3. 2 Theſſ. i. 7. 2 Tim. i. 10. and ii. 10.

Wherein ye greatly rejoice.] En ho; In which thing. (Wall) That is, in the belief and expectation of the glorious and incorruptible inheritance in heaven; which is fit matter of rejoicing to us, in the midſt of our preſent afflictions, wherewith we are, for the preſent, by God's Divine Wiſdom, permitted to be exerciſed, for the promotion of his glory, or the furtherance of our ſalvation. (H. W. and B.) See the notes on Matth. v. 12. Acts v. 41. Rom. v. 2. viii. 18. and xii. 12. 1 Cor. x. 13. and xi. 32. 2 Cor. iv. 17. and vi. 7. 2 Tim. ii. 11. Hebr. xii. 11. and Jam. i. 2.

The trial of your faith.] See the notes on Rom. ii. 7. 1 Cor. iii. 13. 2 Theſſ. i. 12. and James i. 3.

Whom having not ſeen.] Hon ouc eidotes. If this reading be true, then it is moſt proper to tranſlate the words thus, "Whom having not known:" If hon ouc idontes, (as other copies have it, and all the verſions do tranſlate it) be the true reading, then our tranſlation is right alſo. (W.) But the former reading is confirm'd by all the manuſcripts us'd by Dr. Mill, but three; as appears from him on this text: Neither does St. Polycarp's Epiſtle make any thing againſt it, he not citing the ſaid text at large, but only in ſhort; and 'tis likely the ſame is alſo the caſe of Irenæus. Indeed eidotes ſeems to have been chang'd into idontes, only becauſe it ſeem'd incongruous to ſay here, that Chriſtians do not know Chriſt, when in other places of Scripture, to know Chriſt or God is an expreſſion uſed to denote the being Chriſtians; it being not obſerv'd, that St. Peter is here to be underſtood of knowing Chriſt by face, or in perſon; as is evident from the following part of the text: Which likewiſe ſerves to ſhew, that eidotes is the true reading, foraſmuch as horontes (which is equivalent to idontes) is mention'd in the ſaid latter part of the verſe; and conſequently, if idontes were the true reading, there would be no other than a tautology. (Wells) See the notes on John xx. 31. 2 Cor. v. 7. and Hebr. xi. 1.

Receiving the end.] See the notes on Rom. vi. 21.

Of which ſalvation.] Here the Apoſtle reſumes the diſcourſe he was upon in ver. 5. all that is between being a parentheſis. (Wall) The Prophets had a general and obſcure notion of an eternal life to be publiſh'd to men by the Chriſt; and ſearched to know, at what time this coming of Chriſt, and this publication would be: "Unto whom it was revealed," only in general, "that not unto themſelves, but unto us" Chriſtians, did belong the grace of that ſalvation which they propheſied of; and which is now declared unto us more clearly, by the Apoſtles, who were endow'd with a more extraordinary meaſure of the Holy Spirit "ſent down from heaven" upon them. (G. Aſſ. H. W. B. Wells and Wall) See the notes on Matth. xiii. 17. Luke xxiv. 26, 46. Acts xxvi. 23. 2 Tim. iii. 16. and Hebr. xi. 39.

The Spirit of Chriſt.] To en autois pneuma Chriſtou: That is, (ſay the Socinians) The Spirit in them, which ſpake of Chriſt, as the word of life and of ſalvation, is the word which ſpeaks of life and of ſalvation. But, in this ſenſe, he might as well have been ſtyled the ſpirit of antichriſt, or of the falſe prophets, becauſe he alſo ſpake of them. All the Ancients agree in the other ſenſe, that Chriſt ſpake by his Spirit, they being inſpir'd with his grace, and taught by his Spirit, their words proceeding from the Divine Word moving them, and by him they propheſied; and that he ſpake in Iſaiah, Elias, and in the mouth of the Prophets. (W.)

The Angels deſire to look into.] See the notes on Jam. i. 25. and Eph. iii. 10.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Wherefore gird up the loyns of your mind, be ſober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; as obedient children, not faſhioning your ſelves according to the former luſts in your ignorance: But as he which hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy in all manner of converſation; becauſe it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy. And if ye call on the Father, who without reſpect of perſons judgeth according to every mans work, paſs the time of your ſojourning here in fear: Foraſmuch as ye know, that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold, from your vain converſation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot: Who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifeſt in theſe laſt times for you; who by him do believe in God that raiſed him up from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God. Seeing ye have purified your ſouls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unſeigned love of the brethren, ſee that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently; being born again, not of corruptible ſeed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. For all fleſh is as graſs, and all the glory of man, as the flower of graſs. The graſs withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the Goſpel is preached unto you.

Be ye holy.] The Greek phraſe here (cata ton caleſanta humas hagion) in imitation of that holy one who called you, which we tranſlate, "As he which hath called you is holy," is mark'd down by Vatablus for a Hebraiſm; but the very ſame form of ſpeech is found in Xenophon. (Blackw.) See the notes on Rom. vi. 19. xii. 2. 1 Cor. vi. 20. and xv. 34. 2 Cor. vii. 1. 1 Theſſ. iv. 7. and Hebr. xii. 14.

Not redeemed with corruptible things.] The firſtlings, or firſt-born, of man and beaſt, the Lord challenged as his own, Exod. xiii. 1. The ground of which law was, becauſe God ſmote all the firſt-born in Egypt, both of man and beaſt, but ſpared the Iſraelites; for a perpetual memory of which benefit, he commanded them to ſanctify all their firſt-born males unto him. Now the firſt-born of men and of unclean beaſts were redemed for five ſilver ſhekels of the ſanctuary, paid unto the Prieſts for each of them, Numb. xviii. 15. unto which the Apoſtle plainly alludeth here. Who do by him believe.] Here the Socinians argue thus; He by whom we believe in God, is not that God in whom we believe; for the means of faith can never be the object of it: But Chriſt is he by whom we believe in God; Therefore Chriſt is not God! To which I anſwer; Chriſt, according to the nature which died for us, and which was raiſed from the dead, is he by whom we believe in God; i. e. own him to be able to raiſe us alſo from the dead; and, according to that ſame nature, we acknowledge him not to be God: But, that hinders not his being God, according to that nature by which he had power to, and actually did, raiſe himſelf from the dead. CHAP. II.

Exhortations to charity and unity, as being all built upon one foundation, Chriſt; and to purity and good works: The duty of ſubjects, and of ſervants.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. WHerefore, laying aſide all malice, and all guile, and hypocryſies, and envies, and all evil-ſpeakings, as new-born babes deſire the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: If ſo be ye have taſted that the Lord is gracious: To whom coming, as unto a living ſtone, diſallowed indeed of men, but choſen of God, and precious, ye alſo, as lively ſtones, are built up a ſpiritual houſe, an holy prieſthood, to offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices, acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt. Wherefore alſo it is contained in the Scripture, Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner-ſtone, elect, precious: And he that believeth on him ſhall not be confounded. Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious: But unto them which be diſobedient, the ſtone which the builders diſallowed, the ſame is made the head of the corner, And a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which ſtumble at the word, being diſobedient, whereunto alſo they were appointed. But ye are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye ſhould ſhew forth the praiſes of him who hath called you out of darkneſs into his marvellous light: Which in time paſt were not a people, but are now the people of God: Which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

Wherefore, laying aſide.] See the notes on Rom. xii. 1. and xiii. 13. 1 Cor xiii. 1, &c. Eph. iv. 22, &c. Col. iii. 8. Tit. iii. 2. and Hebr. xii. 1.

The ſincere milk of the word.] The Goſpel is here compar'd to milk, 1. Becauſe of the ſweetneſs of it; 2. Becauſe of the purity of it; And, 3. Becauſe of the nouriſhing property of it. (Aſſ.) And the diſpoſitions for reading it, are, 1. The ſimplicity and docility of a child; 2. The hunger, and ardent deſire, with which it ſeeks the breaſt; 3. Without the mixture of interpretations, which corrupt the purity of the word; 4. No other deſign, but to grow in profiting by this food; 5. No other end but ſalvation; And, 6. No other taſte, but that of hope and of faith. (Q.) See the notes on 1 Cor. iii. 2. and Eph. iv. 11, &c.

As unto a living ſtone.] When Chriſt, in the Scriptures, is compar'd to a ſtone, it is either to the foundation ſtone, to ſhew, that the whole Church is built upon him, 1 Cor. iii. 11. Or elſe unto the chief corner-ſtone, to ſhew, that the whole Church, or all the faithful, are coupled and united together in him, Eph. ii. 20. and iv. 16. And he is further call'd "a living ſtone," becauſe he giveth life unto all thoſe who by faith are united unto him, John v. 26. (Aſſ.) See the notes on the texts here cited.

Built up a ſpiritual houſe.] See the notes on ver. 9. John xiv. 2. Eph. ii. 19, &c. 1 Tim. iii. 15. and Hebr. iii. 6.

Contained in the Scripture.] See the note on Rom. ix. 33.

Elect.] The full import of this word may be gather'd from the notes on ch. i. 1. Matth. xx. 16. Luke vi. 13. and xiii. 23. John xiii. 18. and xv. 16. Acts ii. 47. Rom. viii. 29. and ix. 11, 15, &c. 1 Cor. i. 27. Eph. i. 4. Col. iii. 12 and 2 Tim. ii. 10. But the more curious reader may ſee a large critique upon it at once, in Dr. Hammond on this text.

A ſtone of ſtumbling.] See the notes on Matth. xxi. 42. Acts iv. 11. Rom. ix. 33. and 1 Cor. i. 23.

Whereunto alſo they were appointed.] The meaning here cannot be, that theſe perſons were ordain'd, or appointed, by God, to be diſobedient; for, if this were the ſenſe, the fault laid to their charge would be their anſwering and fulfilling the appointment of God. But, the meaning is, that they, being diſobedient to the Goſpel of the truth, of which they had received ſo many and ſuch clear proofs, they were appointed to that puniſhment which was juſtly threatned to the diſobedient: So that, what was deſign'd by God for their ſalvation, by their ſin and obſtinacy became the occaſion of their falling into a worſe condition, and their being more ſeverely puniſh'd. (Aſſ. H. W. B. and Fox) The Apoſtle manifeſtly ſpeaks of unbelievers, and ſays, they "ſtumble at the word," which was offer'd to them, or which was put near them, or upon which they were ſet; for the original may admit of theſe three tranſlations. It is a plain alluſion to thoſe who walk, without taking notice of their way; or to builders, who ſtumble againſt the materials which are given them to build with: For, the Apoſtle had been comparing Jeſus Chriſt to a corner-ſtone, "which the builders diſallowed," and had become "a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence," to thoſe who did not believe. We muſt therefore rectify the tranſpoſition which is in the original, which gives occaſion to this dangerous miſtake, and tranſlate, with the Syriac verſion, thus, "Being diſobedient," they "ſtumble at the word," which was offered unto them, or, tho' it was offered unto them. (Eſſay) See the notes on Matth. xiii. 15. and xxi. 41. Luke ii. 34. John xii. 40. Acts xiii 47. Rom. vii. 7. viii. 29. ix. 15, &c. 33. xiv. 13. 1 Cor. i. 18. 2 Cor. ii. 15. and Jam. i. 13.

But ye are.] The titles here given to the Chriſtians are the ſame which were formerly given to the whole Jewiſh nation, by God himſelf, Deut. vii. 6. and are accordingly to be interpreted. (W. and B.) See the notes here next following.

A choſen generation.] By effectual vocation ſeparated from the world to the ſervice of Chriſt, whoſe name they bear. (B.) Not only the righteous and obedient perſons among them, but the whole nation of the Jews, are ſtiled The elect of God, throughout the Old Teſtament; as Deut. iv. 37. vii 6. x. 15. and xiv. 2. 1 Kings iii. 8. Pſa. cv. 6, 43. cvi. 5. and cxxxv. 4. Iſa. xli. 8, 9. xliii. 20. xlv. 4. and lxv. 9 Jer. xxxiii. 24. Dan. xi. 15. and Zech. iii. 2. And when, in the New Teſtament, this phraſe is applied to the Jews, it plainly ſignifies as many of them as were converted to the Chriſtian faith; tho' afterwards too many of them fell off from it, or brought not forth thoſe fruits of righteouſneſs which Chriſtianity requir'd; and yet it is applied to them all in general, and without diſtinction. (W.)

A royal prieſthood.] That is, Kings and Prieſts: Kings, becauſe of that power, which they have through Chriſt, over their luſts; and Prieſts, becauſe ſeparated to the ſervice of God. (Aſſ. and H.) Theſe words are plainly taken from Exod. xix. 6. according to the Septuagint verſion. The Hebrew expreſſion, anſwering hereunto, is, (as it is there render'd in our Engliſh tranſlation) "a kingdom of Prieſts;" which as it is render'd by one of the Chaldee Paraphraſts, Kings and Prieſts, ſo that explication ſeems to be confirm'd, Rev. i. 6, &c. (Wells) But here, we muſt obſerve, 1. That this phraſe, when applied to Chriſtians, is not ſo to be underſtood, as if all the whole body of the Chriſtian people were equally entitled to exerciſe the functions of the Prieſthood: For theſe words are plainly to be interpreted agreeably with thoſe in Exodus, from whence they are taken; and no one will be ſo hardy as to deny, that there were certain functions ſo appropriated to the Iſraelitiſh Prieſts, as that laity could not uſurp them without impiety: And accordingly, we find it evident, from all the monuments of antiquity, that the Chriſtian Laity never had a right to adminiſter the functions appropriated to the Prieſts among them. (Hughes) 2. That the Holy Scripture itſelf has made a great diſtinction, in this reſpect, between the function and dignity of the Chriſtian Prieſts and the Chriſtian Laity. For whereas other Chriſtians are but the ſheep of Chriſt, John x. 1, &c. Miniſters are the Paſtors or ſhepherds, to whom Chriſt, the chief Paſtor, hath committed his ſheep to be guided and fed, John xxi. 15, &c. Acts xx. 28. and Eph. iv. 11. Other Chriſtians are but the plants in the Lord's garden, Cant. iv. 12, 13. Miniſters are alſo the Lord's gardiners appointed of God to plant and to water them, 1 Cor. iii. 6, &c. Other Chriſtians are but living ſtones in the temple of God, which is his Church, 1 Pet. ii. 5. Miniſters are alſo God's builders, 1 Cor. iii. 9. ordain'd of Chriſt, for the edifying of his body, which is his Church, Eph. iv. 12. And finally, others are but the family, and as it were the houſhold ſervants of Chriſt, the Miniſters are the ſtewards, whom the Lord hath ſet over his family, to give to every one, of the houſhold of faith, their portion of food in due ſeaſon, Matth. xxiv. 45. Luke xii. 42. and Tit. i. 7. (Downame and Hickes) 3. That from this, and divers other ſuch like texts of Holy Scripture, it evidently appears, that the Chriſtian Church is a true and proper (altho' it be a ſpiritual) ſociety, and diſtinct from all the ſocieties of this world; and a ſociety to which all men are oblig'd to join themſelves, under the greateſt peril of their ſouls. (Hughes and Hickes) And, 4. That the ſpiritual ſacrifices, here mention'd, which the Chriſtian Prieſts are to offer up, are not only thoſe of thanks and praiſe, which are common to all Chriſtians; but more eſpecially the bread and wine in the Euchariſt; which even Deacons never had authority to conſecrate, and much leſs mere Laymen. (Hughes and Johnſ.) See the notes on John xv. 1. and xviii. 36. Acts v. 29. Rom. x. 15. and 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2.

An holy nation.] See the notes on 1 Cor. 1. 2.

A peculiar people.] Laos eis peripoieſin; a treaſure, as the word, ſegullah, ſignifies; a people in covenant with God, and ſo become his peculium, whom he will be carefull to protect and preſerve, and to whom belong his peculiar favours and privileges. (Aſſ. H. W. and B.) See Dr. Hammond at large here; and the notes on Eph. i. 14. and Tit. ii. 14.

Shew forth the praiſes.] Here the Apoſtle declares the end of all theſe diſtinguiſhing favours being granted to them, viz. to publiſh and proclaim the wiſdom, power, goodneſs and mercy, the righteouſneſs and truth of God, who had called them out of the darkneſs of ſin, ignorance, and miſery, into the marvellous light of knowledge, faith, holineſs and comfort. (Aſſ. B. and Wells) See the notes on John i. 5. iii. 19. and xii. 36. Acts xxvi. 18. Rom. xii. 2. and xiii 2. 1 Cor. vi. 11. 2 Cor. vi. 6. Eph. i. 18. ii. 2, 10, 11. iv. 17, &c. and vi. 12.

Not a people.] Hence it is concluded by ſome, that this Epiſtle was not written to the Jews only, but alſo to the Gentiles; becauſe the text quoted out of Hoſ. ii. 23. is to be underſtood of the calling of the Gentiles, Rom. ix. 25. (Aſſ.) But theſe expreſſions may very well be underſtood, as applied by St. Peter to the convert Jews; and don't ſeem neceſſarily to be meant by him of the converted Gentiles. (H. W. B. Wells, and Wall) See the notes on Rom. ix. 25.

Ver. 11, 12. Dearly beloved, I beſeech you as ſtrangers and pilgrims, abſtain from fleſhly luſts, which war againſt the ſoul; having your converſation honeſt among the Gentiles: That whereas they ſpeak againſt you as evil-doers, they may, by your good works which they ſhall behold, glorify God in the day of viſitation.

Dearly beloved.] Obſerve here, a three-fold argument to perſwade Chriſtians to the duty required, 1 In the compellation itſelf, "Dearly beloved:" He does not ſay, My beloved, or Dearly beloved brethren, to expreſs his own affection for them; but agapetoi, (the very ſame word which God himſelf makes uſe of in declaring his beloved Son, Matth. iii. 17. and xvii. 5 and elſewhere) As if he had ſaid, ſince ye are ſo dearly beloved of God, look to it, that ye abſtain from what ye know will be diſpleaſing to him. 2. From their preſent ſtate and condition in this world, wherein we are only "ſtrangers and pilgrims;" and therefore we ought not to live according to the corrupt maxims and luſts of it, to gratify our ſenſual appetites, nor to ſet our hearts upon it. And, 3. From the danger of theſe "luſts, which war againſt the ſoul;" that is, againſt the purity, the dignity, the peace, the liberty, and the very life of the ſoul. (Aſſ. H. Stan. W. and B.) And in the duty itſelf we are alſo to obſerve that as there is a great difference between temperance and abſtinence, the temperate man (for inſtance,) eating but little and moderately, the abſtinent nothing at all; ſo here, we are not allow'd to have any thing at all to do with "fleſhly luſts," or unlawful pleaſures, but abſolutely to avoid them; not exhorted to uſe them with temperance, but wholly to "abſtain from" them. (B.) See the notes on Luke xxi. 34, &c. John iii. 6. Acts xv. 29. Rom. i. 26. vi. 12, 19. vii. 5, 8, &c. 23. viii. 4, &c. and xii. 2. 1 Cor. vi. 14, &c. and xv. 34. 2 Cor. vii. 1. Gal. v. 16, &c. Eph. ii. 3. and v. 8, &c. 1 Theſſ. iv. 1, &c. and v. 5. and Jam. iv. 1.

Your converſation honeſt.] See the notes on Luke xix. 44. Rom. xii. 17. Phil. iv. 8. 1 Theſſ. iv. 12. Tit. ii. 8. and Hebr. xii. 14.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Submit your ſelves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake: Whether it be to the king, as ſupreme; or unto governours, as unto them that are ſent by him, for the puniſhment of evil-doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well. For ſo is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men: As free, and not uſing your liberty for a cloke of maliciouſneſs, but as the ſervants of God. Honour all men. Love the brother-hood. Fear God. Honour the king.

Submit yourſelves.] In this text the Apoſtle teacheth that particular part of obedience, which more eſpecially concern'd their "having their converſation honeſt among the Gentiles," ver. 12. to wit, Submiſſion to Magiſtrates; which ſome, even in thoſe days, began to refuſe, as if it had been inconſiſtent with their Chriſtian liberty! And this ſubmiſſion is here, 1. Commanded and taught in general; to be paid as an act of religion towards God, ver. 13. 2. More particularly, by declaring the object of it, viz. Not only to the King, and Supreme Magiſtrate alone, but alſo unto governors ſent by him, ver. 13, 14. 3. Enforced by divers motives; as, 1. From the end of this inſtitution; namely, "for the puniſhment of evil-doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well," ver. 14. 2. From the efficient cauſe; namely, "the will of God," or his expreſs command, ver. 15. And, 3. From the fruit or benefit of the performing it; the "putting to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men," ver. 15. 4. An objection is remov'd, concerning Chriſtian liberty; by diſtinguiſhing between that falſe liberty which is join'd with maliciouſneſs or wickedneſs, and the true liberty which renders men more apt to live "as the ſervants of God," ver. 16. And, 5. That this ſubmiſſion to Magiſtrates is a part of the ſervice of God, he proves, by a brief repetition of thoſe precepts which relate to this and the like duties, ver. 17. (Ameſ.) Upon which ſeveral heads, all that ſeems here neceſſary to be added, to what has been already noted upon the parallel texts, may be comprehended under theſe following obſervations, 1. That St. Peter's doctrine is exactly the ſame with that of St. Paul. And indeed this Apoſtle had as much reaſon to learn this leſſon as any of the reſt, becauſe of the ſevere rebuke which he receiv'd from our Lord himſelf, for his having raſhly drawn his ſword againſt the lawful powers; as we have noted upon Luke xxii. 50. Which unwarrantable action was probably the chief thing that tempted him ſo ſoon after, to deny his maſter, being conſcious of the great danger he had incurr'd, if diſcover'd to be guilty of that reſiſtance. As it has very often been the fate of thoſe men, who have been tranſported with an intemperate zeal, to draw their ſwords againſt authority, under pretence of the cauſe of Chriſt and his religion, to deny both, before they put their ſwords up again. (Sherl.) For

2. Chriſtian religion is ſo far from warranting ſubjects in the reſiſtance of their Sovereigns, that, as St. Paul commanded every ſoul (that is, every man, without diſtinction) to be ſubject, and that for conſcience-ſake, as we have noted on Rom. xiii. 1, 5. ſo here St. Peter commands the ſame (dia ton kyrion) "for the Lord's ſake:" That is, out of regard to his will and ordinance, who is the King of kings, and Governor of all things, and as we would do an acceptable ſervice to him. And as this is agreeable to both the doctrine and practice of our bleſſed Lord himſelf, and his Apoſtles, and the Primitive Fathers, who ſeal'd the truth of it with their blood; it was ſo great and evident a part of Chriſtian religion, that it was as Catholic as the Church itſelf, till firſt Popery, and from thence Presbytery, began to appear, and diſturb the world. (Baſſ.) Princes rule by virtue of God's commiſſion and authority; they are his lieutenants in the world, and therefore to diſobey them, is to rebel againſt that Sovereign and Divine authority by which they reign. (Hopk.) But then, 3. Whereas we are here injoin'd to ſubmit ourſelves (paſi anthropine ktiſei) to every human creature, or (as we render it) "to every ordinance of man," we are not to underſtand, that Kings are the mere creatures of the people, to be ſet up, and pull'd down again, by them, at their pleaſure, (for that would make St. Peter not only to contradict St. Paul, and the whole tenor of Holy Scriptures, but to be inconſiſtent even with himſelf;) ſince the Apoſtle has ſufficiently explain'd his own meaning, in the following words, "Whether it be to the King as ſupreme, or unto Governours, as unto them who are ſent by him:" From whence it is manifeſt, that by "every ordinance of man," he means all and every one that is entruſted by God with the government of the place or country where we live. As, firſt, The King, as ſupreme Magiſtrate, who receives his commiſſion immediately from God himſelf, and therefore is accountable to none but him for the execution of it; as the Apoſtle here plainly intimates, in that he calls him the Supreme: For, if he be ſupreme, then all other perſons in his kingdom are inferior to him, both ſingly and jointly, ſo that neither any one, nor all together, can juſtly pretend to any power over him, becauſe they are all under him; otherwiſe he would not be ſupreme, as the Apoſtle here calls him. Neither is this duty to be perform'd only to the King himſelf, but (as the Apoſtle adds) alſo "unto Governours, as unto them that are ſent by him;" that is, who are commiſſion'd by the King, as he is by God, to adminiſter juſtice, and execute the laws of the land, ſo far as their commiſſion reaches. So that, by this Divine Law, we are oblig'd to ſubmit ourſelves to thoſe whom the King ſets over us, as well as unto the King himſelf whom God ſets over us: For, the commiſſion, which the King grants to them, is but a part of that which he received from God, and therefore ought to be ſubmitted to, as much as if the King himſelf had ſtill kept it in his own hands; for it is ſtill his power, in their hands, who are only entruſted by him with the adminiſtration or execution of it. (Bever.) In ſhort, this phraſe (anthropine ktiſis) human order, or ordination, ſignifies nothing but human authority; ſuch power and authority as is exerciſed by men, for the good government of human ſocieties: And the plain meaning is only this, That, out of reverence and obedience to God, from whom it is deriv'd, they ſhould ſubmit to that authority, which is exerciſed by men; whether to the ſupreme authority of Sovereign Princes themſelves, or that ſubordinate authority which is beſtow'd by them upon their inferior Magiſtrates. (Sherl.) And this I note the rather, becauſe the Papiſts on one hand, and the Sectaries on the other, have made ſuch a ſtir about this phraſe, and are glad of any appearance of Holy Writ, that they may leſſen or invalidate the authority of Kings, while one ſide would have 'em derive it from the Pope, the other from the People; and tho' they manage the argument by different mediums, yet they both agree in the concluſion, which is to bring 'em under, or pull 'em down, as it beſt ſerves their turn. (Dove) 4. Whereas ſome are pleas'd to note upon this text, that every nation has a liberty to chuſe what kind and form of government human prudence ſhall direct them to, as moſt agreeable to, and commodious for the people; the Apoſtle himſelf ſeems far enough from warranting ſuch a notion, where he ſpeaks of "the King as ſupreme," which plainly expreſſes the Monarchical form only: And as that form was evidently the firſt and moſt noble government in the world, being founded originally in families, the firſt of all ſocieties; ſo the degeneracy of this government, into ariſtocraſy, and baſe democrcay, was a creature, not exiſtent from the beginning, but aroſe, like the mule, from an unnatural conjunction, and ſcarce ever obtain'd in any place but by a rebellion! Surely, if ſome men had as much to plead, for Commonwealth, Free-ſtate, or Parliament, as we have hence for monarchy, they would long ſince have boaſted the Jus Divinum of 'em. (Baſſ.) Again, 5 We are to obſerve, That this command (as well as that of St. Paul) was laid upon all Chriſtians, when there was never a Chriſtian King or Governor in the world, but all rather inveterate enemies to Chriſtianity itſelf, endeavouring all they could to deſtroy and baniſh it out of the world: And yet, all Chriſtians are here commanded to ſubmit to them; which ſhews, that this duty is to be paid to the King, as ſuch; not becauſe he is a Chriſtian, a juſt, a merciful King, but becauſe he is a King authoriz'd by God to rule and govern us. And therefore the Apoſtle does not here command us to ſubmit ourſelves to the King, as good, or kind, or juſt, but as ſupreme; nor to Governors, as eminent for grace or virtue, but as ſent by the King: So that he who ſubmits to the King, or his ſubordinate Governors, on any other conſideration, but that of their reſpective authority, whatſoever other law he may think to obſerve in ſo doing, be ſure he does not obey this (Bever. and Sherl.) For, 6 Whereas Eſthius, and other Jeſuited Zealots, object, that this ſubmiſſion is not due to thoſe who do not exerciſe their authority in purſuance of the great end of its inſtitution, "for the puniſhment of evil-doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well;" 'tis certain, that, upon ſuch a ſuppoſition, there would be no ſubmiſſion at all due, to any Kings or Governors in the world, at the time when this doctrine was firſt taught, and conſequently the inſpir'd Apoſtles muſt be boldly charg'd with folly, ſince there were none, at that time, who did anſwer this end of their inſtitution; Neither indeed would ſuch an expoſition of the text leave any ſecurity at all, even to the beſt of Princes, ſince factious and ſeditious ſpirits will never want pretences to miſrepreſent the government, and bring about revolutions: But, the truth is, the Apoſtle does not give this as the ground or reaſon of our ſubmiſſion, but only as a motive to the practice of it, conſidering the great advantages of government; but tho' this motive ſhould fail in ſome inſtances, yet, while the reaſon of ſubmiſſion laſts, (and that can never fail, while we own the Sovereign authority of God,) ſo long it is our duty to be ſubject, whether our Prince do his duty or not. (Sherl.) The magiſtrate's proper office is to puniſh evil-doers, and to reward or encourage thoſe who do well: And tho' they may not be always ſent for theſe good ends; yet, it is ſufficient, that this is the general end of their office; and therefore they, in charity, muſt be ſuppos'd to be ſent by Kings for theſe ends. (W. and B.) However, the Spirit of God, who ordains and ſupports lawful authority, at the ſame time regulates the uſe of it: But, of whatever abuſe thoſe who are inveſted therewith are guilty, it gives no right to rebel againſt them. (Q.) 7. Foraſmuch as it was an old and early clamour, (rais'd and propagated by Satan and his inſtruments) that the Chriſtian religion was an enemy to Government and the profeſſors of it factious and ſeditious Spirits, (which is the charge againſt them intimated ver. 12.) the Apoſtle here tells them, by what means they might moſt effectually put to ſilence (or, as the Greek word, phimoun, more emphatically ſignifies, to put a muzzle upon the mouth of) thoſe ignorant and fooliſh men, who thus miſrepreſented them; (Leigh and B.) viz. By well-doing. And indeed, there is not a more excellent, and certain way, to credit our holy religion, and to take off all objections and ſcandals againſt it, than the holy and good, the exemplary and virtuous lives of thoſe who profeſs it; which is that "adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour," which the Scripture calls for, Tit. ii. 10. and, in the eye of the world, will ſignify more than ten thouſand of the beſt arguments we can ever urge for it: But yet the notion of well-doing here is a little more reſtrain'd, to mean that honeſt and regular, that ready and conſcientious ſubjection to authority, which he had preſs'd home in the preceding verſes; viz. either in actually performing the commands of the King, and his Governors, if not ſinful; or elſe in patiently ſubmitting to ſuch puniſhment as they ſhall think fit to inflict, for not obeying their ſinful commands. (Uſher, Hopk. Heſk. Sherl. B. and Wells) And this the Apoſtle aſſures us, "is the will of God." And that by which we "may put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men;" ſo call'd, becauſe there can't be imagin'd a greater folly, than to charge the profeſſion itſelf (that is, the doctrine of Chriſt, which utterly condemneth theſe diſorders, and forbiddeth all reſiſtance of lawful authority, under the pain of damnation) with the contrary practice of ſome of its profeſſors. (Uſher) But then, 8. It is objected, What becomes of our Chriſtian liberty? Thus, the Jews, and eſpecially the Zealots among them, were notorious for this doctrine, that they were a free people, and ought to preſerve their liberty; holding themſelves oblig'd to own God alone, as their only Lord and Governor, in oppoſition to Cæſar; and practiſing upon this principle at the writing of this Epiſtle. Now, the Apoſtle grants the antecedent, that by embracing Chriſtianity, they were free indeed; to wit, from the burden and curſe of the Law, and from the bondage of ſin and Satan, but not from obedience; "Servants of God," and yet at the ſame time, ſubjects to their Prince; yea, ſo much the better ſervants, as they were the better ſubjects; and conſequently, "as the ſervants of God," ought carefully to obey his commands in all things: Among which his commands theſe are ſome principal ones, viz. To "honour all men," Gentiles as well as Jews, according to their reſpective ſtations and dignity; to "love the brotherhood," that is, their Fellow-Chriſtians; to "fear God," in the firſt place, and above all; and, in ſubordination to him, to "honour the King," as God's vicegerent, tho' he was then Nero, the worſt of princes. But, on the contrary, for men to plead their Chriſtian liberty in bar to that obedience and ſubmiſſion, which they owe to their ſuperiors, either Civil or Eccleſiaſtical, is to "uſe their liberty for a cloke of maliciouſneſs," or a covering for that diſobedience to authority, which is hateful to God, and injurious to mankind; as being deſtructive of order and government which is the beauty and the bond of human ſociety. (G. Aſſ. H. Dove, Sherl. W. B. Sachev. Wells, Wall, and Maſſey) And laſtly, Tho' our Engliſh tranſlation does not expreſs it, almoſt all the Greek books and MSS. introduce this whole paſſage, with the illative particle oun, (hypotagete oun) "ſubmit your ſelves therefore," &c. whereby it is connected with the foregoing verſes, and implies, 1. That diſobedience to the Civil Magiſtrate proceeds "from fleſhly luſts," ver. 11. and, 2. That it likewiſe opens the mouths of unbelievers againſt the profeſſions of the Goſpel, to "ſpeak againſt them as evil doers," ver. 12. (Aſſ. and Wells) Which calumny was to be ſilenc'd "by their good works," ver. 12. or, as it is expreſs'd, ver. 15. by well-doing; in both places having a particular view to this great duty of ſubmiſſion to ſovereign authority. See the reſpective ſermons of Bp. Sanderſon, 1633. Bp. Hopkins, 1669. Dr. Duport, 1676. Mr. W. Baſſet, 1683. Dr. Hesketh, 1683. and 1685. Bp. Beveridge (printed in) 1710. Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Servants, be ſubject to your maſters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but alſo to the froward. For this is thank-worthy, if a man for confidence toward God endure grief, ſuffering wrongfully. For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye ſhall take it patiently? But if when ye do well, and ſuffer for it, ye take it patiently; this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called: Becauſe Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye ſhall follow his ſteps. Who did no ſin, neither was guile found in his mouth: Who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he ſuffered, he threatned not; but committed himſelf to him that judgeth righteouſly: Who his own ſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, ſhould live unto righteouſneſs, by whoſe ſtripes ye were healed. For ye were as ſheep going aſtray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Biſhop of your ſouls.

Servants, be ſubject.] See the notes on Luke xvii. 7. Acts x. 34. Rom, ii. 11 2 Cor. vii. 22. Eph. vi. 5. Col. iii. 22. 1 Tim. vi. 1. and Tit. ii. 9.

Alſo to the froward.] That is, tho' they uſe you frowardly, hardly, and ſcornfully; and that too, even becauſe of your Chriſtian profeſſion. (Aſſ.) The ground of which ſubjection is the will and command of God, which binds ſervants to be dutiful to their maſters, tho' their maſters fall ſhort in their duty to them. (B.) From whence alſo we may infer the falſity of their argument, who pretend, that we are bound to be ſubject to our Sovereigns, and other Superiors, no longer than they rule well, according to the meaſures of juſtice and righteouſneſs. For certainly, there is as perfect a ſubjection due to a Sovereign Prince, as to a Maſter; becauſe he is more eminently the Miniſter of God, and acts by a more ſacred and inviolable authority And that this does extend to our ſubjection to Princes, appears evidently, from the example of Chriſt, here recommended to our imitation; who was the moſt innocent perſon in the world, and yet ſuffer'd the moſt barbarous uſage, not from the hands of a private maſter, but of the ſupreme Powers. And therefore, when he commands, in the ſame chapter, to ſubmit to Governors, as to thoſe who are "for the puniſhment of evil-doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well," ver. 14. it is evident, that he did not intend this as a limitation of our ſubjection, as if we were not bound to be ſubject in other caſes; ſince he, immedately after, ver. 18. requires ſubjection, "not only to the good and gentle, but alſo to the froward," in imitation of the example of our Lord, who ſuffer'd patiently under unjuſt and tyrannical powers. (Sherl.) For that which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the maſter and ſervant, is alſo to be underſtood of Kings, or Sovereign Powers, and their ſubjects, as St. Auſtin well obſerves. (Uſh.)

For this is thank-worthy.] Touto gar charis; the very ſame phraſe as in ver. 20. where it is well tranſlated, "This is acceptable:" And ſo it ought to be render'd, in both places alike; ſignifying, that this paſſive obedience, or patiently ſuffering, for well-doing, out of "conſcience toward God," will procure the Divine favour and reward; as (charis) thanks, in Luke vi. 32, 33. is anſwerable to (misthon) reward, in Matth. v. 46. The ſhepherd and Biſhop of your ſouls.] That is, Chriſt, the univerſal "ſhepherd and Biſhop," who has the charge of all the flocks, and of the ſhepherds too; and to whom all Biſhops and ſhepherds muſt become accountable. (B.) See the notes on John x. 11. and Hebr. ix. 28. and xiii. 20.

CHAP. III.

The mutual duties of Wives and husbands: Exhortations to unity and love, patience and perſeverance.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Likewiſe ye wives, be in ſubjection to your own huſbands; that if any obey not the word, they alſo may without the word be won by the converſation of the wives. While they behold your chaſte converſation coupled with fear. Whoſe adorning, let it not be that outward adorning, of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel: But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which is in the ſight of God of great price. For after this manner in the old time, the holy women alſo who truſted in God, adorned themſelves, being in ſubjection unto their own huſbands. Even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: Whoſe daughters ye are as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement. Likewiſe ye huſbands dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wiſe as unto the weaker veſſel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindred.

Wives, be in ſubjection.] Among the other relative duties, the Apoſtle here lays down thoſe of huſband and wife: Of which, that of the wife is put firſt, not only as being the more difficult, but alſo becauſe it has the more immediate relation to that of other inferiors, to their proper ſuperiors, treated of in the foregoing chapter: And it is therefore introduc'd with the particle (homoios) likewiſe; not that this duty is, in every particular, of the ſame quality with that of ſubjects to their Sovereigns, and of ſervants to their Maſters; but becauſe it is of the ſame quality, with regard to the obligation, by which they are all bound to perform their reſpective duties, viz. the will and command of God: So that (as in the caſe of the other) it is not lawful upon any pretence whatſoever, for the wife to caſt off or withdraw her ſubjection to her own huſband, whether he be gentle or froward, a believer or unbeliever, Chriſtian or Infidel; (Ameſ. and B.) Nay, ſhe ought to be the more obſervant, that ſo, by her good carriage and converſation, ſhe may be the happy occaſion of his converſion. (Aſſ. H. and B.) Modeſty, prudence, meekneſs and ſubmiſſion to her huſband are principal virtues in a wife. In theſe lyes the art of preaching without ſpeaking, of overcoming without fighting, and of gaining all without hazarding any thing. (H. W. B. and Q.) See the notes on ch. ii. 15. 1 Cor. vii. 16. ix. 19, &c. xi. 3, 9. and xiv. 34. Eph. v. 22, 33. and Col. iii. 18.

Whoſe adorning.] See the notes on 1 Tim. ii. 9. and Tit. ii. 10.

Sarah obeyed Abraham.] Note here, That the ſame duty and reverence, the ſame ſubjection and obedience, which Sarah paid to Abraham, is due and payable to every huſband, from his wife, or elſe the Apoſtle's argument would be of no force. 'Tis true, Abraham,

Abraham was a great man, and an extraordinary perſon: But Sarah obeyed him as her husband, as all wives ought, and are bound, to do; becauſe the command of God requires honour, reverence, and obedience, to be paid to all husbands, as husbands. (B.) If "the holy women, of old time," did thus, how much more ought thoſe to do it who belong to Chriſt? Whereas, through the corruption of our manners, a contrary cuſtom has obtain'd, for husbands to call their wives my lady, or my miſtreſs! (Heinſ. and G.) See the notes on Eph. v. 22.

Not afraid with any amazement.] The meaning of the word ptoeſis, here tranſlated amazement, is properly a ſudden terror, aſtoniſhment, or conſternation. (Leigh) Eraſmus renders it a womaniſh fear, which is common to that ſex, without any ſufficient ground or reaſon to occaſion it: And Vorſtius calls it a metaphor taken from horſes and birds, which are apt to ſtartle and be frightned at every ſhadow. Some are of opinion, that St. Peter does hereby intimate, that the Jewiſh women were to take care, not to follow the example of Sarah, in telling an untruth, and denying that ſhe laugh'd, when ſhe was charg'd with it by God; as we read ſhe did, Gen. xviii. 12. where it is immediately added, (as the reaſon of her ſo doing) "for ſhe was afraid, ver. 15. In reference to which, it is thought St. Peter exhorts the Jewiſh women, not to be afraid, on any account, ſo as to be deterr'd from their duty. (Wells) Others refer it to the fear which ſeized both Abraham and Sarah, at Gerar, and endanger'd her being drawn into the great ſin of adultery, Gen. xx. 1, &c. (G. and Wall) But Bp. Hall's paraphraſe ſeems to me to comprehend the full and true ſenſe of the context; wherein he alludes to thoſe weak fears, whereto Sarah yielded, and was drawn into inconvenience and diſſimulation thereby, and then he proceeds, as if the Apoſtle had ſaid thus; I know, your ſex is ſubject, by reaſon of the infirmity of it, to manifold fears and ſuſpicions, as if by ſubmiſſive yieldance to your husbands, ye ſhould expoſe yourſelves to their tyranny and contempt; but do ye that which your place and duty require, and be not affrighted, and diſquieted with theſe doubts and diſtruſts, but leave the ordering of all events to the wiſdom and providence of God.

Likewiſe, ye husbands.] Tho' this precept begins with the ſame word (likewiſe) as the foregoing did; yet it is not to be underſtood as if the duty of husbands oblig'd them to any ſubjection to their wives; but only, that it is grounded on the ſame divine authority, as the reſpective duties of Sovereigns to their ſubjects, and maſters to their ſervants. (Ameſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 3, &c. Eph. v. 25, &c. and Col. iii. 19.

Dwell with them.] Synoikein, to dwell with, does not here ſignify cohabitation only, but is comprehenſive alſo of all the other conjugal duties. (G.) It neceſſarily implies, the having but one wife at a time. (Wells) And therefore, in marriage, the bridegroom promiſes his bride, that, forſaking all others, he will keep himſelf only to her, ſo long as they both ſhall live; which is intended to prevent thoſe three miſchievous and fatal deſtroyers of marriage, adultery, polygamy, and divorce. (Wheatly) See the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 16, &c. and vii. 2, &c. and Eph. v. 33.

According to knowledge.] That is, as becomes wiſe and underſtanding men, who well know their duty, according to the rule of Chriſtianity. (G. H. and B.) This knowledge is the foundation of direction or government; and therefore is neceſſary to an husband; who is to direct and govern his wife, and conſequently ought to be able to inſtruct and reform her. (Andr. and Ameſ.) See the notes on Rom. xv. 14. and 1 Cor. i. 5. and xiv. 35.

Giving honour unto the wife.] St. Auguſtine ſaith, That as the ſenſe of ſeeing is by the head, ſo a woman ought to ſee by her husband, who is her head, 1 Cor. xi. 3. Yet withall, he is to remember, that ſhe was not taken out of his head, becauſe ſhe muſt not be above him, as his maſter; ſo neither out of his feet, becauſe ſhe is not to be his ſervant; but out of his ſide, a latere, that ſhe might be ſemper illi a latere, as his fellow and companion, almoſt his equal. (Andr.) This text is generally underſtood of giving them their due reſpect and maintenance, taking care of, and providing for them, and bearing with them in their infirmities and weakneſs, from the conſideration of their being "the weaker veſſels, and conſequently leſs able to provide for themſelves. (G. Aſſ. Ameſ. H. Wells, Wall, and B.) But, if the Greek of this verſe was differently pointed, the foundation of the honour, to be given to the wives would not be their weakneſs, but their being coheirs with their husbands "of the grace of life;" which ſeems to make the Apoſtle's meaning clearer, thus; "Likewiſe, ye husbands, dwell with your wives according to knowledge, the female being the weaker veſſel, giving them honour, as being heirs together of the grace of life. (Wheat.) See the notes on Acts xxviii. 10. 2 Cor. iv. 7. Eph. v. 22, &c. and 1 Tim. v. 3, 17.

That your prayers be not hindred.] Viz. By brawlings, chidings, and diſcord, occaſion'd by indiſcreet carriage. (G. Aſſ. Ameſ. H. B. and Wells) And here, by prayers, underſtand alſo other duties which belong to the worſhip of God. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. xviii. 19. and Acts ii. 1.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compaſſion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: Not rendring evil for evil, or railing for railing: But contrariwiſe, bleſſing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye ſhould inherit a bleſſing. For he that will love life, and ſee good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they ſpeak no guile. Let him eſchew evil, and do good; let him ſeek peace and enſue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: But the face of the Lord is againſt them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake, happy are ye: And be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; but ſanctify the Lord God in your hearts: And be ready always to give an anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you, with meekneſs and fear: Having a good conſcience, that whereas they ſpeak evil of you, as of evil-doers, they may be aſhamed that falſly accuſe your good converſation in Chriſt. For it is better, if the will of God be ſo, that ye ſuffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing. For Chriſt alſo hath once ſuffered for ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt (that he might bring us to God) being put to death in the fleſh, but quickened in the Spirit: By which alſo he went and preached unto the ſpirits in priſon: Which ſometime were diſobedient, when once the long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight ſouls, were ſaved by water. The like figure whereunto, even baptiſm, doth alſo now ſave us, (not the putting away of the filth of the fleſh, but the anſwer of a good conſcience towards God) by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt: Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels, and authorities, and powers being made ſubject unto him.

Be ye all of one mind.] See the notes on Luke xiv. 14. John x. 16. xiii. 34. xv. 1, 12. and xvii. 21, &c. Acts iv. 32. Not rendring evil.] See the notes on Matth. v. 39, 44. John viii. 49. Rom. xii. 17, &c. and 1 Cor. vi. 7.

He that will love life.] See the notes on Rom. viii. 28. xii. 18. and xiv. 19. 1 Cor. vi. 20. 2 Cor. vi. 16. and vii. 1. Hebr. xii. 14. and Jam. iii. 8.

Who is he that will harm you?] That is, who, that acts according to the natural dictates of right reaſon, "will harm you," if ye be zealous "of that which is good," as the avoiding to ſpeak evil of, or doing hurt to, any one, is confeſs'd to be of all men? For thus the word, zelotai, is read, not only in the Alexandrian, and many other manuſcripſs, but alſo in the four old verſions, Vulgat, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic, as well as in Clemens Alexandrinus: And there ſeems to be a greater emphaſis in this reading, than in our common copies, which have the word (mimetai) followers, in this place; becauſe thoſe among the Jews, who diſtinguiſh'd themſelves by the name of zealots, were remarkable both for ſpeaking and doing evil to others, and that in the higheſt degree. (H. and Wells) Even ſpiteful and tyrannous men are not apt to meddle with ſuch as live inoffenſively and quiet. (Wall) At leaſt, whatever harm may be intended them, God will turn it to their good. B.) See Mr. Knaggs's ſermon on this text, 1706. and the notes on ch. ii. 15. and Rom. viii. 28.

But, and if ye ſuffer.] See the notes on ch. ii. 19. Matth. x. 28. Luke xxi. 19. John xiv. 1. Acts v. 41. vi. 15. xiv. 22. and xvi. 25. Rom. ii. 7. and v. 3. 1 Cor. x. 15. 2 Cor. i. 5. and iv. 10, 18. Phil. i. 29. Hebr. xi. 26. and Jam. i. 12.

Sanctify the Lord God.] That is, glorify God by your patient-ſuffering, and faithful truſting in him: Or, bleſs God "in your hearts," for that he hath accounted you worthy to "ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake." (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts v. 41.

And be ready always.] Here we muſt obſerve, 1. That by "the hope that is in you," we muſt underſtand not only the bare hope ſtrictly ſo call'd, but the faith too of a Chriſtian: Whence it is, that, in the Syriac verſion of this text, and in ſome ancient Latin copies, it is the hope, and the faith, that is in you. And indeed, if we conſider hope as a natural paſſion, we ſhall find it to be always attended and uſher'd in by faith: For, 'tis certain, there is no hope, without ſome antecedent belief, that the thing hoped for may come to paſs; and the ſtrength and ſteadineſs of our hope is ever proportionable to the meaſure of our faith. (Bent.) Under this term (hope) therefore, by a ſynecdoche of the part for the whole, is comprehended our whole faith and religion, and all our religious actions and performances: For all which, as we ought be able to give a reaſon or ground, why we ſo believe, hope, act, and why we ſo profeſs, to our own hearts and conſciences; ſo we ought alſo to be able and ready, to give the like reaſon or ground of the ſame to others who aſk it of us; which yet is to be underſtood with ſome limitations. (Keith) For, 2. Tho' the text ſays, (panti to aitounti) to every man that asketh, which commonly ſignifies a petitionary manner of asking, as in Luke vi. 30. Yet here it muſt neceſſarily be underſtood either of ſuch asking as implies a ſincere and honeſt deſire of inſtruction, or elſe of that authoritative manner which is uſed when a man is called upon by his lawful Superiors, to give an account of his practice or principles. And this latter interpretation of the words ſeems moſt agreeable to the ſubject of the context, where the Apoſtle is comforting and encouraging them againſt perſecution for righteouſneſs ſake, and inſtructing them how to behave under it, ſo as their anſwer (or apology, as it is expreſs'd in the Greek) might tend moſt to the glory of God. (Hall, Ameſ. H. W. Wells, and Gillman) But we are by no means bound to give ſuch anſwer to every man that asketh, only out of an impertinent curioſity, and with deſign to cavil; which would be to caſt our pearls before ſwine. (Ameſ. and Aſſ.) 3. Tho' there is a proper time to keep ſilence, as well as a time to ſpeak, Eccl. iii. 7. ſo that we are not "always to give an anſwer," concerning the reaſon of the hope that is in us; yet we are requir'd to be ready always to give it: That is, to be always prepar'd and provided with ſuch an anſwer, and ready and willing to give it, to proper perſons, and at proper times, as occaſion may be given, and the nature of the caſe may require. (Hall, H. Bent. Wells, and Gillm.) Now, 4. Such a conſtant readineſs, to anſwer for and defend the Goſpel, includes in its utmoſt compaſs theſe four particulars, viz. 1. A perfect knowledge and underſtanding of the grounds and principles of Chriſtianity. 2. A comprehenſive view of the whole ſcheme and deſign of religion, the harmony and order of its parts, and their conſiſtence with the whole. 3. Frequently to reflect upon, and revolve often in the mind, the aforeſaid truths, and make them familiar to the thoughts. And, 4. To have a conſtant perſwaſion of the importance, as well as the certainty, of religion, together with a reſolution to maintain it, both by argument and example. (Gillm.) But then, we are to obſerve, 5. That all this is not abſolutely requir'd of all men, in its full extent of perfection; ſince (as Eſthius well obſerves) all are not hereby required to become learned and compleat Divines, thoroughly vers'd in all the controverſial points of religion; neither are all oblig'd to commence teachers, or able to be ſo. Yet all Chriſtians are bound, at leaſt, according to their ſeveral capacities, to defend the cauſe of religion: But, in a much higher degree, it concerns thoſe to do ſo, who are ſet apart for the miniſtry; whoſe office it is to be guides and inſtructors of others in the faith; whoſe lips are to keep knowledge, and the people to ſeek the law at their mouths, Mal. ii. 7. who muſt be apt to teach, 2 Tim. ii. 24, and able, by ſound doctrine, both to exhort, and to convince the gainſayers," Tit. i. 9. (Idem) But, whoſoever they be who are concern'd in this duty, there is this caution to be obſerv'd, 6. That it be perform'd "with meekneſs and fear:" That is, with meekneſs, modeſty, and calmneſs towards man; with humility, reverence, and fear towards God. (Ameſ. and Gillm.) Which fear alſo comprehends reverence to their authority, when we are call'd to anſwer before our lawful Superiors. (Hall, H. and Wells) And therefore, in the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other manuſcripts, as alſo in the Vulgar Latin, and Clemens of Alexandria, this caution is introduc'd with the adverſative particle, (alla) but before the direction; which has a peculiar emphaſis here: As if he had ſaid, Be ready always to give an anſwer, &c. and that too, (meta paſes parrheſias) with all boldneſs, confidence, and fearleſneſs of danger, as in Acts xxviii. 31. But, be ſure, when ye do this, to do it with meekneſs and fear, or reverence. (Wells and Gillm.) And, laſtly, Whereas Dr. Whitby thinks this apology, for the hope that was in them, ſeems rather ſuch as ſhould be made by works, than words; The text here plainly ſuppoſes an apology, or defence by words; as appears by the very terms of asking a reaſon, and being ready to give an anſwer, tho' it is not to be doubted, that good works, and a good converſation in Chriſt, is the moſt effectual way to put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men, ver. ii. 15. and to make thoſe aſhamed who falſly accuſe us, and ſpeak evil of us as of evil-doers, as it follows here in the next verſe. See the ſeveral ſermons of Dr. Bentley, 1696. Mr. G. Keith, 1700. and Dr. Gillman, 1721. all on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 15. Matth. vii. 6. and x. 32. Acts xxvi. 6. and xxviii. 31. Chriſt alſo hath once ſuffered.] It is a ſingular inſtance of God's grace, for men to ſuffer patiently, for their own ſins, as penitents do: It is a greater ſtill, to ſuffer, being innocent, and for righteouſneſs ſake, as the martyrs did: But, to ſuffer for the ſins of others, being innocence itſelf, this is a grace peculiar to Jeſus Chriſt, the Prince of the penitents, and the head of the martyrs. (Q.) See the notes on John iii. 16. Acts ii. 36. and xx. 28. Rom. i. 3. iii. 25. iv. 25. and v. 6. 2 Cor. v. 21. Gal. i. 4. and iv. 4. Eph. v. 2. Preached unto the Spirits in priſon.] The moſt probable interpretation of this difficult place, ſeems to be that of thoſe, who, by "the Spirits in priſon," underſtand thoſe wicked people, who liv'd in the days of Noah, who were enſlav'd to, and, as it were, impriſon'd by their luſts. To theſe people Chriſt, by his Spirit, inſpir'd that juſt man to preach repentance and reformation; offering them pardon, if they would repent; to which end they had the ſpace of 120 years allow'd them. They were withal aſſur'd, that, if they did not repent and amend, they ſhould all, as condemn'd priſoners, be deſtroy'd by the waters of the flood; which accordingly came to paſs, they continuing obſtinate and unreformed. But Noah, and his family, conſiſting of eight perſons, being free from thoſe abominable vices the reſt of mankind were guilty of, were, by the ark, ſaved out of, or from the water. (Fox) This interpretation is agreeable to that of (Beza, Bp. Hall, Heinſ. Ameſ. The Aſſembly-men, H. W. B. and Wells) And moſt Proteſtants do underſtand the text in this ſenſe. However, the moſt ancient Chriſtians do generally expound this, and ch. iv. 6. of Chriſt and his ſoul, during the time that his body lay in the grave, going to Hades, and preaching there to the ſpirits of the old world. (Wall) Agreeable to which is the concluſion of Mr. Dodwell, that our Saviour, after his death, and in the intervall between that and his reſurrection, did preach to the ſeparated ſouls in Hades. But to this latter, Bp. Pearſon anſwers, 1. That the words of the context can't prove this aſſertion, unleſs it were certain, that, by the word ſpirit, we were to underſtand the ſoul of Chriſt: Whereas indeed, the Spirit, by which he is ſaid to preach, was not the ſoul of Chriſt, but that Spirit by which he was quickened; as is evident from the connection of the words thus, He was quickened by that "Spirit, (en ho) by which he went and preached to the Spirits in priſon;" that is, by the eternal Spirit of God, who is the author of the reſurrection: And, 2. That the perſons to whom he preached by the Spirit, were only ſuch as were diſobedient, "in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing," That is, thoſe who were diſobedient, before the flood, as were the Antidiluvians, all the time that "the long-ſuffering of God waited" on them, and conſequently ſo long as God gave them time for repentance, which was 120 years, ſtriving then with them for that end by his Spirit, in the Prophets Enoch and Noah, but adding, that his Spirit ſhould not always ſtrive with them. In vain then (ſays the Biſhop) are we taught to underſtand St. Peter of the promulgation of the Goſpel to the Jews or Gentiles then in Hades, ſince the words ſo evidently relate to the long-ſuffering of God to men, then living, in the days of Noah. (W.) As to the phraſe (poreutheis ekeruxen) which we tranſlate he went and preached, or going he preached, it is but an idiom of the Sacred Style, wherein going, and ſuch like words, are frequently uſed as expletives. (Heinſ. Aſſ. H. and Wall) See Dr. Hammond on this text at large, and the notes on Acts x. 36. 2 Cor. v. 20. and Eph. ii. 17. and iv. 9. and Hebr. xi. 7.

The like figure.] Antitypon. That the ark was a type of the Church, has been already noted, on Heb. xi. 7. And here we learn, 1. That the ſaving of thoſe eight perſons in the ark, (di' hydatos) by, or rather from, the water, was the type of our being ſaved by baptiſm, whereby we are initiated, or made members of the Church. (H. Stanh. B. Wells and Wall) 2. That as there was but one ark, and all who did not enter into that periſhed; ſo there is but one Church, out of which, ordinarily, there is no ſalvation; ſo that they who are not with Chriſt in his Church, ſhall periſh out of it, unleſs they be admitted, upon their repentance, to the one ſaving baptiſm of the Church. (Cypr. and Stanh.) 3. That the efficacy of this ſacrament is not aſcrib'd to the outward element applied to the body, but to the inward diſpoſition of the mind, in thoſe who are receiv'd by it into this ſpiritual ark. Which diſpoſition is to be expreſs'd, by declarations of the party's willingneſs to enter into covenant with God, and to expect ſalvation upon the terms of the Goſpel: And therefore ſuch conſent is rightly demanded of all baptized perſons; expected from all of years of diſcretion, to be given by themſelves; accepted for infants, by the charity of the Church, from ſureties in their name; but requir'd to be perſonally ratified, by theſe too, in the too much neglected rite of confirmation, at a time when they are capable of contracting for their part of this covenant. (Stan. and B.) 4. That this declaration of their diſpoſition, here call'd (ſyneideſeos agathes eperotema eis Theon) "the anſwer of a good conſcience towards God," ſignifies that unfeigned faith, whereof they made confeſſion at their baptiſm, and whereby their conſciences are purified, and they receive the remiſſion of their ſins. (Aſſ.) Or, The ſeeking to God, as to the oracle, and ſearching his Holy Scriptures, for the direction of their whole future life, and the undertaking faithfully to purſue that direction; giving up themſelves to the obedience of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, and renouncing the world, the fleſh, and the Devil: Which covenant, or ſtipulation, is the condition of ſalvation; and baptiſm but the ſign of it. (H. B. and Wells) But then, 5. We muſt not, with the Anabaptiſts, conclude from this text, that baptiſm can be of no ſaving advantage to infants, becauſe they cannot at preſent make this "anſwer of a good conſcience." For, in the ſame manner, St. Paul ſpeaks of circumciſion, Rom. ii. 29. that the true "circumciſion is that of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter." But will any man thence argue, that the Jewiſh infants, for want of the inward circumciſion, muſt not be admitted to the outward? And yet the argument is the very ſame. The Jews did not admit Proſelytes to circumciſion, without this "anſwer of a good conſcience," but yet they admitted infants without it:. Why therefore may not we obſerve the ſame cuſtom in admitting the children of Chriſtian parents to baptiſm, without any ſuch anſwer made by them, but for them? (W. and B.) 6. That the ſalvation, attained by thus entring into covenant with God, is moſt rightfully aſcribed here to our Lord's reſurrection; that being the evidence, that the ſins he died for were fully expiated, and that immortality was reſtor'd to the nature in which he died. (Stanh.) 7. That where our text ſays, our Saviour "is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God," the Vulgar, and all the Latin books and MSS. add this clauſe, ſwallowing up death, that we might be made heirs of eternal life: But none of the Greek books, or MSS, or writers, have that clauſe. (Wall) And, laſtly, That our Saviour being now "gone into heaven," and all the "Angels, and Authorities and Powers being made ſubject unto him," both in heaven, and earth, we may conclude, that he is able to ſave all ſuch as uſe the means of ſalvation preſcribed by him; and conſequently, that whatever befalls us, ſhall not be able to harm us, but rather turn to our advantage; which was the thing the Apoſtle had to prove in the foregoing verſes, and upon which he proceeds further in the chapter following (H. and Wells) See the notes on Matth. iii. 6. and xxviii. 19. CHAP. IV.

Further exhortations, to ceaſe from ſin, and practiſe Chriſtian virtues, conſidering the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the approaching day of account: And conſolation againſt perſecution.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. FORASMUCH then as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the fleſh, arm yourſelves likewiſe with the ſame mind: For he that hath ſuffered in the fleſh, hath ceaſed from ſin; that he no longer ſhould live the reſt of his time in the fleſh, to the luſts of men, but to the will of God. For the time paſt of our life may ſuffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in laſciviouſneſs, luſts, exceſs of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries: Wherein they think it ſtrange that ye run not with them to the ſame exceſs of riot, ſpeaking evil of you: Who ſhall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead. For, for this cauſe was the Goſpel preached alſo to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the fleſh, but live according to God in the ſpirit.

As Chriſt hath ſuffered.] Theſe words may be conſider'd, 1 As an inference, drawn from what the Apoſtle had aſſerted, ch. iii. 18. concerning Chriſt's ſufferings for our ſins; that we ſhould be conform'd to him in his death, as he died for ſin. 2. As an argument to excite Chriſtians to "eſchew evil, and do good," which he had preſs'd upon them, ver. 11. And the force of the argument lies thus; All Chriſtians ſhould be "armed with the ſame mind" and reſolution againſt ſin, and for holineſs, that Chriſt was: But, "Chriſt having ſuffered in the fleſh" for ſin, and "ceaſed from ſin," lived in the ſpirit unto God; Therefore all Chriſtians ſhould wholly endeavour all they can, to "ceaſe from ſin," and live no more "to the luſts of men, but to the will of God." (B.) See Dr. Hammond's criticiſm, and Dr. Alleſtree's ſermon on this text; and the notes on ch. iii. 18. John i. 18. Rom. vi. 2, &c. xii. 2. and xiii. 13. Gal. ii. 20. and vi. 14.

May ſuffice us to have wrought.] Here note, 1. That there is, in all the words of this text, no ſign of the Apoſtle's ſpeaking, in the firſt perſon, ſo as to include himſelf, except the word (hemin) us. But this word, hemin, is not read in the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other Manuſcripts, nor the Syriac and Arabic verſions, nor Clemens Alexandr. nor yet the Vulgar Latin, which reads it in the third perſon; not "we have walked," but thoſe who have walked: Which rendring has the more authority from copies, and from the Fathers, and fits alſo beſt to the perſons ſpoken of. Neither is (tou biou) "of our life," read in any of the copies here mention'd. (Wells and Wall) 2. That whereas this text is thought by ſome (and particularly by Whitby, and Burkitt) an undeniable argument that St. Peter wrote, and directed, this Epiſtle, not only to the Jewiſh nation, but alſo to the Gentile converts, the curious reader may find ſeveral good reaſons to the contrary in Dr. Wells, to which I refer him. 3. What uſage Chriſtians muſt expect, from the men of this world, when they come out from among them, and refuſe to run on with them, in their ſinful courſes: 1. "They think it ſtrange;" admiring and wondering at them, as we are wont to do at ſtrangers who come out of another country: And, 2. "They ſpeak evil of them;" becauſe they will not be as bad, and as mad, as themſelves. (Heinſ. H. and B.) But obſerve, 4. The ſevere and impartial account which theſe wicked men of the world muſt render to Chriſt, for all their evil actions, and ſpeeches, againſt the righteous: They "ſhall give account to Him, that is ready to judge the quick and the dead." (H. and B.) See the notes on Acts x. 42. xvii. 30. and xviii. 6. Rom. i. 23, &c. and xiv. 12. 1 Cor. vi. 11. and Eph. iv. 17.

To them that are dead.] For the explication of this text, (in which learned men have found great difficulties) let it be noted, 1. That (hoi necroi) "the dead," doth often in Scripture ſignify, not thoſe who are naturally dead, but thoſe who are ſpiritually dead; to wit, in treſpaſſes and ſins, as in Matth. viii. 22. Eph. ii. 1. and v. 14. Col. ii. 13. 1 Tim. v. 6. Rev. iii. 1. which was alſo a common proverbial expreſſion among the Jews. And therefore, I conceive, this word is here not to be underſtood in its natural ſenſe, but in this figurative ſenſe, for thoſe dead in ſin: Which ſome refer to thoſe mention'd, ch. iii. 19. and others to the whole Gentile world, whom St. Paul ſpeaks of as dead in treſpaſſes and ſins. (Hall, H. W. B. and Fox) Or it may be underſtood of them as being now alſo naturally dead, at the time of St. Peter's ſpeaking of them, tho' they were only ſpiritually dead when the Goſpel is ſaid to have been preached to them; ſo that there is no occaſion to interpret this of preaching to the dead Gentiles in Hades. (Heinſ. G. Ameſ. Aſſ. H. W. and B.) 2. That "the Goſpel was preached to them," (hina crithoſi men kat' anthropous ſarki) "that they might be judged according to men in the fleſh." The ſenſe of which obſcure paſſage ſeems to be this; That they might condemn their former life, led as natural men, or as mere Heathens, in the fleſh, or ſtrive to mortify all the ſinful luſts and corrupt affections of the fleſh, which they had indulg'd in their Heathen ſtate, and "live (unto God, or) according to God in the Spirit;" that is, a new life, conformable to the doctrine and will of God, by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit. (Beza, Aſſ. H. W. B. Wells and Fox) See Dr. Whitby's notes at large on the text; and the other notes on ch. iii. 19. Matth. viii. 22. Acts vii. 7. 1 Cor. xv. 32. Gal. v. 17. Eph. ii. 1. and v. 14.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. But the end of all things is at hand: Be ye therefore ſober, and watch unto prayer. And above all things have fervent charity among your ſelves: For charity ſhall cover the multitude of ſins. Uſe hoſpitality one to another without grudging. As every man hath received the gift, even ſo miniſter the ſame one to another, as good ſtewards of the manifold grace of God. If any man ſpeak, let him ſpeak as the oracles of God; if any man miniſter, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: That God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be praiſe and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

Have fervent charity.] Agapen ectene does literally ſignify extenſive charity, and ſo ſhould be rendred here. (Wells) And its "covering the multitude of ſins," is to be interpreted, as to charity in general, in the ſame ſenſe as that of James, v. 20. is, concerning one main and eminent branch of it, the converſion of ſouls, viz. That the virtue of charity is of ſo great price in the ſight of God, that they, who profeſs and exerciſe it in any eminent manner, are peculiarly entitled to the Divine Favour and Pardon, with regard to numberleſs ſlips and failings in their duty, which they may be otherwiſe guilty of; this great Chriſtian perfection, of which they are maſters, ſhall make many little imperfections to be overlook'd and unobſerv'd. Nor is this doctrine fairly liable to the objection of favouring the Popiſh doctrine of Merit and Supererogation; as is prov'd by Bp. Atterbury, in his ſermon on this text; to which I refer the reader at large. See alſo the notes on Matth. v. 43. John x. 16. xiii. 34. xv. 12. and xvii. 21. Speak as the oracles of God.] By this phraſe ſome commentators underſtand the form and manner of our public inſtructions; as if the Apoſtle had ſaid, He that teacheth in the Church of God, that interprets his ſacred word, or illuſtrates and inculcates any point of our Chriſtian faith, or practical rule of our life deducible from thence, or conformable thereto, let him ſpeak with a devout fervency and zeal, as rightly conſidering the great buſineſs he is tranſacting; that he is delivering his commiſſion from God, and repreſenting the perſon of Chriſt: But others reſtrain this injunction ſolely to the matter of our diſcourſes; which muſt have a conſtant and invariable regard to the ſincere word of God, and the intrinſic worth and importance of it, in oppoſition to the fond inventions and ſpeculations, and the prejudicate opinions and fancies of men. But, without excluding either of theſe ſenſes, we ſhall duly obſerve the Apoſtle's direction, if we endeavour to "ſpeak as the oracles of God," in reſpect of the ſoundneſs of our doctrine, the dignity of the ſubject, and the authority of our ſpeech. (Fent.) Not weakening it by ſoftening interpretations, nor altering it by human inventions, nor degrading it by a profane eloquence. (Q.) But woe be to thoſe men, who bring forth Scripture in their diſcourſes, as the Philiſtines brought forth Sampſon, only to make ſport, rendring it the theme of their giddy and profane drollery! For ſuch men ſhall ere long find Almighty God in earneſt, tho' they be in jeſt! (B.) See Mr. Fenton's ſermon at Oxford, on this text, 1720. and the notes on John v. 39. and xx. 21. Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19 Beloved, think it not ſtrange concerning the fiery trial, which is to try you, as though ſome ſtrange thing happened unto you: But rejoice, inaſmuch as ye are partakers of Chriſt's ſufferings; that when his glory ſhall be revealed, ye may be glad alſo with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, happy are ye; for the ſpirit of glory, and of God reſteth upon you: On their part he is evil ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you ſuffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a buſy-body in other mens matters. Yet if any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him not be aſhamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come, that judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God: And if it firſt begin at us, what ſhall the end be of them that obey not the Goſpel of God? And if the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner appear? Wherefore let them that ſuffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their ſouls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

Think it not ſtrange.] Here note, 1. That the word pyroſis, here call'd "the fiery trial," properly ſignifies ſuch a trial as is made of metals to purify them, by fire; and it is metaphorically uſed, to ſignify in general any kind of adverſity or ſharp perſecution. (Aſſ. H. Wells and B.) 2. The caution given by the Apoſtle to all Chriſtians, not to be amaz'd or diſcouraged under them, "Think it not ſtrange," &c. As if he had ſaid, Marvel not, my brethren, when ye ſee an evil cauſe proſper, (it may be, for a long time together) and the better ſide go down, "as if ſome ſtrange thing happened unto you," and ſuch as never had been heard of before; neither be troubled or ſcandalized at it, nor fret at your own ſufferings under it. If ye would but well conſider, how ſolicitous, how induſtrious, how ſubtle and cunning, how unanimous they are on the one ſide, and how far ſhort ye on the other ſide are, in all theſe and other like advantageous reſpects, ye would ſoon find, that in the ſaddeſt events that ever ye ſuſtain'd, or your eyes beheld, there is no matter of wonderment, nothing ſtrange at all. On the contrary, did not the powerful hand of God's over-ruling providence ſometimes interpoſe, giving the enemy now and then a ſudden ſtop in their full career, in the height of their pride and jollity, thereby making good his promiſes to his poor diſtreſſed Church, by ſending unexpected help and deliverance, when they are brought very low both in eſtates and hopes, we might rather wonder, that it is not even much worſe with the people of God than it is, and that they ſhould be able at all to ſubſiſt, their enemies having all the advantages in the world againſt them. (Sanderſ.) 3. The gracious end which God has in the afflictions and perſecutions which he ſuffers to fall upon his people; They are only to try them, not to conſume them; to try their graces, and deſtroy their corruptions, to give them opportunity to make proof of their faith, ſincerity and conſtancy. 4. The high honour which God puts upon his ſuffering Saints and ſervants; They are ſaid to be "partakers of Chriſt's ſufferings" here, becauſe they ſuffer for him, and he ſuffers with them, and in them, and alſo becauſe he ſuffer'd the ſame things before them, and much worſe things for them; as they ſhall be again partakers with him hereafter, "when his glory ſhall be revealed." On which account, 5. God expects it from them as a duty, That they who ſuffer theſe fiery trials, and perſecutions for his ſake, ſhould not only bear them patiently, but rejoice, and be exceeding glad. (B.) But, laſtly, How vain and weak the argument of the Papiſts, from this text, is for purgatory, evidently appears, from this ſingle conſideration, That the Apoſtle ſpeaks not of a fiery trial after death, but of ſuch a one as is (genemene) actually befallen, or befalling them, in this world. Reſteth upon you.] Anapauetai; taketh delight, or taketh a pride in you. (Wall) Some take this expreſſion to be an alluſion to Noah's dove, which hover'd about, but could not reſt, till it returned to the ark. (B.)

Judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God.] According to our Saviour's predictions, Matth. xxiv. 21, 22. Mark xiii. 13. and Luke xxi. 16, 17. (Wells) There is a firſt and ſecond draught of bitterneſs, that is, of puniſhments, for men; one by way of chaſtiſement or exerciſe, the other for utter exciſion; or, one in this world, which is the far lighter of the two, the other to come in another world, much more formidable: And when the former begins to fall upon "the houſe of God," that is, upon the deareſt ſervants of Chriſt, it is a very ominous ſign, that the end will be very heavy and inſupportable to their wicked perſecutors, even in this world, after the righteous have been ſufficiently tried: For then the rod is to be caſt into the fire, and their perſecutors utterly deſtroy'd (as the obdurate Jews were) and that in a yet heavier manner in the world to come. (H.) In the ordinary courſe of his providence, God doth ſooner, temporally, puniſh his own children, when they take pride in their own inventions, and ſooth themſelves in the devices of their own hearts, than he will his profeſs'd enemies, who ſtand at defiance with him, and openly fight againſt him. Theſe he ſuffereth many times to go on in their impieties, and to climb up to the height of their ambitious deſires; that, in the mean time, he may make uſe of their injuſtice and oppreſſion, for the ſcourging of thoſe of his own houſehold, and in the end get himſelf the more glory by their deſtruction! But then, howſoever "judgment may begin at the houſe of God," moſt certain it is, it ſhall not end there; but the hand of God, and his revenging juſtice, ſhall at laſt reach the houſe of the wicked oppreſſor alſo: And that, not with temporary puniſhments only, as he did correct his own; but, without repentance, evil ſhall hunt them to their everlaſting deſtruction, who deſpiſe his known counſels, to follow the curſed devices and imaginations of their own naughty hearts. When they are in the top of their jollity, and gotten to the uppermoſt roundle of the ladder, then doth he put to his hand, and tumble them down headlong at once; and "then how ſuddenly do they conſume, periſh, and come to a fearful end?" Pſa. lxxiii. 19. (Sanderſ.) See Biſhop Stillingfleet's ſermon on this text, 1668. and the notes on Luke xxiii. 31. and 2 Tim. i. 12.

CHAP. V.

He exhorts the governors of the Church to be careful of the flock; and the people to be obedient to them, as well as ſober, watchful, and conſtant in the faith: And concludes all with prayer, and ſalutations.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. THE elders which are among you, I exhort, who am alſo an elder, and a witneſs of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and alſo a partaker of the glory which ſhall be revealed: Feed the flock of God, which is among you, taking the overſight thereof, not by conſtraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being enſamples to the flock. And when the chief ſhepherd ſhall appear, ye ſhall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

The elders which are among you.] Concerning the (presbyteroi) elders here ſpoken of; who they were, as well as their authority, privileges, and duty in general, enough has been ſaid already, on Matth. xxviii. 20. Luke vi. 13. John xx. 21. Acts xi. 30. xv. 6. and xx. 28. Rom. x. 15. and xii. 7, &c. 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2. 2 Cor. v. 20. 1 Theſſ. v. 12. and 1 Tim. i. 3. iv. 12, &c. and v. 17. (where ſee the notes.) To which muſt be added here, 1. That the duties they are exhorted to are illuſtrated by as many oppoſite vices which are to be avoided; viz. 1. Freely and willingly, "to feed the flock of God;" to which is oppoſed, the doing it by conſtraint; 2. To do it "of a ready mind;" to which is oppoſed the doing it "for filthy lucre," ver. 2. And, 3. Not only to feed them with ſound doctrine, but to ſet them a good example; to which is oppoſed a domineering carriage, as if they were "lords over God's heritage," ver. 3. All which exhortations are enforc'd by the promiſed reward of "a crown of glory that fadeth not away," ver. 4. (Ameſ.) 2. That, as St. Peter himſelf doth not here make uſe of the Lordly ſtyle, to command them, as the univerſal head of the Church, or Chriſt's Vicar on earth, but only exhorts them as their (ſympresbyteros) fellow-presbyter: (B.) So neither are we, from that humble title, to conclude, that he was no more than a common Presbyter or Elder: For, tho' this title is ſometimes in Scripture uſed more particularly to ſignify that inferior order, as in 1 Tim. v. 19. yet it is elſewhere applied to the ſuperior order of Biſhops, and even to the Apoſtles themſelves; as it is here by St. Peter, as well as by St. Paul, 1 Tim. iv. 14. compar'd with 2 Tim. i. 6. and by St. John, 2 John 1. and 3 John 3. (Maſon) And as to the other titles, which he calls himſelf by, of "a witneſs of the ſufferings of Chriſt, as alſo a partaker of the glory that ſhall be revealed," ſee the notes on Matth. xvii. 1. Luke xxiv. 48. Acts i. 8, 22. Rom. viii. 17, &c. 1 Cor. x. 13. Phil. i. 28. 2 Theſſ. i. 6. and Hebr. xi. 26. and thoſe here next following.

Feed the flock.] This verſe is an admonition, both of the general calling of thoſe who are Paſtors ſet over Chriſt's flock, and of the ſpecial calling of thoſe who are Biſhops ſet over the Paſtors themſelves: The former of which is contain'd in the word (poimainete) feed; the latter in the word (episcopountes) biſhoping, or (as we tranſlate it) "taking the overſight." And this duty implies a competent ſhare of learning and abilities in them: For the meaſures of the ſanctuary contain'd twice as much as the common meaſures, and the ſhekel of the ſanctuary weigh'd down two other ſhekels; to ſhew us, that the gifts of a Paſtor ought to carry a double proportion to thoſe of his flock; elſe he hath need to be fed himſelf, and is not qualified to "feed the flock of God." (Feat.) See Dr. Featly's ſermon on this text, 1619. and the notes on John xxi. 5. 1 Tim. iii. 2, &c. and Tit. i. 7.

Lords over God's heritage.] Matth. xx. 25. and 1 Cor. iii. 5.

Enſamples to the flock.] See the notes on Phil. iii. 17. and 1 Tim. iv. 12, 16.

The chief ſhepherd.] See the notes on John x. 11. and Hebr. xiii. 20.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Likewiſe, ye younger, ſubmit your ſelves unto the elder: Yea, all of you be clothed with humility: For God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble your ſelves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: Caſting all your care upon him, for he careth for you. Be ſober, be vigilant; becauſe your adverſary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, ſeeking whom he may devour: Whom reſiſt ſtedfaſt in the faith, knowing that the ſame afflictions are accompliſhed in your brethren that are in the world. But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Chriſt Jeſus, after that ye have ſuffered a while, make you perfect, ſtrengthen, ſettle you. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

Likewiſe, ye younger.] Neoteroi. As the Presbyteroi, in the beginning of this chapter, evidently denote the Teachers and Governors of the Church, it is but reaſonable, by the Neoteroi here, to underſtand all ſuch as were under the care of the Presbyteroi. (Wells)

Be ſubject one to another.] Theſe words are by ſome underſtood to enjoin the deference due to Spiritual Paſtors and Governors; and thus the connexion is very natural and cloſe from the beginning of the chapter: In which ſenſe, the term one another means only the different degrees or orders of the perſons to whom that reſpect and ſubmiſſion is accordingly due, in different inſtances and proportions. And for this ſenſe of the word allelois they think they have St. James's authority, ch. v. 16. Others extend the words to all thoſe good offices of courteous behaviour, and condeſcenſion and charity, which even equals and inferiors have a right to: And this mutual and voluntary ſubjection they conceive to be moſt agreeable to the following expreſſion of "being clothed with humility." (Stanh.) But, tho' this precept doth certainly comprehend both theſe duties, it ſeems reaſonable to underſtand it primarily of that ſubjection which is due to the Presbyters, or Elders, before ſpoken of; and but ſecondarily of the other. See the notes on Rom. xii. 10, &c. 1 Cor. iv. 1. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 8. and v. 13.

Be clothed with humility.] The word encomboſasthe ſignifies either, 1. A frock put over the reſt of our cloaths; and ſo it imports, that this humility ſhould be viſible in us, above all other Chriſtian virtues, in our whole converſation, our words, and actions: Or, 2. It ſignifies a belt, which girds about our garments; and ſo it imports, that we ſhould tie it faſt unto us, and have thoſe conſiderations always fix'd upon our ſpirits, which may ſtill keep us in an humble frame of ſoul. (H. Stanh. W. and B.) See the notes on Luke xviii. 12.

Caſting all your care.] As it becometh us not to be too querulous for the preſent, ſo neither to be too ſolicitous for the future. We are not forbid, but rather requir'd to have a moderate and provident care for the getting, keeping, and diſpoſing of the things of this life, in an induſtrious and conſcionable uſe of lawful means, ſtill leaving the ſucceſs entirely to the good pleaſure of our Heavenly Father. (Sanderſ.) See the notes on Matth. vi. 25. Luke xii. 11. and Phil. iv. 6. And for a larger explanation of this great duty, ſee Mr. J. Pelling's ſermon on this text, in 1607. and Mr. Spinckes's excellent Book, Of truſting in God.

Be ſober, be vigilant.] See the notes on ch. iv. 7. Matth. xxiv. 42. Luke xxi. 36. and 1 Theſſ. v. 6 and the ſermons of Mr. G. Giffard. 1597. and Mr. J. Foſbroke, 1633. on this text.

The ſame afflictions.] See the notes on Acts xiv. 22. and Hebr. xi. 26. and xii. 1.

Make you perfect.] See the notes on Rom. viii. 18. and xvi. 25. 2 Cor. iv. 17. and Hebr. xiii. 21.

Ver. 12, 13, 14. By Sylvanus, a faithful brother unto you (as I ſuppoſe) I have written briefly, exhorting and teſtifying, that this is the true grace of God wherein ye ſtand. The Church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, ſaluteth you, and ſo doth Marcus my ſon. Greet ye one another with a kiſs of charity. Peace be with you all that are in Chriſt Jeſus. Amen.

By Silvanus.] See the notes on Acts xv. 32.

As I ſuppoſe.] Hos logizomai. Dr. Whitby argues from this phraſe, that the divine afflatus, by which the Holy Ghoſt aſſiſted the Apoſtles to write, did not dictate the very words, but only preſided over them to preſerve them from error in writing. But this muſt be an inadvertency in him (as Dr. Wells has prov'd;) ſince the word is not nomizo, as he reads it, without any appearance of authority, but logizomai; which does literally and primarily import a rational ſuppoſition, or a well grounded aſſurance.

The Church that is at Babylon.] He en Babyloni ſynecleƈte. Various have been the comments of interpreters upon this text. Some, not finding the word Church expreſs'd in the Original Greek, have thought the feminine article might as probably denote a woman as a Church; and therefore interpret it of St. Peter's wife, then ſuppoſed to have been with her husband, and to have ſent her ſalutations to her countrymen and Fellow-Chriſtians: But Dr. Mill is ſaid to have been the firſt who made this conjecture; tho' Dr. Wall alſo ſeems to incline to it. Yet, as the Apoſtle writes to a Church, and ſtyles the members of it (eclectoi) elect, that is, Chriſtians ſeparated from the world, it is more reaſonable, (as Grotius and Hammond obſerve) to underſtand he ſynecleƈte here, of the Church of their Fellow-Chriſtians, in the place where he then was, who were equally elect, or ſelected by God out of the world, as the others were. The greater difficulty is to aſcertain the place here call'd Babylon. Which ſome underſtand literally of Babylon (properly ſo call'd) the metropolis of Aſſyria; among whom I find Beza, Bp. Alley, Stillingfleet, and even Dupin: Others, of a Babylon in Egypt, ſuppoſed to be Alexandria; of which opinion was Bp. Pearſon, follow'd therein by Dr. Wall. Lud. Capellus underſtands it figuratively, of Jeruſalem, no longer now the holy city, but a kind of ſpiritual Babylon; which he endeavours to make good by the interpretation of Cyril of Alexandria, and Procopius, on Jerem. li. 9. But generally, the Romiſh Church, and moſt of the moderate writers among the reformed, do underſtand it of Rome, acquieſcing therein in the judgment of the moſt ancient Fathers; to which agree Grotius, Hammond, Cave, Whitby, and Wells. See the notes on ch. i. 2. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 6.

Marcus, my ſon.] That is, whom he had begotten to Chriſtianity, and inſtructed in the Goſpel; as St. Paul calls Timothy and Titus, his ſons. But, N. B. Notwithſtanding what is herein before ſaid of Mark the Evangeliſt, in the Preface to his Goſpel, it is not agreed among the learned, that this Marcus, and he who is ſo often mention'd in The Acts of the Apoſtles, and St. Paul's Epiſtles, were different perſons. For not only the learned Le Sueur, but Bp. Pearſon, make them to have been one and the ſame; to which opinion alſo Dr. Stanhope inclines, tho' perhaps the majority may be on the other ſide. See the notes on Acts xv. 37. and 1 Tim. i. 2.

With a kiſs of charity.] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 16.

The END of the Firſt Epiſtle General of St. PETER.

ANNOTATIONS
Second Epiſtle General of St. Peter.

TO what has been ſaid, prefatory to the foregoing Epiſtle, we muſt add here,

i. That tho' ſome writers have objected to the ſtyle of this Epiſtle, as ſo different from the former, that it could not be written by the ſame author; and Grotius (or rather the publiſher of his Notes) would have it father'd upon Simeon, the immediate ſucceſſor to St. James, Biſhop of Jeruſalem; yet, there are ſo many genuine characters of this great Apoſtle, throughout the Epiſtle itſelf, not proper to the other, that I need not enlarge upon this point, after what has been learnedly obſerv'd by Hammond, Cave, Whitby and Stanhope, to invalidate the exceptions of thoſe poſthumous Annotations.

ii. That the time of writing it, appears to have been but a little while before his martyrdom at Rome; which alſo is an argument that it was written there. And,

iii. That the occaſion and ſubject of it is, to enforce what he had written in the former Epiſtle, with further motives to conſtancy, and antidotes againſt the poiſonous principles, with which he ſaw many, and eſpecially the followers of Simon Magus, were beginning to infect the Church of Chriſt.

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle exhorts them, not to reſt on a bare faith, but to add good works, to make their calling and election ſure: And puts them in mind of the evidences they had of the truth of Chriſtianity.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. SIMON Peter, a ſervant and an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteouſneſs of God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jeſus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godlineſs, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promiſes; that by theſe you might be partakers of the divine nature, having eſcaped the corruption that is in the world through luſt. And beſides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godlineſs; and to godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs; and to brotherly kindneſs, charity. For if theſe things be in you, and abound, they make you, that ye ſhall neither be barren, nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. But he that lacketh theſe things, is blind, and cannot ſee far off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old ſins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election ſure: For if ye do theſe things, ye ſhall never fall: For ſo an entrance ſhall be miniſtred unto you abundantly, into the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of theſe things, though ye know them, and be eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to ſtir you up, by putting you in remembrance: Knowing that ſhortly I muſt put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath ſhewed me. Moreover, I will endeavour that ye may be able after my deceaſe, to have theſe things always in remembrance.

Simon Peter.] See the Preface; and the notes on Matth. xvi. 18. John i. 42. and xxi. 16. and Acts xv. 14.

Obtained like precious faith.] Like, for its nature and quality, tho' not for its meaſure and degree; and alike precious, in regard of its object, Chriſt; in regard of its ſubject, the heart; in regard of its act, which is acceptance of, and conſent to, the terms of the Goſpel-covenant; in regard of its effects and precious fruits, viz. peace with God, peace with conſcience, victory over the world, &c. (Aſſ. and B.) See Mr. G. Giffard's ſermons on this text, 1597. and the notes on Rom. i. 17. 2 Cor. i. 21. and iv. 13.

Grace and peace.] See the notes on Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. 2 Cor. v. 18. and Eph. i. 2.

Called us to glory and virtue.] Dia doxes kai aretes; by glory and virtue, or power: That is, With a glorious calling, as being attended with the glorious effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt; by reaſon of which the revelation of the Goſpel is ſaid to be (en doxe, and dia doxes) in, and with, glory, 2 Cor. iii. 7, 11. and ſhewing his power, might and virtue, by the miraculous operations with which it was confirm'd. For, tho' Mr. Le Clerc is poſitive, that arete no where ſignifies power, yet we find it expreſly ſo explain'd in Heſychius. (H. W. and Wells) See the notes on John xvii. 3. Rom. xi. 33. Eph. i. 19. and 1 Pet. ii. 9.

Whereby are given.] Note here, 1. That the chief deſign of the Goſpel of our Saviour is, to make us "partakers of the divine nature:" 2. That the only means to attain this end, is to "eſcape the corruption that is in the world through luſt: And, 3. That thoſe "exceeding great and precious promiſes," which the Goſpel hath aſſur'd to all who comply with its deſign, are a ſufficient motive to us, to ſtrive with all our heart, to eſcape the corruptions of the world, that we may partake of the nature of God. (Lambe) See Mr. John Lambe's ſermon on this text, 1692. and the notes on John i. 12. and iii. 6. 1 Cor. vi. 18. and xv. 43. 2 Cor. i. 20. and vii. 1. Col. iii. 10. and Jam. i. 13.

And beſides this.] Kai auto touto de; And for this cauſe: Or, as the Alexandrian MS. and the Vulgar Latin, read it; Kai autoi de; Even ſo ye. Eſthius, with great probability, conjectures, That the ſenſe hitherto is pendent, thus; As ye have receiv'd, from the gift of God, all things neceſſary to life and godlineſs; ſo do ye add, or for this cauſe, "giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue," &c. (H. W. and Wall) Here the Apoſtle gives us a chain of all Chriſtian graces; whereof faith leads the van, and all the reſt follow in order. (Bever.) Thus, "add to your faith, virtue;" that is, all good works in general, without which faith is dead or dying; but fortitude, or holy courage in doing our duty, in particular: "To virtue, knowledge;" that is, a more exact knowledge of our duty, and a farther increaſe in it; for knowledge is the light, without which we cannot ſee to do our work: "To knowledge, temperance;" which ſubdues the violence of our unruly paſſions and appetites, and reduces them under the dominion of reaſon and religion: "To temperance, patience" under all wrongs and ſufferings whatſoever: "To patience, godlineſs;" that is, a conſcientious regard to all the duties of the firſt Table; let the fear of God reſtrain us from ſin, and the love of God conſtrain us to duty: "To godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs," or a fervent love to all Chriſtians, as being our brethren and fellow-members in Chriſt, and that for the grace-ſake: "And to brotherly kindneſs, charity;" that is, to all mankind, as proceeding from the ſame ſtock, having the ſame nature, and being ſubject to the ſame neceſſities with ourſelves; deſiring and endeavouring to do all the good we poſſibly can to every one. (B.) See Mr. G. Giffard's ſermon in 1597. and Mr. T. Sprat's in 1705. both on this text; and the ſeveral notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 13, &c. 2 Cor. iv. 8, &c. vi. 4, &c. and ix. 6. Gal. vi. 9. Eph. ii. 18. iv. 2. and vi. 10, &c. Phil. iv. 8. Col. iii. 5. 1 Theſſ. v. 6, 22. 1 Tim. vi. 6, 17. 2 Tim. ii. 3. Hebr. x. 36. xi. 1, &c. xii. 1, &c. and xiii. 14, &c. Jam. i. 2, 27. ii. 14, 26. and v. 7, &c.

Neither be barren, nor unfruitful.] See the notes on John xv. 2.

Purged from his old ſins.] That is, ſaith Oecumenius, in his baptiſm. (G. Aſſ. B. Wells and Wall)

Make your calling and election ſure.] Viz. By good works. For this is not only added in many Manuſcripts, and ancient Copies; but the text ſeems to require it: For it immediately follows, "If ye do theſe things, ye ſhall never fall;" plainly declaring, 1. That the "making their calling and election ſure," depended on the doing thoſe works of virtue, &c. before-mention'd; and ſo was only a conditional election, upon their perſeverance in a life of holineſs: And, 2. That even the elect, by neglecting to do theſe things, may fail of an entrance into this Heavenly Kingdom. (W.) See alſo Dr. Hammond at large; and the notes on John x. 10. 1 Cor. ix. 24. and xv. 58. Phil. iii. 12. 1 Tim. vi. 12. 2 Tim. ii. 19. and Hebr. ii. 1, &c.

Tho' ye know them.] It is a very dangerous notion that ſome have taken up, that a Chriſtian, in this life, may live above ordinances, and out-grow counſel and exhortations, as if they need not hear, and pray, and the like. But St. Peter thought otherwiſe. Theſe were grown Chriſtians, to whom he writes: And yet, he tells them three ſeveral times here, in four verſes, that "he would not be negligent to put them in remembrance" even of thoſe things which they knew already. (B.) See Mr. Joſiah Hort's ſermon on this text, 1708. and the notes on Rom. xv. 15. 2 Tim. i. 6. ii. 14. and iv. 2.

Put off this my tabernacle.] See the notes on 2 Cor. v. 1. and 2 Tim. iv. 6.

Chriſt hath ſhewed me.] Either referring to what Chriſt had foretold him, John xxi. 18, 19. (H. and Wall) Or elſe, perhaps, to ſome later revelation, in a viſion; as St. Polycarp, and St. Cyprian, were ſeverally forewarn'd of their reſpective martyrdoms approaching. (Aſſ. and W.)

I will endeavour.] Viz. By leaving behind me two Epiſtles in writing, for your peruſal at all times. (Aſſ. H. and Wells) St. Peter therefore was not of opinion, that Oral Tradition was a ſafe and certain way to keep the Goſpel-precepts in remembrance. (W.) See the notes on 2 Tim. ii. 2.

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. For we have not followed cunningly deviſed fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but were eye-witneſſes of his majeſty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came ſuch a voice from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed. And this voice which came from heaven, we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. We have alſo a more ſure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts: Knowing this firſt, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: But holy men of God ſpake as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt.

For we have not followed.] Here the Apoſtle proceeds to lay before them the grounds and reaſons, why he had ſo earneſtly preſs'd them to a conſtant perſeverance in their duty; namely, certain infallible evidences of the truth of Chriſtianity: Such as, 1. The teſtimony of the Apoſtles, who were both eye and ear-witneſſes of the majeſty of Chriſt in his glory; And, 2. The teſtimony of their own divinely inſpired Scripture prophecies. (Ameſ. Stanh. and Wells) See the particulars in the notes here next following.

Eye-witneſſes of his majeſty.] Namely, Peter himſelf, and James and John; in whoſe preſence Jeſus was manifeſtly tranſfigured, or transform'd; Moſes and Elias alſo talking with him in glory, as we read, Matth. xvii. 1, &c. Mark ix. 2, &c. and Luke ix. 28, &c. where ſee the ſeveral notes; as alſo on 1 John i. 1.

There came ſuch a voice.] To wit, a voice from Heaven, declaring Chriſt to be the Son of God; as in the texts laſt quoted. See Dr. Hammond and Dr. Whitby at large on this text.

In the holy mount.] Viz. Mount Tabor in Galilee; as is noted on Matth. xvii. 1. But, whereas the Editor of the poſthumous annotations on this Epiſtle, in the name of Grotius, would have this paſſage underſtood, not of the transfiguration on mount Tabor, but of that other paſſage in John xii. 28. it muſt be obſerv'd, 1. That Grotius himſelf, in thoſe annotations which are known to be his, on Matth. xvii. 1. diſtinctly applies theſe words to the transfiguration on mount Tabor. 2. That they cannot properly be interpreted otherwiſe: For there we expreſly read the very words here quoted, ("This is my beloved Son," &c.) whereas in that other paſſage, John xii. 28. the words are not only different, but quite to another purpoſe. 3. That tho' 'tis true, mount Moriah (where the temple ſtood) was ordinarily ſtiled the holy mountain, and no other vouchſafed that title by the Jews, becauſe of God's eſpecial preſence there; yet, it is certain, that other places, where God hath occaſionally manifeſted his glorious preſence, have, by the Jews, and even by God himſelf, been ſtiled holy ground; as Acts vii. 33. Agreeable to which, the mount whereon the glorious transfiguration, and cloud, and voice, were evidences of the divine preſence, might very properly be denominated an holy mount. And, 4. That this text, being thus applicable only to the transfiguration on mount Tabor, (of which only Peter, James and John were witneſſes) is an evident proof, among others, that this Epiſtle could not be written by Simeon, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, but by Simon Peter, the Apoſtle, (whoſe name it bears) notwithſtanding all the various readings and conjectures of the poſthumous Grotius, which are confeſſedly unſupported by any known copy now extant. (H. Cave and W.)

A more ſure word of prophecy.] Note here, 1. That the holy Scriptures, or written word of God, (here called the "word of prophecy") are "a more ſure word" to us, than a voice from Heaven, or any other revelation whatſoever. Not that there was any uncertainty in the Lord's voice utter'd from Heaven at Chriſt's transfiguration, before ſpoken of; but becauſe that voice, having been heard only by three witneſſes, might poſſibly be liable to ſome objection: Whereas the Holy Scriptures are a ſtanding and authentic record, and a moſt ſure ground for faith to build upon. And accordingly, the Apoſtle tells them, they ſhould do well to attend unto the written word, "as unto a light that ſhined" in that dark time, till, by conſidering thoſe ancient prophecies, and comparing them with what Chriſt had done and ſuffer'd, they might find the day dawning upon them, and the Holy Spirit ariſing in their hearts, and ſo enlightning and convincing them, that no more doubts and ſcruples ſhould be left in them, concerning this great truth, that Jeſus is the true and promiſed Meſſiah, and really the Son of God. (Aſſ. W. B. and Fox) 2. That nevertheleſs, their conceit is groundleſs and dangerous, who fanſy that God will ſet up ſuch a light in them, as will render the Holy Scriptures uſeleſs. (Fox) And, 3. That it is very probable, as Mr. Mede obſerves, that St. Peter might here have particular regard to the prophecy of Daniel, concerning the Seventy Weeks, ch. ix. 24. which were now near expired, when the temple and Jewiſh ſtate were to be diſſolv'd; as they were about four years after. (Wells and Fox) See Dr. Stanhope's ſermons on this text, at Boyle's Lectures, 1701. and the notes on Luke xvi. 29. John v. 39. and Rom. xv. 4.

Private interpretation.] Prophecy comes not from the Prophet's own ſuggeſtion, but from the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt. (W.) See the notes on Rom. xii. 6. 2 Tim. iii. 16. and 1 Pet. i. 11.

He warns them againſt falſe prophets; deſcribing their manners and puniſhment.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. BUT there were falſe prophets alſo among the people, even as there ſhall be falſe teachers among you, who privily ſhall bring in damnable hereſies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themſelves ſwift deſtruction. And many ſhall follow their pernicious ways, by reaſon of whom the way of truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of. And through covetouſneſs ſhall they with feigned words make merchandiſe of you: Whoſe judgment now of a long time lingreth not, and their damnation ſlumbreth not. For if God ſpared not the angels that ſinned, but caſt them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkneſs, to be reſerved unto judgment; and ſpared not the old world, but ſaved Noah the eighth perſon, a preacher of righteouſneſs, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; and turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into aſhes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an enſample unto thoſe that after ſhould live ungodly; and delivered juſt Lot, vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked: (For that righteous man dwelling among them, in ſeeing and hearing, vexed his righteous ſoul from day to day with their unlawful deeds) The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed: But chiefly them that walk after the fleſh, in the luſt of uncleanneſs, and deſpiſe government: Preſumptuous are they, ſelf-willed, they are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities: Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might, bring not a railing accuſation againſt them before the Lord. But theſe, as natural brute beaſts, made to be taken and deſtroyed, ſpeak evil of the things that they underſtand not, and ſhall utterly periſh in their own corruption; and ſhall receive the reward of unrighteouſneſs, as they that count it pleaſure to riot in the day time: Spots they are and blemiſhes, ſporting themſelves with their own deceivings, while they feaſt with you; having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot ceaſe from ſin; beguiling unſtable ſouls: An heart they have exerciſed with covetous practices; curſed children: Which have forſaken the right way, and are gone aſtray, following the way of Balaam the ſon of Boſor, who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs; but was rebuked for his iniquity: The dumb aſs ſpeaking with man's voice, forbad the madneſs of the Prophet. Theſe are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempeſt, to whom the miſt of darkneſs is reſerved for ever. For when they ſpeak great ſwelling words of vanity, they allure through the luſts of the fleſh, through much wantonneſs, thoſe that were clean eſcaped from them who live in error. While they promiſe them liberty, they themſelves are the ſervants of corruption: For of whom a man is overcome, of the ſame is he brought in bondage. For if after they have eſcaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, they are again entangled therein, and overcome; the latter end is worſe with them than the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteouſneſs, than after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them. But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and, The ſow that was waſhed, to her wallowing in the mire.

Falſe teachers.] See the notes on Matth. xxiv. 5. and Acts xx. 29.

Damnable hereſies.] See the notes on Acts xv. 22. 1 Cor. xi. 19. and 1 Tim. iv. 1, &c.

Denying the Lord that bought them.] Viz. Either by total apoſtaſy, or ſuch an evil life as is inconſiſtent with the ſervice of Chriſt. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts xx. 28. Rom. x. 9. 1 Cor. vi. 20. Gal. v. 2. and Phil. iii. 18.

Swift deſtruction.] See the notes on Phil. iii. 19. and 1 Theſſ. v. 3.

Spared not the angels that ſinned.] This verſe, and the following, ought to be ſeriouſly conſider'd, by thoſe who preſume on the mercy of God. "For if God ſpared not the Angels," nor the other perſons here mention'd, then wicked Chriſtians, who continue in their ſins, impenitent and unreform'd, have no warrantable ground to hope that God will pardon and ſave them? No! However proſperous and honourable the unrighteous may be here, they are "reſerved unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed," ver. 9. (Fox) See the notes here next following.

Caſt them down to hell.] The miſinterpretation of this text ſeems to be wholly owing to the wrong acceptation of the word tartaroſas. For, it being granted on all ſides, that tartaroo does import to caſt down, or aſſign, to the place call'd Tartaros, and becauſe that place is repreſented, by old Heſiod and Homer, as a vaſt way under the earth, hence ſeems to have ariſen the common notion, that hell, or the place where the fallen Angels even at preſent are, is under the earth. But, ſince the aſſigning this ſituation to Tartarus is only a poetical fiction, and the word tartarus (properly deriv'd from taraſſo to trouble) does in itſelf imply no ſuch infernal ſituation, but only a place to which perſons are aſſign'd who are under trouble; hence it evidently follows, that Tartarus may be any place where the fallen Angels are at preſent, as in their proper abode, in whatſoever region of the world it is ſituated. And therefore, ſince, from ſome paſſages of St. Paul's Epiſtles, (as where the Devil is ſtyled "the Prince of the power of the air," Eph. ii. 2, &c.) it may be fairly inferr'd, that the region of the air is the place, wherein the fallen Angels have at preſent their abode, it follows, that tartaroſas may moſt truly denote no more, than the caſting down the Angels who had ſinned, out of Heaven, into the regions of the air: And becauſe, whatever is the place of the abode of the fallen Angels, it is uſual for us, in common ſpeech, to call it Hell; hence, by caſting down into hell, is truly to be underſtood in this text no more than caſting down out of Heaven into the regions of the air. And this clauſe being ſo to be underſtood, it follows, that the remaining clauſe is likewiſe to be render'd, (not as in our common tranſlation, "delivered them into chains of darkneſs, to be reſerved unto judgment," but) delivered them to be reſerved for chains of darkneſs unto, or at the judgment. And agreeably hereto, it is obſervable, That, in ver. 17. hois ho zophos tou ſcotous eis aiona teteretai, is render'd, To, or for, whom the blackneſs, or "miſt of darkneſs is reſerved for ever:" Where, as the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever plainly denotes the greatneſs and eternity of the torments which ſhall be inflicted on the wicked at the day of judgment, ſo it ſhews what is the true meaning of the (ſeirai zophou) "chains of darkneſs," mention'd in this text; they being evidently deſign'd for equivalent expreſſions, viz. the extremity of torments, which ſhall at the laſt day be inflicted on the wicked.

And likewiſe, ch. iii. 7. "the heavens and the earth" are ſaid to be pyri teroumenoi eis hemeran criſeos; which as it is an expreſſion exactly parallel to ſeirais zophou eis criſin teterentai, ſo it ſhews, that by eis criſin, in the one clauſe, is denoted eis hemeran criſeos, as it is more fully expreſs'd, in the other: And alſo it ſhews, that as the other text is rightly render'd "reſerved unto (or for) fire againſt (or at) the day of judgment;" ſo this ſhould be likewiſe render'd, reſerved (unto, or) for chains of darkneſs at the judgment. It remains only to obſerve, That the queſtion of the Devils to our Saviour, Matth. viii. 29. "Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" is not to be ſo underſtood, as if the Devils were now in no degree of torment; but only, that their torment now is nothing near ſo great, as ſhall be inflicted on them at the day of judgment. For, it being fairly to be inferr'd from the parable of Dives and Lazarus, that wicked men are in ſome degree of torment, ſo ſoon as they die, or before the day of judgment; it may thence be alſo reaſonably inferr'd, that the wicked Angels are ſo likewiſe; there being no reaſon to ſuppoſe, that the wicked Angels have more mercy ſhew'd them in this reſpect than wicked men: And therefore, ſince the wicked Angels, even now, (taraſſontai) are in ſome degree of torment, the place of their uſual abode, (viz. the region of the air) may be fitly ſtyled Tartarus; and God may be fitly ſaid tartaroſai, by caſting them down out of Heaven, into the region of the air. (Wells) See Mr. Joſ. Mede's diſcourſes on this text, to the ſame effect; whoſe interpretation is alſo follow'd by Dr. Whitby, and Mr. Fox.

Noah, the eighth perſon.] That is, one of the eight, who were ſaved in the ark.

Juſt Lot.] So called, from the habitual frame of his heart, and the general tenor of his life. (B.) Not that he had no ſin in him, but becauſe he endeavour'd to keep all God's commandments. (Aſſ.)

The Lord knoweth how.] See the notes on 1 Cor. x. 13. and Jam. i. 2.

Deſpiſe government.] See the notes on Rom. xiii. 1, &c. 1 Tim. ii. 2, &c. 1 Pet. ii. 13.

Preſumptuous are they.] Or, O preſumptuous perſons! By way of admiration and exclamation. (Aſſ.) Or, O audacious!

Made to be taken and deſtroyed.] Eis haloſin kai phthoran; To catch people, and to corrupt or debauch them. (Wall) In reference to which it is, that the creatures which are caught and torne by wild beaſts, are by the Law accounted unclean or polluted, Lev. xvii. 15. (H.)

Riot in the day-time.] See the notes on John iii. 20. Rom. xiii. 13. Eph. v. 11. and 1 Theſſ. v. 7.

With their own deceivings.] En tais apatais auton. Here the word apatais ſeems to be erroneouſly written, for agapais; meaning their love-feaſts, or feaſts of charity. But Dr. Whitby interprets it, according to the common reading, of thoſe practices which were the effects of their deceitful principles: And ſays, there ſeems no need of reading agapais; thoſe being the feaſts of the Church, and not of Hereticks. However, if this various reading is not to be allow'd on the authority of the Alexandrian, and one other MS as well as of the Vulgar and Ethiopic Verſions, ſurely it may be admitted in conformity to that of St. Jude, whoſe Epiſtle is agreeable in moſt things with this ſecond of St. Peter; and particularly, ver. 12. where we read (ſpilades) ſpots, as here (ſpiloi kai momoi) ſpots and blemiſhes; there (ſyneuochoumenoi) feaſting together, as here in the very ſame word; and ſo probably as there (agapais) feaſts of charity, ſo it ſhould be alſo here, inſtead of apatais; which differs ſo little from the other, that it might eaſily be miſtaken for it. (H. Wells and Wall) And as to Dr. Whitby's main objection againſt this reading, it ſeems to have the leſs force, becauſe (as Beza has well obſerv'd) thoſe ſecret Hereticks ſtill frequented the feaſts of the Church, in hopes to be look'd upon as true members of it. See the notes on 1 Cor xi. 21.

Eyes full of adultery.] Or rather, of the adultereſs. For ſo, moichalis, the word here uſed, properly ſignifies. And the eyes are mention'd, becauſe they let in adulterous thoughts to the ſoul. (Aſſ. and H.) See the notes on Matth. v. 28. And for the common reading, ſee Dr. Wells on this text.

Balaam, the ſon of Boſor.] In the Hebrew call'd the ſon of Beor, by a ſmall change of the Hebrew letters, call'd Boſor here, tho' in ſome copies of the Greek alſo he is called Beor. (Aſſ. H. and Wall) Or, we may underſtand Balaam, tou Boſor, to be meant of a place ſo call'd. (G. and Wells) But ſee the notes on Jude 11.

The miſt of darkneſs.] See the notes on ver. 4. and Matth. viii. 12.

They allure.] Deleazouſi; A metaphor taken from fiſhers or fowlers; who produce the bait, but hide the hook or net. (Aſſ. Leigh, H. and B.)

Clean eſcaped.] Ontos apophygontas. But in the Alexandrian, and ſome other MSS. as alſo in the Syriac and Ethiopic Verſions, it is read (oligos) for a little while. And this reading is required by the ſenſe; whereas the common reading (ontos) is inconſiſtent with the deſign of the Apoſtle. For, ſuch alone can be rightly ſaid to be (ontos) "clean eſcaped from them who live in error," as are ſo eſcaped as not to be ſeduced any more. (Wells)

Promiſe them liberty.] Under the promiſe of liberty, ſeducers draw men to licentiouſneſs and looſneſs of life. (Aſſ.) Such vile impoſtors uſe to ſay, They, being free and ſtrong, may do many things, which the weak Chriſtians may not do; and that it is no ſin in them, tho' it is in others: Thus boaſting in this liberty, they entice others to partake of the ſame, promiſing them this liberty alſo, to be made as free and ſtrong as they are; whereas they themſelves all the while are the vileſt ſlaves to all the raging paſſions of luſt and lewdneſs. (Wall) See the notes on John viii. 32, &c.

The latter end is worſe.] Becauſe they ſin of knowledge now, and againſt former acknowledgment; whereas they ſinn'd of ignorance before. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 4. Matth. xii. 45. Luke xi. 26. and xii. 47. Hebr. vi. 4. and x. 26.

C H A P. III.

The certainty of Chriſt's coming; and how to prepare for it.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. THIS ſecond Epiſtle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I ſtir up your pure minds by way of remembrance: That ye may be mindful of the words which were ſpoken before by the holy Prophets, and of the commandment of us the Apoſtles of the Lord and Saviour: Knowing this firſt, that there ſhall come in the laſt days ſcoffers walking after their own luſts, and ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming? For ſince the fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth ſtanding out of the water, and in the water: Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, periſhed. But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the ſame word are kept in ſtore, reſerved unto fire againſt the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men. But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day. The Lord is not ſlack concerning his promiſe, (as ſome men count ſlackneſs) but is long-ſuffering to us-ward, not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat, the earth alſo and the works that are therein, ſhall be burnt up.

This ſecond Epiſtle.] This is another proof of St. Peter's being the author of this Epiſtle, and not Simeon of Jeruſalem. See the Preface.

Your pure minds.] Eilicrine, by the French, is tranſlated ſimple and ſincere; ſuch being moſt liable to be ſeduced by hypocrites. (Q.) Dr. Whitby explains it of a ſincere deſire to know, and regard to, the truth; which being once ſeated in the mind and heart, we ſhall readily embrace, and firmly ſtand by it, when deliver'd to us. But the common reading, retain'd by Hammond and Wells, ſeems moſt agreeable to the context, viz. ſuch as remain'd pure, and untainted with the hereſies here cautioned againſt.

By way of remembrance.] See the notes on ch. i. 12, &c.

By the holy Prophets, and——Apoſtles.] Note, how St. Peter here joins the Prophets and Apoſtles together, as concurring harmoniouſly in their doctrine. What was foretold by the Prophets was confirm'd by the Apoſtles: Hence they are ſaid to have but one mouth, Luke i. 70. not mouths; for tho' the Prophets and Apoſtles were many, yet they all had but one mouth, all ſpeaking the ſame thing. (B.)

There ſhall come.] Of themſelves; not ſent [illegible] God. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts xx. 29.

Scoffers.] Empaictai; The very worſt, and higheſt degree of defection from piety. (H.) Such doubtleſs were the Socinians, and Gnoſticks, and other libertines; who fram'd a new and fanciful ſcheme of religion, full of licentious doctrines; and particularly denying the reſurrection of the dead, and by conſequence the future coming and kingdom of Chriſt: Againſt which, to add the greater ſting to their arguments, they gave 'em a turn of wit and ſatyr, as in the verſe following. (Killingb.) The Chriſtians of our time have need to give a particular regard to this prediction of the Atheiſm which now begins to prevail. For, the main argument to keep us from being ſcandaliz'd or diſcourag'd by it is, That it is no other than what our Saviour and his Apoſtles foretold would come; ſo that the Scripture would not have been true, without its coming, ſome time or other: And now, by the all-wiſe Providence, it comes to paſs, that their ſcoffs and Atheiſtical arguments do, to a Chriſtian who reads the Scripture, confirm the faith of it. (Wall) See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 32. 2 Theſſ. ii. 3. and 2 Tim. iii. 1.

Where is the promiſe of his coming.] Theſe words plainly refer to the laſt appearance and ſolemn coming of our Saviour to judgment. And they may admit of a two-fold interpretation; Either, 1. As ſpoken by way of doubt and queſtion, whether Chriſt will come to judgment; and whether he has not delay'd the time, and ſlipp'd his promiſe? Or, 2. By way of abſolute denial, viz. That it is a vain promiſe and expectation; and that he will never come! As to the former of which we muſt obſerve, 1. That there was a prevailing, and almoſt general perſwaſion, among the Chriſtians of thoſe times, that the coming of our Saviour was juſt at hand; which was alſo ſeemingly favour'd by ſome expreſſions of Holy Scripture. But, 2. That ſuch expreſſions are fairly capable of another meaning. And as to the latter, if we conſider the common objections againſt this doctrine, they will be found mere prejudices, equally vain, unreaſonable and impious. For, 1. Whereas they object, that the time of judgment is long delay'd, and that it is future, and for any thing they know, as far off as ever, "ſince all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation;" ſuch ſcoffers, of all men in the world, have the leaſt reaſon to make this an objection, conſidering how deeply they are concern'd in it, and what a ſad account they have then to give. 2. Whereas they urge, That it would have been a greater encouragement to piety, and a ſtronger reſtraint from ſin, if God had told us the time when this judgment would be; they muſt be taught, that if the general belief of the judgment to come will not make us good, neither would the knowledge of the preciſe time of it. Nay our Saviour founds his argument, for a conſtant watchfulneſs, on this very uncertainty of time, Matth. xxiv. 42, &c. Mark xiii. 35, &c. Luke xii. 40. And Abraham, in the parable, tells the rich man, that even a meſſage from the dead, would not convince an Atheiſt, who will not believe the Scriptures, Luke xvi 31. 3. Whereas they go further and ſay, That it is not only uncertain in time, but even in the thing itſelf, which poſſibly may never happen, becauſe no man ever ſaw the things which they are requir'd to believe; This would quite take away all faith, Hebr. xi. 1. and deſtroy all hope, Rom. viii. 24. and render the ſufferings of all good men needleſs and leſs rewardable; and moreover would invalidate all hiſtorical credit. And, 4. Whereas they object, That the belief of a judgment to come, is a very uncomfortable doctrine, and deprives men of all the pleaſure and felicity of human life; it is ſufficient to reply, 1. That this is directly contrary to daily experience; none being more pleaſant and ſociable, and innocently facetious, none enjoying the delights and bleſſings of providence with a truer taſte and ſatisfaction, than religious men, who live under the ſenſe of God, and the awe of being call'd to account; which is ſo far from retrenching their juſt pleaſures, that it is the only way to qualify 'em for them. And, 2. That the ſuppoſition itſelf is altogether groundleſs: For, ſo gracious is our God, that he requires nothing of us which is inconſiſtent with the chearfulneſs of our minds, the health of our bodies, and the intereſt of our temporal affairs: Provided we always keep a good conſcience void of offence towards God and towards man, and obſerve our conſtant ſeaſons of prayer and devotion, we may enjoy as much of this world as is needful, as much as a wiſe and virtuous man would deſire. To all which let us add, laſtly, The inſecurity and danger of denying, and the infinite comfort of believing, a judgment to come. For if there be no judgment, everlaſting darkneſs and oblivion muſt cover the ſons of men; and who can think of this without horror? If there be a judgment, Atheiſts and unbelievers are yet in a worſe condition: If there be a Heaven, they ſhall be excluded from it; if there be a Hell, they ſhall fall into it. (Killingb.) See Mr. Killingbeck's ſermons on this text, and the notes on Luke xvi. 31. 1 Cor. vii. 29. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 2.

Willingly are ignorant of.] Theſe ſcoffers had declar'd, in the former verſe, that the world was ſtill the ſame as it was from the beginning, and that nature always had, and therefore ever would keep its courſe. But the Apoſtle ſays, Theſe ſcoffers know better; or if they be ignorant, they are wilfully ignorant, what a change God made in the world ſince the firſt creation of it; and that he can as eaſily deſtroy it, as he did at firſt create it. To evidence this, he ſhews, how God by water drown'd the old world; and therefore all things had not "continued as they were from the beginning of the creation:" And that this preſent world ſhall, when God's time is come, be ruin'd by fire, as the old world was by water. The ſame omnipotent power of God which created the world upholds it and preſerves it, and will at laſt deſtroy it, at the final judgment; when all wicked perſons, eſpecially profane ſcoffers at, and deriders of, Chriſt's coming, ſhall be condemn'd and periſh. (G. H. W. B. Q. and Wall) See the notes on ch. ii. 4, &c. John i. 3. Col. i. 17. and 2 Theſſ. i. 8.

Not willing that any ſhould periſh.] See Mr. D. Newcome's ſermon on this text, 1711. and the notes on Acts xvii. 30. Rom. ii. 4. and 1 Tim. ii. 4, &c.

Come as a thief.] Suddenly and unexpectedly. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Theſſ. v. 2.

The Heavens ſhall paſs away.] Theſe lofty and ſtrong expreſſions, of "the Heavens paſſing away," &c. are, by good expoſitors, underſtood figuratively, to denote the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the diſſolution of the Jewiſh ſtate; it being uſual, among the eaſtern nations (whoſe manner of ſpeaking is imitated by the writers of the New Teſtament) to repreſent great events, as if the whole frame of the world were to be at once diſſolv'd. But others underſtand them literally, of the laſt and final judgment, and the general conflagration, of which the deſtruction of Jeruſalem was but a type or figure. And in the ſame two-fold ſenſe may the three next following verſes be underſtood. (Fox) See the notes on ver. 13.

With a great noiſe.] Rhoizedon does not only ſignify a great noiſe, but ſuch a noiſe as is the effect of ſwiftneſs in motion, like that of the wind. (Eſt. and Leigh) Thus alſo Phavorinus explains it by (ſphodros) vehemently, as well as (met' echou) with an echo: So that it ſignifies ſwiftly, as well as with a noiſe. And that the former of theſe is the meaning of it here, is probable, becauſe it is added to the deſcription of that day "coming, as a thief," unexpectedly; to which agrees this notion of ſwiftneſs, not that other of a noiſe, or echo: For thieves in the night do not willingly make any noiſe at all, leſt they ſhould thereby loſe the advantage of the night, that is, the ſecrecy of it. (H.)

The elements ſhall melt.] That is, the planets. For ſo is ſtoicheia underſtood by the Ancients. (Wells) That the elements can't be here taken in the common ſenſe, Mr. Mede proves well, Becauſe one of them is that fire which ſhall conſume theſe elements: But that they ſignify the planets, he proves from the teſtimonies of Juſtin Martyr, Theophilus of Antioch, Polycrates, and other ancient Fathers. (W.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Seeing that all theſe things ſhall be diſſolved, what manner of perſons ought ye to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs, looking for and haſting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire ſhall be diſſolved, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheleſs, we, according to his promiſe, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs. Wherefore, beloved, ſeeing that ye look for ſuch things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without ſpot, and blameleſs: And account that the long-ſuffering of our Lord is ſalvation; even as our beloved brother Paul alſo, according to the wiſdom given unto him, hath written unto you; as alſo in all his epiſtles, ſpeaking in him of theſe things: In which are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which they that are unlearned and unſtable wreſt, as they do alſo the other Scriptures, unto their own deſtruction. Ye therefore, beloved, ſeeing ye know theſe things before, beware leſt ye alſo, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own ſtedfaſtneſs. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

In all holy converſation.] See the notes on Acts xxiv. 16. Phil. i. 27. 1 Theſſ. v. 7. and Hebr. xii. 14.

Haſting unto the coming.] Or, haſt'ning the coming (ſpeudontas) Not only expecting it, or looking for it, as Matth. xxiv. 42. and Luke xii. 42. but alſo, as it were, going forth to meet Chriſt with burning lamps, Matth. xxv. 1. So ſervants, who deſire their maſter's return, get all things ready to entertain him, againſt he comes: And ſo ſhould we prepare ourſelves for Chriſt's coming, by fitting ourſelves for it, more than ſeeking after worldly things. He haſtes, who follows one thing to finiſh it, and is not ſo diſtracted, as to begin many things, and end none. The one thing needful for us, is to fit ourſelves for Chriſt's coming.

The Heavens being on fire.] See the notes on ver. 10.

New Heavens, and a new earth.] I do not underſtand theſe words in a literal ſenſe, as if the material Heavens were to be created a-new; but in a figurative ſenſe, denoting, that after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the Jewiſh polity, there ſhould be a new ſtate of things; a new Church, in which there ſhould be new ordinances, new ſacraments; baptiſm and the Lord's Supper, inſtead of circumciſion and the paſſover; the Jews ſhould be caſt off, and the Gentiles taken in; a new covenant: In few words, that there ſhould be ſuch a moral change in the affairs of the Church, as would, in a manner, equal the new creation of the Heavens and the earth, promis'd to the Jews, and Chriſt ſhould eſtabliſh a new kingdom; and the enemies of God, and of his people, ſhould be deſtroy'd: In which new ſtate, which ſhould be before the general conflagration, men ſhould be free from all ſin and wickedneſs; and the univerſal practice of holineſs, peace and love ſhould prevail. But ſome refer theſe words to that glorious ſtate, which good Chriſtians ſhall be admitted into, after the general conflagration and judgment, where they ſhall live in the moſt complete practice of all virtue, and in the enjoyment of the moſt perfect happineſs. (Fox)

Without ſpot, and blameleſs.] See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 8. Eph. v. 27. Phil. i. 10. and Col. i. 22.

Is ſalvation.] See the notes on Rom. ii. 4.

Hath written unto you.] Viz. In the Epiſtle to the Hebrews; which contains many exhortations, relating to perſeverance in the faith, and patiently expecting the coming of the Lord, &c. (Wells and Wall)

Things hard to be underſtood.] For the better underſtanding the Apoſtle's meaning in theſe words, we muſt obſerve, 1. That St. Peter does not ſay, that St. Paul's Epiſtles, or any of them, are hard to be underſtood; but only that ſome things, or doctrines, therein treated of, are ſo: For the words (en hois) in, or among, which, can't be conſtrued as meant of the epiſtles, but of ſome things which St. Paul had ſpoken of in them. (Beza, Heinſ. Ameſ. H. W. and Fox) For, 2. St. Peter is ſo far from paſſing any cenſure or reflection upon his "beloved brother Paul" that, on the contrary, he praiſes him, for having written in all his epiſtles, "according to the wiſdom given unto him" of God; tho' ſome of the points he had ſo written of were very profound, and "hard to be underſtood" or explain'd to their capacity. (Heinſ.) Among which, ſome apply this paſſage to the doctrine of juſtification. (Heinſ. G. and Wells) Others, to the reſurrection: (W.) Some, to the ſpiritual body, as chang'd at the laſt day: (G.) Others, to Antichriſt. (Ameſ.) But 'tis generally agreed, that the coming of Chriſt, which St. Paul had ſpoken of, in ſeveral of his Epiſtles, and which St. Peter is alſo diſcourſing of here, is one of the points intended. (Heinſ. Ameſ. H. W. and Fox) 3. That, as St Paul himſelf, Hebr. v. 11. ſpeaks of "many things, hard to be uttered," becauſe they were dull of hearing; ſo here St Peter does not impute it to the author, that ſome things, in St. Paul's Epiſtles, are hard to be underſtood; but lays the blame on the "unlearned and unſtable" readers. (Heinſ.) But, 4. That by (amatheis) the unlearned, we are not here to underſtand thoſe who are deſtitute of that knowledge, which we now commonly account learning; but thoſe who have not learnt the firſt rudiments and principles of the Chriſtian religion: Which they continue ignorant of, not becauſe they can not, but becauſe they will not, know them; their affections being impure, and their minds eſtranged from religion and piety. (Ameſ. and Fox) And, 5. By (aſterictoi) the unſtable, thoſe who are not ſettled, not confirm'd in the great principles of religion: Who ſometimes believe, ſometimes queſtion, and ſometimes dis-believe them; being uncertain, now of this opinion, now of that, and again loſt in infidelity. (Idem) 6. That the word (ſtrebblouſi) here rendred wreſt, is a metaphor taken from torturers, who put a man upon the rack; and thereby force him to ſpeak what he never thought: (Leigh, and B.) Or, from ſhoemakers, who ſtretch their leather, and ſometimes tear it, when of itſelf it will not reach to their purpoſe. (Bp. Grif. Williams) 7. That, where 'tis ſaid, they wreſt the Scriptures "unto their own deſtruction," we are not to underſtand it ſo deſtructive, to expound any part of Scripture, by miſtake, contrary to its true meaning; but that it is the true property of a reprobate, to wreſt arguments out of God's word, againſt God, or his divine will. (G. and Ameſ.) And, laſtly, That it is manifeſt, from what St. Peter here ſays, That all Chriſtians were allow'd to read the Scriptures; for how elſe could the unlearned and unſtable wreſt them? For, tho' the Apoſtle blames this, he does not blame them for reading the Scriptures; and much leſs does he forbid the reading of them, as the moſt effectual way to prevent their being wreſted. And this ſhews, how ill-grounded that concluſion is, which the writers of the Church of Rome draw from this text, viz. that Lay-Chriſtians ought not to be allow'd to read the Scriptures. The true inference, which the conſideration of the difficulties of the Holy Scriptures directs us to, is, that we ſhould read them with great diligence and application, and not be too haſty in the concluſions we draw from difficult places. The things neceſſary to ſalvation are plain and eaſy: For, what can be more plain, than the commands, exhortations, promiſes and threatnings contain'd in the Holy Scriptures? (Ameſ. and Fox) See Dr. Hammond at large, and the notes on Eph. iv. 14. 2 Theſſ. ii. 2. 2 Tim. iii. 7. and Hebr. v. 11.

The END of the Second Epiſtle General of St. PETER.

ANNOTATIONS

Firſt Epiſtle General of St. John.

THE Author of this, and the two next following Epiſtles, has been ſufficiently ſpoken of, in the Preface to the Goſpel, which was written by him; tho' his great humility made him decline to put his name to them.

All that is neceſſary to be added here is,

i. That St. John being an Apoſtle of the circumciſion, it is generally believ'd, that this Epiſtle was written more particularly to the Jewiſh converts to Chriſtianity: And it was anciently call'd The Epiſtle to the Parthians; meaning thoſe who liv'd beyond Euphrates, where, Joſephus tells us, there were multitudes of them.

ii. That as to the place, where it was written, neither Scripture, nor antiquity, gives us any ground of conjecture; tho' the Editor of Grotius ſuppoſes it to have been written at Patmos, where this Apoſtle is known to have been a long time a priſoner, in the reign of Domitian. But, if it was written before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, as is generally concluded from ch. ii. 18. it could not be at Patmos, becauſe the Apoſtle's baniſhment to that iſland was no leſs than twenty years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. However, 'tis plain,

iii. That the whole buſineſs of this Epiſtle is to encourage and confirm the converts, in the true faith, againſt the ſolicitations and artifices of the Gnoſticks, and other Heretical and Schiſmatical ſeducers, who practiſed upon ſuch looſe principles, as if faith without good works, and believing without doing righteouſneſs, was ſufficient to ſalvation; and that men might be children of the light, and yet walk in darkneſs, the favourites of God, without obedience to his laws, or love to his children and ſervants!

CHAP. I.

The Apoſtle aſſerts both the divinity and humanity of Chriſt, and the neceſſity of faith and holineſs.

Ver. 1. 2, 3, 4. THAT which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have ſeen with your eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life; (for the life was manifeſted, and we have ſeen it, and bear witneſs, and ſhew unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifeſted unto us) That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye alſo may have fellowſhip with us: And truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt. And theſe things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

Which was from the beginning.] As St. John afterwards began his Goſpel with a deſcription of Chriſt's divinity, as God, he begins this Epiſtle with a demonſtrative proof of his humane nature, as man; appealing to the judgment of the ſenſes, hearing, ſeeing, and handling, or feeling. In the proceſs of which proof, we may obſerve, 1. That the latter of theſe, as they are here plac'd, ſtill carries a ſtronger teſtimony than the former; for, to ſee is more than to hear, and to feel is more than to ſee. And, 2. For the confirmation of this evidence of ſight, he does not only ſay " we have ſeen with our eyes," but adds alſo (etheaſametha) " we have looked upon;" implying a more wiſhful and deliberate act than bare ſeeing, which may be only ſudden and tranſient. (Aſſ. B. and Wells) But, 3. The Apoſtle alſo mentions the Divine nature of Chriſt; whom he ſtiles (logos) the Word, " the word of life," and " that which was from the beginning;" where the Scripture, ſpeaking of him who is from eternity, uſeth this phraſe, " from the beginning," to deſcend to our capacity, who are not able to comprehend any thing before the beginning of the world. (Aſſ. B. and Wall) See the notes on Luke i. 2. and xxiv. 39. John i. 1. and 14. and xx. 27. Acts i. 3. Hebr. i. 2. and 2 Pet. i. 16, 17.

The life was manifeſted.] See the notes on John i. 4. Acts v. 20. and Col. iii. 3.

Was with the Father.] En pros patera, imports nearneſs, but yet with ſome diſtinction: Therefore alſo he is ſaid to be " in the Father," John xiv. 10, 11. For tho' Chriſt is one God with the Father, yet he is a diſtinct Perſon from the Father; and he was with him inviſible altogether, till he was incarnate. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John i. 1, &c. 18. and xiv. 10. and Rom. viii. 11.

Declare we unto you.] See the notes on Acts i. 8.

May have fellowſhip with us.] Viz. In holineſs here, and in happineſs hereafter. (G.) See the notes on John xiv. 20. and xvii. 21. Rom. viii. 11, 17. 2 Cor. i. 21. and Eph. ii. 21.

Write we unto you.] He does not ſay, we preach them, but we write them; to ſhew, that there is enough in Scripture, without tradition, to bring us to a comfortable life on earth, and perfect joy in Heaven, (Aſſ.)

That your joy may be full.] See the notes on John iii. 19. xv. 11. and xvii. 13.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. This then is the meſſage which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all. If we ſay that we have fellowſhip with him, and walk in darkneſs, we lye, and do not the truth: But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowſhip one with another, and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt the Son cleanſeth us from all ſin. If we ſay that we have no ſin, we deceive ourſelves, and the truth is not in us. If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs. If we ſay that we have not ſinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

God is light.] That is, a being of infinite knowledge, wiſdom and purity; "and in him is no darkneſs at all." Neither darkneſs of error, ignorance, falſhood, impurity, or ſin, can be found in him, or be pleaſing to him. (B.) And the reaſon why this is introduced here with ſo much ceremony, is to give it the greater force againſt the Gnoſticks; who allow'd and practiſed all manner of impurities, living in a ſink of uncleanneſs; yet nevertheleſs call'd themſelves (teleioi and gnoſticoi) perfect and knowing men, beyond all others, and ſaid, they had not ſinned, for all this. (H.) See the notes on John i. 9. viii. 12. ix. 5. and xii. 35.

Walk in the light, as he is in the light.] This we are call'd upon to do, becauſe the keeping ſo glorious an example in view, will animate our endeavours after the utmoſt perfection we are capable of attaining: And we are eſteemed to "walk in the light, as He is in the light," when we avoid and abhor darkneſs and its deeds, and ſo demean ourſelves, that our blemiſhes and faults are not from the perverſeneſs of our will, but from the imperfections and frailties of our nature. (Stanh.) See the notes on Rom. xiii. 12. and Eph. iv. 6. and v. 8.

The blood of Jeſus Chriſt.] See the notes on Acts xx. 28. 1 Tim. i. 16. and Hebr. ix. 14.

Say that we have no ſin.] See the notes on Jam. iii. 1.

If we confeſs our ſins.] Nothing is more uſual in Scripture, than to expreſs a man's duty, by ſome very conſiderable branch of it. Thus, the whole of religion is often implied, in the love, or the fear, of God. And thus, confeſſion here no doubt denotes, not only an acknowledgment of our faults, but all that deep humility and ſhame; all that afflicting ſorrow and ſelf-condemnation; all that reſolution againſt them; all that effectual forſaking them for the future; all that diligence to grow and abound in the contrary virtues and graces; all that entire dependence on the merits and ſacrifice of our crucified Redeemer; all that application of his word and ſacraments, ordain'd to convey this cleanſing blood to us, which accompany ſuch acknowledgment when ſerious and to purpoſe; and which are elſewhere repreſented as conſtituent parts of repentance and neceſſary prediſpoſitions to forgiveneſs. In the mean while, as the mention of this ſingly was ſufficient, ſo was no part of repentance ſo proper to be mention'd as this; being directed to perſons, vain and abſurd enough, to ſuppoſe themſelves void of ſin, and thereby evacuating, ſo far as in them lay, the whole Goſpel of Chriſt. (Stanh.)

He is faithful and juſt.] Faithful, in regard of his promiſes; and juſt, with reſpect to the ſatisfaction made for our ſins by Chriſt, on condition of our repentance. (Bever. Comb. B. and Wells)

We make him a liar.] Viz. If we lead carnal lives, and yet pretend ſtill to be perfect, (as thoſe Hereticks did, who nevertheleſs preſumed to ſtile themſelves ſpiritual and pure) "we make God a liar;" that is, directly give him the lie, who has every where declar'd ſuch actions as theſe men indulge themſelves in to be ſins, and has pronounc'd all men to be ſinners. (H. B. and Wells) See Dr. Hammond at large on this text, and the notes on Rom. iii. 10. and v. 12.

CHAP. II.

He comforts them againſt ſins of infirmity: Shews, that the true knowledge is, to keep God's commandments, to love our neighbour, and not to love the world: And cautions them againſt deceivers, under the guard of faith and holineſs.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. MY little children, theſe things write I unto you, that ye ſin not. And if any man ſin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous: And he is the propitiation for our ſins: And not for ours only, but alſo for the ſins of the whole world. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that ſaith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him: But whoſo keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected. Hereby know we that we are in him. He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk, even as he walked. Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning: The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning. Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: Becauſe the darkneſs is paſt, and the true light now ſhineth. He that ſaith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkneſs even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occaſion of ſtumbling in him: But he that hateth his brother, is in darkneſs, and walketh in darkneſs, and knoweth not whither he goeth, becauſe that darkneſs hath blinded his eyes. I write unto you, little children, becauſe your ſins are forgiven you for his name's ſake. I write unto you, fathers, becauſe ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, becauſe ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, becauſe ye have known the Father. I have written unto you, fathers, becauſe ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, becauſe ye are ſtrong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the luſt of the fleſh, and the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof: But he that doeth the will of God, abideth for ever.

My little children.] See the notes on Gal. iv. 19. and 1 Tim. i. 2.

That ye ſin not.] The Apoſtle does not here exact of them an impoſſibility, not to ſin at all: But, leſt any ſhould think, that, ſince God is ſo graciouſly diſpos'd to forgive, they might ſin the more, he ſays, "I write unto you, that ye ſin not;" to wit, knowingly, and deliberately, or preſumptuouſly. (G. Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on Rom. vi. 1.

And if any man ſin.] Or rather, But "if any man ſin;" that is, through infirmity. (Aſſ.)

We have an advocate.] See the notes on Acts iv. 10, &c. Rom. viii. 34. Gal. vi. 1. 1 Tim. ii. 5. Hebr. vii. 26. and ix. 24.

He is the propitiation.] Or, the propitiatory ſacrifice. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. iii. 25. 2 Cor. v. 18. and Eph. v. 2.

For the ſins of the whole world.] See the notes on John iv. 42. Acts x. 35. Gal. iii. 28. and Col. iii. 11.

We know, that we know him.] Or that, we acknowledge him really for our Saviour. (Aſſ.) It is a rule in divinity, That (verba notitiæ denotant affectum, & effectum) when the knowledge of God, or Chriſt, is put abſolutely, it ſignifies a knowledge which is fruitful in love; and obedience, as the effect of that love. (W.) See the notes on ch. i. 6, &c. John xiv. 15. and xvii. 3. Rom. ii. 17. Eph. iii. 19. James ii. 8. and 19.

The love of God perfected.] Hence we may paſs a certain eſtimate of neceſſary and fundamental doctrines: For, if they be ſuch as are neceſſary either to the love of God to us, or to that of ours to him, which conſiſts in keeping his commandments, then they are doctrines truly neceſſary to ſalvation; if not, they cannot be ſo; becauſe we may truly love God, and abide in his love, without the knowledge of ſuch doctrines. (W.) See the notes on John xiv. 21, &c. Rom. v. 5. and viii. 39.

Walk, even as he walked.] See the notes on Matth. xi. 29. John xiii. 14. and xv. 4. 1 Cor. xi. 1. and Eph. v. 1.

An old commandment.] The Apoſtle here exhorts Chriſtians to the great duty of brotherly love; aſſuring them, That it was "no new commandment," but that which they were taught, in the Old Teſtament, as well as at the firſt preaching the Goſpel among them: And, in theſe reſpects, the command of love might be call'd an old commandment, being a branch of the law of nature, and a known precept of the Jewiſh religion; altho', in other reſpects, it might be call'd a "new commandment," becauſe urged from a new motive, and reinforc'd by a new example. (Aſſ. H. W. B. and Wall) See Dr. Hammond at large on this text; and the notes on John xiii. 34. and xv. 13.

The darkneſs is paſt.] See the notes on John i. 8. and viii. 12. Rom. iii. 12. and 2 Cor. iv. 6.

Hateth his brother.] See the notes on John xii. 35. and xiii. 34. and 1 Cor. xiii. 2.

I write unto you, &c.] Here the Apoſtle does not content himſelf with generals, but directs his diſcourſe, particularly, both to old and young; plainly intimating, that none are too young to receive inſtruction, none too old to obſerve it. Now, ſince St John wrote to perſons of all ages and conditions, the ſacred writings muſt be read to, and read by, perſons of every age and condition:

And if the Scriptures be perverted by ſome, that is not a natural effect, but only an accidental conſequent, of reading the Scriptures. And, as evil is not to be done that good may come of it, ſo good muſt not be left undone tho' evil come of it. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 1. Luke xxiv. 47. John i. 1. and viii. 31. Acts iv. 12. 1 Cor. iii. 1. Eph. iii. 16. and vi. 10, &c.

Love not the world.] The prohibition is not abſolute, but comparative only; that we are not to ſet our hearts upon it inordinately, or delight in it immoderately. (Aſſ. B. Wells and Wall) See the notes on Matth. vi. 24. John xii. 43. Rom. xii. 2. 1 Cor. i. 28. and vii. 29, &c. 1 Tim. vi. 9, 17. Jam. iv. 4, and 14.

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. Little children, it is the laſt time: And as ye have heard, that antichriſt ſhall come, even now are there many antichriſts; whereby we know that it is the laſt time. They went out from us, but they were not of us: For if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: But they went out, that they might be made manifeſt, that they were not all of us. But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things. I have not written unto you, becauſe ye know not the truth: But becauſe ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth. Who is a liar, but he that denieth, that Jeſus is the Chriſt? He is antichriſt, that denieth the Father and the Son. Whoſoever denieth the Son, the ſame hath not the Father: But he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father alſo. Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning ſhall remain in you, ye alſo ſhall continue in the Son, and in the Father. And this is the promiſe that he hath promiſed us, even eternal life. Theſe things have I written unto you, concerning them that ſeduce you. But the anointing which ye have received of him, abideth in you: And ye need not that any man teach you: But, as the ſame anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie: And even as it hath taught you, ye ſhall abide in him. And now, little children, abide in him; that when he ſhall appear, we may have confidence, and not be aſhamed before him at his coming. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteouſneſs, is born of him.

It is the laſt time.] That is, the laſt age or hour of the Jewiſh œconomy: For ſo the words (eſchate hora) always ſignify, in diſcourſes to the Jews. (G. H. W. B. and Wells) See Dr. Hammond at large, and Dr. Wells's remark on this text, proving againſt Mr. Whiſton, from Mr. Mede, that this is to be underſtood of the time next preceding the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

That antichriſt ſhall come.] See the notes on 2 Theſſ. ii. 3, &c.

Even now are there many antichriſts.] That is, oppoſers of Chriſt, and denyers of his being The Chriſt, or promiſed Meſſiah. (W. B. and Wells) See a more particular account of them in Hammond; and the notes on Matth. xxiv. 5, &c. Acts v. 36. and xx. 29. 2 Cor. xi. 13, &c. Phil. i. 15. 2 Theſſ. ii. 3, &c. and 1 Tim. iv. 1, &c.

They went out from us.] That is, from our communion, of which they had before profeſs'd to be members: And this their ſeparation was permitted by God, to diſcover their hypocriſy, and that they were not really of us. (G. Aſſ. H. W. B. and Wall) But note, That it may not only be lawful, but even our duty, to depart from the communion of a Church whereof we have been formerly members, viz. when ſhe degenerates from herſelf, and grows ſo corrupt and contagious a Body, that we cannot communicate with her without ſin; for in ſuch a caſe, not we, but they, make the ſeparation, and the ſchiſm lies at their door, who give a neceſſary cauſe of it. (B.) See the notes on John vi. 37, and 67. Acts xv 24. and xx. 30. Rom. viii. 38. 1 Cor. xi. 19. 2 Cor. xi. 13, &c. and 2 Tim. ii. 19.

An unction from the Holy One.] Obſerve here, 1. That, by the unction here, and the anointing, ver. 27. is meant the Holy Spirit; whoſe gifts and graces are diffuſed throughout the whole Church, and to every living member thereof. For, his aſſiſtances are equally neceſſary to all; to the learned, as well as to the unlearned, to the teachers as well as to the hearers. He it is, who enlightens our minds, and purifies our hearts, and inclines our wills; not only beginning, but carrying on, and perfecting, a new and ſpiritual life in our ſouls. (Aſſ. H. W. B. Wells and Fox) 2. That this expreſſion, "ye know all things," is not to be underſtood in the largeſt ſenſe, but to be limited to thoſe things which are neceſſary to ſalvation: And thoſe every true Chriſtian not only knows ſpeculatively, that is, he has not only a notion of them in his mind, but he has an experimental knowledge and taſte of them, which is productive of an holy obedience. (G. Aſſ. W. B. and Fox) 3. That this ineſtimable gift was the purchaſe of the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, who is here ſtyled "The Holy One." (G. Aſſ. W. Wells, and Fox) 4. That thoſe words, ver. 27. "ye need not that any man teach you," cannot be intended to ſet aſide all outward teaching: But, the meaning is, Ye do not need the teaching of any of thoſe antichriſts, and falſe teachers, ſpoken of in this chapter, and other places of this Epiſtle. (H. W. B. Wells, and Fox) 5. That the miſtake of thoſe, who, from this place, ſuffer themſelves to be prevail'd with, to forſake the public aſſemblies of Orthodox Chriſtians, and the outward uſe of the means of grace, the miniſtry of the word and ſacraments, is a manifeſt proof of the artifice and ſubtlety of the Devil; who, in order to deceive and deſtroy our ſouls, puts on the beſt appearance, even that of an angel of light. Were there no need of outward teaching, why are paſtors and teachers mention'd? Why did St. John write this Epiſtle? Or, why were the other Scriptures committed to writing? We muſt not therefore oppoſe the external miniſtry of the Word to the inward teachings of the Spirit; but look upon them as ſubordinate one to another, both being conducive to our ſalvation. If, in the times of the Apoſtles, there was outward and public teaching, when the Spirit was in ſuch a plentiful manner poured forth, how much greater need is there of public teaching among us now, who have the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit in a far leſs degree? Thoſe, who undervalue the external word, do generally fall into a falſe enthuſiaſm; and thoſe, who reject the inward operations of the Spirit, fall into hypocriſy and formality; both which are enemies to the power of religion. (W. B. and Fox) And, 6. That, whereas ſome do interpret theſe texts, of a material unction adminiſtred in confirmation, theſe texts are evidently meant of a ſpiritual unction, as above is explain'd. See the notes on John vi. 45. x. 4. xiv. 26. and xvi. 13. Acts iii. 14. 1 Cor. xii. 13. and xiii. 9. 2 Cor. i. 21. Hebr. viii. 11. and 2 Pet. i. 12.

That denieth the Father and the Son.] Whoſoever "denieth that Jeſus is the Chriſt," the Meſſiah, is an antichriſt, denying in effect both "the Father and the Son;" the Son directly, and the Father by conſequence, becauſe he hath teſtified of Chriſt, by miracles, and a voice from Heaven; which teſtimony of the Father is not true, if Jeſus be not The Chriſt. (G. Aſſ. H. W. B. and Wells) This is a text, in which every Socinian may ſee himſelf an Atheiſt. He who denies the Divinity of the Son, denies the Deity of the Father. For, ſuch is the nature of the Godhead, that one of theſe cannot be alone: The Father is not without the Son, nor can be; nor can the Son be without the Father. This coherence is inſeparable and inviolable: Therefore, he who denies the Eternal Son, denies the Eternal Father; and if it be Atheiſm to deny the Divinity of the Father, it is no leſs to deny the Deity of the Son; for he who denieth the Son denieth the Father alſo. (B.) The latter clauſe, in ver. 23. "He that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father alſo," was not, it ſeems, in the copy which the Engliſh Tranſlators had before them: But ſince it is in the Alexandrian, and in many other Greek copies, and in the Vulgar Latin, they therefore inſerted it, but in a different character. (Wall) See the notes on Matth. xi. 27. Luke xii. 9. John i. 18. v. 23. xiv. 7. xvi. 3. and xx. 31. and Hebr. i. 6.

Let that therefore abide in you.] In philoſophical propoſitions, we uſually deem thoſe moſt certain which later experiments prove and evince; but in Divine truths thoſe are beſt which were "from the beginning:" Time, which is in a continual flux, being, in this, like the ſwifteſt torrents, which carry down to us what is light and frothy, but ſink that which is grave and ponderous: And indeed, reaſon, which is the reſult of our nobler part, if not diſturb'd by paſſion or intereſt, is the ſureſt guide in the midſt of perplexities; and this does, upon the firſt proſpect of religion, lead us to that which was "from the beginning." See Dr. Pittis's ſermon on this text. 1681. and the notes on Rom. x. 15, &c. and 2 Tim. i. 13.

This is the promiſe.] Or, the thing promiſed; viz. "Eternal life." And no pleaſure of this life is able to corrupt, no labour to tire, no diſguſt to cool and diſcourage, him, who has a lively belief of ſuch a reward. (Q.) See the notes on John vi. 26, &c. and xvii. 3. Rom. viii. 6, &c. 2 Cor. i. 22. Eph. i. 13. and iv. 30.

Concerning them that ſeduce you.] Peri ton planonton humas. Concerning thoſe who endeavour to ſeduce, or deceive you. (Blackw.)

But the anointing.] See the notes on ver. 20.

Abide in him.] See the notes on John xv. 2, &c.

Ye know that.] Or, know that alſo. (H.)

CHAP. III.

The ſingular love of God to us, in making us his ſons, ſhould make us careful to keep his commandments, and to love one another.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. BEhold, what manner of love the Father hath beſtowed upon us, that we ſhould be called the ſons of God: Therefore the world knoweth us not, becauſe it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the ſons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be: But we know, that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himſelf, even as he is pure. Whoſoever committeth ſin, tranſgreſſeth alſo the law; for ſin is the tranſgreſſion of the law: And ye know that he was manifeſted to take away our ſins; and in him is no ſin. Whoſoever abideth in him, ſinneth not: Whoſoever ſinneth, hath not ſeen him, neither known him. Little children, let no man deceive you: He that doeth righteouſneſs, is righteous, even as he is righteous: He that committeth ſin, is of the Devil; for the Devil ſinneth from the beginning. For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the works of the Devil. Whoſoever is born of God, doth not commit ſin; for his ſeed remaineth in him: And he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God. In this the children of God are manifeſt, and the children of the Devil: Whoſoever doeth not righteouſneſs, is not of God; neither he that loveth not his brother.

The ſons of God.] Viz. By adoption. See Mr. Sam. Hieron's ſermon on this text, 1611. and the notes on John i. 12. Rom. viii. 15, &c. and Gal. iii. 26.

The world knoweth us not.] That is, The wicked men of the world do not love us, but hate and perſecute us. (H. B. and Wells) See the notes on John xv. 18, &c. xvi. 3. and xvii. 25.

We ſhall be like him.] Viz. In glory and happineſs. (Wells) "We ſhall be like" Chriſt, as man, in the utmoſt perfection our bodies are capable of: And, as God too, ſo far as the being ſet above all the incumbrances and defects of theſe bodies we now carry about us can make us like him. But, as God himſelf is a ſpirit, ſo the moſt deſireable part of our likeneſs to him will be that of our ſouls. And theſe will be like him in clear and unerring, in full and comprehenſive knowledge, in ſeeing face to face, and knowing even as we are known, 2 Cor. xiii. 12. In perfect holineſs, Pſa. xvii. 15. and Eph. v. 27. and peace, Phil. iv. 7. and Col. iii. 15. Like him, in fervent and unbounded charity, the love of God, and of our brethren: Without any other object to divert the former; without any emulation or envy, or grudging, to give check to the latter: There, all ſhall be of one heart, and of one ſoul; and nothing ſhall be ſeen, or heard, or felt, "but righteouſneſs and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt," Rom. xiv. 17. (Stanh.) See the notes on John xvii. 24. Rom. viii. 18. 1 Cor. xiii. 12. and xv. 42, &c. 2 Cor. iv. 17. and v. 7. and Col. iii. 4.

Even as he is pure.] The "purifying himſelf, even as He (Chriſt) is pure," is to be underſtood, like theſe commands of being holy, and perfect, and merciful, as God our Heavenly Father is holy, perfect, and merciful, 1 Pet. i. 15. Matth. v. 48. and Luke vi. 36. All which are intended, not of an equality, but of a likeneſs only; and that ſuch a likeneſs, as our preſent condition will admit: Not of a ſtate altogether ſinleſs; but ſuch degrees of goodneſs as may be attain'd to; ſuch as imports an allowance for neceſſary frailties and inſeparable defects, and a gracious acceptance of ſincere endeavours, inſtead of abſolute perfection. (Stanh. and W.) See Dr. Alleſtree's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Matth. v. 8. 1 Theſſ. iv. 3. and Hebr. xii. 14.

Whoſoever committeth ſin.] That is, Whoſoever lives in the allowed commiſſion of ſin. (H. W. and B.) See the notes on John i. 29, &c. Rom. v. 13. 2 Cor. v. 21. and 1 Tim. i. 15.

Neither known him.] That is, Has no true knowledge of the intent of Chriſt's coming into the world, or of his doctrine here. (Wells) See the notes on Matth. vii. 23. John x. 14. xiv. 4. xv. 4. and xvii. 3.

He that doeth righteouſneſs.] Righteouſneſs (in the ſenſe as it is here uſed) and obedience, being words of the ſame ſignification, or but different terms for the ſame thing, we muſt obſerve, 1. That God can look on no man as righteous, unleſs he is obedient unto him, and conſorms his life unto his laws: 2. That obedience, or the conformity of our lives unto the laws of God, is a great work, and ought to be the employment of our lives, as is evident from the phraſe (ho poion ten dicaioſynen) "he that doeth (or worketh) righteouſneſs," as Chriſt did, he "is righteous." This is the doctrine, by which every man muſt ſtand or fall. We muſt ſerve God faithfully; we muſt obey him unſeignedly; we muſt do his will, however reveal'd to us, in the difficult as well as in the eaſy precepts of it, with all our hearts, and all our ſouls, and all our might and ſtrength: If we [illegible] ſo, it ſhall be accepted by God for perfect and unerring obedience; it ſhall be imputed to us for perfect righteouſneſs; and we ſhall be accounted by God as righteous as the angels themſelves; as righteous, as if we had never ſinn'd. This is the only and true notion of imputative righteouſneſs, that I know of, in the Scriptures, or that the Chriſtian religion will admit. God, for Chriſt's ſake, will graciouſly accept honeſt and ſincere, for perfect, unerring, obedience; and juſtify a man that really doth his beſt, as much as if he did all: He accepts the will for the deed; ſincerity, or uprightneſs, for perfection; and will juſtify him who keeps the whole law in his heart, as if he had kept it in his life. But then, he will abate nothing of honeſt, ſincere, and upright obedience. Tho' he will paſs over all our ſins of ignorance, error, and mere ſurprize, and overlook all our unavoidable defects, yet he will by no means acquit us from choſen, approved, and wilful tranſgreſſions, nor diſpenſe with thoſe ſins, which it was in our power to prevent. (Hickes) See Dr. Hickes's ſermon on this text; and the notes on John xiii. 17. and xiv. 15, &c. Acts xxiv. 25. Rom. ii. 13. and v. 18. Gal. vi. 7. and Jam. i. 22.

He that committeth ſin.] Hamartanein, to ſin, ver. 6. is directly the ſame with hamartian poiein, to commit ſin, here; and ſo is hamartian echein, to have ſin, ch. i. 8. all one with having ſinned, there, ver. 10. All which have a ſpecial energy, in the writings of this Apoſtle, to denote a deliberate, preſumptuous, commiſſion of ſin; not every ſin of ignorance, incogitance, frailty; but, after deliberation, an adviſed commiſſion of it. (H. W. Fox, and Wall) See Bp. Brownrigg's, and Archbp. Sharp's, and Dr. Bray's ſermons, on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 1. John viii. 44. Acts xiii. 10. Rom. vi. 12, &c. vii. 23. and 2 Tim. ii. 26.

Born of God.] By this phraſe (gegennemenos ec tou Theou) born of God, is meant, the having the heart and ſoul renew'd and chang'd, the whole ſtream of the affections turn'd from the love and practice of ſin, to the love and obedience of God; that is, a man truly pious, an obedient ſervant of God. (H. W. B. Fox and Wells) See the notes on John i. 13.

He cannot ſin.] A good man, who is in a good degree, "born of God," through the violence of temptation, through ſurprize, or want of conſideration, may be overtaken with a fault: But, this notwithſtanding, ſuch is the inward diſpoſition of his ſoul, ſuch is the temper of his mind, that he abhors ſin, and cannot entertain the thoughts of committing it, without the utmoſt deteſtation and horror: And if, at any time, he commits a ſingle act of ſin, he judges and condemns himſelf for it, and bitterly repents of it, as David and Peter did, and with great diligence and application watcheth againſt it for the future. "He cannot ſin;" that is, he cannot, without great difficulty, be brought to love, and delight in it; he cannot ſin, without great trouble and uneaſineſs to himſelf, it being directly contrary to that ſtate in which he is. (H. W. B. and Fox) See Mr. T. Newhouſe's ſermon on this text, 1614. and the notes of Hammond and Whitby on the ſame at large.

In this, the children.] This is the character of difference between pious and wicked, regenerate and unregenerate men: He who lives an impious and uncharitable life, is no regenerate child of God, howſoever he may flatter himſelf of his ſtate. (H. W. and B.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. For this is the meſſage that ye heard from the beginning, that we ſhould love one another. Not as Cain who was of that wicked one, and ſlew his brother: And wherefore ſlew he him? Becauſe his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous. Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you. We know that we have paſſed from death unto life, becauſe we love the brethren: He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death. Whoſoever hateth his brother, is a murderer: And ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. Hereby perceive we the love of God, becauſe he laid down his life for us: And we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoſo hath this world's good, and ſeeth his brother have need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed, and in truth. And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and ſhall aſſure our hearts before him. For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God. And whatſoever we aſk, we receive of him, becauſe we keep his commandments, and do thoſe things that are pleaſing in his ſight. And this is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him: And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the ſpirit which he hath given us.

Love one another.] See the notes on ch. ii. 7. Matth. v. 43. John xiii. 34. and xv. 12. and Rom. xiii. 9.

If the world hate you.] See the notes on John xv. 18, &c.

We ought to lay down our lives.] That is, in a time of perſecution, when the glory of God, the edification of the Church, and the eternal ſalvation of our brethren do require it. (B.) Here we have a deſcription, together with the advantages and conditions of true charity, or brotherly love. 1. Its pattern is no leſs than the "love of God," dying for us on the croſs. 2. Its perfection extends ſo far, as that we ſhould be diſpoſed to "lay down our lives for" our neighbours, even tho' they be our enemies, ver. 16. 3. To give our worldly goods, and our wealth, to relieve our neighbours, is but, as it were, the firſt eſſay of charity. 4. The proper time to exerciſe charity, viz. that of need and neceſſity. 5. The manner of it; by a truly Chriſtian compaſſion, ver. 17. 6. The fruits of charity; not words, and vain compliments, but effectual deeds, and works of mercy, ver. 18. 7. Its advantage, with reſpect to ourſelves; giving us a comfortable aſſurance of the truth of our Chriſtianity. 8. Its reward, to enable us to appear with confidence and aſſurance at the tribunal of God, ver. 19. 9. God has promiſed nothing but to charity, and the works thereof; without which our conſcience condemns us before-hand, ver. 20. 10. Charity gives confidence, and a kind of familiarity with God, in prayer, ver. 21. 11. God will refuſe nothing to charity, which prays in thoſe who "keep his commandments, and do thoſe things that are pleaſing in his ſight," ver. 22. 12. That we muſt "love one another," upon the principle of faith, as members of Jeſus Chriſt, and with reſpect to his commandment, ver. 23. And, 13. That the Chriſtian charity finds its perfection, its peace and repoſe, to all eternity, in God, from whom it is deriv'd, as from its ſource; and in whom it haſtens to be ſwallow'd up, as in its fulneſs and its end, ver. 24. (Q.) See the notes on Matth. ix. 13. Mark xii. 44. Luke xxi. 4. John iii. 16. x. 15, &c. xiii. 34. and xv. 13. Rom. v. 8. and xii. 19. Gal. vi. 10. Eph. v. 2. Col. iii. 12. and Jam. ii. 15. and thoſe which here next follow.

Aſſure our hearts before him.] What peithein cardias, to aſſure, or perſwade hearts, doth import, will appear, 1. By the uſe of the phraſe (peiſomen auton) "we will perſwade," that is, appeaſe, him, Matth. xxviii. 14. and thus, in proportion, it ſignifies here to render our hearts peaceable and tame. 2. By two other phraſes here following, viz. (parrheſian echomen pros ton Theon) "we have confidence towards God," ver. 21. that is, boldneſs to appear before him, being ſuch as dare, on good grounds, have confidence to pray to him. 2. (Ho aitoumen lambanomen) "Whatſoever we aſk, we receive," ver. 22. We have our prayers heard by God; which he, who can challenge, and ſo draw near unto God, in confidence, in prayer, is ſaid to be perfected, or conſecrated, according to conſcience, Hebr. ix. 9, viz. By having the conſcience purg'd, to be made ſuch Prieſts as may with boldneſs draw near to God; which is the prerogative of every true Chriſtian, who doth that which is pleaſing in God's ſight, ver. 22. the worſhipper of God, who doth His will, John ix. 31. (H.) See the notes on John xviii 37.

If our heart condemn us.] Undoubtedly meaning our mind and conſcience. (B. and Fox) The ſenſe therefore of this place is, That if our conſciences, not being ſeared and harden'd by ſin, and being rightly inform'd of the nature and extent of our duty, and, after a thorough examination, by comparing our actions with the rule of our duty, right reaſon, and the Holy Scriptures, ſhall acquit us, and give teſtimony, that we have ſincerely endeavour'd to ſerve and pleaſe God, and to approve ourſelves in his ſight, then may we have an humble "confidence towards God," that he will hear and accept us: But, if we have wilfully neglected to inform our conſciences, or if, by ſinning againſt God, we have laid them aſleep, or liv'd without examination, our hope and confidence of being accepted by him is deceitful, vain, and preſumptuous. For then only have we a reaſonable hope of receiving what we aſk of God, when we "keep his commandments, and do thoſe things which are pleaſing in his ſight." (Fox) See the notes on ver. 19. Matth. vii. 7. and xviii. 19. Luke xi. 9. John xiv. 13. xv. 7. and xvi. 23. Rom. xiv. 22. 1 Cor. iv. 4. 2 Cor. i. 12. and Jam. i. 5.

As he gave us commandment.] See the notes on John iii. 16. xiii. 34. xiv. 1. xv. 12. and xvii. 3.

He that keepeth.] See the notes on John xiv. 15. and Eph. iii. 17.

CHAP. IV.

Caution againſt falſe prophets; and further motives to brotherly love.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. BELOVED, believe not every ſpirit, but try the ſpirits, whether they are of God: Becauſe many falſe prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God. Every ſpirit that confeſſeth that Jeſus Chriſt is in the fleſh, is of God: And every ſpirit that confeſſeth not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is not of God: And this is that ſpirit of antichriſt, whereof ye have heard that it ſhould come, and even now already is it in the world. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: Becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. They are of the world: Therefore ſpeak they of the world, and the world heareth them. We are of God: He that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the ſpirit of truth, and the ſpirit of error.

Believe not every ſpirit.] This I take to imply in it, 1. That we ſhould not readily give any ear at all to ſuch as pretend to inſpiration: Becauſe the revelation of God's will, already made in the Holy Scriptures, is abundantly ſufficient for all thoſe purpoſes, for which a Divine Revelation might be expected, or could reaſonably be deſir'd. 2. That how confidently ſoever any man may give out himſelf to be an inſpired prophet, we ſhould not be forward to believe his pretences; "becauſe many falſe prophets are gone out into the world." 3. That we ſhould never accept any perſon whatſoever, as inſpired, without his firſt giving good proof of his Divine inſpiration: Becauſe it can never be a fault, not to believe without reaſon; and that is no reaſon to us, which does not appear. And, 4. That we ſhould never take any man's word only, for his being an inſpired prophet: Becauſe, if we may admit, as of ſufficient force to prove inſpiration, a man's own affirmation that he is inſpired, we muſt believe every ſpirit, directly contrary to the Apoſtle's warning. (Black.) See Dr. Bancroft's ſermon, 1588. and Bp. Blackall's, both on this text; and the notes on Matth. xxiv. 4. 1 Cor. xii. 8, &c. and xiv. 26, &c. and 1 Tim. iv. 1. and thoſe which here next follow.

Try the ſpirits.] There are two proofs of Divine inſpiration; one, or the other, or both of which we may with good reaſon demand of any man who ſets up with this pretence, viz. 1 Prophecy, or the foretelling things to come: And, 2. Miracles; both which ways, Moſes, and Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, made proof of their Divine miſſion. (Black.) See the notes on John v. 39. Acts xvii. 11. 1 Cor. ii. 12, &c. and xii. 8, &c. and 1 Theſſ. v. 21.

Many falſe prophets.] As concerning the number of theſe prophets, the Scriptures do name theſe; Simon Magus, Elimas, Bar-Jeſu, the Nicholaites, Hymenæus, Philetus, Alexander, Phygellus, Hermogenes, Diotrephes, Theudas, and Judas of Galilee: To whom alſo theſe may be added; Ebion, Cerinthus, the Carpocratians, Simon of Galilee, Menander, and divers others. And theſe are here ſaid to be "gone out into the world;" that is, manifeſted: For, whereas, before, they lay hid in the Church, now, by their ſchiſms, they had made themſelves known. (Bancr.) See the notes on ch. ii. 18. and 1 Tim. iv. 1.

Hereby know ye.] In theſe words the Apoſtle lays down a plain mark, and rule of trial, how they might know a teacher who was acted and inſpired by the Spirit of God, from one who was not. Such a one as durſt, truly and openly, in the face of danger, own and profeſs, teach and preach Jeſus Chriſt, in his Perſon, nature and offices, as the incarnate Word, or Son of God, ſent from Heaven; aſcribing virtue and efficacy to the ſacrifice of his death, and attributing to him alone the whole glory of a perfect Saviour; this doctrine is of the Spirit; and this Spirit is of God: But ſuch teachers as will not hazard themſelves, but, for fear of ſufferings and perſecution, will deny either the Godhead or Manhood of Chriſt, and diſown either his incarnation, death, or reſurrection; ſuch teachers, and ſuch doctrines, are not of God, but are the very ſpirit of Antichriſt; which, ſays he, ye have been foretold ſhould come, and is now already in the world. Learn hence, that ſuch a teacher, as diſowns either of the natures of Chriſt, or denies any of the offices of Chriſt; that either denies the Divinity of his Perſon, or the meritoriouſneſs of his ſatisfaction, is not of God; he is antichriſt, againſt Chriſt, and ſhall find Chriſt againſt him, in the day that he appears before him. (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 18. Matth. xi. 6. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 7.

Ye are of God.] See the notes on ch. iii. 1, &c. John i. 13. Eph. ii. 2. and vi. 12. Phil. iv. 13. and Jam. i. 18.

They are of the world.] That is, men of worldly minds and intereſts; preaching doctrines ſuitable to the luſts and inclinations of worldly men, who greedily hear them, and eaſily believe them. (B. and Wells) See the notes on John xv. 19. and xviii. 9. and 1 Cor. ii. 14.

He that knoweth God.] See the notes on John xiv. 7.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Beloved, let us love one another: For love is of God; and every one that loveth, is born of God; and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifeſted the love of God towards us, becauſe that God ſent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and ſent his Son to be the propitiation of our ſins. Beloved, if God ſo loved us, we ought alſo to love one another. No man hath ſeen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, becauſe he hath given us of his Spirit. And we have ſeen and do teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. Whoſoever ſhall confeſs that Jeſus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldneſs in the day of judgment: Becauſe as he is, ſo are we in this world. There is no fear in love; but perfect love caſteth out fear: Becauſe fear hath torment: He that feareth, is not made perfect in love. We love him; becauſe he firſt loved us. If a man ſay, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath ſeen, how can he love God whom he hath not ſeen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother alſo.

Love one another.] See the notes on ver. 16. ch. ii. 4. and iii. 6, &c. 16. John iii. 16. xiii. 34. xv. 13. Rom. v. 6, &c. and xiii. 8, &c. 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c.

No man hath ſeen God.] That all good offices ought, in ſome way or other, to be acknowledg'd, no truly ingenuous mind can be inſenſible. When therefore ſuitable returns cannot be made to the party who hath oblig'd us, our next care is to expreſs our obligations, by placing them upon ſome others who are dear to him; and whoſe advantage will be as kindly interpreted, as if the thing had been done to himſelf. And ſuch is the caſe here. We are in no condition of making ſuitable returns immediately to God himſelf; our goods extend not unto him, Pſa. xvi. 2. But unto thoſe they may, and do, who are his creatures, his children, who bear his image, and are his receivers here on earth. And therefore, they who neglect to uſe the power they have of doing good to them, whoſe benefit will be kindly accepted, are deſervedly look'd upon to be deficient in the diſpoſition to do it at all. (Stanh.) See the notes on ch. ii. 5. John i. 18. iii. 34. xiv. 20. and Rom. viii. 9.

We have ſeen, and do teſtify.] See the notes on ch. i. 1. John iii. 16. 1 Cor. xv. 5. and 2 Pet. i. 16.

Confeſs, that Jeſus is the Son of God.] But note, That this hearty confeſſion muſt be attended with a readineſs to believe all that this Son of God hath taught us in his Father's name, and a firm purpoſe to obey his commandments. (W. and B.) See the notes on Matth. x. 32. and xvi. 16. Luke xii. 8. John xii. 42. and Rom. x. 9.

God is love.] Not as if he had any ſuch paſſion of love as we have: But by reaſon of his extraordinary kindneſs and favours to every thing that is; from whence he is here, and ver. 8. called, not only loving, but love itſelf; as ch. i. 5. he is called light; and ſo all perfections, in the abſtract. (Bever.)

Boldneſs in the day of judgment.] The meaning of the word parrheſia here, is explain'd on John vii. 4. (where ſee the notes) viz. a fearleſsneſs of danger: And (hemera criſeos) "the day of judgment" is not meant of the final judgment of God, but the day or time when we ſhall, for the name of Chriſt, be brought before any earthly tribunal, to be ſentenc'd even to death itſelf. And ſo the meaning will be plain, that the (agape meth' hemen) the love or charity toward God, which is to be in, or among us Chriſtians, is perfected in this, that we have this conſtancy in confeſſing him in the time of the greateſt danger. And this yet farther appears, 1. By the explication following, that "as he is, ſo are we in this world:" That is, that as Chriſt laid down his life in confeſſion of the truth, ſo we do the ſame when occaſion ſerves. And, 2. By the confirmation, which follows, ver. 18. "There is no fear in love;" fear being indeed the contrary to this boldneſs and conſtancy, wherein the perfection of our love conſiſts. And thus hath Tertullian interpreted this place. But, as to the emendation propos'd in the poſthumous notes aſcribed to Grotius, ſince they are without the authority of any copy, 'tis too adventurous an attempt: And as ſuch ought never to be admitted without great neceſſity, ſo there appears no pretence of that here. See Dr. Hammond at large on the place; and the notes on ch. iii. 3, 21. and 2 Tim. i. 7.

We love him.] Agapomen; Let us love, &c.

Whom he hath not ſeen.] If viſible objects move us not, inviſible will not. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 12.

CHAP. V.

Farther characters to diſtinguiſh true Chriſtians. The Holy Trinity aſſerted. Directions to pray for ourſelves and others: To keep ourſelves pure from ſin; and particularly from idolatry.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. WHoſoever believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God: And every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him alſo that is begotten of him. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments. For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: And his commandments are not grievous. For whatſoever is born of God, overcometh the world: And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jeſus is the Son of God?

Whoſoever believeth.] That is, not hiſtorically, and with aſſent only; but expreſſing the truth of that faith, in a ſuitable converſation. (B.) And note, 1. That this, and the like expreſſions, "Whoſoever believeth, that Jeſus Chriſt is born of God," is applicable to the Chriſtians in oppoſition to all unbelievers, whether Jews or Gentiles, is undeniable. But then, 2. It ſeems no leſs undeniable, that St. John does not uſe them here, in this Epiſtle, only to diſtinguiſh Chriſtians from ſuch as profeſs'd themſelves to be no Chriſtians: For theſe were eaſily enough to be known, without St. John's giving any notes or marks, whereby the Chriſtians might know and diſtinguiſh them from themſelves. Wherefore, ſince St. John uſeth this and the like expreſſions, concerning the perſon of Chriſt, as certain marks or characters, whereby the true Chriſtians might rightly know and diſtinguiſh ſuch others as did not hold theſe truths, concerning the perſon of Chriſt; it evidently follows, that, by thoſe others, are moſt rationally to be underſtood, ſuch Hereticks, or falſe teachers, as profeſs'd themſelves to be true Chriſtians, and yet did preach contrary doctrines. (Wells) See the notes on ch. ii. 22. iii. 9. and iv. 2, 15. Matth. xvi. 16. John i. 12, 13. and iii. 3, &c. and 16.

This is the love of God.] Viz. That wherewith we love him; not that wherewith he loveth us. (Aſſ.) See Bp. Brownrigg's ſermon on this text; and the notes on John xiv. 15.

His commandments are not grievous.] 1. Becauſe they exact but what is agreeable to our reaſon, ſuitable to our natures, and conformable to rationable deſires. (B.) And, 2. Becauſe God's Spirit gives us power and will to do them. (G. and Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. xi. 30.

For, whatſoever is born of God.] The perſons "born of God" are baptized and faithful Chriſtians: And this Scripture does not only imply the neceſſity ſuch lie under, of fighting and conquering, by ſaying, that "whatſoever is born of God, overcometh the world;" but it acquaints us, what weapon is put into their hand for that purpoſe, by adding, "And this is the victory, that overcometh the world, even our faith." Where note, 1. That by the world, we are ſometimes to underſtand the perſons, and ſometimes the things, in it. But, that neither of theſe can be meant here, in their utmoſt latitude, is plain, from the reaſon of the thing, and from the manner of St. John's uſing this word. For, both theſe repreſent the world to us as a dangerous enemy. But, the perſons in the world we are under manifold obligations to love, and live friendly with: And the things of the world are alſo ſuch, as he who created, and beſt underſtood them, hath approv'd, and declar'd to be very good. But, in regard, through the degeneracy of humane nature, our affections are apt to exceed their proper bounds, and inordinate love, both of the perſons and things of the world, becomes the occaſion of much ſin to us; hence it is, that the world is repreſented as our enemy, Jam. iv. 4. that we all do ſolemnly renounce it in our baptiſm; that our Saviour is ſaid to ſave his diſciples from, and to chooſe them out of it, Gal. i. 4. and John xv. 19. that we are commanded not to love it, 1 John ii. 15. and that the world, throughout the New Teſtament, is generally uſed in a very bad ſenſe; and that, in each of thoſe reſpects, as it concerns both the perſons, and the things, of the world. 2. That, in order to "overcome the world," as that word imports the wicked perſons in it, we muſt not be carried away with the torrent of any faction, tho' ever ſo ſtrong, nor follow a multitude, tho' ever ſo great and powerful, to do evil. We muſt not ſuffer any relations or friendſhips, tho' ever ſo intimate and dear, to engage us; any dependancies and intereſts, tho' ever ſo advantageous, to allure us; any threats, or fears, or diſpleaſures, to awe and affright us; any the ſubtleſt perſwaſions to ſeduce us; any examples, tho' ever ſo prevailing and authoritative, to draw us; any practice, tho' ever ſo general and common, to enſnare us, in even the moſt ſpecious, the moſt profitable, and the moſt faſhionable ſin. We muſt refuſe the leaſt compliance, beyond the rules of our duty, and the dictates of our conſcience: And be content with the jeſts and ſcoffs, the cenſures and reproaches, of preciſeneſs, ſingularity, or whatever elſe it be, by which men of profligate manners, and debauch'd principles, endeavour to laugh, or to rail thoſe perſons out of their religion, who refuſe to run in the ſame exceſs of riot with themſelves. Then, as to the things of the world, in order to "overcome the world," in this ſenſe, the leaſt that can poſſibly be needful, is, that none of its advantages be ſuffer'd ſo far to bear ſway over our affections, as for their ſakes, to draw us into ſin: For theſe are the very baits, which the tempter caſts before us, in order to our deſtruction. 3. That by "the victory that overcometh the world," we are to underſtand the means, or inſtrument, of obtaining it; "even our faith." And, 4. That, by faith, is intended the belief of the Chriſtian religion, as it is deliver'd down to us in the Goſpel, and ſummarily contain'd, at ver. 5. in this one article, that "Jeſus is the Son of God." And hereby are implied, a firm aſſent to his doctrines, a ſtedfaſt reliance upon the merit of his ſufferings, and an aſſured expectation of his glorious promiſes: Doctrines, which a perſon Divine could not have taught, had they not been true; ſufferings, which, becauſe undergone by a perſon Divine, cannot but be of infinite worth and efficacy: and promiſes, which a perſon Divine can, and will, make good to the uttermoſt. (Stanh.) See Dr. Alleſtree's ſermon on this text; as alſo thoſe of Dr. Brevall, 1669. and Mr. Miles Barne, 1670. and the notes on ver. 1, 19. ch. ii. 15. iii. 9. and xiv. 2, 15. Matth. xvi. 16. Luke xvi. 8. John iii. 3, &c. xv. 19. and xvi. 33. Rom. viii. 37. 1 Cor. ix.. 24. Gal. i. 4. Eph. vi. 16. Tit. iii. 5. and Hebr. iv. 2.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. This is he that came by water and blood, even Jeſus Chriſt; not by water only, but by water and blood: And it is the Spirit that beareth witneſs, becauſe the Spirit is truth. For there are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt: And theſe three are one. And there are three that bear witneſs in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: And theſe three agree in one. If we receive the witneſs of men, the witneſs of God is greater: For this is the witneſs of God, which he hath teſtified of his Son. He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the witneſs in himſelf: He that believeth not God, hath made him a liar, becauſe he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life: And this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life.

Came by water and blood.] That by "water and blood," is here to be underſtood Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper, ſeems more than probable, from ver. 8. where it is ſaid, that "the water and the blood, as well as the Spirit, are (hoi martyrountes) ſuch as do "bear witneſs in earth," now at preſent, and ſo are ſtill in being or preſent to the Church; which can't be properly ſaid of Chriſt's own baptiſm, and ſhedding blood out of his ſide, thoſe particulars being long ſince paſt and over. In like manner, "the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt" are ſaid to be hoi martyrountes in Heaven; not ſo much becauſe of the teſtimony given by each Divine Perſon in former ages, but becauſe they are each ſtill in being, and do ſtill continue to give teſtimony to the truth, by the gifts and graces daily conferr'd on the Church. (Wells) Yet nevertheleſs, foraſmuch as, in the context, the "belief that Jeſus is the Son of God," is the means of victory over the temptations of the world, the example of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf may be well underſtood to be here propoſed to our imitation: Whoſe whole life here on earth was compounded of innocence and purity, repreſented emblematically by water, and yet was expoſed to ſufferings, even of a ſhameful death, repreſented by blood; both which flow'd from his ſide at his crucifixion; as this Apoſtle has ſet forth in his Goſpel, John xix. 34. where ſee the notes, as well as thoſe of Hammond and Whitby on this text, at large. See alſo Bp. Andrews's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Matth. iii. 16. John i. 32. xiv. 17. and 26. and xvi. 13.

For there are three.] Upon this important text, we muſt obſerve, 1. That the foregoing verſe being read, as in a parentheſis, this may be underſtood as giving a reaſon of that propoſition in the end of ver. 5. "that Jeſus is the Son of God;" of which not the Spirit alone, but the Father, and the Son bear witneſs alſo. (Aſſ.) Viz. God, the Father, by the "voice from Heaven," Matth. iii. 17. and John xii. 28. God, the Son, by his ſaying to Saul, "Why perſecuteſt thou me?" and ſtriking him down in the place for ſo doing, Acts ix. 4. And God, the Holy Ghoſt, by deſcending on him, as a dove, Matth. iii. 16. and afterwards on the diſciples, Acts ii. 3. (Aſſ. H. W. and B.) 2. As to the doctrine of the Trinity, hereby maintain'd, Were I to give a reaſon of my belief of it, laying aſide all affectation of hard words, and abſtruſe metaphyſical notions, I would do it thus. I am fully perſwaded of the neceſſity of a revelation in general, in order to all the purpoſes of virtue and piety in this life; and I am convinc'd, that thoſe revelations of the things of another world, which are made in the Goſpel, have better proofs of their Divinity, than any other whatſoever. They have ſuch teſtimonies of their coming from God, from prophecies, and miracles, and the agreeableneſs of the doctrine therein contain'd, to our common notions, that if I uſe my reaſon, with the ſame impartiality in theſe that I do in other things, I muſt give my aſſent to them. In thoſe writings I find this propoſition, "There are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, and theſe three are One:" From whence, and from many other paſſages in the Scriptures, I find, that there is a diſtinction made in the Godhead, under theſe three names, of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; which the Church hath expreſs'd, all together, by the word Trinity, and ſingly by the word Perſon: And I think theſe terms proper enough, to expreſs all that we know of this myſtery. Now, I find no account of the manner and nature of this diſtinction in the Holy Scriptures, any otherwiſe, than that the Son was begotten, and that the Holy Ghoſt comes from the Father and the Son. I conclude, there is ſomething more than a mere nominal diſtinction, becauſe we are ſaid to be "baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt;" Which muſt needs import ſomething more, than if that commiſſion had run in the name of Jehovah, and of Elohim, and of Adonai: For, if there were not ſomething more intended, than barely that they ſhould do it in the name of God, this were a needleſs tautology. Again, I conclude, that they are not three diſtinct different Spirits; for then there muſt be three Gods, contrary to reaſon and Scripture. From all which I infer, That there is in the Godhead ſomething more than a mere nominal diſtinction; and ſomething leſs than that of three different Spirits: And, becauſe I find each Perſon, ſeparately as well as jointly, mention'd as God, and Divine worſhip allow'd and paid to them; therefore, as that excellent Creed expreſſeth it, I worſhip "the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity; neither confounding the Perſons, nor dividing the Subſtance." Now, at the ſame time that I make this profeſſion of my faith, I allow, I have not the leaſt knowledge, how this ſtrict union is, nor how great the diſtinction! It is as much beyond my Reaſon, as the glory of God is beyond my ſight; and any man who ſtrives to conceive it himſelf, or takes pains to explain it [illegible] others, is guilty of ſuch a folly, that I can't think of any action extravagant enough to match it. (Browne and Fox) But, 3. Foraſmuch as this text gives us ſo ſtrong a proof the Doctrine of the Sacred Trinity, that the adverſaries of that doctrine, being otherwiſe diſarm'd of all defence againſt it, would fain have it look'd upon as not genuine, but ſuppoſititious, we muſt obſerve, That this text has three great advantages on its ſide, to convince us of its truth at firſt view. For, 1. The doctrine here taught, ſublime as it is, is not peculiar to this place, but occurs in many other parts of Scripture. 2. The expreſſions are all in the ſtyle of St. John, and have a perfect connexion with what goes before 'em, and follows after 'em. The preceding verſes relate to the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, and his dignity, as the Meſſiah and Son of God: And the words of this 7th verſe confirm thoſe great truths, by the depoſition of three witneſſes, "the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt:" To which three witneſſes from Heaven, are join'd, in the following verſe, three witneſſes upon earth, "the Spirit, and the Water, and the blood." No words can be more juſtly connected: One verſe anſwers to the other; there is the ſame teſtimony throughout, the ſame number of witneſſes, a diſtinction and oppoſition of the places where they are; the witneſſes of the 8th verſe are in earth, thoſe of the 7th in Heaven: The 8th verſe, by a diſtinction, ſo notified, throws us back upon the 7th, and, like the ſeraphim, in Iſaiah's viſion, ch. vi. 2, 3. they correſpond together. And, 3. The ancient Church never caſt upon this text the leaſt ſuſpicion of forgery: But, wherever it has appear'd, it has always been look'd on as the Apoſtle St. John's. And we may challenge all thoſe who, at this day, labour to throw it out of his Epiſtle, to produce one ſingle paſſage from the Fathers, where it has been mention'd with marks of abatement, or the like ſentiments of diſapprobation glanc'd at, as have been form'd againſt in theſe later ages; viz. ſo late as the 16th century. (Martin) The ſilence of the Greek MSS. and eſpecially of the Alexandrian, is doubtleſs a great prejudice againſt it; the weight of which muſt have ſunk its credit, had not Tertullian (in his book againſt Praxeas, ch. 25.) alluded to it, and St Cyprian (in his Of the Unity of the Church, ſect. 5. as well as in his Epiſtle to Jubaianus,) more directly quoted it; ſaying, It is written, of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, that "theſe three are one." And Eugenius, and the other African Biſhops, could not have cited this text, (as they plainly did, in their confeſſion of faith, deliver'd to king Hunneric, in the 5th century) againſt the Arians, who then lay upon the catch againſt them, if its authority had not been held by them as indiſputable. (Marſhall's Cypr.) I know not how it came to paſs, that ſo many of the ancient MSS. have quite left out this paſſage, unleſs it was, that the ſworn enemies of the truth (ſuch as there were in all times) could not bear the light of this clear doctrine, and therefore put it out. But, the following words plainly ſhew the neceſſity of this reading. For, after he had here ſaid, "For there are three that bear record in Heaven," &c. it follows in the next verſe, "And there are three that bear witneſs in earth," &c. But, if we follow the other reading, there will be either a chaſm in the text, or a moſt beautiful ſequence and connexion ſpoil'd. Methinks, whoſoever they were, that firſt preſum'd to take ſuch a liberty with the Holy Scriptures, as either to eraſe or alter a word of it without authority, may be truly ſaid to have fought againſt God. (Heinſ.) Yet, after all, it might probably enough happen, that, by reaſon of the ſame words (treis eiſin hoi martyrountes) occuring in the 7th verſe, and being repeated again in ver. 8. all the intervening words were left out, by ſome inadvertent tranſcriber, in the earlier ages of Chriſtianity; whence many of the other copies might be tranſcribed with the ſame omiſſion. (H. and Wells) See this text vindicated, and explain'd, by Dr. Hammond at large: And a critical diſſertation upon it, againſt Mr. Simon, and the modern Arians, by Mr. Martin, Lond. printed for W. and I. Innys, 1719. See alſo Dr. Browne (Bp. of Corke's) Anſwer to Toland; and the ſeveral notes on ver. 6. Matth. iii. 16, 17. and xxviii. 19. John i. 1. v. 36. viii. 18. x. 30, 37. and xv. 26. Acts ii. 3, &c. and v. 3. 1 Cor. xii. 4, 11. Eph. iv. 5. and 1 Tim. iii. 16.

If we receive the witneſs of men.] This is not to be ſo interpreted as if the three witneſſes on earth related only to the teſtimony of men, and the three from Heaven only to the teſtimony of God, as if the Apoſtle intended here to ſignify, that we have greater reaſon here to believe the witneſſes in Heaven, than thoſe on earth. For, 1. The teſtimony of the Spirit, and of the Holy Ghoſt, are of equal certainty and validity: And, 2. John Baptiſt being "ſent from God," John i. 6. and his baptiſm being "from Heaven," and not "of men," Matth. xxi. 25. was alſo, in effect, the teſtimony of God. The import therefore of theſe words is rather this, If the teſtimony of two or three men be thought ſufficient to give credit to any matter in all courts of judicature, ſurely, the teſtimony of that God, who cannot lye, or deceive us, muſt be of greater force and ſtrength, to produce faith in us. (W.)

He that believeth.] See the notes on ch. i. 10. Rom. viii. 15. and Gal. iv. 6.

This life is in his Son.] See the notes on John i. 4. and x. 10. and Acts iii. 15.

He that hath the Son, hath life.] That is, he who hears Chriſt, as we are commanded to do, and inſiſts on his doctrine and pattern ſet before him, is as ſure of attaining Eternal bliſs, as if he were already poſſeſs'd of it; but he who doth not ſo, hath nothing to do with it. (H.) See Bp. Reynolds's ſermon on this text; and Dr. Preſton's, in 1626. and the notes on John iii. 36. and v. 24. Acts iii. 15. and Eph. iii. 17.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Theſe things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God. And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. And if we know that he heareth us, whatſoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we have deſired of him. If any man ſee his brother ſin a ſin which is not unto death, he ſhall ask, and he ſhall give him life for them that ſin not unto death. There is a ſin unto death: I do not ſay that he ſhall pray for it. All unrighteouſneſs is ſin: And there is a ſin not unto death. We know that whoſoever is born of God ſinneth not; but he that is begotten of God, keepeth himſelf, and that wicked one toucheth him not. And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedneſs. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an underſtanding that we may know him that is true: And we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jeſus Chriſt. This is the true God, and eternal life. Little children, keep your ſelves from idols. Amen.

Theſe things have I written.] The Alexandrian, and two other Manuſcripts, as alſo the Vulgar, the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic Verſions, reads this text thus, "Theſe things have I written unto you, that ye may know, that, believing on the name of the Son of God, ye have eternal life:" and this ſeems to be more appoſite to the context, than the common reading. (W. and Wells) See the notes on John xx. 31.

And this is the confidence.] That is, the ground of our confidence in prayer. (Aſſ.) And a full aſſurance, 1. In general, That whatever we ask in faith, according to his will, we ſhall obtain: 2. In particular, That our ſeveral petitions, which we preſent unto God, ſhall, in his own time, in his own way, and after his own manner, be granted by him, provided our perſons, and our prayers, be qualified according to the Goſpel, for the receiving of his promiſe. (B.) Viz. With theſe limitations, 1. That what we ask be according to God's will, not only not abhorrent from it, but truly agreeable to it: 2. According to his wiſdom, that which at that time he judgeth fit to be granted us; and neither contrary to any thing he hath decreed, nor ſuch as, by any accident, God ſees either hurtful, or not uſeful, or leſs profitable to us. And, 3. That we ask in faith; reſolving to ſtick faſt to God, whatſoever comes, and to uſe no means of obtaining our deſires, but ſuch as are perfectly acceptable to him. (H.) See Dr. Hammond on this text at large; and the notes on Matth. vii. 7, &c. Luke xi. 13. xviii. 1, &c. and xxii. 42. John ix. 31. xiv. 13. and xvi. 23. 2 Cor. xii. 7, &c. and Jam. i. 6, &c.

If any man ſee, &c.] The moſt obvious interpretation of this text is, If any Chriſtian ſee another commit any of thoſe ſins which are call'd venial ſins, or ſins of infirmity, or of daily incurſion; as ſudden paſſion, wrathful, raſh, or cenſorious words, &c. (of the ſinfulneſs of which perhaps the man himſelf is not ſenſible) Let him pray God to forgive that ſin of his brother; and his prayer ſhall be heard, even tho' the other do not perceive his own fault: But, for groſs ſins, adultery, murder, cheating, &c. a man ſhall not be forgiven upon another's asking; nor at all, without a repentance of his own. Other interpreters think, that, by "a ſin unto death," is meant here an unpardonable ſin; viz. a ſin for which God will never give the grace of repentance, nor ever forgive it. They do all grant, I think, that a ſincere and hearty repentance for any ſin, is a certain ſign, that it was not, or is not, an unpardonable one: But they think, that St. John here ſpeaks of a ſin of ſuch a nature, or of ſuch a degree, as to which God never gives either repentance or pardon: And they muſt ſuppoſe withall, that it is ſuch a ſin, as a ſtander-by may ſee, and judge it to be unpardonable, and that it is to no purpoſe to pray for the forgiveneſs of it. I do not conceive this to be the moſt probable interpretation; but the other. Yet, the chief objection which is counted to lie againſt this interpretation, does not lie againſt it. 'Tis judg'd to be very improbable, that St. John ſhould refer to a ſin of ſo dreadful and fatal conſequence, without telling what it was; mentioning it only under the general name of "a ſin unto death," or "the ſin unto death;" unleſs there had been any common notion then among Chriſtians, of the meaning of this name, and what ſort of ſin was meant by "the ſin unto death." Now there is a probability of that name being then generally known; and that, from Hermas's Paſtor: A book written about 20 years before this Epiſtle of St. John; well known, and much read, in thoſe ancient times, tho' litttle known or regarded now. There (in Simil. vi. § 2.) is mention made of men, who had been Chriſtians, corrupted by the evil angel, ſome even to death; ſome others ſo far as to a decay; and the difference between thoſe two degrees is there explain'd, viz. That to thoſe firſt, there is no return by repentance unto life; becauſe, to their other ſins they have added this, that they have blaſphem'd the name of the Lord Chriſt; and theſe kind of men are ordain'd unto death. In other places of the book are ſeveral other particular deſcriptions of them, viz. as deſerters of the Church, revolters from the faith, and betrayers of the ſervants of God, &c. Whether St. John meant to refer to this ſort of ſin, I know not. If he did, it is much the ſame as our Saviour had call'd blaſphemy of the Holy Ghoſt. For, theſe men muſt have been the miraculous Powers of the Holy Ghoſt on many Chriſtians, and probably upon themſelves; and in their blaſpheming of the Chriſtian religion, from which they had revolted, they muſt conſequently ſpeak evil of thoſe miraculous powers which were ſhewn in evidence for it, and which miracles at that time were frequent. I have been the more particular in the deſcriptions of theſe men, from Hermas, that none of the deſponding melancholic people, who are apt to ground their doubts and deſpair, upon this text, among others, ſhould think their ſin, which they repent of, to be either that "ſin unto death," of which St. John ſpeaks, (if he is to be taken in this latter ſenſe;) or of which Hermas ſpeaks; of which it will appear, that they are not, nor have been, capable. They, probably, have not blaſphem'd, or rail'd againſt, Chriſt, and the Chriſtian religion, and the Goſpel: But, for certain, they had not ſeen thoſe miracles and powers of the Holy Ghoſt, which thoſe apoſtates, whom Hermas ſpeaks of, had ſeen. And the atheiſtical apoſtates that are now, would do well to ſee, and conſider, what account is given in Hermas of the apoſtates of that age. (Wall) And their caſe is but little different from that of apoſtates, who live, and continue in known, open, and wilful diſobedience to the laws of Chriſt, and are deaf to all the calls and exhortations to repentance. (Fox) But this text may, in a more particular manner, be applied to thoſe who continue unreform'd and incorrigible, after all the admonitions and cenſures of the Church; as it is interpreted by Grotius, Godwyn, Hammond, and Johnſon. See Dr. Hammond at large on this text; and the notes on Matth. xii. 31. Mark iii. 29. Luke xii. 10. Rom. x. 1. 1 Cor. v. 5. Gal. vi. 1. Hebr. vi. 4. and x. 26. and Jam. v. 15.

I do not ſay.] Ou peri ekeines lego; I do not mean that; or I do not ſpeak of that (Wall) Not that he forbids, but only does not command us, to pray for them; or doth not promiſe any good ſucceſs to prayers offer'd up for ſuch. (G. H. and B.) It is not improbable, that St. John might here have reſpect to the example of our bleſſed Saviour himſelf, John xvii. 9. where he ſays, "I pray for them (that is, for the penitent believers) I pray not for the world;" that is, for the impenitent ſinners and unbelievers. (Wells) See the notes there.

All unrighteouſneſs is ſin.] 'Tis true, that "all unrighteouſneſs is ſin:" But withal, it is as true, that all ſin is not of an equal malignity or guilt. (Wells) See the notes on ch. iii. 4.

Sinneth not.] That is, doth not commit that ſin of apoſtaſy, or "ſin unto death," here ſpoken of; or, liveth not in a ſinful courſe. (Aſſ. B. Wells and Fox) See the notes on ch. iii. 9.

Keepeth himſelf.] Then may we with confidence expect, that God ſhould do his part in keeping us back, when we are duly careful to do our part alſo, towards keeping ourſelves back, from preſumptuous ſins. Againſt which ſins, the beſt and moſt ſovereign preſervatives, are, 1. Never to do any thing againſt the clear light of our conſciences; becauſe every known ſin hath a ſpice of wilfulneſs and preſumption in it; and every ſin againſt conſcience is a known ſin. 2. To ſtrive to be maſters of our own wills; for it is wilfulneſs only that begets preſumption. 3. To beware of engaging ourſelves to ſin, whether by promiſe, vow, covenant, oath, or otherwiſe: For this is properly to be in the ſnare of the Devil, 2 Tim. ii. 26. and he who hath ſuffer'd himſelf to be thus enſnar'd, hath this only way left for his eſcape; even to diſengage himſelf out of hand, by breaking through the ſnare, if he cannot fairly untie it. And, 4. To harden ourſelves with a holy obſtinacy, and ſtop our ears, againſt all the enchantments of Satan and his inſtruments, ſaying, with holy David, "Depart from me, ye evil-doers; for I will keep the commandments of my God," Pſa. cxix. 115. "I have ſworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep God's righteous judgments", ver. 106. (Sanderſ.) See the notes on John xvii. 15. 2 Tim. ii. 26. and Jam. i. 27.

The whole world lieth in wickedneſs.] En to ponero; Under the wicked One. For, as ho poneros, in ver. 18. denotes the Devil, and is ſo rendred in our tranſlation; ſo 'tis evident, that it is to be taken in the ſame ſenſe in this verſe, and ought to be rendred in like manner. (Wells) But "the whole world" is not to be taken abſolutely; but only for the great multitude of the impenitent and unbelievers. See the notes on John vii. 9. and xii. 31. Acts xxvi. 18. and 2 Tim. ii. 26.

And we know.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, We Chriſtians are better taught, by our religion, to acknowledge and worſhip the only true God, by his Son Jeſus Chriſt, our only Mediator, and therefore exhort you to "keep from idols;" intimating hereby, that the worſhipping of any other beſides this only true God, and by any other Mediator, beſides Jeſus Chriſt, is idolatry. Or, the words may be ſens'd thus; We are ſure, "that the Son of God is come," and that Chriſt is he, who, by his doctrine and Spirit, hath enlightned us to know the true and living God, whilſt the greateſt part of the world worſhip falſe gods, yea, adore the Devil himſelf. And farther, "We are in him that is true, even in his Son Jeſus Chriſt;" that is, We are by faith implanted into Jeſus Chriſt, who is the author, purchaſer, and diſpoſer of eternal life, and therefore is true God. This text, which proves undeniably the Divinity of Chriſt, the Socinians pervert, by applying theſe words, "This is the true God," not to Chriſt, but to God the Father. But this makes the Apoſtle guilty of a grand tautology; by ſaying, the true God is the true God. Beſides, It is here ſaid of the ſame perſon, that he is "the true God, and eternal life." Now eternal life, is thrice, in this very chapter, attributed to Jeſus Chriſt, as the author and diſpenſer of it, ver. 11, 12, 13. If then Chriſt be meant by eternal life, he muſt be alſo meant by the true God; for they are ſpoken of together, when the Apoſtle ſays, "This is the true God, and eternal life." Laſtly, Our Apoſtle concludes his Epiſtle with this cautionary direction, "Little children, keep youſelves from idols." As if he had ſaid, My advice to you is, as that of a father to his own children; having received by the Goſpel the knowledge of the true God, keep yourſelves from idols, or falſe gods of the Heathen, among whom ye live; abandon all idolatry, ſuperſtition, ſacrifiſing to idols, frequenting idol feaſts, and all idolatrous communion; theſe things being inconſiſtent with the worſhip of the true God, and real Chriſtianity. (H. W. and B.) But the idols here mention'd are ſurely thoſe which the Gnoſticks uſed. To which purpoſe, there is an eminent place in Euſebius, That thoſe of the hereſy of Simon Magus pretended to be of the Chriſtian religion, and to have forſaken the ſuperſtition of the Heathens, in worſhipping idols; and yet came back again to that which they pretended to have forſaken; falling down to the pictures and ſtatues of Simon and Helena, and by ſacrifice and incenſe and drink-offerings, doing adoration to them: And, beſides theſe, there were among them many abominable impurities, not fit to be named. All which together may well be the idols, which the Chriſtians are here warn'd to beware of. (H. and Wells) We have but little occaſion to "keep ourſelves from idols" of ſtone: But, how many are there in our hearts, to which we are but too much devoted? Every thing, which we love contrary to the law of God, is an idol which we worſhip. Wherever we ſeek our happineſs, there is our God. (Q) See the notes on ch. iv. 2. Luke xxiv. 45. John vi. 68. xvii. 3. and xx. 28. Rom. ix. 5. 1 Cor. x. 14. 1 Tim. iii. 16. and Tit. ii. 13.

Amen.] See the notes on John xxi. 25.

The END of the Firſt Epiſtle General of St. JOHN.

ANNOTATIONS

Second Epiſtle of St. John.

BEFORE we enter upon theſe two next following ſhort Epiſtles, the reader is to be warn'd,

i. That tho' Grotius's poſthumous Annotations ſeem to aſcribe them both to another John, whom the Apoſtle of this name made Bp. of the Jewiſh Chriſtians at Epheſus; yet the exact agreement with the foregoing, not only in matter, but even in words, together with the concurring authority of moſt of the Fathers, leave us no room to doubt of their being written by St. John the Apoſtle. The ſtyle and terms, the ſpirit and ſentiments of theſe two latter, are not only alike, but often the very ſame as in the firſt: Every line is animated with the ſpirit of unfeigned charity, recommended in divers ways, and by various reaſons; which is the peculiar character of this beloved Diſciple, and the great glory of Chriſtianity. And as to the particular arguments to the contrary, they have been ſufficiently confuted by Hammond and Whitby; ſo that we ſhall not take any notice of them here. ii. That both the time and place of writing theſe Epiſtles is very uncertain; only, they are generally thought to have been written about the ſame time with the former. iii. That, as to the direction of this, "unto the elect Lady," and the other, "unto the well-beloved Gaius," we ſhall conſider it in the notes on the firſt verſe of each. iv. That tho' the titles, as they ſtand in our tranſlation, expreſs only, The Second (and The Third) Epiſtle of St. John, yet in the Greek they are intituled, The Second (and The Third) Epiſtle General of John the Apoſtle: Which proves, that they were generally receiv'd as written by this Apoſtle; and likewiſe admitted into the Canon of Holy Scripture, as Catholic, that is, of general, or univerſal importance, to be read in all the Churches. And, v. That the main ſubject and deſign of both theſe Epiſtles is much the ſame; viz. To commend the reſpective parties addreſs'd to, for their conſtancy in the true faith, and practice of Chriſtian duties; to caution them againſt ſeducers; and to exhort them ſtill to go on in ſuch their perſeverance.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. THE elder unto the elect lady, and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not I only, but alſo all they that have known the truth; for the truths ſake which dwelleth in us, and ſhall be with us for ever: Grace be with you, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Son of the Father, in truth and love. I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in the truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father. And now I beſeech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, that as ye have heard from the beginning, ye ſhould walk in it. For many deceivers are entred into the world, who confeſs not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh. This is a deceiver and an Antichriſt. Look to yourſelves, that we loſe not thoſe things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward. Whoſoever tranſgreſſeth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Chriſt, hath not God: He that abideth in the doctrine of Chriſt, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your houſe, neither bid him God ſpeed. For he that biddeth him God ſpeed, is partaker of his evil deeds. Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I truſt to come unto you, and ſpeak face to face that our joy may be full. The children of thy elect ſiſter greet thee. Amen.

The elder.] Ho presbyteros, "the elder," being a title of honour among the Jews, given to the chief of their tribes, it agrees very well with the office of the Apoſtles, ſet over the twelve tribes of the houſe of Iſrael in ſpiritual concerns. And that the Apoſtle ſhould, in this Epiſtle, conceal his name, as in the former he had done, is ſo far from being an argument, to conclude him not the author of it, that it rather proves he was; he being the only Apoſtle, who affected to conceal his name, and who, in his Goſpel, ſcarce ever ſpeaks of himſelf, without ſome circumlocution. (H. W. and Wells) See the notes on 1 Pet. v. 1.

Unto the elect lady.] Electe kyria. Who the elect lady was, to whom the Apoſtle directs this Epiſtle, is matter of queſtion. Some underſtand it of a particular perſon; ſome honourable and religious matron, of eminent piety, and liberality to the poor members of the Church: Of which opinion I find Beza, Bp. Hall, Grotius, the Aſſembly-men, and Cave; as well as Du-pin, and Fleury, which two laſt think Electe, or Electa, to have been her proper name. But others underſtand this phraſe rather to denote ſome principal Church of the Chriſtians, who are frequently call'd (eclectoi) elect, as probably, that of either Jeruſalem or Epheſus; and the (adelphe eclecte) elect ſiſter, ver. 13. ſome other Chriſtian Church, where the Apoſtle reſided at the writing this Epiſtle; and that he names neither of them in reſpect of the hazard and danger, which might ariſe, to either or both of them, in caſe his Epiſtle ſhould fall into their enemies hands: Of which opinion are Henſius, Hammond and Whitby, for reaſons given by them at large; but which I ſhall not trouble the reader with; ſince (as Mr. Burkitt truly obſerves) which opinion of the two has the greater probability, is a matter of no great importance. See the notes on 1 Pet. v. 13.

Whom I love in the truth.] That is, Either, with a true and ſincere love; or, according as God has appointed, in his word; which is truth, John xvii. 17. Or, in Chriſt; who is The truth, John xiv. 6. (Aſſ.) We "love in the truth" thoſe only, whom we love in order to their eternal ſalvation. (Q.)

Shall be with us for ever.] This ſeems to aſſert the perpetuity and indefectibility of the Church of God: For, where the truth of the Goſpel is for ever, there muſt be a Church for ever. (W.)

Grace,——mercy, and peace.] Viz. God's favour to your perſons; mercy, to pardon your ſins; and peace of conſcience. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. i 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. Gal .i .3. and Eph. i. 2.

Walking in the truth.] It was not their ſpeculative knowledge of the truth, and their taking upon them a bare profeſſion of Chriſtianity, that he rejoiced in; but their "walking in the truth," and framing their converſation according to the commandment which they had received from the Father. Chriſtianity is not a ſpeculative ſcience, but a practical art of holy living: And the moſt exalted knowledge is inſufficient to ſalvation, without a ſuitable and correſpondent practice. (B.) See the notes on Gal. v. 16. Col. iii. 7. and 1 John v. 3.

I beſeech thee.] See the notes on Philem. 9.

Love one another.] See the notes on Matth. v. 43. John xiii. 34. xiv. 15, and xv. 10, &c. Rom. xiii. 9. 1 John ii. 7, 24. and v. 3.

Many deceivers are entred.] Eiſelthon. But the Alexandrian MS. the Vulgate and Syriac Verſions, and Irenæus, read it exelthon, are gone forth into the world. (Wells) See the notes on Acts xx. 29. 1 John ii. 22. and iv. 1, &c.

Look to yourſelves.] See the notes on Gal. iii. 4. Hebr. x. 32. and xi. 26.

He that abideth.] See the notes on 1 Cor. ii. 22, &c.

Neither bid him, God ſpeed.] In this text obſerve, 1. The perſons to be avoided; viz. Wicked apoſtates, and heretical ſeducers, who deny the Goſpel, or any eſſential part of Chriſtianity. (B.) Making ſtubborn oppoſition to this doctrine, and broaching the contrary errors. (Hall) 2. How we are to treat them; viz. By no means to give any countenance or encouragement to them, or to hold any familiarity or communion with them, or to entertain them, or ſo much as courteouſly to ſalute them; but to ſhew them diſreſpect, and manifeſt our diſlike and diſapprobation of their errors. (B.) 3. To what end we are thus to treat them; viz. That we may teſtify our fidelity to God; not hazard our own ſalvation; and raiſe in our offending brethren a ſalutary ſhame and confuſion. (Q.) 4. For what reaſon we are to do this; viz. Becauſe, not to ſhew an abhorrence of ſin or error, is to conſent to, and partake with them. We tacitly approve a crime, which we do not openly condemn. Men do not ſufficiently apprehend, how culpable they are, in conſenting to iniquity and injuſtice; or in looking upon it with indifference and unconcern. (Idem) And, 5. That this form of Interdict, "Neither bid him God ſpeed," ſeems to be an imitation of the Jewiſh practice towards excommunicated perſons; who were not only excluded from all commerce, but alſo from all kind of common civilities, and ordinary ſalutation. That our joy may be full.] See the notes on John xv. 11. and xvii. 13.

Thy elect ſiſter.] See the notes on ver. 1.

The END of the Second Epiſtle of St. JOHN.

ANNOTATIONS

Third Epiſtle of St. John.

AFTER what has been ſaid, prefatory to the two foregoing Epiſtles, there is no need of enlarging here, further than to refer the reader to the following notes on ver. 1. for what we have particularly to ſay of the perſon, to whom this Epiſtle is directed.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. THE elder unto the well-beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth. Beloved, I wiſh above all things that thou mayeſt proſper, and be in health, even as thy ſoul proſpereth. For I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came and teſtified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkeſt in the truth. I have no greater joy, than to hear that my children walk in truth. Beloved, thou doeſt faithfully whatſoever thou doeſt to the brethren, and to ſtrangers; which have born witneſs of thy charity before the Church: Whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly ſort, thou ſhalt do well: Becauſe that for his names ſake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. We therefore ought to receive ſuch, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth. I wrote unto the Church: But Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not. Wherefore if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth; prating againſt us with malicious words: And not content therewith, neither doth he himſelf receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and caſteth them out of the Church. Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good, is of God: But he that doeth evil, hath not ſeen God. Demetrius hath good report of all men, and of the truth itſelf: Yea, and we alſo bear record, and ye know that our record is true. I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee: But I truſt I ſhall ſhortly ſee thee, and we ſhall ſpeak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends ſalute thee. Greet the friends by name.

The elder.] See the notes on 1 Tim. v. 1. 1 Pet. v. 1. and 2 John 1.

Unto the well-beloved Gaius.] That this Gaius was ſome particular perſon, eminent for his piety and hoſpitality, ſeems not to admit of any diſpute; becauſe he is ſo highly applauded for both, in this Epiſtle directed to him. Moſt authors, I have conſulted, aſcribe it to Gaius, whom St. Paul calls "his hoſt, and of the whole Church," Rom. xvi. 23. where ſee the notes. Of which opinion I find the Aſſembly-men, Cave, Whitby, Burkitt, and Wells. Heinſius and Hammond incline to think him another perſon, of that common Roman name (Gaius and Caius being all one) not mention'd elſewhere in Scripture; tho', for the reaſons given by Dr. Whitby, I cannot but adhere to the former opinion. Some, it ſeems, would make him a Biſhop of Pergamus: But, as Dr. Wall obſerves, there is no heed to be given to ſuch later traditions.

Whom I love in the truth.] See the notes on 2 John 1.

Walkeſt in the truth.] See the notes on John iii. 21. and 2 John 4.

Thou doeſt faithfully.] Note, How charity towards Chriſtians is here ſtiled fidelity to Chriſt, becauſe it is done to them on Chriſt's account. Acts of charity are acts of righteouſneſs and fidelity; ſo that, he who is uncharitable, is unjuſt and unfaithful. (B.) See the notes on Luke xiv. 14. Rom. xii. 13. and xvi. 23. 1 Cor. iv. 2. and Hebr. xiii. 2.

Forward on their journey.] We lie under a particular obligation to aſſiſt thoſe, who are ſtripp'd of all things for the ſake of the truth. In aſſiſting them, we partake of their grace and their reward. We ſerve the truth, and contribute to her defence, when we receive and ſerve thoſe, who expoſe themſelves to danger on her account. (Q.) See the notes on Matth. x. 7. Acts xv. 3. Rom. xvi. 2. 1 Cor. ix. 18. 2 Cor. viii. 14. xi. 9. and xii 14.

I wrote unto the Church.] Egrapſa; I wrote: Or, according to the Vulgate, I had written: Or, according to the Syriac, I would have written. The Hebrews often uſe the præteritum for the pluſquam perfectum: And Voſſius obſerves of the Aoriſt, that it is ſo call'd, becauſe it is uſed ſometimes for the perfect, ſometimes for the præterperfect tenſe; and then egrapſa may be rendred I had written. (See the notes on 1 Cor. v. 9.) The Apoſtle then ſeems here to obviate an objection, why he writes to Gaius, a ſingle perſon, and not to the whole Church; declaring, that he would have writ to the Church, but then Diotrephes, and his party, would have hindred the effect of his writing. (W.)

But Diotrephes.] Who this Diotrephes was, is uncertain. That he was one of the Prieſts of the Church where Gaius liv'd, is the opinion (among others) of Grotius and the Aſſembly-men; the laſt of whom impute his miſbehaviour, to his jealouſy of ſtrange Miniſters, leſt he himſelf ſhould be ſlighted: And the former ſuppoſes him to have been one of thoſe Gentile converts, who would not admit to communion thoſe Jewiſh converts, who obſerv'd the Ceremonial Law; to which alſo Hammond aſſents. Eſthius, on the contrary, conjectures, (as Dr. Whitby obſerves) that he was one of thoſe Jewiſh Zealots, who held it neceſſary, that even the Gentile converts ſhould be circumciſed, and obſerve the Law; and rejected thoſe who had declar'd for the contrary; as we know from St. Paul, and the council at Jeruſalem, St. John had done. And that there were men in Corinth, and Galatia, who, on this account, oppoſed the Apoſtles, we learn from the Epiſtles directed to thoſe Churches: But we read not of any Gentile converts, who would not receive the weak Jews, or be hoſpitable to them, on the account of their obſervance of the Law; much leſs of any of them, who oppoſed themſelves to the Apoſtles on this account. Moreover, the ſubject of the Apoſtle's writing being to exhort Chriſtians, to receive them who had gone out to preach the Goſpel among "the Gentiles taking nothing of" them, ver. 7, 8. and all who did ſo, as far as we know any thing of them, being againſt theſe impoſitions, the Apoſtle could not fear they ſhould not be received for being obſervers of the Law, but, on the contrary, becauſe they were dead to the Law. Dr. Hammond ſays, 'tis poſſible, this Diotrephes was a Biſhop, and, as ſuch, did "caſt them out of the Church:" But, however, 'tis agreed, that he was a proud, preſumptuous, confident, bold perſon, who paid not a due regard to the Apoſtle, but affronted him, and contemn'd his authority; which he might do, as the Hereticks of thoſe times were wont to do, without his having any real authority in the Church himſelf, either as Biſhop or Prieſt: For ſo the phraſe (ho philoproteuon) "who loveth to have the pre-eminence," may ſignify either one who loves, and immoderately uſeth the primacy, when he hath it, or one who ſeeks it inordinately, or aſſumeth it, not properly belonging to him. See the notes on John ix. 22.

I will remember his deeds.] That is, I will ſharply rebuke him, as his contempt of authority deſerves. (B.) See the notes on 2 Theſſ. iii. 14.

He that doeth evil.] See the notes on 1 John iii. 6, 9. and iv. 12.

Demetrius hath good report.] See the notes on John iii. 21. and 1 Tim. iii. 7.

Our record is true.] See the notes on John xix. 35. and xxi. 24.

The END of the Third Epiſtle of St. JOHN.

ANNOTATIONS

Epiſtle General of St. Jude.

CONCERNING this Epiſtle, it is neceſſary to premiſe, i. That, tho' the poſthumous Grotius, without any good authority, would have this Epiſtle written, not by St. Jude the Apoſtle, but by another Jude, the 15th Biſhop of Jeruſalem; the contrary is evident, not only from the Greek title, (which is very ancient) calling it The Catholic (or general) Epiſtle of Jude the Apoſtle; but even from the text itſelf, ver. 1. wherein the author ſtiles himſelf "Jude the brother of James;" which cannot agree to any other than Jude the Apoſtle; as we may gather from the names of thoſe four, who are mention'd together, as the brethren of our Lord, Matth. xiii. 55. Viz. "James, and Joſes, and Simon, and Judas;" of which James we have ſpoken at large, in our Preface to his Epiſtle. The author being thus aſcertain'd, we ſhall only add, That this Jude was the ſame who is elſewhere call'd Thaddeus, and Lebbeus; for which ſee the notes on Matth. x. 3. and John xiv. 22. That he was a married man, (as moſt of the Apoſtles were) whoſe grandſons are mention'd by Euſebius (lib. iii. cap. 20.) as having boldly given teſtimony to the truth before the emperor Domitian: And that he is ſaid to have preach'd in Judæa and Galilee, and from thence to have proceeded through Samaria, into Idumæa, and Arabia, and its neighbouring countries; yea to Syria, Meſopotamia, and even into Perſia; where, at the inſtigation of the Magi, he is thought to have ſuffer'd martyrdom, after he had out-liv'd moſt of the other Apoſtles. ii. That as the place where it was written, is altogether uncertain; ſo neither is the time agreed upon: Inſomuch, that it has been diſputed, whether St. Jude has abridg'd the Second Epiſtle of St. Peter, or St. Peter has in that enlarg'd upon this Epiſtle of St. Jude: But moſt are of the former opinion; and indeed, little doubt can remain, that this was ſomewhat later in time, if we compare the 4th verſe of this Epiſtle with the beginning of the ſecond chapter of the other. iii. That the perſons, to whom it is directed, are here diſtinguiſh'd by the titles of "them that are ſanctified by God the Father, and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt, and called," ver. 1. By which phraſes we may underſtand all Chriſtians in general; tho' it is thought to be primarily intended for the Jewiſh converts, as the other Catholic Epiſtles were. iv. That the deſign and ſubject of it is much the ſame with that of St. Peter; viz. to fortify them againſt the errors and corruptions of the Gnoſticks, and other Hereticks, who, by their wicked lives and worſe doctrines, attempted to ſeduce them from the plainneſs and ſimplicity of the Goſpel, and to bring upon them the ſame judgment and condemnation with themſelves. But withal, becauſe true Chriſtian charity, tho' zealous, is without bitterneſs and hatred, he exhorts all Chriſtians, by all gentle means, to endeavour to ſave them; and to pull them as brands out of the fire, into which their own folly had caſt them. And, v. That, as to the ſtyle, there are no nobler amplifications in any author, than in this, and the other Divine Writer, when they deſcribe the numerous villanies of the Gnoſticks, in a variety of inſtances; which they ſeverely brand, emphatically expoſe, and yet happily expreſs, in all the cleanneſs and chaſtity of language. To give a proper and juſt account of the various beauties of this, and its parallel Epiſtle, would take up a large diſcourſe, and require all the skill and ſagacity of criticiſm: But, as we have already touch'd upon ſome of thoſe in the other, (2 Pet.) ſo we ſhall take notice of the like in this, as we go along.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. JUDE, the ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, and brother of James, to them that are ſanctified by God the Father, and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt, and called: Mercy unto you, and peace, and love be multiplied. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common ſalvation: It was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye ſhould earneſtly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the ſaints. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into laſciviouſneſs, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord having ſaved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward deſtroyed them that believed not. And the angels which kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, he hath reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs, unto the judgment of the great day. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them, in like manner giving themſelves over to fornication, and going after ſtrange fleſh, are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire. Likewiſe alſo theſe filthy dreamers defile the fleſh, deſpiſe dominions, and ſpeak evil of dignities. Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the Devil, he diſputed about the body of Moſes, durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation, but ſaid, The Lord rebuke thee. But theſe ſpeak evil of thoſe things which they know not: But what they know naturally, as brute beaſts; in thoſe things they corrupt themſelves. Wo unto them; for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and periſhed in the gain-ſaying of Core. Theſe are ſpots in your feaſts of charity, when they feaſt with you, feeding themſelves without fear: Clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees, whoſe fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the ſea, foaming out their own ſhame; wandring ſtars, to whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever. And Enoch alſo, the ſeventh from Adam, propheſied of theſe, ſaying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thouſands of his ſaints; to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him. Theſe are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own luſts; and their mouth ſpeaketh great ſwelling words, having men's perſons in admiration becauſe of advantage. But, beloved, remember ye the words which were ſpoken before of the Apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: How that they told you there ſhould be mockers in the laſt time, who ſhould walk after their own ungodly luſts. Theſe be they who ſeparate themſelves, ſenſual, having not the Spirit.

Jude.] See what is ſaid of him in the Preface.

The ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt.] See the notes on Rom. i. 1.

Brother of James.] Viz. James, the ſon of Alpheus, not of Zebedee. See the Preface to this Epiſtle, and to that of St. James; and the notes on Matth. x. 3. and Acts xv. 13, 19.

To them that are ſanctified.] See the notes on John xvii. 17. Rom. xii. 1. 1 Cor. i. 8. iii. 17. 2 Cor. i. 1. Eph. v. 4, 27. 1 Theſſ. iv. 3. Tit. ii. 11, 12. Hebr. xii. 14. 1 Pet. i. 2. and 2 Pet. i. 5.

Preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt.] That is, in the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, while many others, for fear of perſecution, have apoſtatiz'd from it. (B.) Or, from that judgment and deſtruction which befalls thoſe others. (H.) See the notes on John x. 28. and xvii. 11, 15.

And called.] All of them, externally, by the miniſtry of God's word; and many of them alſo, internally, by the effectual operation of the Spirit, renewing their nature, and reforming their lives. (B.) But this internal call is all one with ſanctification before-mentioned. (Aſſ.) See Mr. Fran. Tomlinſon's ſermon on this text, 1611. and the notes on Matth. xx. 16. John vi. 37, 44. Acts xxvi. 18. Rom: viii. 28, &c. 1 Cor. i. 2, 26. and 2 Pet. i. 3.

Mercy unto you.] Mercy, from God, the Father of mercies; peace, from Jeſus Chriſt, who is our peace; and love, from the Holy Ghoſt, by whom it is ſhed abroad in our hearts. (Otes and B.) See the notes on Rom. i. 7. and 1 Cor. i. 3.

The common ſalvation.] Not ſo call'd, as if it were common to all perſons, good and bad; but, becauſe common to all believers, who have a joint title to it, and a common intereſt in it. The ſalvation, which the Goſpel reveals, is common, in regard of the purchaſer of it, Chriſt, our common Saviour; in regard of the price paid for it, the precious blood of Chriſt; in regard of the way and means, by which it is obtain'd and ſecur'd, viz. Faith; and in regard of the earneſt of it, which is common to all believers. (B.)

Earneſtly contend for the faith.] That is, for the pure and ſincere doctrine of the Goſpel. (Aſſ. and B.) And for this we muſt (epagonizesthai) "earneſtly contend," as wreſtlers do for the victory. (Aſſ.) Conſtantly profeſſing it, in ſpite of all the ſcoffs, threats, and inſults of the adverſaries. (H. and Sherl.) Stoutly defending it, and not ſuffering it to be taken from us. (G. and Heinſ.) And reſolving to hold it faſt, even unto death. (Lardn.) In ſhort, the words imply, 1. The uſe of all means neceſſary to the keeping and maintaining the faith, whole and untainted, in all trials and oppoſitions: And, 2. Zeal and perſeverance in the uſe of them. (Jackſ.) See Dr. W. Jackſon's ſermon, in 1674. Mr. Ja. Lardner's, 1700. and Dr. Sherlock's, 1701. all on this text; and the notes on John x. 12. Acts xx. 24, &c. Rom. i. 16. 1 Cor. xvi. 13. Gal. i. 8. Eph. vi. 12, &c. Phil. i. 27. 1 Tim. vi. 12. 2 Tim. i. 13. and iv. 2. Hebr. xi. 1, &c. and xii. 4. and Jam. ii. 19.

Once delivered unto the Saints.] That is, Either uniformly, by Chriſt and his Apoſtles. (H.) Or, once for all; ſo as never to be chang'd or alter'd, nor any new rule of faith to be expected. (Beza, G. Otes, Aſſ. W. B. and Lardner) And therefore, the new articles of faith, added to the Apoſtles Creed by the Council of Trent, can be no articles of the Chriſtian Faith, becauſe they were never deliver'd by Chriſt, or his Apoſtles, nor ever known to Chriſtians, long after their deceaſe. (W. and B.) See the notes on Gal. i. 8. and Eph. iv. 5.

Crept in unawares.] Pareiſeduſan. This Greek word ſignifies a crafty entrance. They came not by the door into the ſheep-fold, but climb'd up ſome other way: They came not in the day, but in the night, like thieves; like wolves in ſheep's cloathing, or like caterpillars to devour the vineyard of Chriſt. (Otes) See the notes on John x. 1, &c. Acts xx. 28, &c. Gal. ii. 4. and 2 Tim. iii. 6.

Ordained to this condemnation.] The proper rendring of the Greek here is not, "who were before of old ordained to this condemnation," but, of whom it was before written, or propheſied, that this ſhould be their condemnation, or puniſhment. The opinion therefore of thoſe, who think that God has ordained the much greater part of mankind to deſtruction, even before they had a being, can receive no confirmation from this place. This notion is ſo contrary to the holineſs, goodneſs and juſtice of God, that a man cannot think of it without horror. But, it no way impeaches the Divine perfections, to ſay, that God had appointed ſuch ſinners, as are here deſcribed, to puniſhment. Condemnation and puniſhment have reſpect to ſin. If therefore men will uſe the grace, and accept of the terms offer'd to them in the Goſpel; if they will turn from their ſins, and live a new life, they may be ſure, that no decree of God's will exclude them from ſalvation, nor will they be in danger of being condemn'd and puniſh'd. (Fox) Thus it is, that ſome ancient and very good expoſitors underſtand, that theſe are ſaid here to be progegrammenoi: A ſenſe manifeſtly true, and leſs liable to exception, than that very harſh one, which applies the word to an abſolute decree, by which both the crime and the puniſhment of thoſe men was pre-determin'd inevitably by Almighty God. (Stanh.) And thus it is accordingly interpreted alſo by Beza, Hammond, Whitby, Burkitt, and Wall. See Hammond and Whitby at large on the text, and the notes on Rom. viii. 29, &c. and ix. 15, &c. Gal. iii. 1. Eph. i. 4. 2 Tim. i, 9. and 2 Pet. iii. 2.

Ungodly men.] See the notes on Rom. i. 20, &c. and iii. 18. and Phil. iii. 17.

Turning the grace of God into laſciviouſneſs.] That is, ſo perverting the doctrine of the Goſpel, as to teach, that it even countenances and encourages laſciviouſneſs. (G. and Wells) This points at the Nicolaitanes, Gnoſticks, and other impure Hereticks, which ſprang from Simon Magus (the Leviathan of the Primitive Church!) who made the doctrine of the free grace of God, diſcover'd in the Goſpel, a cloke for their looſeneſs and laſciviouſneſs; and pleaded for community of women, as a privilege, which ought not to be refus'd to our ſpecies, ſince nature had indulg'd other creatures in promiſcuous mixtures. (Stillingf. Stanh. W. and B.) And the word aſelgeia, here rendred laſciviouſneſs, is remarkable, as being deriv'd from a and ſelge, the name of a city, between Galatia and Cappodocia; whether we underſtand it, with ſome, that the inhabitants were famous for their modeſty and temperance, and therefore make the alpha a privative, to denote thoſe who have no ſuch virtues; (Euſtath. Aretine, and Otes) Or, with others, that the inhabitants of that city were, on the contrary, moſt infamous for all manner of lewdneſs and debauchery, and ſo make the alpha to be intenſive, as dilating and increaſing the ſenſe, even to a proverb. (Pliny, Suid. Junius, Minſh. and Leigh) See the notes on Rom. xiii. 13. Gal. v. 13, 16, &c. James v. 5. 1 Pet. iv. 1, &c. 2 Pet. ii. 14. and 1 John v. 21.

Denying the only Lord.] The Greek words, in our copies, are Ton monon deſpoten Theon kai Kyrion hemon Jeſoun Chriſton arnoumenoi; which is literally, denying our only Maſter, God, and Lord, Jeſus Chriſt. But, becauſe, in the King's MS. the word (Theon) God is left out, there is ſome doubt, whether this paſſage is to be underſtood of Jeſus Chriſt alone, or of God the Father alſo. If (Theon) God, be not taken as part of the text, then the whole period will belong to Jeſus Chriſt alone, as denoting him to be our only Maſter and Lord; referring to his great work of our redemption, by which he thus purchas'd us unto himſelf, to be his peculiar ſervants. But, if (Theon) God, be taken as part of it, then the doubt is, which of theſe two ſenſes is to be affix'd to it. For, 1. It may be rendred literally, as before, to denote thoſe ſeveral attributes of Jeſus Chriſt, that he is our only Maſter, our only God, and our only Lord. And this, being underſtood in the Catholic ſenſe of the ancient Fathers and councils, is a moſt Divine truth, that Chriſt is our Maſter, by title and redemption, and our only Maſter; not excluding God the Father, and God the Holy Ghoſt, (for, as he and his Father are one; ſo he and the Holy Ghoſt are one alſo,) but all other pretenders; ſuch as Simon, who thus aſſum'd to himſelf, to be truly, that which (he ſaid) Chriſt only appear'd to be here on earth: And ſo, in like manner, and in the ſame way of interpretation, That Chriſt is our only God, and our only Lord. And this interpretation proceeds upon that way of punctation which is ordinarily retain'd in our copies; no comma after (Theon) God, but all read in one coherent ſenſe, thus, Our only Maſter God and Lord Jeſus Chriſt. But, 2. Another rendring may poſſibly belong to it, in caſe there were, or ought to be, a comma after (Theon) God. For then, (Theon) God, being ſeparated, by the comma, from that which follows, would denote God the Father, and conſequently (ton monon deſpoten) the only maſter, muſt belong to Him; which if it do, then it muſt be affirm'd of thoſe Gnoſtic Hereticks, (the followers and worſhippers of Simon) that they did deny God the Father, our only Maſter, as well as they denied our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And indeed we read of him, that he aſſum'd to be that God who appear'd to Moſes on mount Sinai; and accordingly the ſtatue was erected to him at Rome: And that is the meaning of "exalting himſelf above all that is called God," 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. and of what Irenæus ſays of him, that he affirm'd himſelf to be the ſublimeſt virtue, that is, Him who is the Father above all things, and that the Jews God was one of his Angels, &c. (H.) And this latter ſenſe is preferr'd by Dr. Whitby, viz. That our verſion, which puts a comma after God, is without juſt exception; and that Simon Magus and his followers, denied both God the Father, and God the Son. See the notes on Matth. x. 33. Luke xii. 9. Rom. i. 16. 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. 2 Pet. ii. 3. and iii. 4.

Put you in remembrance.] In this and the following verſes, the Apoſtle, to deter them from following the pernicious ways of theſe ſeducers, ſets before them the ſeveral examples of God's judgments inflicted in former times, upon perſons guilty of ſuch crimes, as theſe ſeducers were ſtigmatiz'd for, and guilty of: 1. That of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, who periſh'd through unbelief, after they had been "ſaved out of the land of Egypt," ver. 5. 2. That of the apoſtate Angels, who, for their rebellion againſt God, were thrown down from Heaven, and are reſerv'd "unto the judgment of the great day," ver. 6. And, 3. That of Sodom and Gomorrha, Adma and Zeboim, who "giving themſelves over to" uncleanneſs and unnatural luſts, were, in an extraordinary manner deſtroy'd by fire from Heaven, ver. 7. (B.) Which three examples of terror anſwer to thoſe three, which are given by St. Peter, 2 Pet. ii. 4, 5, 6. Only, inſtead of that of "the old world," deſtroy'd by the flood, St. Jude has here made uſe of one which is often inſiſted on by St. Paul; viz. That of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs. (Wall) See the notes on Phil. iii. 1. and iv. 8. and 2 Pet. i. 12. and thoſe here next following.

Tho' ye once knew this.] Or rather, Tho' ye knew this before: For ſo the word hapax ſeems to import alſo, ver. 3. And ſo it is uſed by the LXX. in Judg. xvi. 20. and xx. 31. Or elſe it may be rendred, fully, plainly, or certainly, according to Phavorinus and Suidas; and ſo it anſwers to the Hebrew achatz, or achad, which the Seventy render hapax. (W.) He conceiveth, that, being Chriſtians, they were not ignorant of God's judgments recorded in the Scriptures, (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Pet. i. 12.

Saved the people.] That is, the Iſraelites; whom he does not need to name, to thoſe who were converſant in the Scriptures. But he mentions their being thus "ſaved out of the land of Egypt" (as he does alſo the firſt happy ſtate of Angels, ver. 6.) to make the judgments more remarkable. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Hebr. iii. 7, &c.

Deſtroyed them that believed not.] That is, them who continued not in the faith and obedience to God. (Wells) See the notes on John iii. 18. xii. 37, &c. and xx. 27. Rom. x. 15. 1 Cor. x. 5, &c. 2 Cor. iv. 4. 2 Theſſ. ii. 11. 1 Tim. i. 13. Hebr. iii. 8, &c. iv. 2. x. 22. and xi. 4, &c.

And the Angels.] See the notes on Luke x. 18. Eph. iv. 12. 2 Pet. ii. 4. and Rev. xii. 7.

Kept not their firſt eſtate.] Archen; that is, their principality. (Mede, Aſſ. H. and Fox) Government was firſt inſtituted in Heaven; and the firſt ſin was the revolt of Lucifer, and his rebellious angels, to the diſturbance of that hierarchy appointed by God. (Leſl.)

Reſerved in everlaſting chains.] See the notes on Acts xvii. 31. Hebr. vi. 4, &c. and x. 26. 2 Pet. ii. 4. and iii. 7, 10. and 1 John v. 16.

Sodom and Gomorrha.] See the notes on Luke xvii. 29.

In like manner.] Ton homoion toutois tropon; "In like manner" as theſe do: So that, to the Gnoſtic Hereticks here deſcrib'd, he ſeems to impute Sodomitical practices; as indeed the Fathers, a little after this time, generally do. (Wall) And that the Nicolaitans were notoriouſly guilty of the ſame, may be prov'd from Irenæus, Clemens of Alexandria, the Conſtitutions Apoſtolical, Epiphanius, and others. (W.)

Going after ſtrange fleſh.] That is, carried away with filthy and unnatural luſt, toward thoſe of their own ſex. (Hall) Whence that ſin hath the name of Sodomy. (Aſſ) See the notes on Rom. i. 27.

Set forth for an example.] Not for imitation; but to inſtruct others, to beware of the like ſins, leſt they periſh as they did. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. xi. 22. and 1 Cor. x. 11.

Suffering the vengeance.] Or rather, as Grotius obſerves, a reſemblance of the eternal fire. God, who might have ſhew'd Hell open, and wicked men thrown into it, did, at that time, ſhew a reſemblance of it on earth. (G. W. Wall, and Wells) And made thoſe ſhowers of fire and brimſtone, which were not quenched, till they had utterly laid waſte and deſtroy'd the country and inhabitants, an image of the laſt conflagration, and impreſs'd upon that whole country indelible marks of Divine vengeance. (Blackw.)

Of eternal fire.] That the duration of the puniſhment of the wicked in the future ſtate will be eternal, is plainly deliver'd in the New Teſtament. But, ſince it has been objected againſt this, that it is not conſiſtent with the goodneſs and juſtice of God to puniſh finite and temporary ſins with eternal puniſhment, I think it proper to ſay ſomething on this ſubject, tho' I can't enter far into it here. I'm firmly perſwaded, that God neither can, nor will, do any thing inconſiſtent with his goodneſs and juſtice: But, that the annexing eternal puniſhments, as a part of the ſanction of his laws, is inconſiſtent with theſe attributes, is not ſo evident to me, and will lie upon thoſe to prove who affirm it. Every thinking man will, upon a thorough examination, find, that the laws of God are holy, juſt, and good; that an obligation to obey them, ariſes from the reaſon and nature of things; and that they are for the advantage and good of thoſe to whom they are given. It is likewiſe evident in fact, that a leſs penalty would not have been ſufficient to have deterr'd ſinners from the breach of them; becauſe many are not deterr'd even by the conſideration of eternal puniſhments. And why may not God inforce his laws by what penalties he pleaſes? Does he any injury to his creatures, by requiring them to conſult their own intereſt, and to provide for their own happineſs, by the ſtrongeſt motives? Are not ſinners acquainted beforehand, what will be the conſequence of their diſobedience to, and contempt of, his laws? They may therefore chuſe, whether they will incur this dreadful penalty or not. But, if neither intereſt nor duty, if neither the love of God, nor the love of themſelves, will prevail with them, they can only blame themſelves, when this dreadful puniſhment comes upon them. Beſides, If thoſe who live wickedly and die impenitently, will for ever continue in that ſtate, it cannot then be ſaid, that they are puniſh'd only for finite and temporary ſins. Should this be the caſe (and I do not ſee, how it can be prov'd that it will not) the objection loſes all its ſeeming force, and comes to nothing. The beſt and ſafeſt way will be, to drop all diſputes, which cannot do either ourſelves or others any good, and to uſe our utmoſt care and diligence to avoid theſe puniſhments. This, if we do, we may depend upon ſuch a meaſure of Divine aſſiſtance, as will effectually enable us, not only to eſcape them, but to obtain an eternal and moſt glorious reward, in the kingdom and preſence of God; for which much leſs pains will be ſufficient, than men take to ruin and deſtroy themſelves.

I am perſwaded, that the more attentively any one conſiders the New Teſtament, and what God has done to ſave ſinners from eternal deſtruction, the more he will be convinc'd of the uncertainty of thoſe arguments which are commonly advanc'd againſt the eternal duration of future puniſhments. (Fox) See Dr. Hammond and Dr. Whitby on this text at large, and the notes on Mark ix. 43. And for a more particular diſcuſſion of this important point, ſee the ſeveral ſermons of Archbp. Tillotſon, Mr. Lupton, and Mr. Luke Milbourne, on Matth. xxv. 46.

Theſe filthy dreamers.] Who are carried away with their own giddy fancies, and idle dreams, inſtead of God's truth. (Hall, H. and B.)

Defile the fleſh, &c.] This character of the impoſtors refers to that of the men of Sodom: as the other of deſpiſing dominion, &c. refers to that of the fallen angels. (Wells) See the notes on 1 Cor. vi. 18.

Deſpiſe dominion.] In the parallel place, 2 Pet. ii. 10. St. Peter uſes the phraſe kyriotetos cataphremountas, which we tranſlate them who deſpiſe government, or dominion, ſetting their minds, all their prudentials and politicks, againſt lawful government and dignities, in the dimunition and deriſion of them: And here, St. Jude uſeth the word athetouſi, which ſignifies not only a rejection, as Beza, and others, interpret it, but an annihilation of government, making nothing of it; as if they would, if they could, either reduce it into nothing, or (which is worſe) a democratical chaos and confuſion. (Whitf.) And this their deſpiſing, or ſcornful behaviour towards their ſuperiors, may refer to their doctrine of Chriſtian Liberty; as if Chriſtians were free from all authority of Maſter or King! (H.) See Mr. J. Whitfield's ſermon on this text, 1682. and the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 22. Gal. v. 1. 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. 1 Tim. vi. 1, &c. and 1 Pet. ii. 13, &c.

And ſpeak evil of dignities.] Doxas de blaſphemouſi. Dignities, that is, Princes, ſays Beza; and that with this addition, ſet off and illuſtrated with the moſt Auguſt Majeſty. Theſe are they whom he makes the dignities and dominions here; and whom he calls an Order conſtituted by God himſelf. So he owns the Divine right of monarchy, according to that of St. Paul and St. Peter, the Imperial Powers then in being. Theſe even he could not but grant to be of a celeſtial origin; of Divine, not human inſtitution. So far we have him with us: And happy for him, if here he could have held, and been conſiſtent with himſelf. But he is preſently off again; and will have governments, or dignities, to be Senators, a college of medly-magiſtrates, in French Seignieurs; to bring in his beloved Lay-Elders within the character of theſe dominions. Eſthius flies higher, and would transfer it to Angels, the Heavenly Powers, the better to evade all earthly; wherein, Enthuſiaſt-like, Papiſt and Schiſmatic, the foxes and firebrands, are link'd together. (Whitf.) For a more critical account of this, ſee Dr. Hammond on the place; and likewiſe the notes on Rom. xiii. 1, &c. 1 Cor. xii. 28. Eph. i. 21. Col. i. 16. 1 Tim. ii. 1, &c. Tit. iii. 2. 1 Pet. ii. 13, &c. and 2 Pet. ii. 10.

Michael, the archangel.] The argument here lies thus, from the greater to the leſs. If Michael, an archangel, ſo excellent in nature, ſo high in office, contending with Satan, an impure ſpirit, yet uſed great modeſty, without the leaſt indecency of expreſſion towards him, Who and what are thoſe who deſpiſe dominion, and dare to ſpeak evil of digitnies? Whence we may learn, That it is our duty, not to give railing or reviling language, to the worſt adverſary, in the beſt cauſe; becauſe it proceeds from pride and paſſion, and is ſo contrary to the temper and deſign of Chriſtianity; and much more, to watch againſt the ſins of the tongue, with reſpect to our governors and ſuperiors; remembring that it is written, "Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the ruler of thy people." (Beza, Ores, Aſſ. H. and B.) Where note alſo, 1. That the ground or occaſion of this diſpute is generally thought to be, That when Moſes was dead, the Lord ſent an Angel to take away his body, ſo that "no man knoweth of his ſepulchre unto this day," Deut. xxxiv. 6. And that this was done, that the Jews ſhould have no occaſion of idolatry, who, if they had found him, would probably have worſhipp'd him; and that the Devil would have had the body diſcover'd, but the Angel withſtood him, for the avoiding of that occaſion of idolatry. (Bp. Alley, Bp. Hall, Ores, Aſſ. and Wells) And, 2. That this ſtory, tho' no where extant in the Holy Scriptures, is ſuppos'd to be taken out of a Jewiſh Apocryphal writing, call'd The Diſmiſſion, or carrying away, of Moſes, mention'd by ſome of the Greek Fathers, under the title of (Anabaſis Moſeos) The Aſcenſion of Moſes, in which this preface was upon record. Nor is it any more a wonder, that St. Jude ſhould cite this, than that St. Paul ſhould put down Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. iii. 8. for the two magicians of Egypt, who oppoſed Moſes; which he muſt either derive from Tradition, or fetch out of ſome uncanonical author of thoſe times; there being no mention of their names in Moſes his relation of that matter. But, be theſe paſſages from whence they will, 'tis enough for us, that the Spirit of God has made them authentic, and conſecrated them part of the Holy Canon. (Ores, Cave, and Fleury) See the notes on ver. 14. Matth. v. 22, 44. Luke xvi. 25. and xxiii. 40. Rom. xiv. 19. 1 Cor. iv. 12. 2 Tim. iii. 8. Hebr. xii. 14. and 2 Pet. ii. 11.

But theſe ſpeak evil.] Obſerve here, 1. Their ſin; "Theſe ſpeak evil of thoſe things which they know not;" viz. Reviling dignities and magiſtrates, the uſefulneſs and neceſſity of whom they knew not; poſſibly alſo condemning the myſteries of the Chriſtian faith, which they underſtood not, notwithſtanding they call'd themſelves Gnoſticks, as pretending to greater meaſures of knowledge than other men. Nay moreover, they abuſed the knowledge they had, and acted contrary to it; corrupting and defiling themſelves in thoſe things which they knew naturally, or by the law of nature, to be ſinful even "as brute beaſts," purſuing and indulging themſelves in ſenſual pleaſures. (H. B. and Wells) And, 2. The ſource and original of all this; viz. Ignorance and Atheiſm. (Whitf.) See the notes on Rom. i. 21, &c.

Wo unto them.] They imitate Cain, in hating and murdering their brethren; Balaam, in time-ſerving, and adulterating the truth, for filthy lucre ſake; and Corah, in ſeditiouſly oppoſing both the magiſtracy and miniſtry. (Beza, Hall, H. B. Wall, and Wells) Theſe are the common motives which ſeparate Hereticks from the Church; viz. 1. Envy and jealouſy: 2. Avarice: And, 3. Pride and ambition. And theſe are not vices of the author of ſects and ſchiſms only: Would to God, that we ſaw no examples of them in the boſom of the Church! (Q.) See Dr. Hammond's notes, and Dr. Stillingfleet's ſermon, 1668. on this text; and the notes on Luke xii. 15, &c. Eph. iv. 14. 1 Tim. vi. 9. Jam. v. 1, &c. 1 Pet. iv. 4. and 2 Pet. ii. 15, 18.

Spots in your feaſts of charity.] The Apoſtle having, in the foregoing verſe, ſet forth theſe ſeducers, by ſundry examples, here he proceeds to do the like by various ſimilitudes. (B.) No words could with more propriety and force repreſent the madneſs of debauch'd and blaſpheming Hereticks, than this noble paſſage: And particularly, nothing in God's creation beſides could have ſupplied ſo proper a metaphor, to expreſs the ungovernable inſolence, and filthy converſation of theſe Infidels, as that unruly element, which roars, and rages, and foams out mire and dirt to the ſhores. Admirable is the alluſion, betwixt the agitation of this boiſterous element, (the ſea) and the zeal and furious paſſion of thoſe vile impoſtors, who foam out, in ſuitable language, great ſwelling words of vanity, and expreſſions of the moſt deteſtable lewdneſs. No paraphraſe can reach this glorious text. (Blackw.) See the notes on Matth. xv. 13. 1 Cor. xi. 21. Eph. iv. 14. Phil. iii. 19. and 2 Pet. ii. 13, &c.

Enoch alſo, the ſeventh from Adam.] One great argument againſt the authority of this Epiſtle of old, as St. Jerome informs us, was its quoting this paſſage out of an Apocryphal book. The book here quoted, called the Apocalypſe of Enoch, was very early extant in the Church, frequently mention'd, and paſſages cited out of it, by Irenæus, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, and others, ſome of whom accounted it little leſs than canonical. But, what if our Apoſtle had it not out of that Apocryphal book, but from ſome prophecy, current from age to age, handed to him by common Tradition, or immediately reveal'd to him by the Spirit of God? But, ſuppoſe it taken out of that book going under Enoch's name, this makes nothing againſt the authority of this Epiſtle. Every thing is not falſe, that is contain'd in an Apocryphal and uncanonical writing; nor does the taking a ſingle teſtimony out of it any more infer the Apoſtle's approbation of all the reſt, than St. Paul's quoting a ſentence or two out of Menander, Aratus and Epimenides, imply, that he approv'd of all the reſt of the writings of thoſe Heathen poets. And indeed, nothing could be more fit and proper than this way, if we conſider, that the Apoſtle, in this Epiſtle, chiefly argues againſt the Gnoſticks, who mainly traded in ſuch traditionary and Apocryphal writings, and probably in this very book of Enoch. (Bp. Alley, Coſin, Aſſ. Cave, Du-pin, and Fleury)

Behold, the Lord cometh.] See the notes on Matth. xvi. 27. and xix. 28. and 2 Theſſ. i. 7, &c.

To convince all that are ungodly.] That is, to prove them not to be ſuch as they pretend; and to make them acknowledge the juſtice of their condemnation. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. xxv. 32, &c. and Luke xix. 22.

Murmurers, complainers.] That is, diſcontented with, and always complaining of their lot and preſent condition: Becauſe they had not ſo much as they deſired, they murmur'd againſt God, as if they had nothing. (B. Aſſ. and Wells) The Jews, of whom the Nicolaitans were a part, were notorious for their complaints againſt that providence which ſeem'd to neglect, and deal ſo hardly with, ſuch Zealots for God as they were; as may be ſeen in Joſephus de bello Jud. l. 7. c. 34. p. 990. (W.) See the notes on Matth. xx. 11. 1 Cor. x. 10. and Jam. v. 9.

Speaking great ſwelling words.] That is, of their own pretended knowledge and perfection. (Wells) This, Dr. Hammond refers to Simon Magus, exalting himſelf above all that is called God.

But hyperongka, being only proud ſwelling words, call'd by St. Peter, in the parallel place (hyperonga mataiotetos) "great ſwelling words of vanity," by which they "allured, through the luſts of the fleſh, through much wantonneſs, thoſe that were clean eſcaped from them who live in error," 2 Pet. ii. 18. I think, it may more probably refer to the words relating to their luſts. (W.) See the notes on 2 Pet. ii. 18.

Having mens perſons in admiration.] That is, they reſpected not godly wiſe men, but flatter'd great men in the world, to raiſe or enrich themſelves: and made the profeſſion of piety a matter of gain. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts x. 34. and 1 Tim. vi. 5.

Spoken before the of Apoſtles.] By this, Dr. Wall thinks, it ſhould ſeem, that the writer of this Epiſtle himſelf was not an Apoſtle: But it is more reaſonable to conclude, with the Aſſembly-men, that St. Jude being alive, when moſt of the other Apoſtles were dead, repeats their ſayings, that they might not die with them. (Aſſ.) See Mr. Hooker's two ſermons on this text, 1614.

There ſhould be mockers.] Meaning men who ſhould uſe religion as a cloke, to put on and off, as the weather ſerveth: Such as ſhould with Herod, hear the preaching of John the Baptiſt today, and to-morrow condeſcended to have him beheaded; or ſay, they would worſhip Chriſt, when they purpoſed a maſſacre in their hearts; or, with Judas, kiſs Chriſt, and anon betray him. (Hook.) See the notes on Phil. iii. 19. 2 Tim. iii. 1. and 2 Pet. iii. 3.

Who ſeparate themſelves.] Hoi apodiorizontes heautous. Of the Jewiſh Zealots we read, that they ſeparated, and withdrew from all who were not circumciſed, Acts xi. 3. and Gal. ii. 12. But of the Nicolaitans and Gnoſticks we read no ſuch thing; but rather that they aſſembled with the Chriſtian Jews in their feaſts of love, ver. 12. and 2 Pet. ii. 13. Apodiorizesthai therefore, as it reſpects them, may rather ſignify, that they diſtinguiſhed themſelves from others as, more perfect, and as (phyſei pneumaticoi) by nature ſpiritual; ſtyling all other Chriſtians (pſychicoi) animal men; which perhaps made the Apoſtle turn this character upon them, as being truly ſenſual perſons. (H. W. Wall, and Wells) They did not totally ſeparate; but were occaſional communicants. (Wall) Admiration of mens perſons, and ſelf-conceit, ſelf-ſeeking, and pride, are the moſt general cauſes of Schiſmatical ſeparation: Whereas he who loves God will fear to break the unity and peace of the Church, (Jenk.) See Mr. William Jenkyn's ſermon on this text; and the notes on John xv. 4, &c. Acts xi. 2. and xx. 30. Rom. viii. 6, &c. and xvi. 17. 1 Cor. i. 12. ii. 14. iii. 3, &c. and xiii. 1, &c. 2 Cor. vi. 17. Eph. ii. 20. and iv. 3, &c. Hebr. x. 25. and 1 John ii. 19.

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. But ye, beloved, building up yourſelves on your moſt holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghoſt. Keep yourſelves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto eternal life. And of ſome have compaſſion, making a difference: And others ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment ſpotted by the fleſh. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to preſent you faultleſs before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy. To the only wiſe God our Saviour, be glory and majeſty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

Building up yourſelves.] This phraſe is not neceſſarily confin'd to each man's care of his own faith, but to the mutual aſſiſtances extended to the increaſing that of one another. But eſpecially, if we conſider the immediate occaſion of this counſel, and the ill practices to which it ſtands oppoſed, the conſequence is evident, that unity and agreement is no leſs recommended, than ſoundneſs and full aſſurance in believing. (Stanh.) See Bp. Lake's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Acts ix. 31. 1 Cor. iii. 9, 10. 2 Cor. v. 1. Eph. ii. 20. and iii. 17. Col. ii. 7. Hebr. iii. 6. and 1 Pet. ii. 4.

Praying in the Holy Ghoſt.] That is, not putting up ſuch faint petitions as fleſh and blood ſuggeſteth, but ſuch fervent ones as God's Spirit putteth into us. (Aſſ.) With holy reverence, with humble confidence, with fervent importunity, and with thoſe holy affections and deſires which the Spirit of God exciteth in us. The concurrence of the Holy Spirit is neceſſary both to aſſiſtance and acceptance in prayer: It enables us to pray in faith and love, with ſincerity and importunity: But, without the Spirit, there is no acceptable praying; and without prayer, vain is the pretence to the Spirit. (B.) Yet, howſoever prayer is attributed to the Spirit, it is a work of the whole Trinity. For the Holy Ghoſt frameth our requeſts, the Son offereth them up to his Father, and the Father accepteth them thus fram'd and offer'd up. (Otes) "The Holy Ghoſt," in the New Teſtament, always ſignifies ſome afflatus, or chariſma, of the Spirit. And, ſince the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt cannot here well be underſtood; it ſeems to follow, that the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh of that gift of prayer, which, by the Holy Ghoſt, was conferr'd upon them in their public aſſemblies, and Chriſtian exerciſes; where they pray'd by the Spirit, 1 Cor. xiv. 15. and ſpake to "one another in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs," being fill'd with the Spirit, Eph. v. 18, 19. and Col. iii. 16. And ſo this paſſage is interpreted by Oecumenius, and Dr. Hammond. (W.) But withal, we muſt obſerve, with Dr. Hammond, That when thoſe extraordinary chariſmata ceas'd, 'tis clear, there was need of ſomewhat elſe to ſupply that place: And that would not be, in any reaſon, to let every man pray as he would; (for the preventing of which, and the ill conſequences of it, the chariſma euches, or gift of prayer, had before been given) but ſett, prepar'd forms, for the daily conſtant uſes; and thoſe provided by the governors of the Church, Apoſtolical men, who had benefited under the prayers of thoſe who had the chariſma, or gift, and remember'd ſome forms of theirs, or at leaſt the method and manner uſed by them. And this is the original of liturgies among Chriſtians. (H.) See the notes on Matth. vi. 9, &c. Luke xi. 1, &c. Rom. viii. 26. 1 Cor. xiv. 15. Eph. v. 19. 1 Tim. ii. 8. Hebr. x. 25. and Jam. v. 13.

Keep yourſelves in the love.] That is, in godly charity and concord; which alone can ſecure to us the continuance of the Divine Favour, and is a neceſſary evidence of our loving God. (Stanh.) See the notes on Matth. xxii. 37. Luke xi. 42. John xiii. 34. and xiv. 21, &c. Acts iv. 32. Rom. viii. 28. and xiii. 8, &c. 1 Cor. i. 10. xiii. 1, &c. and xvi. 22. Gal. v. 6, 22. Phil. iv. 8. Col. iii. 14. 1 Tim. i. 5. 2 Pet. i. 5, &c. and 1 John iii. 17. and iv. 7, &c.

Looking for the mercy.] If not in delivering you from your preſent calamities, yet in preſerving you to eternal life. (Wells) See the notes on John xiv. 2. and xvii. 3. Rom. vi. 23. and viii. 18, 30. 1 Cor. ii. 9. and xv. 19. 2 Cor. v. 1. and xii. 4. 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. Hebr. xii. 2. and 2 Pet. iii. 4, 13.

Having compaſſion, making a difference.] In this verſe, and the next, the Apoſtle directs them how to carry themſelves towards thoſe who were ſeduced, in order to their recovery; viz. 1. He adviſes to Chriſtian lenity and gentleneſs, to compaſſion and tenderneſs, towards ſome; that is, to weak, ſimple, ſeduced perſons, who are of a more flexible and tender nature than others. And theſe are to be admoniſh'd of their duty gently, and with compaſſion: For tho' reproofs are to be given to back-ſliders, yet they muſt be given without aſperity; our words muſt have bowels in them, and proceed not from paſſion, but pity. But, 2. Others, who are more entangled, corrupted, and hardned in their errors, as the ſeducers themſelves commonly are, muſt be terrified with the fear of God's judgments and wrath, and by ſharp admonitions and cenſures, recover'd (if poſſible) out of their errors, as Lot was ſnatch'd "out of the fire" of Sodom. For there is a time, when ſeverity is not only uſeful, but abſolutely neceſſary; yet neceſſity muſt be the occaſion of that ſeverity: Lenity muſt be firſt uſed; and, when that fails, then ſeverity muſt ſucceed. (Beza, Otes, Hall, Aſſ. Cartwr. and B.) Where note alſo, 1. That the Alexandrian, and ſome other Greek Manuſcripts, as alſo the Vulgar, Syriac, and Ethiopic Verſions, read it thus, (elenchete diacrinomenous) ſome being, wavering, rebuke. (H. W. Wall and Wells) 2. That diacrinomenoi never ſignifies "making a difference" (tho' diacrinontes does) but generally wavering, doubting, or heſitating. (H. and Wall) And, 3. That the expreſſion of "hating even the garment ſpotted by the fleſh," is a proverbial phraſe, ſignifying the abhorrency, which we ought to have, of any the leaſt degree of uncleanneſs; in alluſion to the prohibited, unclean garments of the leprous perſon, Lev. xiii. 47. (Beza, Cartwr. and W.) But then, 4. This text can yield no argument againſt the uſe of our ceremonies, till it be prov'd, that there is ſome defilement or impurity in the uſe of them. (W.) See Bp. Taylor's, and Bp. Cartwright's, ſermons on this text; and the notes on Matth. x. 16. xii. 20. and xviii. 15, &c. John iii. 16. Acts viii 20, &c. xiii. 10. and xxvi. 18. The END of the General Epiſtle of St. JUDE.

ANNOTATIONS

REVELATION

St. John the Divine.

BEFORE I proceed to the Book here following, I muſt beg the reader's patience, whilſt I lay before him, as briefly as may be, the following particulars, by way of Preface; viz.

i. That the name, or title, of it will be explain'd, in the notes on chap. i. 1.

ii. That tho' the Author, or Penman, of it, tho' by ſome perſons formerly doubted of (but that chiefly owing to the miſtaken notion of the Millennium, of which I ſhall ſpeak ſomewhat at large, on chap. xx. 4.) Yet, being now generally agreed upon, according to the joint teſtimony of Juſtin Martyr, Irenæus, Theophilus of Antioch, Melito, Apollonius, Clemens of Alexandria, and Tertullian, all living in the next century after the Apoſtles, we can't doubt of his being St. John the Divine, that is, the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt; of whom I don't ſee any thing neceſſary to be added here, to what I have already obſerv'd, in the reſpective Prefaces to his Goſpel and Epiſtles: Only, that he is thought to have been call'd (Theologos) the Divine, with a particular regard to theſe words of his, in the beginning of his Goſpel, Theos en ho Logos. See the notes on ch. i. 1.

iii. That the place where it was written, is not to be doubted of; ſince the Author himſelf tells us, ch. i. 9, &c. that, when he was commanded to write this, he "was in the iſle called Patmos." But,

iv. The time of writing it, is not ſo well agreed upon. That it was written before either his Goſpel or Epiſtles, is generally acknowledged; and that (as is commonly ſuppos'd) toward the latter end of the reign of Domitian; viz. A. D. 96. Of which opinion I find Bp. Alley, Bp. Coſin, Dr. Cave, Mr. Du-Pin, Mr. Burkitt, Dr. Wells, Mr. Fox, and Mr. Fleury. But Dr. Hammond uſeth many arguments, to prove, that this book was written before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and that St. John was baniſh'd to Patmos ſo early as the reign of Claudius; with whom agrees Sir Iſaac Newton in the main, tho' he does not reckon St. John's baniſhment to Patmos earlier than the 12*th year of Nero.*

v. That the perſons to whom this Revelation was addreſs'd, will be declar'd in the notes on ch. i. 4. As the end and deſign of it will be diſcover'd on ver. 1.

vi. That the ſubject of it contains frequent viſions and prophetical repreſentations, by which he had a clear ſcheme and proſpect of the ſtate and condition of Chriſtianity, in the future periods and ages of the Church. And, beſides the prophetical part of this book, there is ſuch a ſpirit of holineſs breathing through it, the main articles of the Chriſtian Faith ſo clearly and plainly held forth in it, and many religious and moral duties ſo ſtrictly injoin'd by it, that it is the unqueſtionable duty of the Miniſters of God to ſtudy this book, with that modeſty and ſobriety which becomes them as inquirers; and likewiſe the people's duty to give themſelves to the reading it, with fervent prayer, and a ſimplicity of heart, to be guided and directed by it, as becomes learners.

vii. That the difficulty of underſtanding theſe prophecies, is confeſs'd on all hands. In conſideration of which we are told, that Scaliger was pleas'd to ſay of Calvin, That he was wiſe becauſe he did not write upon the Revelation: And Dr. Whitby confeſſeth, that, for want of wiſdom, he has not thought fit to give us any paraphraſe and commentary on this book (as he has done on all the reſt) but only a particular diſcourſe, or treatiſe, on that part of it which relates to the Millennium. And even Dr. Hammond declares, That he came to it, at firſt, as to a rock which many had miſcarried and ſplit upon, with a full reſolution, not to venture on the expounding one word of it, but only to review the tranſlation; tho' he afterwards chang'd his mind, and enlarg'd upon it, to a great length. How well he has ſucceeded in that attempt, I dare not take upon me to pronounce; being ſenſible, that I have much more reaſon to decline it, than any of thoſe gentlemen. Nevertheleſs, ſince this book is a part of the Sacred Canon, the difficulty of underſtanding it, is no good argument for never attempting to underſtand it; and much leſs, for ridiculing all ſuch attempts, (as many do) in ſuch a manner as, how much ſoever it may ſavour of human wit, ſavours little, or rather nothing, of godly wiſdom: *And eſpecially, ſince God, to prevent us from making any ſuch wrong inferences, and to encourage us to the ſtudy of this inſpired, tho' difficult book, has, in the very beginning thereof, expreſs'd a "*bleſſing to him that readeth, and to them that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep thoſe things which are written therein," ch. i. 3. it deſerves moſt ſeriouſly to be conſider'd: And therefore I ſhall, with God's bleſſing, adventure upon it; tho' I ſhall not preſume, farther than to lay fairly before the reader ſuch notes, as ſeem to me beſt vouch'd, and moſt probably ſuitable to the matter in hand, with references to the reſt, as occaſion requires.

CHAP. I.

St. John writes his Revelation to the ſeven Churches of Aſia, ſignified here by the ſeven golden candleſticks; aſſuring them of Chriſt's coming in glory, and reminding them of his omnipotence and eternity, and withal, giving them an hiſtorical account of his firſt verſion.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. THE Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, which God gave unto him, to ſhew unto his ſervants things which muſt ſhortly come to paſs; and he ſent and ſignified it by his angel unto his ſervant John; who bare record of the word of God; and of the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, and of all things that he ſaw. Bleſſed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep thoſe things which are written therein, for the time is at hand.

The Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt.] So call'd, becauſe it contains an account of things which were reveal'd to this Apoſtle by Jeſus Chriſt. John had all the viſions and revelations of this book from the Angel, the Angel had them from Jeſus Chriſt, and Jeſus Chriſt had them from his Father. (Hickes) Revelations from God were ſometimes by viſion, ſometimes by voice, and ſometimes by dreams. This Revelation, which St. John had, was of a mix'd nature; partly by viſion, and partly by voice. Chriſt, as God, knew all things from eternity: But, as Man and Mediator, he receiv'd his revelation from God the Father, and imparted it by the Angel to his ſervant John. We ſee then, that Chriſt, even in his ſtate of exaltation, continues to execute his prophetic office, by revealing to his ſervants the mind and will of God. (Aſſ. B. and Wells) See the notes on Matth. xi. 25. John v. 20. and xvi. 12. 1 Cor. ii. 9. 2 Cor. xii. 1. Gal. i. 1. and 1 John i. 1.

Which muſt ſhortly come to paſs.] That is, which were to commence then ſhortly; but to proceed thence forward, in a conſtant and continued courſe, to the world's end. (Aſſ.) Not that they ſhould all be immediately perform'd, but in God's time; in reſpect of whoſe eternity, a thouſand years are but as one day. (B.) Dr. Hammond, for divers reaſons, concludes from theſe words, That the things foretold and repreſented in the enſuing viſions, were preſently, ſpeedily, to come to paſs, one after another, after the writing them, and belong'd to thoſe times then immediately enſuing, and had their completion accordingly. But Dr. Wells thinks, the true import of this expreſſion, and of the like elſewhere, may be beſt learn'd from Iſa. lx. 22. Whence we may infer, that by God's haſtening, or coming quickly, or things ſhortly coming to paſs, is not to be underſtood a preſent, or immediate accompliſhment of the things ſpoken of, but their accompliſhment in their proper times or ſeaſons, without any intervening delay, or alteration of the Divine purpoſe. The folly of interpreters (as the learned Sir Iſaac Newton well obſerves) has been to foretell times and things by this prophecy, as if God deſign'd to make them Prophets. By this raſhneſs they have not only expos'd themſelves, but brought the prophecy alſo into contempt. The deſign of God was much otherwiſe. He gave this, and the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, not to gratiſy men's curioſity, by enabling them to foreknow things, but that, after they were fulfill'd, they might be interpreted by the event; and his own providence, not the interpreters, be then manifeſted thereby to the world: For, the events of things, predicted many ages before, will then be a convincing argument, that the world is govern'd by providence.

Who bare record.] See the notes on John v. 30. viii. 18. xix. 35. and xxi. 24. 1 Cor. i. 6. ii. 1. 2 Pet. i. 16. and 1 John i. 1.

Bleſſed is he.] See the notes on Luke xi. 28. and Jam. i 25.

Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. John, to the ſeven Churches which are in Aſia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the ſeven ſpirits which are before his throne; and from Jeſus Chriſt, who is the faithful witneſs, and the firſt-begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth: Unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and prieſts unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye ſhall ſee him, and they alſo which pierced him: And all kindreds of the earth ſhall wail becauſe of him: Even ſo, Amen. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, ſaith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

To the ſeven Churches.] That is, to thoſe ſeven famous Churches, which are in the Leſſer Aſia; and, under their name, to all others, over the whole world. (Hall) See the notes on ver. 11.

Grace be unto you.] See the notes on Rom. i. 7.

From him which is.] Apo tou ho On, kai ho En, kai ho Erchomenos; From the who is, and who was, and who is to come, that is, The only true God, whoſe more peculiar name, in the Hebrew tongue, is Jehovah, and denotes his eternity. (Beza, Heinſ. Hall, H. and Wells) See the notes on John i. 1.

And from the ſeven ſpirits.] Some have expounded this, of the Holy Ghoſt, thus repreſented in reſpect of his ſeven-fold (that is, his manifold) graces communicated to the Church. But more probable is the opinion, that "the ſeven ſpirits" here ſpoken of, are the principal Angels, or Arch-angels, who ſtand and miniſter before the throne of God, and are the prime Miniſters of his providence; ſuch as Michael, Gabriel, &c. And therefore the Apoſtle prays for grace and peace from God the author and giver of it; "and from the ſeven ſpirits," as the inſtruments, whoſe miniſtry God thinks fit to make uſe of in the beſtowing thereof. (Mede, Wells and Fox) See Dr. Hammond at large on this text, to the ſame purpoſe; and Mr. Joſ. Mede's ſermon on Zech. iv. 10.

And from Jeſus Chriſt.] Note, 1. That Chriſt is here deſcrib'd according to his three-fold office of a Prophet, a Prieſt, and a King. His being call'd "the faithful witneſs," points out his prophetical office; that he is the great prophet of his Church, who reveals the will of his Father, fully and faithfully, to the ſons of men: His being ſtiled "the firſt-begotten of the dead," points out to his prieſtly office; intimating, that he died, and roſe again from the dead; that he firſt aroſe, or was "the firſt begotten" from the dead; that is, the firſt who aroſe from the dead, by his own power, to a ſtate of immortality, never to die more. Some indeed aroſe before him, but then they were raiſed by him; and others were raiſed from the dead (as Lazarus) before Chriſt, but then they died again: Whereas Chriſt himſelf aroſe from the dead, never to die more; he entred into a ſtate of immortality after his reſurrection and aſcenſion, and lives for ever to make interceſſion for us: And his being ſtiled "the prince of the kings of the earth" denotes his Regal office; ſhewing both his influence upon them, as giving laws and rules to them; and their dependence upon him, as receiving their power and government, their protection and dominion, all from his hand. (B.) 2. That tho' the Alexandrian, and ſome other Manuſcripts, as well as the Vulgar Latin, the Syriac, and Arabic Verſions, read it (ho prototocos ton necron) the firſt-born of the dead, (without the prepoſition ec) wherein they are follow'd by our Engliſh Tranſlators; (Wells and Wall) Yet, prototocos ec ton necron (as it is in moſt Greek copies) ſeems more likely to be the true reading; and ſo it ſhould have been tranſlated, as it is, Col. i. 18. "the firſt-born or, firſt-begotten, from the dead." (Wall) And, 3. That, when he is here call'd "the prince of the kings of the earth," this ſhould be a check to thoſe, who, becauſe our Saviour, in his humiliation, ſaid, his kingdom was not of this world, do maintain, that now, when he is exalted, and all power in Heaven and earth is given to him, yet he has not, or does not, manage any temporal dominion on earth. (Idem) See the notes on John viii. 14. Rom. viii. 29. and ix. 5. 1 Cor. xv. 20. Col. i. 18. and 1 John v. 20.

Unto him that loved us.] This is a text of degrees; and, like Solomon's throne, aſcendeth by ſix ſteps; 1. That God loved: For 'tis much, that God, out of himſelf, ſhould find any thing, that might be the object of his love. 2. That he choſe us to be the objects of his love. 3. That he loved us ſo well as to waſh us from our ſins. 4. That he waſh'd us not with the blood of bulls or of goats, but in his own blood. 5. That he waſh'd us ſo clean, as to prepare us for a ſacred unction, to ſuperinduce a new purity and dignity too, to make us Kings and Prieſts. And, 6. That he hath made us, not ordinary kings, and ordinary prieſts, but Kings and Prieſts to God his Father. For every one of which is due this doxology, "To him be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen." See Dr. Hammond at large on this text; and the notes on John xv. 13. Acts xx. 28. Behold, he cometh.] This text is, by moſt interpreters underſtood of Chriſt's coming to judgment, at the laſt day: But Dr. Hammond interprets it of his more immediately coming to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Even ſo; Amen.] Intimating, that the Saints, or Church of God, do expect and believe, that aſſuredly it will be ſo, and do earneſtly deſire and pray, that it may be ſo. (B.) The Apoſtle uſeth both the Greek word nai, and the Hebrew amen (which are of the ſame ſignification) becauſe theſe things equally concern the Jews and Gentiles. (G.) . See the notes on John xxi. 25.

I am Alpha, and Omega.] An alluſion to the Greek Alphabet; whereof Alpha is the firſt letter, and Omega the laſt. (Aſſ.) This is manifeſtly ſpoken of Chriſt, as appears from ver. 17. and chap. xxii. 16. and other texts. Whence 'tis evident, that the incommunicable attributes of eternity, and infinite power, are plainly and directly applied to Jeſus, the Son of God. (Tillotſ. Fox and Blackw.) See the notes on John i. 1. Rom. xi. 36. and Hebr. xiii. 8.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. I John, who alſo am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jeſus Chriſt, was in the iſle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt: And, What thou ſeeſt, write in a book, and ſend it unto the ſeven Churches of Aſia; unto Epheſus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea. And I turned to ſee the voice that ſpake with me. And being turned, I ſaw ſeven golden candleſticks; and in the midſt of the ſeven candleſticks, one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle: His head and his hairs were white like wool as white as ſnow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine braſs, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the ſound of many waters. And he had in his right hand ſeven ſtars: And out of his mouth a ſharp two-edged ſword: And his countenance was as the ſun ſhineth in his ſtrength. And when I ſaw him, I fell at his feet as dead: And he laid his right hand upon me, ſaying unto me, Fear not; I am the firſt and the laſt: I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death. Write the things which thou haſt ſeen, and the things which are, and the things which ſhall be hereafter. The myſtery of the ſeven ſtars which thou ſaweſt in my right hand, and the ſeven golden candleſticks. The ſeven ſtars are the angels of the ſeven Churches; and the ſeven candleſticks which thou ſaweſt, are the ſeven Churches.

I, John.] After the Preface in the foregoing verſes, the Apoſtle here begins the relation of his viſions.

Your brother, and companion.] See the notes on John i. 1. Acts xiv. 22. Rom. viii. 17. 1 Cor. i. 6. Phil. i. 5, &c and iv. 14. 2 Theſſ. iii. 5. 2 Tim. i. 8. and 1 John i. 1.

Was in the iſle that is called Patmos.] See the Preface.

I was in the Spirit.] In an holy ecſtaſy, or trance. (Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) See the notes on Acts x. 10. and 2 Cor. xii. 2, &c.

On the Lord's day.] See the notes on Acts xx. 7.

Behind me.] And therefore, the more unexpectedly. (G. Aſſ. and H.)

I am Alpha and Omega.] This voice muſt have been in the Greek language; no other language but that expreſſing the firſt and the laſt by theſe two letters of the alphabet. (Wall) See the notes on ver. 8.

Write in a book.] Note, 1. That this is the only book of the New Teſtament, which appears to have had a particular command for the writing it. (Wall) 2. That, being written by Chriſt's own direction, it is therefore warranted to be of Divine authority. And, 3. That what St. John was commanded to write, it behoves all Chriſtians carefully to read; all Scripture being written for our learning. (B.) See the Preface; and the notes on 2 Tim. iii. 16.

Unto the ſeven Churches.] Theſe ſeven were, at that time, very flouriſhing Churches, and favour'd with the ſpecial preſence and influence of Chriſt, as much as ever any Churches were: And the Apoſtle writes to them, as a ſort of types of all the Gentile Churches to the end of the world, and patterns which they were to take warning by; Chriſt hereby declaring, what all other Churches, offending and declining in the ſame manner, might expect. (Sharpe, and B.) For the reſpective Epiſtles to theſe Churches, and what relates to them more particularly, ſee the notes on the ſecond and third chapters.

To ſee the voice.] That is, him from whom the voice came. (Beza, G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells)

Seven golden candleſticks.] See the notes on ver. 20.

One like unto the Son of man.] That is, like Chriſt, the Son of God, in the reſemblance of a man, "clothed with a garment down to the foot," ſignifying the gravity and ſtate of a King or Prieſt; "girt about the paps with a golden girdle," ſignifying his readineſs to the gracious works of his mediatorſhip: "His head and hairs were white," as ſnow like wool, ſignifying the eternity of him who is the true ancient of days; "his eyes were as a flame of fire," ſignifying his ſearching knowledge and piercing inſight into all things; "his feet like unto fine braſs," burning in a furnace, ſignifying the purity of his proceedings, and his ſolid, invincible power, to tread down all his enemies; "and his voice as the ſound of many waters," ſignifying the loud diffuſion, and great power of his word: "He had in his hand, ſeven ſtars," ſignifying his ſure protection, and his wiſe, juſt, and beneficial diſpoſition of his faithful Miniſters in his Church; "out of his mouth went out a ſharp two-edged ſword," ſignifying his powerful word and doctrine; "and his countenance was as the ſun ſhineth in his ſtrength," ſignifying his glorious majeſty. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Q.) Where note further, 1. That this deſcription is, for the moſt part, taken from Dan. x. 5, 6 (Wells) 2. That the viſion here was not that of Chriſt himſelf, but (homoion hyio anthropou) "one like unto" him; that is, an Angel repreſenting Chriſt. (G. and H.) For Chriſt's human body was then, and ſtill is, in Heaven. (B.) 3. That, where he is ſaid to be "in the midſt of the ſeven candleſticks," it denotes Chriſt's preſence in the midſt of his Church, to enlighten, ſanctify, guide, and defend it. (G. Aſſ. B. and Q.) 4. That what is attributed to God, Dan. vii. 9. and Ezek. i. 27. is here likewiſe attributed to Chriſt. (G.) 5. That the word (chalcolibanos) which we tranſlate fine braſs, ſhould rather be rendred amber; agreeably to that of Ezek. i. 27. (H) 6. That the word of God is here compar'd to a "two-edged ſword," with reſpect to the Law and the Goſpel. (Heinſ.) And, 7. That, after that deſcription of Chriſt's feet being like unto burning braſs (or amber) to tread down and conſume his enemies, it ſweetly follows, that "his countenance was as the ſun," to cheer and cheriſh, to comfort and refreſh, his friends. (B.) See the notes on ver. 20. Matth. xviii. 20. and xxviii. 20. Luke xii. 35. Eph. vi. 14, 17. and Hebr. iv. 12.

The firſt and the laſt.] See the notes on ver. 4, 8, 11.

The keys of hell and of death.] That is, I have the abſolute power over "hell and death:" So as I can either command them for the juſt torment and puniſhment of wicked men, or diſcharge the penitent from the fear and danger of them. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) That perſon who fears men, forgets, that Jeſus Chriſt is the abſolute maſter of our life and of our death. (Q.) See Dr. Featly's ſermon on this text; and the notes on Matth. x. 28. and xvi. 18.

Write the things.] St. John is commanded to "write the things which" he had ſeen; viz. the viſion, ver. 12. &c. "and the things which are"; viz. the Epiſtles to the Seven Churches, then in being, ch. ii. and iii. "and the things which ſhall be hereafter;" viz. the prophecies of the time to come, ch. iv, &c. to the end of the book. (G. Aſſ. H. and Wells) See the Preface; and the notes on ver. 12. and ch. ii. 2, &c.

Stars are the Angels.] That is, do ſignify the ſeven Angels of the ſeven Churches; and the ſeven candleſticks are, that is, do ſignify the ſeven Churches; in like manner as the bread, in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, is Chriſt's body, that is, doth repreſent his body. (Aſſ. H. Sharpe, B. and Wells) Where note, 1. That "the Angels of the ſeven Churches" were their reſpective Biſhops, who had been firſt conſtituted there by this Apoſtle himſelf, and were afterwards ſucceeded by others in their order. (G. H. B. and Q.) And they are call'd here (Angeloi) Angels, becauſe they are ſent by God on his meſſages, and likewiſe to denote that unſpotted purity which ought to be with them, both in life and doctrine. (Aſſ. H. B. and Q.) And ſtars, becauſe a Biſhop ought to be like a ſtar, full of light, elevated above the earth, fix'd to his ſphere (which is his Church) inceſſantly moving in it, and continually diffuſing his influences below. (B. and Q.) And, 2. Whereas the Apoſtles were call'd "the light of the world," Matth. v. 14. becauſe they had relation to all nations, whom they had a commiſſion to teach, ch. xxviii. 19.

and therefore could not be ſo tied to any one place, as the ſucceeding Biſhops were; Theſe ſeven Biſhops of Aſia are here ſtiled the ſeven ſtars, and Angels of the ſeven Churches, becauſe they were ordinarily confin'd to their reſpective ſees. (Maſon) See Dr. Hammond on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 1, &c. Matth. v. 14, &c. Acts xii. 5. and 2 Tim. ii. 2.

CHAP. II.

The Epiſtles to the reſpective Biſhops of Epheſus, and Smyrna, and Pergamos, and Thyatira.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. UNTO the Angel of the Church of Epheſus, write, Theſe things ſaith he that holdeth the ſeven ſtars in his right hand, who walketh in the midſt of the ſeven golden candleſticks; I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canſt not bear them which are evil: And thou haſt tried them which ſay they are apoſtles, and are not; and haſt found them liars: And haſt borne, and haſt patience, and for my name's ſake haſt laboured, and haſt not fainted. Nevertheleſs, I have ſomewhat againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt left thy firſt love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the firſt works; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candleſtick out of his place, except thou repent. But this thou haſt, that thou hateſt the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I alſo hate. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midſt of the paradiſe of God.

Unto the Angel.] Who was at that time the Biſhop, or (as he is here call'd) "the Angel of the Church of Epheſus," is not certainly known. Some think it was Timothy; of whom we have ſpoken at large, in the Preface to St. Paul's firſt Epiſtle to him: Of which opinion I find Lyra, Pererius, Alcazar, and Fleury. Others think it was his ſucceſſor Oneſimus; of whom we have ſpoken in the Preface to the Epiſtle to Philemon. But, whether it was either, or neither of them, it matters not to inquire, ſince the Holy Scripture has not declar'd him. 'Tis enough for us to obſerve, that the beſt may grow remiſs, and need daily inciting to their duty. (Prid.) Archbp. Uſher has, with great variety of learning, prov'd, that theſe Angels were not only Biſhops, but alſo Archbiſhops, or Metropolitans; to whom Epiſcopal Churches ever acknowledg'd a certain obedience to be due. And, concerning theſe Apoſtolical Churches, the Holy Spirit always ſpeaks in the ſingular number, "Unto the Angel," &c. From whence it follows, 1. That different dioceſan Churches united to an Archbiſhop, as to the centre of unity, do, in the ſenſe of the Holy Spirit, conſtitute one Church: 2. That this dependence of Churches obtain'd in the time of the Apoſtles. And, 3. That it was the opinion of the Apoſtles, that, by this means, the unity of the Catholic Church was beſt conſulted. (Hughes) See the notes on ch. i. 20.

The Church of Epheſus.] See the Preface to the Epheſians.

Holdeth the ſeven ſtars.] See the notes on ch. i. 20.

I know thy works.] Oida; I take notice of them, and approve them. (Aſſ. H. Byam, and B.) Where note, 1. That this is a proof of the Divinity of Chriſt, that he is truly and eſſentially God, who ſearcheth the reins and hearts, ver. 23. (B.) 2. That what Chriſt approves in a paſtor, is, 1. To practiſe that himſelf which he teacheth others; 2. To love labour, and not to have an idle devotion; 3. To be diſpos'd patiently to ſuffer all things, for the ſake of God and his Church; 4. To make no truce with impious perſons, but to purge the Church of them; 5. To have the ſpirit of diſcernment, and an application of mind, to beware of thoſe who ſeduce ſouls; 6 To bear with defects, and to tolerate the weak; And, 7. To be indefatigable in labour, and to perſevere in the midſt of ſufferings. (Q) And, 3. That the pretended apoſtles, here ſaid to be tried, and found to be liars, are ſuppos'd to have been Ebion, and Cerinthus, and their followers. (H. and B.) See Dr. Hammond at large on this text; and the notes on Matth. vii. 23. John ii. 15, 17. and viii. 43. 2 Cor. iv. 8, &c. and xi. 13. Gal. vi. 9. 1 Theſſ. v. 12. 1 Tim. iv. 12. and v. 17. 2 Tim. iii. 10, &c. Tit. ii. 7. Hebr. x. 36. and xii. 1. and 1 John iv. 1.

Haſt left thy firſt love.] That is, haſt abated ſomewhat of thy former fervour and forwardneſs: Either ſignifying his coldneſs in devotion, his careleſneſs in preaching, and ſlackneſs in performing any deeds of charity. (Prid. and Aſſ.) Or, in love to, and zeal for, the truth. (Hall and Wells) Or, in true Chriſtian courage and fortitude. (H.) Or, in the office of mutual love, and charity to the poor. (G. Sharpe, and B.) See Dr. Hammond on this text; and the reſpective ſermons of Bp. Prideaux, Bp. Cooper, and Dr. Hickes, on the ſame.

Remember therefore.] Theſe words are partly monitory, and partly minatory. Chriſt doth not ſurprizingly come upon his Church unawares. They are admoniſh'd before they are chaſtiſed; and warned before they are laid waſte. (B.) Neither the excellency of any Church, nor the orthodoxy of the Clergy, nor the people's former zeal for the Apoſtolic faith, nor their former ſufferings for it, can prevail with God, not to take the light of the Goſpel from them, if they grow remiſs in the love of God, and abate their zeal for the true faith, and become inſenſible of the great bleſſing, of living under the inſtruction of a pure Evangelical miniſtry, in an Apoſtolical Church. (Hickes) It is the univerſal Church only which has a promiſe of ability; any particular Church may be unchurch'd finally. (B.) Therefore this Church is threatned, that the candleſtick (that is, the light of the Goſpel) ſhall be remov'd from thence, and ſettled in ſome other place, where it ſhall find a better acceptance. (Aſſ. H. and Wells) See the ſeveral ſermons of Mr. Tho. Fuller, 1646. and of Dr. Byam, Archbp. Sharpe, and Dr. Hickes, all on this text.

The deeds of the Nicolaitanes.] Theſe Nicolaitanes were Hereticks, who condemn'd matrimonial chaſtity, and aſſerted the promiſcuous uſe of women to be lawful; as alſo to eat of things ſacrifiſed to idols. They are ſaid to be ſo call'd from Nicolas, one of the ſeven Deacons, mention'd Acts vi. 5. not that he maintain'd, or broach'd, ſuch a wicked doctrine; but that theſe Hereticks endeavour'd to gain credit to their impious tenets, by the patronage of ſo great a name in the Church, and to this end laid hold of an action of his, which they wreſted to their purpoſe. This Nicolas, being reprov'd (as 'tis ſaid) by the Apoſtles, for being jealous of his wife, who was a beauty; to ſhew how far he was from being guilty of jealouſy, brought out his wife publickly, and gave any one leave to marry her; alledging, that this was agreeable to that ſaying, that men ought to abuſe the fleſh. Which ſaying, as it is aſcrib'd to St. Matthias by Euſebius, and obſerv'd by him to denote only that we ought to reſiſt the fleſh, and not to gratify its luſts; ſo it is obſerv'd by the ſame Euſebius, that Nicolas ſpake it in the ſame ſenſe, and uſed ſuch a method with his wife, to teſtify his renouncing all carnal pleaſure. And an argument of the truth hereof was this, that Nicolas never uſed any other woman but his wife; and the children he had by her remain'd virgins all their lives. However, from hence the Hereticks, who go under his name, took occaſion to broach their deteſtable doctrines; aſſerting, that the moſt ſhameful uncleanneſs was no other than abuſing of the fleſh; and ſo making, as it were, a Chriſtian duty of the moſt abominable ſin. (Bp. Alley, Fuller, H. Wells and Newt.)

He that hath an ear.] This form of ſpeech Chriſt himſelf often uſed, at the end of his parables, when he would ſtir up the people to more than ordinary attention: And the Apoſtle uſes it here, in this and the following chapter, at the end of every one of theſe Epiſtles to the ſeven Churches. (B.) See the notes on Matth. xi. 15.

To him that overcometh.] To wit, his ſpiritual enemies, the Devil, the world, and the fleſh. (Bp. Hall, and Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. xiii. 21. and xvi. 20. 1 Cor. ix. 27. and 1 John v. 4.

Eat of the tree of life.] That is, enjoy eternal happineſs. And this promiſe, of Chriſt's giving it, is a clear argument of his being eſſentially God; ſince none but God can give it. (B.) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 43. and John vi. 35, &c. and 58.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, And unto the Angel of the Church in Smyrna, write, Theſe things ſaith the firſt and the laſt, which was dead, and is alive; I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich) and I know the blaſphemy of them which ſay they are Jews, and are not, but are the ſynagogue of Satan. Fear none of thoſe things which thou ſhalt ſuffer: Behold, the Devil ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon, that ye may be tried; and ye ſhall have tribulation ten days: Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches, He that overcometh, ſhall not be hurt of the ſecond death.

The Angel of the Church in Smyrna.] It ſeems to be generally agreed, that the Angel, or Biſhop, of Smyrna, at this time was Polycarp; who had been a diſciple of St. John, and by him appointed Biſhop of this Church: In which he continued "faithful unto death," and receiv'd a "crown of life; ſuffering a glorious martyrdom, in the 86th year of his age. (Alley, Uſh. H. Cave, B. Wells, Fleury, and Wall) Sir Iſaac Newton will have this ſtate of the Church here deſcrib'd to agree with no other perſecution, than that under Diocleſian, which began in the year of our Lord 302. becauſe that was the only perſecution which laſted ten years, which he underſtands to be the meaning of their having "tribulation ten days." But whoever will read what is ſaid by the other writers before-nam'd, will conclude it to have had its completion much earlier; as it certainly muſt, if it had any relation to the martyrdom of St. Polycarp, which happen'd about the year 170..

The firſt and the laſt.] See the notes on ch. i. 4, 8, 11.

I know thy works.] See the notes on ver. 2. and Hebr. x. 34. and xi. 36.

And poverty.] The Chriſtians then at Smyrna were (it ſeems) ſo very poor, that their Biſhop could hardly get a ſubſiſtance among them. (G.) But nevertheleſs, they were ſpiritually rich; that is to ſay, in grace, and good works. See the notes on Luke xii. 21. and xvi. 11. 2 Cor. viii. 9. 1 Tim. vi. 6, 11. and Jam. ii. 5.

I know the blaſphemy.] That is, the malicious reproaches, and evil ſpeeches, of your enemies caſt upon you; partly by the native Jews, who glory in circumciſion and the Law; and partly by falſe Chriſtians, profeſſing faith in Chriſt, but not daring to own him, for fear of perſecution. (B.) Who brag of the truth of their religion, when they want both the inward power, and outward evidences of it. (Aſſ.) As St. John does here all along plainly accommodate to the Chriſtian Church the phraſes and types of the Old Teſtament, and ſeveral particulars relating to the temple, ſo it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that by Jews he accordingly means, in this book, the true Chriſtians, in the ſame manner as St. Paul uſes the word, Rom. ii. 28, 29. And agreeably hereto, by Gentiles, St. John is to be underſtood to denote all unbelievers and unfaithful Chriſtians; juſt as, all along the Old Teſtament, the Jews or Iſraelites denote, the people of God, and the Gentiles them who were not ſo. (Adams and Wells) But, more particularly, we may here underſtand the idolatry of the Nicolaitans. (Newt.) Now, why theſe, who thus pretend to be Jews, are here call'd "the ſynagogue of Satan, is clear, Becauſe their hereſy was made up of all filthineſs and abominable carnality, which is intimated, in many places of the Scripture, by aſelgeiai, acatharſiai, peneriai, cakiai, athemitoi eidololatreiai, pleonexiai, &c. all words to denote theſe defiled practices of theirs, and ſet down diſtinctly by Epiphanius and others, but are too unſavoury to be here deſcrib'd. (H.) See the notes on Matth. iii. 9. John viii. 39. Rom. ix. 6. Gal. vi. 13. Phil. iii. 2. and 2 Tim. iii. 5.

Fear none of theſe.] That is, ſo as, out of fear, to do any thing unbeſeeming a Chriſtian. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. x. 28.

The Devil ſhall caſt.] That is, by wicked men, his inſtruments. (G. Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on Eph. ii. 2.

That ye may be tried.] Hina peirasthete; that ye may be tempted. Not only upon Polycarp himſelf, but upon many others (particularly upon Germanicus) great perſwaſions were uſed, by the Heathens, tempting them to renounce the faith, and ſave their lives: And, tho' ſome as (Quintus, a Phrygian) were overcome with theſe temptations, yet great multitudes continued conſtant and "faithful unto death. (H.)

Tribulation ten days.] That is to be interpreted, ten years. (Hall, and Newt.) Or rather, probably, for a ſhort time indefinite. (Aſſ. H. B. and Fleury.) See the notes on ver. 8.

Be thou faithful unto death.] That is, conſtant in thy Chriſtian courſe and profeſſion, to the laſt; even unto the ſhedding of thy blood by death, for the teſtimony of the truth: Die, rather than deny the religion. (Aſſ.) See the ſeveral ſermons of Mr. T. Gataker, 1623. Dr. W. Sclater, 1671. and Dr. J. Adams. 1707. all on this text; and the notes on ver. 7. Rom. iv. 11. 1 Cor. ix. 24. 2 Tim. ii. 5. and Jam. i. 12.

The ſecond death.] That is, the ſeparation of ſoul and body from God, and ſequeſtration of them both to eternal torments. And it is ſo call'd, in relation to the natural death foregoing it, whereby ſoul and body are only ſever'd each from the other. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Theſſ. i. 9.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. And to the Angel of the Church in Pergamos, write, Theſe things ſaith he, which hath the ſharp ſword with two edges, I know thy works, and where thou dwelleſt, even where Satan's ſeat is: And thou holdeſt faſt my name, and haſt not denied my faith, even in thoſe days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was ſlain among you, where Satan dwelleth. But I have a few things againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to caſt a ſtumbling-block before the children of Iſrael, to eat things ſacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. So haſt thou alſo them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate. Repent; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight againſt them with the ſword of my mouth. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches, To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white ſtone, and in the ſtone a new name written, which no man knoweth, ſaving he that receiveth it.

The Church in Pergamos.] A city of Æolia, afterwards made a province of the Romans. (Aſſ.) The ſtrangeneſs and abſurdity of Mr. Brightman's interpretation of the meaning of the Epiſtles to theſe Churches, is not worthy of a place here. Whoever has the curioſity to ſee it fully and fairly refuted and expos'd, may conſult Dr. Hammond at large.

Sharp ſword with two edges.] See the notes on ch. i. 16. and Eph. vi. 17.

I know thy works.] See the notes on ver. 2.

Where Satan's ſeat is.] This throne of Satan ſurely ſignifies the power of Satan, exerciſed in their idolatrous worſhip and ſacrifices. For here was at this time a temple of Diana, as Surias ſaith; and, according to others, a temple alſo of Æſculapius: And Andreas Cæſarienſis ſaith, it was fuller of idols, than all Aſia beſide. (G. Hall, H. B. Wells, Fleury and Wall) See the notes on ver. 9.

Antipas was my faithful martyr.] Dr. Hammond tells us, from the menology of the Greeks, That this Antipas was contemporary with the Apoſtles, and ordain'd Biſhop of this Church, which he govern'd in all godlineſs to his very old age: And that, being therefore apprehended by the idolaters, and carried before the Prefect, he was put in a brazen bull, and ſcalded to death. The Editor of Grotius ſays, he was kill'd by the mob, at the inſtigation of the Prieſts of Æſculapius. But, Dr. Wells obſerves, that thoſe circumſtances of his death, as related in the Menology, are by ſome eſteem'd fabulous. Hower, it ſeems credible, 1. That he was a Miniſter in Pergamos (if not Biſhop there) of diſtinguiſh'd reputation and piety; for, upon ſuch only the ſtorm of perſecution generally falls the heavieſt. (H. and B.) 2. That he ſuffer'd martyrdom for the cauſe of Chriſt at Pergamos. And, 3. That this happen'd in the reign of Domitian. (H.) Whether his name is a contraction of Antipater, as that of Silas is of Silvanus (as the Aſſembly-men ſay) is matter of needleſs curioſity: But Mr. Brightman's interpretation, that the name of Antipas denotes, that the martyrs of that age, to which he refers that part of the viſion, ſhould be (Antipapa) Antipopes, is a fancy too vain and ridiculous to be ſeriouſly taken notice of. See the notes on Acts xv. 40. and xxii. 20.

Hold the doctrine of Balaam.] Obſerve here, 1. The doctrine and practice which the Apoſtle reprehends; viz. That of Balaam, who formerly counſelled Balak, to ſet fair women on work, to tempt the Iſraelites to commit fornication, and ſo draw them in to "eat things ſacrificed unto idols," thereby to provoke God's wrath againſt this people, Numb. xxv. 1. and xxxi. 16. And that of the Nicolaitanes, and Gnoſticks, who were guilty of the like doctrine and practice. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. Wells, and Newt.) 2. That this is here call'd (balein ſcandalon) "to caſt a ſtumbling-block;" or rather, a ſcandal, or ſnare. (H.) 3. That it was not the being of ſuch Hereticks among them, that this Church is here blam'd for; but the toleration of them, and ſuffering them to remain as members of their communion: Whereas, they ought to have executed Church-diſcipline, and denounced cenſures againſt them, as the Church of Epheſus had done; they ought to have uſed Chriſt ſword againſt thoſe, as the Angel reſiſted Balaam, with "his ſword drawn in his hand," Numb. xxii. 23. (G. H. B. and Q.) And, 4. That, inſtead of (ho miſo) "which thing I hate," in the end of ver. 15. the Alexandrian, and many other MSS. as alſo the Vulgar Latin, the Syriac, and Ethiopic Verſions, and Arethas, read it (homoios) in like manner. And it is not unlikely, that homoios, being here an Hebrew pleonaſm, which was not underſtood by ſome, it might therefore be chang'd by them into homiſo, to make it agree with ver. 6. (Wells) See the notes on ver. 6. Luke xvii. 1. 1 Cor. v. 1, &c. and x. 14. 2 Pet. ii. 15. and Jude 11.

Repent; or elſe.] See the notes on ver. 5. ch. i. 16. Eph. vi. 17: and 2 Theſſ. ii. 8.

The hidden manna.] By this may fitly be denoted all the inward comfort and refreſhment and ſuſtenance of ſouls, which God affords Chriſtians in this life, "the things which God hath prepar'd for them that love him," 1 Cor. ii. 9. And particularly, the inward joy, which ariſeth from the practice of Chriſtian virtues; which carry with them a bleſſedneſs in this life; eſpecially that of confeſſing and ſuffering for Chriſt: And that is here ſaid to be given "to him that overcometh;" that is, to him, who holds out, and falls not away "to eat things ſacrificed unto idols." Whereas they who did ſo, promiſing themſelves advantage and ſafety by ſo doing, are ſaid (by Euſebius) to have fail'd of thoſe very advantages they look'd for; being put to death, by the perſecutors, under pretence of ſome other cauſe, and ſo to have periſh'd without any comfort or hope, of which the faithful confeſſors were ſo full: Of which he gives a notable teſtimony, l. v. c. 1. And this makes up the manna here ſpoken of; which is fitly call'd (kecrymmenon) hidden, or ſecret, becauſe it is enjoy'd in the heart of the Chriſtian only. (H. B. and Wells) See Dr. Featley's ſermons on this text; and the notes on ver. 7. Luke xxii. 30. John vi. 27, 32, 49, 58. 1 Cor. ii. 9. and Hebr. x. 4.

A white ſtone.] Such as were uſed in popular judicatures or elections; the cuſtom being to give their votes, in either of theſe, by ſuch ſtones. Thoſe were either white, or black. The white was a token of abſolution or approbation; the black, of condemnation or rejection. Agreeable to which alſo was the cuſtom of the agones, by which the conqueror in the games had his reward aſſign'd to him; "a white ſtone" noting it, with the victor's name, and the value of the prize written on it: And the prize here is ſaid to be "a new name," that is, the name of Chriſt, written on this white ſtone; noting the reward of perſeverance in Chriſtianity to belong to him, of whom 'tis here ſaid to be an honour and dignity, "which no man knoweth, ſaving he that receiveth it;" that is, no man can know the advantage of it, but he who hath it. (Beza, G. Hall, Godw. Aſſ. H. B. and Wells)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29.
And unto the Angel of the Church in Thyatira, write, Theſe things ſaith the ſon of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine braſs; I know thy works, and charity, and ſervice, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the laſt to be more than the firſt. Notwithſtanding, I have a few things againſt thee, becauſe thou ſuffereſt that woman Jezabel, which calleth herſelf a propheteſs, to teach and to ſeduce my ſervants to commit fornication, and to eat things ſacrificed unto idols. And I gave her ſpace to repent of her fornication, and ſhe repented not. Behold, I will caſt her unto a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. And I will kill her children with death; and all the Churches ſhall know that I am he which ſearcheth the reins and hearts: And I will give unto every one of you according to your works. But unto you I ſay, and unto the reſt in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they ſpeak, I will put upon you none other burden. But that which ye have already, hold faſt till I come. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: (And he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron: As the veſſels of a potter ſhall they be broken to ſhivers) even as I received of my father. And I will give him the morning ſtar. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches.

The Church in Thyatira.] The ſame city where Lydia, the ſeller of purple, liv'd, Acts xvi. 14. Mr. Brightman's whimſical interpretation of this name is juſtly cenſur'd by Dr. Hammond.

His eyes like unto a flame.] See the notes on ver. 23. and ch. i. 14, 15.

I know thy works.] See the notes on ver. 2. and 9.

And the laſt to be more than the firſt.] That is, her laſt works were beſt; whereas thoſe of Epheſus were beſt at firſt, ver. 4, 5. (B.) Thus, in the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other Manuſcripts, as well as in all the old Verſions, and Aretas, the conſtruction runs more ſmoothly thus, "I know thy works, and charity, and ſervice, and faith, and thy patience; and thy laſt works to be more than the firſt," without the interpoſition of the laſt (kai) and, which ſeems to be interpolated in the common copies follow'd by our Tranſlators. (H. Wells, and Wall)

That woman Jezabel.] Ten gynaica Jeſabel. Who this woman, call'd Jezabel, was, is matter of great difficulty. The Alexandrian, and ſeveral other MSS. as alſo the Syriac Verſion, and Aretas, Cyprian and Tichonius read it (ten gynaica ſou, Jezabel) thy wife, Jezabel; that is, the Biſhop's wife: And thus all the Ancients are ſaid to have underſtood it. (G. Wells, and Wall) And that ſhe is call'd Jezabel, (in alluſion to the name of that wicked queen of Iſrael, 1 Kings xvi. 31.) as being a great promoter of evil, and the wife of the principal perſon in this Church. (G.) But, the Rhemiſh Annotators think it is hard to ſay, whether there was any ſuch great woman, whom the Apoſtle could particularly mean. If there was, 'tis however no wonder, that they (who are averſe to the marriage of the Clergy) ſhould be unwilling to own a Biſhop to have had a wife ſo early in the Church. The Aſſembly-men interpret it of ſome particular woman, either like Jezabel, or of the ſame name with her, or both. Burkitt underſtands it of Helena, the wife, or companion, of Simon Magus (whom we have taken notice of, on Acts viii. 23.) Which opinion ſeems alſo to be countenanc'd by the learned Hammond: Who obſerves, that the hereſy of the Gnoſticks (followers of Simon Magus and others) is deſcrib'd in this book by ſeveral names of odious perſons mention'd in the Old Teſtament; as by that of Balaam, ver. 14. and here of Jezabel; which he therefore interprets, as meant of that hereſy itſelf, rather than of any particular woman then living among thoſe of Thyatira. See Dr. Hammond's notes at large, and Dr. Featley's ſermons, on this text; and the notes on Acts xiii. 50. and xv. 29. and 1 Cor. vi. 18.

I gave her ſpace to repent.] Obſerve here, 1. A plain proof of free-will; and that God is not the proper cauſe of obduration and impenitence, but man himſelf only. Our Lord giveth ſinners long life, in order to their repentance and amendment: But Jezabel (to whom the Apoſtle here alludeth) would not repent. (Rhem.) And, 2. The great ſin, folly, and danger, of deferring and putting off the duty of repentance, when God gives us time and ſpace ſufficient to perform it. For, 1. Great is the ſin; becauſe 'tis a mocking of God's patience, and undervaluing of his ſervice; a contempt of his authority, a preſuming on his goodneſs, and a defiance of his diſpleaſure. 2. Great is the folly; becauſe we put it off to the moſt improper and unfitting ſeaſon, and thereby make the work more hard and difficult; and the longer we delay our repentance, the more we ſhall have to repent of. And, 3. Great is the danger; becauſe it puts upon us a mighty hazard, and we run a deſperate venture, not knowing whether we ſhall live an hour longer; and we forfeit by our delays that ſpecial grace, without the aſſiſtance of which we can never repent. (B.) See the notes on Mark ii. 17. Luke v. 32. xv. 4. xix. 10, 42. and xxiv. 47. John iii. 16. Acts x. 34. Rom. ii. 4, &c. and v. 10. and 1 Tim. i. 15. and ii. 4.

Caſt her into a bed.] That is, a bed of tribulation and torment, inſtead of her bed of luſt and uncleanneſs. (G. Hall, Aſſ. and B.)

I am he which ſearcheth.] A plain proof of the Divinity of Chriſt. For "he who ſearcheth the reins and hearts, and giveth unto every one according to his works," is eſſentially and truly God: But Chriſt doth both theſe; Therefore Chriſt is eſſentially and truly God. (B.) And this alſo explains the reaſon of Chriſt being repreſented, as "having his eyes like unto a flame of fire," &c. ver. 18. (Wells) See the notes on Rom. ii. 6. and xiv. 12. 2 Cor. v. 10. and Gal. vi. 5.

But unto you I ſay, and unto the reſt.] Hymin de lego, kai loipois; To you, the Angel, or Biſhop, and the other Paſtors, and to the reſt of the members of that Church, who have not own'd nor entertain'd theſe doctrines of the Gnoſticks, which they pretend to be the depths of knowledge, but are indeed "the depths of Satan." (Beza, G. Hall, Aſſ. H. and B.) The Alexandrian, and ſome other MSS. as alſo the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic Verſions, and Arethas, read the beginning of this verſe, without the conjunction (kai) and, thus, (Hymin de lego loipois, or tois loipois) But unto you, I ſay, the reſt, &c. (H. and Wells) And this Dr. Mills contends for, as the true and undoubted original reading, purely becauſe, as he thinks, the language otherwiſe to be ſolecistical and abſurd; which very variation, in my humble opinion, ſpoils both the ſenſe and grammar of the Sacred Text. For if loipois agrees with hymin, (as, according to this reading, it unavoidably muſt) 'twill make a ſoleciſm, and be ſuch a violation of grammar, as is no where elſe to be found in the Sacred or foreign Claſſicks. It will then be (hymin, hoſoi ouc echouſi) Unto you, as many as have not, &c. The Doctor ſays, hymin cannot have reſpect to the Biſhop of Thyatira, and the followers of his falſe doctrine (whom the Apoſtle had addreſs'd before) but to the reſt, who, in the apoſtaſy of others, had preſerv'd themſelves upright and faithful. But the Doctor, I believe, equally injures the Biſhop, by charging him with falſe doctrine, and the Sacred Text, by charging it with falſe Greek! The Biſhop is blam'd, for his indulgence and connivance at (it cannot amount to a toleration of) "that woman Jezabel," or, (as ſome read it) his wife, Jezabel, ver. 20. which might be a want of Chriſtian care and courage, but could not come up to falſe doctrine. For, he is above commended by his great maſter, for his works, his love, his miniſtry, his faith, and patience, &c. ver. 19. So that here (hymin, kai loipois) you and the reſt, ſeems to be addreſs'd to the Biſhop, Prieſts, and other private Chriſtians of his dioceſe; who, in a regular communion with their Biſhop, had, in a great apoſtaſy, adher'd to the orthodox faith and ſound principles. (Blackw.) See the notes on ver. 19, 20.

None other burden.] See the notes on Acts xv. 28.

Hold faſt, till I come.] That, by the coming of Chriſt here referr'd to, is meant, according to the literal import of this Epiſtle, not his coming at the end of the world, but his coming to put an end to the perſecutions of the Chriſtian Church, in thoſe primitive times, is evident from the like promiſe, made to the Church of Philadelphia, ver. 11. "Behold, I come quickly," and therefore, by this expreſſion, "unto the end," in the verſe here next following, is to be underſtood, not the end of the world, but the end of a man's life; agreeably to what is ſaid, ver. 10. "Be thou faithful unto death," &c. (H. B. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 10.

To him that overcometh.] See the notes on ver. 7.

Power over the nations.] That is, power (or rather, authority) with me, and in ſubordination to me, to judge the world, at the great day, with a power irreſiſtable. (Hall, Aſſ. B. and Wells) But obſerve here, 1. That this text ſeems to have yet a further import, viz. That ſuch conſtant Chriſtians ſhall be imploy'd by Chriſt, as Biſhops and Prieſts, to propagate the Goſpel among thoſe who have not yet receiv'd it. (G. and H.) 2. That this phraſe, "And he ſhall rule them," &c. denoting Chriſt's authority receiv'd of his Father, being read in a parentheſis, the other words expreſs his delegation of that authority to the governors of his Church, even as he received it of his Father. And, 3. That the phraſe of "giving him the morning-ſtar," may probably mean their propagating the faith ſtill farther, among the Gentiles of the eaſtern nations. (H.) See Dr. Hammond at large, and Mr. Dan. Price's ſermon, on this text, 1608. and the notes on Matth. xix. 28. Luke xxii. 30. John xx. 21 and Rom. xiii. 1.

CHAP. III.

The Epiſtles to the reſpective Biſhops of Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND unto the Angel of the the Church in Sardis, write, Theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven Spirits of God, and the ſeven ſtars; I know thy works, that thou haſt a name that thou liveſt, and art dead. Be watchful, and ſtrengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: For I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou haſt received and heard, and hold faſt, and repent. If therefore thou ſhalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou ſhalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. Thou haſt a few names even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments; and they ſhall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the ſame ſhall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confeſs his name before my Father, and before his Angels. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches.

The Church in Sardis.] A famous city, the royal ſeat of the kings of Lydia. (Beza, and G.) And next to Babylon for wealth. (Aſſ.)

The ſeven Spirits.] See the notes on ch. i. 4.

The ſeven ſtars.] See the notes on ch. i. 16, 20.

Thou haſt a name.] That is, thou haſt the reputation among men, of a zealous profeſſor, and a faithful teacher of the truth: And yet, I know, thou haſt not that meaſure of the true life of grace in thee, which thou pretendeſt and appeareſt to have. (G. Hall, Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. iii. 1. and Jam ii. 26.

Be watchful.] Rowze up thy ſelf; and ſhake off thy lethargick indiſpoſition. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Luke xii. 35, &c. and Eph. v. 14.

The things which remain.] Ta loipa; That is, either thoſe graces which are not yet quite dead in thee; Or the reſt (to wit) of thy flock, which are in a languiſhing condition. (Aſſ.) In the former ſenſe, it is underſtood of his own perſonal defects. (Beza, G. Hall, and B.) In the latter, of thoſe of his flock. (H. and Wells)

Not found thy works perfect.] Ou pepleromena; Not full, or complete: That is, not fill'd up with that ſincerity and zeal which God requires; (B.) Or, not agreeable to all the rules of the Goſpel. (Wells) See Mr. Rich. Stafford's ſermon, 1702. and Mr. Fra. Higgins's, 1706. both on this text.

How thou haſt received.] See the notes on 1 Tim. i. 18. and vi. 20. and 2 Tim. ii. 2.

Come on thee, as a thief.] See the notes on Mark xiii. 33, &c. Luke xii. 39, &c. 1 Theſſ. v. 2. and 2 Pet. iii. 10.

A few names.] That is, a few perſons. (G. B. and Wells) Known to Chriſt by name. (Aſſ.) Amidſt the multitude, in this great city, who were dead to good works, having declined from the truth, there were a few, who kept their innocency; preſerving themſelves free from error and falſe worſhip, from erroneous principles and debauch'd practices, and holding out conſtantly againſt all terrors and ſufferings for the truth's-ſake: And theſe are commended and honour'd by Chriſt, to encourage us to do the like, in the like times and places. See the notes on Acts i. 15.

Not defiled their garments.] That is, who have not committed deadly ſin, after baptiſm. (Rhem. and Johnſ.)

Walk with me in white.] Like perſons of dignity and honour, like kings and conquerors, who of old wore white garments. (Aſſ. H. Caryl, and B.) See the notes on ch. vi. 11. and vii. 14.

They are worthy.] That is, my mercy accepteth them, as juſtly capable of ſuch happineſs. (Hall) According to the gracious terms of the Goſpel. (Wells) As meet receivers, tho' not meritorious purchaſers, of this reward. (B.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 18. Eph. iv. 1. Phil. i. 27. Col. i. 12. and 2 Theſſ. i. 5, 11.

Out of the book of life.] See the notes on Phil. iv. 3.

I will confeſs his name.] That is, I will acknowledge him for mine. (Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) See the note on Luke xii. 8.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. And to the Angel of the Church in Philadelphia, write, Theſe things ſaith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man ſhutteth; and ſhutteth, and no man openeth: I know thy works: Behold, I have ſet before thee an open door, and no man can ſhut it: For thou haſt a little ſtrength, and haſt kept my word, and haſt not denied my name. Behold, I will make them of the ſynagogue of Satan (which ſay they are Jews, and are not, but do lye) behold, I will make them to come and worſhip before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. Becauſe thou haſt kept the word of my patience, I alſo will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which ſhall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold, I come quickly: Hold that faſt which thou haſt, that no man take thy crown. Him that overcometh, will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he ſhall go no more out: And I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jeruſalem, which cometh down out of Heaven from my God: And I will write upon him my new name. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches.

The Church in Philadelphia.] A mean city, not far from Sardis. Yet here Chriſt had a very eminent Church, not charg'd with any crime, as that of the great city Sardis was. (B.)

He that is holy.] Theſe two titles, of holy and true, are generally attributed to God, in the Old Teſtament; and being here aſcrib'd to Chriſt, are a proof of his being truly and really God. (Idem) See the notes on ver. 14. ch. i. 5 and Acts iii. 14.

The key of David.] Signifying all the power, regimen and ſoveraign authority, which Chriſt hath over his Church (whereof the kingdom of David was a type of reſemblance) ſo that he forbiddeth and commandeth, admitteth and excludeth, ſaveth and deſtroyeth, what, and whom he pleaſeth. (Beza, G. Hall, Aſſ. H. and B.) See the notes on ch. i. 18. and Matth. xvi. 19.

See

Set before thee an open door.] Under this metaphor of "an open door," the ſucceſs and progreſs of the Goſpel, in the preaching and diſpenſation of it, is ſhadow'd forth, in ſpite of all oppoſition. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. Wells and Fleury) See the notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 9. and 2 Cor. ii. 12.

Thou haſt a little ſtrength.] That is, a little ſpiritual and inward ſtrength, tho' but few external helps and advantages. (B.)

The ſynagogue of Satan] See the notes on ch. ii. 9. and Matth. iii. 9. and John viii. 39.

Worſhip before thy feet.] That is, they ſhall come in, and ſubmit themſelves unto thee, and ſhall humbly worſhip God, before thee and the congregation, as true converts and penitents: (Hall) And ſhall reverence thee, as one beloved of me. (Aſſ. and B.) Or, as their Biſhop, being converted, and brought to a ſenſe of their former errors by thy means. (G. H. and Wells)

Kept the word of my patience] That is, "thou haſt kept" that word, and Goſpel of mine, which both injoineth, and worketh, patience in all my faithful ſervants; and haſt perſever'd in the confeſſion of me, even in time of perſecution, and been content to ſuffer for my ſake. (Beza, G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) See the notes on Luke xxi. 19. and Hebr x. 36.

The hour of temptation.] That is, thoſe perſecutions which are about to fall upon Chriſtians every where, as a ſharp trial of their patience, and other Chriſtian virtues. (G. Aſſ. H. B. Wells and Fleury) See the notes on ch. ii. 13. Luke ii. 2. Acts xiv. 22. Rom. v. 3, 4. 1 Cor. x. 13. Jam. i. 2, 12. 1 Pet. iv. 12. and 2 Pet. ii. 9.

Behold, I come quickly.] See the notes on ch. ii. 25. Phil. iv. 5. and Jam. v. 8.

No man take thy crown.] See the notes on ch. ii. 10. and 1 Cor. ix. 24, &c.

A pillar in the temple.] That is, he ſhall be a pillar of the Church, and ſhall live quietly to perform the office of an Apoſtle in it, and ſhall be no more diſturb'd or caſt out: And I will acknowledge him, as a perſon truly godly, a true member of the pure Catholic Chriſtian Church (known by the name of the "new Jeruſalem," deſcending from Heaven) and one who is approv'd by me as a faithful and true Chriſtian; and will afterwards reward him in Heaven eternally. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) An alluſion to the cuſtom of erecting pillars, for monuments, with their names written or engraved thereon, to continue their memory to poſterity. (G. Hall, and B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 17. and xxi. 10. Gal. iv. 26. Eph. ii. 19. Phil. iii. 20. Hebr. xi. 10, 26. and xii. 22.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. And unto the Angel of the Church of the Laodiceans, write, Theſe things ſaith the Amen, the faithful and true witneſs, the beginning of the creation of God; I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then becauſe thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will ſpue thee out of my mouth: Becauſe thou ſayſt, I am rich, and increaſed with goods, and have need of nothing; and knoweſt not that thou art wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked. I counſel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayſt be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayſt be clothed, and that the ſhame of thy nakedneſs do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-ſalve, that thou mayſt ſee. As many as I love, I rebuke, and chaſten: Be zealous therefore, and repent. Behold, I ſtand at the door, and knock: If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will ſup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to ſit with me in my throne, even as I alſo overcame, and am ſet down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches.

The Church of the Laodiceans.] There were divers cities nam'd Laodicea: Particularly, one in Macedonia, and another in Syria. But doubtleſs, this was a moſt famous city in Aſia, ſituate in the country of Caria; ſaid to have been built by Antiochus Theos, and honour'd with his wife's name, Laodicea, otherwiſe call'd Dioſpolis. (Jackſ.) See the notes on Col. iv. 6.

The Amen.] Amen, in moſt other places, is uſed only adverbially, either expreſſing the mode or manner of affirming what is declar'd, to be true; or approving and confirming it to be ſo; or wiſhing and deſiring it might be ſo: But none of thoſe ſignifications reach the perfection and excellency of its comprehenſive ſignification in this place, where it is uſed ſubſtantively. The full import and meaning of it here, is fully declar'd by the following words, "the faithful and true witneſs;" which are applied to Chriſt, who was faithful, in the diſcharge of the great truſt committed to him, viz. the revelation of his father's will; and true, as moſt worthy to be believ'd, in that he not only ſeal'd the truth of his doctrine with the ſhedding of his blood, but alſo in that he really is, what he deſcribes himſelf to be, the truth itſelf, John xiv. 6. This is the moſt pregnant ſignification of Chriſt's being The Amen in the text: Which is expreſſive of a moſt eminent attribute, or property, but common to the Three ever-bleſſed Perſons in Unity; For God the Father is call'd "The God of truth," Iſa. lxv. 16. God the Holy Ghoſt is call'd "The Spirit of truth," John xvi. 13. And here Chriſt, the Second Perſon, is denominated "The Amen," Truth itſelf; which (like the nature it expreſſeth) is incommunicable to any creature. (Beza, H. Daviſon, B. and Wells) See Mr. Daviſon's ſermon on this text, 1684. and the notes on ch. i. 5. John xiv. 6. and xxi. 25. and 2 Cor. i. 20.

The beginning of the creation.] He arche tes Ktiſeos; The head; or under his Father) the chief manager of the Creation. (Wall) Or, He from whom all the creation had its beginning. (Beza, Aſſ. and B.) Not the paſſive, but the active, beginning of the creation. (Leigh, and B.) And that, of the ſpiritual, as well as the material creation; viz. By whom man was not only at firſt created out of nothing, but alſo redeem'd, or created, out of a ſinful creature, to become a new or holy creature. (B. and Wells) And this title Chriſt takes upon him here, to encourage the Laodiceans to come unto him (according to the invitation given, ver. 18.) to recover them from their formality; ſince he is omnipotent, and can give a being and beginning to grace in the new creation, as he did to nature in the old and firſt creation. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 5. John i. 3. Rom. viii 29. and ix. 5. 1 Cor. xv. 24. 2 Cor. v. 17. Eph. ii. 10. and Col. i. 16, &c.

Becauſe thou art lukewarm.] That is, "neither cold, nor hot." They profeſs'd the Chriſtian faith, knew and receiv'd the Goſpel, and ſo were not quite cold; and yet were without the heat of true Chriſtian zeal and love, to endure any thing for Chriſt's ſake. They liv'd in a careleſs mediocrity, and idle ſecurity; ſerving God and gain, Chriſt and the world, by turns, as occaſion ſerv'd; chiefly attending to their ſecular affairs and intereſts, and not greatly caring which end went forward in God's matters, ſo they might enjoy their profits and pleaſures. (Jackſ. Hall, Aſſ. H. and B.) All that is here ſaid of this Church of Laodicea ſeems very intelligible, by applying to them that one part of the doctrine of the Gnoſticks, which ſeems to have gotten in among them (tho not their other carnal villanies) viz. That it was an indifferent thing, perfectly lawful, to renounce Chriſt in time of perſecution. This is clearly the lukewarmneſs here; which is a middle, indifferent temper, between being Chriſtians and no Chriſtians. Inſtead of which God recommends to them "gold tried in the fire;" that is, directly, the crown of martyrdom, contrary to that mixture and allay of droſs which was then in them; and the "white raiment," the enſign and character of the martyrs, every where in this book. And, for their ſaying, that they are rich, &c. and not knowing that they are wretched, &c this is alſo a mark of thoſe Gnoſticks, who had a great ungrounded opinion of their own perfections. (H.) Zeal and fervour is commendable, eſpecially in God's cauſe: And the neuters, who are "neither cold nor hot," are to Chriſt and his Church burdenous and loathſome, as lukewarm water is to a man's ſtomach, provoking him to vomit: And therefore he threatens ſuch neuters to ſpue them out of his mouth. (Rhem. G. Hall, Aſſ. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 4. Acts xxvi. 9. Gal. iv. 18. 2 Tim. iii. 5. and Jude 3. and thoſe which here next follow.

Thou ſayeſt, I am rich.] See the notes on Acts xxvi. 18. Rom. vii. 9. 1 Cor. iv. 8. 2 Cor. viii. 9. Eph. i. 18. Phil. iii. 12, &c. and Jam. i. 4.

Buy of me gold tried.] See the notes on ver. 4. Matth. xiii. 45. John i. 16. 1 Cor. iii. 13, &c. 2 Cor. iv. 6. Eph. i. 18. and 1 Pet. iv. 12.

As many as I love, I rebuke.] I endeavour firſt, to convince them by reaſon and argument; and if this prove ineffectual, then I chaſten them by affliction or perſecution. (Wells) See the notes on 1 Cor. xi. 32. Hebr. xii. 5, &c. and Jam. i. 12.

Be zealous.] Zeloſon; the original word hath an emphaſis, and ſignifies to be earneſt, with heat and fervency. (Leigh, Aſhe, and Cragge) Some conjecture, that the word hath its derivation from the hiſſing noiſe in water, cauſed by the caſting of fire into it, upon the conteſt between thoſe two contrary elements. And therefore it is fitly recommended to thoſe lukewarm Laodiceans, who are "neither cold nor hot." See Dr. Featley's ſermon on this text, and Mr. John Cragge's, 1657. and the notes on ch. ii. 5. Acts v. 17. and Gal. iv. 18.

I ſtand at the door, and knock.] Obſerve here, 1. That theſe words are very expreſſive of the tender love and gracious condeſcenſion of Chriſt toward poor ſinners; full of heavenly rhetoric, to win and gain their hearts to himſelf: I, who am one with the Father, John x. 30. I, who am "full of grace and truth," John i. 14. I, who am "the Lord of glory," 1 Cor. ii. 8. I, by and for whom "were all things created," Col. i. 16. I, in whom "dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily," Col. ii. 9. I, who, for thee and thy ſalvation, came down from Heaven, "took upon me the form of a ſervant, and humbled myſelf, and became obedient unto the death of the croſs," Eph. iv. 9. and Phil. ii. 7. I, who am all-ſufficient in myſelf, and ſtand not in need of thee, or of any thing that thou haſt, Pſa. l. 10. being the "heir of all things," Hebr. i. 2. "equal with God" the Father, Phil. ii. 6. and infinite with him in glory, John xvii. 5. I, who deſire to enter, not for my own, but for thy good, "that it may be well with thee," Deut. v. 29. "I ſtand," &c. (Jackſ. Hall, Drant, and B.) 2. That by the door is allegorically meant the heart of man; as man is hereby compar'd to a houſe, and Chriſt unto a gueſt, waiting to come in. (Jackſ. Drant, Cott. Aſſ. H. and B.) 3. That Chriſt "ſtanding at the door," denotes his earneſt deſire and readineſs to enter, his great patience in waiting upon ſinners expecting an entrance, and his obſervation of their unkindneſs in not admitting him. For, the orginal word, (eſteca) I have ſtood, ſignifies, that he does well obſerve, how long time he has ſtood, waiting upon them. (Jackſ. Hull, Drant, Cott. Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) 4. That his knocking at the door ſignifieth, that, finding the doors of our hearts bolted and barr'd againſt him by our ſins, he does not paſs by with a ſoft and ſtill voice, but doth knock and beat aloud, offering us mercy, if by any means we will open to him and our own happineſs. This knocking is a violent, vehement, and reiterated motion: The word crouo implies as much; which as etymologiſts obſerve, being deriv'd from keras, a horn, ſignifies ſuch a forcible knock or blow, as a bull gives, when he runs againſt any thing with his horn. Thus Chriſt knocks at our hearts, to rouſe us; viz. Outwardly, by his word, by his mercies, by his judgments, and inwardly, by the good motion of his Holy Spirit. (Jackſ. G. Hull, Drant, Cott. Leigh, H. and B.) And, 5. That all this is uſher'd in with the note of attention, Behold, which is ſeldom ſo uſed, but either as a demonſtration, for the greater certainty and aſſurance of the thing pointed to; or elſe, by way of attention, to prepare us for ſome very weighty matter which is to follow. (Jackſ. Drant, and Cotton) But, 6. Tho' Chriſt knocks at the door of man's heart, and hath the key alſo in his hand, ver. 7. yet he doth not open it without conſent, much leſs doth he force it open: He does not offer violence to men's wills, to ſave them againſt their wills; but he tenders his grace to them, and it is left to their free will to give conſent to, and to accept it; tho' his Holy Spirit inclines them to hear his voice, and enables them to open the door to him, cauſing them to approve of and conſent to the offer and call of Chriſt. (Rhem. Jackſ. H. and B.) 7. That, as it is our duty, ſo it is manifeſtly our eternal intereſt, to hear, and hearken to his call. For there is not one moment which may not be that of our death and judgment. (Q.) 8. That, knowing the great weakneſs of human nature, he hath here promis'd an ample reward, to all thoſe who perform the conditions; viz. "I will come in to him, and will ſleep with him, and he with me:" Where his coming in denotes our union to him, as his ſupping does our communion with him; imperfect indeed here on earth, but perfect, complete and uninterrupted hereafter in Heaven, when we ſhall ever be with the Lord. (Jackſ. Hull, G. Hall, Cott. Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) But then, 9. The conditions requir'd, are to "hear his voice, and open the door" for him to enter at: That is, to repent of our former ſinfulneſs, and reſolve to live obediently to the Goſpel for the future. (Wells) And happy is that perſon, whom neither the death of ſin, nor the ſleep of lukewarmneſs, ſhall render deaf to the voice of Jeſus Chriſt, and prevent him thus to open the door to him; ſince we ought to be always ready to quit even life itſelf, in order to be united to him to all eternity. (Q.) See the ſeveral ſermons of Mr. T. Jackſon, 1609. Dr. W. Hull, 1613. Mr. T. Drant, 1636. Mr. John Cotton, 1641. and Bp. Griff. Williams, all on this text; and the notes on Matth. xxiv. 32. Sit with me in my throne.] The way to Heaven, for Chriſt himſelf, and all his members, is the ſame: For, as he conquer'd, and finally overcame all the trials and temptations of this life, and all the difficulties which he was to encounter with, in purſuit of the work aſſign'd him by the Father, and kept his faith, love, and obedience, entire to the end; ſo muſt they who hope to ſit with him in his throne. (Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) Here are two thrones mention'd. "My throne," ſays Chriſt; That is, the condition of glorified Saints, who ſit with Chriſt in his throne: But my Father's (that is, God's) throne is the power of Divine Majeſty; wherein none may ſit, but God, and the God-man Jeſus Chriſt. To be inthroniz'd in God's throne, to ſit at God's right-hand, is to have a God-like royalty, ſuch as his Father has; a royalty altogether incommunicable, whereof no creature is capable. (Mede and Wells) See Dr. H. Parry's ſermon on this text, 1591. and the notes on ch. ii. 7, 26. Luke xxii. 30. John xvii. 5. Rom. viii. 17. Eph. i. 20. Col. iii. 1. Hebr. i. 3. and xii. 2.

He that hath an ear.] This is repeated at the end of every Epiſtle, to ſhew, that all the cautions and warnings, all the reproofs and counſels, all the promiſes and threatnings, contain'd in this and the other Epiſtles, do greatly concern all Chriſtians, to the end of the world. (B.) See the notes on Matth. xi. 25.

The viſion of God's celeſtial throne, and his attendants in his glory.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. AFTER this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in Heaven: And the firſt voice which I heard, was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which ſaid, Come up hither, and I will ſhew thee things which muſt be hereafter. And immediately I was in the Spirit: And behold, a throne was ſet in Heaven, and one ſat on the throne. And he that ſat was to look upon like a jaſper, and a ſardine ſtone: And there was a rain-bow round about the throne, in ſight like unto an emerald. And round about the throne were four and twenty ſeats: And upon the ſeats I ſaw four and twenty elders ſitting, cloathed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunderings, and voices: And there were ſeven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the ſeven Spirits of God. And before the throne there was a ſea of glaſs like unto cryſtal: And in the midſt of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beaſts full of eyes before and behind. And the firſt beaſt was like a lion, and the ſecond beaſt like a calf, and the third beaſt had a face as a man, and the fourth beaſt was like a flying eagle. And the four beaſts had each of them ſix wings about him, and they were full of eyes within; and they reſt not day and night, ſaying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. And when thoſe beaſts give glory, and honour, and thanks to him that ſat on the throne, who liveth for ever, and ever. The four and twenty elders fall down before him that ſat on the throne, and worſhip him that liveth for ever and ever, and caſt their crowns before the throne, ſaying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power: For thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are and were created.

After this.] By the order of theſe Revelations God teacheth us, that the doctrine of manners ought to precede the knowledge of the myſteries of futurity. (Q.) See the notes on ch. i. 10.

A door was opened in Heaven.] The Heavens ſo open'd, as if the door of ſome ſtately palace were ſet open, by which might be diſcover'd ſuch glorious ſights as are within it. Some take this to ſignify the Church on earth, which is as Heaven, in compariſon of the reſt of the world; and in, or for which theſe things are to be fulfill'd: Others, for Heaven itſelf; where God ſits in Majeſty, and from whence theſe things were reveal'd. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Acts vii. 56. and thoſe which here next follow.

The firſt voice which I heard.] He phrone he prote; the firſt voice, or the former voice. (Aſſ. B. and Wells) See the notes on ch. i. 10, 12, 19.

I will ſhew thee.] Or, give thee a clear repreſentation. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 19.

I was in the Spirit.] That is, in an ecſtaſy, or trance. See the notes on ch. i. 10. Acts x. 10. and 2 Cor. xii. 2.

A throne was ſet in Heaven.] Obſerve here, 1. That theſe viſions have relation to the ſtate of the Jews, to the end of chap. xi.

from thence they relate to that of the Romans, to the end of chap. xx. and laſtly, to the moſt flouriſhing ſtate of the Chriſtian Church, in the two laſt chapters. (G.) 2. That in the deſcription of this throne, all things ſeems to allude to the old tabernacle or temple; the throne itſelf anſwering to the Holy of Holies. (Idem) 3. That "he that ſate on the throne," is God the Father; ſaid to be "like a Jaſper, or a Sardine ſtone:" The former of which was a precious ſtone, ſo call'd in the Hebrew, from the firmneſs and hardneſs of it, as being unmalleable; thereby denoting God's omnipotence: And the latter one; ſo call'd by the Greeks, from the city Sardis near to which they abounded; and by the Hebrews Odam, from its deep red and fiery colour; repreſenting God as terrible in his judgments as a flaming fire, Hebr. xii. 29. (G. Adams, Hall, Aſſ. H. Stanh. B. and Wells) And, 4. That "round about the throne," (or rather, cyclothen, in a circular form, over the top of it) "there was a rain bow, in ſight like unto an emerald:" Which, being a precious ſtone, of a moſt beautiful green colour, repreſenteth God's mercy in the midſt of his judgments, and his gracious preſervation of the faithful, even while he is puniſhing the obdurate; as the rain-bow itſelf is a token of his being ever mindful of his covenant. (Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) So that, in a word, he is repreſented in ſuch appearances, as denoted his power, his juſtice, and his mercy, and the faithfulneſs of his covenant with mankind. (Stanh.) See Dr. Wells at large on this text; and the notes here following.

And round about the throne.] Obſerve here, 1. Who are meant by the "four and twenty elders." Some underſtand it of the Twelve Patriarchs, and the Twelve Apoſtles, as repreſentatives of the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Church. (Hall, Aſſ. and B.) And tho' this conjecture ſeems rational enough; yet others interpret it of the Preſbyters of Jeruſalem, or rather of the Biſhops of Judea; whom they ſuppoſe to have been juſt four and twenty, at that time, anſwerable to the heads of the four and twenty courſes of the Prieſts, 1 Chron. xxiv. ſitting in council, with their Biſhop, or Metropolitan. (G. H. Frank, Stanh. and Wells) But this I ſhall leave to the criticks. Be that as it will, 2. Their dreſs or habit is here deſcrib'd to be "white raiment;" ſignifying their perfect righteouſneſs; (Hall) as well as their honour and triumph: (Aſſ.) And particularly repreſenting their prieſtly dignity (H. B. and Wells) As alſo that "they had on their heads crowns of gold;" ſignifying the glory wherewith they were inveſted; (Hall, and Aſſ.) That, as Kings, they do and ſhall reign with Chriſt for ever. (B.) This, 'tis certain, was promis'd by Chriſt, not only to his Apoſtles, but to the Angels, or Biſhops, who overcame: And therefore ſtephanoi may be here properly rendered, either mitres, or crowns, to denote thoſe who are honour'd with them, to be "a royal prieſthood," 1 Pet. ii. 9. that is, "made Kings and Prieſts unto God," Rev. i. 6. and v. 10. (H. Wells, and Wall) Agreeably to which, 3. They are repreſented "ſitting, round about the throne, upon four and twenty ſeats," or thrones (for the original word is the ſame in both) ſignifying ſeats of ſtate or judicature; (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. and Wells) Twelve on one hand, and twelve on the other, in a ſemicircular form. (Aſſ. H. and Wall) And, 4. Since we ſerve a Maſter, who communicates to his Miniſters, his authority and power upon earth, and gives them marks and badges of it, he teacheth us to honour them on earth, by crowning them himſelf, and placing them on thrones in Heaven. (Q.) See Dr. Hammond at large on this text; and the notes on ch. i. 6, 13. and iii. 4. Matth. xix. 28. Rom. x. 15. 1 Cor. iv. 1. and 1 Pet. ii. 9.

Lightnings and thundrings.] Repreſenting the threatnings denounc'd by God againſt the wicked. (G. H and Stanh.)

Seven lamps.] Repreſenting thoſe in the tabernacle and temple, before the mercy-ſeat. (Wells)

The ſeven Spirits of God.] See the notes on ch. i. 4.

A ſea of glaſs.] An alluſion to the brazen ſea in the temple; in which the High-prieſt and his ſons did waſh themſelves, before they adminiſter'd in holy things; ſignifying that purity which is requir'd in all the worſhippers of God, and eſpecially in his miniſters: And becauſe the uſe of this ſea in the temple is made good in Chriſt, the laver of his blood may be ſignified by this "ſea of glaſs;" which is compar'd to cryſtal, denoting the ſpotleſs innocence of his perſon and ſufferings, and the purity and clearneſs of his juſtified members. Others will have, this "ſea of glaſs" to be a repreſentation of the world: Which, they ſay, is compar'd to the ſea for its inſtability, tempeſtuouſneſs, and uncertain motion; to "a ſea of glaſs," for its ſlipperineſs and brittleneſs; to "a ſea of glaſs, like unto cryſtal," becauſe of the clearneſs and tranſparency of it; and that "before the throne," becauſe all the counſels and actions of men are naked and open to the all-ſeeing eye of God. (B.) Of this laſt opinion I find Adams, Hall, and Wells, as well as Grotius, Hammond and Stanhope; tho' theſe laſt three do underſtand it more immediately of the people of the Jews. See Mr. T. Adams's ſermon on this text, 1615.

Four beaſts.] Note here, 1. That our Tranſlation which renders the word zoa, by beaſts, ſeems very improper, and harſh and intolerably indecent, when applied to the Saints and Dignities of Heaven: Beſides, it conveys a lower idea than the word zoon does, in its primary ſignification. Plato uſeth it for a rational creature: And St. Peter, ſpeaking of brute beaſts, 2 Pet. ii. 12. does not uſe the ſimple word zoa only, but diſtinguiſheth it by adding the epithet aloga; which he needed not to have done, if zoa alone had ſufficiently expreſs'd beaſts, or brute beaſts, that is, irrational creatures. For want of a more expreſſive word therefore, we ſhould content ourſelves with its primary ſignification, (being derived from zoe, life) and render the teſſara zoa, here, four living creatures; as it is interpreted by Beza, Grotius, the Aſſembly-men, H. Frank, Hickes, Wells, Blackwall, Wall, and Newton. 2. That who are here repreſented under this character, is matter of much diſpute. Some do hereby underſtand the four cardinal virtues; by the lion, fortitude; by the calf, or ox, juſtice; by the eagle, temperance; and by the man, prudence: Whereby they intimate, that that there is no way to praiſe and glorify God like that of a virtuous life. Others interpret it of the four chief faculties of the ſoul, with all which we are to praiſe; the iraſcible, intimated by the lion; the concupiſcible, by the calf; the rational, by the man; and the Spirit by the eagle. Others think it repreſents the whole world, conſiſting of the four elements; the fire being meant by the lion; the earth by the calf; the air by the man; and the water by the eagle. Others underſtand it, as an hieroglyphical expreſſion of God's being ſlow to anger, and ſwift to mercy; the calf (or ox) ſignifying ſlowneſs, the lion anger, the eagle ſwiftneſs, and the man mercy. Others, as an hieroglyphic of Chriſt himſelf; who, in his infancy, appear'd only as a man; in his paſſion, like a calf, or ox, for ſacrifice; in his reſurrection, like a lion; and, in his aſcenſion, like an eagle. Others think theſe to be four Churches, keeping up the conſtant uſe of prayer and praiſe, with the four and twenty elders belonging to them, ver. 9, 10. Or rather, the Chriſtian Church in four ſeveral ſtates, in four ſeveral ages. 1. The Primitive Church like a lion, with the ſtrength of faith and patience. 2. Like an ox, labouring under hardſhips and perſecutions, and incumbrance of Hereticks, till the time of Conſtantine. 3. Under the Chriſtian emperors, with a face like a man. And, 4. In the time of apoſtaſy, with "two wings of a great eagle, that ſhe might fly into the wilderneſs," ch. xii. 14. as here the eagle is repreſented flying. (Wall) Many take it to be meant of all true Preachers, repreſented by the four Evangeliſts; of whom St. Matthew is compar'd to a man, becauſe he begins with the pedigree of Chriſt, as he is man; St. Mark to a lion, becauſe he begins with the voice of John the Baptiſt, like a lion, roaring in the wilderneſs; St. Luke to a calf, becauſe with the ſtory of a ſacrifiſing Prieſt; and St. John to an eagle, becauſe he ſoars aloft, beginning with Chriſt's Divinity: (Of which opinion I find the Rhemiſh Divines, Godwin, the Aſſembly-men, and Burkitt) But others interpret it to repreſent the four Apoſtles, who ſate with St. James the Bp. of Jeruſalem, and the elders, in the great council there, Acts xv. Among whom they compare St. Peter to the lion, for his fiery zeal and fervour; St. Paul to the calf, or ox, becauſe of his abundant labours; St. Barnabas to the man, as being a ſon of conſolation; and St. John to an eagle, for the ſublimity of his Divine Speculations: (Which opinion is preferr'd by Grotius, Hammond and Frank). 3. That this whole viſion is an alluſion to the manner of the encampment of the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, round about the tabernacle; viz. Three tribes on the eaſt-ſide, under the ſtandard of Judah, which was a lion; three more on the weſt, under the ſtandard of Ephraim, which was an ox; three more on the ſouth, under the ſtandard of Reuben, which was a man; and three more on the north, under the ſtandard of Dan, Numb. ii. Whence were fram'd thoſe hieroglyphicks of cherubims and ſeraphims, with the like four faces: One of which ſeraphims, being thus plac'd on each ſide of the throne, do ſignify together the twelve tribes of Iſrael. (Godw. H. Frank, Stanh. Wells, and Newton) 4. That they are deſcrib'd to be "full of eyes, before and behind, and within; ſignifying their great knowledge and perſpicacity, and their being endued with all manner of gifts and illuminations of the Holy Ghoſt; by which they knew things both preſent and to come; (G. and Hall) and particularly the types and prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and the momentous events under the New: (H. and Stanh.) Or, with which they look'd forward to God, and backward to the people, and within to themſelves. (Aſſ. and B.) And to have "each of them ſix wings;" ſignifying their agility and readineſs to execute the will and pleaſure of God. (Hall, Stanh. Q. and Wells) And, 5. The perpetual imployment and work of Saints in Heaven; viz. Inceſſantly to praiſe God, and ſet forth the Trinity of Perſons in the Godhead, and the ſupreme authority, unity of eſſence, omnipotence and eternity of God. (Rhem. Aſſ. Frank, Stanh. B. Wells and Q.) But then, 6. This phraſe of "not reſting, day and night," is properly to be underſtood only of ſett and ſolemn times; as appears from ver. 9, 10. For, if they had always given glory, &c. without intermiſſion; then the four and twenty elders muſt, in like manner, have continued always "down before him that ſate on the throne." (Wells) And therefore this paſſage is, by Sir Iſaac Newton, interpreted of the daily times of the Morning and Evening Sacrifices. See Dr. Donne's and Dr. Frank's ſermons, and Dr. Hammond's notes at large on this text, and Dr. Stanhope's comment on the ſervice for Trinity-Sunday; and the notes on ch. i 4, 8.

Give glory, and honour.] See the notes on ch. i. 8, 18. and Rom. xi. 36.

Fall down before him.] See the notes on ver. 8. and ch. iii. 9.

And caſt their crowns.] In an humble acknowledgment that all their power and majeſty is deriv'd ſolely from him. (G. Hall, Aſſ. B. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 4.

For thy pleaſure.] See the notes on Rom. xi. 36.

CHAP. V.

The viſion of the book, ſeal'd with ſeven ſeals.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. AND I ſaw in the right hand of him that ſat on the throne, a book written within and on the backſide, ſealed with ſeven ſeals. And I ſaw a ſtrong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to looſe the ſeals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much becauſe no man was found worthy to open, and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders ſaith unto me, Weep not: Behold, the lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to looſe the ſeven ſeals thereof. And I beheld, and lo, in the midſt of the throne, and of the four beaſts, and in the midſt of the elders ſtood a lamb as it had been ſlain, having ſeven horns, and ſeven eyes, which are the ſeven Spirits of God ſent forth into all the earth. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that ſat upon the throne. And when he had taken the book, the four beaſts, and four and twenty elders fell down before the lamb, having every one of them, harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of ſaints. And they ſung a new ſong, ſaying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the ſeals thereof: For thou waſt ſlain, and haſt redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and haſt made us unto our God kings and Prieſts: And we ſhall reign on the earth. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beaſts, and the elders: and the number of them was ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſands of thouſands; ſaying with a loud voice, Worthy is the lamb that was ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing. And every creature which is in Heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and ſuch as are in the ſea, and all that are in them, heard I, ſaying, Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. And the four beaſts ſaid, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worſhipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

And I ſaw in the right-hand.] Epi ten dexian. Tho' the ordinary notion of the Greek prepoſition, epi, is not in, but at, or upon; (whence it is conceiv'd by ſome, that the book or roll was here laid at, or on "the right-hand of him that ſat on the throne") yet the promiſcuous uſe of prepoſitions in theſe books, (after the manner of the Hebrews, whoſe prepoſitions are uſed more looſely and largely) will give a full anſwer to this. It appears, by ver. 7. where the book is ſaid to be taken out of his right-hand, that it had till then been in it. Now, this book, containing in it the decrees of God's vengeance and judgment upon his enemies, the crucifiers of Chriſt, and perſecutors of Chriſtians, and this power being, by the reſurrection of Chriſt, ſeated and inſtated in Chriſt, as the reward of his ſufferings, and conſequently the execution of theſe decrees of God put into the hand of the Son; and this power being not to be deliver'd up again to the Father, till the end of the world; All this is here fitly and fully expreſs'd by the lamb's "taking the book out of the right-hand" of God the Father, (which could not ſo commodiouſly have been repreſented, if the book had lain by him, and had not been in his hand;) and by his looſing the ſeals, and opening the book; that is, bringing forth thoſe judgments of God, which lay folded up in his decrees, but were now to be remarkably executed by Chriſt. (H.) Where obſerve, yet further, 1. That (biblion) the book, is not here to be underſtood of a book of ſuch form as we now commonly uſe, but of a roll. (Mede, H. B. and Wells) See the notes on Luke iv. 17. and Heb. x. 7. 2. That ſome underſtand this volume to contain the Holy Scriptures: (Rhem.) Others, the decrees and counſels, the purpoſes and reſolutions of God, concerning the future ſtate of the Church, as they were to be fulfill'd according to propheſy; and brought to paſs in ſeveral ages, as the providence of God ſhould order and ſee fit. (Hall, Mede, Aſſ. B. and Wells) 3. That this was the book, which Daniel was commanded to ſeal up, Dan. xii. 4. and which is here repreſented by the prophetic book of the law, laid up on the right ſide of the ark, Deut. xxxi. 26. as it were "in the right-hand of him that ſat on the throne:" For, the feſtivals and ceremonies of the law, preſcrib'd to the people in this book, adumbrated thoſe things which were predicted in the Book of Daniel; and the "writing within and on the backſide" of this book, relates to the ſynchronal prophecies. (Newt.) 4. That, tho' Grotius, and ſome others, think the book was only "written within, and on the backſide ſealed;" yet the true reading is, that it was both "written within and on the backſide;" as appears, not only from the comma, plac'd after (opisthen) the backſide; but from its direct reference to the like in Ezek. ii. 10. and from the proceſs here, by which the opening of every ſeveral ſeal diſcovers ſome diſtinct repreſentation, which otherwiſe would have appear'd all at once, if the writing had been only within; and all the ſeals on the backſide. (Hall, H. B. Newt. and Wells) 5. That, where 'tis ſaid, "I ſaw a book, ſealed with ſeven ſeals," it muſt be underſtood of the figure prolepſis: For he now ſaw only one ſeal, on the outſide of the volume; and when that ſeal was open'd, diſcover'd the other ſix, one within another, on ſo many ſeveral rolls; which were all written within, and on the backſide alſo, a great way down; yet ſo as to leave juſt room enough unwritten for the rolling it up and ſealing. (G. Aſſ. and H.) 6. That it was thus fill'd up with writing, on the inſide and outſide, that there might be no room left for addition to it. (B.) And, 7. It is ſaid to be in God's right-hand; thereby denoting his authority to communicate the knowledge of it to whom he pleas'd, and alſo his power to execute his purpoſes when and how he pleas'd. (G. and B.) See Dr. Hammond more at large on this text.

A ſtrong Angel.] Iſchyron; a mighty one, or one of principal dignity and glory (Hall, H. and Wells)

Neither to look thereon.] Or rather, therein: No man was judg'd worthy to know or publiſh theſe great myſteries. (Aſſ.)

I wept much.] Fearing, no doubt, leſt the Church of God ſhould be depriv'd of the benefit and comfort of this revelation. (B.)

One of the elders.] See the notes on ch. iv. 4.

The lion of the tribe of Judah.] Thus did Jacob call Chriſt, Gen. xlix. 9. for his kingly fortitude, in ſubduing the world unto him: (Rhem. and B.) On account of which, a lion was always borne on the ſtandard of that tribe. (G.) We are told, in Natural Hiſtory, that a young lion ſleeps three days and three nights after he is whelp'd, and then is awak'd by the terrible roaring of the male which begat him: And thus (if it be true) he is in nature an emblem, as it were, of Chriſt; who ſlept the ſleep of death three days and three nights in the boſom of the earth. (Park.)

The root of David.] In a natural ſenſe, David was the root of Chriſt; but in a ſpiritual ſenſe, Chriſt was "the root of David:" David was the root of Chriſt, as a man; Chriſt, as Mediator and God-man, was "the root of David." Thus he was both David's Lord, and David's Son, Pſa. cx. 1. (B.) See the notes on Matth. i. 1. Luke xx. 41. and Rom. i. 3.

Hath prevailed.] That is, by his voluntary ſuffering of death, he hath obtain'd of his Father this privilege.

In the midſt of the throne.] That is, within the compaſs, between the throne and the four beaſts. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. iv. 6.

A

A lamb, as it had been ſlain.] That is, bearing upon him viſible marks and ſcars, ſigns and tokens of his by-paſt ſufferings and death. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. and B.) His appearing as a lamb ſlain denoted his death; as his ſtanding did his reſurrection: (B.) And both theſe ſignify his perpetual interceſſion for us, by virtue of his paſſion. (Aſſ.) See the notes on John i. 29. and xx. 27. Rom. viii. 34. and Hebr. ix. 15.

Seven horns, and ſeven eyes.] The horns denote his ſtrength and fulneſs of power, which he exerts in defence of his Church: And the eyes repreſent his Holy Spirit, in his manifold graces, given unto his Church; (G. Hall, Aſſ. B. and Wells) Or the ſeven principal Spirits, or Archangels, mention'd, ch. i. 4. (H. Newt. and Wells) In which text, and its context thus explain'd, we may obſerve, 1. A lively repreſentation of the three-fold office of Chriſt; viz. The ſacerdotal in the lamb ſlain; the regal in the horns; and the prophetical in the eyes. (Aſſ.) And, 2. A clear repreſentation of the three perſons in the Holy Trinity; viz. God, the Father, "ſitting on the throne;" Chriſt, the Lamb, ſtanding "in the midſt of the throne;" and the Holy Spirit, diſtinct from both, "ſent forth into all the earth." (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 4. and iv. 5, 6.

Took the book.] See the notes on ver. 1.

Fell down before the lamb.] See the notes on ch. iv. 10. Rom. xiv. 11. and Hebr. i. 6.

Harps.] Inſtruments of praiſe. (G. and Hall) An alluſion to the ſolemn ſervice of God in the ancient Church, 1 Cor. xxv. 1, &c. and Pſa. xcviii. 5. (Aſſ.) And to that of the Primitive Chriſtians. (Newt.) See the notes on ch. vi. 1.

The prayers of the Saints.) Who the Saints are, whoſe prayers are here mention'd as odours, may appear from ver. 10. where it is ſaid they "ſhall reign on the earth:" That is, the effect of the lamb's opening the book ſhould be this, that the Chriſtians ſhould thereby have a peaceable being upon earth, to aſſemble and ſerve Chriſt. By this 'tis evident, that the Saints here are the Chriſtian people upon earth, and not the Saints which reign in Heaven. And this alſo is agreeable to the notion of odours: For thoſe refer to the incenſe, which the Prieſts were wont to offer in the ſanctuary, while the people "prayed without, Luke i. 10. and their prayers were ſuppos'd to go up with that incenſe to Heaven. By this it alſo appears, that the four living creatures, and "four and twenty elders," who have here the vials in their hands, as alſo the harps, (the one to denote the prayers, the other the praiſes of the Chriſtians) are the Apoſtles and Biſhops of Judea; whoſe office it was to preſent the prayers and praiſes of the Chriſtians to God: And ſo, by all theſe together, the Chriſtian perſecuted Church of Judea, and by conſent with them, all other Chriſtians over the world, are repreſented here, as thoſe who had now their prayers heard; and thoſe, by the deſtruction of their perſecutors, turn'd into praiſes. (H) See the notes on Luke i. 10. and Hebr. xiii. 15.

Thou art worthy.] See the notes on ver. 13. ch. iv. 9. and John i. 29.

Haſt redeemed us.] See the notes on Acts xx. 28. Rom. iii. 24, &c. 1 Cor. i. 30. vi. 20. and vii. 23. Eph. i. 7. and 1 Pet. i. 18, 19.

Out of every kindred.] See the notes on Gal. iii. 26. Col. iii. 11. and Hebr. xii. 23.

Kings and Prieſts.] See the notes on ver. 8. ch. i. 6. iv. 4. and xx. 6. and 1 Pet. ii. 9.

Angels round about.] The Angels encompaſs God's Miniſters and people round about, to protect them, Pſa. xxxiv. 7. and xci. 11, 12. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on ch. iv. 4, 6.

The number of them.] An infinite number. See the notes on ch. vii. 9.

Worthy is the lamb.] Viz. To have all honour and praiſe given unto him. (Beza, Aſſ. and H. See the notes on ver. 13. ch. iv. 11. Rom. xvi. 20, 27. and 1 Cor. i. 30.

And every creature.] That is, all the orders of being, properly capable of praiſing and adoring the Sovereign Lord and benefactor of all. (Blackw.) See the notes on Rom. viii. 19, &c. xiv. 11. and xvi. 27. and 1 Tim. vi. 16.

And unto the lamb.] Note here, that the Saints addreſs their praiſes to Chriſt himſelf, as having a part in the redemption by him, ſaying, "Thou art worthy," &c. ver. 9. Whereas the Angels, and other creatures, ſpeak of him, as of one worthy to be prais'd for having done ſuch things for others; ſaying, "Worthy is the lamb," &c. ver. 12. and here "Unto the lamb," &c. (Aſſ.)

Amen.] See the notes on ch. iv. 10. and John xxi. 25.

CHAP. VI.

Six of the ſeals open'd; and what followed thereupon.

Ver. 1, 2. AND I ſaw, when the Lamb opened one of the ſeals, and I heard as it were the noiſe of thunder, one of the four beaſts ſaying, Come, and ſee. And I ſaw, and behold, a white horſe: and he that ſat on him had a bow, and a crown was given unto him, and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

Open'd one of the ſeals.] The viſions at the opening of theſe firſt four ſeals relate only to the civil affairs of the Heathen Roman empire. So long the Apoſtolic Traditions prevail'd, and preſerv'd the Church in its purity: And therefore the affairs of the Church do not begin to be conſider'd in this prophecy, before the opening of the fifth ſeal. (Newt.)

The noiſe of thunder.] Such a kind of voice, as is wont to come out of thunder, when a voice is heard from Heaven. (H.) The Goſpel is as it were a thunder, which makes itſelf to be heard from one end of the earth to the other, to invite men to come to Jeſus Chriſt. (Q.) See the notes on Acts ix. 6. and Rom. x. 18.

One of the four beaſts.] Or, the firſt of them. (G. and H.) Viz. That like a lion. (Aſſ.) Which appear'd on the eaſt ſide of the throne; the matters hereby ſignified being to be tranſacted chiefly in the eaſt. (Wells) See the notes on ch. iv. 7.

Saying, Come and ſee.] St. John ſtood far off, with a profound reverence, till he was call'd. 'Tis dangerous ſearching into God's ſecrets, and prying into his hidden counſels, till we have a call and commiſſion, from God himſelf, ſo to do. (Aſſ. and B.)

A white horſe.] For the underſtanding this viſion, obſerve, That the emblem of things in this period, repreſents the Chriſtian religion propagated, and triumphing glorioſly over the Heathen idolatry. (B. and Wall) The white horſe is generally interpreted of the Goſpel, becauſe of the Divinity and purity of its doctrine: "He that ſat on him" Chriſt himſelf; who rode ſwiftly, in the miniſtry of his Apoſtles, and other faithful teachers, in the firſt ages of Chriſtianity: The bow which he had, ſignifying the threatnings denounc'd againſt his enemies, before they were inflicted on them: And the crown given to him, that kingly dignity and honour, to which Chriſt, the lamb that was ſlain, was now exalted; who had begun to conquer already, and ſhould proceed to conquer, till he had ſubdued all his enemies. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. Wells and Q.) And this period is ſuppos'd to begin immediately after Chriſt's aſcenſion. (Wells) See the notes on ch. i. 14.

Ver. 3, 4. And when he had opend the ſecond ſeal, I heard the ſecond beaſt ſay, Come, and ſee. And there went out another horſe that was red: And power was given to him that ſat thereon, to take peace from the earth, and that they ſhould kill one another: And there was given unto him a great ſword.

Opened the ſecond ſeal.] This period is ſuppos'd to relate to the great ſlaughters and maſſacres, made under the emperors Trajan and Adrian. (Wells) When (eſpecially in Adrian's time) there were moſt bloody ſlaughters, chiefly of the Jews. Thoſe of them who were left, after Titus's time, being poſſeſs'd with a mad rage againſt the Romans, never ceas'd rebelling, in ſeveral provinces, till they were almoſt all kill'd; tho' they ſlew great numbers of their enemies. (Wall) But, according to Dr. Hammond's reckoning, this period muſt commence much ſooner. See him at large on this text.

The ſecond beaſt.] Viz. That which was like a calf; or rather, an ox (Aſſ.) Which appear'd on the weſt-ſide of the throne; the firſt of thoſe emperors, who are repreſented by this viſion, being Trajan, a Spaniard, of the weſtern part of the Roman empire, as divers of his ſucceſſors alſo were. (Wells) See the notes on ch. iv. 7.

Another horſe, that was red.] That is, of a bloody colour; denoting firſt the dreadful executions of God's wrath upon the Jews; to which purpoſe the viſion repreſented a ſword in the hand of the deſtroying Angel, which rode upon this horſe, ſignifying the dreadful ſlaughters which would be committed upon the Jews, as well by one another, as by their enemies: But others, ſecondly, by him that ſat on this red horſe, underſtand thoſe bloody Roman emperors, who perſecuted the Primitive Chriſtians ſo fiercely, that (as Euſebius relates) whole cities were full of dead bodies, old and young, male and female, expos'd naked, without any regard to ſex or perſons. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H.

B. and Wells) See Dr. Hammond here at large; and the notes on Matth. xxiv. 7. Mark xiii. 14. and Luke xxi. 8, &c.

Ver. 5, 6. And when he had opened the third ſeal, I heard the third beaſt ſay, Come, and ſee. And I beheld, and lo, a black horſe; and he that ſat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midſt of the four beaſts ſay, A meaſure of wheat for a penny; and three meaſures of barley for a penny; and ſee thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

The third beaſt.] Viz. That which had the face of a man; (Aſſ.) and appear'd on the ſouth-ſide of the throne. By which is denoted, that the interval of time belonging to this ſeal, was to begin with the emperor Severus, an African, and conſequently of the ſouth part of the Roman empire. (Wells) This is agreeable to the interpretation of Mr. Mede; (follow'd alſo by Mr. Whiſton) who confeſſes, that the black horſe, the balances, and the "meaſure of wheat for a penny," ſeem to denote a famine; and that he ſhould have taken them in that ſenſe, if the event had anſwer'd: But he, making the diſtance of time, from the beginning of Severus, A. D. 193. to the end of Alexander, A. D. 235. to be the meaſure of this period, finds therein plenty, juſtice, &c. But there is no need of limiting this third ſeal to thoſe 42 years: And it is probable, that times of ſcarcity may be found in hiſtory about thoſe times; ſee Lactant. de mort. Black ſignifies famiſhed: A chœnix (that is, as our late gagers ſay, a quart) of wheat for a denarius, (ſeven-pence, or eight-pence) is very dear, and will make wheat above thirty ſhillings a buſhel, and ſo proportionably for barley: And "a pair of balances," to weigh the victuals, is like what is ſaid, Ezek. iv. 16. "I will break the ſtaff of bread in Jeruſalem, and they ſhall eat bread by weight, and with care, and they ſhall drink warer by meaſure, and with aſtoniſhment." (Wall) Accordingly, it is obſervable, 1. That, tho' the black colour of the horſe might fitly anſwer the ſeverity and ſtrictneſs of juſtice obſerv'd by Severus, as alſo Severus's perſon, both for country and quality; (Wells) Yet blackneſs is in Scripture a note of extreme dearth and famine, Lament. iv. 8. (Aſſ.) And ſo it is commonly interpreted here. (Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Q.) 2. That tho' the "pair of balances" be ordinarily an emblem of juſtice; yet the "delivering out bread by weight" was not uſual, but in times of ſcarcity, Lev. xxvi. 26. and Ezek. iv. 16. (Aſſ. and H.) 3. That the Roman penny being the ordinary wages of a labourer for a day's work, Matth. xx. 2. and this to go only for ſuch a quantity of bread as was but barely ſufficient to keep him alive one day; he muſt conſequently be deſtitute of all other neceſſaries for himſelf, and even of bread too for the reſt of his family; and it muſt needs go hard with him when all his wages goes for his daily bread. (Beza, Aſſ. and B.) 4. That tho' ſome do interpret the famine here repreſented, to be meant of a ſpiritual famine, or ſcarcity of the word of God, ſuch as happen'd under the ten perſecutions; (when many of the brighteſt lamps of the Church were extinguiſh'd, and others hid under a buſhel) yet the connexion of this with the other repreſentations, upon opening the firſt four ſeals, do fairly imply the neceſſity of underſtanding it of a ſcarcity of bread and food for natural life. For as Chriſt himſelf is repreſented under the firſt ſeal with a bow; ſo the deſtroying angels are repreſented under the other three with the uſual darts of war, famine, and peſtilence, as 2 Sam. xxiv. 13. And the order of them here is very natural. For war cauſes ſcarcity; ſcarcity famine; and famine, for want of proper and wholeſome food, naturally cauſes the peſtilence. (G.) See the notes on ch. iv. 7. Luke xxi. 8, &c. and Acts xi. 8, &c. and that which next follows.

Ver. 7, 8. And when he had opened the fourth ſeal, I heard the voice of the fourth beaſt ſay, Come, and ſee. And I looked, and behold, a pale horſe; and his name that ſat on him was Death, and hell followed with him: And power was given unto them, over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with ſword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beaſts of the earth.

The fourth beaſt.] Viz. That which was "like a flying eagle;" and appear'd on the north-ſide of the throne. This is interpreted by Dr. Wells (agreeably with Mr. Mede and Mr. Whiſton) of the times under the emperor Maximin, a Thracian, from the northern parts of the empire; when war, famine and peſtilence rag'd ten years together: But Sr. Iſaac Newton chuſes to begin this period with the reign of Decius, and to continue it till the reign of Diocleſian: And ſo he would have the third period (deſcrib'd by the black horſe) continued to the end of the reigns of the three Gordians, and Philip the Arabian, who were all kings from the ſouth, as well as Severus was. But here we muſt obſerve, 1. That the pale horſe with his rider is clearly enough expreſs'd to mean death; which maketh men's bodies pale, and wan, and ghaſtly. (Aſſ. and B.) That hades, which we here, and elſewhere commonly, tranſlate hell, following death, is to be underſtood of the grave, or ſtate of corruption; as we have noted on Matth. xi. 23. Luke xvi. 23. and Acts ii. 27. (Hall, B. and Wells) 2. That this phraſe, "power was given unto them," is not to be underſtood of death and hell, but that this power was given unto this, and the two foregoing Angels, to kill, viz. One with the ſword, another with famine, and this with the peſtilence. (G. H. and B.) See Dr. Hammond at large on this text; and the notes on ver. 6. and ch. iv. 7.

Ver. 9, 10, 11. And when he had opened the fifth ſeal, I ſaw under the altar the ſouls of them that were ſlain for the word of God, and for the teſtimony which they held. And they cried with a loud voice, ſaying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, doſt thou not judge and avenge our blood, on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given to every one of them, and it was ſaid unto them, that they ſhould reſt yet for a little ſeaſon, until their fellow-ſervants alſo, and their brethren that ſhould be killed as they were, ſhould be fulfilled.

The fifth ſeal.] Under this repreſentation St. John has a viſion of the condition of thoſe precious ſouls of the Holy Martyrs, who died for the teſtimony of Chriſt, by the bloody hand of tyrants; the deſign of which is to ſupport and encourage all who were to come after them in the ſame bloody path. (B.) And now the affairs of the Church begin to be conſider'd; and particularly the perſecutions ſet on foot by Diocleſian and Maximian, till the victory of Conſtantine the Great over Licinius, A. D. 323. to which period, and the next following, the Epiſtles to the ſeven Churches, (ch. ii. and iii.) ſeem properly to be referr'd. (Newton, Wells, and Wall) And note here, 1. That where the Apoſtle ſays, he ſaw the ſouls, it muſt not be taken literally, as if he could have ſeen ſuch immaterial ſubſtances with his external ſenſes; but only that they were ſeen by him in Spirit. (B.) 2. That he thus ſaw them "under the altar;" that is, lying at the foot of the altar, as ſacrifices ſlain and preſented unto God. (G. Aſſ. and B.) 3. That "they cried, with a loud voice, ſaying, How long, O Lord," &c. Not that ſouls can ſpeak audibly to the ears of men; nor that they have any ſenſe of ſufferings when they are in glory, or in a reſtleſs ſtate: Much leſs doth this cry ſuppoſe, that they carried with them to Heaven any angry reſentments, or revengful diſpoſitions, towards their murderers. But this their cry ſuppoſes in them a fervent zeal for the glory of God; a flagrant deſire that God would clear their innocence, and make known his juſtice among men; that he would aboliſh the kingdom of Satan, and conſummate the kingdom of Chriſt, making all his enemies to become his footſtool: So that they only pray for what Chriſt himſelf waits for in glory, Hebr. x. 13. And all the revenge here deſir'd, was only a vindication of God's holineſs and truth, which he himſelf had promis'd. (Rhem. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Q.) And, 4. That the gracious anſwer to their cry ſpeaks ſatisfaction to them, preſent and future; For, 1. At preſent "white robes were given unto every one of them;" that is, large meaſures of heavenly glory, as the reward of their ſufferings, beyond other Saints: And, 2. The very things they cry for, ſhall be given them, after "a little ſeaſon;" tho' God had yet more to call unto ſufferings beſides them; and they having alſo conquer'd, they ſhould be crown'd all together. As if God had ſaid, Ye, my faithful witneſſes, wait a little while, till your brethren be got through the red-ſea of ſufferings as well as you; and then ye ſhall ſee the feet of Chriſt upon the necks of all his enemies, and juſtice ſhall fully avenge the innocent blood of all the Saints, which has in all ages, been ſhed "for the word of God, and for the teſtimony which they held." (G. Hall, H. B. and Wells) See Dr. Hammond here at large; and the notes on ver. 1. ch. ii. 10. and iii. 4, 5, 18. Matth. xxiii. 35. Luke xviii. 7. and xxiii. 34. 1 Cor. i. 6. 1 Theſſ. ii. 16. and Hebr. xi. 40.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. And I beheld when he had opened the ſixth ſeal, and lo, there was a great earth-quake, and the ſun became black as ſackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the ſtars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree caſteth her untimely figs, when ſhe is ſhaken of a mighty wind: And the heaven departed as a ſcroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and iſland, were moved out of their places: And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free-man hid themſelves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains; and ſaid to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the lamb: For the great day of his wrath is come; and who ſhall be able to ſtand?

The ſixth ſeal.] This ſeal, and the opening it, is variouſly interpreted by expoſitors. 1 Some apply it wholly to the Jews; and obſerve, that their deſtruction in Judea and Jeruſalem was ſo diſmal, as to be repreſented to St. John, in ſuch a manner as if Heaven and earth were diſſolving. 2. Others apply it to the overthrow of Paganiſm, and the deſtruction of the Heathen emperors: The fall of Paganiſm, by means of Conſtantine's converſion to the faith, being the moſt terrible ſhock that ever befel the Devil's kingdom; and accordingly, by the earth-quake, the ſun becoming black, the moon becoming as blood, and the ſtars falling, is underſtood the great changes made in the Roman empire, by overturning the whole Pagan ſtate, and making Chriſtianity the religion of the greateſt part of the world; ſo that theſe metaphorical expreſſions ſignify a great and general alteration of the face of affairs, as if the world was to be another thing. 3 Others interpret all this of the great and horrible confuſions of the Chriſtian world under antichriſt; when Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs, began to be obſcur'd in his doctrine; the moon, his Church, turn'd into blood; the ſtars or paſtors of it, fallen from their heavenly offices; the Scriptures (like the Heavens rolled together) forbidden to be read; the mountains (meaning kings and princes) in jeopardy; and the iſlands brought under antichriſt's yoke and tyranny. And, 4. Some apply all this to the laſt diſſolution of the world, and the final judgment at the great day. (B.) Among theſe different opinions, I find the firſt eſpous'd by Dr. Hammond; and the third by the Rhemiſh Divines; tho' they are far enough from applying it to an antichriſt among themſelves. Thoſe who adhere to the fourth, ground their interpretation upon the following verſes, which they underſtand alſo literally of the day of judgment: But the third of theſe opinions is preferr'd by the Aſſembly-men, as alſo by Sir Iſaac Newton, Dr. Wells, and Dr. Wall. I leave it therefore to the critics, to diſpute this queſtion; referring my readers to what is already noted on ver. 9. ch. i. 7. iv. 2. and v. 6. Matth. xxiv. 16, &c. Luke xxi. 25, &c. and xxiii. 30. 2 Theſſ. ii. 3. and 2 Pet. iii. 10.

CHAP. VII.

The ſervants of God both Jews and Gentiles ſealed, before the day of vengeance: And the happy ſtate deſcrib'd, of thoſe who ſuffer'd perſecution for Chriſt's ſake.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. AND after theſe things, I ſaw four angels ſtanding on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind ſhould not blow on the earth, nor on the ſea, nor on any tree. And I ſaw another angel aſcending from the eaſt, having the ſeal of the living God: And he cried with a loud voice to the four Angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the ſea, ſaying, Hurt not the earth, neither the ſea, nor the trees, till we have ſealed the ſervants of our God in their foreheads. And I heard the number of them which were ſealed: And there were ſealed an hundred and forty and four thouſand, of all the tribes of the children of Iſrael. Of the tribe of Judah were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Reuben were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Gad were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Aſer were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Nephtalim were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Manaſſes were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Simeon were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Levi were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Iſſachar were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Zabulon were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Joſeph were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were ſealed twelve thouſand. After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, ſtood before the throne, and before the Lamb, cloathed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Salvation to our God, which ſitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb. And all the Angels ſtood round about the throne, and about the elders, and the four beaſts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worſhipped God, ſaying, Amen: Bleſſing, and glory, and wiſdom, and thankſgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen. And one of the elders anſwered, ſaying unto me, What are theſe which are arayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I ſaid unto him, Sir, thou knoweſt. And he ſaid to me, Theſe are they which came out of great tribulation, and have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and ſerve him day and night in his temple: And he that ſitteth on the throne ſhall dwell among them. They ſhall hunger no more, neither thirſt any more, neither ſhall the ſun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midſt of the throne, ſhall feed them, and ſhall lead them unto living fountains of waters: And God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

After theſe things.] After the opening the firſt ſix ſeals, in the foregoing chapter, and what appear'd thereupon; and before the opening the ſeventh ſeal, ch. viii. (Aſſ.) While the Apoſtle doubted what might become of God's Church, in the midſt of the perſecutions and deſtructions which had been foreſhew'd him, he ſaw the deſtroying Angels powerfully reſtrain'd from executing their office, for ſome time, till the ſervants of God were firſt mark'd for preſervation, as the houſes of the Iſraelites were, Exod. xii. 13. that the deſtroyer might paſs over, and not touch them. (Hall, H. Bever. Stanh. B. and Wells) Where note, 1. That the Angels, being miniſtring ſpirits, part of whoſe office it is, to keep wars and other calamities from ariſing in the ſeveral parts of the world, or to cauſe them to ariſe, when God pleaſes; they are therefore here repreſented "ſtanding on the four corners of the earth," as being ready to execute ſuch orders as he ſhall give them. (G. Aſſ. B. and Wells) 2. That theſe four Angels were the firſt four of "the ſeven Angels," who, upon opening the ſeventh ſeal, ch. viii. 2. were ſeen with their ſeven trumpets. (Newt.) 3. That "the four winds," which they are here ſaid to hold, denote any kind of calamities which they ſhall be commanded to inflict. (G. Aſſ. B. and Wells) 4. That by the earth here, ſome underſtand only the land of Judea: (G. and H.) Others, the whole Roman empire. (Aſſ. and Wells) But whichſoever it was, 5. "Another Angel aſcending from the eaſt," that is, from Chriſt, and commanding them to ſuſpend the execution, ſhews us God's ſpecial care and protection of his ſervants, in the midſt of all dangers and impending judgments. (H. Bever. Stanh. B. and Wells) 6. That the ſeal, or mark, imprinted in their foreheads, is an alluſion to the ſign of the croſs, which Chriſtians bear in their foreheads, to ſhew they are not aſham'd of Chriſt crucified, and to admoniſh them to fight manfully under his banner. (Rhem. G. Stanh. and Wells) Or, it may alſo allude to a tradition of the Jews, that in the beginning of every new year three books are open'd in judgment; the book of life, in which are written the names of the juſt; the book of death, wherein are written thoſe of Atheiſts and the wicked; and a third book of thoſe whoſe judgment is ſuſpended till the day of expiation, when their names are written into either the book of life or death. The firſt ten days the Jews call the penitential days: And on all thoſe days they faſt and pray very devoutly, that on the tenth their names may be written in the book of life; on which day, their ordinary ſalutation to one another is, God the Creator ſeal you to a good year. (Newt.) See Dr. Donne's Sermon on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 17. and iii. 10. Luke i. 78. and John iii. 8.

The number of them which were ſealed.] From the number of theſe ſealed, we are by no means warranted to conclude, that ſo many, and no more, were ſav'd out of each tribe of Iſrael: But as the manner of reckoning by Tribes was alluſive, and had a retroſpect to the Old diſpenſation, ſo the number of the ſealed here bears a particular regard to the Miniſters of the New. The converſions wrought among their own country-men might well be repreſented by many thouſands in every tribe; for this was but juſtice to the wonderful ſucceſs of their indefatigable labours: And thoſe thouſands are moſt fitly multiplied by twelve, becauſe this was an honour due to the college of the Apoſtles, the principal labourers in this ſpiritual harveſt. (Stanh. and Wells.) And yet this number of, an hundred and forty and four thouſand, of all the tribes of the children of Iſrael, tho' great in it ſelf, was very ſmall in compariſon of the whole people at that time; not above a thirtieth part, at the higheſt computation imaginable. (H.) See Dr. Hammond here at large for the particulars. As to the tribes here mention'd, we may obſerve, 1. That they are plac'd in a different order from that uſual elſewhere: The reaſon of which is neither ſo clear, nor of ſuch moment, as to be entitled to a place here. Mr. Mede's conjecture is mention'd by Dr. Wells for its ingenuity; to whom the inquiſitive may eaſily have recourſe. What ſeems moſt worthy our notice, is, That all who are truly in Chriſt, whether bond or free, high or low, rich or poor, have an equal concern in the diſtribution of ſpiritual advantages; ſince, on thoſe accounts, "God is no reſpecter of perſons". (G. Stanh. and Wells.) 2. That, nevertheleſs, "the tribe of Judah" is plac'd firſt, probably, in regard to its being the tribe, of which Chriſt condeſcended to come in the fleſh. (Stanh. and Wells.) 3. That the tribe of Ephraim is not mention'd by his own name, but that of his father Joſeph; partly, as is ſuppos'd, to bring to mind that innocence and conſtancy in his ſuffering, and that reward and exaltation conſequent to it, wherein the patience and preſervation of the ſealed bore ſo eminent a reſemblance to the virtues and fortunes of Joſeph. (Stanh.) And partly, becauſe Bethel belonging to the tribe of Ephraim, which was one of the two places, infamous for Rebels and Schiſmaticks, (revolters from the government ſettled in the line of David, and ſeparatiſts from the eſtabliſh'd church at Jeruſalem) was therefore judg'd altogether improper to typify faithful chriſtians. (Idem, and Wells.) As was alſo 4. Dan, on the ſame account; which is quite omitted, for that reaſon: (Aſſ. Stanh. B. and Wells.) But others aſſign various reaſons for this; viz. either that Antichriſt was to come of the tribe of Dan; (Wells) tho' it does not any where appear, that ever Almighty God puniſh'd a people for any ſin, before they committed it: (B.) Or elſe, that the tribe of Dan was, long before this time, deſtroy'd, or at leaſt, brought ſo very low, as not to be number'd among the other tribes, even in their chronicles. (G. and H.) But, 5. To make up the full number twelve, the tribe of Levi is reckon'd; which tho' they had no inheritance of their own in the earthly Canaan, (but were diſpers'd among the reſt, to teach them the law of the Lord) and therefore were not wont to be number'd there as a diſtinct tribe; yet their portion in Chriſt being as good as any, they were not to be omitted here: (G. Aſſ. H. Stanh. B. and Wells.) Yea, they were, of all others, the moſt proper to repreſent thoſe heavenly-minded ſaints, who choſe to make the Lord their only portion, by forſaking all, and following him. (Stanh.) Which alſo affords us this great conſolation, that tho' many of us have no earthly poſſeſſions, and ſome are even cut ſhort of outward comforts; yet our title to the heavenly inheritance is good; and as we have reaſon to truſt in God's providence and protection here, ſo we ſhall have our portion with him hereafter, as the reward of our conſtancy and fidelity. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on Acts x. 34. and xiii. 48. Rom. xi. 26. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 3.

A great multitude.] Obſerve here, 1. That as the foregoing number ſignified the converted Jews, of all the tribes of the children of Iſrael, ver. 4. ſo theſe repreſent the Gentiles, "of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues"; (Rhem. Hall, Aſſ. Stanh. and Wall.) Or, probably, the whole Chriſtian church, collected out of both Jews and Gentiles; according to the promiſe made unto Abraham, Gen. xxii. 18. that "in his ſeed ſhould all the nations of the earth be bleſſed": (G. H. and Wells.) And theſe were innumerable, in compariſon of the former, (Aſſ.) which they could not have been, unleſs they had been made ſo by the preaching of the Goſpel. (Newt..) 2. That theſe "ſtood before the throne, and before the Lamb;" as not having their minds ſet upon earthly things, but rais'd to the things above: (G.) Or, as preſenting themſelves to God, after their reſpective conflicts and conqueſts: (Aſſ) 3. That their being "clothed with white robes," was a token of their innocence, for which they were approv'd of God, and receiv'd into the number of the bleſſed: (Stanh. and Wells.) As the "palms in their hands" were a token of their victory and triumph over the enemies of the Church. (G. Hall, Aſſ. Stanh. B. and Wells.) 4. That (Soteria) Salvation being the word, which moſt properly ſignifies the deliverance of them who are ſaid to be ſealed; their crying (Soteria Theo) "Salvation to our God," muſt be the acknowledging it to be his ſpecial act, and giving him all the praiſe and honour of it. (Hall, Aſſ. H. Stanh. B. and Wells.) And, 5. That theſe viſions of the 144000, and of the palm-bearing multitude, extend to the ſounding the ſeventh trumpet, and therefore are ſynchronal to the times of the ſeventh Seal. (Newt. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 1, 4, 14. iii. 4. v. 11, 13. and vi. 9. Matth. xxiv. 16. &c. Luke 24. John xli 13. Rom. xi. 26. and Gal. 3. 8..

And all the Angels ſtood.] See the notes on ch. iv. 4, &c. and v. 8, &c. and Heb. i. 14.

One of the Elders anſwered.] Apecrithe. As the Hebrew word gnavah, ſo is the Greek word apocrinomai often uſed in the beginning of a ſpeech, when no queſtion went before; and ſo it is here. (Leigh.) See the notes on ch. iii. 4. and iv. 4.

Sir, Thou knoweſt.] In ſeveral manuſcripts, and in the vulgar Latin, the Syriac and Arabic verſions, and in Arethas and Cyprian, this text is read Kyrie mou; which might therefore be rendred My Lord: And no wonder, ſince we find the ſame appellation given to meer men in the Holy Scripture. (Wells.)

Which came out of great tribulation.] As Confeſſors, tho' not actually Martyrs; having ventur'd their lives conſtantly for Chriſt. (G. and H.) See Dr. Featly's and Mr. Cotton's ſermons on this text; and the notes on ch. vi. 9. and Acts xvi. 22.

White, in the blood of the Lamb.] That is, cleanſed from the guilt of their ſins; not by their ſufferings, but by the blood of Chriſt, by virtue whereof alſo they obtain'd the victory. (Hall, and Aſſ) See the notes on ch. i. 5. Acts xx. 28. and Heb. ix. 14.

Day and night.] Alluding to the Levites ſervices and waſhings. (Beza, Aſſ. and B.)

Shall dwell among them.] Scenoſei; ſhall ſpread a tent over them, for their defence and protection. (Beza, G. and Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Cor. vi. 16.

Shall feed them.] See the notes on John x. 11.

The ſeventh ſeal open'd. The viſion of ſeven Angels, with ſeven trumpets: Four of them ſounded; and what follow'd.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND when he had opened the ſeventh ſeal, there was ſilence in heaven about the ſpace of half an hour. And I ſaw the ſeven angels which ſtood before God; and to them were given ſeven trumpets. And another angel came and ſtood at the altar, having a golden cenſer; and there was given unto him much incenſe, that he ſhould offer it with the prayers of all ſaints upon the golden altar, which was before the throne. And the ſmoke of the incenſe which came with the prayers of the ſaints, aſcended up before God out of the angels hand. And the angel took the cenſer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and caſt it into the earth: and there were voices and thundrings, and lightnings, and an earthquake. And the ſeven angels which had the ſeven trumpets, prepared themſelves to ſound.

Opened the ſeventh ſeal.] This viſion gives us a lively repreſentation of the ſervice in the temple at the time of offering incenſe: For, 1. The ſilence "for half an hour," alludes to the people, praying by themſelves ſilently, in the court, (as uſual) while the high-prieſt was offering in the ſanctuary; 2. "The ſeven angels which ſtood before God," allude to the prieſts in the temple, ſtanding ready to ſound their trumpets: 3. "Another angel," which "ſtood at the altar," alludes to the high-prieſt, offering incenſe; with which the people's prayers are ſuppos'd to aſcend up to God: 4. The "fire of the altar," with which he filled the cenſer, "and caſt into the earth," alludes to the fire, which conſumed the burnt-offerings; And, 5 "The voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and earthquake," allude to the ſinging and ſounding of trumpets, and other inſtruments, "until the burnt-offering was finiſhed," 2 Chron. xxix. 27, 28. and the reſemblance of lightning from the fire of the altar. (Rhem. Aſſ. H. B. Wells and Newt.) where we may further obſerve, 1. That by Heaven is here ordinarily meant the temple: (G. H. Wells, and Newt.) 2. The trumpets ſounding ſignify wars and deſolation enſuing: (G. Aſſ. B. and Newt.) The angel offering incenſe ſignifies Chriſt, our high-prieſt, through whoſe merits and interceſſion our prayers are acceptable to God. (Hall, B. and Newt.)

4. The fire ſignifies God's wrath; (G. Aſſ. H. and Wells) as the filling the cenſer with it, ſhews the greatneſs of the judgments approaching, (Aſſ.) 5. The "voices, and thundrings, and lightnings, and earthquake," ſignify thoſe judgments and calamities executed when the ſeveral trumpets ſounded. (H. Wells and Newt.) And, 6. That the earth, into which the fire was caſt, is variouſly interpreted; either to mean the land of Judah; (G. and H.) or, the whole Roman Empire. (Hall, Aſſ. Wells and Newt.) See the notes on ch. i. 4. iv. 5. v. 8. and vi. 1. &c. and 12. &c. Matth. xviii. 10. Luke i. 10. Acts ix. 7. and x. 4. Eph. v. 2. Phil. iv. 18. and 1 Tim. v. 21.

Ver. 7. The firſt angel ſounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were caſt upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green graſs was burnt up.

The firſt angel ſounded.] Now is repreſented the letting looſe of God's jugments upon the earth, which were till now ſaid to be reſtrain'd, under the phraſe of "holding the four winds of the earth;" as we have noted on ch. vii. 1. But when "the firſt angel ſounded" his trumpet, "there followed hail and fire, mingled with blood." That hail ſhould be accompanied with fire (that is, lightning) will ſeem leſs ſtrange, than that they ſhould be "mingled with blood:" which is commonly interpreted of ſuch hard-heartedneſs, as produces fire and ſword, the natural effects of war; (G. H. Wells and Newt.) Tho' ſome underſtand by it, the riſe of diverſe hereſies, and the bloody proſecutions occaſion'd thereby. (Hall and Aſſ.) And the deſolations in the countries upon which this plague fell, are deſcrib'd by "the third part of trees being burnt up, and all green graſs;" by the former of which we may underſtand princes and great men, and by the latter thoſe of low degree. (Aſſ. H. More and B.) What country was immediately concern'd in this, is not agreed; whether the land of Judæa only, (G. and H.) or the more extended Roman empire, which was reckon'd a third part of the then known world. (Mede, Aſſ. Wells and Newt.) 'Tis certain, ſuch marks of Divine vengeance appear'd upon the people of Jeruſalem and Judæa, as never were ſhewn upon any other: (G. and H.) But Sir Iſ. Newton (who underſtands the firſt four trumpets, and the firſt four vials of wrath pour'd out, of the ſlaughters in four great wars, and thoſe wars to be repreſented by four winds, from the four corners of the world) interprets this of the Eaſtern wind, to fall upon the nations of the Eaſtern, or Greek Empire. Accordingly he obſerves, that after the death of Theodoſius the great, the Goths, Sarmatians, Hunns, Iſaurians, and Auſtorian Moors invaded, and miſerably waſted Greece, Thrace, Aſia Minor, Armenia, Syria, Egypt, Lybia and Illyricum, for ten or twelve years together. See the notes on ver. 12.

Ver. 8, 9. And the ſecond angel ſounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was caſt into the ſea; and the third part of the ſea became blood. And the third part of the creatures which were in the ſea, and had life, died: and the third part of the ſhips were deſtroyed.

And the ſecond Angel ſounded.] The plague of the Weſtern wind, at the ſounding of this ſecond trumpet, was to fall upon the ſea, or weſtern empire, by means of, "as it were a great mountain, burning with fire," caſt into it, and turning it to blood. Accordingly, in the year 407, that empire began to be invaded by the Viſigoths, Vandals, Alans, Sueves, Burgundians, Oſtrogoths, Heruli, Quadi, and Gepides; who broke it into ten kingdoms, and miſerably waſted it: And Rome itſelf, the burning mountain, was beſieg'd and taken, by the Oſtrogoths, in the beginning of theſe miſeries, Where we may note, once for all, That, as by the earth, the Jews were wont to underſtand the great continent of all Aſia and Africa, to which they had acceſs by land; ſo, by the iſles of the ſea, they underſtood the places to which they ſail'd by ſea, particularly all Europe: And hence, in this prophecy, the earth and ſea are put for the Nations of the Greek and Latin Empires. (Newt. and Wells) How this viſion is applied to the Jewiſh affairs, may be ſeen in Dr. Hammond's notes here at large.

Ver. 10, 11. And the third Angel ſounded, and there fell a great ſtar from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters: And the name of the ſtar is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, becauſe they were made bitter.

And the third Angel ſounded.] Tho' this alſo by ſome is applied to certain ſeditious leaders among the Jews, who brought ruin upon their country; (G. and H.) by others to Mahomet; (Hall) and by others, to the bitter root of hereſy in general, and that of the Arians in particular: Yet, the now moſt receiv'd opinion ſeems to be that which here interprets the falling of "a great ſtar from heaven," of the ſtill lower fall of the Roman emperor of the weſt; who, like a blazing-ſtar, ſhined bright for a time, but was put down (as it were by a ſouth-wind) by the irruption of divers foreign invaders. (Mede, Aſſ. Newt. and Wells.) For, firſt, Genſeric, king of the Vandals and Alans in Spain, A. D. 427. enter'd Africa with an Army, making war both upon the Moors and Romans there, as well as on the ſea-coaſts of Europe, for fifty years together; invaded Italy, plundering all before him, and carrying their wealth with all the flower of the people into Africa, which he totally rent from the empire, A. D. 456, and expell'd all the Romans from thence. Next, the Vandals invaded and took the Mediterranean iſlands, under the conduct of Ricimer, who beſieg'd the emperor Anthemius in Rome, took the city, and gave his ſoldiers the plunder, A. D. 472. The Viſigoths, about the ſame time, driving the Romans out of Spain; and now the weſtern emperor, this great ſtar, having thus gradually loſt almoſt all his dominions, was invaded and conquer'd, in one year, by Odoacer king of the Heruli, A. D. 476. Soon after which, the Moors revolted, A. D. 477. and weakned the Vandals by ſeveral wars; which continued till the Vandals were conquer'd by Beliſarius, A. D. 534. During all which was (wherein above five millions of men periſh'd) Africa, which before was very populous, conſiſting of about 700 biſhopricks (more than were in all France, Spain, and Italy together) was reduc'd to that degree of deſolation, that Procopius tells us, it was next to a miracle for a traveller to ſee a man. (Newt.) And all theſe devaſtations are here compar'd to wormwood; which is ſometimes uſed to ſignify any bitter effect, or heavy calamity; the Hebrew word, to which this anſwereth, ſignifying a poiſonous herb that deſtroy'd men, Deut. xxix. 18. and Amos v. 7. (Aſſ. and H.) See the notes on ver. 7, 8. and ch. vi. 13.

Ver. 12, 13. And the fourth Angel ſounded, and the third part of the ſun was ſmitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the ſtars; ſo as the third part of them was darkned, and the day ſhone not for a third part of it, and the night likewiſe. And I beheld, and heard an Angel flying through the midſt of Heaven, ſaying with a loud voice, Wo, wo, wo, to the inhabiters of the earth, by reaſon of the other voices of the trumpet of the three Angels which are yet to ſound.

And the fourth Angel ſounded.] Tho' there is the ſame variety of opinions relating to this, as there were to the foregoing repreſentations, I ſhall not trouble the reader with any more than that which refers it to the total ſubverſion of the Roman empire in the weſt under Auguſtulus. (Aſſ. Wells, Wall, and Newt.) For, Beliſarius, having conquer'd the Vandals, invaded Italy, A. D. 535. and made war upon the Oſtrogoths, in the regions northward from Rome, twenty years together; in which war many cities were taken and re-taken. In re-taking Milan from the Romans, the Oſtrogoths ſlew all the males, amounting to three hundred thouſand, and ſent the females captive to their allies the Burgundians. Rome itſelf was taken and re-taken ſeveral times, and the people thereby much thinned; its old government by a ſenate ceaſed, the nobles were ruin'd, and all the glory of the city was extinguiſh'd: And, A. D. 552, after a war of ſeventeen years, the kingdom of the Oſtrogoths fell; tho' the remains of them, with an army of German auxiliaries, continued the war three or four years longer. Then enſued the war of the Heruli; who, as Anaſtaſuis expreſſes it, ſlew all Italy. This was follow'd by the war of the Lombards, the fierceſt of all the Barbarians, A. D. 568. which laſted thirty-eight years: And, before a peace was made with them, the cities were deſtroy'd, the caſtles demoliſh'd, the fields depopulated, and the land reduc'd to ſolitude; no inhabitants being left in the country, ſcarce any in the cities, &c. as Gregory the Great, then Biſhop, expreſſes it, in his ſermons to the people who were witneſſes of the truth of it. Thus, by the plagues of the four winds (this being that of the north, with reſpect to Rome) the empire of the Greeks was ſhaken, and that of the Latins fell; and Rome remain'd nothing more than the capital of a poor dukedom, ſubordinate to Ravenna, the ſeat of the Exarchs. (Newt.) So that here, the putting down the emperor himſelf is fitly denoted by the eclipſe of the ſun, and the day not ſhining; as the ceaſing of the ſubordinate magiſtrates is by eclipſing or darkening the moon and ſtars, and the night not having any light: For ſo, in Scripture prophecies, the darkening the ſun, moon, and ſtars, ſignifies generally the fall of ſome great potentates and powers; and ſo it is alſo explain'd in the Targum upon Iſa. xiii. 10. and lx. 20. Jer. xv. 9. and Ezek. xxxii. 7. (Wells and B.) But the particular application of the proportion of a third part under theſe firſt four trumpets, given by Mr. Mede, and others who follow different hypotheſes, gives no great ſatiſfaction; ſave that they agree in general, that thereby is denoted that devaſtation of the ſeveral parts of the Roman empire by the barbarous nations, which weakned the cities and people by degrees, till at laſt the emperor and governors themſelves were demoliſh'd. (Wall) Yet, nevertheleſs, this obſervation ſeems very obvious and rational, that the whole ſcene of ſacred prophecy is compoſ'd of three principal parts; The regions beyond Euphrates, repreſented by the two firſt beaſts of Daniel; the empire of the Greeks, on this ſide Euphrates, repreſented by the leopard and he-goat; and the empire of the Latins, on this ſide Greece, repreſented by the beaſt with ten horns: And therefore to theſe three parts the phraſes of "the third part" of the earth, ſea, rivers, trees, ſhips, ſun, moon, and ſtars, do probably relate. (Newt.) However, this phraſe of "the third part being ſmitten, &c. which is ſo often repeated, affords us this practical obſervation, that the Lord corrects in meaſure, and delights in mercy rather than juſtice, and deſires the converſion, by making the puniſhment of ſome inſtructive warnings to the reſt. (B.) See the notes on ver. 7, 8, 10. and ch. vi. 13.

An Angel flying.] Or rather, an eagle: For ſo it is read in the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other Manuſcripts, as well as in the Vulgar Latin, the Syriac, and Ethiopic Verſions, and in Arethas, &c. Indeed (phone aetou) the voice of an eagle, ſeems to have been chang'd into (Angelou) an Angel, by ſome injudicious perſon; who eaſily conſider'd that eagles are not wont to ſpeak, but did not conſider, at the ſame time, that this is only a prophetical repreſentation, wherein an eagle might typically be repreſented to ſpeak, as well as a lion, an ox, and an eagle, in ch. iv. 7, 8. where ſee the notes. (G. H. Q. and Wells) And indeed, an eagle, being the enſign of the Roman ſtandard, is therefore fitly uſed to make known the woful miſeries to come on the Roman ſtate. (Wells) See the notes on Matth. xxiv. 29.

Wo, wo, wo!] Obſerve here, 1. That theſe woes thus three times repeated, are in the text itſelf ſo clearly explain'd, of the three much greater calamities ſtill to follow, upon "the trumpet of the three Angels which are yet to ſound," that interpreters make no doubt of it. But, 2. Some interpret them of the ſeveral woful events, before, at, and after the ſiege and deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and particularly, of the remarkable woes denounc'd by Jeſus, the ſon of Ananias, mention'd at large here, by Dr. Hammond, from Joſephus. (G. and H.) But this, not agreeing with the now more receiv'd opinion, which we have hitherto choſen to adhere to, muſt be ſubmitted to the more skilful in theſe criticiſms. 3. That, as the firſt four ſeals were diſtinguiſh'd from the three laſt, by the appearance of four horſemen, towards the four winds, ch. vi. So the wars of the firſt four trumpets are diſtinguiſh'd from thoſe of the three laſt, by repreſenting the former by four winds, ch. vii. 1. and the latter here by three woes. (Newt.) And, 4. God's gracious dealing with "the inhabiters of the earth," in giving them warning of approaching judgments before they come; that ſinners may repent, and his own people, being fore-warn'd, may be fore-arm'd. (B.)

CHAP. IX.

The fifth and ſixth trumpets ſounded; and what follow'd thereon.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. AND the fifth Angel ſounded, and I ſaw a ſtar fall from Heaven unto the earth: And to him was given the key of the bottomleſs pit. And he opened the bottomleſs pit, and there aroſe a ſmoke out of the pit, as the ſmoke of a great furnace; and the ſun and the air were darkned, by reaſon of the ſmoke of the pit. And there came out of the ſmoke locuſts upon the earth; and unto them was given power, as the ſcorpions of the earth have power. And it was commanded them that they ſhould not hurt the graſs of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only thoſe men which have not the ſeal of God in their foreheads. And to them it was given that they ſhould not kill them, but that they ſhould be tormented five months: And their torment was as the torment of a ſcorpion, when he ſtriketh a man. And in thoſe days ſhall men ſeek death, and ſhall not find it; and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flee from them. And the ſhapes of the locuſts were like unto horſes prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions. And they had breaſt-plates, as it were breaſt-plates of iron; and the ſound of their wings was as the ſound of chariots of many horſes running to battle. And they had tails like unto ſcorpions, and there were ſtings in their tails: And their power was to hurt men five months. And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomleſs pit, whoſe name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, and in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon. One wo is paſt, and behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

And the fifth Angel ſounded.] What we are to underſtand here, by ſeeing "a ſtar fall from Heaven unto the earth," is variouſly interpreted; as moſt other parts of this prophetic book are. Some take it to mean the Devil, who is call'd "the Angel of the bottomleſs pit," ver. 11. Others interpret it of ſome principal ſeducer among the Jews. (G. and H.) Some apply it to Arias the arch-heretick, with whom they are pleas'd to join Luther and Calvin, and their reſpective followers: (Rhem.) Whilſt others think it more properly applicable to the Pope and his adherents. (K. Jam. I.) Some again divide it between the Pope in the weſt, and Mahomet in the eaſt. (Hall and Wall) But the now moſt prevailing opinion, is that which interprets it wholly of Mahomet, and his followers. (Mede, Aſſ. Whiſt. Wells, Newt. and Wall) Thus, 'tis obſerv'd, That this plague began here, with the "opening the bottomleſs pit," ver. 2. which denotes the letting out a falſe religion; the ſmoke which aroſe "out of the pit," ſignifying the multitude which embrac'd that religion; and the locuſts, which "came out of the ſmoke," ver. 3. the armies which came out of that multitude. This pit was opened, to let out ſmoke and locuſts into the regions of the four monarchies, or ſome of them. The king of thoſe locuſts was "the angel of the bottomleſs pit," ver. 11. being chief governor, as well in religious as civil affairs; ſuch as was the caliph of the Saracens. Swarms of locuſts often ariſe in Arabia-fœlix, and from thence infeſt the neighbouring nations; and ſo are a very fit type of the numerous armies of Arabians invading the Romans. They began to invade them, A. D. 634. and to reign at Damaſcus, A. D. 637. They built Bagdad, A. D. 766, and reigned over Perſia, Syria, Arabia, Egypt, Africa and Spain. They afterwards loſt many of theſe dominions one after another, till the caliph of Bagdad, A. D. 936, ſurrender'd all that remain'd of his temporal power to Mahomet, who, within two years loſt Bagdad to the Turks. After this, Bagdad was ſometimes in the hands of the Turks, and ſometimes of the Saracens, till, at laſt, Togrul-Beig, otherwiſe call'd Tangrolipix, conquer'd Choraſan and Perſia, and, A. D. 1055, (or, according to Mr. Mede's account, 1057.) added Bagdad to his empire, making it the ſeat thereof. The whole time that the caliphs of the Saracens reign'd with a temporal dominion at Damaſcus and Bagdad together, was three hundred years; viz. from the year 637. to the year 936 incluſive. Now, locuſts live but five months: And therefore, for the decorum of the type, theſe locuſts are ſaid to hurt men five months, ver. 5. and five months, ver. 10. as if they had liv'd about five months at Damaſcus, and again about five months at Bagdad; in all ten months, or three hundred prophetic days, which are ſo many years. (Newt.) See the notes on ch. i. 20. vi. 13. vii. 3. and viii. 7, 10, 12. and Luke viii. 31. and thoſe here next following.

And he opened the bottomleſs pit.] Some errors and hereſies had broke out before, as it were, by chinks and crannies: But now they came out abundantly, as if Hell had been let looſe, or broke up, and the gates of it ſet wide open, to let it out at large. For now Mahomet (by the aſſiſtance of Sergius of Conſtantinople, the Neſtorian monk, and John of Antioch, the Arian) ſet forth his Alcoran for Divine Scripture; the like whereof no heretic durſt ever attempt before; or, at leaſt, could not prevail with ſuch multitudes of men to believe him, as Mahomet did: So that the "opening the bottomleſs pit," is the apoſtates uſing their power, to let ſuch groſs hereſies into the world, as could come from none, as their author, but the Devil of Hell. (Aſſ.) And this falſe and impious doctrine ſpread ſo mightily, that great part of the Chriſtian world was over-run and infected with its poiſon. (Wells) Yea, ſo groſs was the darkneſs of ignorance in thoſe times, (viz. in the ſeventh, or eighth century) that there is hardly any memory left, of any learned or good man, except our venerable Bede. (Wall)

Out of the ſmoke, locuſts.] Obſerve here, 1. That ſuch ravaging invaders are properly compar'd to locuſts; becauſe ſuch creatures commonly leave all countries waſte and deſolate, wherever they come. (G. H. B. and Wells) And, 2. That their ſucceſs is commonly owing to the ſmoke, and darkneſs, of ignorance. (Wall) See the notes on Matth. iii. 4.

It was commanded them.] Errhethē autais; it was ſaid unto them. All the wiſe and gracious acts of God's providence, in protecting his ſervants, and reſtraining the malice of their enemies, is the moſt properly thus expreſs'd; his will being of the ſame force, to produce the effects, as his commands ought to be. (G. and H.) And thus the ſame phraſe is ſeveral times uſed, by Chriſt himſelf, in his Divine Sermon on the mount, when he ſpeaks of the precepts of the old law.

Not hurt the graſs.] The graſs here may ſignify weak Chriſtians; the green things, growing ones; and the trees, ſtrong ones: (Aſſ.) Or, ſuch as bear fruit. (B) The corrupters of the Goſpel cannot hurt him, whoſe faith is humble and low as the graſs; whoſe hope is bright and lively as the green colour; and whoſe charity is abundant in fruit, as a fertile tree. (Q.)

The ſeal of God.] See the notes on ch. vii. 3.

Tormented five months.] Bp. Hall reckons but one hundred and fifty years; interpreting this, and the five months mention'd ver. 10. to be both one and the ſame ſpace of time: And ſo do alſo, the Aſſembly-men, Grotius, and Hammond (tho' theſe two laſt underſtand it literally, of the five months cruel hardſhips, which the Jewiſh Zealots tormented their brethren with, next before Titus's laying ſiege to Jeruſalem:) But Dr. Wall makes them different incurſions of the Saracens, each of about an hundred and fifty years: The latter of which he interprets to be that diſtinctly mention'd in ver. 10. which he reads, according to the Alexandrian, and others of the beſt Manuſcripts, and Verſions (approv'd by Dr. Wells) that by their tails and had power "to hurt men five months; ſo that this wo may, by this account, be ſuppos'd to have laſted till about the year 1000, or longer, as Mr. Mede counts: And Mr. Whiſton concludes, that the latter afflicted the Roman empire in the weſt, as the former had done in the eaſt.

Men ſeek death.] Being weary of their very lives. (G. Hall, H. B. Wells and Wall) See the notes on Luke xxiii. 30.

The ſhapes of the locuſts.] In this deſcription, their reſemblance to "horſes prepar'd unto battle," denotes the warlike diſpoſition of the Saracens; the "crowns like gold" on their heads, denote the largeneſs of their conqueſts; "their faces as the faces of men," ſhew, that they are not natural locuſts, but men figuratively ſo call'd; their "hair, as the hair of women," ſhews them to be Arabians, who wore the hair of their heads thus long, as Pliny tells us, tho' Herodotus ſays, they ſhav'd their beards; their teeth "as the teeth of lions," denotes their fierceneſs and cruelty; their "breaſt-plates as it were breaſt-plates of iron," &c. denote their hardineſs in battle; as the "ſtings in their tails", like ſcorpions, do the poiſonous nature of their Mahometan doctrines. (Wells)

In the Hebrew tongue.] This name is ſet forth here both in Hebrew and Greek; either becauſe the deſtroying Angel was known to the Jews, as well as to the Chriſtians; or elſe becauſe the Saracens oppreſs'd both. (Aſſ.) By this king of the locuſts, whoſe name is Abaddon, ſome do underſtand Mahomet himſelf; becauſe he order'd his religion to be propagated by the ſword, inſtead of miracles, and thereby ſet the Saracens upon all their wars and deſolations. (Whiſt.) But, as the ſaid king is here expreſly ſtyl'd "the Angel of the bottomleſs pit," it cannot be tolerably applied to Mahomet, or any other, but only to Satan. (Wells) And the name Apollyon, in Greek, ſignifies the ſame as the other does in Hebrew; that is, The Deſtroyer. How near a relation this latter has, both in name and quality, to the Heathen deity Apollo, may be ſeen in Dr. Hammond's notes on this text. See alſo the notes on 2 Theſſ. ii. 3.

One wo is paſt.] Mia; the firſt. See the notes on ch. viii. 13.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And the ſixth Angel ſounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar, which is before God, Saying to the ſixth Angel which had the trumpet, Looſe the four Angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates. And the four Angels were looſed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to ſlay the third part of men. And the number of the horſemen were two hundred thouſand thouſand: And I heard the number of them. And thus I ſaw the horſes in the viſion, and them that ſat on them, having breaſt-plates of fire, and of jacinct, and brimſtone: And the heads of the horſes were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths iſſued fire, and ſmoke, and brimſtone. By theſe three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the ſmoke, and by the brimſtone, which iſſued out of their mouths. For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: For their tails were like unto ſerpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt. And the reſt of the men which were not killed by theſe plagues, yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they ſhould not worſhip devils, and idols of gold, and ſilver, and braſs, and ſtone, and of wood: Which neither can ſee, nor hear, nor walk: Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their ſorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

And the ſixth Angel ſounded.] Not to mention the arguments of thoſe who apply this period, as well as the reſt, to the Jews and their affairs; it ſeems now generally to be interpreted of the riſe and progreſs of the Turks. (Hall, Mede, Aſſ. B. Whiſt. Wells, Wall and Newt.) For, the Turks, having put an end to the Saracen empire, according to Mr. Mede's computation, A. D. 1057. began to conquer the nations upon the Euphrates, A. D. 1063. In thirty years, Olub-Arſlan and Melech-Schah conquer'd thoſe nations, and reign'd over the whole. But the latter, dying A. D. 1092, was ſucceeded by a little child; whereupon this their kingdom broke into four: Of which four, that of Armenia-major was ſeated at Miyapharekin, otherwiſe call'd Megarkin, or Martyropolis; that of Meſopotamia at Moſul; that of all Syria at Aleppo; and that of Cappadocia at Iconium, A. D. 1258, theſe four kingdoms were invaded by the Tartars, under Hulacu, who drove the inhabitants into the weſtern parts of Aſia-minor; where they afterwards made war upon the Greeks, and began to erect the preſent empire of the Turks; which was ſettled, on the taking of Conſtantinople, A. D. 1453, and an end put to the Roman empire in the eaſt. (Mede, Aſſ. Whiſt. Wells, and Newt.) So that here we may obſerve on this text, 1. That by "the four horns of the golden altar," is ſignified the ſituation of the head-cities of thoſe four kingdoms, all in a quadrangle. (Newt.) 2. By "the four Angels, thoſe which preſided over thoſe five kingdoms. (Aſſ. and Wells) 3. By their being "bound in the great river Euphrates," we may underſtand, that Divine Providence had not yet permitted thoſe Turks to ſettle their dominions on this ſide of that river. (Idem) But now, 4. That it ſeem'd good, that they ſhould extend their bounds and break into the eaſtern part of the Roman empire. (Wells) 5. That they began to be prepared, by Divine Providence, for this expedition, when they began to conquer thoſe other nations bordering upon Euphrates. (Newt.) 6. That the interval of time, here call'd "an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year" (being underſtood of prophetic days, &c. ſo that, as a day paſſes for one year, a month paſſes for thirty years, and a year for 365 years, each containing proportionably ſo many natural days) making together exactly 396 (tho' Sr. Iſaac Newton makes them but 391) years, and being computed from the Turks putting an end to the empire of the Saracens, by the taking of Bagdad, A. D. 1057. will extend to their putting an end to that of the Romans in the eaſt, by the taking Conſtantinople, A. D. 1453. ſo that the event anſwers exactly to the prophecy. (Mede, Aſſ. Whiſt. Wells, and Wall) 7. That by their being prepar'd to "ſlay the third part of men;" is meant their putting an end to part of the Roman empire; which when entire was reckon'd a third part of the then known world. (Wells and Newt.) 8. That the Turkiſh armies are here repreſented by horſemen, becauſe, as Mr. Whiſton ſays, their forces chiefly conſiſt in horſe: But Mr. Mede thinks it is rather becauſe this is the character made uſe of by Ezekiel, ch. xxxviii. 4, 15. to deſcribe the nation of Magog, from which the Turks ſprang. (Wells) 9. That the number of them is here ſaid to be "two hundred thouſand thouſand," or two myriads of myriads (according to the Greek) that is, a prodigious multitude, above the proportion of all thoſe Chriſtians who ſhould oppoſe them. (Hall) St. John does not ſay, that he himſelf number'd them; but, as Mr. Mede obſerves, ſo often as any thing is related, which could not be repreſented to the ſight, he was inform'd, as to ſuch a particular, by a voice: And therefore he ſays here, "I heard the number of them." (Wells) 10. That the deſcription of "the horſes in the viſion (or, in appearance) and them that ſat on them," is very natural: Where, by "fire, and ſmoke, and brimſtone," and hyacinth, are denoted guns and gun-powder; which about that time began firſt to be uſed with any great effect, viz. at the taking of Conſtantinople. Now, ſuch as fight with guns, appear to their enemies, as cover'd with "breaſt-plates of fire, and hyacinth, and brimſtone," becauſe of the medium, or air, about and between them, being fill'd with fire, and ſmoke, and the ſmell of brimſtone: And likewiſe the "fire, and ſmoke, and brimſtone," ſeem to ſuch as look on the oppoſite army, as iſſuing out of the mouths of the horſes; and hereby alſo the horſes heads look terrible, denoted here "as the heads of lions." (Hall, Aſſ. Wells and Wall) See the notes on ver. 1, 7, &c. and ch. v. 11. vii. 3. and viii. 7.

And the reſt——yet repented not.] That is, The reſt of the Chriſtian inhabitants of the once Roman empire, who eſcap'd this deſtruction, "yet repented not of the works of their hands", viz. 1. Of their "worſhiping devils, and idols of gold", &c. whereby we are not only to underſtand the actual worſhip of Devils, or Dæmons; but that of Saints or Angels; yea and even the making any Image whatſoever, to bow down to it or worſhip it. Now, there were, at that time, none, on this ſide Euphrates, who worſhipped Images (proh pudor & dolor!) but only Chriſtians. The Greek Church had, by force of the Roman, fallen into Image-worſhip: And the Romans, who were before the Greeks, in Idolatry, "yet repented not", on the judgments inflicted on the other. (Andr. Aſſ. Wells & Wall.) 2. "Of their murders"; a ſin of which thoſe are guilty, who count it not only lawful, but praiſe-worthy, to kill ſuch as they deem Hereticks. (Wells) 3. "Of their ſorceries"; the Greek, as well as the Romiſh prieſts, ſtill ſeducing weak people, by pretended miracles, and the like. (Idem.) 4. "Of their fornication"; which the Papiſts openly allow of, in ſome caſes; and even Proteſtants alſo make too ſlight of, and practiſe too much. (Idem.) And, 5. "Of their thefts," wherein Proteſtants are very guilty; and perhaps more guilty, in ſome reſpects, (viz. Robbing the Church of its lands and revenues, and ſacred things of the reverence due to them, &c.) than any other Chriſtians, of whatever denomination. (Mede and Wells) See Dr. Wells here at large; and the notes on ch. ii. 21, 22. Rom. ii. 22. 1 Cor. vi. 18. and x. 20. and Eph. v. 5.

CHAP. X.

The viſion of the little book open.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. AND I ſaw another mighty angel come down from heaven, cloathed with a cloud, and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the ſun, and his feet as pillars of fire. And he had in his hand a little book open: and he ſet his right foot upon the ſea, and his left foot on the earth, And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, ſeven thunders uttered their voices. And when the ſeven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven, ſaying unto me, Seal up thoſe things which the ſeven thunders uttered, and write them not. And the angel which I ſaw ſtand upon the ſea, and upon the earth, lifted up his hand to heaven, And ſware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven and the things that therein are; and the earth and the things that therein are, and the ſea and the things which are therein, that there ſhould be time no longer: But in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, when he ſhall begin to ſound, the myſtery of God ſhould be finiſhed, as he hath declared to his ſervants the prophets. And the voice which I heard from heaven, ſpake unto me again and ſaid, Go, and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which ſtandeth upon the ſea, and upon the earth. And I went unto the angel, and ſaid unto him, Give me the little book. And he ſaid unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it ſhall make thy belly bitter, but it ſhall be in thy mouth ſweet as hony. And I took the little book out of the angels hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth ſweet as hony: and aſſoon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter. And he ſaid unto me, Thou muſt propheſie again before many peoples and nations, and tongues and kings.

And I ſaw.] As by the viſions of the ſeals had been foretold the different ſtates of the Roman empire during the interval belonging to the ſaid ſeals, ch. vi. and vii. ſo it ſeem'd good to the Holy Ghoſt to inſert here a prediction of the different ſtates of the Church, during the ſaid interval, or from the beginning of the firſt ſeal, to the end of the ſixth trumpet of the ſeventh ſeal; that ſo the connexion between the prophecy of the ſealed book and that of the little book might appear. (Wells.) And here we are to obſerve, 1. That this mighty Angel is generally underſtood of Chriſt himſelf. (Rhem. G. Hall, B. Wells, Q. and Newt.) who is call'd "a mighty Angel," in oppoſition to the mighty Enemies of his Church, mentioned in the foregoing chapter; (B.) He is ſaid to "come down from Heaven," to intimate his ſignal and ſeaſonable appearing, for the relief of his Church; (Idem.) "Clothed with a cloud," repreſenting the manner of his coming in the clouds at the final judgment; (Idem.) With "a rainbow upon his head," ſignifying that covenant of peace, which he had made with his Church, and his continual mindfulneſs of that covenant: (Aſſ. and B.) "His face as it were the ſun," to denote that light of comfort and deliverance, which he would bring to his Church, in his own time. (B.) "His feet as pillars," to ſignify the firmneſs and ſtability of his actions and purpoſes; and "as pillars of fire," denoting his ability to tread down his enemies, and to conſume them. (G. Hall, Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on ch. i. 13, &c. iii. 12. iv. 3. and v. 2.

A little book open.] Viz. The book which he had newly open'd, ch. vi, &c. For he receiv'd but one book from "him that ſat upon the throne," chap. v. 7. And he alone was worthy to open and look on this book. (Newt.) Some others take this to be a quite diſtinct and different book from the ſeal'd one: But Dr. Wells looks upon it as no other than a ſort of codicil to the former, containing prophecies collateral to thoſe of the ſealed book; for which the more inquiſitive may ſee his reaſons here at large. See alſo the notes on ch. v. 1, &c. and vi. 1, &c.

And he ſet his right foot.] It was the cuſtom for the high-prieſt, on the day of expiation, to ſtand in an elevated place in the people's court, at the eaſtern gate of the prieſt's court, and read the law to the people, while the heifer and the goat, which was the Lord's lot, were burning without the temple. We may therefore ſuppoſe him ſtanding in ſuch a manner, that his right foot might appear to John, as it were ſtanding on the ſea of glaſs, and his left foot on the ground of the houſe; and that "he cried with a loud voice" in reading the law, on the day of expiation. "And when he cried, ſeven thunders uttered their voices." Thunders are the voice of a cloud; and a cloud ſignifies a multitude: And this multitude may be the Levites, who ſang with thundring voices, and play'd with muſical inſtruments, at the great ſacrifices, on the ſeven days of the feaſt of tabernacles; at which times the trumpets alſo ſounded: For the trumpets ſounded, and the Levites ſang alternately, three times at every ſacrifice. The prophecy therefore of the ſeven thunders is nothing elſe than a repetition of the prophecy of the ſeven trumpets in another form. (Newt.) Chriſt's ſtanding with "his right foot on the ſea, and his left foot on the earth," not only denote his ſovereignty over the whole world; but alſo his power over the two beaſts which ſhould ariſe, the one out of the ſea, and the other out of the earth, ch. xiii. 1, 11. And the ſeven thunders, uttering their voices, made known to John, as is probable, ſeven remarkable events, by which the interval of the ſeventh trumpet, and perhaps too of the ſeventh vial, ſhould be diſtinguiſh'd. (Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells.) See the notes on ch. iv. 5. and viii. 5.

Write them not.] That is, do not publiſh them to the world. (Hall, Aſſ. and H.) At leaſt, till they are nearer their accompliſhment. (Aſſ. B. and Wall.) See the notes on ch. i. 1. and v. 2. and 2 Cor. xii. 4.

Lifted up his hand to Heaven, and ſware.] An ancient ceremony uſed in ſolemn oaths. (Beza, Rhem. Aſſ. and H.) As appealing to God, as witneſs of the truth of what is ſworn; and the judge, who will puniſh thoſe who ſwear falſely. Hall, Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on Matth. v. 33, &c. xiv. 9. and xxiii. 16. Acts xxiii. 12, &c. Rom. ix. 1. Heb. vi. 16. and Jam. v. 12.

There ſhould be time no longer.] That is, there ſhould be no longer delay of God's promiſe and purpoſe, to deliver his Church, and execute judgment upon her enemies. (Aſſ. H. B. and Wall.) But, after the ſeventh trumpet "begins to ſound", (which is yet to begin) "the myſtery of God ſhould be finiſhed; viz. "The kingdoms of this world ſhould then become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt, and he ſhould reign for ever and ever," ch. xi. 15. "as he hath declared to his ſervants the prophets;" this declaration being one conſiderable branch of the Goſpel: For ſo the word evangeliſe plainly ſignifies. (B. Wells, Wall and Newt.) See the notes on ch. i. 1. and xi. 15. Matth. xxiv. 36. Mark xiii. 32. Acts i. 7. and Rom. xi. 13, &c. and 25.

Take it, and eat it up.] This is an introduction to a new prophecy, to a repetition of the prophecy of the whole book; and alludes to Ezekiel's eating a roll, or book, ſpread open before him, and written within and without, full of lamentations and mourning, and wo, but ſweet in his mouth, Ezek. ii. 9. and iii. 1; &c. Eating and drinking ſignify acquiring and poſſeſſing; and eating the book is becoming inſpired with the prophecy contain'd in it: It implies being inſpir'd, in a vigorous and extraordinary manner, with the prophecy of the whole book; and therefore ſignifies a lively repetition of the whole prophecy by way of interpretation, and begins not till the firſt prophecy, that of the ſeals and trumpets, is ended. It was ſweet in John's mouth, and therefore begins not with the bitter prophecy of the Babylonian captivity, and the Gentiles being in the outward court of the temple, and treading the Holy City under foot, and the propheſying of the two witneſſes in ſackcloth, and their ſmiting the earth with all plagues, and being kill'd by the beaſt: But, ſo ſoon as the prophecy of the trumpets is ended, it begins with the ſweet prophecy of the glorious woman in heaven, and the victory of Michael over the dragon; and after that, it is bitter in John's belly, by a large deſcription of the times of the great apoſtacy. (Newt.)

The two witneſſes propheſy. The ſeventh trumpet ſoundeth.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod: And the angel ſtood, ſaying, Riſe, and meaſure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worſhip therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and meaſure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: And the holy city ſhall they tread under foot forty and two months. And I will give power unto my two witneſſes, and they ſhall propheſy a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days clothed in ſackcloth. Theſe are the two olive-trees, and the two candleſticks ſtanding before the God of the earth. And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: And if any man will hurt them, he muſt in this manner be killed. Theſe have power to ſhut Heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: And have power over waters, to turn them to blood, and to ſmite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will. And when they ſhall have finiſhed their teſtimony, the beaſt that aſcendeth out of the bottomleſs pit, ſhall make war againſt them, and ſhall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies ſhall lie in the ſtreet of the great city, which ſpiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where alſo our Lord was crucified. And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations ſhall ſee their dead bodies three days and an half, and ſhall not ſuffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. And they that dwell upon the earth ſhall rejoyce over them, and make merry, and ſhall ſend gifts one to another; becauſe theſe two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth. And after three days and an half, the Spirit of life from God entred into them: And they ſtood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon them which ſaw them. And they heard a great voice from Heaven, ſaying unto them, Come up hither. And they aſcended up to heaven in a cloud, and their enemies beheld them. And the ſame hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were ſlain of men ſeven thouſand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven. The ſecond wo is paſt, and, behold, the third wo cometh quickly.

Meaſure the temple.] By the temple and altar, &c. that is, the inner court, may well be denoted the moſt primitive, and, as it were, moſt inmoſt ſtate of the Chriſtian Church; including the time of Chriſt here on earth, and the ages next ſucceeding thereto; as the inner court did include not only the ark of the covenant, and the mercy-ſeat, whereby Chriſt was typified, but alſo the next adjacent parts of the temple: And, by St. John's being bid to meaſure the inner court, may well be denoted the conformity of the moſt primitive Church to the rules of the Goſpel, as its meaſure. And accordingly, by "the court which is without the temple", or the outer court, may be denoted the ſtate of the Chriſtian Church, ſucceeding the moſt primitive: And, by his being bid (ecballein exo) to caſt it out, and not to meaſure it, may be denoted the falling of the viſible Church (as to the greateſt part thereof) off from the rules of the Goſpel, which ought to have been its meaſure. And by the Holy City being trodden under foot by the Gentiles, may further be well denoted, that Jeruſalem ſhould be inhabited and profan'd by Gentiles; who ſhould be guilty of idolatry, or other anti-chriſtian worſhip. (Wells.) Where note, 1. That this is by ſome interpreted literally, of ſecuring the inner court of the temple from being meddled with, when Adrian erected a new city, which he call'd by his own name Ælia, and an idol-temple was erected to Jupiter upon mount Sion. (G. and H.) By others myſtically; reckoning thoſe who worſhipped in the inner court, to be the 144000 who were ſealed with the ſeal of the living God in their foreheads, ch. vii. and thoſe in the outer court, the ſame with thoſe who received the mark of the beaſt, ch. xiii. 16. (Newt.) 2. That the phraſe, ecbale exo, implies a poſitive act, rather than a bare negative: And therefore, inſtead of leave out, as we tranſlate it, it ſhould be rendred caſt out; viz. excommunicate, or pronounce it unhallow'd, and polluted. (Aſſ. and Wells) 3. That the term of "forty and two months," during which the Gentiles were to tread the Holy City under foot, being the ſame with "a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days," on which the two witneſſes were to propheſy, clothed in ſackcloth, are underſtood myſtically of ſo many prophetical days, that is, years, of the reign of the myſtical antichriſt; and yet, at the ſame time, literally, for three common years and an half, the perſonal reign of him who is properly and emphatically call'd antichriſt, which ('tis ſuppos'd) will fall in with the laſt three years and a half of him who is myſtically ſo call'd: And conſequently, the duration of antichriſt in general will be, in the whole, but 1260 years; tho' the months, or days, be interpreted as well literally, of the perſonal antichriſt, according to the expoſition of the primitive fathers, as myſtically, of the myſtical antichriſt, according to that of modern divines. For the fuller diſcuſſion of which, I refer the more curious to Dr. Wells's notes here at large. And, 4. That, whereas the Gentiles treading the Holy City under foot is here expreſs'd by "forty and two months," and the propheſying of the two witneſſes is expreſs'd by "a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days;" the reaſon why the ſame ſpace of time is thus expreſs'd differently, by days in the one, and by months in the other, ſeems probably to be this, That in Scripture all ſin and error is reſembled to darkneſs and night, over which the moon rules; and therefore the former, being an act of darkneſs is expreſs'd by months, which ariſe from the motion of the moon: But the truth of Religion is reſembled to light and day, over which the ſun rules; and therefore the latter, being an act of light, is expreſs'd by days, which ariſe from the motion of the ſun. And on the like account, the time of the beaſt is reckon'd by months, ch. xiii. 5. but that of the woman's ſtay in the wilderneſs, by days and years, ch. xii. 6, 14. (Aſſ. and Wells) See alſo the notes on ch. xii. 6. Luke xxi. 24. Eph. ii. 14. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 3.

My two witneſſes.] Who are here meant by theſe two witneſſes, I ſhall not take upon me to aſcertain. However, to give the reader ſome light into this dark place, obſerve, That ſome apply this title to the reſpective Biſhops of the Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians, who together with their flocks, bore their teſtimony to the truth, when idolatry was ſet up at Jeruſalem; labouring like Moſes to bring off the Jews from their prejudices, and like Elijah, preaching down idolatry. (G. and H.) Others underſtand it of the two Churches of Smyrna and Philadelphia, (ch. ii. and iii.) which were not charg'd with any fault. For tho' five of the ſeven Churches of Aſia, which were in proſperity, are found fault with, exhorted to repent, and threatned to be remov'd out of their places, or otherwiſe puniſh'd, except they repented; theſe two, which were under perſecution, remain'd ſo ſtill, to illuminate Chriſt's Church. But when the primitive Church Catholic, repreſented, ch. xii. by the woman in Heaven, apoſtatiz'd, and became divided into two corrupt Churches, repreſented by the whore of Babylon, and the two-horned beaſt, then the 144000, who were ſeal'd out of all the twelve tribes, became the two witneſſes, in oppoſition to thoſe two falſe Churches; and the name of two witneſſes remains to the true Church of God, in all times and places, to the end of the prophecy. Theſe are call'd "the two olive-trees," with relation to thoſe in the viſion of Zech. iv. which ſtand on each ſide of the golden candleſtick, to ſupply the lamps with oil; and olive-trees, according to St. Paul, Rom. xi. 17. repreſent Churches, ſupplying the lamps with oil, by maintaining teachers: They are alſo call'd "the two candleſticks;" which in this prophecy ſignify churches; the ſeven Churches of Aſia being repreſented by ſeven candleſticks. Theſe alſo have power, like Elijah, "to ſhut heaven, that it rain not," at the ſounding of the firſt trumpet; and, like Moſes, to turn the waters into blood, at the ſounding of the ſecond; "and to ſmite the earth with all plagues as often as they will;" that is, with the plagues of the trumpets, and vials of wrath: But at length they are ſlain, riſe again from the dead, and "aſcend up to Heaven in a cloud;" and then the ſeventh trumpet ſounds to the day of judgment. (Newt.) Some underſtand it of all the ſucceſſion of faithful witneſſes to the truth, and ſincere Chriſtians in general; eſpecially martyrs and confeſſors, whom God has from time to time rais'd up in his Church, to bear their teſtimony for Chriſt, againſt all hereſies, blaſphemies, idolatries, and uſurpations, in the time of Antichriſt's reign; to whom they adapt the ſeveral characters of the two witneſſes aforeſaid. (Hall, B. Q. and Wall) Others, more particularly, of thoſe who have given their teſtimony againſt popery: And theſe apply all that is here ſaid of "the great city, which ſpiritually is called Sodom and Egypt," to the city of Rome; which they will have to be myſtically ſo call'd. (Mede, Aſſ. More & Whiſt.) And ſome of theſe again inſiſt upon its being ſolely applicable to, and exactly fulfill'd in the Waldenſes, and Albigenſes, even in our days. (Lloyd & Whiſt.) But this laſt however ſeems too jejune an application; and theſe too late: Neither were the Albigenſes one Church, but ten, or more; being ſo many ſects, vaſtly different even in fundamental points. (Wall) Nor indeed were the two witneſſes any new Churches, but the poſterity of the primitive Churches, and as ſuch fitly repreſented by two of the primitive candleſticks. (Newt.) Others interpret theſe two witneſſes literally, of Enoch and Elijah; who ſhall be ſent again, to bear witneſs upon earth to the truth of Religion, as the moſt convincing argument to preſerve men from being ſeduc'd by Antichriſt, moſt properly ſo call'd. (Rhem. & Wells) For which interpretation we have the conſent of the primitive Fathers, Hippolitus, Tertullian, St. Cyprian, Ephrem Syrus, St. Ambroſe, St. Jerome, St. Auguſtin, Proſper, St. Gregory, Damaſcene, and Aretas Cæſarienſis; as well as the judgment of Dr. Grabe, (who cites ſeveral more) and other learned moderns; yea, and the authority of our Saviour himſelf, who declares, that "Elias truly ſhall firſt come, and reſtore all things," Matth. xvii. 11. which words, being ſpoken in the future tenſe, can't be applied to John the Baptiſt, who was then already come, and had not, nor did reſtore all things. Yet, as all thoſe who, through the ſaid ſeveral ages of the Churches impurity, have born teſtimony to the truth in their own times, may be look'd on as fore-runners, and, as it were, types of theſe two principal witneſſes; ſo, ſeveral particulars of the aforeſaid prophecy may alſo be accommodated to all ſuch inferior witneſſes; and that perhaps agreeably to the deſign of the Holy Spirit. But, for the more curious reader's ſatisfaction herein, I recommend him to Dr. Wells's large annotations on this paſſage; and the other notes here next following.

My two witneſſes.] Note here, 1. That in the number two is an alluſion to Moſes and Aaron in the wilderneſs; Elijah and Eliſha, when the Iſraelites worſhipp'd the calves and Baal; and to Zerubbabel and Jehoſhua, in Babylon, and after the return from thence. (Mede and Aſſ.) 2. That from the mention only of two we may infer, That we ought never to have our eyes fix'd upon the multitude, ſo as to follow them, in regard to their number; nor to conclude that that doctrine is not true which is not embrac'd by the majority: For, the train of Chriſt is not large; nor are his ways throng'd as they ought, but few, very few comparatively walking in them. (B.) And, 3. That how few ſoever his faithful witneſſes are, Chriſt is graciouſly pleas'd to own and authorize them for his: As here he calls them. "My two witneſſes;" adding withal "And I will give power unto my two witneſſes," &c. which implies not only commiſſion and authority, but alſo ability, aſſiſtance and ſucceſs, in the diſcharge of their teſtimony. (Idem) See the notes on Matth. xviii. 19. and xxviii. 20. Luke xii. 32. and Acts i. 8. and ii. 1.

And they ſhall propheſy.] To wit, againſt the errors and corruptions of the times; notwithſtanding whatſoever oppoſition they may meet with on the part of their enemies, and trouble and ſorrow to themſelves (Hall)

The two olive-trees.] As the olive-tree is always green, ſo the miniſtry of theſe witneſſes is lively and efficacious: And as the olive is a ſign of peace, and the oil that drops from it an emblem of grace, ſo the miniſtry of theſe witneſſes was a miniſtry both of grace and peace. (B.) See the notes on Rom. xi. 24.

And the two candleſticks,] Note here, 1. That they are ſaid to be two, either becauſe theſe perſecuted Churches conſiſted of Jews and Gentiles; or elſe becauſe they liv'd both in the eaſtern and weſtern empire. (Aſſ.) 2. That they are ſaid to ſtand before the Lord, either becauſe they were ready to ſerve Chriſt continually, even in a time of ſuch general corruption: (H.) Or elſe, becauſe of their fidelity in the diſcharge of their duty, as in the preſence of God. (B.) And, 3. That in the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other MSS. as alſo, in the Vulgar Latin, the Syriac and Arabic Verſions, and in Hippolytus, Arethas, &c. they are ſaid to ſtand (en opion tou Kyrioi) before the Lord; tho' in our common copies we read it (Theou) God. (Wells) However, the ſenſe and meaning is the ſame in both.

Fire proceedeth out of their mouth.] Not by way of imprecation, but of denunciation; pronouncing the threatnings and judgments of God, againſt thoſe who continue impenitent. (B. and Wells)

Power to ſhut Heaven.] By this may be underſtood the power of the keys, whereby to ſhut Heaven, ſo as the grace of God (the myſtical rain) ſhould not diſtil upon their enemies, to the remiſſion of ſins, ſo long as they perſiſted in their errors. (Mede and Aſſ.) See the notes on Matth. xvi. 19. and John xx. 23.

As often as they will.] Viz. By their prayers. (Hall, Aſſ. and Wall) That is, whenever they aſk it upon a juſt occaſion. (G. Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on Matth. xviii. 19 and xxviii. 30.

The beaſt.] Viz. The great antichriſt. (Rhem. Aſſ. and Wells) Therion properly ſignifies a wild beaſt; and being ſo render'd here, and elſewhere in this book, it ſeems to anſwer beſt to the deſign of the Holy Spirit, in uſing the ſame word to denote antichriſt, whether perſonal or myſtical, as what would be very pernicious to mankind. It is alſo more agreeable to the deſcription of his compoſition, ch. xiii. 1. As to this wild beaſt's "aſcending out of the bottomleſs pit," ſee the notes on ch. xiii. 1. and xvii. 8. (Wells) And as to the conjectures concerning the perſon meant by antichriſt. See the notes on 2 Theſſ. ii. 3.

And kill them.] So that, as to human appearance, all Chriſtian religion ſhould ſeem utterly extinguiſh'd (Wall)

The great city.] Interpreted by ſome literally of Jeruſalem; by others, myſtically, of Rome. See the notes on ver. 1.

Spiritually called Sodom.] Wherever impurity reigns, there is Sodom: Wherever good men are perſecuted, there is Egypt: And wherever the members of Chriſt ſuffer, there is Calvary; for there our Lord himſelf is crucified. (Q.)

Our Lord.] In the Alexandrian, and many other MSS. and in all the four ancient verſions, as well as in Arethas, it is (Kyrios auton) their Lord; which fits better to the compariſon here inſtituted, between their, and their Lord's death and reſurrection. (Wells and Wall)

Tormented them.] Viz. By their public preaching, by their private reproving, and by their denouncing of God's judgments againſt them: Inſomuch that theſe witneſſes not ſuffering them to go on, quietly and undiſturb'd, in the ways of ſin, the ſinners grew very uneaſy with them, and rejoyced when they thought the world was quit of them. (Rhem. G. Hall, Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on Acts xvi. 20.

The Spirit of life.] That is interpreted, of their being reſtor'd to their former condition, with ſome addition of honour and glory. (G. Aſſ. and B.)

A great earthquake.] That is, a great ſhaking of the kingdom of antichriſt; inſomuch that many, who had been under his tyranny, fell off from him; and others, being affrighted, "gave glory to the God of Heaven." (B. and Wells) See the notes on ch. iii. 4. and vi. 12. and Acts i. 15.

The ſecond wo is paſt.] See the notes on ch. viii. 13.

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. And the ſeventh Angel ſounded, and there were great voices in Heaven, ſaying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which ſat before God on their ſeats, fell upon their faces, and worſhipped God. Saying, we give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and waſt, and art to come; becauſe thou haſt taken to thee thy great power, and haſt reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they ſhould be judged, and that thou ſhouldſt give reward unto thy ſervants the prophets, and to the Saints, and them that fear thy name, ſmall and great, and ſhouldſt deſtroy them which deſtroy the earth. And the temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was ſeen in his temple the ark of his teſtament: And there were lightnings, and voices, and thundrings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

The four and twenty elders.] See the notes on ch. iv. 4, 10. and v. 8, 14.

O Lord God Almighty.] See the notes on ch. i. 4, 8, 11. and iv. 8.

Thy wrath is come.] That is, the time to execute thy wrath on ſuch as repented not in the time of thy forbearance. (Aſſ.) For this ſeventh trumpet ſounds to the day of judgment. (Newt.) And then ſhall God's ſervants, who have ſuffer'd for him here, be graciouſly rewarded, and his enemies, their perſecutors, be deſervedly deſtroyed. See the notes on ch. vi. 11. Luke xviii. 3. Rom. iv. 4. 1 Cor. iii. 8. 2 Cor. v. 10. and Hebr. xi. 26.

The temple of God was opened.] The prophecy being finiſhed, John is inſpired a-new by the eaten book, and begins the interpretation thereof here. (Newt.) "The temple of God was opened," that the ſeven Angels, with the ſeven vials, might come out of it, as we learn from ch. xv. 5, 6. "And there was ſeen in his temple the ark of his teſtimony," (or covenant) whereby may be denoted, that now the veracity of God, in fully making good his covenant and promiſes to his Church, was moſt evidently maniſeſted, by God's deſtroying all the enemies thereof, (viz. antichriſt and his followers) by the pouring forth the ſeven vials upon them. And, upon the pouring forth the laſt of theſe ſeven vials, or plagues, "there were lightnings, and voices, and thundrings, and an earthquake, and great hail," finiſhing the deſtruction of antichriſt; as appears from ch. xvi. 17. (Whiſt. and Wells) See the notes on ch. iv. 1, 5.

CHAP. XII.

The woman clothed with the ſun, brought forth a ſon: The red dragon, waiting to devour the child, is conquer'd by Michael: She flies into the wilderneſs; and is there perſecuted by the dragon.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND there appeared a great wonder in Heaven, a woman clothed with the ſun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve ſtars: And ſhe being with child, cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. And there appeared another wonder in Heaven, and behold, a great red dragon, having ſeven heads, and ten horns, and ſeven crowns upon his heads. And his tail drew the third part of the ſtars of Heavens, and did caſt them to the earth: And the dragon ſtood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as ſoon as it was born. And ſhe brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: And her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne. And the woman fled into the wilderneſs, where ſhe hath a place prepared of God, that they ſhould feed her there a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days.

A woman clothed with the ſun.] This is generally interpreted of the Primitive Church Catholic, in her militant ſtate; Which is, 1. deſcrib'd here as "clothed with the ſun;" that is, reſplendent and glorious, made pure and majeſtical by the perfect beams of Chriſt's righteouſneſs and the light of the Goſpel ſhining upon her; with "the moon under her feet," that is, the light of the Moſaical Law, which tho' far inferior to that of the Goſpel, is yet in ſome meaſure reſted upon by the Church, as it were upon a footſtool; or to ſignify her trampling under foot all the tranſitory and changeable things of this life; "and upon her head a crown of twelve ſtars," to denote the riſe of the Church, or propagation of the Goſpel, by the preaching of the twelve Apoſtles, and her ſtedfaſt holding the ſame uncorrupted doctrine. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. Wells, Q. and Newt.) But the head of the Church is not here deſcrib'd with any of the enſigns either of a Pope or a King, to favour the ſupreme headſhip pretended to by Papiſts or Eraſtians. (Wall) 2. This appearance in Heaven, muſt not be underſtood of Heaven properly ſo call'd, or of the third Heaven, for there is neither ſun, nor moon, nor ſtars; but of the air, or lower Heaven, which is frequently call'd (ouranos) Heaven. (G. and Aſſ.) 3. Her "being with child" means her being big with an earneſt deſire to propagate the Chriſtian religion throughout the world, and to bring forth children to God. (Hall, Aſſ. H. and B.) And, 4. Therefore 'tis ſaid, ſhe "cried, travailing; viz. Under ſeveral perſecutions, by Diocleſian and others: (Aſſ. Hill, and Newt.) By apologies to their earthly governors, and by prayers to God, that he would graciouſly ſend them emperors who would become nurſing fathers to his Church. (Aſſ. and B.) The many martyrs, in all times of the Church make it evident, that ſhe always brings forth her children with pain. (Wells and Q.) See the notes on ver. 5. ch. i. 6, 16, 20. 1 Cor. vii. 31. 2 Cor. xi. 2. Gal. iv. 19. and Eph. v. 32.

A great red dragon.] This is by ſome underſtood of the Devil himſelf, here call'd a dragon, for his ſubtilty; a great dragon for his power; and "a great red dragon" for his bloody cruelty. Thus they interpret his "having ſeven heads" to denote his manifold ſubtilties, and miſchievous contrivances againſt the Church; his "ten horns," his vaſt power and great ſtrength, both in himſelf and his members, as alſo the number and power of his agents, who ſerve, as horns, to puſh and hurt the Church; and the "ſeven crowns upon his heads" to denote his regal power, which he holds by uſurpation, and his many victories and conqueſts in the world, yet over none but thoſe who are willingly overcome by him. (Rhem. B. Q. Wall, and Hole) Others apply it to ſome dæmon, or evil genius, more immediately preſiding over the city of Rome, and inviting them to blood-ſhed; ſuch as bloody Mars by name. (G. Hall, and H.) But it is more commonly interpreted of the Roman empire, and its ſeveral perſecuting emperors; by applying the "ſeven heads" to the ſeven hills upon which their city was built; the "ten horns" to ſo many kings ſubject to their juriſdiction; and the "ſeven crowns" to the ſaid ſeven heads, as being the ſovereign and imperial city. (G. Mede, Aſſ. H. Whiſt. Wells, and Newt.) See the notes on ver. 9. and ch. vi. 4. and thoſe which here next follow.

His tail drew the third part.] Whether the force of the dragon be in his tail, as ſome naturiliſts ſay; (Aſſ.) Or rather, the dragon's tail is mention'd only to denote the ſubtil artifices, by which he firſt works, before he exerts his utmoſt power, as others argue; (G. and H.) 'Tis plain, that as the great dragon (the Devil) drew others of the aſpiring Angels into the ſame crime and condemnation with himſelf at firſt; (Q.) So his inſtruments (here call'd "a great red dragon") make it their conſtant buſineſs, to to contrive all the miſchiefs they poſſibly can to the Church and people of God. (Stanh.) And particularly, by aſſaulting the Biſhops of the Church, here call'd "the ſtars of Heaven," and others of the moſt eminent Chriſtians, whom they endeavour to caſt to the earth, that their light may ceaſe to ſhine in the firmament of Chriſt's Church. (Hall, Aſſ. B. and Wall) See the notes on ch. vi. 13. and ix. 1, 10, 19. Phil. iii. 18. and 2 Tim. iv. 10.

To devour her child.] So did Diocleſian, and Galerius, and Maximinian ſtand ready, by all ways and means, to devour (that is, deſtroy) Conſtantine to prevent his obtaining the empire, but God's providence preſerv'd him; and in due time rais'd this man-child to the imperial throne, "who was to rule all nations" under the Roman dominion, and to eſtabliſh the Chriſtian religion throughout the bounds of it. (Aſſ. Whiſt. Wells, and Newt.) And it is very remarkable, That as the natural time of a woman's geſtation, from her conception to the birth of the child is forty weeks, that is, two hundred and eighty days; ſo, 'tis well known, that from the firſt riſe of our Saviour's kingdom, at his reſurrection and aſcenſion, A. D. 33. till the famous proclamation and edict for the univerſal liberty and advancement of Chriſtianity, by Conſtantine and Licinius, A. D. 313. (which put an end to the pangs of birth, in the heavieſt perſecution that ever was then known) was exactly two hundred and eighty prophetical days, that is, ſo many common years. (Whiſt. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 7, &c.

Fled into the wilderneſs.] But not till after the "war in Heaven," mention'd in the following verſes: (Aſſ. and Newt.) That is, in the time of her being perſecuted by antichriſt. (Rhem. and Aſſ.) When God's providence prepar'd a place of ſafety for her; where ſhe ſhould be ſupported "a thouſand and two hundred and threeſcore days," that is, ſo many years. (G. Hall, Aſſ. B. and Wells) It pleaſeth God to keep us in the dark, for the punctual beginning of theſe days. We may be confident, the Chriſtian Church ſhall be in the wilderneſs but one thouſand two hundred and threeſcore years: And had we ſo much Divine Wiſdom, as to know exactly where to begin to reckon them, we might ſpeak, more than conjecturally, of the time of her deliverance. (Hill) Sr. Iſ. Newton dates this her flight from the diviſion of the Roman empire into the Greek and Latin empires. But, if that were calculated right, we might have hoped according to this computation, that Chriſt's Church would have been freed from all antichriſtian perſecution and uſurpation before this time. See Dr. Featley's ſermon on this text; and the notes on ver. 14. and ch. xi. 2.

Ver. 7, 8. 9, 10, 11, 12. And there was war in Heaven; Michael and his Angels fought againſt the dragon, and the dragon fought, and his Angels: And prevailed not, neither was their place found any more in Heaven. And the great dragon was caſt out, that old ſerpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: He was caſt out into the earth, and his angels was caſt out with him. And I heard a loud voice, ſaying in Heaven, Now is come ſalvation, and ſtrength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Chriſt: For the accuſer of our brethren is caſt down, which accuſed them before our God day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their teſtimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death. Therefore rejoyce, ye Heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Wo to the inhabiters of the earth, and of the ſea: For the Devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, becauſe he knoweth that he hath but a ſhort time.

And there was war.] Here is ſhewn, by what means the woman happily came to be deliver'd of her child ſafe, notwithſtanding the dragon ſtood ready to devour him, ver. 4, viz. By the ſpecial providence of God, who preſerv'd him, by the miniſtry of his holy Angels. (Wells) Where we may obſerve, 1. That this "war in Heaven" is here variouſly interpreted. Some underſtand it literally, of the expulſion of the Devil and his Angels from the ſeats of light and bliſs, after their rebellion againſt God; (Stanh.) Others underſtand it myſtically, of the ſpiritual war between Chriſt and Satan, with their reſpective agents and inſtruments, concerning the ſovereignty over men's hearts, and the ſetting up of Chriſt's kingdom. (Hall, Hill, B. Q. and Hole) Some refer it to the conteſt at Rome, between St. Peter and Simon Magus; (G. and H.) And others to the oppoſitions made by the Heathen Emperors, as Satan's emiſſaries and agents, againſt the Chriſtian Church, till they were all defeated and brought to an end, by Conſtantine and others of the emperors becoming Chriſtians. (Mede, Aſſ. Whiſt. Wells and Newt.) See the notes on Acts viii. 23. and Jude 9. 2. That "the great dragon," is here call'd "that old ſerpent," becauſe under that ſhape he of old deceiv'd our firſt parents; as alſo "the Devil" from his accuſing of us before God; and Satan from his deadly hatred of us. (G. Hill, Wells, and Hole) 3. That when he was caſt out, "his Angels were caſt out with him;" that is to ſay, all ſorts of idolatry, the worſhip of all thoſe which had hitherto been eſteem'd as God's, was utterly renounc'd. (Wells) See the notes on Luke x. 18. and 2 Pet. ii. 4.

Now is come——the kingdom of our God.] Not that God had not a kingdom before; for that was from everlaſting: But it then became more viſible, and Chriſt's power, which was infinite and before all time, was then made more manifeſt and apparent to the world. (Hole) The Saints in Heaven join with believers on earth in this ſong of triumph. When they ſpeak of God, they ſay our God; and when they ſpeak of the Church below, they ſay our brethren. Behold a ſweet communion between the Church militant and the Church triumphant: Indeed they conſtitute but one Church, one family, one houſhold; the whole family in Heaven and earth is but one. (B.) 'Tis obſerv'd by Mr. Mede, that this hymn of triumph is, as it were, the key for interpreting this whole viſion. For hence it plainly appears, that the advancing of the woman's child to the throne of God denotes no other than the introducing of "ſalvation and ſtrength, and the kingdom of God, and the power of Chriſt," into the imperial throne of the Roman empire. (Wells) See the notes on ch. vii. 10.

By the blood of the Lamb.] Not by any power of their own, but by the blood of Chriſt, that immaculate Lamb, applied to them by a lively faith, and by the power of that mighty word of truth, to which they have given their teſtimony; and by their reſolute and patient ſuffering, and yielding up even their lives to a moſt bitter death, for the maintenance of the Goſpel. (Beza, Hall, Hill, Aſſ. B. Wells and Hole) See the notes on ch. v. 12. and vii. 14. Luke xiv. 26. Acts xx. 24. Rom. viii. 33, &c. and xvi. 20. 1 Cor. xv. 55. 2 Cor. iv. 11. and xi. 23. Col. ii. 15. and Hebr. xi. 35.

Rejoice, ye Heavens.] That is, ye Churches; and ye who abide ſafe in them, under God's protection, as in a tent. (Aſſ.)

Wo to the inhabiters of the earth, and of the ſea.] That is, to all earthly-minded and ſenſual men, whoſe affections are wholly ſet upon worldly things, and who yield up themſelves to his power, being overcome by his temptations: (Hall, Stanh. B. and Hole) Or who live any where out of the Church of God; earth and ſea being here oppoſed to Heaven, which is the Church. (Aſſ.) For, ſince the Devil cannot have his will of the faithful ones, he will be ſure to tyrannize over his own vaſſals. (G. Hall, and Aſſ.)

He hath but a ſhort time.] Viz. He cannot have ſo fit an occaſion as before, to perſecute the Saints, his viceroys, the Heathen emperors, being now depoſed; (Aſſ.) So that, "he knoweth, that he hath but a ſhort time," before an end ſhall be put to the idolatrous worſhip of him, in the Roman empire. (Wells) And, as Satan's time for miſchief is ſhort, ſo is our time for doing good; the more ought we therefore to watch, to pray, and to labour. (B. and Q.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. And when the dragon ſaw that he was caſt unto the earth, he perſecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that ſhe might flie into the wilderneſs, into her place; where ſhe is nouriſhed for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the ſerpent. And the ſerpent caſt out of his mouth water as a flood, after the woman; that he might cauſe her to be carried away of the flood. And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed up the flood, which the dragon caſt out of his mouth. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her ſeed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt.

And when the dragon ſaw.] This being now moſt commonly underſtood of the ſtate of the Church, after Conſtantine the Great's becoming a convert to Chriſtianity, we may obſerve, 1. That the dragon's "perſecuting the woman" is here interpreted of the new perſecution which broke out under Licinius and others. (Whiſt. and Newt.) 2. That the "two wings of a great eagle" are probably thought to be the two chief cities of Rome and Conſtantinople, upon the diviſion of the empire into the eaſtern and weſtern, A. D. 330. the eagle being the known ſymbol or enſign of the Roman empire. See the notes on Matth. xxiv. 28. (Mede, Whiſt. Wells and Newt.) For theſe two wings of the Roman eagle protected the Chriſtians againſt their perſecutors in great meaſure. (Whiſt. and Wells) 3. That her "flight into the wilderneſs" denotes her being in a ſolitary, afflicted condition without any outward ſplendor or glory, tho' ſhe was nouriſhed, and protected from ruin, "for a time," &c. (Idem) Viz. in the ſpiritually barren empire of the Latins, or Babylon myſtically ſo call'd. (Newt.) 4. That herein is obſervable, the method taken by God, to let us into the meaning of this obſcure expreſſion "a time and times, and half a time," (mention'd Dan. xii. 7.) which could never have been found out by the bare ſignification of the words themſelves. For, how could it have ever been thereby found out, that time ſignifies a year, and times two years, and half a time half a year? Whereas, by comparing this ver. 14. with ver. 6. it plainly appears, that "a time, and times, and half a time" is put here to denote the ſame with "a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days" there, or three years and a half. And hereby is alſo intimated, that the prophecy of Daniel, wherein this expreſſiion is mention'd, does appertain to the ſame events as this of the Revelation. See the notes on ver. 6. and ch. xi. 3. (Wells) 5. That by the water, which "the ſerpent caſt out of his mouth as a flood after the woman," is underſtood the weſtern empire, under Conſtantine junior and Conſtans, upon the diviſion of the empire between the ſons of Conſtantine the Great, A. D. 337. And by the earth, "ſwallowing up the flood," the eaſtern empire, by the victory of Conſtantius over Magnentius, A. D. 353. (Newt.) And, 6. That the dragon's being "wroth with the woman," 'tis referr'd to the time of Julian the apoſtate, A. D. 361. And his going "to make war with the remnant of her ſeed," to the eaſtern empire, upon the new diviſion of the empire between Valentinian and Valens, A. D. 364. (Idem) But, after all, ſome do interpret this paſſage more generally: By the wings given to the woman, underſtanding God's gracious providence and protection of his Church, in all times of trial and perſecution. (Hall, Aſſ. B. and Wells) By the water, caſt out as a flood, the floods of lies, ſlander and reproaches, invented by the Devil, and propagated by his emiſſaries, and the many erroneous and heretical doctrines, ſpread abroad in the Church; thereby, if poſſible to draw her into deteſtation or apoſtaſy. (Hall, Mede, B. Wells and Wall) By the earth ſwallowing up that flood, the rulers of the earth calling ſynods and councils, to condemn thoſe pernicious doctrines. (B. and Wells) And by "the remnant of her ſeed," all the orthodox Chriſtians, who adhere ſtedfaſtly to the Holy Scriptures, as the rule of faith. (B.) See the notes on 1 Cor. i. 6. and ii. 1. and 1 John v. 7, &c.

CHAP. XIII.

The viſions of two beaſts; one aſcending out of the ſea, the other out of the earth.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. AND I ſtood upon the ſand of the ſea, and ſaw a beaſt riſe up out of the ſea, having ſeven heads, and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blaſphemy. And the beaſt which I ſaw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: And the dragon gave him his power, and his ſeat, and great authority. And I ſaw one of his heads, as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: And all the world wondred after the beaſt. And they worſhipped the dragon which gave power unto the beaſt: And they worſhipped the beaſt, ſaying, Who is like unto the beaſt? Who is able to make war with him? And there was given unto him a mouth ſpeaking great things, and blaſphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. And he opened his mouth in blaſphemy againſt God, to blaſpheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in Heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the Saints, and to overcome them: And power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth ſhall worſhip him, whoſe names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world. If any man have an ear, let him hear. He that leadeth into captivity, ſhall go into captivity: He that killeth with the ſword, muſt be killed with the ſword. Here is the patience and the faith of the Saints.

And I ſtood.] The Alexandrian MS. the Vulgar Latin, Syriac, and Arabic Verſions, read it not (eſtathen) I ſtood, but (eſtathe) he ſtood, referring it not to St. John himſelf, but to the dragon. (Mede, Wells and Wall) And beſides, moſt of our Greek copies add this clauſe to the end of the former chapter.

A beaſt riſe up out of the ſea.] This beaſt is concluded to be the antichriſt. (Rhem. and Wells) But upon whom particularly to fix this deteſtable title, is neither eaſy to determine, nor ſafe to attempt; as we have noted on 2 Theſſ. ii. 3. All I ſhall add here to what I have ſaid there, is to obſerve, That ſome refer this character to the Roman empire; whoſe chief ſeat was plac'd upon ſeven hills; whoſe government was manag'd by ſeven ſeveral forms of ſovereignty; and whoſe ſtrength conſiſted in ten ſeveral kingdoms, under its command: Which was compoſed as it were of the qualities of all the other three great monarchies which were paſt: As being, for fierceneſs and ſpeedy conqueſt, like the leopard of the Greek monarchy; for ravening, like the Perſian bear; and and for haughtineſs and cruelty, like the Babylonian lion: "And the dragon" (the Devil) did, by all means, promote the power and authority of that empire, the better thereby to ſerve his own purpoſes. Several of whoſe impious and profane governors made profeſſion of horrible blaſphemies, challenging to be ſtiled and ador'd as gods. (Hall, Aſſ. H. Wells, and Wall) And this beaſt is thought to "riſe up out of the ſea," upon the diviſion of the empire between Gratian and Theodoſius, A. D. 379. To whom "the dragon gave his power, and his ſeat, and great authority," upon the laſt diviſion of it, between the ſons of Theodoſius, A. D. 395. (Newt.) See the notes on ch. xii. 3. and thoſe here next following.

The dragon gave him his power.] Viz. By relinquiſhing the weſtern empire to him. (Newt.) But note here, that when the dragon (meaning the Devil) is ſaid to give the beaſt "his power, and his ſeat, and great authority," we muſt not underſtand it as his by right, (for "all power is of God") but as by uſurpation, belonging to him. That authority which is claim'd, to depoſe kings, to diſpoſe of kingdoms, and to diſpenſe with the laws of God; all this is from the dragon, and in no wiſe from God. (B.) See the notes on the Rom. xiii. 1. and a caſtrated note on 1 Tim. ii. 2.

Wounded to death.] The weſtern empire was, "as it were, wounded to death," by the Goths and Vandals; but its "deadly wound was heal'd," by raiſing up the French and German empire, under the title of the Roman: So that now it ſeem'd like a body, which had been almoſt mortally wounded, and yet flouriſh'd again to admiration. (Aſſ.) Mr. Mede underſtands this beaſt's head to be thus wounded, when Chriſtianity was advanc'd to the throne; and heal'd again, by the apoſtaſy of the Church, within the ſaid empire, into popery; as being only another ſort of Heatheniſm reviv'd. (Wells) But Dr. Wells obſerves, The worſhip of the Devil, or Idolatry, which had receiv'd a deadly wound, having been put down by the Chriſtian Emperors, was reviv'd again (and ſo healed) partly, and in an inferior degree, by the Papal Antichriſt, and partly, more eſpecially, and completely, by Antichriſt emphatically ſo call'd.

Worſhipped the dragon.] See the notes on ch. ix. 20. and 1 Cor. x. 20.

To continue forty and two months.] Since great things are to happen at the end of this ſpace, many Commentators have made diligent enquiry, where to fix the beginning of it. Mede, Lloyd, Creſſener, Allix, Whiſton, &c. thought the time of the beaſt's appearing in this ſhape to be about A. D. 456. (or, according to ſome of them, about A. D. 476.) by which account it was to continue till A. D. 1716, or till A. D. 1736. Their reaſon for ſetting the beginning ſo early, is not from any proof of the Church of Rome being then ſo far corrupted, as that the Antichriſt, of whom St. Paul had ſpoken, or the blaſphemous head here ſpoken of, ſhould be ſuppos'd to be then come: But becauſe then, and then firſt, the number of nations, which had invaded the provinces of that empire, and were ſettled in it, amounted to ten; counting the Britons, and Saxons, the Franks, Goths, Vandals, &c. So that it was then firſt (decemcornupeta) a ten-horned beaſt. But, tho' there were ten or more of them, they were not as yet become members, confederates, or horns, of the Roman beaſt; but were moſt of them, as yet, in a ſtate of hoſtility with it, invaders and enemies of it. They are not to be accounted ten horns of the beaſt, till they were all ten in a dependency on, or confederacy with it; which was not till a good while after, as might be exemplified in many of them. The interpreters muſt, I think, fix upon ſome later time for the beginning of theſe "forty and two months," or 1260 years, which the Romiſh beaſt (I mean, and ſo do they, the laſt head of it) is to continue. And (to throw my gueſs among thoſe of others) I think the year 732 (which is 256 years after the lateſt of theirs) to be a probable time for the beginning of it. For then, by Gregory the Second's expelling the Imperial Power quite out of Ravenna and all Italy, becauſe Leo the Emperor (whom they call'd an Iconoclaſt Heretic) oppos'd the Pope's eſtabliſhing the worſhip of images, that came to paſs, which St. Paul had foretold, as the time of the revealing of (ho anomos) "that wicked one," 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. And by this time there were ten of thoſe nations, which had invaded the Roman empire, entred into a confederacy with, and ſubmiſſion to, the pontifical power of Rome. (Wall) See Dr. Wall here at large for more particulars; and the notes on ch. xi. 2. and xii. 6. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 4, &c.

Blaſphemy againſt God.] The giving to images, or to creatures, the worſhip due to God only; or for any one to uſurp a power which belongs to God only, [illegible] call'd "blaſphemy againſt God." But if by "them that dwell in Heaven" be meant Angels, or ſouls of men ſuppos'd to be there, I do not ſee how popery blaſphemes them; except it be by making idols of them. (Wall)

The book of life.] It is call'd here the book of the lamb; becauſe it is by him, and by the merit of his blood, that we obtain eternal life. (B.) See the notes on Phil. iv. 3.

From the foundation of the world.] This verſe, to prevent miſconſtruction, ſhould more naturally be read in this order; "And all that dwell upon the earth, whoſe names are not from the foundation of the world, written in the book of life of the lamb that was ſlain, ſhall (or will) worſhip him." (Aſſ. H. Eſſay, and Wall) See the notes on ch. v. 6, 12. 2 Tim. i. 9. and Hebr. ix. 25, &c.

The patience and faith of the Saints.] The phraſe of leading into captivity (aichmaloſian ſynagein) properly means the gathering a captivity (or number of captives) together, with intent to revolt from him whoſe captives they lawfully are; And being here further expreſs'd by killing with the ſword, implies the making violent reſiſtance and oppoſition againſt their perſecuting princes; which for a Chriſtian to do, is quite contrary to "the patience and faith of the Saints;" which conſiſts in ſuffering, not in reſiſting; in having their names written in the ſlain lamb's book of life, not in the military liſt of thoſe who will fight againſt their lawful ſuperiors, rather than ſuffer under them. The only Chriſtian weapons againſt perſecuting princes are demonſtrated to be "patience and faith;" enduring meekly what comes from them, and referring our cauſe to God only: And by theſe means, (ſo neceſſary for every Chriſtian to obſerve, ver. 9) hath Chriſtianity ever flouriſh'd, and by none other. (H.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 12. and 1 Pet. i. 6.

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. And I beheld another beaſt coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he ſpake as a dragon. And he exerciſeth all the power of the firſt beaſt before him, and cauſeth the earth, and them which dwell therein, to worſhip the firſt beaſt, whoſe deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, ſo that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth, in the ſight of men, And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by the means of thoſe miracles which he had power to do in the ſight of the beaſt, ſaying to them that dwell on the earth, that they ſhould make an image to the beaſt which had the wound by a ſword, and did live. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beaſt, that the image of the beaſt ſhould both ſpeak, and cauſe that as many as would not worſhip the image of the beaſt, ſhould be killed. And he cauſeth all, both ſmall and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: And that no man might buy or ſell, ſave he that had the mark, or the name of the beaſt, or the number of his name. Here is wiſdom. Let him that hath underſtanding count the number of the beaſt: for it is the number of a man; and his number is ſix hundred threeſcore and ſix.

Another beaſt.] This is plainly the ſame, who in ch. xvi. 13. and xix. 20. is call'd "the falſe prophet;" as any one who compareth the places will ſee. The former beaſt repreſents the ſecular power of the Roman empire, as it was now in the ten horns; and this the pontifical power: So that this was (as Mr. Mede calls it) chaplain to the other; but this "exerciſeth all the power," ver. 12. (Wall) Many arguments have been uſed, to fix this character upon the Pope. (Mede, Aſſ. More, B. and Whiſt.) How ſuitable they are to that Prelate, I ſhall leave to the unprejudic'd reader's judgment. For my own part, (to uſe the words of Archbiſhop Tillotſon) unto whom the ſeveral characters of the beaſt do agree, and eſpecially the number of his name, I ſhall not preſume to conjecture, much leſs poſitively to determine; becauſe it is ſaid to require a particular wiſdom and underſtanding to find it out, ver. 18. However, to gratify the more curious, I ſhall briefly touch upon the principal characters, in the notes here following.

Coming up out of the earth.] Since "the ſea," ver. 1. is probably taken, according to the Hebrew way of ſpeaking, for the weſt; hence, by the earth, muſt be here denoted, by way of analogy, the eaſt: And this is agreeable to the opinion of ſeveral of the ancients, viz. Lactantius, Sulpitius Severus, Proſper, &c. (Wells) And accordingly it is by ſome interpreted of the Church of the Greek empire. (Newt.)

Two horns like a lamb.] Or rather, like thoſe of the lamb; meaning Chriſt. (H. Hickes, Wells, Wall and Newt.) By this deſcription it is concluded to ſignify a Church. (Newt.) And, more particularly, the epiſcopal office and authority, founded and inſtituted by Chriſt, and accordingly here call'd the horns of the lamb; horns, in the Scripture allegory, ſignifying power and authority, and the lamb ſignifying Jeſus Chriſt. (Hickes.) See Dr. Hicke's ſermon at large on this text.

Spake as a dragon.] Or rather, the dragon, before deſcrib'd. His powers were applied by his diſcourſes, to promote the intereſt of the dragon; that is, the Devil. (Wells)

To worſhip the firſt beaſt.] This, and the making an image to him, are interpreted of the aſſembling a body of men, like him, in point of religion; or calling a council, of the religion of the beaſt. (Newt.)

Maketh fire come down.] Excommunicating thoſe who differ from him in point of religion; for, in pronouncing their excommunications, they uſed to ſwing down a lighted torch from above. (Idem) But, the bringing fire down from heaven is no more than what is recorded in Scripture, to have been already done by the power of the Devil, Job i. 16. Now, what God thus permitted the Devil to do, in reſpect of Job, his faithful ſervant, he may alſo permit the Devil, or (which is the ſame) Antichriſt, by the Devil's means, to do, in reſpect of ſome of his faithful ſervants then living and oppoſing Antichriſt. However, this will not be a ſufficient motive to follow Antichriſt; ſince the providence of God has forewarn'd us, by this inſtance to Job, that the Devil has power to do ſuch miracles, even to the hurt of God's faithful ſervants, when permitted by God ſo to do, for a trial of their faithfulneſs; which will be the caſe of the faithful in the days of Antichriſt. (Wells) See the notes on 2 Theſſ. ii. 9, &c.

Make an image to the beaſt.] Hereby ſome underſtand the image or reſemblance there is in popery of the old heathen idolatry. (Mede and More) Others make this image of the beaſt to be the emperor; as taking to himſelf the titles of Cæſar, or His Cæſarian Majeſty, and Sacred Roman Emperor. (Hall, Aſſ. Whiſt. and Wall) Whereas, the words may be taken in their literal ſenſe very well, viz. "That they ſhould make an image to the beaſt;" and "that the image of the beaſt ſhould both ſpeak, and (by ſuch orders being given publickly, or in the hearing of all, by the ſaid ſpeaking image) cauſe, that as many as would not worſhip the image of the beaſt, ſhould be killed." For this conſtruction carries nothing in it, but what has been already done by the power of the Devil, or Magic; and conſequently, may be done again by Antichriſt, and his falſe prophet, who ſhall be endued with magical power, and that likely to the very higheſt degree that the Devil can impart unto them. And hereby the head of the dragon that was wounded will be completely cured; foraſmuch as the dragon ſhall then again, as formerly (before the coming of Chriſt) deliver oracles to the world by this image. (Wells) Which laſt interpretation ſeems to be agreeable alſo to Grotius, and Dr. Hammond. But, ſince the Rhemiſh Annotators are here pleas'd to ſay, That they who now refuſe to worſhip Chriſt's image, would then worſhip Antichriſt's! I cannot but obſerve, that this their concluſion is as weak in logic, as their conceſſion is in policy; for, as I remember, whatever is their practice, they are wont abſolutely to deny, that they themſelves do worſhip Chriſt's image.

The mark, or the name.] Theſe three terms, the mark, the name, and the number of the name, amount to much the ſame thing: To have the mark of the beaſt, being (as it ſeems) no other than to have the name of the beaſt mark'd upon one; as ſervants were formerly wont to be mark'd with their maſter's name on their foreheads, and ſoldiers with that of their general on their right hand: And ſince the number of the beaſt's name ſeems to denote the number contain'd in the letters of the ſaid name, conſider'd according to their numerical uſe and value, hence it muſt follow, that to have the name, or the number of the name, muſt amount to the ſame thing. (Aſſ. H. Wells, and Wall.) But whatever this mark, or name, or number is, 'tis enough for us to know, that it is ſomewhat, which, as a note of diſcrimination, is impos'd on all men of that time and place whereof this viſion treats; and which was receiv'd by ſome, ch. xiv. 11. and not received by others, ch. xx. 4. and this by way of analogy to Chriſt's ſealing his faithful ſervants in the forehead, ch. vii. 3. (H. and Wells) But whoever has the curioſity to inquire into the various conjectures of learned men upon this ſubject, may be gratified, by conſulting the authors here quoted at large. What the Rhemiſh Divines ſay, That the Proteſtants, plucking down the image of Chriſt out of all Churches, and his ſign of the croſs from mens foreheads, and taking away the honour and reverence of the name Jeſus, do make room for Antichriſt's image, and mark, and name, ought not to have been ſaid without a diſtinction. For, how juſt ſoever the remark may be, as to ſome who are call'd Proteſtants; I thank God, it has no force at all againſt thoſe of the Church of England; wherein the uſe of the croſs is expreſly requir'd, and uſed, in publick Baptiſm; as the name Jeſus is alſo injoin'd, by our Canons, to be repeated and heard with due honour and reverence: And tho' we have not now the image of Chriſt ordinarily in our Churches, it is not for want of honour and reverence to Chriſt himſelf; but only to prevent its being ſuperſtitiouſly abus'd, by thoſe who pay that worſhip to the image, which is not properly due to it. See the notes on ch. ii. 17. and vii. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 3, &c.

CHAP. XIV.

The viſion of the Lamb, ſtanding on mount Sion, with his company: An Angel preaching the Goſpel: Another proclaiming the fall of Babylon: And a third denouncing judgments againſt the followers of antichriſt. A deſcription of the bleſſed ſtate of the righteous; and of God's vengeance on the wicked.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AND I looked, and lo, a Lamb ſtood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thouſand, having his Fathers name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from Heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps; And they ſung as it were a new ſong before the throne, and before the four beaſts, and the elders: And no man could learn that ſong, but the hundred and forty four thouſand, which were redeemed from the earth. Theſe are they which are not defiled with women; for they are virgins: Theſe are they which follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth: Theſe were redeemed from among men, being the firſt-fruits unto God, and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile: For they are without fault before the throne of God.

A Lamb ſtood on the mount Sion.] As the ſtate of antichriſt and his party was repreſented in the foregoing chapter; ſo the ſtate of the Church of the faithful is, by way of oppoſition, anſwering thereto, repreſented here. (Hall and Wells) There was a deſcription of thoſe who, by all manner of hardſhips, endeavour'd to draw men over to idolatry, and to deprive thoſe of life and civil liberties, who refus'd to ſubmit to the wicked decrees impos'd on them to this purpoſe: And here is a deſcription of the happy condition of thoſe who continued conſtant, and ſtedfaſt in their principles, notwithſtanding all ſuch temptations and endeavours to the contrary. (Stanh.) Where the Lamb is agreed to mean Chriſt himſelf; and his ſtanding, to denote his readineſs to protect and deliver his Church, which is repreſented by mount Sion. See the notes on ch. v. 6. and xiii. 8, 11. Matth. xxviii. 20. and John i. 29.

His father's name.] In the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other MSS. as well as in all the four ancient Verſions, and Origen, Arethas, Cyprian, and Jerome, it is read (onoma autou kai) his name and his father's; that is, the name of the Lamb and the name of his father. (Wells and Q.) See the notes on ch. ii. 17. iii. 12. vii. 3. and xiii. 16.

Voice of a great thunder.] That is, the voice of a great multitude. (Stanh. and Wells) Or, a loud and open profeſſion of the truth, that the world might take notice of it. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. i. 15. iv. 2, &c. v. 8. vi. 1. and vii. 9.

A new ſong.] Not the old ſong of their forefathers, who praiſed God for the redemption to come; but a new ſong of thankſgiving for their redemption already atchieved. (Hall, H. and Wells) See the notes on ch. iv. 6. v. 9. vii. 17. xi. 12. and xii. 10, 12. Acts v. 41. and 1 Cor. vi. 20.

Not defiled with women.] That is, neither with bodily fornication with women, nor with ſpiritual fornication with idols; but have kept themſelves chaſt and clean from both theſe pollutions. (Hall, Aſſ. H. Stanh. B. and Wells) What advantage ſoever the patrons and advocates of a ſingle life, voluntary, and vow'd upon a religious account, may fancy to themſelves; 'tis manifeſt, they over-ſtrain the point, when, caſting reflections upon that ſtate of life, which the Scriptures have expreſly pronounc'd honourable; and when they ſuppoſe all thoſe approaches to pollute any ſort or order of men, which the Apoſtle hath abundantly vindicated, by ſtiling them "the bed undefiled," Hebr. xiii. 4. from whence alone, it would follow evidently enough, that by the perſons "not defiled with women," muſt be meant here (if thoſe words were to be literally underſtood) men who never allow'd themſelves in any unlawful liberties of this kind. (Stanh. and Whart.) See the notes on 2 Cor. xi. 2. and Eph. v. 27.

Follow the Lamb.] That is, adhere to the profeſſion and truth of Chriſtianity, in adverſity as well as proſperity; declining no trials, which the providence of God thought fit to call them to. (Stanh. B and Wells) See the notes on ch. iii. 4. Luke xiv. 26. 2 Cor. xi. 2. and 2 Pet. ii. 20, &c.

The firſt-fruits unto God.] See the notes on ch. v. 9. Acts xx. 28. Hebr. xii. 23. and Jam. i. 18.

Without fault.] Becauſe Chriſt hath redeem'd them, and paid the price with his blood; ſo that they appear as without ſpot or blemiſh "before the throne of God." (Hall, and Aſſ.) See the notes on John i. 47. Eph. i. 4. v. 26. and 1 Pet. ii. 22.

Ver. 6, 7. And I ſaw another Angel flie in the midſt of Heaven, having the everlaſting Goſpel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, For the hour of his judgment is come: And worſhip him that made Heaven, and earth, and the ſea, and the fountains of waters.

Another Angel.] Not the ſame with any of the before-mention'd. (Aſſ. H. and Wells) This viſion ſeems to denote the open and free preaching of the Goſpel, in the truth and purity thereof, through all the parts of the Roman empire, after Conſtantine's becoming a Chriſtian; whereby the embracers of the Goſpel were ſufficiently taught, and forewarn'd, not to fall into any corruptions, which the viſible Church afterwards fell into; and particularly Popery. (Wells)

Goſpel to preach.] See the notes on ch. v. 9. vii. 9. xi. 15. and xiii. 7. 1 Cor. iv. 1, &c. 2 Cor. v. 19, 20. Col. iii. 1. Tit. i. 2. and 1 Pet. i. 25.

Fear God, and give glory.] Forſaking all ſuperſtitions, and ſinful will-worſhip, fear God only, and give glory to him. (Hall) See the notes on Luke xii. 4. Tit. ii. 12. and 1 Pet. iv. 16.

The hour of his judgment.] See the notes on ch. xi. 18. John xii. 31. and xvi. 8, &c. Acts xvii. 30, 31. and Jam. v. 8.

Worſhip him that made.] What none elſe could make; and much leſs your images. The Apoſtle here nameth four principal works of God, to perſuade men to know, and worſhip him aright: 1. "Heaven," famous for breadth, light, motion and influence; 2. "Earth," unmoveable from the beginning, and very profitable to men; 3. "The ſea," of huge compaſs, and great uſe for fiſhing and navigation; And, 4. "The fountains of waters," which run always, for the uſe of the living creature, as types of God's eternity and bounty. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. ix. 20. Acts xiv. 15. and xvii. 24.

Ver. 8. And there followed another Angel, ſaying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, becauſe ſhe made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

Babylon is fallen.] That by Babylon is here myſtically ſignified Rome, ſeems to be generally agreed: But ſome underſtand it of Rome Pagan; (G. and H.) While others underſtand it of Rome Popiſh. (Ainſw. Aſſ. B. and Wells) However, we may obſerve, 1. That the phraſe, is fallen, is only a prophetical way of expreſſing future things as if they were now preſent. (G. Ainſw. B. and Newt.) 2. That the redoubling of that phraſe, "is fallen," denotes the certainty of the event. (Ainſw. Aſſ. and B.) 3. That by "the wine of the wrath of her fornication," is meant the poiſonous or intoxicating cup of her idolatries; alluding to the love-potions or philtres uſed by wanton women to make men in love with them: For thymos ſignifies poiſon as well as anger, according to the Helleneſtical Jews; who make it ſynonymous to the Hebrew word, ſignifying both the one and the other. (G. Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) And, 4. That whoſoever ſuffers himſelf to be intoxicated with the love of this world, loves and rebuilds Babylon in his heart, and ſhall fall with her. (Q.) See the notes on ver. 10.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12. And the third Angel followed them, ſaying with a loud voice, If any man worſhip the beaſt and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, The ſame ſhall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture, into the cup of his indignation; and he ſhall be tormented with fire and brimſtone, in the preſence of the Holy Angels, and the preſence of the Lamb: And the ſmoke of their torment aſcendeth up for ever and ever: And they have no reſt day nor night, who worſhip the beaſt and his image, and whoſoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the Saints: Here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jeſus.

Worſhip the beaſt.] The "worſhipping the beaſt" is here ſo plainly diſtinguiſh'd from the fornication of Babylon, ver. 8. as that it ſhall ſucceed it: Which is, I think, a plain proof, that antichriſt, emphatically ſo call'd, muſt ſucceed, and ſo be diſtinct from the Pope. And yet Mr. Mede expounds this text, as well as ver. 8. of Rome and Popery; which is no other, than to make Rome to be ſtanding, after the text, ver. 8. has ſaid, it is fallen! Of which ſee more on ch. xvii. 16. (Wells) See alſo the notes on ch. xiii. 12, &c.

And receive his mark.] Viz. Either openly "in his forehead," or more ſecretly "in his hand." (Wells) See the notes on ch. xiii. 16.

Wine of the wrath of God.] Here is mention made of a twofold oinos tou thymou; viz. One (tes porneias) "of her fornication," ver. 8. and the other (tes orges) "of his wrath," here: The former of which alludes to the love-poiſon before-mention'd; and the latter to the bitter potion commonly given to dying malefactors. (Aſſ. H. and Wells) And it is here, 1. Said to be "poured out without mixture;" to ſhew, that it is without the leaſt drop of mercy to allay the extremity of their torment: (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. and B.) And, 2. Call'd " the cup of his indignation;" that it is not a fatherly correction, which is accompanied with love and lenity, but the vengeance of a judge, in order to deſtruction. (B.) See the notes on ver. 8. Matth. xxvii. 34. Luke xxiii. 37. John xix. 29. Hebr. xii. 5, &c. and Jam. ii. 13.

Tormented with fire and brimſtone.] See the notes on ch. ix. 18. 2 Theſſ. i. 8. and Jude 7.

The ſmoke of their torment.] That is, of the fire, wherein they are tormented; which ſhall aſcend " for ever and ever;" as, we know the fire goeth not out, while we ſee the ſmoke aſcending from it. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. vii. 15.

Patience of the Saints.] Patience the Saints muſt have and exerciſe: Not ſtoical, not moral only; not patience perforce; but Chriſtian: which is a grace of the Spirit, enabling a man to bear all thoſe croſſes, which God in his providence layeth upon him, willingly, quietly, and conſtantly. (Ainſw.) And the Saints are only " they that keep all the commandments of God, and the faith of Jeſus;" as in all other reſpects, ſo eſpecially in theſe two; viz. 1. In not paying to Angels or Saints that religious worſhip which is due to God alone, as the Papiſts do: And, 2. In not wholly renouncing the faith of Chriſt, and going over to antichriſt emphatically ſo call'd, as the followers of this antichriſt ſhall do, when he ſhall appear, and ſet himſelf up in direct and manifeſt oppoſition to Chriſt. And here ſeems to be the ending of the open little book; as will appear from what follows. (Wells) See the notes on ch. x. 2, &c. xii. 12, 17. and xiii. 10. Acts iv. 19. v. 29. and xiv. 22. 2 Tim. iv. 7. and Hebr. x. 36.

Ver. 13. And I heard a voice from Heaven, ſaying unto me. Write, Bleſſed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth: Yea, ſaith the Spirit, that they may reſt from their labours; and their works do follow them.

And I heard a voice.] Here begins, probably, the remaining part of the ſealed book; giving a full and particular account of the ſtate of things under the ſeventh trumpet of the ſeventh ſeal, (which before is only hinted in ſhort;) viz. both as to the glorious reward and endleſs happineſs of the Saints, in this verſe; and alſo as to the grievous and endleſs puniſhment of the Devil, and of all the wicked; with a more particular deſcription of the deſtruction of Rome, and of antichriſt, in the verſes here next following. (Wells) Now, leſt ſome ſhould object againſt the patience recommended in the foregoing verſe, That they may loſe their lives in the quarrel, and be dead and cut off through the rage of antichriſt, before the wrath of God is fully pour'd out upon antichriſt; the Holy Ghoſt obviates the objection, by aſſuring them, that death ſhall be no prejudice, but an advantage to them; becauſe " bleſſed are the dead, which die in the Lord," &c. (Ainſw. and Aſſ.) Where we muſt obſerve, 1. That in the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other Manuſcripts, as well as in three of the four ancient Verſions, and in Arethas, it is only, " And I heard a voice from Heaven, ſaying, Write," &c. not (legouſes moi) ſaying unto me, as it is in our common copies. (Wells) But, 2. That, whether it was directed to the Apoſtle himſelf or not, the thing commanded to be written, was this comfortable ſentence, as worthy of ſpecial obſervation, " Bleſſed are the dead," &c. (G. Hall, Aſſ. and Wells) 3. That this was not only pronounc'd by the outward teſtimony of " a voice from Heaven," and by the ſame commanded to be written; but likewiſe confirm'd by the inward teſtimony of the Spirit; " Yea, ſaith the Spirit," &c. (Ainſw. Brough, and B.) 4. That this bleſſedneſs, being pronounc'd of thoſe who " die in the Lord," is interpreted not only of the martyrs, who " die in the Lord," that is, for the Lord's cauſe, tho' of them 'tis true in a more eſpecial manner; but generally, of all who die in a ſtate of grace and God's favour; as true members of Chriſt, and in the true Chriſtian faith; in the unity of his Church, and the love of his law. (Rhem. Hall, Ainſw. Aſſ. Tully, Wells and Q.) See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 18. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. 5. That the firſt argument, to prove this their bleſſedneſs, viz. that they " reſt from their labours," imports their being diſcharg'd from the labours, afflictions, and perſecutions of this world; and (which is more) from the daily dangers of ſin and damnation. (Rhem. Hall, Ainſw. Brough, Tully, B. and Wells) See the notes on John xi. 36. Acts xiv. 22. 1 Cor. ix. 24, &c. Eph. vi. 11, &c. 2 Tim. iii. 12. and iv. 7. and Hebr. xii 1. 6. That the other argument, viz. that " their works do follow them," imports their receiving the comfort and benefit of all the good works which they did here below; and that reward which Chriſt hath purchas'd, God hath promis'd, and they have expected. (Hall, Ainſw. Aſſ. B. and Wells) See the notes on ch. xi. 18. 1 Cor. xv. 58. and 2 Tim. iv. 8. But, 7. The word (aparti) " from henceforth," occaſions ſome diſpute among the Commentators. Bellarmine expounds it of the day of judgment, of which St. John had been ſpeaking before: Or if it be underſtood of any being bleſſed at their death, and going immediately into Heaven, then (according to him, with whom the Rhemiſts agree in the main) it is applicable only to the martyrs; whoſe ſufferings are ſo meritorious, that they are thereby freed from purgatory. But this his laſt opinion is confuted by Ribera; who interprets this place of all the Faithful: And the firſt is contradicted by Aquinas; who owns, that the ſouls of the righteous, after death, do immediately go to Heaven. Dr. Wells inclines to the firſt interpretation, as to the day of judgment; or (which means the ſame) the time of the ſeventh trumpet. But the more generally receiv'd opinion is, That, at the very inſtant of death, ſo ſoon as ſoul and body are parted, the ſoul of the righteous enjoys the beatify viſion, wherein bleſſedneſs doth conſiſt; waiting only for its perfect conſummation, till it ſhall be reunited to its body at the reſurrection. After all, Dr. Hammond's remark is worth our notice, That aparti (whether we read it as one word, or ap' arti, in two words) ſignifies, according to Euthymius, within a ſhort time, or not long after, or quickly: So that, in reſpect to the times of perſecution approaching, which would be ſo ſevere, as to require the utmoſt " patience of the Saints," ver. 12. the ſenſe here may be, that " bleſſed are the dead which die in the Lord" (aparti) within a ſhort time; or in the mean time, before thoſe perſecutions are ſet on foot in the Church. And this conſtruction is alſo favour'd by the Aſſembly-men, and others. See Mr. Sam. Ainſworth's ſermon, 1642. and Mr. T. Tully's (at the funeral of Bp. Rainbow) 1684. both on this text; and the notes on ch. xx. 1, &c.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. And I looked, and behold, a white cloud, and upon the cloud one ſat, like unto the ſon of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a ſharp ſickle. And another Angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that ſat on the cloud, Thruſt in thy ſickle, and reap: For the time is come for thee to reap; for the harveſt of the earth is ripe. And he that ſat on the cloud, thruſt in his ſickle on the earth, and the earth was reaped. And another Angel came out of the temple which is in Heaven, he alſo having a ſharp ſickle. And another Angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the ſharp ſickle, ſaying, Thruſt in thy ſharp ſickle, and gather the cluſters of the vine of the earth: for her grapes are fully ripe. And the Angel thruſt in his ſickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and caſt it into thegreat wine-preſs of the wrath of God. And the wine-preſswas troden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-preſs, even unto the horſe-bridles, by the ſpace of a thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs.

A white cloud.] Here is a repreſentation of the laſt judgment: Chriſt, in his glorious humanity, ſitting upon " a white cloud," to ſhew the integrity and glory of his preſence; " having on his head a golden crown," repreſenting his majeſty and power; " and in his hand a ſharp ſickle," implying his readineſs to cut down the ripe ſinners of the earth, and to execute his juſt ſeverity upon them. (Hall, and B.) See the notes on ch. i. 13. vi. 2. and x. 1.

Another Angel.] The earneſt prayers of the Church to God, to haſten his vengeance upon his and their enemies. (B. and Wells) See the notes on ch. vi. 10.

The harveſt of the earth is ripe.] That is, their ſins are come to the heighth, and they ripe for vengeance. (Aſſ. B. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 17. ch. xiii. 12, &c. and John iv. 35.

Another Angel.] After the harveſt, here follows the vintage, as in its natural order. Thus the deſtruction of Rome, by antichriſt emphatically ſo call'd, repreſented by the harveſt, is here ſucceeded by the deſtruction of antichriſt himſelf, repreſented by the vintage. (Wells) Mr. Mede interprets both theſe viſions, of one and the ſame Rome; only by the harveſt he underſtands the deſtruction of the city itſelf, and by the vintage that of the whole kingdom of the beaſt, that is, (according to him) of Popery in general. But Dr. Wells is very free with him, for this (which he calls a) poor and groundleſs diſtinction; and inſiſts, that the harveſt and vintage, thus ſucceeding one another, muſt unavoidably denote two different perſons or ſtates: Yet, ſeveral others underſtand them both of one and the ſame; looking upon theſe two viſions no otherwiſe than on Pharaoh's dreams, which were doubled, to ſignify the certainty of what was thereby foreſhew'd. However, that the deſtruction ſignified by the vintage is a greater judgment than that of the harveſt, is reaſonably concluded from the different circumſtances here deſcribed. Thus, he who cut down in the harveſt, came from the clouds, ver. 14. he who cutteth in the vintage, comes "out of the temple which is in Heaven," ver. 17. The encourager of the former "came out of the temple," ver. 15. Of the latter "from the altar;" who is alſo ſaid to have "had power over fire," ver. 18. The former cried "with a loud voice;" the latter "with a loud cry:" To the former it is only ſaid, "Thruſt in thy ſickle;" to the latter, "thy ſharp ſickle:" The former, to reap; the latter, to "gather the cluſters:" The former is only told, "The harveſt is ripe;" the latter, that the "grapes are fully ripe:" By the former, "the earth was reaped," ver. 16. but no notice is taken of thraſhing; by the latter, the vine of the earth was not only gathered, but the grapes "caſt into the great wine-preſs," &c. ver. 19. (Aſſ. and B.) And further, 'tis obſerv'd here alſo, 1. That the altar of burnt-offerings, from which the Angel came, "which had power over fire," ver. 18. repreſents the wicked and impenitent, who are deſign'd for the ſacrifice. (G. and H.) 2. That, as the true Church is frequently compared to a vine; ſo is alſo the wicked antichriſtian Church here; but with this diſtinction added, viz. a "vine of the earth," as cleaving to, and only the favouring of, the earth. (B.) 3. That the grapes being ſuffer'd to hang, ripening in the warm ſun-ſhine, till they are not only ripe, but fully ripe, ſignifies the great forbearance and long-ſuffering of God towards the wicked, before he caſts them into the great wine-preſs of his wrath. (Idem) 4. That, as in the harveſt, all "the earth was reaped," ver. 16. ſo here in the vintage, all the cluſters of the grapes are gathered, both ſmall and great; to ſignify, that in the laſt judgment, all mankind, without diſtinction, ſhall be gather'd together before the great tribunal of Chriſt. (Idem) 5. That by "the great wine-preſs" is immediately meant the great ſlaughter and bloodſhed here foretold, as a temporal judgment (G. Aſſ. and Wells) and ultimately, the puniſhment in Hell to which the wicked will at laſt be doom'd. (Hall) And, 6. That the great deluge of blood here metaphorically deſcrib'd, ver. 20. denotes the inundation of God's wrath to be ſo general, that all the wicked, and thoſe in particular who follow antichriſt, may not only drink of, but ſwim in it. (Hall, Aſſ. B. and Wells) See the notes on ver. 10. ch. viii. 5. Mark ix. 48, &c. John xv. 1, &c. and Rom. xi. 21.

CHAP. XV.

The viſion of the ſeven Angels, with the ſeven laſt plagues.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. AND I ſaw another ſign in Heaven, great and marvellous, ſeven Angels, having the ſeven laſt plagues, for in them is filled up the wrath of God. And I ſaw as it were a ſea of glaſs, mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beaſt, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, ſtand on the ſea of glaſs, having the harps of God. And they ſing the ſong of Moſes the ſervant of God, and the ſong of the Lamb, ſaying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; juſt and true are thy ways thou king of Saints. Who ſhall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy name? For thou only art holy: For all nations ſhall come and worſhip before thee: For thy judgments are made manifeſt. And after that I looked, and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the teſtimony in Heaven was opened: And the ſeven Angels came out of the temple, having the ſeven plagues, clothed in pure and white linnen, and having their breaſts girded with golden girdles. And one of the four beaſts gave unto the ſeven Angels, ſeven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever. And the temple was filled with ſmoke, from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the ſeven plagues of the ſeven Angels were fulfilled.

Another ſign in Heaven.] That is, in the Church, now grown more viſible and glorious. As God did "roar from Sion," Amos i. 2. when he foretold the deſtruction of the nations; ſo here, out of the Church come the vials of God's wrath, to be poured forth on antichriſt. (Aſſ.) For, as in the laſt viſion, ch. xiv. 17, &c. is repreſented in general the deſtruction of antichriſt, emphatically ſo call'd, and his followers; ſo the ſame comes now, in this and the following chapter, to be deſcrib'd more particularly; the effuſion of the ſeven vials denoting the ſeven more remarkable ſteps or degrees, whereby their deſtruction ſhall be brought about. And whereas it is ſaid, ch. viii. 13. that there were then three woes to come on the inhabiters of the earth, anſwerable to the three laſt trumpets, (viz. the fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh trumpets) then "yet to ſound;" and whereas 'tis further ſaid, ch. xi. 14. "The ſecond wo is paſt, and behold, the third wo cometh quickly," denoting that the third wo was to come under the ſeventh trumpet: Agreeably hereunto, the ſaid third wo, belonging to the ſeventh and laſt trumpet, ſeems to be made up chiefly of the ſeven vials, which were to put an end to the antichriſtian ſtate; and the pouring forth of which comes here to be deſcrib'd. (Wells.) See the notes on ch. viii. 13. ix. 14. xii. 1. and xiv. 17, &c.

Seven Angels.] Here we are to underſtand, 1. By the "ſeven Angels," the miniſters and executioners of the wrath of God: And, 2. By the "ſeven laſt plagues," the laſt dreadful judgments which ſhould be inflicted; and which would make a final end of thoſe upon whom they ſhould be pour'd forth, one after another, as in the next chapter. (Aſſ. B. and Wells.) See the notes on ver. 7. ch. viii. 7. &c. ix. 1, 14. xi. 15. and xiv. 10.

A ſea of glaſs.] Obſerve here, 1. That, by this repreſentation, ſome do underſtand the ſacraments of baptiſm: (Rhem.) others, the cryſtalline and pure doctrine of God's word; "mingled with the fire" of zeal againſt Antichriſt: (Aſſ.) and others, by the ſea, underſtand a multitude; by glaſs, their purity; and by fire, their zeal: To wit, thoſe who "had gotten the victory over the beaſt," &c. (H. B. and Wells.) 2. By their ſtanding on it, may be underſtood, either their having been upheld and ſupported by the word of God; or their trampling under foot their former perſecutions, and all their cruel enemies; or elſe, their now worſhipping God openly, in his viſible church. (Aſſ.) And, 3. The harps which they had, are call'd "the harps of God;" either according to the Hebrew phraſes, becauſe they were excellent ones: (idem.) Or elſe becauſe they were ſuch as were commonly uſed in the temple, in the worſhip and ſolemn ſervice of God; and therefore were reckon'd among "the muſical inſtruments of God," 1 Chron. xvi. 42. (H. B. and Wells.) See the notes on ch. iv. 6. v, 8. xiii. 11, 15. and xiv. 2. and Matth. iii. 11.

They ſing the ſong] This being a ſong of victory and triumph over the beaſt, (Mede) is therefore called "the ſong of Moſes;" alluding to that which Moſes ſang, on occaſion of the deliverance at the red ſea. (Hall, Aſſ. H. and B.) And it may be alſo call'd "the ſong of the lamb," as being agreeable to the doctrine both of Moſes in the Old Teſtament, and of Jeſus Chriſt, the lamb of God, in the New; viz. That one God only, who made the heaven and the earth, is to be acknowledg'd and worſhipped; and that with an incommunicable worſhip. (Rhem. Mede, and Wells.) See the notes on ch. xi. 13. and xiv. 3. In which ſong it ſelf we may obſerve, 1. That the title (ho pantocrator) Almighty, or literally, the ruler of all things, is a title, full of comfort to the ſaints in their greateſt ſtraits, and full of terror to their enemies, in the midſt of their abundance. (B.) 2. That they call him "juſt and true:" Juſt, becauſe of his puniſhing his and their enemies; and true, becauſe of his performing his promiſe to his people. (Aſſ. and H.) See the notes on ch. xiii. 10. and xiv. 9, 10. And, 3. That when they ſay, "who ſhall not fear thee?" By fear is meant a fear of reverence, and religious worſhip. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 7. and 1 Pet. iii. 15.

And the ſeven Angels.] Obſerve here, 1. That their "coming out of the temple," that is the oracle, more immediately from the preſence of God, implies, that they came out, to execute vengeance, by God's ſpecial directions, and not barely by his permiſſion. (Aſſ. H. and B.) 2. That this, together with their being clothed in prieſt's habits, and having the vials given them by "one of the four beaſts," (or as living creatures) which repreſented the holy catholick church, implies, this vengeance to be taken by God), at the requeſt and prayers of the church. (Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells.) 3. That theſe vials are ſaid to be golden; ſignifying, that theſe judgments proceed from a juſt God, with whom there is no corruption nor iniquity in judgment. (G. Aſſ. and B.) And, 4. That they are ſaid to be "full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever," by way of aggravation; to ſignify the endleſs duration of it, ſince God ever lives, to keep and retain the ſinners under the execution of that juſt wrath and puniſhments which they have brought upon themſelves. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on chap i. 13. iv. 6. v. 14. x. 6. xi. 19. and xiv. 15. and 1 Theſſ. i. 9.

The temple was filled with ſmoke.] Alluding to the cloud, which "cover'd the tent of the congregation, when the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle," Exod. xl. 34. and to the cloud which alſo filled the houſe of the Lord," 1 Kings, viii. 10. and 2 Chron. v. 13. (Hall, Aſſ. and Wells.) See the notes on 2 Theſſ. i. 9.

CHAP. XVI.

The ſeven vials of God's wrath poured out; and what follow'd thereon.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. AND I heard a great voice out of the temple, ſaying to the ſeven Angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth. And the firſt went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noiſom and grievous ſore upon the men which had the mark of the beaſt, and upon them which worſhipped his image. And the ſecond Angel poured out his vial upon the ſea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: And every living ſoul died in the ſea. And the third Angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. And I heard the Angel of the waters ſay, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and waſt, and ſhalt be, becauſe thou haſt judged thus: For they have ſhed the blood of Saints and Prophets, and thou haſt given them blood to drink; for they are worthy. And I heard another out of the altar ſay, Even ſo, Lord God Almighty, true, and righteous are thy judgments. And the fourth Angel poured out his vial upon the ſun; and power was given unto him to ſcorch men with fire. And men were ſcorched with great heat, and blaſphemed the name of God, which hath power over theſe plagues: And they repented not to give him glory. And the fifth Angel poured out his vial upon the ſeat of the beaſt; and his kingdom was full of darkneſs, and they gnawed their tongues for pain. And blaſphemed the God of Heaven, becauſe of their pains and their ſores, and repented not of their deeds. And the ſixth Angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the eaſt might be prepared. And I ſaw three unclean ſpirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beaſt, and out of the mouth of the falſe prophet. For they are the ſpirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battel of that great day of God Almighty. Behold, I come as a thief. Bleſſed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, leſt he walk naked, and they ſee his ſhame. And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon. And the ſeventh Angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of Heaven from the throne, ſaying, It is done. And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, ſuch as was not ſince men were upon the earth, ſo mighty an earthquake, and ſo great. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: And great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceneſs of his wrath. And every iſland fled away, and the mountains were not found. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every ſtone about the weight of a talent: And men blaſphemed God, becauſe of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

A great voice out of the temple.] viz. The voice of God himſelf, out of the moſt holy place. (G. Aſſ. H. and B.) See the notes on ch. xv. 1, 6. And here we may obſerve, once for all, 1. That ſeveral of theſe vials do plainly allude to the plagues of Egypt; As that of the "noiſom and grievous ſore here, ver. 2. does to the "boil breaking forth with blains," Exod. ix. 10. The ſea "the rivers and fountains of waters, becoming blood," here vers 3, 4. to the like, Exod. vii. 17. &c. (Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells.) And ſo likewiſe this of the kingdom of the beaſt being "full of darkneſs," ver. 10. is, in like manner, obſerv'd to allude to the like in Egypt, Exod. x. 21. &c. (H.) 2. That there is alſo a reſemblance and correſpondency, between theſe ſeven vials, and the ſeven trumpets, before mention'd. For, as the judgment, following the firſt trumpet, fell "upon the earth," ch. viii. 7. ſo does this of the firſt vial, ver. 2. As upon the ſecond trumpet's ſounding, "the third part of the ſea became blood," &c. viii. 8. ſo upon the ſecond vial here, ver. 3. As the third trumpet was follow'd by a judgment upon "the rivers and fountains of waters, ch. viii. 10. ſo is the third vial here, ver. 4. As "the ſun was ſmitten," in conſequence of the fourth trumpet, ch. viii. 12. ſo likewiſe on pouring out the fourth vial here, ver. 8. As the ſound of the fifth trumpet was follow'd by darkneſs, ch. ix. 2. ſo is the fifth vial here, ver. 10. As upon the ſixth trumpet "the four Angels, which were bound in the great river Euphrates, were looſed, which were prepared," &c. ch. ix. 14, 15. ſo, here the ſixth vial is poured "upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the kings of the eaſt might be prepared," ver. 12. And, as upon ſounding the ſeventh trumpet, "there were great voices in Heaven, ſaying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord," &c. ch. xi. 15. ſo here, upon pouring out the ſeventh vial, "there came a great voice out of the temple of Heaven, from the throne, ſaying, It is done," ver. 17. viz. The kingdoms of this world are now become the kingdoms of our Lord, &c. (Aſſ. Wells, and Wall.) So that this prophecy of pouring out the vials of wrath, is ſynchronal (or correſpondent in time) to that of ſounding the trumpets. (Newt.) Therefore, 3. It is a queſtion, whether they are both the ſame, only each deſcrib'd with ſome circumſtances omitted in the deſcription of the other; or whether the vials denote a ſeries of the laſt plagues, yet future; which ſhall reſemble the ſeven trumpets, in their order and method, but be more ſevere, and more appropriated to thoſe who worſhip the beaſt. Thus, for inſtance: Whereas the firſt four trumpets brought plagues, only upon "the third part" of the earth, ſea, rivers and ſun, ch. viii. 7, 8, 10, 12. theſe firſt four vials bring plagues without limitation, "upon the earth, upon the ſea, upon the rivers, and upon the ſun, here, ver. 2, 3, 4, 8. that is, upon all the earth, ſea, rivers, and ſun; or, at leaſt, upon all that belong to the kingdom of the beaſt: And (to mention no more) after the ſeventh trumpet, there was an earthquake, and great hail, ch. xi. 19. but, after the ſeventh vial, "there was a great earthquake, ſuch as was not ſince men were upon the earth, ſo mighty an earthquake and ſo great," here, ver. 18. "and there fell upon men a great hail out Heaven, every ſtone about the weight of a talent," ver. 21. (Wall) See the notes on the texts here referr'd to 4. That Mr. Whiſton looks upon theſe vials to be all ſtill future; and, I think, he is much in the right. For ſince there are many arguments, to induce us to look on the ſeven vials, as the contents of the ſeventh ſeal, conſider'd as the third woe; it neceſſarily follows, that, ſince the ſeventh trumpet is ſtill future, the ſeven vials muſt be likewiſe all ſtill future. (Wells.) However, (tho' Mr. Mede thinks them to be interpreted in a myſtical manner, (and accordingly expounds the firſt three, as compleated in the Waldenſes and Albigenſes; Wickliffe and Huſs; Luther, &c. wherein the Aſſembly-men alſo agree with him) I think, they are to be underſtood principally in a literal ſenſe; as denoting thoſe judgments, whereby God ſhall, as by ſo many ſteps or degrees, bring about the intire ruin and deſtruction of antichriſt, and all his followers. (idem.) See ſome more particulars, in the notes here next following.

The mark of the beaſt.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 15, &c.

Upon the ſea.] See the notes on ch. xv. 2.

As the blood of a dead man.] Congealed, and corrupted. (Hall, Aſſ. and Wells.)

The Angel of the waters.] That is, "the third Angel," who had now "poured out his vial, upon the rivers, and fountains of waters." (Hall, Aſſ. H. and Wells)

Thou art righteous.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 10. and xv. 3.

Art, and waſt, and ſhalt be.] The moſt, and beſt copies, read it not. (éſomenos) ſhalt be; but (hoſios) the Holy One; or pitiful and merciful. Thus, as theforegoing words acknowledge God's juſtice or righteouſneſs, in puniſhing impenitent ſinners; ſo theſe denote his mercy towards his faithful ſervants, who are thereby deliver'd from their perſecutors. (G. H. and Wells.) See the notes on ver. 6. ch. i. 4. iv. 8. xi. 17. and xv. 3.

They are worthy.] Axioi; they deſerve it: (G.) Or, are worthy of ſo ſuitable a puniſhment. (Wells.) The retribution, which God makes, of blood for blood, ſhews the righteouſneſs of God in executing his judgments, ſo as commonly perſons may read their ſin in their puniſhment. (B.) See the note on ch. xiii. 10.

Another out of the altar.] viz. One of the ſouls of the martyrs, under the altar (Hall, and Wells.) See the notes on ch. vi. 9.

True and righteous.] See the notes on ver. 5. ch. xiii. 10. xv. 3.

Scorched with great heat.] Ecaumatiſtheſan; burnt up, as it were, with the heat of the ſun. The ſun's ſcorching heat, denoted ordinarily by cauma, may probably ſignify the ſcorching and drying up the fruits of the earth, from whence a dearth proceeds; and ſo be here intended to ſignify a famine. (G. and H.) See Dr. Wells's note here, by way of conjecture, that Teitan meaning the ſun, may moſt probably be the name of the beaſt; that of antichriſt. See alſo the notes on ch. ix. 17. and xiii. 13.

Blaſphemed the name of God.] Probably, by their railing at the faithful chriſtians, as the cauſe of all their evils: As was common among the heathens of old; who, when ever any plague, or other grievous calamity befel them, were wont to cry out (Chriſtianos ad leones!) Let the chriſtians be expoſed to the lions, as the ſuppoſed authors of their miſeries. (G. and H.)

Repented not.] See the notes on ch. ix. 20.

The ſeat of the beaſt.] That is, of antichriſt, properly ſo called. By this ſeat, or throne, Mr. Mede underſtands Rome: But others underſtand it of Jeruſalem; and that antichriſt ſhall repair thither, after he has deſtroy'd Rome; and ſit blaſphemouſly there, as God, in the temple, which ſhall be then built, and kill the two witneſſes; and that he ſhall there alſo receive this fifth blow, towards the ruin of his power. (Wells.) See the notes on ch. xi. 7, 8. and xiii. 2.

Gnawed their tongues for pain.] An indication of the horror of their conſciences, indignation and deſpair. (G. Hall, Aſſ. and B.) Theſe worſhippers of the beaſt had ſeduced others by their falſe doctrines: And therefore, as they had ſinn'd with their tongues, God now makes their tongues, like ſo many ſcorpions, the inſtruments of their torment. (B.)

Upon the great river Euphrates.] By "the water thereof being dried up," (which alludes to the taking of Babylon by Cyrus) ſome do underſtand the weakning the ſtrength of Rome (the myſtical Babylon) and rendering it acceſſible to Conſtantine the Great, and his ſons; whom they alſo underſtand to be here call'd "the kings of the eaſt." (G. and H.) Others interpret it more literally, of this very river being made paſſable; and thereby a way prepared for "the kings of the eaſt," viz. thoſe of the Turkiſh empire, to make their advances weſtward. (Hall.) And others again (who likewiſe apply this to the Turks, who formerly were ſettled near "the great river Euphrates") underſtand the drying up the water thereof, to denote the ruin or weakning the Turkiſh empire, "that the way of the kings of the eaſt may be prepared;" by which they underſtand the converſion of the Jews to the chriſtian faith. (Mede, More, B. and Wells.) Now, the reaſons for underſtanding this, of the converſion of the Jews, are theſe two, mention'd by Mr. Mede; viz. 1. Becauſe, unleſs the converſion of the Jews be brought about under this ſixth vial, there ſeems to be no room left for their converſion; for as much as the ſeventh vial denotes, and brings on the deſtruction of all the enemies of Chriſt; And, 2 Becauſe of that remarkable paſſage, Iſa. xi. 15, 16. which countenanceth this opinion; as doth alſo Zech. x. 10, 11. (Wells.) See the notes on ver. 19. ch. ix. 14. and Rom. xi. 24. &c.

Unclean ſpirits like frogs.] This paſſage ſeems to import, That the converſion of the Jews will be ſo great a blow to the tottering ſtate of antichriſt, and to the whole empire of the dragon, or Devil, in this world, that now the Devil ſhall exert his utmoſt skill and ſtrength, to ſupport the dominion he has hitherto had in it; viz. by theſe "unclean ſpirits," his emiſſaries, working miracles, to gather the kings of the earth together, to join with antichriſt. (Wells.) See the notes on ch. xii. 9. and xiii. &c. Matth. xxiv. 24. 2 Theſſ. ii. 9. 1 Tim. iv. 1. Jam. iii. 15. and 1 John iv. 1. &c.

I come as a thief.] This verſe is to be read in a parentheſis; for that which follows has no connexion with this, but with the foregoing. It is inſerted here, to comfort Chriſt's ſervants, againſt theſe great preparations, by his promiſe of ſpeedy and ſeaſonable aſſiſtance. (Aſſ. B. and Wells. See the notes on ch. iii. 3. &c.

Bleſſed is he that watcheth.] Viz. Againſt thoſe temptations which he will be then expoſed to: (B.) And doth not comply with the then prevailing powers, in any unchriſtian or uncomely manner; leſt, when he has done ſo, that which he deſign'd, as his greateſt ſecurity, be indeed his greateſt danger. (Hall, H. and B.) For he will get no help from them by diſſembling, but will be expoſed to ſhame, if he conſent to them. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. iii. 4, 18. Matth. xxii. 11. and 2 Cor. v. 3.

Armageddon.] The moſt probable etymology of this word is, that it is compounded of Hormah, denoting deſtruction, and gedon, a troop, or army, or their troop or army. And as the name of Hormah is accordingly given to more than one in Scripture, where there was a great overthrow given by the Iſraelites to their enemies; ſo this name of Armageddon (for ſo it is written in the Alexandrian, and ſeveral other MSS. as well as thoſe made uſe of by the vulgar Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic interpreters, as alſo by Arethas, which laſt author reads it Ermagedon, agreeably to the Septuagint verſion) is very fitly given here to the place where antichriſt, and his confederates, ſhall make their laſt efforts; for as much as they ſhall be there utterly routed and deſtroy'd. (Wells.) Grotius conceives this word to be Herma-geddon, that is, the mount of meeting; with alluſion to the waters of Megeddo, Judg. v. 19. where the Canaanites were ſlain by Barak; which opinion ſeems alſo to be favour'd by Biſhop Hall, and the Aſſembly-men; but the former is prefer'd by Dr. Hammond, and Mr. Burkitt, as well as by Dr. Wells.

Into the air.] Where Satan's throne is. (Aſſ. B. and Wells.) By the air here, Mr. Mede underſtands all the ſubjects of Satan's kingdom. See the notes on Eph. ii. 1.

It is done.] The overthrow of mine enemies is now come to a ſpeedy execution. (Hall and Wells.) See the notes on ch. x. 6.

The great city.] See the notes on ver. 12. ch. xi. 8. and xiv. 8.

Great Babylon.] See the notes on ch. xvii. 5.

The cup of the wine.] See the notes on ch. xiv. 10.

Every iſland fled away.] Intimating, that there ſhall be no place, in that day of God's wrath, to fly unto for ſafety; for antichriſtianiſm, or all oppoſition to Chriſtianity, ſhall now be ſo deſtroy'd, as never to prevail any more. (Hall, B. and Wells.) See the notes on ch. vi. 14.

CHAP. XVII.

The viſion of the great whore.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. AND there came one of the ſeven Angels which had the ſeven vials, and talked with me, ſaying unto me, Come hither, I will ſhew unto thee the judgment of the great whore, that ſitteth upon many waters: With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabiters of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication. So he carried me away in the ſpirit into the wilderneſs: And I ſaw a woman ſit upon a ſcarlet coloured beaſt, full of names of blaſphemy, having ſeven heads, and ten horns. And the woman was arayed in purple, and ſcarlet colour, and decked with gold, and precious ſtone, and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthineſs of her fornication. And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I ſaw the woman drunken with the blood of the Saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jeſus: And when I ſaw her, I wondred with great admiration. And the Angel ſaid unto me, Wherefore didſt thou marvel? I will tell thee the myſtery of the woman, and of the beaſt that carrieth her which hath the ſeven heads, and ten horns. The beaſt that thou ſaweſt, was, and is not; and ſhall aſcend out of the bottomleſs pit, and go into perdition: And they that dwell on the earth ſhall wonder, (whoſe names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world) when they behold the beaſt that was, and is not, and yet is. And here is the mind which hath wiſdom. The ſeven heads are ſeven mountains, on which the woman ſitteth. And there are ſeven kings: Five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he muſt continue a ſhort ſpace. And the beaſt that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the ſeven, and goeth into perdition. And the ten horns which thou ſaweſt, are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beaſt. Theſe have one mind, and ſhall give their power and ſtrength unto the beaſt. Theſe ſhall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb ſhall overcome them:

For he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with him, are called, and choſen, and faithful. And he ſaith unto me, The waters which thou ſaweſt, where the whore ſitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. And the ten horns which thou ſaweſt upon the beaſt, theſe ſhall hate the whore, and ſhall make her deſolate and naked, and ſhall eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beaſt, until the words of God ſhall be fulfilled. And the woman which thou ſaweſt, is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

Which had the ſeven vials] Echonton; having the ſeven vials yet in their hands. For this account of the deſtruction of Babylon was repreſented to St. John before the pouring out the vials. (Wells)

The judgment of the great whore.] Meaning Rome; which had been mention'd only in ſhort, ch. xiv. 8. but now comes to be deſcrib'd more at large in this and the following chapter. (Idem) See the notes on ver. 5. and ch. xiv. 8.

That ſitteth upon many waters.] See the notes on ver. 15.

With whom the kings.] To ſhew, that her idolatries would be countenanc'd by authority in many nations. (Aſſ.)

Into the wilderneſs.] See the notes on ch. xii. 6, 14.

Upon a ſcarlet-colour beaſt.] Meaning the imperial power. (Beza, G. Aſſ. and H.) See the notes on ch. xii. 3. and xiii. 1.

Full of names of blaſphemy.] Uſurping names and titles, which belong to God and Chriſt only. (Aſſ.) See the notes upon ch. xiii. 1, 5. and 2 Theſſ. ii 4.

Seven heads, and ten horns.] See the notes on ch. xii. 3. and xiii. 1.

Gold, and precious ſtone.] Denoting the richneſs and ſplendid attire of the Romiſh hierarchy. (Aſſ and Wells)

Full of abominations.] See the notes on ch. xiv. 8.

Myſtery] Signifying, that what is here ſaid of the name is not to be underſtood literally, but in a myſtical ſenſe. (Wells) Deceiving others under the colours of Divine myſteries; whereas Heathen Rome profeſs'd idolatry openly. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Theſſ. ii. 3, &c. and 1 Tim. iii. 16.

Babylon the great.] The Rhemiſh Divines make a great triumph here, that the Proteſtants are only led by their prejudicate opinions and hereſies, in the expoſition of Holy Scripture: As a proof of which they affirm, That the Proteſtants will not in any wiſe have St. Peter's firſt Epiſtle, which is dated at Babylon, to be meant of Rome, becauſe they would not be driven to confeſs that Peter ever was at Rome; tho' they will needs have Rome to be this Babylon, this great whore, and purple harlot! In anſwer to which, let the reader obſerve, 1. That we have expounded that text of St. Peter, to be meant of Rome; as is plain from our notes on 1 Pet. v. 13. ſupported by the authority of divers ſound Proteſtants, who had expounded it ſo before us; tho' ſome eminent writers, even of the Romiſh Church itſelf, have preferr'd another expoſition. 2. That we are ſo far from being only led by prejudice, that we have not only confeſs'd, but plainly aſſerted, that St. Peter was at Rome, ſometime before his martyrdom; tho' (for very good reaſons) we cannot admit him to have had the honour of being the founder of a Chriſtian Church there, excluſive of St. Paul, (who appears to have laid the foundation of it there before him) nor conſequently, that the ſucceeding Biſhops (or Popes) of Rome can ſo fairly derive an Apoſtolical authority by ſucceſſion from St. Peter, as from St. Paul; for which ſee our Preface to St. Peter's Epiſtles. And, 3. That, after all, the Rhemiſts themſelves are driven to confeſs, that here, by Babylon, according to all the Fathers, is ſignified, partly, the city of Rome; tho' (they will have it ſo) only in reſpect of the terrene and Heatheniſh ſtate of them that perſecuted the Church, and not of the Church of Rome, which (they ſay) is never called Babylon. See the notes on ch. xiv. 8.

Drunken with the blood of the Saints.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 15. and xiv. 13.

The beaſt that thou ſaweſt.] This ſeems to denote in general whatever antichriſtian power ſhould at any time ariſe, within the bounds of the Roman empire; whether Heatheniſm, Popery, or antichriſtianiſm emphatically ſo called: For the beaſt can't be ſaid to denote the Roman empire in any other ſenſe, ſince the Roman empire, in any other ſenſe, is in reality ceas'd long ago. (Wells) Where note alſo, 1. That this beaſt was one permitted by Divine providence, to have the power of delivering oracles: And tho' he is not now permitted to have that power, the Heathen oracles ceaſing now to give any anſwers to thoſe who conſult them; yet he ſhall be again permitted to have the like power, when that laſt ſtate of antichriſtianiſm ſhall come; wherein the ſaid beaſt is deſcrib'd to "aſcend out of the bottomleſs pit" itſelf, as denoting the worſt and laſt ſtate of antichriſtianiſm emphatically ſo call'd, foraſmuch as, at the end thereof, the beaſt ſhall "go into perdition," or be utterly deſtroy'd, as ch. xix. 20. 2. That, by the beaſt's "going into perdition" is by no means to be underſtood only the ceaſing of the ten kings, or of any other form of government, (as Mr. Whiſton interprets it) but rather the ceaſing of antichriſtianiſm, or impiety and irreligion, in the world; which is indeed ſo extraordinary a thing, as not to have been believ'd without a prophecy; whereas the other is no more than what the viciſſitude of this world would teach us to expect. (Idem) 3. That Mr. Whiſton's interpretation implies no reaſon, why the world ſhould wonder after the beaſt, which "was, and is not, and ſhall be:" Whereas the entire ceaſing of oracles, which happen'd much about the time that St. John wrote his Revelation, was a great blow to Heatheniſm, and made impartial men eaſy to wonder after, or eſteem the old religion of the empire; ſo the reviving of oracles, by the image of the beaſt's ſpeaking, will be a great means to make men again to wonder after the beaſt, or antichriſt emphatically ſo call'd. (Idem) And, 4. That the words (caiper eſti) "and yet is," in the end of this verſe, is a plain miſtake of a ſcribe, in ſome Manuſcripts, and their editions, (cai pareſtai) and ſhall come, as it is in the beginning of the verſe: And thus the Alexandrian, and all old MSS. and authors have it; tho' the Vulgar Latin leaves it quite out. (Wells and Wall) See the notes on ch. ix. 1, &c. xi. 7. xiii. 1, 3, 15. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 3, &c.

In the book of life.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 8. and Phil. iv. 3.

The mind which hath wiſdom.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 11, &c.

And there are ſeven kings.] As the "ſeven mountains," in the verſe foregoing, are generally interpreted of the ſeven hills, upon which old Rome was built; So here the "ſeven kings" are interpreted of ſeven forms of government, by which Rome was at ſeveral times govern'd. But, foraſmuch as the moſt curious and learned expoſitors are far from being agreed, as to the particular governments hereby denoted, and conſequently in the interpretation of this confeſſedly moſt difficult paſſage (on which the underſtanding of this book mightily depends) I hope the candid reader will think it but a decent modeſty in me, that I refer him to what has been largely written on this ſubject, by others, and leave him from the whole to collect what he ſhall think the moſt probable conjecture.

Continue a ſhort ſpace.] See the notes on ch. viii. 10. and xiii. 5.

War with the Lamb.] "Making war with the Lamb" ſignifies oppoſing and perſecuting Chriſtianity: Not as if there were ſett battles between them and Chriſtians; but ſuch as are ſuppoſable againſt thoſe, whoſe principle was to ſuffer, and not to reſiſt the perſecuting emperors: For this is the condition of the Lamb here, to endure to be ſlaughter'd, but not to fight again. (H.) See the notes on ch. xiii. 10. and xvi. 14.

And multitudes.] Behold here, what Church it is, that multitude is a note of. Not of the Church of Chriſt, whoſe flock is a little flock; but of the antichriſtian ſynagogue, which vaunts, that multitudes are on her ſide. (B.) See the notes on ch. v. 9. vii. 9. x. 11. xi. 19. xiii. 7. and xiv. 6. and Luke xii. 32.

Shall hate the whore.] What is ſaid in this and the following verſe, compar'd with ver. 13. contains a plain proof, that the whore deſcrib'd in this chapter, or Popiſh Rome, is not the beaſt, or antichriſt emphatically ſo call'd; unleſs we will ſuppoſe the whore to hate herſelf, to make herſelf deſolate and naked, to eat her own fleſh, and to burn herſelf with fire! (Wells)

God hath put in their hearts] Not forcing, or moving any, to follow antichriſt; but by this juſt judgment, and for puniſhment of their ſins, permitting them to believe in, and conſent to him. (Rhem.) The infinitely wiſe, and perfectly holy God, can, and does, ſo order things, that all his judgments ſhall be executed by ſinners, without his being the cauſe of any one of their ſins. (B.) See Dr. Abbot (the Archbiſhop's) Lecture on this text, 1598. and the notes on ch. x. 7. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 10, 11.

That great city.] See the notes on ver. 5. ch. xi 8. xii. 4. xiv. 8. and xvi. 19.

Babylon is fallen; and the lamentations over it.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24.

AND, after theſe things, I ſaw another Angel come down from Heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightned with his glory. And he cried mightily with ſtrong voice ſaying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul ſpirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies. And I heard another voice from Heaven, ſaying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her ſins, and that ye receive not of her plagues: For her ſins have reached unto Heaven, and God hath remembred her iniquities. Reward her even as ſhe rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: In the cup which ſhe hath filled, fill to her double. How much ſhe hath glorified her ſelf, and lived deliciouſly, ſo much torment and ſorrow give her: For ſhe ſaith in her heart, I ſit a queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow. Therefore ſhall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning, and famine; and ſhe ſhall be utterly burnt with fire: For ſtrong is the Lord God who judgeth her. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication, and lived deliciouſly with her, ſhall bewail her, and lament for her, when they ſhall ſee the ſmoke of her burning, Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, ſaying, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city: For in one hour is thy judgment come. And the merchants of the earth ſhall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth her merchandiſe any more: The merchandiſe of gold, and ſilver, and precious ſtones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and ſilk, and ſcarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner veſſels of ivory, and all manner veſſels of moſt precious wood, and of braſs, and iron, and marble, and cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincenſe, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beaſts, and ſheep, and horſes, and chariots, and ſlaves, and ſouls of men. And the fruits that thy ſoul luſted after, are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly, are departed from thee, and thou ſhalt find them no more at all. The merchants of theſe things, which were made rich by her, ſhall ſtand afar off, for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing. And ſaying, Alas, alas, that great city that was cloathed in fine linen, and purple, and ſcarlet, and decked with gold, and precious ſtones, and pearls: For in one hour ſo great riches is come to nought, And every ſhip-maſter, and all the company in ſhips, and ſailers, and as many as trade by ſea, ſtood afar off, And cried when they ſaw the ſmoke of her burning, ſaying, What city is like unto this great city? And they caſt duſt on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, ſaying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ſhips in the ſea, by reaſon of her coſtlineſs: For in one hour ſhe is made deſolate. Rejoyce over her, thou Heaven, and and ye holy Apoſtles, and prophets, for God hath avenged you on her. And a mighty Angel took up a ſtone like a great milſtone, and caſt it into the ſea, ſaying, Thus with violence ſhall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and ſhall be found no more at all. And the voice of harpers, and muſicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, ſhall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftſmen, of whatſoever craft he be, ſhall be found any more in thee; and the ſound of a milſtone ſhall be heard no more at all in thee; And the light of a candle ſhall ſhine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom, and of the bride ſhall be heard no more at all in thee: For thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy ſorceries were all nations deceived: And in her was found the blood of Prophets, and of Saints, and of all that were ſlain upon the earth.

Lightned with his glory.] As denoting, perhaps, the yet much clearer account here given by him to men, of the deſtruction of Rome. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 2 Cor. iii. 7.

Is fallen, is fallen.] This ingemination implies, 1. The certainty; 2. The ſuddenneſs; 3. The utter ruin and deſtruction of it: And, 4. The joy, and rejoicing, which will be in Sion, on Babylon's downfall. (Aſſ. and B.) See the notes on ch. xi. 8. xiii. 2. xiv. 8. xvi. 10. and xvii. 2, 5.

All nations have drunk.] That is, very many; or the generality of the Roman empire. (B.)

Wine of the wrath.] See the notes on ch. xiv. 8, 10.

And the kings of the earth.] Note here, the policy of Babylon, in drawing kings and princes to the bed of her fornications; well knowing, how faſt their example would be follow'd by inferiors. The example of ſuperiors, in doing evil, is ſtrangely powerful. Jeroboam "made Iſrael to ſin;" not by commanding them to worſhip the golden calves, but by commending that idolatrous worſhip to them in his own perſon. (B.)

Come out of her.] See the notes on 2 Cor. vi. 17. and Jude 19.

Her ſins have reached unto Heaven.] They were, as 'twere, heap'd one upon another, ſo as to make a mount to reach up to Heaven, and cry for vengeance. The leaſt ſins reach to Heaven, becauſe God knows them all. But the phraſe is commonly uſed of great ſins, which will pull down ſudden judgments. (Beza, Aſſ. and Wells)

God hath remembred her iniquities.] As if he had forgot her ſins before, while he ſuffer'd her to proſper; but now remembred them, by puniſhing her for them. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xvi. 19.

Reward her, even as] That is, do ye, who are the executioners of God's vengeance upon her, "reward her;" meaning the beaſt, and the ten kings, his confederates. (Wells) See the notes on ch. xiii. 10. and xvii. 16, 17.

Double unto her double.] Not the double of her deſerts, but of thoſe miſeries ſhe hath brought on you before. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 10. and xvi. 19.

So much torment.] This is ſpoken of worldly puniſhment: For none can be ſo high on earth, as they may be brought low in Hell. (Aſſ.) The juſtice of God will exact all the arrears of abuſed mercy. Sinners, who now fare deliciouſly every day, ſhall paſs, from their good things here, to the flames which live by the breath of God's revenging wrath. (B.) See the notes on Luke xvi. 25.

In one day.] That is, in a very ſhort time. (Wells)

Strong is the Lord God.] Leſt it ſhould be thought the city was too ſtrong to be ſo ſoon taken and deſtroy'd, the ſuperior ſtrength of God's is here ſet forth. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xi. 17.

The kings of the earth.] Another argument to diſtinguiſh Babylon (or Rome) from the antichriſtian beaſt, or antichriſt emphatically ſo call'd; viz. becauſe "the kings of the earth," who cleave to Babylon (or who ſpiritually commit fornication with Rome) and the kings who cleave to the beaſt, are by no means the ſame, but very different. Which is thus prov'd. The antichriſtian kings "ſhall hate the whore," that is, the idolatrous Church, ch. xvii. 16. But "the kings of the earth," that is, of the Roman empire, are here deſcrib'd by the Holy Ghoſt, as "bewailing her, and lamenting for her, when they ſhall ſee the ſmoke at her burning," occaſion'd by the other kings, or potentates who hate her. (Wells) See Dr. Wells here more at large; and the notes on ch. xvii. 16.

Buyeth her merchandiſe.] See the notes on ch. xvii. 4.

All thyine wood.] Pan xylon thyinon. What particular tree this thyine-wood is the produce of, is doubtful. Some will have all ſorts of ſweet-ſmelling wood (ſuch as cedar, &c.) to be comprehended under this denomination. But Ribera ſhews, out of Pliny, Theophraſtus and Homer, that it is the proper produce of one particular ſort of tree: And that ſeemeth moſt probably, to be a tree call'd thyia; to which Theophraſtus attributeth great honour, as having been much uſed in building and adorning the famous temples of old. (Leigh)

Slaves, and ſouls of men.] Somatan, cai pſychas anthropon. This expreſſion (pſychas anthropon) "ſouls of men," is plainly taken from the Septuagint Verſion of Ezek. xxvii. 13. and the difference here, between (ſomata) bodies, and (pſychai) ſouls, is very probably hired-ſervants and bond-ſervants. For ſo Julius Pollux ſays, ſomata, when it is put ſimply by itſelf, ſignifies thoſe who are not bond-ſlaves, but freemen, who hire themſelves for money, like the ſervants among us. And this, becauſe ſuch ſervants have the power over their own bodies, to ſell or hire them out; whereas ſlaves, or bond-ſervants, have no ſuch power over their bodies; and ſo may be ſaid to have nothing their own but their ſouls. Thus the later Greeks call ſlaves (pſycharia) little ſouls: And ſo, Gen. xii. 5. "the ſouls that they had gotten in Heaven," may denote their bond-ſervants, or ſlaves. (G. H. and Wells) As Tyre was the mart of the earth for temporal things; ſo was Babylon for ſpiritual things: Making merchandiſe (literally) of "the ſouls of men;" perſuading the people, that they could purchaſe the redemption of their ſouls out of purgatory by maſſes. Tho' Pagan Rome did traffick for ſlaves, yet not for ſouls; but Papal Rome deals for both. She ſells alſo the ſouls of men, by ſelling her Eccleſiaſtical benefices, and cure of ſouls: And I would to God, that this piece of ſpiritual merchandiſe were only found among them, and not heard of elſewhere! (B.)

And the fruits.] This verſe ſhould be read as in a parentheſis. (Aſſ.)

Rejoice over her.] The Church does not, the Saints dare not, rejoice at Babylon's calamity, as ſuch; but only as it is an act of Divine Vengeance. (B.) See the notes on ch. xii. 12.

God hath avenged you.] God will revenge the wrongs of his people, when through want of power they cannot, and through his prohibition they may not, avenge themſelves. (B.)

Like a great milſtone.] Note here, 1. That as, like a milſtone, ſhe had ground and oppreſs'd the Church of God; ſo now, like a milſtone thrown into the ſea, ſhe ſinks into the pit of deſtruction, never to riſe more. (B.) 2. That here is plainly an alluſion to the prophetical deſcription of the deſtruction of old Babylon, Jer. li. 63. but with ſuch circumſtances, as ſhew, that this of Rome ſhall be greater than that of Babylon. For there was only Jeremy, a weak man; here "a mighty Angel:" There an ordinary ſtone; here "a ſtone like a great milſtone:" That caſt into the river Euphrates; this "into the ſea:" There 'tis ſaid, "Babylon ſhall ſink;" here that it ſhall "be thrown down with violence:" There that it "ſhall not riſe;" here that it "ſhall be found no more at all." (Aſſ.) And, 3. That this, and the following verſes, ſpeak of a deſtruction ſo abſolute, that it cannot be underſtood of thoſe vaſtations made by Alaricus, Genſericus, Totilas, &c. from all which Rome did recover: And conſequently, the foregoing beaſt, falſe prophet, trumpets, vials; &c. are not to be underſtood of the ſtate of Rome under the Heathen emperors, as Grotius, Hammond, &c. do interpret them. (Wall)

Of all that were ſlain.] Viz. For religion: Either, 1. As being ſlain by her authority, or inciation of the princes to do it: Or, 2. Becauſe ſhe ſucceeds the former perſecutors, and finiſheth the work; and ſo is counted guilty alſo, of all the blood ſhed before, Matth. xxiii. 35. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xvii. 6. and Luke xi. 49, 50.

CHAP. XIX.

God praiſed for deſtroying the great whore. The marriage of the Lamb. The final overthrow of antichriſt.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. AND after theſe things I heard a great voice of much people in Heaven, ſaying, Allelujah; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power unto the Lord our God: For true and righteous are his judgments, for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his ſervants at her hand. And again they ſaid, Allelujah. And her ſmoke roſe up for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, and the four beaſts fell down and worſhipped God that ſat on the throne, ſaying, Amen; Allelujah. And a voice came out of the throne, ſaying, Praiſe our God, all ye his ſervants, and ye that fear him, both ſmall and great. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thundrings, ſaying, Allelujah: For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoyce, and give honour to him: For the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made her ſelf ready. And to her was granted, that ſhe ſhould be arayed in fine linen, clean and white: For the fine linen is the righteouſneſs of Saints. And he ſaith unto me, Write, Bleſſed are they which are called unto the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb. And he ſaith unto me, Theſe are the true ſayings of God. And I fell at his feet to worſhip him: And he ſaid unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-ſervant, and of thy brethren that have the teſtimony of Jeſus: Worſhip God: For the teſtimony of Jeſus is the ſpirit of prophecy.

Allelujah.] That is, praiſe ye the Lord. This is the firſt time this Hebrew word is uſed in the New Teſtament; and it occurs here four times, in this chapter: From whence it is gather'd, that the Chriſtian Gentiles, after the fall of Rome, ſhall ſolicit the Jews to come in to Chriſt, and to join with them in praiſing him for Rome's downfal. (Aſſ.) And that then God ſhall be ſolemnly praiſ'd by the one as well as by the other. (Lloyd and B.)

Salvation, and glory.] See the notes on ch. vii. 10. and xii. 10.

True and righteous.] See the notes on ch. xv. 3. and xvi. 7.

Judged the great whore.] See the notes on ch. xvii. 1.

Hath avenged the blood.] See the notes on ch. vi. 10. and xviii. 20.

And her ſmoke roſe.] This ſentence ſhould be read as in a parentheſis. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xiv. 11. and xviii. 9.

The four and twenty elders.] See the notes on ch. iv. 4, 10 and v. 14.

The four beaſts.] See the notes on ch. iv. 6, &c.

All ye his ſervants.] Ye Jews, who once were his ſervants join with the Gentiles in this allelujah. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 1. and Rom. xi. 12. and xv. 10.

The voice of a great multitude.] See the notes on ch. xiv. 2.

The Lord God omnipotent reigneth.] As in the foregoing verſes, is repreſented the joy of the Angels and Saints, for the deſtruction of Rome; ſo, here is repreſented the like, for the approaching deſtruction of antichriſt, emphatically ſo call'd, and his party, now about to be actually put in execution; and for the actual commencing of the reign of Chriſt and his Saints, upon the overthrow and deſtruction of antichriſt: "Saying, Allelujah; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth;" that is, now begins to reign with his Saints. (Wells) Viz. Upon the converſion of the Jews, and their becoming a part of the Catholic Church of Chriſt. See the notes on ch. i. 8. vii. 10. xii. 10. xvi. 1, &c. and xx. 4.

The marriage of the Lamb is come.] Now ſhall the whole Church be joined to Chriſt for ever, in marriage inſeparable. (Rhem. and Hall) For now, the Jews coming in, with the fulneſs of the Gentiles, the Church, "his wife hath made herſelf ready" to be married to Chriſt. (Aſſ.) Mr. Mede, and ſome others, underſtand here, by this wife, the Jewiſh Church only, after the converſion of their whole nation; becauſe the Gentiles have been eſpouſed to Chriſt many ages ago. But, ſince the ſpouſe of Chriſt is but one, it is more agreeable to Scripture, to expound it of the one Church Catholic, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles; and all that has been hitherto, or ſhall hereafter, be done, till the time here ſpoken of, only as a preparation of her for this great ſolemnity of "the marriage of the Lamb." For ſhe ſhall be then thus made ready; partly, by having borne witneſs to Chriſt, thro' all the ſeveral ſtates of antichriſtianiſm; and partly, by the then coming in, or converſion, of the whole body of the Jewiſh nation: And as this is to be a part of the Church Catholic, ſhe cannot be ſaid to be made ready for the marriage, till this part of her be thus made ready, by being converted. (Wells) See the notes on ch. xxi. 2. and Rom. xi. 12.

Arayed in fine linen.] Obſerve here, That the Church being ſpiritually naked in herſelf, "it was granted, that ſhe ſhould be arayed in fine linen, clean and white." She had it not of herſelf, but it was put on her by Chriſt, who decks and dreſſes his own bride with the ornaments of grace here, and glory hereafter. (B.) See the notes on ch. iii. 4, 18. and Eph. v. 27.

Bleſſed are they which are called.] Viz. To the feaſt of eternal life, prepared for his ſpouſe, the Church; here call'd "the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb." (Rhem. and B.) See the notes on Luke xiv. 15.

See thou do it not.] Hora me; By no means! Upon no terms! "See thou do it not." The Church of Rome asks us, Why we reprove them for worſhipping the Angels, when St. John himſelf did it? Our anſwer is ready, That St. John himſelf was reproved for it; the Angel rejecting it, as none of his due. O the preſumption of thoſe men, who dare to do that which the Angel himſelf expreſly forbids to be done! Yet, after all, Bellarmine ſays, St. John did well to worſhip the Angel! Then, if ſo, ſay we, The Angel did ill to reprove St. John for it. But, whether we ſhall believe a Cardinal of Rome, or an Angel of God, judge ye. (B.) See the notes on Acts x. 26.

The teſtimony of Jeſus is the ſpirit of prophecy.] That is, he who bears teſtimony to the truth of the Goſpel even unto death, or is ready to be ſuch a martyr, is acted by the ſame Spirit as I am; by the ſame Spirit which imparts unto me, and other Angels, the prophecies now reveal'd unto thee by our miniſtry: So that I, and the other Angels, are no more than "thy fellow-ſervants." Or, this may otherwiſe denote alſo thus much, That "the teſtimony of Jeſus," that is, the bearing witneſs to Jeſus, as the promiſed Meſſiah, and ſo to the truth of the Goſpel, is the great and principal end aim'd at by "the ſpirit of prophecy," that is, by the Holy Spirit, in all the prophecies of the Old and New Teſtament. And conſequently, the Angel, who was inſtrumental in thus making known this prophecy to St. John, was no other than his fellow-ſervant, in bearing witneſs to Jeſus, as the promiſed Meſſiah. (Wells)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And I ſaw heaven opened, and behold, a white horſe; and he that ſate upon him was called faithfull and true, and in righteouſneſs he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written that no man knew but he himſelf: And he was clothed with a veſture dipt in blood: and his name is called, The word of God. And the armies which were in heaven, followed him upon white horſes, clothed in fine linen white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a ſharp ſword, that with it he ſhould ſmite the nations: And he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron: And he treadeth the wine-preſs of the fierceneſs and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his veſture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS. And I ſaw an Angel ſtanding in the ſun: And he cried with a loud voice, ſaying to all the fowls that flie in the midſt of heaven, Come and gather your ſelves together unto the ſupper of the great God; That ye may eat the fleſh of kings, and the fleſh of captains, and the fleſh of mighty men, and the fleſh of horſes, and of them that ſit on them, and the fleſh of all men, both free and bond, both ſmall and great. And I ſaw the beaſt, and the kings of the earth, and their armies gathered togethered to make war againſt him that ſat on his horſe, and againſt his army. And the beaſt was taken, and with him the falſe Prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them, that had received the mark of the beaſt, and them that worſhipped his image. Theſe both were caſt alive into a lake of fire burning with brimſtone. And the remnant were ſlain with the ſword of him that ſat upon the horſe, which ſword proceeded out of his mouth: And all the fowls were filled with their fleſh.

And I ſaw Heaven opened.] Viz. Free acceſs to God's public worſhip every where. (Aſſ.)

And behold.] This requireth attention to the great battle yet to come. (Idem) Viz. That with antichriſt, and his party, at Armagedon. (Wells) See the notes on ch. xvi. 16.

A white horſe.] See the notes on ch. vi. 2.

Faithful and true.] The "faithful and true" God; who judgeth juſtly, and revengeth righteouſly: (Hall) Faithful in his promiſes, true in his threatnings, and righteous in all his diſpenſations. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 5. and iii. 14.

As a flame of fire.] Denoting the fierceneſs of his anger, and his full reſolution now to take the utmoſt vengeance of his enemies. (Wells) See the notes on ch. i. 14. and ii. 23.

Many crowns.] Denoting his many victories over his many and mighty enemies. (H. and B.) Or, that he himſelf is "King of kings." (Wells) See the notes on ver. 16. and ch. vi. 2.

A name written.] See the notes on ver. 16. and ch. ii. 17.

A veſture dipt in blood.] Signifying either, his ſovereignty obtain'd, as man, by his crucifixion; (H. and Wells) Or, that he had already victoriouſly ſteep'd his garments in the blood of his enemies, and triumph'd in their confuſion; and ſo ſhould do again. (Hall, Aſſ. and B.)

The word of God.] See the notes on John i. 1. and 1 John v. 7.

Clothed in fine linen.] See the notes on ch. iii. 4. iv. 4. and vii. 9.

A ſharp ſword.] See the notes on ch. i. 16. and Eph. vi. 19.

With a rod of iron.] See the notes on ch. ii. 27. and xii. 5.

Treadeth the wine-preſs.] See the notes on ch. xiv. 19.

On his veſture, and on his thigh.] The veſture here denotes his ſovereign authority, and the thigh (on which the ſword is girded) his irreſiſtable power; eſpecially when upon them both is written that moſt honourable title, "King of kings, and Lord of lords;" noting him to be ſuperior to all power and force in the world, triumphantly victorious over all. (H.)

An Angel ſtanding in the ſun.] As being the moſt conſpicuous place, to execute the office of the great herald of God: (Hall) Or, to denote, perhaps, that the deſtruction of antichriſt and his followers ſhould now be as viſible to all the world, as the ſun itſelf: (Wells) Or elſe, poſſibly, in alluſion to the name of Teitan (that is, the ſun) which 'tis ſuppos'd antichriſt will take upon him. (Idem) See the notes on ch. xvi. 8.

Unto the ſupper.] Viz. Upon the carcaſes ſlain, at the defeat of antichriſt and his followers, at Armageddon. (Wells) See the notes on ch. xvi. 16.

The beaſt was taken.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 1.

The falſe prophet.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 11. and xvi. 13.

Worſhipped his image.] See the notes on ch. xiii. 15. and xiv. 9.

A lake of fire.] See the notes on ch. xiv. 10.

Out of his mouth.] Denoting, that theſe enemies of Chriſt were all ſlain, preſently, at Chriſt's ſpeaking the word, or giving the command of the Holy Angels who attended him. Wells See the notes on Eph. vi. 17.

CHAP. XX.

Satan bound, and the Saints reign, a thouſand years. The firſt reſurrection. Satan looſed, deceiveth Gog and Magog; who are all deſtroy'd. Then follow the general reſurrection, and judgment.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. AND I ſaw an Angel came down from heaven, having the key of the bottomleſs pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon that old ſerpent, which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thouſand years, And caſt him into the bottomleſs pit, and ſhut him up, and ſet a ſeal upon him, that he ſhould deceive the nations no more, till the thouſand years ſhould be fulfilled: And after that, he muſt be looſed a little ſeaſon. And I ſaw thrones, and they ſat upon them, and judgment was given upon them: And I ſaw the ſouls of them that were beheaded for the witneſs of Jeſus, and for the word of God, and which had not worſhipped the beaſt, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Chriſt a thouſand years. But the reaſt of the dead lived not again until the thouſand years be fulfilled. This is the firſt reſurrection. Bleſſed and holy is he that hath part in the firſt reſurrection: On ſuch the ſecond death hath no power, but they ſhall be prieſts of God and of Chriſt, and ſhall reign with him a thouſand years. And when the thouſand years are expired, Satan ſhall be looſed out of his priſon, And ſhall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battel: The number of whom is as the ſand of the ſea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compaſſed the camp of the Saints about, and the beloved city: And fire came down from God out of Heaven, and devoured them. And the Devil that deceived them, was caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, where the beaſt and the falſe prophet are, and ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever. And I ſaw a great white throne, and him that ſat on it, from whoſe face the earth and the Heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them. And I ſaw the dead, ſmall and great, ſtand before God; and the books were opened: And another book was opened, which is the book of life: And the dead were judged out of thoſe things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the ſea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: And they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were caſt into the lake of fire: This is the ſecond death. And whoſoever was not found written in the book of life, was caſt into the lake of fire.

And I ſaw an Angel] This Angel is evidently Chriſt himſelf. And it is obſervable, that as the Devil is here deſcrib'd, as a dragon, a ſervant, an old ſerpent, the Devil, and Satan; ſo Chriſt's power and victory over him is ſet forth in as many, and ſtronger terms; as laying hold on him, binding him, caſting him into the bottomleſs pit, ſhutting him up, and ſealing him up for a thouſand years. (Lightf. and B.) By which binding, &c. ſome do underſtand Chriſt's overthrowing the power of the Devil in the Heathen world; his caſting down thoſe ſtrongholds of Satan, ignorance, ſuperſtition, idolatry, and lying oracles, by the light and power of the Goſpel, preach'd among the Gentiles; his curbing of Satan, that he ſhould no more cozen the world with Heatheniſh deluſions, as he had done. But others underſtand this binding of Satan to be after the deſtruction of antichriſt; when the Jews ſhall be converted, and there ſhall follow a quiet and peaceable ſtate of the Church, for a long time, here ſtiled "a thouſand years;" during which time, Satan being bound, there ſhall be no moleſtation from him. However, there is no ground from hence to expect Chriſt's perſonal reign upon earth, or his corporal preſence with his Church here. For it is not ſaid, that Chriſt reigned with them; but that they "reigned with Chriſt;" denoting, that this kingdom is ſpiritual, conſiſting in purity and peace, in righteouſneſs and joy in the Holy Ghoſt. In ſhort, the Saints "living and reigning with Chriſt" ſets forth the flouriſhing condition of the Church militant: The expreſſion of their ſitting upon thrones, ſpeaks an honourable condition which the Church will certainly be in after the downfal of antichriſt; and the term of "a thouſand years," ſhews it will be the longeſt happy condition that ever the Church enjoy'd. (B.) As to the doctrine of the Millenium, which was chiefly founded upon this text, we ſhall only add here, 1. That it was never generally receiv'd in the Church of Chriſt: 2. That there is no juſt ground to think it was deriv'd from the Apoſtles; but rather a miſtake of the words of the text; or from the notions of the Jews, and of the Sybilline author: And, 3. That the new patrons of the Millenium differ in many things of moment from the ancient aſſertors of it, and have indeed ſcarce any ſuffrage of antiquity for that Millenium, which they do ſo ſtiffly maintain. For the particular proof of which (and many other) propoſitions, I muſt refer the curious reader to Dr. Whitby's large Treatiſe of the true Millenium; annex'd to his Paraphraſe and Commentary on the New Teſtament. See alſo Dr. Hammond on this text; as well as our notes on ch. i. 18. v. 10. vi. 9. ix. 1. xi. 7. xii. 9. xiii. 12, &c. xvi. 14, &c. and xvii. 8. Acts iii. 21. and 2 Theſſ. ii. 1, &c. and thoſe which here next follow.

And I ſaw thrones.] By their having, and ſitting upon thrones, "and judgment being given unto them," is literally ſignified the quiet poſſeſſion of judicatures and cenſures in the Church; that diſcipline by which purity is preſerv'd; and which is ſeldom, or never, enjoy'd quietly, but by the countenance and favour of princes. (Rhem. Hall, and H.) See the notes on ch. v. 10. and Luke xxii. 30.

This is the firſt reſurrection.] Viz. This flouriſhing condition of the Church; which having been perſecuted and oppreſs'd, and as it were ſlain, but now reſtor'd to peace and quiet, is proverbially expreſs'd to have been as it were raiſed from the dead. (H. and B.) Thus theſe words depend upon the fourth verſe; and the former part of this is to be read in a parentheſis. (Aſſ.) See the notes on Rom. xi. 15, &c.

The ſecond death.] This expreſſion ſeems to be taken from the Jews; who uſe it proverbially, to ſignify final, utter, and irreverſible deſtruction. (H.) See Dr. Donne's ſermon on this text; and the notes on ch. ii. 11. and xxi. 8.

Prieſts of God.] See the notes on ver. 4 ch. i. 6. and v. 10. and 1 Pet. ii. 5.

Satan ſhall be looſed.] That is, the ſins of Chriſtians now again provoking God to it, the reſtraint ſhall be taken off from Satan, who thereupon ſhall raiſe freſh diſturbance to the Church. (H.)

Gog and Magog.] This is probably an alluſion to thoſe two names, mention'd often in the Old Teſtament; who were the laſt enemies of the Jewiſh Church, before Chriſt's firſt coming. In like manner, the laſt enemies of the Chriſtian Church are here ſet forth by that name; who ſhall be utterly deſtroy'd, a little before Chriſt's ſecond coming to judgment. (B.)

Gather them together.] See the notes on ch. xvi. 14.

The Devil that deceiveth them.] Behold here, The deceiver and the deceived plagued together: "The Devil that deceived," and "the beaſt and the falſe prophet" who are deceiv'd by him, and were his inſtruments to deceive others, are caſt together "into the lake of fire and brimſtone," there to "be tormented, day and night, for ever and ever." Satan was indeed condemn'd to this before, and reſerved thereunto; but the actual and final execution thereof is ſuſpended till the end come. (B.) See the notes on ch. xiii. 1, 11. xiv. 10. and xix. 20. and 2 Pet. ii. 9.

A great white throne.] Set Homer's ſublime, adorn'd with all the pomp of fine words, heightned with all the loftineſs of grand and raviſhing numbers; and place St. John's deſcription here, of the appearance of the Judge of the world, near to it, only expreſs'd in a few plain and vulgar words, and adorn'd with its own native ſimplicity: And all the brightneſs of the poet will vaniſh, and be quite abſorpt, by the dazling and rapturous glory of the Apoſtle! What is bending of ſable brows, ſhaking of ambroſial curls, and Olympus trembling to the center, in compariſon of the Heaven and earth flying away before the face of the ſon of God? To enlarge upon, and pretend to illuſtrate, this paſſage, would be preſumptuous, as well as loſt-labour. The original of theſe words is ſo plain, that it needs not; ſo majeſtic and grand, that it diſdains commentary and paraphraſe. (Blackw.) See the notes on ch. iv. 14. Acts xvii. 31. and 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10.

The dead, ſmall and great.] Viz. All who ever liv'd; and all who ſhall then be found alive. (B.) See the notes on ch. xi. 18. and 1 Cor. xv. 51, &c.

The books were opened.] Wherein was noted, or an account as it were kept of what every perſon had done. (Wells) The book of God's omniſcience, and the book of conſcience; the book of the law, and the book of the Goſpel. They who had not the written law, ſhall be judg'd by the law of nature: They who had the written law, are to be judg'd by that: They who had the Goſpel, to be judg'd by that; and every one "according to their works." (B.) See the notes on ch. ii. 23. iii. 5. and xiii. 8. Matth. xvi. 27. and Rom. ii. 6.

And the ſea gave up the dead.] By which underſtand, That all places, tho' attended with ever ſo many improbable circumſtances of a reſurrection, ſhall yet give up their dead. (B.) See Mr. Stubs's ſermon on this text, 1708. and the notes on ver. 6. ch. ii. 11. vi. 8. xiv. 10. xix. 20. and xxi. 8. and 1 Cor. xv. 26.

CHAP. XXI.

A deſcription of the New Jeruſalem.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27.

AND I ſaw a new heaven, and a new earth: For the firſt heaven and the firſt earth were paſſed away; and there was no more ſea. And I John ſaw the holy city, new Jeruſalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, ſaying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they ſhall be his people, and God himſelf ſhall be with them, and be their God. And God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there ſhall be no more death, neither ſorrow, nor crying, neither ſhall there be any more pain: For the former things are paſſed away. And he that ſat upon the throne, ſaid, Behold, I make all things new. And he ſaid unto me, Write: For theſe words are true and faithful. And he ſaid unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end: I will give unto him that is athirſt, of the fountain of the water of life freely. He that overcometh ſhall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he ſhall be my ſon. But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and ſorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, ſhall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone: Which is the ſecond death. And there came unto me one of the ſeven Angels, which had the ſeven vials full of the ſeven laſt plagues, and talked with me, ſaying, Come hither, I will ſhew thee the bride, the Lambs wife. And he carried me away in the ſpirit to a great and high mountain, and ſhewed me that great city, the holy Jeruſalem, deſcending out of heaven from God, Having the glory of God: And her light was like unto a ſtone moſt precious, even like a jaſper ſtone, clear as chryſtal; And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve Angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Iſrael. On the eaſt, three gates; on the north, three gates; on the ſouth, three gates; and on the weſt, three gates. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb. And he that talked with me, had a golden reed to meaſure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. And the city lieth four ſquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: And he meaſured the city with the reed, twelve thouſand furlongs: The length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal. And he meaſured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the meaſure of a man, that is of the Angel. And the building of the wall of it was of jaſper; and the city was of pure gold, like unto clear glaſs. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones. The firſt foundation was jaſper; the ſecond, ſaphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; the fifth, ſardonix; the ſixth, ſardius; the ſeventh, chryſolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chryſophraſus; the eleventh, a jacinct; the twelfth, an amethyſt. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every ſeveral gate was of one pearl: And the ſtreet of the city was of pure gold, as it were tranſparent glaſs. And I ſaw no temple therein: For the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city had no need of the ſun, neither of the moon to ſhine in it: For the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are ſaved, ſhall walk in the light of it: And the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it. And the gates of it ſhall not be ſhut at all by day: For there ſhall be no night there. And they ſhall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it. And there ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatſoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: But they which are written in the Lambs book of life.

A new Heaven, and a new earth.] By this phraſe all do underſtand a new ſtate and face of the Church: But ſome apply it to the ſtate of the Church militant here on earth; and others to that of the Church triumphant in Heaven. Accordingly, theſe take the "new Heaven and the new earth" to be the effect of that great change, which ſhall be made by fire, at the univerſal conflagration; and that they are called new, not ſo much in regard of ſubſtance, as in reſpect of qualities, being now for nature more ſtable, and for beauty more glorious. (B.) However, ſuch will be the happy renovation and refinement of all things, to their utmoſt perfection, that they are deſcribed, in the prophetic ſtyle of "a new Heaven and a new earth." (G. Hall, and H.) And therefore, to prevent all perplexity and ambiguity, this figurative expreſſion might well be tranſlated, as, or as it were "a new Heaven," &c. which kind of inſertions the Tranſlators have not ſcrupled to make in other places. (Eſſay) See the notes on 2 Pet. iii. 13.

Were paſſed away.] Not by annihilation; but by a qualitative mutation. (B.) See the notes on ch. xx. 11. and Matth. v. 18.

There was no more ſea.] That is, ſay ſome, as it was before, turbulent, changeable, or ſubject to corruption: Or, according to others, no more a troubleſome ſtate of things; which is often ſignified by the ſea. A new and glorious ſtate of things was here undoubtedly deſign'd, relating to the Church; when ſhe ſhall no more be like the raging ſea, but like the quiet earth. (Aſſ. and B.)

The holy city.] The purified and glorious Church of God. (Hall, Aſſ. and H.) Whereof the old Jeruſalem was a type. And it is called "new Jeruſalem," not in reſpect of the Old Teſtament only, but of the former eſtate of it; viz. that it ſhall now be free from all its former trouble. (Aſſ.) Some underſtand this of the Church triumphant in Heaven: (Rhem. and B.) But, by reaſon of its being repreſented here, as "coming down from God out of Heaven," ver. 2, 10, 11. and that too with the addition of holy, and "having the glory of God upon it," it ſeems not to ſignify the ſtate of glorified Saints in Heaven, but rather the pure Chriſtian Church here on earth, joining Chriſtian practice with the profeſſion of it; and that in a flouriſhing condition, in as much ſolemnity of ſerving and worſhipping God, as had been in the Jewiſh temple at Jeruſalem. (H.) See the notes on ver. 10. ch. x. 1. Gal. iv. 26. Hebr. xi. 10. xii. 22. and xiii. 14.

Prepared as a bride.] That is, deck'd with all kind of ſpiritual ornaments, and prepared with all riches of grace and glory, as a fit bride for her gracious ſpouſe. (Hall) What is here ſaid of the "New Jeruſalem," probably, might be one motive to induce Mr. Mede, and others, to underſtand the wife, mention'd ch. xix. 7. of the Jewiſh nation only, which is then to be converted. But it muſt be remembr'd, that St. Paul ſays, "Jeruſalem, which is above, (which is the ſame with this "New Jeruſalem") is the mother of us all," Gal. iv. 26. that is, doth repreſent not only the Church of the Jewiſh nation hereafter to be converted, but alſo the Gentile Church; both together, that is, the whole Catholic Church. (Wells) See the notes on ch. xix. 7. and 2 Cor. xi. 2.

Voice out of Heaven.] Ec tou ouranou: Or rather, (ec tou thronou) out of the throne; as it is read in the Alexandrian MSS, the Vulgar Latin Verſion, and Irenæus. (H. and Wells)

The tabernacle of God.] Both the Jewiſh temple, and Chriſtian Church, having the promiſe of God's peculiar preſence, is fitly ſtil'd his tabernacle, here, and ch. xiii. 6. and elſewhere his houſe; both in the ſame ſenſe, a tabernacle being but a moveable houſe. And then, "Behold the tabernacle of God with men," is but an interpretation of what was repreſented in this viſion; viz. That hereby was noted the Church of Chriſt; whoſe title is (Emmanuel) God with us, or God with men, that is, God incarnate: And the (idou) behold, is a determination of it to what went immediately before, thus; The "bride adorned for her husband" is the Chriſtian Church, called "the Lamb's wife," ver. 9. And the promiſe, that "he will dwell with them," &c. is his marrying, and endowing, and living and dwelling with this ſpouſe; that is, continuing his favour, and love and protection to the Church, ſo long as ſhe continues faithful to him: And then, conſequent to that mercy and protection, is the ceſſation of perſecution, which follows, ver. 4. that "God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes," &c. that is, remove all cauſe of ſorrow from his Church. (H.) There is no (eſti) is, in the original text; and the ſubſtantive (skene) tabernacle, ſeems plainly to be referr'd to (idou) behold. Thus, as, John i. 29. "Behold the Lamb of God," is as much as to ſay, Behold, this is the Lamb of God; ſo here, "Behold, the tabernacle of God," is as much as to ſay, Behold, this is the tabernacle of God. (Wells) See a ſermon on this text, among Bp. Hall's Works; and the notes on ch. vii. 15, 17. and xiii. 6. 1 Cor. xv. 26, 54. and 2 Cor. vi. 16.

I make all things new] Here, Chriſt owns all this great change, as an act of his ſpecial providence; and commands St. John to take notice of it, as what ſhould certainly come to paſs. (H.) See the notes on ch. iv. 2. xv. 3. xvi. 7. and 2 Cor. v. 17.

It is done.] All that the Prophets ſpake, of the Church's deliverance, and the deſtruction of her enemies, is accompliſhed. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xvi. 17.

I am Alpha and Omega.] That is, the eternal God; and therefore able to bring about what I ſay. (Wells) See the notes on ch. i. 8, 10.

Unto him that is athirſt.] Viz. Who truly ſeeks after life, by a faithful obedience to me. (G. and Wells) See the notes on John iv. 10, 14. and vii. 37.

I will be his God.] See the notes on Hebr. viii. 10.

But the fearful.] After a deſcription of the happineſs of the righteous, here follows the miſerable condition of the wicked, under eight ſeveral characters. But tho' theſe eight ſorts only are here reckon'd up by name, yet all others, who live and die impenitently, in any one known ſin, of what kind ſoever, are certainly included, and their damnation implied alſo as well as theſe. (B.) In which liſt of ſinners, obſerve, That "the fearful" are ſuch as want the true Chriſtian courage and fortitude, to confeſs Chriſt, and practiſe his precepts, in times of danger; as well as thoſe who, for fear of ſuffering, diſown their principles, and actually revolt from them: And theſe are placed in the front of all the vile ſinners; this their fearfulneſs and cowardice naturally expoſing them to the commiſſion of, or compliance with, divers other ſins. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. Wells and Wall) See Dr. Edw. Lake's ſermon on this text, 1702. and the notes on ch. xiv. 10.

1 Cor. vi. 9, 18. Gal. v. 21. Eph. v. 5. 2 Theſſ. i. 7, &c. 2 Tim. iii. 1. Hebr. xii. 14. &c. and Jude 7, &c.

Which is the ſecond death.] That is, eternal death, or damnation. (Wells) This death will feed on ſinners, but never end them. Hence St. Bernard terms it an immortal death; and Gregory the Great, a living death and a dead life; a death without death, and an end without an end; a death which ſhall ever live, and an end that ſhall ever begin. Death, which is here inflicted on us, takes away, with our lives, the ſenſe and pains of dying, ſo that we feel not the utmoſt rigours of it: But this keeps the ſenſes perpetually dying, and yet perpetually living in the pains and agonies of dying; and therefore, ſaith St. Auſtin, What death can be imagin'd worſe, or greater, than that which dies not? (Lake) See the notes on ch. ii. 11. ix. 6. and xx. 6. 2 Theſſ. i. 9. and Hebr. x. 31.

One of the ſeven Angels.] See the notes on ch. xv. 1, &c.

The bride, the lamb's wife.] See the notes on ver. 2. and ch. xix. 7.

In the Spirit.] See the notes on ch. i. 10.

That great city.] "That great city, the holy Jeruſalem," is here meant of the Church; being before call'd "the holy city, New Jeruſalem," ver. 2. In the deſcription of which, obſerve, 1. That its having a wall, to encompaſs it, to keep all out who are not thought fit to be admitted, and to guard and ſecure the city, does perfectly repreſent the Chriſtian Doctrine; which likewiſe defends and fortifies the Church from the invaſion of Hereticks; none being admitted into, or continued in it, who do not acknowledge that, Gal. i. 8. 2. That this wall, being "great and high," ſignifies the excellence, and even Divinity, of this doctrine, its admirable precepts, and Heavenly promiſes. And, 3. That the foundations thereof are the ſeveral preachings of the Apoſtles, in all their travels: And the doctrine they preach'd, being the ſame in all places, this one wall is ſaid to "have twelve foundations, and on them the names of the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb," ver. 14. ſignifying, that thoſe doctrines, which are not thus founded on their preaching, either by word of mouth, or by writing deduced from them, are not fit to be receiv'd into the Church. (H.) See the notes on ver. 2. Gal. i. 8. and iv. 26. and thoſe which here next follow.

The holy Jeruſalem.] The Church is here call'd a city; becauſe it is a ſociety, incorporated under its own proper officers, and govern'd by its own proper laws. (G.) A great city, becauſe of its extent to "all nations," Matth. xxviii. 19. And holy, both in regard of the precepts of Chriſt, and its pure diſcipline, to make its members holy. (G. H. and B.)

Having the glory of God.] It is not to be doubted, "but the glory of God" here mention'd ſhall be like that, ſo often mention'd, in the book of Exodus; but with this difference, viz. 1. That the former was, "like devouring fire," terrible to behold; but this ſhall have nothing of terror in it, but only a pleaſing delightful ſplendor, "like unto a ſtone moſt precious, even like a jaſper-ſtone clear as cryſtal." And, 2. That whereas "the glory of God" appear'd formerly, but at certain times, and then not long together, to the Iſraelites; this to the New Jeruſalem ſhall appear conſtantly; ſo that the Church ſhall "have no need of the ſun, neither of the moon, to ſhine in it," ver. 23. (Wells)

A wall.] Denoting that ſacred bond of unity, wherewith the whole Church is knit together. (Hall) See the notes on Eph. iv. 3.

Twelve gates.] Viz. On every ſide three; denoting univerſal admittance to all, who would come into the ſociety of Chriſt's Church, on the terms of the Goſpel, from all parts of the world; which is an alluſion, 1. To the cities of refuge of old. 2. The three gates particularly alluding to the admiſſion by baptiſm in the name of the Holy Trinity. And, 3. The Angels at every gate repreſenting the Biſhops, with whom that initiatory Sacrament is properly intruſted; and to whom (in ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles) were committed "the keys of the kingdom of Heaven;" that is, the authority of admitting proper perſons into, and excluding others out of the Church of Chriſt. (G. Hall, Aſſ. H. B. and Wells) See the notes on Matth. xvi. 19. and xxviii. 19, 20. John xx. 23. Rom. x. 15. and Eph. ii. 20. and iv. 12.

A golden reed.] Here we may obſerve, 1. That the uſe of the reed here repreſented, was to demonſtrate the excellent ſymmetry, and exact proportion, of this ſpiritual building. (Hall) 2. That a reed, being leſs liable to deceit than a rope, (becauſe it cannot be ſhortned or lengthned by ſhrinking or ſtretching, as a rope may) is therefore uſed here, myſtically to ſignify the canon, or rule, of the Holy Scripture; as it doth alſo Ezek. xl. 3. (Godw.) 3. That between this meaſuring, and that other, in ch. xi. 1. &c. there is a conſiderable difference, in ſeveral circumſtances. For there was only a common reed uſed; but here a golden one: There only "the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worſhip therein" were meaſur'd; but here "the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof:" Thoſe were meaſur'd by a man; theſe by an Angel: There the ſeveral parts were found unequal, ſome purer and better than others; here all the parts are equal in perfection and purity; "the length, the breadth, and the height of it all equal." (Aſſ. and B.) 4. That the reaſon why all places were not meaſur'd there, as here, was becauſe all thoſe places were not to continue, as theſe were. (G. and H.) 5. That the four-ſquare, or quadrangular form of this building, denotes the ſtability and firmneſs of it; the cube being, of all other figures, the moſt firm and ſtable. (Beza, G. Aſſ. H. and Wells) And, 6. That "the meaſure of a man" is mention'd to denote the cubit, here ſpoken of, to be proportionable to "the meaſure of a man," ſuch as the Angel here appear'd to be. (G. Aſſ. and H.) See the notes on ch. xi. 1. and Eph. iii. 18.

Pure gold, like unto clear glaſs.] St. Gregory ſaith, The Heavenly ſtate is reſembled to gold, precious ſtones, cryſtal, glaſs, &c. for the purity, clarity, and glittering of the glorious bodies; where one man's body, conſcience, and cogitations are repreſented to another, as corporal things in this life are ſeen through cryſtal or glaſs. (Rhem.

Foundations of the wall.] See the notes on ver. 14. and Eph. ii. 20. and iv. 12.

No temple therein.] See the notes on John iv. 22.

No need of the ſun.] What need of the natural light of the ſun or moon, where "the ſun of righteouſneſs" for ever ſhineth, and where God is all in all? (B.) See the notes on ver. 11.

And the nations.] Whereas the earthly Jeruſalem was the receptacle of none but her own people, abhorring the communion of the Gentiles; now here, the faithful, of all nations, ſhall be receiv'd into one bleſſed ſociety, and ſhall enjoy the glorious light of God's preſence. (Hall)

The kings of the earth.] By this, and the repetition of it, ver. 26. it might be conceiv'd as an earthly ſtate; by the other characters an heavenly one. But all the characters muſt be underſtood as figurative. (Wall) "The kings of the earth," that is, the higheſt in all ſorts of power and learning, &c. will ſubmit themſelves to, and be glad to become members of the Church, and do their beſt to ſupport it, and endow it with the riches of this world. "And the gates of it ſhall not be ſhut;" but there ſhall be a moſt ready and hoſpitable reception, at all times, of all who will come in to the faith by amendment of life. (H.)

There ſhall be no night there.] Either in a literal, or a metaphorical ſenſe; no darkneſs, no interruption of happineſs, nor fear of danger; nothing that can either diſturb or diſquiet. (B.) See the notes on ver. 23.

The Lamb's book of life.] See the notes on ch. ii. 23. iii. 5. xiii. 8. and xx 12. and Phil. iv. 3.

C H A P. XXII.

The river of the water of life. The tree of life. The light of the city of God. The Angel not to be worſhipped. This book not to be ſealed. Nothing to be added to, or taken from, the word of God.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AND he ſhewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as cryſtal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb. In the midſt of the ſtreet of it, and of either ſide of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. And there ſhall be no more curſe: But the throne of God and of the Lamb ſhall be in it; and his ſervants ſhall ſerve him. And they ſhall ſee his face; and his name ſhall be in their foreheads. And there ſhall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the ſun; for the Lord God giveth them light: And they ſhall reign for ever and ever.

A pure river of water of life.] The beginning of this chapter goes on with the deſcription of the Heavenly Jeruſalem. (Aſſ. H. and B.) Where ſome have remark'd, that as the three firſt chapters of the Bible contain an account of the turning man out of Paradiſe, and excluding him from "the tree of life;" ſo the three laſt contain an account of the reſtitution of all things in this world to the happy ſtate wherein they were created; and conſequently of the re-inſtating man in an earthly Paradiſe, and reſtoring him to the happy privilege of eating of "the tree of life, and drinking of the river of the water of life:" To make which the more probable, they ſuppoſe, that there was in Paradiſe then (tho' we have no expreſs account of it in Geneſis) as well as there ſhall be at the time here deſcrib'd, "a pure river of water of life," as well as "the tree of life." (Wells) But others with more probability, underſtand this text, of the two Sacraments in Chriſt's Church, viz. "The water of life," as repreſenting Baptiſm; and "the tree of life," as repreſenting the Lord's Supper, or the Euchariſt, which our Lord calls "the bread of life." (G. H. and Johnſ.) See Dr. Hammond here at large; and the notes on John iv. 10, &c. and thoſe here next following.

Out of the throne of God.] As the throne is a notation of power and judicature, as where God is introduc'd in the Viſion, as "ſitting on a throne," ch. iv. 1. ſo "the throne of God, and of the Lamb" is that power, which is by Chriſt inſtated in the governors of the Church; of which the power of baptizing being one ſpecial part, this river, by which Baptiſm is expreſs'd, is fitly ſaid to "proceed out of the throne." (G. and H.)

Of God, and of the Lamb.] God and Chriſt on one throne; which ſhews, that Chriſt is God, equal to the Father. (Aſſ.) And if we underſtand the "river of water of life, proceeding out of the throne," (as ſome do) to be meant of the Holy Ghoſt, who proceedeth from the Father and the Son, then we have here alſo the Three Perſons in the Holy Trinity.

The tree of life.] Beſides the interpretation of this, above-noted, ſome underſtand it of the Croſs of Chriſt, which yieldeth fruit, not, as other trees do, at certain times of the year only, but "every month," (G.) Agreeably to which the learned Editor of St. Cyprian obſerves, That as by one tree man was loſt, in the tranſgreſſion of the firſt Adam; ſo he was reſtored by the ſufferings of the ſecond Adam on a tree. Thus Noah, as a type of Chriſt, was ſav'd by an ark of wood; as Juſtin Martyr hath obſerv'd, in his dialogue with Trypho. (Fell) But others, underſtanding the ſtreet to mean the place of publick aſſembly in the Church or City of God, (where prayers and the ſacrifice of the Euchariſt are offer'd up, and the Goſpel is preach'd to the people) do interpret this tree to mean piety, growing (ententhen kai ententhen) in the midſt, between "the river of water of life" on one ſide, and the ſtreet on the other: That is, between the place of Baptiſm, and that of the publick Aſſembly; Baptiſm being deſign'd on purpoſe to initiate and engage us to piety, and by God's grace to enable us to perform it; as the ſervice of God in the Aſſembly is deſign'd for the confirming our vows of new life, to inſtruct us further in our duty, and to bring down more grace for the performance of it. (H.) See the notes on ch. ii. 7.

The leaves of the tree.] That which is moſt probably here meant by theſe "leaves of the tree" of life, is the outward viſibleneſs and exemplarineſs of piety, which accompanies the fruits of it: and this, even in ſingle perſons, is of great uſe to attract others, who ſee their good works, to Chriſtianity: But, in a Church, theſe leaves may alſo ſignify the public and frequent aſſembling for the ſervice and worſhip of God, and the canons and exerciſe of ſtrict diſcipline, &c. And that theſe latter, of Church Diſcipline and Cenſures, are meant by theſe leaves, may be collected, not only from the uſefulneſs of them to the preſerving works of piety in a Church, (as leaves preſerve the fruit) and from the propriety of them for healing the diſeaſes of mens ſouls, and reforming of lapſed ſinners; but alſo from what follows, ver. 3. that "there ſhall be no more curſe;" that is, no perſon deſerving the curſe, or cenſure of excommunication, ſhall be permitted to continue in the Church: "But the throne of God, and of the Lamb, ſhall be in it," that is, the Chriſtian Judicatures ſhall never ceaſe; "and his ſervants ſhall ſerve him," that is, all Chriſtians will ſubmit to them: And ſuch as do ſo, "ſhall ſee his face," that is, ſhall have God's favour; "and his name ſhall be in their foreheads," that is, they ſhall be accounted his true Chriſtian ſervants. (H.) See the notes on ch. ii. 17. iii. 12. xiv. 1. and xxi. 23. 1 Cor. xiii. 12. and 1 John iii. 2.

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And he ſaid unto me, Theſe ſayings are faithful and true. And the Lord God of the holy prophets ſent his Angel to ſhew unto his ſervants the things which muſt ſhortly be done. Behold, I come quickly: bleſsed is he that keepeth the ſayings of the prophecy of this book. And I John ſaw theſe things, and heard them. And when I had heard and ſeen, I fell down to worſhip before the feet of the Angel, which ſhewed me theſe things. Then ſaith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-ſervant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the ſayings of this book: worſhip God. And he ſaith unto him, Seal not the ſayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand. He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous ſtill: and he that is holy, let him be holy ſtill. And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work ſhall be. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the firſt and the laſt. Bleſſed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. For without are dogs, and ſorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whoſoever loveth and maketh a lie. I Jeſus have ſent mine Angel to teſtify unto you, theſe things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning ſtar. And the Spirit and the bride ſay, Come. And let him that heareth, ſay, Come. And let him that is athirſt, come: And whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely. For I teſtify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man ſhall add unto theſe things, God ſhall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if any man ſhall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God ſhall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. He which teſtifieth theſe things, ſaith, Surely, I come quickly. Amen. Even ſo, come, Lord Jeſus. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

Theſe ſayings are faithful and true.] As if he had ſaid, All is now reveal'd, and all that is reveal'd is true: Nothing remains, but that ye give credit to it, and patiently expect God's performance; which will undoubtedly follow in his time. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ch. xv. 3. and xvi. 7.

Sent his Angel.] See the notes on ch. i. 1.

Muſt ſhortly be done.] See the notes on ch. i. 1.

Behold, I come quickly.] I will begin ſoon to execute ſome of theſe things: And that ſhall be a pledge to you, that I will not give over the work, till I make an end of all. (Aſſ.) See the notes on ver. 10. ch. i. 1. and iii. 11.

He that keepeth the ſayings.] Not only in memory and profeſſion, but in practice and performance. (B.) That perſon who looks upon this as an unprofitable Book, and of no uſe in the Chriſtian life, knows not the value of it, and reflects but little upon the bleſſing here promiſed to him who keepeth and obſerveth it. (Q.)

I John ſaw——and heard.] Here he confirmeth the Revelation, as he doth alſo his Goſpel, John xix. 35. and xxi. 24. and his Epiſtle, 1 John i. 1. where ſee the notes.

To worſhip before the feet.] Here it is (proſcyneſai emproſthen ton podon tou angelou) to adore, or "worſhip before the feet of the Angel;" but in ch. xix. 10. it was (proſcyneſai auto) "to worſhip him." So that it is, confeſſedly, all one to adore before the feet of the Angel, and to adore the Angel. (Rhem.) And both are forbidden in the ſame words, and for the ſame reaſon: With an admonition annex'd, (To theo proſcyneſon) "Worſhip God." Where St. Cyprian ſeems to have read this text (To kyrio proſcyneſon) worſhip the Lord, viz. Jeſus. But whatſoever authority his reading it ſo may claim, there is ſomewhat hence to be gather'd in favour of the worſhipping the Lord Jeſus, which our Socinians, and their ſecret adherents, may do well to conſider. (Marſhall) See the notes on ch. xix. 10. and Acts x. 26.

Seal not the ſayings.] The prophecies of the Old Teſtament were truths ſealed up, and reſerv'd for another people, and for diſtant ages; thoſe of the New are deſign'd for us, and to be made uſe of without delay. (Q. and Wall.) Therefore St. John is commanded not to "ſeal the ſayings of the prophecy of this book;" that is, not to conceal them. (Aſſ.) Tho' this Book be the moſt obſcure part of the Holy Scripture, yet it is Chriſt's expreſs command, that it ſhould not be conceal'd from the knowledge of the people. How ſacrilegious therefore is the practice of the Church of Rome, in robbing the common people of all the Scriptures, locking them up in an unknown tongue, and forbidding the people to read them? (B.) See the notes on ch. x. 4.

For the time is at hand.] Ho cairos; the ſeaſon or opportunity; the fit and appointed time. (Aſſ.) See the notes on 1 Cor. vii. 29.

He that is unjuſt.] Ho adicon; He who is unrighteous, or injurious to others: For ho adicon is here oppoſed to (ho dicaios) "he who is righteous;" as (ho rhypon) "he who is filthy," is oppoſed to (ho hagios) "he who is holy." (Rhem. Hall, Aſſ. and H.)

Let him be.] This is no permiſſion, much leſs a perſuaſion, to ſin; but a dreadful threatning or commination, that ſuch as give themſelves up to ſinning, ſhall be judicially given up by God to ſin and puniſhment. (Rhem. Aſſ. and B.) As if he had ſaid, Let him be ſo, at his peril! (Hall) It ſhall certainly be to his greater damnation. (Wells) For God compels no man to ſin. (G.) See the notes on 2 Tim. iii. 13.

Behold, I come quickly.] See the notes on ver. 7. ch. i. 7. and Jam. v. 9.

According as his work ſhall be.] See the notes on Luke xvii. 10. Rom. ii. 6. and iv. 12.

Alpha and Omega.] See the notes on ch. i. 8, 10. and xxi. 6.

That do his commandment.] Poiountes tas entolas autou. But the Alexandrian MS. and one more, and the Ethiopic Verſion, as well as the Vulgar Latin, read it (plynontes tas ſtolas auton) that waſh their garments; viz. "in the blood of the Lamb," ch. vii. 14. (H. and Wells) But the ſenſe of both readings is the ſame; for they only, who have done the commandments, can be ſaid to have waſhed their garments, or to have kept them white and clean. (Johnſ.) See the notes on ch. iii. 4. and Jude 23.

A right to the tree of life.] See the notes on ver. 2. ch. ii. 7. and Rom. viii. 17.

Through the gates.] Through Chriſt, who is the way, and the door, into the heavenly Jeruſalem. (Hall) See the notes on ch. xxi. 12, &c. and John x. 1, &c. and xiv. 6.

Without are dogs.] Exo; Out of the pale of the Church. Such notorious ſinners are either not to be admitted into it by baptiſm; or if admitted already, to be ſhut out again by cenſures. (G. Hall, H. Stanh. B. and Wells) Dreadful excommunication this, eternal, and without the leaſt hope of reconciliation! Does any one, when he commits a deadly ſin, conſider, that there needs no more, to cauſe him to be caſt out, as a dog, from the Church of Heaven, and to be for ever depriv'd of the preſence of God and of Jeſus Chriſt? Lying is counted as nothing in the world; the greateſt impurity goes under the name of gallantry; and other ſins are ſwallow'd down as eaſily as water! But how differently will the ſinner judge of theſe things, but too late, when this laſt anathema ſhall open his eyes! (Q.) See the notes on ch. ix. 20. and xxi. 8. Matth. vii. 6. 1 Cor. vi. 9. Gal. v. 2. Phil. iii. 2. and Col. iii. 6.

I Jeſus have ſent.] Obſerve here, That the Lord Jeſus is the author of this Revelation: The Angel did but declare it; and St. John did but write it. (B.) See the notes on ch. i. 2.

The root and the offspring of David.] See the notes on ch. v. 5.

The bright and morning-ſtar.] See the notes on ch. ii. 28. and 2 Pet. i. 19.

Say, Come.] Viz. To fulfil theſe things; or, to judgment, that we may be with thee for ever. (Aſſ.) But we muſt firſt come to Chriſt by faith and repentance, before we can ever deſire Chriſt's coming to us by death and judgment. (B.) See the notes on ch. xix. 7. and 2 Cor. v. 2, &c.

The water of life freely.] Viz. All grace here, and glory hereafter. (B.) See the notes on ver. 1. ch. xxi. 6. John iv. 10, &c. and vii. 37. and 1 Cor. xv. 19.

Add unto theſe things.] This form of ſpeech here uſed, to conclude this Book, is, 1. A ſymbolical and prophetical form of expreſſing the certainty and immutability of this prophecy: And, 2. An expreſſion of the abſoluteneſs and perfection of it, in order to public uſe; that it ſhould be the one (and only) prophecy given to the Chriſtian Church, which ſhould bring Divine authority along with it, ſent with a commiſſion from Heaven. For, tho' there might be ſome Prophets after St. John, yet this Book ſhould be the laſt, and ſo the cloſe and ſeal of all public prophecy; and therefore no new doctrine was now farther to be expected by the Chriſtian Church; and whoſoever taught any, as a rule of faith and life, and pretended Revelation for it, ſhould fall under the cenſure denounc'd againſt falſe prophets, Deut. iv. 2. and xii. 32. and under St. Paul's anathema, Gal. i. 8, 9. A learned man, Mr. Lively, conjectures that this is only an exorciſm, or adjuration of the ſcribe, ſuch as there is at the end of Irenæus, in ſome copies, not to add or diminiſh. However, this needs not to pre-judge the other imports of it before-mention'd. (H.) Others think, this ſeems particularly to mean thoſe writers who tranſcrib'd the books, in order to oblige them to copy this book faithfully; ſeeing it was more eaſy to add to, or take away from it, without diſcovery, becauſe of its obſcurity. (Fleury) Some indeed, have been ſo ſcrupulous, for fear of incurring the curſes before-mention'd, as to think it neceſſary, even in tranſlations, to render all the terms and phraſes thereof word for word, without any regard to the obſcurity which this muſt neceſſarily occaſion. (Eſſ.) But 'tis certain, this commination cannot affect any true interpretation or expoſition, of this or any other part of Holy Scripture: But ſuch only as, either, under colour of a defect or imperfection therein, addeth ſomething that is falſe and Erroneous; or elſe, under pretence of ſuperfluity or improbability in the original text, taketh away ſomething from it, in favour of particular errors and hereſies. (Rhem. Hall, and B.) And that all this care and caution was no more than neceſſary, appears in Marcion and others; who nevertheleſs corrupted divers texts of Holy Scripture, to favour their reſpective hereſies. (G.) See the notes on Gal. i. 8.

Amen.] See the notes on John xxi. 25.

NOW, to God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghoſt, be all praiſe, honour and glory, now and for ever!

AMEN.

FINIS.
